17:3G. And having come to myself (καὶ εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἔλθών). This may mean that all the previous was a vision or a dream, but not an actual ascension in corpore (in distinction to 2 Enoch; Apocalypse of Abraham; Testament of Abraham).² On the possible identification of Baruch’s vision and the dream of Abimelech, see comm. to T:2. Psychonodia, the ecstatic ascent of the soul without the body, is explicit and typical for later Jewish mysticism,³ but known also from some early texts. Thus, Er’s soul visits heaven and netherworld and returns to the body (Plato, Rep. 10.614a–621d). In 1 En. 71:1 only Enoch’s “spirit was carried and ascended into the heavens” (cf. 71:5, 6). Paul twice wonders and cannot decide, if his ascent was “in body” or “outside the body” (2 Cor 12:2–3). The Gnostic Apocalypse of Paul holds to the latter, since Paul sees himself on earth (20). During his vision Isaiah “became silent, and he did not see the men who stood before him, though his eyes were open. Moreover his lips were silent, and the mind of his body was taken up from him, but his breath was in him” (Asc. Isa. 6:10–12). Another revelation concludes similarly, even in wording: “When he [Jesus] had said these things, he [Peter] came to himself” (Nag Hammadi Apoc. Pet., end). The regaining of consciousness also comes together with glorification: “And Peter came to himself, and having beheld the Lord ascending up into heaven, he returned to Rome, rejoicing, and glorifying the Lord” (Acts Pet. 35). Dream visions are known to Gen 15:12; 28:13; 37:5–10; 40:1–41:49; Dan 2, 4, and 7; 1 En. 13–14; 83–90; 4 Ezra 3:1 and 5:14; T. Levi 2:5; and Lad. Jac. 1:3. The “torpor of prophecy” (תַּרְדֵּמַת נְבוּאָה) is discussed in Gen. Rab. 17.5. Dream is defined there as “an incomplete form of prophecy” (נוֹבֵלֶת נְבוּאָה חֲלוּם). Cf. a reservation about the revelatory quality of dreams in Sir 34:1–6. The fact that Baruch’s ascent was not physical may join other indications of the second rate of Baruch’s prophetic gift (see comm. to “Baruch” in T:1).

¹ Charles, Apocalypse of Baruch, p. 12.

² In T. Abr. (A) 9:6 the words “while I am in this body I wish to see all the inhabited world and all the creations” may mean “before the death,” and not necessarily an in-body ascent.

³ See Idel, Kabbala, 88–96; Ascensions.

I gave glory to God, who honored me by such honor (δόξαν ἔφερον τῷ θεῷ τῷ ἀξιώσαντί με τοιούτου ἀξιώματος). Or: “... appraised me by such appraise.” Baruch praises God for the revelation also in 2 Bar. 54:6–8:

You have shown to your servant this vision, reveal to me also its interpretation. For I know that as regards those things wherein I besought you, I have received a response, and as regards what I besought, you did reveal to me with what voice I should honor you, and from which members I should cause glory and praise to ascend to you.

God “honored” (τιμῆ) a visionary by the true revelation according to Josephus:

In the very same manner Daniel also wrote concerning the Roman government, and that our country should be made desolate by them. All these things did this man leave in writing, as God had showed them to him, insomuch that such as read his prophecies, and see how they have been fulfilled, would wonder how God honored Daniel. (Ant. 10.11.7)

Our visionary emphasizes certain reciprocity of his praise: he will “give glory” to God, since he “honored” him with a revelation. If 3 Baruch had a Hebrew original, both terms might have been of the same root (כבד), similarly to 1 Sam 2:30: “I will honor that who honors me” (כִּי מַכְבִּדִי אֶכְבֵּד).

17:4G. And you, brothers, who attained such a revelation (ὃ καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀδελφοὶ οἱ τυχόντες τῆς τοιαύτης ἀποκαλύψεως). Dean-Otting notices: “Most remarkably he includes others in his closing remark, intimating that they too have the potential for such experiences ... This inclusion of others is an astonishing exception to the other heavenly journey accounts.”⁴ In fact, what the text must mean is that the audience obtained the revelation from Baruch. He shares his revelation with his “friends” (44:1) and the elders of the people also in 2 Baruch (5:5; 31:3–32:7; 44–46; 77:1–17).

A very similar closing is found in the Testament of Abraham (20:15) and many late Christian compositions.⁵ The address “brothers” (ἀδελφοί) may indicate a monastic audience and would thus be a later addition, but this is not necessarily the case, as the term is already widely used as an address in the New Testamental epistles (Gal 5–6; Heb 8; and passim). It is used in the sense of compatriots in many Jewish texts (cf. Lev 10:5; 25:46; Deut 3:18; 24:7; et al.; m. Sotah 7.8; see in similar context 2 Bar. 77:4; cf. comm. to 15:2G).

⁴ Dean-Otting, “Baruch,” 153.

⁵ See Allison, T. Abr., 410–11.

INDICES

Index of References¹

I. Hebrew Bible

Genesis		7:28	150
1:4	259	8:2	128
1:6	123	8:3	150
1:6–7	299	9:20–25	223
1:7	182	10:8–9 (LXX)	148–149
1:15	261	11	131, 141
1:20	123	11:1	41, 153
1:20–25	158	11:1–9	128
1:21	163	11:4	137
2	192, 198	14:14	202, 226
2–11	147	15:12	100, 387
2:5	301	16:9	265
2:7	189	18:3	345
2:8	196, 203	19:11	155
2:8–9	209	21:15–19	344
2:10–14	184	24:31	150
2:17	210	27:28	302–303
2:25	220	27:39	303
2:21–22	189, 209	28	128
3	177	28:12	126
3:2	194	28:13	387
3:3	210–211	28:17	128
3:14	160, 174, 193	28:22	126
3:21	41, 220	32:30	94
3:22	368	37:5–10	387
3:24	310	37:24	358
4:15	382	40:1–41:49	387
5:21–24	257	49:11	217
6:4	212	49:17	177, 194
6:7	215
7:10	213	Exodus
7:11	128, 214	1:14	153
7:20	213	4	177

1 My thanks to Sergey Minov, who prepared these indices.

7	177	18:4	125
10:16–17	381	18:13	351
15:7	174	21	177
15:12	173	22:31	92
15:26	384	24:4	92
15:27	239	24:16	92
16:13–14	250	25:4	48, 249
17:5	105	26:10	173
19:16–19	255	28:11	279
20:6	372	28:14	217
23:19	351	35:34	274
24:9–10	154
24:16–17	179	Deuteronomy
27:3	338	3:11	149
29:33	125	3:18	388
30:7	349	3:28	105
30:33	125	4:2	118
32:27	192	4:14	176
33:18	179	4:19	37, 231
34:28	215	4:26	249
38:3	338	4:32	122
39:23	237	5:8	54
43:30	150	5:10	372
		7:22 (LXX)	22, 265
Leviticus		8:8	217
10:5	388	9:9	215
11	296	9:25ff	215
11:22	381	10:14	328
14:18	363	10:20–21	333
16:17	361	11:5	173
16:10	143	12:32	118
17:7	142	14	296
17:7 (Vulg.)	143	14:4–5	132
22:7	40, 273	14:11	297
22:10,12,13	125	14:20	297
25:5	192	17:3	231, 277
25:46	388	23	336
		24:7	388
Numbers		26:1–11	351
1:51	125	26:2	351
11:9	250	26:4	351–352
13:24	190	26:10	338, 351
13:33	149	26:17	384
14:33	216	27:9	114
16:30–32	173	28:1 (LXX)	21, 379,
17:5	125		384

28:12	299	1 Samuel
28:15	384	1:13	112
28:28	155	2:25	344
28:34	381	2:27	92
28:38	381	2:30	388
28:42	381	3:21	92
29:28	116	10:1	338
30:4	122	14:44	105
30:19	249	16:13	338
31–32	379	21:14	128
31:29 (LXX)	21, 379–380	25:10	100
32:1	249
32:8	145	2 Samuel
32:8 (LXX)	350	5:18 (LXX)	243
32:16	380	5:22 (LXX)	243
32:16–43 (LXX)	380	7:20	105
32:21 (LXX)	21, 379	12:11–12	48, 249
32:25	380	14:2	110
32:32	216	16:20 (LXX)	137
32:33	219	18:18	100
32:37	380	22:8	122
32:41	380	23:18	226
33:1	96
33:28	304	1 Kings
		1:9	175
Joshua		1:39	338
5:14	332	5:4	217
5:14 (LXX)	120	7:33	276
10:26	205	8:27	328
20:28	184	8:37	381
		8:53 (LXX)	231
Judges		8:63	201
4:3 (LXX)	281	8:65	336
5:20	266	10:17	226
7:6	226	11:8	184
8:8–9 (LXX)	94	18:44	301
8:19	105	19:1	126
9:8–16	207	19:8	215
9:13	217	22:10	229
11:37–39	365
16:3	128	2 Kings
20:7 (LXX)	137	2:11	234, 247
		9:1	338
Ruth		13:4 (LXX)	281
1:17	105	18:4	177
		21:3–5	231

23:11	231	22:3 (LXX)	287
25:8–9	365	22:12	309
25:19	40, 202	25:2	48, 249
		25:3	201
1 Chronicles		26:11	122
11:11	226	26:12	169
16:22	385	28–40	37
16:22 (LXX)	21	28:7	209
16:29	338	28:18	239
27:17 (LXX)	90	29:18	240
		29:19 (LXX)	240
2 Chronicles		31:26	231
2:5	328	31:26–27	278
6:18	328	33:23	344
6:28	381	33:31	114
7:13	381	33:33	114
11:15	142–143	36:15 (LXX)	281
18:9	229	37:2–5	255
20:7	372	38:16–17	171
		38:36	262
Nehemiah		38:37	299
1:1	92	39:17 (LXX)	104
1:9	122	40:15 (LXX)	168
9:6	328	41	163, 177
10:36	351	41:8–9	42, 159, 166–167
12:1	99	41:13	161, 176
		41:23	161, 176
Esther		41:23 (LXX)	168
1:9	184	42:3 (LXX)	156
4:8	105
9:15	226	Psalms
10:3	119	1:1	137
		2:11	376
Job		5:8	338
1:19	126	8:4	37
2:13	111	8:7–8	54, 158
5:1	344	11:1	40, 287, 294
6:24	114	13:3	137
7:12	163	18:6–16	255
9:33	344	18:7	105
10:21–22	161, 176	19	48, 231, 256
11	134	19:6(5)	234, 274
11:8	309	19:7	122, 248
13:13	114	23:4	287
16:19–21	344	24:3	330
19:25–27	344	26:12	284, 288

29:3–4	255	78(77):25 (LXX)	242, 245, 250
29:10	182	79:10	21, 108
32:3	112	80:8–16	107
33:6–8	54	80(81):15–16	209
34:7	349	84:7	287
36:5–6	54	89:37	278
36:8	288	91:11	349–350
36:10	40, 248, 288	92:13	205
37:7	112	96:11	54
38:3	112	97:2 (LXX)	92
38:13–14	112	97:10	372
39:2	112	102:24(23)	277
40:10	336	103:11	43, 136
45:8	110, 368	103:12	43, 133
50:10	40, 161, 175	103:19	331
50:10–11	158	104:1–2	54
50:11	40, 241–242, 245, 287,	104:7	253
	296	104:11–12	295
50:14	334	104:13	182
55:18	333	104:15	217, 219
56:1 (LXX)	281	104:26	159, 163
57:2	248	105:28–36	380
57:6	309	105:34–35	381
57:12	309	106:17	173
59(58):11(10)	137	106:42 (LXX)	281
60(59):5(3) (LXX)	22, 191	107:21–22	334
61:3	248	107:35	284
62:1	111	108:6	309
65:2	112	113:4	309
65:8	256	114:8	284
67:5	288	115:2	21, 108
68:18(17)	235	115:7	295
68:34(33)	328	121:6	248
68:27	284	128:3	217
69:34	54	130:1	156
69:31–32	334	133:3	303
72:5	278, 280	135:5	54
72:7	278	135:7	299
73:10 (LXX)	22, 356	136:4	156
74:13	163	137:1	98
77:18	255	139(138):8–10	139
77:19(18) (Sim.)	253	141:2	334
78:2	49	141:7	159–160, 163, 173
78:23	128	143:10	288
78:44–51	380	146:6	54
78:46	381	148:1–4	233

148:4	182, 328	Isaiah
148:7	163	5:1–7	107
150:6	124	5:7	108
150:6 (LXX)	22, 124,	5:14	159–160, 153, 173
	274	5:20	216
		6:1–3	179
Proverbs		10:5–8	107
1:12	159–160, 163,	11:4	288
	173	13:21	142–143
6:34	119	14:23	284
8:17	372	14:29	177
10:9 (LXX)	287	16:3	137
10:27	277	17:7	120
11:13	92	18:1	248
11:30	40, 367	24:23	231
15:8	334	26:19	303
17:28	114	26:20	337
23:32	195, 217	26:29	304
25:2	113	27:1	159, 163, 167
27:9	110, 368	27:2	107
27:20	167, 174	27:13	338
30:19	40, 175	28:7	217
30:20	160	29:6	255, 306
31:4	217	30:1	137
		30:2–3	248
Ecclesiastes		30:23	120
1:1	92	30:26	48, 249, 259,
1:5	267		281
1:7	55, 169	30:33	224
2:8	100	34:8 (LXX)	119
3:14	118	34:14	142–143
3:16	48	38:5	120
4:1	48	38:14	297
8:9–10	48	40:4	265
8:14–15	48	41:8	372
10:8	40, 194	41:18	284
10:19	217	42:8 (LXX)	335
10:20	263	49:10	248
12:4	40, 262	51:2	372
		51:9–10	163
Canticles		51:16	40, 203, 248
2:3	207	51:17 (LXX)	191
2:5	207	51:22 (LXX)	191
6:10	278, 281	58:10	265
8:5	207	60:1–3	231
8:5 (Vulg.)	207	60:19–20	259

61:1	369	51:34	160, 172
61:3	205	52:12	365
65:8	219	52:25	203
65:22	368
65:25	174	Ezekiel
66:15	235	1:1	98
66:24	176, 376	1:3	98
		1:22	154
Lamentations		1:24	255
1:10 (LXX)	336	1:28	179
2:10	111	3:2	99
3:28–29	111	3:23	98
		3:26	111
Jeremiah		5:2	99
2:21	107	6:5–6	380
2:25	125	7:10	120
2:27	231	8:3	122, 126
7:9	222	8:16	231
7:18	277	9:2	203
8:7	296	9:4–6	382
8:14	111	9:10–24	107
10:13	299	10:19	102
10:16	299	10:22	98
10:51	299	11:1	122, 126
11:16	207	11:9	125
13:17	111	11:24	122, 126
22:10	110	13:20	294
25:8–14	107	15:2	217
26:2	338	15:3–6	107
28:15 (LXX)	104	16:44	384
30:25	120	17:6–10	107
31:16–17	109	18:18 (LXX)	281
32:10	364	20:29	184
38:7–13	98	23:21–22	111
39:15–18	98	24:25–27	111
39:16–17	98	26:3	338
41:5	365	28:13	41, 220
42:7	365	28:13–19	286
44:17	277	29:3	159, 163, 168
45:3	97	32:7	261
45:5	91, 118, 215	37:1–2	287
46:27	100	38:22	176
49:36	122	40–42	154
50:17–18	107	40–48	150
50:33–34	107	40:3	105
51 (LXX)	91	43:1–4	179

46:6	279	10:19	105
47:1–12	97	10:21	331
		12	376
Daniel		12:1	331
2	318, 387	12:2	330
2:8–29	116
2:19 (Theod)	92	Hosea
2:22 (Theod)	92	2:18	120
2:28 (Theod)	92	4:2	222
2:47 (Theod)	92	7:9	125
3	141	10:1	107
3:3 (LXX)	354	13:14	159, 163
3:35	372	14:3	334
4	387	14:6	303
4:5	99
4:12	302	Joel
4:20	302	1–2	382
4:22	302	1:4	381
4:30	302	2:10	280
4:33	141	2:16	336
4:34	331	2:17	21, 108
5:5	150	2:25	381
5:6	270	3:1	120
5:21	302	3:4 (2:31)	120
6:11	333
7	387	Amos
7–8	157	3:7	92
7:1	331	4:6–13	380
7:2–3	98	4:9	381
7:9	119, 235	6:10	111
7:10	119, 201	7:2	381
7:15	97, 270	8:3	111
7:22	119
7:27	270	Jonah
8:2	98	2:2	174
8:11	332	3:4	216
8:17 (Theod)	105	4:8	248
8:17–18	270
8:27	104	Micah
9:17	334	2:4	120
9:23	105, 338	5:10	120
10:2	97	7:10	21, 108
10:4	98	7:17	174
10:7	91
10:11	105	Nahum
10:13	331	3:15	381

Index of References		399
Habakkuk	2:17	111
1:5 (LXX)	384 3:9	203
2:5	159–160, 163, 173–174 4:10	203
2:20	109, 111 5:8	225
3:8	235 8:13	219
	9:6	127
Zephaniah	9:16	120
1:7	109 14:4,6,9	120
3:4	385 14:8	97
3:19–20	120
	Malachi
Haggai	3:16	348
1:6	21, 366 3:19	48
	3:20	231–232, 244,
Zechariah		250
1:12	344 4:1	176
2:16–17	109 4:23	120

II. New Testament

Matthew	13:24–30	14, 209
3:2	331 13:24–43	352
3:10	176 13:37	352
3:12	176 13:39	15, 209
3:17	253 13:42	176
4:2	215 13:50	176
5:29–30	172 15:13	15, 214
5:30	161 16:18	173, 175
5:45	261 16:19	15, 332
5:47	372 18:8	172, 176
6:5–8	337 18:10	344, 349
6:5–13	334 18:35	306
6:6	150 19:29	21, 366, 372
6:27	183 21:33–46	107
7:7–1	334 22:3	161, 176
8:11	15, 331 23:9	336
8:12	161, 176 23:12	265
8:22	371 24:22	274
9:34	380 24:51	380
10:15	119 25:21	21, 366, 375,
10:22	119	379
10:24	119 25:23	21, 366, 379
10:28	172, 371 25:24	21, 379
10:36	119 25:26	21, 379
12:13	137 25:30	176

25:41	176	3:5	289
26:29	196	4:19–24	338
26:53	201, 344	5:20	226
27:45	280	10:3	332
		12:28	253
Mark		14:2	291
1:11	253	15:1	199,
1:13	216		209
3:6	137	15:15	372
6:12	370	16	344
6:13	367–369, 383	20:11–17	109
7:21–22	221
9:43	176	Acts
9:43–48	172	1:3	216
9:48	376	2:1–11	140
10:30	21, 366, 372	3	102
12:1–12	107	3:2	101
13	376	4:31	255
13:12	192, 220	12:1–11	344
13:17	384	12:15	349
13:20	274	13:9	99
14:25	196	13:40	385
		14:13	247
Luke		20:28	219
1:7	176	22:17–21	100
1:10–22	100
1:13	344	Romans
1:19	344	1:29–31	222
1:20	344	8	344
2:8–14	253	8:38	120
2:32	92	10:19	21, 379
3:9	176	13:12	120
3:17	176
3:22	253	1 Corinthians
4:2	216	5:5	120
11:1–3	334	9:24	21, 356
12:4	372	10:20	145
12:54	301	11:22	385
15:8	21, 366, 372	13:12	49
18:3	276	13:13	340
20:9–19	107	14:6	92
22:18	196	14:26	92
		15:29	290
John		15:42	172
2:1–11	200	15:45	276
2:21	109	15:55	159, 163

Index of References		401
2 Corinthians	8	388
1:21–22	364, 383	10:25 120
4:4	155
2:21–22	369	James
5:3–4	220	2:23 372
9:6	21, 366, 372	5:14 367, 370
12	325	5:15–16 368
12:1	92
12:2	184, 196, 315, 321	1 Peter
12:2–3	387	3:22 120, 354
12:4	93, 113, 184, 196	5:6 265
12:7	92	5:8 173
Galatians		2 Peter
5:21	221	2:4 168
5–6	388	2:9 119
		3:7 119
Ephesians		3:10 176
1:21	93, 120
5:18	218	1 John
6:12	46, 145	4:17 119
Philippians		Jude
2:11	306	9 210, 331
3:14	21, 219, 356	14 201
Colossians		Revelation
1:5	354	1:4 203
1:16	120	1:17 270
2:18	345	2:17 251
3:2–8	221	3:4–5 220
		3:8 128
1 Thessalonians		3:15–16 358
5:2	120	3:18 220
5:4	120	4:1 128, 255
		4:4 220, 247
2 Thessalonians		4:5 203
1:7	120	4:6 157, 182
		4:6–8 203
1 Timothy		4:10 247, 347, 353
1:9–10	221	5 335
5:6–7	371	5:4 97
		5:6 203
Hebrews		5:8 15, 338, 343, 347
1:4–13	354	6:1 306
2:5–9	354	6:1–8 313

6:2	220	14:2	306
6:6	368	14:18	319
6:8	47, 159, 163, 167	15-16	376, 380-381
7:2-4	369, 382	15:1	156
7:9	220	15:2	182
7:13-14	220	15:3	156
7:15	310	16:2	319
7:15-16	242	16:3-4	319
7:17	288	16:6	319
8	335	16:8	319
8-9	376, 380-381	16:13	142
8:1	111-112	16:17	319
8:3	338	16:18	255
8:3-5	15, 347	17:1-6	59
8:3-11	381	17:3	157
8:13	313	17:12	157
9:1	171	19:10	345
9:3-11	15, 382	19:20	176
9:4	369, 382-383	20:2	193
9:7	142	20:10	176
9:7-10	157	20:13-14	47, 159, 163, 167
9:7-11	382	21:9-27	150
9:17-19	157	21:17	59, 183
12	47, 159, 161, 384	22:1	288
12:1-6	153	22:1-2	15
12:4	161	22:8-10	345
12:7-9	331	22:14	15, 290
12:8-9	161	22:17	15, 288, 290
12:9	44, 173, 190, 193	22:18	118
13:1-18	157	22:19	368
13:18	59, 168, 183

III. Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha

Apocalypse of Abraham	10:3	93
1-6	47	372
2:9	98	93
5:8	137	48, 253
5:11	265	159
6:7	231	287
8:6	255	216
9:6	118, 156	129, 137
9:7	216	343
9:8	287	117
10:2	270	113, 117

Index of References			403
15–19	319	6:26	339
15:4	126	11	220
15:5	326
16:3	126, 306	Apocalypse of Sedrach
17	253	2:3–5	315, 321
17:3	255	4:4	277
17:18–19	44, 261	14:1	331
18	252, 295	14:10	336
18:3	235, 247
18:4	306	Apocalypse of Zephaniah
19	125, 183, 320,	3–4	348, 359
	324	3:2	287
19–21	124	3:5–9	128
19:4	179, 302, 316	6:1–8	172
19:6	156, 315	6:15	95
20:6–7	198	8	123, 252, 295
21:2–3	280	11	347
21:4	159	15–16	154
22:2	48
23	176, 193	Ascension of Isaiah
23:5	44, 198	2:40	354
23:7–11	44, 173	6:6–9	128
23:14	198	6:10–12	111, 387
24–25	222	7–9	252, 295
26:1–7	198	7:7–8	179
27:3	102	7:9	46, 144
29:18	343	7:17	179
30	47–48, 160, 376,	7:18	134–135
	381	7:21–22	179
31	159, 161, 376	7:28	134–135
31:2–5	44, 173, 193	8–10	316
31:4	137	8:1	55
31:5	167, 176, 189	8:5	345
		8:7–9	179
Apocalypse of Daniel		9	313
1:10	384	9:1	55
2:1	384	9:1–5	332
12:1–2	153, 384	9:9	220
13:8	174	9:37	179
		10	324
Apocalypse of Ezra		10:23–31	332
1	93	10:24	129
1:3	331
1:5	115	Assumption of Moses
2:10	276–277	9:1	59, 183
2:26–32	119	10:2	331

1 Baruch		63:6	95
3:26–28	213	70	376
3:26–30	148	73:2–3	303, 368
		76	216
2 Baruch		76:2	99, 196
3:5	107	77	105
4	310	77:1–17	388
5:1	107	77:4	388
5:5	97, 388
6:2	97	4 Baruch
6:7	102	3	102
7:2	44, 387	3:9–5:30	42, 98
10:5	97, 100	3:10	90
10:7–8	142	3:12	99
10:10–12	43–44, 106	3:15	100
10:12	280–281	3:18	99
11:1–2	107	3:21–22	99
21:1	97–98	4:7	101, 107
21:21	372	4:12	101, 365
24	120	5:5	100
25–27	376	7:25–27	99
29:4	44, 47, 159, 163, 166	9:5	42, 331–332
29:4–5	195	9:18	216
29:6–8	251
29:7	368	5 Baruch
31–34	105	9:5	345
31:3–32:7	388
31:2	97	Biblical Antiquities
34–35:1	101	6	141
35:1	97	7:3	141
36–40	199	7:5	141
44–46	388	11:12	349
44:15	176	13:6	345, 362
48:30–38	376	13:8	277
48:39	176	15:5	349
51:2	140	19:10	299, 311
51:5	141	27:10	155
53:1	301	34:2	345
54:6–8	388	38:3	155
55:3	95, 338	43:5	155
58:1	44, 274, 360	59:4	349
59:2	176
59:4	150	1 Enoch
59:8	119, 134	1:1	92, 96
60:1	44, 274, 360	1:2	92
63:5–11	344	1:5	246

1:7	281	17-18	122
2:1-5	230	17-19	37, 124, 287
3	230	17:4	273, 288
6-11	344	17:4-6	164
6:6	201	17:6	123-124
6:7	212	17:8	171, 173
8	212	18-19	42, 46, 145, 149, 159, 164
8:3	233	18:2-3	125
9:1	94, 202	18:3	123
9:2	128	18:5	123, 126
9:6	113, 117	18:8	123
9:10	128, 311	18:11	126
10:2	287	18:11-16	176
10:3	211	18:12	288
10:4	161, 176	18:13	123
10:6	113, 117, 119, 176	18:14-16	282
10:9	127	18:15-16	281-282
10:12	119	18:19	176
10:16[21]	219	19:3	91, 310
10:18-19	250	20	203
10:19	217	20:1	120
10:20-22	333	20:5	331
12:3	96	20:6	216
13	100	20:8	95
13-14	387	21:1-6
13:7	98	21:3	144, 222
14	150	21:3-6	282
14:8-18	328	22	287, 291, 318
14:9	321	22:1	246
14:10	154	22:2	357
14:10-17	321	22:9	42, 288, 357
14:11	266	22:10	357, 376
14:17	266	22:11	371
14:19	235, 247	22:12	357
14:20	179	22:13	119, 357
14:21	361	22:14	96
14:25	311	25:2	197
15	212	25:7	96
15:2	344	27:5	96
15:3	326	30-32	207
15:3-10	46, 148	30:3	237
15:7-8	127	31:1-2	122
15:8-10	46, 145	32:1	237
15:10	127	32:1-3	196
15:12	153	32:3-33:3	42
16:3-4	113, 117	32:4	44, 198

33:1	123	68:3-4	344
34-36	128	69:6	208
36:1	319	69:15	113, 117
36:4	96, 386	69-71	118
39:5	303, 344	70:2	234
40	252, 295	71:1	387
40:6	344-345	71:3	331
40:8	202	71:3-4	117
40:8-9	202	71:5-6	387
40:9	190, 345	71:8-9	202
41:1	117	71:12	202
41:3	47-48, 299	72	233
41:3-4	117-118, 299	72-75	184, 257
47:2	344	72-82	128, 234
48:10	371	72-87	37
49:2	117	72:3	279
51:3	117	72:4-5	43, 232
52:1	287	72:5	90, 267
52:2	117, 154, 286	72:37	43, 268, 282
52:4	371	73-74	282
52:5	117	73:2	43, 232
53:1	287	75	233
53:3	146	75:3	232
53:7	286	75:4	43, 232
54:1-2	176	75:8	232
54:5		76	299, 319
54:6	176, 202	76:8	304
54:7-8	47, 301	76:12	318
54:8	182	77:5-7	184
56:6	229	80:2-8	376, 381
59:1-3	117	88	282
60	295	81:3	96
60:3	270	81:5	203
60:7	42, 47, 159, 163, 169	81:10	96
60:7-8	166	81:67-77	363
60:7-9	167	82:2	161, 176
60:8	40, 161, 175, 193	82:11	184, 257
60:11-12	37	83-90	387
60:20	302	83:11	96
61:10	120, 203, 317, 354	84:12	96
62:15	220	85-90	157
63:3	117	87:2	203
63:14	47, 160, 174, 176	89:6	46, 212
65:4	270	89:76	344
65:6	113, 117	90:14	344
65:11	113, 117, 154	90:17	344

90:20–21	363	8:1	184, 196
90:21–22	203	8:4	183
90:21–25	176	8:5	43, 163, 165, 207,
90:24	282		285, 367
90:26	171	8:7	207
90:26–27	176	8:8	226
90:41	97	10	42, 159, 164
91:9	176	11	43, 277, 286
91:15	120	11–15	234
93:4	119	11:2	232
93:14	134	11:3–5	43, 232
94:9	120	11:4	273
97:5	119	12	157, 228
98:3	176	12:1	245
98:10	120	12:1–2	43, 238, 296
99	376	12:2	232, 250–251, 302
99:3	344	13–14	257–258
99:5	384	13–16	128
100:1–2	192	13:1	43, 246
100:5	349	13:2	134
100:9	176	14	272
100:10	249, 281	14:2	247
102:1	176	14:2–3	43, 272–273
102:3	179	14:3	232, 253, 268
103:2	117	14:4	232
103:8	161, 176	14:2–3	232
104:1	179, 344	15:1	157, 238, 296
104:5	120	15:1–2	43
104:11	118	15:2	232, 238, 245, 261
108:12	220	15:3	256
		16	282
2 Enoch		16:7	279
1:3	97	17	252
3–6	299	18	42, 46, 138, 145,
3–31	313		147, 149
3:1–2	182	18:3	201–202, 210
3:3	124	19:5	344
3:3–6	319	19:6	157, 238, 296
5–6	302	20:1	317
5:1–2	319	20:3	316–317
6:1	303, 319	21	295
7	42, 46, 138, 145,	21:4	208
	147, 149	21:5	122
7–9	252, 295	21:7	233
7:1–2	161, 176	22	316–317
8–10	164, 194	22:2–3	93

22:6	331	Epistle of Aristeas
22:8	220, 367	70	199
22:9	43, 303, 369	92	111
25:3	259	311	118
27:3	326
27:3–4	260	Epistle of Jeremiah
29:4–5	210	9	247
30	277
30:5–6	233	1 Ezra
30:11–12	220	3:17–24	217
31	193
31:4	210	3 Ezra
33:10	331, 344	4:36	95
39:2	119
40:3	134	4 Ezra
40:5	134	1:34	385
40:9	134	2:13	277
40:13	287	2:18	205
42:1	146, 157	2:27	109
42:3	183, 196	2:39	220
56:2	367	2:45	220
61:2	291	3:1	97, 99–100, 387
75:4	248	3:1–2	107
		3:14	372
3 Enoch		3:19	43, 128–129, 179,
2:1	295		319, 321
5:5–6	213	3:21	198, 276
11:1–2	117	3:27–36	107
12:4	247	3:28	107
14:4	279	4:5–6	134
16:2	247	4:7	171, 266
17:1–3	313	4:30	198
17:8	247	4:36	95
18:1–2	313	4:42	47, 160, 174
18:23	247	4:52–5:13	376
18:25	247	5:13	97
19:5–7	255, 262	5:14	100, 387
21:4	247	5:23	199
22C:1–3	134	5:23–27	107
24:10	154	5:28–30	107
24:11	295	6	120
26:3	295	6:5	382
44:3	294	6:13	255
47:4	295	6:13–28	376
48D:1	179	6:29	255
A48:1	316	6:40	259

6:49–52	166	15:7	95
6:52	47, 159, 163	17:6	234
7:36	176	22:13	196
7:38	119
7:38–42	43–44, 106,	Jubilees
	120	1:11	384
7:102	119	2:4	182
7:104	119	2:7	207, 304
7:113	119	3:28	277
8:53	382	4:6	287
8:62	113	5	46, 149
9:1–6	376	5–10	39
9:17	384	5:1–2	212
10:30	270	5:13	348
10:38	117	5:18	363
10:38–39	97, 116	6:5–6	349
11	242	6:32	184, 257
11–13	98	7:1	211
11–32	157	7:20	222
11:1–12:2	157	9:15	176
12:34	119	10	46, 149
12:36	117	10:1	277
12:36–38	113, 154	10:1–2	384
12:38	117	10:7–11	46, 149
13:10–11	176	10:10–14	200
13:16	376	10:11–14	216
14:23	216	10:21	153
14:26	113, 117, 154	12:16–18	233
14:44–46	113	14:30	247
49–52	159	15:31	350
		15:32	351
5 Ezra		19:9	372
1:40	353	20:3	222
2:38–40	382	20:5	213
		20:6	222
History of Rechabites		23:12	376, 381
2:6	123	23:13	380
2:9	42, 124, 294	23:18	368
3:6	131	23:22	376, 381
		23:23	379
Joseph and Aseneth		26:23	303
6:5	232	26:33	304
12:2	174	29:9	213
12:11	160, 172, 176	30:20	372
14:9	247	32:11–13	363
15:2–4	369	35:17	349

Judith		22:3	214
6:16 (LXX)	243	28:4	207, 367,
16:17	119		371
		29:6	237
Ladder of Jacob		33	344
1:3	387	33:2	234
2:1	270	33:4–5	338, 346
6:13	159, 167	34:1	116, 118
		35:2	313, 322
Life of Adam and Eve		35:4	272
Vita		36:3	272, 282
6:1	114, 216	37:3	288
12	193	37:3–5	48, 289–290
13–15	189	37:5	184, 196
21:1–2	341	40:2	202, 369
35	43, 368	40:7	203
36:2	362, 366–367	43:1	94
36–39	207
37–39	194	Georg. Book of Adam
40:1	362, 366–367	38:4	214
40:1–2	43
41:1–42	109	2 Maccabees
42:1	371	1:18	340
42:1–2	43	2:4–8	102
42:2	368, 373	3:15–35	344
56:1	202	6:7	200
		10:25–30	344
Apocalypse of Moses		11:6–11	344
Title	93	12:40–46	377
Intr.	331
3:2	331	3 Maccabees
9	368	2:4	46, 213
9–12	207	2:29–30	200
9:4	43, 362,	6:17–23	344
	366–367	6:18	128
10	210	6:28	306
10–12	194	7:6	306
12:1	119	7:16	247
13:1	362, 366–367
13:1–3	43	4 Maccabees
13:2–3	371	5:22	340
13:3	368, 373	9:9	176
16:1–7	208	12:12	176
20:2	41, 220
20:5	198	Monostichs of Menander
21:5–6	41, 220	597	114

Odes of Solomon		2:255–281	222
8:10	113	2:283	46, 213
		2:334–338	288
Prayer of Azariah		2:413–14	287
15–18	334	3:24	276
26–27	344	2:303–305	176
31–34	150	3:53–54	176
		3:672–74	176
Prayer of Jacob		4:27–39	222
8	37	4:51	306
16	283	4:135	306
		4:159–61	176
Psalms of Solomon		5:12–51	183
2:13–14	249	5:454	381
3	358	7:148–149	250
8:8	249
13	358	Sirach
14	358	1:3	134
15	358	2:1–4.10	340
15:4–5	176	3:18–20	116
15:6	382	4:18	92
15:12	119	7:34	110
18:6[5]	363	9:4	263
18:10–12	230,	9:13–18	134
	265	17:17	145, 350
18:12	233	18:21	265
		20:5	114
Ps.-Phocylides		22:22	92
97	110	31:27–30	218
		32:1–2	247
Questions of Ezra		34:1–6	387
A 19–20	285	41:5	384
A 19–21	313	41:23	92
		42:1	92
Sibylline Oracles		43:3–4	248
1:145	213	43:11	96
1:150–70	222	43:32	226
1:154	218	48:9	247
1:174–98	222	50:16–17	338
1:216	306	51:5	59, 160, 174,
1:285	277		226
1:301	124
1:326–330	183	Syriac Menander
2	376, 381	311–313	114
2:67–77	222	458–467	110
2:215	95

Testament of Abraham

2:2	331
2:3	306
4:6	339
6:8	92, 96
8:3	123
9	234
9:2–3	344
9:3	120
9:6	36, 387
10	120
10:12–14	249
11	234
11–12	128
11:1	246
12:9	248
13:6	274
14:7	331
14:12	120
15	234
17:7	354
17:15	253
20:10	369

Testament of Adam

1:8	302
1:9	347–348
1:9–10	253, 302
1:10	243, 245–246, 255–256, 262, 311, 335
1:12	111–112
4:4	247
4:5	95, 156
4:6	354

Testament of Benjamin

6:1	349
7:2	222

Testament of Dan

1:6	222
2:4	155, 222
6:2	344

Testament of Gad

5:6–9	95
-------	----

Testament of Hezekiah

313

Testament of Isaac

5	145
5:8	142, 146
5:16	172

Testament of Issachar

7:2–4	222
-------	-----

Testament of Jacob

1:9	337
-----	-----

Testament of Job

8:19	113, 156
33:1–2 (7:34–35)	109
36:3 (8:9)	36, 115
40:3	196
52:10	196

Testament of Joseph

10:1–2	340
--------	-----

Testament of Judah

16:4	113
19:4	155
21:7	160, 172
25:3	176

Testament of Levi

2–3	322
2:4	97
2:5	100, 387
2:6–10	315, 321
2:7	98, 182, 299, 321
2:9–10	179
3	165, 203, 252, 260, 313, 329
3:1	260, 274, 321, 360
3:1–8	316, 323–324
3:2	46, 145–146, 299, 319
3:3	119, 145, 164, 285, 314, 326
3:4	179, 321
3:5–6	346

Index of References		413
3:5–7	344	Testament of Zebulon
3:8	295, 354	10:3 176
5	310
5:1	42, 128,	Tobit
	332	1:1 92
5:6	331–332,	1:18 119
	344	3:16–17 344
8	203, 346	4:17 218
8:4–5	290	12:8–10 340
		12:12 344
Testament of Reuben		12:15 344–345
2–3	222	12:22 156
5:6	213
		Wisdom of Solomon
Testament of Simeon		2:22 36, 115, 154
2:7	155	2:24 193, 211
3:1	222	3:1–13 358
		3:11–13 384
Testament of Solomon		7:1 277
2	153, 384	7:18–20 37
2:2	46, 144	8:4 116
4	142	8:7 340
4:6	46, 144	9:10 326
4:9	144	11:20 58
5:5	145	13:1 37
8:2	46, 144	14:6 46, 213
8:2–4	222	14:25–26 222
13	153,	17:19 168
	384	19:17 155
18:2	142, 144	22:2 117

IV. Dead Sea Scrolls

1QS		1QapGen ^{ar}
2.8, 15	176	2.1	127
2.9	336
3.23	115	1QH
4.9–11	222	1.13	266
4.16	220	17.5	220
4.23	220
4.24	220
9.3–5	334	1QH ^a
9.11	363, 371	9.11	117–118
9.18–19	117	16[8].18–22	226
11.3–6	117

1QM		4Q511
3.9	115	35.7	127, 149
9.12–16	94, 202
11.7–8	369	4Q529
17.6–8	331	1.9	140
1QNoah		4Q530
2.4	202	II 3–12	204, 215
1QpHab		4Q540
10.5, 13	176	1.2	184, 257
4Q171		4Q561	37, 233
3.1–2	220
4Q186	37, 233	4QD^f
		3.1.15	338
4Q213^a		4QDeutⁱ	350
fr. 1 2.18	128
		4QEn^a
4Q267		1.4.6	202
2.6	369
		4QShirShabb	150
4Q318	37, 233
		6Q15
4Q327	363	3.4	369
4Q365		11Q5
23	363	27.6–7	184, 257
4Q369		11Q19
2.1	336	55.15–21	231
4Q370		11QPs^a
1.6	46, 213	18.10–11	334
4Q400.1	346	11QTemple^a	363
4Q405		Book of Giants	203, 206, 213
22.7	179
		Damascus Document (CD)
4Q508		2.9	330
2.2	362	2.12–13	369
		2.19–20	46, 213
4Q510		3.2	372
1.5	127, 149	3.20	220

	Index of References	415
4.15–19	223	11.20–21
6.1	369	11.23
8.20	91	19.12
		334
		338
		382

V. Rabbinic Literature

V.1. Mishnah

Abodah Zarah		Makshirin
3.3	163, 183, 231	6.3	297
4.4	234
		Middot
Avot		1.4	101
1.2	340	2.3	330
2.1	348	2.4	102
3.6	348	3.8	199
3.14	372
3.18	37	Negaim
4.1	340	14.3	273
5.8	380
6.1	372	Ohalot
		8.2	242
Berakhot		14.1, 4	242
9.1	96
9.2	96	Rosh HaShanah
9.5	101, 110	1.2	119
		Sanhedrin
Bikkurim		10.1	372
3.8	351–352
3.9–10	352	Sotah
		1.8	155
Eruvin		7.8	388
10.4	242	8.2	205
		9.14	234
Hagigah
2.1	36, 113, 154	Taanit
		3.2	381
Kelim
1.6–9	313	Tamid
		3.2	349
Maaserot		4–7	349
1.3	208	5.1–6	111
		7.3	338

Yebamot		Yoma
2.9	364	8.8	362

V.2. Tosefta

Abodah Zarah		Rosh HaShanah
1.17–18	349–350	1.13	361, 363
5.6	183	1.15	143
6	163, 231
		Sanhedrin
Berakhot		12.3	294
6.2	276	13.3	357
		13.4	172, 371
Hagigah
2.5	122	Shabbat
2.6	136	2.9	273
		13(19).4	96
Hullin
2.14	297	Sotah
2.18	332, 345	4.17	211
3.20	276	6.5	276
8.11	297	13.5–6	100
		15.11	110
Kelim		15.11–12	218
7.5	297
		Sukkah
Makkot		2.9	208
5.15	294
		Taanit
Nazir		1.4	47, 301
1.3	257, 364
		Yoma
Ohalot		2.4	101
12.3	297	4.6	310
Parah
3.8	273

V.3. Palestinian Talmud

Abodah Zarah		7c	312, 335,
41d	113		362
42c–43d	247	8a	334
		9a	303
Berakhot		9b	303
5a	115	5c	381

Index of References			417
5d	334, 337	Sanhedrin
13a	130, 135, 311,	28c	340
	345	29b	213
14a	301
59a	111	Shabbat
61a	119	8d	354
70c	381	15c	96
Demai		Sotah
22c	297	24b	91
Erubin		Sukkah
30b	119	54d	361
Hagigah		Taanit
8b	119	63c	303
77a	136	63d	303
77d	359	64b	301
79d	273	Terumot
Moed Qatan		45b	237
82b	294	Yebamot
Nazir		15c	294
56a	199	Yoma
Rosh HaShanah		39a	361
58a	257–258	42c	361
		76b	363

V.4. Babylonian Talmud

Abodah Zarah		Arakhin
3a	281	9b	257, 364
3b	194, 253	15a	344
4a–b	213
20b	209	Bava Batra
28b	209	10a	217
30a	195	25a	125, 143, 344
30b	191	25b	48, 242, 245, 302
40b	217	58b	217
41b	332, 345	72b–75a	47, 160, 193
42b	163, 231	73b	239, 241, 262, 287, 296
53b	148	74a	123

74b	48, 159–160, 163, 166, 169, 170–171, 175	Erubin 19a 45b	176 300
75a	161, 170, 176, 193	53a	148
84a	164, 196, 246	65a	34, 199, 217–219
93b	245
		Gittin
Bava Metzia		31b	48, 242, 245
85b	154	56a 68b	41, 153 142
Bava Qamma
16a	141	Hagigah
90b	294	5b 12	110, 117 154
Bekhorot		12a	169, 259
57b	241	12b	112, 154, 164, 182, 251, 253, 259, 268, 299, 303–304, 313, 315, 318, 321–322, 328–329, 331, 333
Berakhot
2a-b	273	12b–13a	134, 317
6a	142	13a	130–131, 135, 315
6b	337	13b	247, 235, 339, 353
7a	213, 247	15a	124, 136, 182
7b–8a	337	15b	176, 207, 311
9b	336	16a	142, 349
10b	344
11b	263
18b	370
18b–19b	172, 371	Horayot
26b	334	6a	377
29a	362	10a	37
30b	376	13a-b	199, 217, 368
31a	110
32b	201, 312, 362	Hullin
33a	303, 333	27b	296
34b	196, 217	59b	254
35a	96	60a	180, 261
35a-b	217	60b	230, 278, 280–281
38a	96	67b	237
40a	14, 198, 209	89a	148
50a	96
51a	219	Ketubbot
58b	217	62b	294
60b	262, 341, 349	65a	219
61a	198, 209	104a	164
61b	357	106a	261
62a-b	143	111b	303

Kiddushin

30b	198
31b	115
40b	120
49a	297

Makkot

23b–24a	340
---------	-----

Megillah

14b	91
15a	99
18a	333–334
31b	334

Menahot

53b	207
69a	300
110a	321, 333

Moed Qatan

16a	282
16b	99, 196
21a	110
25a	98
27b	110
28b–29a	294

Nedarim

32a	344
38a	340
39b	280

Niddah

13b	295
16b	344
31a	155
61a	46, 149, 213

Pesahim

42b	217
54a	176
93b	268
94a	130, 135, 161, 177, 225
94b	148, 257, 266–267, 272, 278, 283
118a	344

Rosh HaShanah

12a	213
16a	364
16b–17a	172, 348, 357, 371
17a	359

Sanhedrin

8a	119
29a	210–211
38a	199
38b	345, 354
39a	180, 368
42a	230
59b	211
64b	172, 371
70a	14, 198, 209, 215, 219
89a	209
90a	372
91b	120
92b	294
94a	344, 349
94b	310
95b	344
97a	380
99b	41, 248
108b	213, 240, 280, 298
109a	138, 141–143, 299
110a	280

Shabbat

30b	110
33b	172, 357, 371
75a	37, 266
88b	303
88b–89a	311
104a	171, 372
115b	96
134a	261
152a	359
152b	344
156a–b	37, 233, 313

Shevuot

9a	230, 280–281
----	--------------

Sotah		Tamid
3b	119	32a	41, 45, 136
9a	102	32b	145, 159, 164
9b	211
10b	209	Yebamot
13b–14a	359	48b	289
14b	352	49b	98
36a	155	62a	295
43b	205	63b	295
		64a	201
		109b	161, 176
Sukkah
28a	37	Yoma
29a	280	9b	253
37b	304	20b–21a	255, 263
		52a	351
Taanit		54b	310
6b	301	75a	357
7a	303	75b	242, 245, 250
8b	119, 299	76b	219
9b	300	77a	331
10a	47, 48, 161, 177, 182, 225, 299	77b–78a	175
		87b	312, 335, 362
16a	334
22a	381	Zebahim
25b	170	62a	321, 333
27b	334	113a-b	46, 149, 213

V.5. Targums

Gen 3:21	41, 220	Targum 1 Chronicles
Lev 17:7	143	21:15	310
Targum Psalms		Targum Isaiah
50:10	166	1:1–6	310
50:11	245, 262
Targum Canticles		Targum Malachi
2:5	207	1:1	99
7:9	198, 207
8:5	207	Targum Jerushalmi
8:9	331	Gen 1:16	280–281
		Gen 33:10	349
Targum Esther II		Num 28:15	280–281
4	359

Targum Neofiti		Gen 7:10	213
Gen 32:25–31	49	Gen 9:20	211
		Gen 27:1	154
Targum Pseudo-Jonathan		Gen 27:1–6	302
Gen 1:16	230	Gen 32:25	333
Gen 2:6	300	Exod 24:10	152–153
Gen 2:7	198	Lev 26:l	234
Gen 3:6	209	Num 28:15	230
Gen 3:15	119, 208	Deut 3:11	46, 149, 213
Gen 6:16	280	Deut 14:19	237

V.6. Other

Abba Gorion		Baraita de-Maase Bereshit
41–41	207	50	234, 250, 274
Abot de-Rabbi Nathan		Bate Midrashot (ed. Wertheimer)
A 12	202	1.29	313
A 37.110	313	2.13.4	98
A 41	357	2.42	313
B	41, 220	2.129–30	313
B 43	327	2.131	134
B 43.122	99, 196	27–28	171
1	211
1.4–5	210	Be-Hokhma Yasad Erets
151	210	6	243
156	359
		Bet HaMidrash (ed. Jellinek)
Abraham bar Hiyya		1.12, 125	209
Megillat ha-Megalleh	317	1.35–57	208
		1.98	175
Aggadat Bereshit		2.29	289
4.10	213	2.41	134
		2.43	134
Aggadat Esther		2.45	316
60–61	207	2.53	313
		2.66	209
2 Alphabet of Ben Sira		3.31	289
27–28	161, 175	3.76	178
27a–29b	240	3.87	209
28b	99, 196	3.131–140	295
		5.63	362
Aseret Dibrot		5.183	289
46	153	6.12	240

6.31, 129	209	Sefer Yetsira 183–198	317
88–91	97
		Esther Rabbah
Canticles Rabbah		5	198, 216
1.4	202, 354	5.11	207
1.15.4	214
1.28	178	Exodus Rabbah
1.31	155	3	228, 235
3.10	334	3.16	202
4.1.2	214	14	161, 176
4.4	334	18.5	210
5.1	313	21.4	344, 353
5.6	303	23.6	119
5.9	255, 263	27.9	372
6.9	161, 177, 225	29	111
6.11	207	29.9	255
		30.17	107
Derekh Erets		32.2–3	351
2	202	32.9	179, 332
		36.1	207
Derekh Erets Zuta		38	11, 271, 294
1	99, 196	41.7	202
		42	228, 235
Deuteronomy Rabbah		43	228, 235
1.24	212	44.8	202
2.32	313, 315, 328	48.1	370
3.11	202	52.1	372
7.6	303
11.3	154	Gedulat Moshe	337, 377
11.9	115, 209, 294
11.10	210	Genesis Rabbah
		1.1	280
Ecclesiastes Rabbah		1.4	310
1.7	171, 300	2.4	122, 136, 244
4.3	202	3.6	259
7.1	370	4	4, 176
7.14	165, 194	4.2–7	135
7.23	296	4.3	124, 135, 182
9.4	213	4.3–5	136
		5.2	117
Ecclesiastes Zuta		6	313
1	242, 249, 257, 268, 273	6.3	230, 280–281
86	255, 263	6.6	48, 135, 248–249, 268, 273, 290
		6.7	40, 255, 263, 297
Elhanan ben Yakar		6.8	268, 278
Commentary to		8.1	133

11.2	259	68.12	113, 117
12.3	300	69.7	310
13.1	301	69.8	357
13.10–11	47, 300, 302, 352	74.1	98
13.14	301	75.4	202
15	207	77	209
15.7	14, 198, 209	77.3	350
16.1–4	184	78.2	113
17.4	354	85	344
17.5	387	93.8	294
18	211	100.7	294
19	211
19.3–4	210	Genesis Rabbati
19.4	47–48, 178, 241, 245, 298	Haye Sarah [24.34]	99, 196
19.5	240, 245	Vayetse	298
19.6	41, 220
19.7	313, 317	Hekhalot Rabbati
19.8	198	6.170–171	117
20.11	276	8–12	348
20.12	41, 220	13–23 (##198–250)	100
23.6–7	141, 148	15.8–16.2 (## 213–15)	146, 332
24.2	133	17–23	332
25.2	280	#213	311
26.4	148	#259	311
26.7	212	ms Oxford 1531 (#173)	112
31.11	280
32.7	301	Hekhalot Zutarti	113, 117
33.3	280	#345	124
33.6	212, 214	##408–409	311
34.11	280	#410	124
36.3	207, 214	#424	362
36.3–4	209, 211, 219, 223	ms New York 23a	311, 332
36.7	216
38.7	41, 153	Kalir on Isa 27:1	163
38.8	153
42.4	148	Kaneh
44.8–12	233	30c	163
45.7	202	32c–32d	163
48.11	350
50.9	113, 117	Kimhi
50.12	213	Isa 27:1	163, 193
56.4	209
55.7	334	Lamentations Rabbah
56.6	359	Intr.	359
65.15	143	Intr. 12	337
65.21	112	Intr. 24	111, 117

1.89–90	115	Masekhet Kelim	97
4.148	115
		Mekhlita de-Rabbi Ishmael
Leviticus Rabbah		Bahodesh 3	201
1.14	98	Bahodesh, Yitro 4	367
2.10	169	Bahodesh, Yitro 9	303, 310
7.3	334	Beshalah 6	380
7.6	213	Beshalah, Shira 2	359
12	196, 217, 234	Beshalah, Shira 3	48
12.1	198, 219	Beshalah, Shira 4	367
13.3	175	Beshalah, Vaihi 4	371, 376
17	207	Bo Intr.	91, 108
18.1	294	Bo 1	230, 280–281
19	237	Bo 3a	230, 281
21.4	209	Shira 10	334
22.5	143	Yitro 10	345
22.9–10	47–48, 160, 193	20	176
22.10	158, 173, 175, 241–242, 245, 287, 296	Mekhlita de-Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai
24.8	353	100	135
28	304	Midrash Abkir	210
29.11	313
31.9	274	Midrash Aggada
31.10	214	Gen 9:21	209
33	225	Gen 11:8	138
51	257, 364
		Midrash Alphabetot
Maarekhet		118	274
8.102–103b	193
		Midrash HaGadol
Maase Daniel		1.14–15	313
121–122	155	1.159	213
		1.322	359
Maase de-R. Yehoshua b. Levi	327	1.430	303
		1.454	334
Maimonides		Gen 1:42	274
Moreh Nev		Gen 50:26	164
2.9	317
3.23	193	Midrash Ecclesiastes
		3.11	214
Masekhet Hekhalot
2	134	Midrash Jonah	175
4	134
4.5	313	Midrash Konen	313
7	316	25	202

Index of References			425
25–26	135, 280	Midrash Vayosha
26	194, 339, 353	43–44	208
26–27	317	Midr. Zut.
		Cant 8.9	108
Midrash Proverbs		Lam 1, 17	108
23.95–96	219
		Nefesh HaHayyim
Midrash Psalms		1.17	193
1.13	138
9.88	313	Numbers Rabbah
11.100	213	2.10	94, 202, 301
17	202, 334	4.8	220
19	259	10.2	198
19.3	248–249, 257	10.8	198
19.7	353	12	234
19.12	274	12.6	313
19.13	232, 249	12.13	273, 310
30.233	334	13.2	313, 317
31.3	371, 376	14	325
68	202	19.3	296
78.345	250	19.32	213
79.360	115	20.6–12	155
88.2	353	21.16–19	242
88.4	344	21.18	158, 160, 169, 173, 193
92.408	115
96.1	259	Ozhayah Fragment
104	205	2b/8–10	332
104:9–12	295
109.471	313	Panim Aherim
114:2	315, 321, 328	47–48	207
146	175	Pesiqta de-Rab Kahana
148.538	313	1	313
445	205	2.13	213
537	175	4.35a	296
		5	280–281
Midrash Samuel		5.54a	230, 281
1.45	334	6	160–161, 173, 178, 242, 334
5.57	237
9.74	255, 263	6.1	158, 169, 193
12.81	240	6.3	158
		6.5	41, 220
Midrash Tannaim		6.58a	160
187	120	12	201, 207
224	165, 194	13.14	91

20	198, 303	Pirqa de-Rabbi Eliezer
23	363	1	301
24	313	3	259
24.2	312, 335, 362	3.6	123
30	194	4	94, 202–203,
30.191b	165		230
48.3	160	4–6	280–281
71	161, 177, 225	5	257, 301
Suppl. 2.4	166	6	234, 248, 250,
			273
Pesiqta Rabbati		7–8	272
5	310, 313	11.5	183
5.7	317	12–13	209–210
11	207	13	208, 210
12	201	14	41, 220
15	280–281, 313	14.20	41, 220
15.78a	230	19	313
16	242	21	208, 237
16.4	158, 160, 169,	22	212–213
	173, 193	23	46, 149, 211–212, 216,
20	120, 175, 260,		219, 280, 301
	303, 311	24	148, 153, 351
20.4	310, 313	26	209–210
21	201	31	359
26	99, 196	32	154, 209
29	248–249	32–34	303
29.12	108, 111	34	255, 263
37.2	41, 220	35	312, 367
40	334, 359	36	302
41	161, 225	45	202
41.173b	177	46	362
43	198	48	153
44	202, 210	51	230, 280
46	202, 94, 301	53	99, 196
47	361
48	242	Reuyot Ezekiel	98, 134, 313, 316, 318
48.3	158, 160, 169–170, 193
48.4	160	Rokeah to Yetsirah 14c	163
96b–98a	321
		Saadia
Petirat Moshe		Polemic Against
125	115	Hiwi al-Balkhi 31–34	148
381	210
		Seder Eliyahu Rabba
2 Petirat Moshe		2.17	274
379	115	2.61–62	193

21	153	Sifre Numbers
118	153	78	91
		99	99
Seder Gan Eden	295	134	48
Seder Olam		Sifre Deuteronomy
20	91	26	48
		41	334
Seder Rabba deBereshit		43	110
5–6	313	210	377
17	171	256	273
21–26	313	306	281, 336
28–30	247	307	120
		312	107
Sefer Eliyahu	122	343	333
Sefer HaRazim	216	Sifre Zuta
Intr.	200, 216	12	99, 196
4	231, 277	75	91
Sefer HaYashar		Tanhuma
9.26	138	Gen 3:21	220
9.29	41, 153	Intr. 155	240
Noah	153	Behaalotekha 9	102
		Beshalah 24	158
Sefer Eliyahu	246	Bo 5	98
		Hukkat 6	296
Sefer Raziel		Hukkat 25	213
2a	216	Ki Tissa 21	228, 235
34a	216	Mishpatim 19	349
343	313	Naso 15	313
441	312	Naso 19	310
		Noah 1	153
Sefer Yetsira		Noah 13–15	211
183–198	317	Noah 15	216
94d	318	Noah 18	219
		Noah 28	138
Sifra		Pequde 1–2	334
Behar 4	257, 364	Pequde 3	119
Emor 14	362	Pequde 6	313
Shemini 10.12	237	Pinehas 12	158, 160, 169, 193
Lev 17:7	143	Qedoshim 10	310
11.10	175	Shemini 11	219
12	276	Toledot 16	198
		Vaishlah 8	342
		Vayira 3	119

Vayira 5	117	Noah 27	41, 153
Vaethanan 6	359	Qedoshim 6	107
Vaiqhel 1	370	Tetsaveh	248
Zav 2	213	Toledot 19	303
		Toledot 22	151
Tanhuma (ed. Buber)		Vaethanan 6	294
1.21	120
1.46–48	211	Yalkut Shimoni
1.48	219	2.367	99, 196
1.49	216	2.1054	207
1.54	153	Gen 110	210
1.58	219	Cant 986	207
1.112	334	Eccl 967	242, 249, 257,
2.10	202		273
2.47	230, 280–282
2.67	250	Zohar
3.13	213	Exod 2.7b–9a	295
3.24–26	219	Exod 3.196b	295
3.37–38	313	Lev 3.22b	262
4.13	359	Lev 23a	262
4.112	296	Lev 49b	262
4.130	213	2.7b	126
5.6	212	2.34b	163, 184
50–51	219	Vayehi 704	194
76	201
Behaalotekha 10	259	Zohar Hadash
Naso 6	367	1a	126
Noah 22	145	68c	126

VI. Early Christian Literature

Acts of Andrew		Acts of Peter
27	382	35	387
Acts of Andrew and Matthew		Acts of Peter (Latin)
12	171	2	93
18	213
20:28	219	Acts of Philip
24	147, 171, 190,	3	171
	209	8	175
		24	171
Acts of John
8	247	Acts of Thomas
41	145	12	153, 384

Index of References		429
25	290	Athenagoras
26	369, 383	Leg.
27	205	24–25 149
32	14, 159, 162, 167, 171, 189, 194	Augustine
157	367	Gen. ad Lit. 4.3.7–4.6.12 58
Apocalypse of Paul		Haer.
2–23	332	64 218
4	48, 249	Praedest.
4–6	230	64 218
6	221
7	342, 347–348	Cave of Treasures
7–10	348, 358	2.10–24 189
8	349	3.6 210
10	380	4.2–3 198
11	345	4.4–7 208
12	370
13	183	1 Clement
19	129, 250, 311, 330	9:2 179 10:1 372
20:16	332	17:2 372
21	122–123	61:2 306
22	226
22–23	288	2 Clement
23	48, 289	7.6 376
24	311
31	122–123, 246	Clement of Alexandria
32	161, 177, 225	Strom.
40	154	4.162.1 316
43	331, 344	5.11.77 316 6.5.41 233, 345 On 1 John 2.1 341
Apocalypse of Peter
14	48, 288–289, 353	Clement of Rome
230	213	1 Ep. Cor. 1.25–26 236 5.6 21, 356
Apocalypse of Peter (Ethiopic)
12	154
17	328	Commodianus
Apostolic Constitutions		Instruct. 3 198
3.1	96
7.18	221–222	Didache
7.22	290, 364, 369, 383	5 221

Epiphanius of Cyprus		Gospel of Nicodemus
Haer.		19	207, 290, 362, 367–368,
1.5.2	316		370–371, 373
3.45.1.2	14, 198, 209, 218	23	198
40.2.3	316
26.10.1–4	316	Hermas
		Sim.
Epistle of Apostles (Ethiopic)		3.3	331
10	110	9	140, 203
13	316, 331	8.2	220
		Vis.
Epistle of Barnabas		3	203
4.9	360	4.1	157
20.1	360	4.1.6	82
20.2–8	221	5.8	95
Epistle of Titus		Hippolytus
287–288		Ref.
		1.1	94
Eusebius of Alexandria		5.2	207
Or.		5.8.39	111
6	232	5.9.22	94
		5.21	91, 195, 203
Eusebius of Caesarea		5.38–41	197
Pr. Ev.		7.26.6	259, 316
1.10.45–53	159, 162, 320
8.14.386–399	337	Ignatius of Antioch
9.17.2–3	147	Eph.
9.18	233	15	112
9.18.2	147	Phil.
9.29	239	11	193
10.14.6	91	Phld. on Ps 77:18	253	3.1	214
		Tral.
Fall of Satan (Coptic)	331	11.1	214
Gospel of Barnabas		Infancy Gospel of Thomas
40	194, 208	(Gk A) 5:1	155
Gospel of Bartholomew		Irenaeus of Lyon
1	167	Exc. Theod.
1:17	225	56.2	336, 357
1:20	173	Haer.
4	189	1.3.2	93
4:25	210	1.4–7	336
4:28	331	1.6.1	125

Index of References		431
1.7.5	357	Div. Inst.
1.11.1	112	2.14 149
1.24.3–7	94, 256, 316
1.30.4–5	315	Leo the Great
2	341	Serm.
2.30	341	27 232
5.33.3	196	Nativ. Dom.
11.16.2	256, 316	7.3 232
21.2	193
Jerome		Methodius of Olympus
Adv. Luc.		Symp.
22	297	2 198
Comm. in Isa.		Origen
5	143	Cels.
Ep. Avitum		1.26 345
3	141	5.6 345
Quaest. Isa		5.11 230
64:1	135	6.19 309
Vita Pauli		6.21–22 316
6	143	6.25 159, 162, 316, 320, 325
to Gen 2:12	184	6.26 225
on Isa 10:3	255	6.27 14, 207, 290, 364, 367,
on Isa 27:1	159, 163	369–370, 383
		6.30 142, 144, 203, 222
John Lydus		6.31 332
De mensibus		6.33 142
4.53	200	6.34 14, 290, 367
		6.39 243
Justin Martyr		7.40 332
1 Apol.		7.69 145
5	145	Hom. Jer.
5.2	153, 384	8.5 91
41	145	Hom. Num.
2 Apol.		1 58
2–6	149	4 58
6	261	5.2.2–3 58
Dial.		7.4.4 58
58	145	8.1.5 58, 216
73	145	Princ.
103	193	1.5.3 341
		1.7 230
Lactantius		1.8.1 345
Carmen de ave phoenice		2.3.6 12, 314, 317
33–54	238	2.11.6 291
169–70	236	3.2.1 208

Palaea Historica	198, 213	Teaching of Silvanus
		92.16	357
Philastrius		101.31–33	274
Haer.
77	218	Tertullian
Prudentius		Ad Scap.
Liber Cathemerinon		2	145
1	262	Apol.
		22.3–4	149
Ps.-Clementines		Bapt.
Hom.		5	289
7.18–20	149	Haer.
Rec.		2	341
1.45	207, 367, 370	Idol.
3	290	1	145
		15	145
Ps.-Eustatius		Marc.
Commentarius in Hexaemeron		2.2	198
(PG 18.729D)	239	Praescr. Haer.
		23	345
Ps.-Justin		Res. Carn.
Quaest. ad Orthodoxos		1.13	236
137	290	Scap.
		2	334
Ps.-Tertullian		Spect.
Gen. 86	198	9	279
		20	274
Tatian
Ad Gr.		Theophilus
8	145	Ad Autol.
29	145	1.10	145

VII. Gnostic and related writings

Apocalypse of Adam	92	Apocryphon of John
		11:4	315
Apocalypse of Paul		11:25	257
19–20	183	19:3	257
20–22	145, 159, 164	31.22–25	14, 364, 369, 382–383
22–23	316, 325
		Bala'izah fragment	205, 369
1 Apocryphon of James
26	316	Corpus Hermeticum
33:7–15	332	1.16	114

Index of References		433
1.30–31	112	On the Origin of the World
10.5	112	161–179 236–237
13.7	221
		Paraphrase of Shem
Gospel of Philip		24–25 14, 142, 144–145
38	147, 154	40 260
133:29–231	214
		Pistis Sophia
Gospel of Thomas		1.1 14, 202, 205, 317
19:3–4	14, 205	1.10 14, 205, 317
40	15, 209, 214	1.59 247
		1.61 386
Gospel of Truth		2.64 386
36:35–37	214	2.66 247
		2.86 14, 205, 317
Hypostasis of the Archons		3.95 14, 205, 317
86.27	146	3.126 14, 164, 167, 175, 260
87.3–4	146	5.136 202
88–90	210	99 256
89.25	146
135	209	Tripartite Tractate
		118.14–119.34 357
Manichaean Psalm Book
161.17–29	206	Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex
		4 205, 317

VII. Classical Literature (including Philo and Josephus)

Achilles Tatius		Anacreontea
Leuc. Clit.		Fr. 46	233
2.2.1–3.3	200
		Antiphanes
Aelius Aristides		Frag. 175	235
Or.
18,2	351	Apollonius of Rhodes
IG		Argon.
II ² 334	351	4.1396	194
Syll. ²		4.121–66	194
388.32, 711e, 728e	351	1.498	165
Aeschylus		Apollonius of Tyana
Prom.		Apotelesmata
88	249	1389.1	297

Apuleius		2.11.28	341
Deo Socr.		Resp.
8	319	6.18	255
Metam.		6.19	54, 183
9.22	267	6.29	45, 129, 294
11.23	230	Tusc.
		1.24	129
Aristophanes		Ver.
Ach.		2.4.5[4.3]	351
242	351
Eq.		Claudius Iolaus
85–99	199	FGH 788 F 4	200
527	287
Lys.		Diogenes Laertius
646	351	1.27	256
Ran.		8.32	144
143	146
278	146	Euripides
Thesm.		El.
295–97	111	1142	351
		Herc. fur.
Aristotle		394	194
Cael.		Fr. 910	37
2.8 [289b–290b]	257, 283
2.290	255	Eustathius
Hist. Anim.		ad Hom.
9.13	237	163	267
12	291, 296
Meteor.		Heliodorus
2.9	47, 300	Aethiopica
		10.6	279
Arrian
Anab.		Herodotus
7.20	237	Hist.
		2.73	47, 235, 240
Athenaeus		3.11	237
Deipn.		3.26	246, 287
7.277D	299	3.110	194, 237
11.469–70	267	4.36	124
14.655b	235	4, 59	243
15.48	195
		Hesiod
Cicero		Op.
Div.		106–201	318
72 [149]	37	110–139	149
Leg.		167–173	246, 287

Index of References			435
181–189	192	3.123	310
Theog.		3.181	310, 328
333	194	4.8.22 [241]	351
334–370	186	7.172	47
713–748	224	7.195	47
729	161, 176	7.238	47
744	150	7.243	100
Frag. 204	47, 235	8.47	383
		10.11.7	388
Hippocrates		11.3.3	217
Aer.		11.8	338
8	301	11.247	47
		11.252	47
Homer		12.2.11	250
Il.		12.145	330
6.129	306	13.299–300	100
9.171	111	14.3.1[35]	199
20.64	150	15.11.3	199
Od.		15.417	330
4.561–69	246, 287	19.9.1	247
8.300	249	19.326–327	100
10.80	267
10.513	124	Bell.
11.102	249	1.69	100
11.155	124	2.8.3	368
12.4	150	2.155	246
24.11	124	2.128	231
24.12	256	2.148	231
24.10–14	128	2.155	124
17.484	306	5.5.3	101
		5.5.4	199, 234
Homeric Hymns		5.5.5	234
31	233, 267	5.142–183	100
		5.193–94	330
Josephus		6.5.3	234
		6.124	330
Ant.
1.1.4	210, 211	Vita
1.3.1–2	212	12:1	211
1.4.2–3	148
1.13	184	Lucian
1.17	119	Alex.
1.20	176	11	183
1.27.2	259	Ver. Hist.
3.10.1	279	2.6–13	246, 287

Lucretius		Cher.
6.495–523	300	2	372
		2.12	340
Macrobius		14.48	113, 116, 154
Saturanlia		14.48–49	45, 92
1.1.8.19	200	44.49	116
Menander		Conf.
Epitr.	351	2	136, 148
Sam.		2.5	135
7	351	12.46	222
		26	94
Nonnus of Panopolis		28	235
Dionys.		28.146	286
8.110	165	34	120
		35.177	350
Ovid
Fast.		Contempl.
3.731	237	73–74	218
4.386	299
Her.		Fug.
15.135	233	19	235, 333
Met.		21	371
1.72–75	158
4.451–52	146	Gig.
4.631–48	194	1.3	206
7.149–56	194	2–4[6–18]	144
15.385	237, 245	2.8	230
Papyri Graecae Magicae		Her.
IV.1484	231	42	120, 235
IV.1983	231	42.205	286
VII.257	331	42.205–206	333
		48	235
Philo		176	234
Abr.		Jos.
10.19	372	43	371
23.115	344
		Leg.
Aet.		14	230
12.63	217, 368	14.103	247
		31.212	330
Agr.
4.17	206, 340	Leg. All.
17	341	1.17.56–57	206

Index of References			437
1.19.71–72	340	Post.
1.31.97	206, 340	45.153–56	216
2.15.57	116
3.1.3	116	Praem.
3.8	93	11	129
3.21.71	117	14	129
3.33.100	45, 92,	65	234
	116	128	381
23.100	117
		Prob.
Migr.		10	340
32	234
		Prov.
Monarch.		2.64	337
1.1	235
		Quaest. Gen
Mos.		1.6	205, 340
1.123	381	1.12	340
1.29; 166	286	1.12–13	184
2.4[24]	362	1.32	277
		1.35	210
Mut.		1.36	208
42	113	1.84	256
		3.2	318
Opif.		3.6	297
3	58	4.164	234
7.26–28	259
9.33–34	259	Quaest. Exod.
15.47	318	2.46	277
20.62–21.64	158	2.75–78.109, 112–14	234
20.63	296	2.94	309
23.70	129
24.73	230	Quod Deus
56.153	44, 206	17.79	248
54.153–154	206
56.157	174	Sacr.
56.157–158	174	2.5	164
		5.27	341
Plant.		15.60	45, 92, 113, 116, 154
3.12	230, 319	16.62	45, 92, 116
6.26	116
8–9 [32–37]	44, 34	Sobr.
8.32–9.36	2050	56	372
37	129
9.37	206	Somn.
40.126	333, 335	1.4	230

1.4 [21–24]	135, 153	246b–c	293
1.15.157	286	246d	129, 159, 164
1.22	344	247c	164
1.25	235, 333	249b	141
1.214	234	Rep.
2.16	230	4.428	340
14	289	10	257, 283
40	113	10.614	246
		10.614a–621d	45, 315, 387
Spec. Leg.		10.617	255
1.8.41	179	Symp.
1.12.66	310, 346	202e	344
1.38.207	129	Tim.
1.57.311–312	333	30b	230
1.66	150	33	159, 161
1.171, 276	349	38c–e	257, 283
2.29	351	39e–40a	48, 158
		42b–c	141
Philo of Byblos		91d	45, 293
On Snakes	159, 162	91e	141
		92c–d	158
Pindar
Ol.		Pliny the Elder
2.69–71	246, 287	Nat. Hist.
7.71	247	2.111	300
		10.2	237, 245
Plato		10.4	235–236, 245
Apol.		10.46	262
15 [27b–e]	149	10.97	237
Epin.		11.14	341
984–985b	144, 344	12.89–94	237
985a	349	14.28[22]	199
Leg.		26.225[36.5]	351
631c	340	37.14	199
4.713c	350
Phaed.		Plotinus
67b	326	Enn.
69c	340	5.1.7.27	49
81e–82a	141, 222
111c–112e	169	Plutarch
111c–113c	186	Artax.
113a	48, 287–288	19.3	236
114c	356	De garrul.
609	293	505–6	111
Phaedr.		Def. Or.	235
2.46	235	10–15 [415a–418a]	144

Index of References		439
17	350	Hom. Epigr.
38 [341b]	149	14
Fac.		384
27–29	159, 164	Seneca
Gen. Socr.		Herc. fur.
24 [593d]	149	1060
590b	159, 164	592
Is. et Os.
43	279	Tacitus
Pyth. Or.		Hist.
21.404e	49	5.5
407e	49	199–200
Quaest. Conv.		Theognis
4.6.1–2	200	863
Quest. Rom.
51	350	Theophrastus
Rom.		Hist. Plant.
28.6–7	130	9.5.6
Sera		9.5.1
563d	159, 164	On Drunkenness
		195
Poimandres		Thucydides
1.16	114	6.32.1
1.27	218
26	315–316, 325	Valerius Maximus
		1.3.2
		200
Proclus		Virgil
Theol.		Aen.
7.1–2	317–318	6
		6.560
Ps.-Apollodorus		Georg.
Bibl		1.246
2.5.10	267
		Vitruvius
Ps.-Herodotus		8.2.1–4
Vit. Hom.
32	384	Xenophanes
		Frag. 11
		47, 300

IX. Ancient Near Eastern texts

Abiqar		Akkadian Erra Epic	197
2	218
Akkadian cylinder seals		ANET
BM 89110	256	56.218–72	129

107	161, 176, 293	3.2.38–41	304
108, l. 34	288	4.7.47–52	160, 172–174
		5.2.2–4	160, 172
Avesta		19.41–46;	304
Vendidad 18	262	23.61–62	159–161, 172
Babylonian Mappa Mundi	124
		Descent of Ishtar
Book of the Dead		1	161, 176
78	293
79	250	Enuma Elish
172	288	1	165
		4.97	160, 172
Book of the Gates	176	4.139–140	182
		4–5	299
Bundahishn		5	256
5 B	258
18–19	158	Gilgamesh
		7.4.33	161, 176
Coffin Texts		9	246
159	293	10–11	124
161	293	11.11–14	145
190	293
293	288	Great Shamash Hymn
474	132	41–44	267
696	256
		Pyramid Texts
CTA		246	256

IX. Muslim texts

Quran		20:116–123	189
2:31–39	189	38:71–85	189
6:35	126	65:12	313
7:11–18	189	78:12	313
15:31–48	189
17:44	313	Al-Mas'udi
17:61–65	189	Golden Meadows
18:50	189	3.310	293

Index of Names and Subjects

- Abimelech 98–100
Adam 209–210, 215–216, 220
Agrippa 100
angels 52–53, 94–95, 120, 201–204, 216, 273, 286, 295, 331–335,
344–351, 354, 357–360 animals 132, 142–143, 146, 157–161, 192–196
apocalypticism 41–45

Baruch 90–92 birds 235–244, 261–263, 292–298 blessing 95–96 blindness 146–147, 154–155 chariot 234–235, 246–247, 279–280 children 384–385

Christianization 20–21, 26, 219–220, 315, 336
cosmology 34, 36–37, 45, 54–56 crown 247 demons 53–54, 126–127, 141–149, 209–213, 382–385

dew 302–304

eschatology 57, 119–120, 195–196, 371 exegesis 21–23, 39–41

Flood 212–214 flowers 352–354

gate 100–102, 128–129, 256–259, 306–315, 330–331
gematria 11, 15, 59, 181, 183, 212, 226 giants 147–149, 212–213

glory 179–180, 220
God 51–52

Hades 157–168, 173–174 heaven 55–56, 122–123, 128–129,
134–136, 144–146, 164–165,
250–251, 256–259, 269, 285–286,
306–329
Hebraisms 11
Hellenization 15 high priest 333

intercession 344–346
interpolations 20, 219, 315, 336

Jerusalem 107–108, 114–115 lake 288–292 light 259–262 locusts 381–385

manna 250–251
Michael 331–333, 367 moon 277–282 mountain 286–287 mysteries 115–118, 226–227, 386 mythology 39, 46–48

Noah 211–212, 214
numbers 58–59

oil 366–371

Paniel 94–95
Paradise 193–194, 204–206, 213–214
Phoenix 235–244, 296 plain 131, 132, 286–288 prayer 333–339

- rain 299–302 revelation 92–93
riddles 49–50 rivers 97–98, 123–124, 183–185, 192 rooster 262–263
- Sarasaël 216
Satan 173, 209–210
Satanael 209–210
sea 168–171, 182–183 serpent 157–178, 193–195, 208 silence 108–114 spirit 124–127
stars 282–283
- sun 229–244, 246–250, 252–253, 255, 265–269, 272–274
- Temple 100–102 tower of Babel 132, 138–141, 153–154 trees 204–208 tree of knowledge 192–201
- vices 220–223
vine 195–201, 209, 211–212, 214–219 virtues 339–342, 352
- Yom Kippur 361–365

Index of Authors

- Abrahams, I. 68, 97
 Achelis, E. 68
 Agourides, S.Chr. 63
 Alexander, Ph.S. 68
 Allison, D.C. 68, 339, 388
 Altmann, A. 68, 126
 Ameisenowa, Z. 68, 141
 Amiet, P. 68, 195
 Andersen, F.I. 66, 68, 165, 326
 Anderson, G.A. 68, 189, 213, 220
 Aptowitzer, V. 68, 295
 Armstrong, J.H.S. 69, 194–195

 Bar-Ilan, M. 69, 97, 345
 Bauckham, R. 69, 112, 119, 122, 147,
 179–180, 214, 314, 335, 349,
 377–378
 Bauer, J.B. 63
 Baumgarten, J.M. 64
 Belova, O. 69, 170, 239
 Bendlin, A. 69, 278–279
 Bergren, Th.A. 69, 353
 Bezold, C. 69, 210, 253
 Bhatnagar, A. 69, 244
 Bickerman, E.J. 69, 310, 330
 Bietenhard, H. 69, 124, 325
 Black, M. 69, 78, 140, 327
 Blackmore, S.J. 69, 131
 Bockmuehl, M. 69, 116
 Bogaert, P.-M. 69, 91
 Bohak, G. 59, 66, 70, 168, 181, 183, 212
 Boll, F.J. 69, 253
 Bonomi, J. 70, 293
 Bonwetsch, G.N. 9, 65
 Böttrich, Ch. 69, 331
 Bousset, W. 70, 321
 Bowman, S. 83, 239
 Bregman, M. 70, 117

 Broek, R. van den 70, 229, 236–240, 242, 244
 Brovarski, E. 70, 256
 Buck, A. de 70, 293
 Budge, E.A.W. 70, 208, 293
 Bulgarelli, V. 70, 304
 Bullard, R.A. 70, 147, 209

 Campbell, B. 70
 Casel, O. 70, 114
 Chadwick, H. 70, 112
 Chajes, H.P. 70, 92
 Charles, R.H. 70, 288, 325, 387
 Charlesworth, J.H. 70, 234,
 Clermont-Ganneau, Ch.S. 71, 330
 Clifford, R.J. 71, 287
 Collart, P. 71, 244
 Collins, A.Y. 59, 71, 134, 164, 183, 316, 318–319, 321, 328, 381
 Collins, J.J. 10, 34, 71, 84, 106, 114, 215, 309
 Conzelmann, H. 71, 223
 Cook, S. 71, 200
 Cowton, Ch.J. 71, 102
 Cross, Frank M. 71, 175, 231
 Crowfoot, J.W. 71, 244
 Crum, W.E. 71, 205, 369
 Culianu, I.P. 71

 Daiches, S. 71
 Dalley, S. 71
 Dean-Otting, M. 4, 10, 66, 98, 108, 111,
 116–117, 134, 158, 162, 164–165,
 176, 179, 229–233, 235–236, 250,
 253–255, 361, 376, 380, 388
 Deissmann, A. 71, 223
 Delcor, M. 71, 262
 Denis, A.-M. 63–64, 66

- Deutsch, N. 71, 182
 Dever, W.G. 71, 231
 Dieterich, A. 72, 111
 Dillmann, A. 72, 126
 Drower, E.S. 72, 162, 176

 Ebeling, E. 62, 72, 154, 321
 Ehrenberg, E. 72, 262
 Eissfeldt, O. 66
 Epstein, A. 72, 318

 Faulkner, R.O. 72, 256, 288, 293
 Fernández Marcos, N. 10, 65
 Ferrar, W.J. 4, 66, 158
 Fidler, D.R. 72, 232
 Fischer, U. 66, 72, 165
 Fishbane, M. 46, 72
 Forsyth, N. 72, 209
 Frankfort, H. 72, 256
 Frasson, M. 59, 66, 286, 364
 Friedländer, M. 72
 Fuchs, G. 72, 167

 Gardiner, A.H. 70, 293
 Garner, G. 72, 102
 García Martínez, F. 72, 204
 Gaster, M. 72, 327
 Gaylord, H.E. 7–10, 64–67, 95, 105,
 118, 131, 149–151, 156–157, 165,
 184, 189–191, 210, 215, 246, 252,
 254, 258, 267, 297, 306, 354, 356,
 366–367, 375–376, 378–379, 385
 Gericke, J.W. 48, 72
 Gilbert, O. 72, 285
 Gillmayr-Bucher, S. 72, 112
 Ginsburger, M. 72, 311
 Ginzberg, L. 67, 73, 99, 119, 124, 143,
 163, 198, 209, 213, 216, 219,
 233–234, 238, 240, 244, 273–274,
 293, 301, 337
 Goedicke, H. 73, 293
 Goldstein, J.A. 73
 Goldstein, M. 73, 92
 Golitzin, A. 73, 220
 Goodenough, E.R. 73, 92, 199–200, 232–233, 279, 286

 Gordon, R.L. 73, 279
 Green, A. 93, 354
 Greenfield, J.C. 73, 233
 Gruenwald, I. 73, 235, 318
 Gura, A.V. 73, 170, 297

 Hacham, N. 73, 201
 Hachlili, R. 73, 232
 Hage, W. 9, 65, 67
 Hahn, F. 67
 Halperin, D.J. 73, 98, 130, 145, 255,
 339, 353
 Harlow, D.C. 10, 34, 66, 92–93, 96,
 106–108, 118–119, 131–132, 138,
 147, 153–154, 156, 164–165,
 179–180, 192, 209, 215, 219, 224,
 229, 239, 249, 277, 303, 306,
 309–310, 312, 315–316, 331, 378, 380
 Halsberghe, G.H. 73, 230
 Hannah, D.D. 73, 333
 Harris, J.R. 73, 100
 Hartom, E.Sh. 10, 65, 104, 133, 264, 276
 Heidel, A. 74, 124
 Heimpel, W. 74, 25, 267, 273
 Heinemann, J. 74, 311
 Henning, W.B. 74, 204, 206
 Hercigonja, E. 9, 64
 Herzer, J. 74, 100
 Herzog, Z. 74, 131
 Himmelfarb, M. 35, 74, 90–91, 97, 106, 192, 229, 312, 357
 Hoffmann, I.B. 74, 299
 Holland, R. 74, 129
 Horowitz, W. 74, 266
 Horst, P.W. van der 74, 112, 168, 294
 Huggins, R.V. 74, 147
 Hughes, H.M. 10, 65, 120, 133, 217, 223, 229, 265, 309, 358, 366, 375,
 385
 Hünemörder, Ch. 74, 207
 Hurtado, L.W. 74, 345

 Idel, M. 14, 74, 97, 126, 387
 Iliffe, J.H. 74, 330

- Imhoof-Blumer, F. 75, 297
 Isbell, Ch.D. 75, 383
 Ivanov, J. 9, 64

 Jacobson, H. 67, 184
 James, M.R. 9, 64, 95, 97, 99, 102,
 118–119, 125, 138, 157, 167, 178,
 186, 191, 211, 238–239, 263, 309, 315
 Janowski, B. 75, 143
 Jastrow, M. 75, 208, 293, 349
 Jatsimirskij, A.I. 9, 75
 Jensen, P.Ch.A. 75, 299
 Jonge, M. de 75, 325

 Kagan-Tarkovskaja, M.D. 75, 213, 218
 Kahle, P.E. 75, 205, 369
 Karpov, A.J. 10, 65, 67, 256
 Kaufman, A.S. 75, 79, 102
 Kee, H.C. 75, 325
 Keel, O. 75, 142, 182, 231, 244, 256, 262, 321–322, 325
 Keller, O. 75, 297
 Kenyon, F.G. 75, 197
 Kenyon, K. 76, 231
 Kiperwasser, R. 76, 170
 Klausner, J. 76, 92
 Klawans, J. 76, 221
 Kohler, K. 75–76, 100, 208, 293
 Knohl, I. 76, 112
 Knowlton, F.H. 75, 208
 Koch, K. 46, 76
 Kulik, A. 76, 92, 137, 157, 231, 261, 306, 315

 Lambden, S.N. 76, 220
 Lambert, W.G. 76, 193, 321
 Lampe, G.W.H. 76, 370
 Lash, Ch.J.A. 76, 145
 Lavrov, P.A. 67
 Lease, G. 76, 92
 Lewis, J.P. 76, 214
 Liebermann, S. 76, 117
 Lieven, A. von 69, 278–279
 Livingston, W. 69, 244
 Livingstone, A. 76, 321

 Lods, A. 67
 Logan, A.H.B. 77, 369
 Lüdtke, W. 67
 Ludwig, A. 77, 297
 Lunt, H. 77, 156, 167

 MacKenzie, D.N. 77, 258
 Maier, J. 77, 327
 Maksimovich, K.A. 77, 242
 Mandelkern, S. 77, 173
 Margalioth, M. 77, 231
 Margoliouth, D.S. 77
 Marinatos, N. 77, 339
 Markoe, G. 77, 339
 Mattingly, H. 77, 341,
 Maunder, E.W. 77, 244
 Mayer-Opificius, R. 77, 244
 Mazzinghi, L. 77, 168
 McNicol, A.J. 77, 310
 Mead, G.R.S. 77, 162
 Meijer, D.J.W. 77
 Mensching, G. 77, 112, 114
 Merkelbach, R. 77
 Merkur, D. 77, 97
 Milik, J.T. 78, 204, 327
 Milikowsky, Ch.J. 78, 172
 Milkov, V.V. 9–10, 64–65
 Miller, D.M. 64
 Min, Y.-J. 78, 169
 Momigliano, A. 78, 233
 Montgomery, J.A. 78
 Morfill, W.R. 9, 65
 Morgenstern, J. 78, 256
 Morray-Jones, Ch.R.A. 78, 182, 313, 327
 Mortley, R. 78, 114
 Moulton, J.H. 78, 261
 Mylonas, G.E. 78, 111

 Netzer, E. 78, 83, 201
 Neumann-Gorsolke, U. 75, 143
 Nickelsburg, G.W.E. 10, 34, 67, 78, 96, 106, 108, 114, 126, 141, 357, 376, 380
 Niehoff, M. 78, 243
 Nock, A.D. 78, 289
 Novaković S. 9, 64
 Nowack, W. 75, 293

- Oblath M. 78, 128
 Orlov, A.A. 10, 67, 78, 147, 189,
 201–206, 211–212, 215, 366
 Ostow, M. 78
 Otto, W. 78, 197
- Panaino, A. 78, 321
 Parot, A. 79, 195
 Parpola, S. 79, 193
 Patrich, J. 79, 199
 Pearson, B.A. 79, 336
 Penner, K.M. 64
 Petkanova, D. 9, 65
 Philonenko-Sayar, B. 67
 Picard, J.-C. 7, 9–10, 34, 64, 67, 79, 106, 108, 130, 136–137, 141, 153–154,
 200, 215, 316
 Picard, M. 79, 114
 Pines, Sh. 79, 92
 Poirier, J.C. 79, 315
 Preisendanz, K. 79, 231
 Przybylski, B. 79, 259
 Puech, H. 79, 205
- Quinn, E.C. 79, 367
- Reeves, J.C. 79, 147
 Reitzenstein, R. 79, 205, 223, 230
 Rendsburg, G.A. 79, 231
 Richardson, N. 79, 354
 Ritmeyer, L. 79, 102
 Robertson, R.G. 79, 239
 Robinson, J.M. 79, 144
 Robinson, S.E. 79, 99
 Rohland, J.P. 80, 331
 Röllig, W. 69, 278–279
 Romanoff, P. 80, 199
 Rosen, Y.J. 80, 231
 Rosen, S.A. 80, 231
 Roussin, L.A. 80, 232
 Rubinkiewicz, R. 80, 156
 Ruinart, Th. 80, 341
 Runia, D.T. 80, 259
 Ryssel, V. 10, 65, 104, 191, 224, 239, 263, 276, 309, 343, 366, 375
- Samuel, A.E. 80, 256
 Sandmel, S. 80, 116
 Sangin, M.A. 80
 Schäfer, P. 80, 146, 306, 332
 Schechter, S.Z. 80, 97
 Schlüter, M. 80, 183
 Scholem, G.G. 80, 209, 318, 332–333
 Shapira, D.D.Y. 76, 170
 Sharpe, S. 70, 293
 Simon, M. 81, 345
 Smith, M. 81, 92, 143, 200, 231
 Smith, M.S. 81, 231, 233
 Sophocles, E.A. 81, 354
 Sokoloff, M. 73, 233
 Sokolov, M.J. 9–10, 64
 Speranskij, M.M. 9, 64
 Spieckermann, H. 81, 112
 Stephani, L. 81, 247
 Sterling, G.E. 81, 259
 Stichel, R. 10, 67, 210
 Stökl Ben Ezra, D. 81
 Stone, M.E. 67, 81–82, 84, 107, 134, 175, 179, 189, 210, 253, 319
 Stroumsa, G.G. 49, 82, 182
 Stuckenbruck, L.T. 82, 117, 134,
 147–148, 204, 213, 345
 Stuckrad, K. von 82, 234
 Suhr, E.G. 82, 244
- Taylor, J. 82, 101–102
 Taylor, J.G. 82, 231, 322
 Thomas, D.W. 82, 173
 Tigchelaar, E.J.C. 72, 204
 Tikhonravov, N.S. 9, 64, 82, 239, 262
 Toepel, A. 82, 144, 222
 Torresan, P. 82, 109
 Torrey, Ch.C. 4, 34–35, 82, 92
 Toy, C.H. 67, 119, 124, 238, 273
 Troscianko, T.S. 69, 131
 Turdeanu, E. 10, 68, 82–83, 184, 186, 210, 224
- Uehlinger, Ch. 75, 83, 244, 321
 Urbach, E.E. 83, 209, 233–234
 Uval, B. 83, 304

- Vasiliev, A. 83, 198, 213
Vermes, G. 83, 94
Vicari, J. 71, 244
Vida, Y.A. 83, 317
Vitkovskaja, M. 10, 65
Vitkovskij, V. 10, 65
Vogt, E. 83, 117
- Wacholder, B.Z. 83, 239
Wacker, M.-Th. 83, 246, 287
Weiss, Z. 78, 83, 201, 232
Welburn, A.J. 83, 162
Wernberg-Møller, P. 83, 336
Whitney, K.W. 83, 161, 169, 175, 177
Whittaker, J. 83, 93
Widengren, G. 83
Wiggins, S.A. 83, 231
Williams, F. 83, 209
Williams, M.A. 84, 357
- Wilson, R.R. 84, 111
Winston, D. 84, 259
Wissowa, G. 84, 341
Wolde, E.J. van 84, 244
Wolfson, E.R. 84, 90
Wolfson, H.A. 84, 93, 116, 259, 286, 350
Wright, A.T. 84, 147
Wright, J.E. 4, 10, 47, 84, 90–91, 132, 154, 172, 231, 256, 258, 288, 293, 307–308, 310, 316, 322, 324, 332, 334, 361
- Yadin, Y. 84, 244
Young, B.H. 85, 321
- Zagrebin, V.M. 68
Zaleski, C. 85, 131
Zandee, J. 85, 293

Hekhalot/Merkabah literature

RA'ANAN S. BOUSTAN

Hekhalot literature represents the earliest extensive collection of Jewish mystical writings from Late Antiquity and the early Middle Ages. Hekhalot compositions are characterized by a unique, if eclectic, literary style. These texts consist variously of detailed descriptions of the topography and denizens of the heavenly realms, the elaborate protocols for the liturgy performed by the angels before God, as well as the actual hymns of praise of which this heavenly liturgy consists, and, most distinctively, ritual instructions to enable the practitioner either to ascend to heaven or to bring angels down to earth. The term hekhalot comes from the Hebrew word for the celestial palaces or temples (sing. hekhal) within which God and his angelic host reside. The form of religious praxis and experience described in Hekhalot literature is often also referred to as “Merkavah mysticism” because it draws upon the prophet Ezekiel’s vision of the divine chariot-throne (the merkavah of Ezek 1:10).

This diverse literature resists easy geographic and chronological classification. Written in Hebrew and Aramaic, with traces of Greek, Latin, and Persian influence, Hekhalot literature developed in the major centers of Jewish learning – Palestine and Iraq. While the corpus may contain traditions from the second to fifth centuries CE, it emerged as a recognizable and distinct genre of literature only during the second half of the first millennium (Boustan 2006).

Modern scholars have access to Hekhalot texts primarily through manuscripts from medieval western Europe produced in the twelfth century and after (Schäfer 1981). In addition, more than twenty fragments of Hekhalot texts have been retrieved from the CAIRO GENIZAH (Schäfer 1984). Significant differences exist between the materials contained in the Genizah fragments and those that were transmitted within the European manuscript tradition. This disparity between its “Oriental” and “European” branches suggests that Hekhalot literature circulated in a wide variety of forms along different regional trajectories. Hekhalot literature cannot simply be divided into stable “works,” but represents a relatively open-ended set of compositions that remained in flux as they were transmitted and actively refashioned by later scribes (Schäfer 1988). The complex literary and scribal processes that shaped this literature complicate any attempt to reconstruct its formative literary and textual history.

Absolute criteria for delimiting the boundaries of the Hekhalot corpus on internal, formal grounds also prove elusive. The following compositions are generally considered to belong to Hekhalot literature proper: 3 (Hebrew) Enoch; Hekhalot Rabbati (“The Greater [Book of Celestial] Palaces”); Hekhalot Zutarti (“The Lesser [Book of Celestial] Palaces”); Ma’aseh Merkavah (“The Working of the Chariot”); Merkavah Rabbah (“The Great [Book of] the Chariot”); and, finally, a series of relatively autonomous adjuration complexes known as Sar ha-Torah (“Prince of the Torah”), texts that promise the practitioner angelic assistance in acquiring and retaining knowledge of Torah. Embedded within or appended to these major literary units are a number of formally distinct texts, most significantly the Shi’ur Qomah (“The Measure of the [Divine] Body”) materials that catalogue the sizes and names of the limbs of God’s gargantuan body. While Hekhalot literature does exhibit certain formal and thematic affinities to ancient Jewish magical texts, the two corpora employ appreciably different ritual techniques and, most likely, reflect distinct sociological profiles (Bohak 2008: 329–39).

The authorial voice of Hekhalot literature is anonymous and collective, as is typical for much rabbinic literature. Rabbinic figures from second-century Palestine – most commonly, Rabbi Ishmael and Rabbi Akiva – serve as the protagonists of Hekhalot literature and the traditions of its esoteric teachings. This pseudonymous framework serves as an authorizing strategy to anchor Hekhalot literature to the increasingly hegemonic rabbinic tradition.

Hekhalot literature centers upon two principal themes, heavenly ascent and angelic adjuration. Gershom Scholem (1965) accorded temporal and thematic priority to the ascent narratives; the heavenly journeys continue the form of ecstatic mysticism attested in earlier Jewish (and Christian) apocalyptic writings and in the Dead Sea Scrolls, while the “magico-ritual” elements found in the corpus mark the subsequent degeneration of its original “mystical” impulse. More recent scholarship has emphasized the degree to which ritual practice pervades every facet of Hekhalot literature. In both ascent and adjuration, movement between the earthly and heavenly realms is achieved through the meticulous performance of ritual speech and action. And even the aim of the ascent process has been profoundly shaped by a ritual-liturgical sensibility: the culmination of the ascent, as conceived in Hekhalot literature, primarily consists in the practitioner’s participation in the heavenly liturgy (unio liturgica) and his commission by God to communicate his abiding love for his people Israel (Schäfer 2009: 243–330).

The heterogeneity, fluidity, and pseudonymity that characterize Hekhalot texts create formidable obstacles for determining the Sitz-im-Leben of this literature with any precision. It is perhaps not surprising that theories have nevertheless multiplied. Scholem situates Hekhalot literature within the main currents of rabbinic Judaism from the second century onward. In sharp contrast, David Halperin (1988) detects in this literature the populist ideology of the Jewish masses, who sought an accessible – and immediate – path to the revelation of Torah. Michael Swartz (1996) interprets the Sar ha-Torah literature as an expression of the aspirations of “secondary elites” who served Late Antique Jewish communities as minor religious functionaries; while these low-status scribes were deeply influenced by the scholastic culture of the rabbis, they found themselves excluded from rabbinic institutions of learning and thus resorted to magical means for acquiring mastery of Torah. James Davila (2001) argues that Hekhalot literature and the Jewish magical texts, when taken together as a coherent corpus, reflect the religious vocation of a guild of Jewish shamans whose transformative experience of mystical ecstasy empowered them as healers and ritual experts. Rachel Elior (2004) believes that Hekhalot literature preserves a continuous stream of ancient priestly tradition intended to compensate for the loss of the sacrificial cult following the destruction of the Jerusalem temple in 70 CE. Scholarship has only just begun the interrelated tasks of situating Hekhalot literature within its (changing) sociohistorical context(s), defining its relationship to other branches of Jewish literary culture, and analyzing the religious phenomena it both describes and embodies.

SEE ALSO: Akiba, Rabbi; Apocalypses, Christian; Apocalypses, Jewish; Enoch, Books of (1, 2, 3 Enoch); Magic, Jewish; Piyyut (Jewish liturgical and secular poetry); Prayer, Jewish; Shi‘ur Qomah (Jewish mystical texts).

REFERENCES AND SUGGESTED READINGS

- Bohak, G. (2008) Ancient Jewish magic: a history. Cambridge.
- Boustan, R. S. (2006) “The emergence of pseudonymous attribution in Hekhalot literature: empirical evidence from the Jewish ‘Magical’ corpora.” Jewish Studies Quarterly 13: 1–21.
- Davila, J. R. (2001) Descenders to the chariot: the people behind the Hekhalot literature. Leiden.
- Elior, R. (2004) The three temples: on the emergence of Jewish mysticism. Oxford.
- Halperin, D. J. (1988) The faces of the chariot: early Jewish responses to Ezekiel’s vision. Tübingen.
- Schäfer, P., ed. (1981) Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur. Tübingen.

- Schäfer, P., ed. (1984) Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur. Tübingen.
- Schäfer, P. (1988) Hekhalot-Studien. Tübingen.
- Schäfer, P. (2009) The origins of Jewish mysticism. Tübingen.
- Scholem, G. G. (1965) Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah mysticism, and Talmudic tradition, 2nd ed. New York.
- Swartz, M. D. (1996) Scholastic magic: ritual and revelation in early Jewish mysticism. Princeton.

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF HEBREW LANGUAGE AND LINGUISTICS

Volume 2 G–O

General Editor
Geoffrey Khan

Associate Editors
Shmuel Bolokzy
Steven E. Fassberg
Gary A. Rendsburg
Aaron D. Rubin
Ora R. Schwarzwald
Tamar Zewi

BRILL

LEIDEN • BOSTON

2013

© 2013 Koninklijke Brill NV ISBN 978-90-04-17642-3

Table of Contents

VOLUME ONE

Introduction	vii
List of Contributors	ix
Transcription Tables	xiii
Articles A-F	I

VOLUME TWO

Transcription Tables	vii
Articles G-O	I

VOLUME THREE

Transcription Tables	vii
Articles P-Z	I

VOLUME FOUR

Transcription Tables	vii
Index	I

כירים 'stove' kirayim (Lev. 11.35, for כִּירִים kīrayim; Neofiti and Pseudo-Jonathan תפין tpyn)
 מבחר mibḥar 'best' (Exod. 15.4, for מִבְּחָר mibḥar; Neofiti and Pseudo-Jonathan שפר špr)
 מדרך midrak 'tread' (Deut. 2.5, for מִדְרָךְ midrak; Neofiti and Pseudo-Jonathan מדרס mdrs)
 מספד mispad 'mourning' (Gen. 50.10, for מִסְפָּד mispēd)
 נגח naggāḥ 'prone to gore' (Exod. 21.29, etc., for נָגַח naggāḥ; Neofiti and Pseudo-Jonathan נגשן ngšn)
 פיה piah 'soot' (Exod. 9.8, 10, for פִּיחַ pīah; Neofiti and Pseudo-Jonathan קטם qtm)
 קנא qannā 'jealous' (Exod. 20.5, etc., for קָנָא qannā; Neofiti קני qnyy, Pseudo-Jonathan קנא qn'n)
 זרע שוכבת šukbat zəra' 'emission of semen' (Lev. 15.16, etc., for שִׁכְבַּת זֶרַע šikbat-zāra'; Neofiti תשמיש דזרע tšmyš dzr')
 תפני tufinē 'pastries' (Lev. 6.14, for תִּפְנִי tūpinē; Pseudo-Jonathan מרסקא mrsq')

Onqelos also sometimes uses BH words not appearing elsewhere in Aramaic and not derived from the translated text, such as גלולין 'idols' (Num. 23.21), זדון zādōn 'arrogance' (Deut. 29.17), יבול yəbul 'produce' (Deut. 33.14), מלקוש malqoš 'late rain' (Deut. 32.2, also Neofiti), מעמק 'depth' ma'maq (Gen. 49.25, Deut. 33.13), עיצא ēṣā 'counsel' (Lev. 18.17, etc., instead of Aramaic עטא ēṭā), reflecting an influence of BH that goes beyond the immediate source text.

Although the examples given are from Onqelos, the same phenomena are found in varying proportions throughout all of the targumim.

In the late Pseudo-Jonathan targum, borrowings from post-Biblical Hebrew are very frequent, and can sometimes be traced back to the influence of a particular rabbinic text (Neumark 1905). For example, the words לבסיא קדירתא lbysy' qdyrt' špwdy' w'skl't' 'cauldrons, pots, spits, and grills' (Num. 31.23) represent a thin Aramaizing of the words from Sifre be-Midbar 158 הלוֹבְסִין וְהַסְכִּינִין וְהַקְדִּירוֹת ha-loḇsin we-ha-sakkinin we-ha-qaderot we-ha-šippudim we-ha-'askelot 'cauldrons and knives and pots and spits and grills'. Likewise, for instance, גריסין grysyn 'split beans' of Pseudo-Jonathan Lev. 14.37, not mentioned in the Hebrew text, is derived from the discussion of גְּרִיסִין garisin in Mishnah Nega'im 12.3.

REFERENCES

- Cook, Edward M. 1986. "Rewriting the Bible: The text and language of the Pseudo-Jonathan Targum". PhD dissertation, University of California at Los Angeles.
 —. 2008. A glossary of Targum Onkelos according to Alexander Sperber's edition (Studies in the Aramaic Interpretation of Scripture 6). Leiden: Brill.
 Dalman, Gustaf. 1938. Aramäisch-Neuhebräisches Handwörterbuch zu Targum, Talmud, und Midrash. Göttingen: Pfeiffer.
 Fassberg, Steven E. 1990. A grammar of the Palestinian targum fragments from the Cairo Genizah. Atlanta, Georgia: Scholars Press.
 Heide, Albert van der. 1981. The Yemenite tradition of the Targum of Lamentations: Critical text and analysis of the variant readings (Studia Post-Biblica 32). Leiden: Brill.
 Neumark, Mannass. 1905. Lexikalische Untersuchungen zur Sprache der jerusalemischen Pentateuch-Targume. Berlin: Poppelauer.
 Smelik, Willem F. 1995. The Targum of Judges (Oudtestamentische studiën 36). Leiden: Brill.
 Sokoloff, Michael. 1990. A dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic of the Byzantine period. Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press.
 Sperber, Alexander. 1959. The Bible in Aramaic: Based on old manuscripts and printed texts. 4 vols. Leiden: Brill.

EDWARD M. COOK
 (Catholic University of America)

Hekhalot

Hekhalot literature is the name given to a group of texts which constitute the earliest known products of ancient Jewish mysticism. The texts cover a wide range of themes, such as magic, cosmology and liturgy, but their conceptual core has traditionally been taken to be Merkavah mysticism, i.e., the idea that the ultimate aim of the mystical experience is to enter the celestial palaces (הֵכָלוֹת hekalot) and view God sitting on His throne. Following Ezekiel's vision, the divine throne is depicted as a chariot (הַמֵּרְכָבָה merkaba). The mystical experience is essentially perceived as ascension to heaven, yet the term denoting it is yerida la-merkaba 'descending to the chariot' (Kuyt 1990; 1995; Wolfson 1993).

Scholem (1965) argued that Hekhalot literature was rooted in Tannaitic teachings. However, even if some of its themes may be traced back to such early times—which is not at all certain (e.g., Boyarin 1987:492–500)—the texts in their present form are clearly post-Talmudic (thus already Scholem 1953:463), dating from late Antiquity through the Middle Ages (Boustán 2006). Similarly, attempts to show the existence of a relationship between Hekhalot literature and the literature of the Second Temple period or even the Bible (e.g., Gruenwald 1980:3–123; Elior 2004) are relevant at most to its prehistory, but not to the form and language of the extant texts (Mizrahi 2009). Hekhalot literature is in any case not a unified body of texts; it encompasses writings composed over a number of centuries and of more than one provenance.

Surviving manuscripts of Hekhalot literature are all medieval (Schäfer 1988:154–233; Hermann 1994:22–65). Fragments of the earliest, produced mostly in the 10th–12th centuries (with only one possibly antedating the 9th century), have been preserved in the Cairo Genizah (Schäfer 1984). The earliest complete manuscripts are even later, and of European provenance. Dan (1987:436–437; 1993b:92–95) has suggested that they all descend from a single archetype, but this remains to be proven. Seven comprehensive copies, produced in the 14th–16th centuries, were published in a synoptic edition (Schäfer 1981), accompanied by a concordance (Schäfer 1986–1988). The precise relationship between the various manuscripts is obscure, and no systematic philological typology has been developed (a possible model for such study of related material is furnished by the analysis of Pereq Šira by Beit-Arié 1967).

Some of the extant manuscripts were partly reshaped by the Ashkenazi pietists (e.g., Hermann 1993). The knotty process of transmission is especially evident in the case of transliterated Greek terms and magic formulae, which were misunderstood and mutilated by later copyists (Lewy 1951; Bohak 2001). A textual analysis of these compositions reveals such a convoluted picture of textual and literary fluidity that the very existence of distinct literary works within Hekhalot literature has been questioned (e.g., Schäfer 1988:8–16, 50–74), as well as its exact scope (Boustán 2009:139–142).

Most of the texts are written in Hebrew, with several extended sections in Aramaic. In addition, there are many passages of nomina barbara, especially in lists of divine and/or angelological names. The language of Hekhalot literature is basically Rabbinic (Mishnaic) Hebrew, but its exact profile varies from one text to another. Many passages are couched in a poetic style. Special attention was paid to a syntactical feature of this kind, namely, the use of long chains of synonymous expressions (Maier 1973). However, creative linguistic usages abound in all other aspects of the language as well, for instance:

(a) Lexicon. One finds unique lexemes, such as ריגיון rigyon or regyon ‘fiery stream’ (e.g., Schäfer 1981:§198, §407), possibly of Greek origin < *ῥύακιον, diminutive of ῥύαξ ‘stream of lava’ (Lewy 1960:264–265); זיהיון zihyon (e.g., Schäfer 1981: §100, §200), which is related to זה"י z-h-y in Palestinian Aramaic (and Piyyut Hebrew) ‘to shine’ and figuratively ‘to rejoice’ (Ben-Hayyim 1977).

(b) Onomasticon. Previously known components are combined into novel compound names of angelic and divine entities, such as לבבפיאל leḥabpi’el (Schäfer 1981: §243), lit. ‘heart of the mouth of God’. There are also utterly cryptic proper names, such as אזובחיי ʾzgubhyy (Schäfer 1981: §27) or אזבוגה ʾzbugh (e.g., Schäfer 1981: §415, §863; see Dan 1994), but such names can also be attached to a standard theophoric element, such as רדוריאל rdwryr’l (Schäfer 1981: §43; see Alexander 1983:282, n. 27a). Some of these combinations may stem from old traditions, while others represent certain theological trends (Dan 1996a).

(c) Phraseology. One often meets idiosyncratic phrases and idioms, e.g., בהרפסת עין be-harpasat ‘ayin ‘in a wink of the eye’, i.e., ‘immediately’ (Schäfer 1981: §410; see Ben-Hayyim 1970:431–432); זוחלי אש zohale ʾššot ‘creepers of (or: in) fire’, i.e., ‘salamanders’ (Schäfer 1981: §101; see Zelikovitch-Nadav 1953:12); לראות מלך ביופיו li r’ot meleḥ be-yofyo ‘to see the King in His beauty’ (adapted from Isa. 33.17), referring to the awesome vision of God in His celestial palace (e.g., Schäfer 1981: §407–§409).

(d) Morphology. A common feature is the use of denominative verbs of the pi’el stem, such as איבר ʾibbēr ‘to give strength’ (Schäfer 1981: §72, §405), derived from אביר ʾabbir ‘strong, powerful’, and חילם ḥillēm ‘to cause to dream’, i.e., ‘to make (someone) fall asleep’ (§120), derived from חלום ḥālōm ‘dream’. Another widespread phenomenon is the employment of uncharacteristic nominal patterns, such as beziqim בִּזְיָקִים ‘flashes, lightning’ (Schäfer 1981: §41, §72, §79), construed as a plural of bezeq בִּזְק rather than bāzāq בִּזְקָא. So also the abstract noun ‘azirūt עֲזִירוֹת ‘strength, might’ (Schäfer 1981: §251), which seems to be derived from the (undocumented) adjective ‘azzir עֲזִיר (as demonstrated by similar forms in the same context: ‘addirūt אֲדִירוֹת < ‘addir אֲדִיר ‘huge’; ‘arīsūt עֲרִישוֹת < ‘arīs עֲרִיש [<*‘arrīš] ‘fearful’) rather than the (well attested) noun ‘ezer עֶזֶר ‘help, strength’.

Also noteworthy are elements with affinities to late strata of the rabbinic and para-rabbinic literature, which suggest a post-Talmudic dating for Hekhalot literature. Such elements show similarities to two corpora in particular:

(a) Tanḥuma literature, e.g., the use of the collocation šib'im lašon שִׁבְעִים לָשׁוֹן ‘seventy tongues’ (cf. Mishna Sheqalim 5.1; Mishna Soṭa 7.5) as an idiom meaning ‘all the foreign nations’ (cf. Tanḥ. Noah 19; Way-Yešeb 2).

(b) Piyyut (the liturgical poetry of the Byzantine period), e.g., the derivation of the segholate masculine noun bahal בָּהַל from the biblical feminine beḥālā בְּהָלָה ‘panic, horror’. Note that this linguistic similarity is to be distinguished from the question of literary dependence between these corpora (Bar-Ilan 1987; Rand 2009:189–196).

Indeed, already Zelikovich-Nadav (1953), who analyzed the language of Hekhalot Rabbati, concluded that it was composed in Palestine between the 4th–6th centuries. However, since her work was carried out before the ‘Jerusalem School’ revolutionized the study of Mishnaic Hebrew and prior to Schäfer’s publication of Hekhalot manuscripts, this text needs to be investigated anew. A more precise characterization of the language of this literature is currently hampered by the complicated textual evidence. Until an attempt is made to identify linguistically reliable manuscripts (if indeed there are any), any linguistic generalization is necessarily tentative.

The conceptualizations of language in general and Hebrew in particular in Hekhalot literature have been studied from a performative perspective (e.g., Janowitz 1989), emphasizing textual recitation as a kind of speech act. Attention has also been given to traditions about the creation of the world out of the Hebrew alphabet and/or God’s names (e.g., Weiss 2008). Other studies have often been shaped by Sefer Yešira (e.g., Dan 1984:16–24; Dan 1996b; Elior 2007:104–133), yet this book is an independent work that does not seem to belong to Hekhalot literature proper.

REFERENCES

- Alexander, Phillip. 1983. “3 (Hebrew apocalypse of) Enoch”. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, ed. by James H. Charlesworth, vol. 1, 223–315. New York: Doubleday.
- Bar-Ilan, Meir. 1987. The mysteries of Jewish prayer and Hekhalot (in Hebrew). Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press.
- Beit-Arié, Malachi. 1967. “Perek Shira: Introductions and critical edition”, PhD dissertation, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
- Ben-Hayyim, Ze’ev. 1970. “Lexical entries” (in Hebrew). Sefer Samuel Yeivin, ed. by Samuel Avramsky et al., 426–439. Jerusalem: Kiryat Sepher.
- . 1977. “Concerning zh denoting ‘light’” (in Hebrew), Lěšonenu 41:71–72.
- Bohak, Gideon. 2001. “Remains of Greek words and magical formulae in Hekhalot literature”. Kabbalah 6:121–134.
- Boustani, Ra’anan. 2005. From martyr to mystic: The story of the ten martyrs, Hekhalot Rabbati, and the making of merkavah mysticism. Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 2006. “The emergence of pseudonymous attribution in Heikhalot literature: Empirical evidence from the Jewish ‘magical’ corpora”. Jewish Studies Quarterly 14:18–38.
- . 2007. “The study of Heikhalot literature: Between mystical experience and textual artifact”. Currents in Biblical Research 6:130–160.
- Boyarín, Daniel. 1987. “Two introductions to the Midrash of the Song of Songs” (in Hebrew). Tarbiz 56:479–500.
- Cohen, Martin. 1985. The Shi’ur Qomah: Texts and recensions (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 9). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- Dan, Joseph. 1987. Review of Schäfer 1984 (in Hebrew), Tarbiz 56:433–437.
- . 1984. Three types of ancient Jewish mysticism. Cincinnati: University of Cincinnati. = Dan 1998–1999, vol. 1, 27–76.
- . 1993a. The ancient Jewish mysticism. Tel-Aviv: MOD Books.
- . 1993b. “The ancient Heikhalot mystical texts in the Middle Ages: Tradition, source, inspiration”. Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library of Manchester 75:83–96 = Dan 1998–1999, vol. 1, 243–260.
- . 1994. “Šem šel šminiyot” (in Hebrew). Tribute to Sara: Studies in Jewish philosophy and Kabbala presented to Professor Sara O. Heller-Wilensky, ed. by Moshe Idel, Devorah Dimant, and Shalom Rosenberg, 119–134. Jerusalem: Magnes.
- . 1996a. “The concept of the pleroma in Hekhalot mystical texts” (in Hebrew). Rivkah Shatz-Uffenheimer memorial volume, 2 vols. (Jerusalem Studies in Jewish Thought 12–13), ed. by Rachel Elior and Joseph Dan, 1:61–140. Jerusalem: Jewish National and University Library.

- . 1996b. "The name of God, the name of the rose, and the concept of language in Jewish mysticism". Medieval Encounters 2:228–248 = Dan 1998–1999, vol. 3, 131–159.
- . 1998–1999. Jewish mysticism, 4 vols. Northvale, New Jersey: Jason Aronson.
- Elior, Rachel. 2004. The three temples: On the emergence of Jewish mysticism. Oxford: Littman.
- . 2007. Jewish mysticism: The infinite expression of freedom. Oxford: Littman.
- Gruenwald, Itamar. 1980. Apocalyptic and Merkavah mysticism. Leiden: Brill.
- Halperin, David. 1988. The faces of the chariot: Early Jewish responses to Ezekiel's vision (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 16). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- Herrmann, Klaus. 1993. "Re-written mystical texts: The transmission of the Heikhalot literature in the Middle Ages". Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library of Manchester 75:97–116.
- . 1994. Massekhet Hekhalot: Traktat von der himmlischen Palästen (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 39). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- Janowitz, Naomi. 1989. The poetics of ascent: Theories of language in a rabbinic ascent text. Albany New York: State University of New York Press.
- Kuyt, Annelies. 1990. "Once again: Yarad in Hekhalot literature". Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge 18:45–69.
- . 1995. The "descent" to the chariot: Towards a description of the terminology, place, function and nature of the Yeridah in Hekhalot literature (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 45). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- Lewy, Hans (Yohanan). 1951. "Remains of Greek phrases and names in Hekhalot Rabbati" (in Hebrew). Tarbiz 12:163–167 = idem. 1960. Studies in Jewish Hellenism, 259–265. Jerusalem: Bialik Institute.
- Maier, Johann. 1973. "Serienbildung und 'numinoser' Eindruckseffekt in den poetischen Stücken der Hekhalot-Literatur". Semiotica 3:36–66.
- Mizrahi, Noam. 2009. "The supposed relationship between the Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice and Hekhalot literature: Linguistic and stylistic aspects" (in Hebrew). Meghillot 7:263–298.
- Odeberg, Hugo. 1928. 3 Enoch or the Hebrew book of Enoch. Cambridge: University Press (reprinted with prolegomenon by Jonas Greenfield, New York: Ktav, 1973).
- Rand, Michael. 2009. "More on the Seder beriyot". Jewish Studies Quarterly 16:183–209.
- Schäfer, Peter. 1981. Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur (Text and Studies in Ancient Judaism 2). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1984. Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur (Text and Studies in Ancient Judaism 6). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1986–1988. Konkordanz zur Hekhalot-Literatur, 2 vols. (Text and Studies in Ancient Judaism 12–13). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1987–1995. Übersetzung der Hekhalot-Literatur, 4 vols. (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 17, 22, 29, 46). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1988. Hekhalot-Studien (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 19). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1992. The hidden and manifest God: Some major themes in early Jewish mysticism, trans. by Aubrey Pomerance. Albany, New York: State University of New York Press.
- . 1993. "Research on Hekhalot literature: Where do we stand now?" Rashi 1040–1990: Hommage à Ephraïm E. Urbach, ed. by Gabrielle Sed-Rajna, 229–235. Paris: Cerf.
- . 2009. The origins of Jewish mysticism. Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- Scholem, Gershom. 1953. "Physiognomy and chiromancy" (in Hebrew), 459–495. Sefer Assaf, ed. by Umberto Cassuto, Joseph Klausner, and Joshua Guttman. Jerusalem: Mosad HaRav Kook = idem. 2004. Devils, demons and souls: Essays on demonology by Gershom Scholem (in Hebrew), ed. by Esther Liebes, 246–301. Jerusalem: Yad Ben-Zvi.
- . 1954. Major trends in Jewish mysticism, 3rd edition. New York: Schocken.
- . 1965. Jewish gnosticism, Merkavah mysticism, and Talmudic tradition, 2nd edition. New York: Jewish Theological Seminary of America.
- Swartz, Michael. 1992. Mystical prayer in ancient Judaism: An analysis of Ma'aseh Merkavah (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 28). Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck.
- . 1996. Scholastic magic: Ritual and revelation in early Jewish mysticism. Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press.
- . 2006. "Mystical texts". The literature of the Sages (Compendia rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum 2.3), ed. by Shmuel Safrai et al., vol. 2, 393–420. Assen: Royal Van Gorcum.
- Weiss, Tzahi. 2008. "Three traditions of the creation of the world from letters". Kabbalah 17:169–200.
- Wolfson, Eliot. 1993. "Yeridah la-Merkavah: Typology of ecstasy and enthronement in ancient Jewish mysticism". Mystics of the book: Themes, topics and typologies, ed. by Robert Harrera, 13–44. New York: Peter Lang.
- Zelikovich-Nadav, Yael. 1953. "Linguistic usages in Hekhalot Rabbati" (in Hebrew). MA thesis, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

NOAM MIZRAHI
(Tel-Aviv University)

Hittite Loanwords see → Lexicon:
Biblical Hebrew

Holy Tongue

1. BACKGROUND

This survey traces the history of Hebrew as לשון הקודש lašōn haq-qōdeš 'the holy language' (lit. 'holy tongue') from the Second Temple Period through its development in early rabbinic literature (c. 800 C.E.). The concept under review involves two discrete ideas: 'holiness'

The Revelation of the Magi

A summary and introduction

by Brent Landau

The Revelation of the Magi (Rev. Magi) is a pseudepigraphical early Christian writing purporting to be the personal testimony of the Magi (better known as the “Wise Men” or the “Three Kings”) on the events surrounding the coming of Christ. It is by far the longest apocryphon devoted to these figures, and contains several unique interpretations of the biblical Magi story (Matt 2:1–12) not seen elsewhere in early Christian biblical interpretation. In Rev. Magi there are twelve Magi, or possibly more, in contrast to the traditional enumeration of three. They reside in a semi-mythical land in the Far East called “Shir”; and perhaps most startlingly, the Magi’s star is actually Jesus Christ himself, who transforms from star to human and back again throughout the course of the narrative. Although the only complete version of Rev. Magi is preserved in Syriac, a much briefer Latin summary of the same basic narrative exists in an ancient commentary on the Gospel of Matthew.

Contents

Rev. Magi is a lengthy text—about 6,500 words in Syriac. The narrative will be summarized briefly here, and a much more detailed summary will follow the introduction. Rev. Magi is summarized in this volume instead of translated because it was published recently in English by a trade press in a format designed primarily for a general audience.¹ The chief goals of this entry are twofold. First, it provides a fuller introduction to the text and its interpretative problems than that found in the trade press version. Second, because of the length and complexity of Rev. Magi, a detailed summary provides readers with a convenient and accessible overview of the text’s content.

According to Rev. Magi, the Magi are an ancient order of mystics residing in a land called “Shir,” located at the extreme eastern edge of the inhabited world (1–2). They are descendants of Adam’s son Seth, who received a prophecy from his father Adam about the coming of a star that would signify the birth of God in human form (2). This prophecy is written down by Seth in the world’s first book, and is transmitted through the generations by his offspring, the Magi (3–4). In expectation of the star’s coming, every month the Magi immerse themselves in a sacred spring, ascend their country’s most sacred mountain (the “Mountain of Victories”), pray to God in silence, and enter a cave (the “Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries”) atop the mountain to read Seth’s prophecies (5). At last, the star appears to the present generation of Magi (who serve as the story’s narrators), descends to the peak of the Magi’s mountain, and transforms into a small, luminous human being (11–13). Then, in star form once more, it guides them on a miraculously brief journey from

1. See Landau, Revelation of the Magi. For more detailed discussion of the text, consult the author’s dissertation, “Sages and the Star-Child.”

Shir to Bethlehem, during which it relieves their fatigue and multiplies their food (16). When they reach Bethlehem, the star enters a cave, transforms into a luminous infant, and commissions the Magi to return to their country to spread his gospel with his other disciples (18–21). After meeting Mary and Joseph (22–25), the Magi return to Shir with the star's assistance (26). They tell the inhabitants of their country about their journey, and explain that the people of Shir also can experience the presence of Christ if they partake of the food that the star multiplied (27). The people eat, immediately have visions of the heavenly and earthly Jesus, and convert to the faith proclaimed by the Magi (28). Finally, the apostle Judas Thomas arrives in the land of Shir, meets the Magi, and baptizes them and commissions them to preach throughout the entire world (29–32).

Manuscripts and Versions

The full text of Rev. Magi is preserved only in Syriac, in a single eighth-century manuscript housed in the Vatican Library (Biblioteca apostolica, syr. 162). The manuscript contains a world-chronicle known as the Chronicle of Zuqnin (named for the monastery in southeastern Turkey where it was produced, henceforth Chron. Zuq.) or, less accurately, as the Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius of Tell-Mahre.² In its recounting of the history of the world from Creation to the late eighth century, Chron. Zuq. embeds a number of previously independent documents, such as a legend about Alexander the Great, the legend of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, and Rev. Magi. Based on the way that the compiler of Chron. Zuq. has handled other literary sources that he incorporated, there is no reason to think that he has altered the text in any substantial respect.³ A critical edition of Vat. syr. 162 was produced by the Swedish scholar Otto Tullberg and his pupils in 1851.⁴ In 1927 J.-B. Chabot edited the text again for the CSCO and translated Chron. Zuq. into Latin,⁵ though by the time of Chabot's edition the manuscript had become increasingly illegible (the cause of the deterioration remains unclear) and Chabot was forced to rely on Tullberg's readings at several points.⁶ The present author is preparing a new edition of the Syriac as part of his CCSA volume on Rev. Magi; the new edition utilizes high-resolution digital photographs of the manuscript taken under ultraviolet light, in addition to direct observation of the manuscript at the Vatican Library.

Although the only witness to the complete text of Rev. Magi is Vat. syr. 162, a much shorter summary of the same basic narrative appears in the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum (henceforth Op. Imperf.), a Latin commentary on the Gospel of Matthew that was wrongly attributed to John Chrysostom.⁷ Some scholars have regarded the summary

2. See the comments of Amir Harrak, The Chronicle of Zuqnin, parts III and IV: A.D. 488–775 (Toronto: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 1999), 3–4.

3. See Witakowski, Syriac Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius, 124–36.

4. Tullberg, Dionysii Telmahharensis Chronici liber primus.

5. Chabot, Chronicon anonymum Pseudo-Dionysianum.

6. See Witakowski, Syriac Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius, 32 n. 20.

7. In Migne, PG 56:637–38. A critical edition of Op. Imperf. is apparently underway, though the prefatory volume appeared more than twenty years ago; see van Banning, Opus Imperfectum. The portion related to Rev. Magi is translated in Landau, Revelation of the Magi, 103–5; for a detailed comparison of the Op. Imperf. version of the legend with the Syriac form of Rev. Magi, see Landau, “Sages and the Star-Child,” 137–74. An introduction to and translation of the summary has been published recently by Alexander Toepel, “The Apocryphon of Seth,” in Old Testament Pseudepigrapha: More Noncanonical Scriptures (ed. Richard Bauckham, James R. Davila, and Alexander Panayotov; Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 2013), 33–39. For a complete translation of Op. Imperf., see James A. Kellerman, trans., Incomplete Commentary on Matthew (Opus Imperfectum) (2 vols.; Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity, 2010).

found in Op. Imperf. as a witness to a shorter, more succinct version of Rev. Magi that was later expanded into the form contained in the extant Syriac text from *Chron. Zuq.*⁸ But there has been no consensus about which portions of the Syriac might be secondary, and the version in Op. Imperf. possesses the same basic narrative structure found in the Syriac. Therefore, it seems preferable to regard Op. Imperf. as a witness to a form of Rev. Magi very similar in content and length to that found in the received Syriac.

Original Language, Date, and Provenance

If we assume, as does the most recent scholarship, that Op. Imperf. was written in the fifth century by an Arian theologian who had spent some time in Constantinople, then a Greek version of Rev. Magi must have been in existence at this time.⁹ Nevertheless, it is highly likely that Rev. Magi originally was written in Syriac. Several plays on words only make sense in Syriac,¹⁰ and Judas Thomas was the apostle par excellence for Syriac-speaking Christian communities.

The Syriac form of Rev. Magi must have existed by some time in the fourth century in order to account for its translation into Greek. However, there are several reasons to suspect an origin earlier than the fourth century.¹¹ Chief among these is the fact that the concluding episode about Judas Thomas's visit to the Magi's homeland in Rev. Magi 29–32 appears to be an interpolation. The narrative abruptly switches from first-person narration by the Magi to third-person narration just prior to Thomas's arrival. The Thomas episode also uses vocabulary not previously seen in the narrative, including Syriac ascetical terminology and the proper name "Jesus Christ," which is steadfastly avoided in the first-person plural narration by the Magi. In addition to these textual markers of interpolation, on a literary level the Judas Thomas episode shows a concern for officially integrating the Magi into the broader Christian church through an apostolic visit and baptism, whereas the earlier part of the text has the Magi receive revelation directly from Jesus Christ despite his never being identified to the Magi by this specific name.

A comparison between the Judas Thomas interpolation and the Acts of Thomas helps to determine the date of composition for the interpolation. The Thomas story shows no awareness of the storyline of Acts Thom., particularly its setting in India. Yet the baptismal hymn sung by Thomas in Rev. Magi 30:2–9 has strong formal similarities to several of the epictic prayers in *Acts Thom.*¹² These factors suggest that the Judas Thomas interpolation was composed in an environment where liturgical forms similar to those in Acts Thom. were in use, but at a time when traditions about the precise places Thomas evangelized were still somewhat in flux. Therefore, a third-century date for the composition and interpolation of the Judas Thomas episode seems appropriate.¹³

The original form of Rev. Magi, as a pseudepigraphon with only the Magi as its pur-

8. See the discussion of the relationship between these witnesses in Landau, "Sages and the Star-Child," 165–73.

9. See van Banning, Opus Imperfectum, v–vi.

10. For example, the play on the words "divide/division" and "doubt" (7:2), both of which have the same root in Syriac.

11. For a broader discussion of the evidence see Landau, "Sages and the Star-Child," 176–90.

12. This was noted independently of my own research by Sebastian P. Brock, "An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil," in Studia Patristica: Papers Presented at the Fourteenth International Congress on Patristic Studies Held in Oxford 2003 (ed. Francis M. Young, Mark J. Edwards, and Paul M. Parvis; Leuven: Peeters, 2006), 3–12.

13. See Landau, "Sages and the Star-Child," 190–200.

ported authors, likely was composed in the early third or late second century, based on the affinities of this work with other Christian literature of this time period. Other Christian pseudepigraphic compositions attributed to “pagans,” such as the Abgar Correspondence and the earliest forms of the Pilate literature, probably originated in the second or third century as apologetic pieces illustrating the truth of Christianity through the testimony of outsiders.¹⁴ Also, the ability of Christ in Rev. Magi both to transform his appearance and to appear in several different forms simultaneously is quite similar to the depictions of the polymorphic Christ found in the Acts of John and other second-century texts.¹⁵

There is one other early Christian writing with which Rev. Magi has a substantial amount in common, though the literary relationship between the two writings is far from clear. This is the little-studied but potentially quite ancient infancy gospel incorporated in a branch of the manuscript tradition of Ps.-Mt. and in several Irish witnesses.¹⁶ First discussed by M. R. James in 1927¹⁷ and recently christened the Liber de nativitate salvatoris (“Book about the Birth of the Savior,” abbreviated henceforth as Birth Sav.) by Jean-Daniel Kaestli,¹⁸ this work is an expansion and harmonization of Matthew’s and Luke’s infancy narratives. In Kaestli’s opinion, the Protevangelium of James may be dependent upon Birth Sav.,¹⁹ which would necessitate an origin for Birth Sav. sometime in the middle of the second century or earlier. Birth Sav.’s account of the Magi’s visit shares a number of striking details with the contents of Rev. Magi—for example, in both texts only the Magi can see the star, a tradition found nowhere else in early Christian literature.²⁰ It appears that one text is dependent upon the other, though it is not certain in which direction the relationship goes. We may provisionally say that Rev. Magi is more likely to be dependent on Birth Sav. than the other way around, because in terms of genre Birth Sav. is a harmony and expansion of the canonical infancy narratives, and gospel harmonies appear to be some of the earliest apocryphal compositions that exist,²¹ whereas narratives that focus on one specific biblical character or group of characters seem to be a slightly later development in the tradition. Moreover, given that Birth Sav. may date from the mid-second century or

14. See Landau, “Sages and the Star-Child,” 214–18. See also Landau, “The Christian Production of ‘Pagan’ Pseudepigrapha” (paper presented at the annual meeting of the SBL, Boston, Mass., November 24, 2008).

15. For a comparison of the polymorphic Christ in Rev. Magi with that found in the Acts of John, see Landau, “Polymorphy, Metamorphosis, or Something Else? The Plasticity of Christ in the Syriac Revelation of the Magi and the Apocryphal Acts of John” (paper presented at the annual meeting of the SBL, Chicago, Ill., November 18, 2012).

16. For text and translation of the Irish witnesses and text of the Latin Arundel and Hereford recensions, see Jean-Daniel Kaestli and Martin McNamara, “Latin Infancy Gospels: The J Compilation,” in Apocrypha Hiberniae 1: Evangelia Infantiae (ed. Martin McNamara et al.; 2 vols.; CCSA 13–14; Turnhout: Brepols, 2001), 2:619–880. See also the translation of the Latin Arundel recension in AG, 115–55.

17. Montague Rhodes James, Latin Infancy Gospels (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1927).

18. See the recent study by Kaestli, “Mapping.”

19. See Kaestli, “Recherches nouvelles.”

20. The similarities between Rev. Magi and Birth Sav. were recognized first by Alois Kehl, “Der Stern der Magier: Zu §94 des lateinischen Kindheitsevangeliums der Arundel-Handschrift,” JAC 18 (1975): 69–80. For more detailed comparisons of these two texts, see Landau, “Sages and the Star-Child,” 202–14, and Kaestli, “Mapping,” 528–33.

21. Although they probably contain some traditions independent of the canonical Gospels, the Gospel of Peter and at least some of the so-called Jewish-Christian Gospels may profitably be described as gospel harmonies, all of which likely originated in the first half of the second century.

earlier, dependence upon Rev. Magi would mean that Rev. Magi is earlier than any other Syriac Christian literature we possess, and this seems inherently unlikely.²²

In sum, a date for Rev. Magi in the late second or early third century appears warranted. There are no compelling reasons to believe that the Syriac text is a translation of an originally Greek work. As the strongest center of early Syriac Christianity, Edessa would be a very likely candidate for this text's place of birth. At any rate, the popularity of Judas Thomas in Edessa would indicate that at least the redaction of the text took place there. Determining the characteristics of the individual or the community that produced this pseudepigraphic composition is quite speculative. Nevertheless, it is tempting to read some elements of Rev. Magi's narrative—in particular, ingesting a particular food that facilitates visionary experience—as the religious experiences of some early Christians who adopted the personae of the Magi in order to give expression to such experiences.²³

Literary Context

As mentioned above, Rev. Magi may have been directly or indirectly dependent on the traditions about the Magi found in Birth Sav. Apart from this work, several other definite and potential influences on Rev. Magi may be noted. Obviously, it is indebted to the story of the Magi in Matt 2:1–12 above all; yet Rev. Magi is not slavish in its devotion to this source text. It shows little interest in the Magi's interaction with the inhabitants of Jerusalem; it never even alludes to King Herod's slaughter of the innocents; and the gifts brought by the Magi to Jesus are neither specified as the familiar gold, frankincense, and myrrh, nor as anything else. As for other NT texts, the Gospel of John is as important as Matt 2:1–12, if not more so. Rev. Magi is replete with Johannine terminology, often describing Christ as the "Son" who "was sent" by the "Father," and its depiction of Christ as a star may be influenced by the Fourth Gospel's well-known description of Christ as "the light of the world" (John 8:12; 9:5).

Two geographical locations found in Rev. Magi also appear in the Syriac work known as the Cave of Treasures (Cav. Tr.), dated in its final form to the sixth or seventh century but doubtlessly preserving earlier traditions.²⁴ In Rev. Magi, the "Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries" is where Seth's books of revelation are kept, along with (unspecified) gifts that the Magi are to offer to Christ when the star appears; in Cav. Tr., the cave is the burial place of Adam and his offspring, as well as the repository of the Magi's gifts. Additionally, in Rev. Magi, the Magi's sacred mountain is named the "Mountain of Victories" and the "Cave of Treasures" is located at its summit; the "Mountain of Victories" is mentioned also in Cav. Tr., as the residence of Methuselah, Lamech, and Noah (14:1). These commonalities are intriguing; however, Cav. Tr.'s narrative about the Magi has very little in common with the content of Rev. Magi. In Cav. Tr., the Magi live in Persia, are startled by the unexpected appearance of the star, and consult the "revelations of Nimrod"—not Seth—to understand the meaning of the star (45:11). It is often thought that Cav. Tr. had access to earlier Christian (and perhaps Jewish) exegetical traditions; in the case of the Magi traditions it is probable that both works had access to similar sources, but that neither work utilized the other. Rev. Magi also knows earlier traditions about a revelation or testament of Adam written down by Seth and about the great virtue of Seth and his progeny. It is intriguing that Josephus (Ant. 1.70–71) names the land of Seth's descendants as "Seiris," though Josephus apparently envisions this land as being somewhere in Transjordan, whereas Rev. Magi is dependent upon a widespread ancient geographical tradition that designated "Shir" or "Seiris" as the land known today as China.²⁵ In its use of the figure of Seth, Rev. Magi does not show any resemblance to the speculation about Seth as a salvific figure that appears in some works from the Nag Hammadi library.²⁶

22. The earliest Syriac Christian writings are probably the Odes of Solomon (often dated to the early second century) and Tatian's Diatessaron gospel harmony (second half of second century).

23. See my "Under the Influence (of the Magi): Did Hallucinogens Play a Role in the Inspired Composition of the Pseudepigraphic Revelation of the Magi?" Forthcoming in Fakes, Forgeries, and Fictions: Writing Ancient and Modern Christian Apocrypha (Eugene, Ore: Cascade).

24. See the new introduction to and translation of this work by Alexander Toepel, "The Cave of Treasures," in Old Testament Pseudepigrapha: More Noncanonical Scriptures (ed. Richard Bauckham, James R. Davila, and Alexander Panayotov; Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 2013), 531–84.

One final alleged antecedent (or group of antecedents) must be mentioned, since it dominated earlier scholarship on Rev. Magi and is still cited as authoritative by some recent scholars. Beginning in the late nineteenth century, scholars associated with the "History-of-Religions" School claimed that Rev. Magi was a product of indigenous Iranian religious thought.²⁷ Most notably, it was held that the appearance of Christ to the Magi atop the Mountain of Victories was a lightly Christianized version of an Iranian legend about the coming of the Saoshyant (a Zoroastrian savior figure) or the birth of the god Mithras.²⁸ Even scholars who were critical of the most thoroughgoing forms of this "Iranian thesis" have conceded that Rev. Magi has some Iranian elements.²⁹ As alluring as it may be to regard Rev. Magi as a window into the beginnings of Christianity in Iran and pre-Christian Iranian religion, the alleged parallels between Rev. Magi and Iranian religion are indeed quite meager and rely heavily on inference. It is important to note also that the genealogical approach to religious thought espoused by the "History-of-Religions" School, wherein all religions are merely replicating the ideas of earlier, primitive religions in disguised form, has largely fallen out of favor among scholars because it posits a very simplistic view of interaction between religious systems. Finally, it must be kept in mind that the scholars who put forth the most detailed versions of this thesis wrote in the 1950s and 1960s, when there was an obsession with establishing Iran as the cradle of Jewish, Christian, and gnostic thought—a notion few scholars today accept.³⁰ Thus, there is little need to resort to more exotic influences than earlier Christian and Jewish texts and traditions in order to explain the religious worldview found in Rev. Magi.

Literary and Theological Importance

Although Rev. Magi was virtually unknown and/or ignored by specialists in early Christian apocryphal literature until quite recently, the text contains several distinctive and intriguing elements. First, and most obviously, it is by far the longest and most detailed apocryphon relating to the enigmatic figures of the Magi to have survived from antiq-

25. See Reinink, "Das Land 'Seiris.'"

26. For contextualization of Rev. Magi among other traditions about Seth, see Albertus F. J. Klijn, Seth in Jewish, Christian and Gnostic Literature (Leiden: Brill, 1977), 48–60.

27. See the (favorable) overview of this scholarship by Hultgard, "Magi and the Star."

28. The most famous and committed proponent of this viewpoint was the Swedish scholar Geo Widengren. For the fullest exposition of Widengren's thesis, see his Iranisch-semitische Kulturbegegnung in parthischer Zeit (Cologne and Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1960), 62–86.

29. See the evaluation of Mary Boyce and Frantz Grenet, Zoroastrianism under Macedonian and Roman Rule (vol. 3 of A History of Zoroastrianism; Leiden: Brill, 1991), 449–53.

30. See the criticisms of these tendencies of the "History of Religions" School in Karen L. King, What Is Gnosticism? (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2003), 71–109.

uity. The Magi do make appearances in the Protevangelium of James and other infancy gospels,³¹ and there are several shorter compositions in which the Magi play a major role.³² Yet Rev. Magi tells the story of Christ and, indeed, the entire history of salvation, from the perspective of the Magi themselves with a level of detail found nowhere else.

Second, the text surprisingly places the Magi in the legendary far-eastern land of Shir, ignoring the most popular homelands imagined for the Magi by other early Christian commentators: Persia, Babylon, and Arabia. In a number of ancient sources, the land of Shir seems to be roughly equivalent to China, and its inhabitants are said to possess extraordinary virtues and abilities.³³ No other ancient Christian writing locates the Magi in this land,³⁴ and the author of Rev. Magi presumably intended to appropriate for the figures of the Magi the sorts of qualities elsewhere ascribed to the inhabitants of China.

Third, the text is strongly invested in the notion of a polymorphic Christ, which, as mentioned above, demonstrates an affinity with writings of the second and third centuries.³⁵ Rev. Magi contains several instances of Christ appearing simultaneously to people in a multiplicity of forms (see chaps. 14 and 28), but the most distinctive instance of Christ's shape-shifting is his transformation from a star into human form and back again during the narrative.³⁶ Although there was a great deal of debate in ancient Christian circles about what the mysterious "Star of Bethlehem" was,³⁷ Rev. Magi is the only known writing to claim that this star was Jesus in a celestial, pre-incarnational form. The precise background for the idea of Jesus being a star still remains unclear, though it is certainly possible that the well-known statement of Christ that he is "the light of the world" in John 8:12 and 9:5 has played a role. In any case, Rev. Magi suggests in 13:1–2 that it is actually Christ's luminous appearance as a star that is closest to his true form, with his human form merely being an accommodation for the purposes of fragile human beings. Beyond these instances of polymorphy or metamorphosis, it is also notable that Rev. Magi depicts Christ as being able to appear in two places simultaneously—both with the Magi in Shir and in Bethlehem (13:9, see also 23:2).

These extraordinary bodily properties of Christ are relevant also for the fourth and 31. See Prot. Jas. 21, (Arm.) Gos. Inf. 10–11 (see n. 39 below), (Arab.) Gos. Inf. 7, and Birth Sav. (see the discussion above).

32. For other substantial (but still significantly shorter than Rev. Magi) compositions featuring the Magi, see the Legend of Aphroditianus elsewhere in this volume, and Pseudo-Eusebius's On the Star in William Wright, "Eusebius of Caesarea on the Star," Journal of Sacred Literature 9 (1866): 117–36 (Syriac text); 10 (1866): 150–64 (English translation).

33. See Reinink, "Das Land 'Seiris.'" Attributing such exalted status to peoples on the edges of the civilized world was a common trope in Greek and Roman literature; see James S. Romm, The Edges of the Earth in Ancient Thought: Geography, Exploration, and Fiction (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1992).

34. Though some later Syriac Christian texts, probably under the influence of Rev. Magi, place the apostle Thomas's missionary work in China. See Jürgen Tubach, "Der Apostel Thomas in China: Die Herkunft einer Tradition," ZKG 108 (1997): 58–74.

35. The best discussion of this phenomenon is Paul Foster, "Polymorphic Christology: Its Origins and Development in Early Christianity," JTS 58 (2007): 66–99; see also Landau, "Polymorphy."

36. Rev. Magi is also one of the only Christian texts to depict Jesus appearing in nonhuman form (though cf. the strange statement in 1 Cor 10:4 that "the rock was Christ").

37. See the discussions in Dale C. Allison, "The Magi's Angel (2:2, 9–10)," in his Studies in Matthew: Interpretations Past and Present (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Baker, 2005), 17–41, and Nicola F. Denzey, "A New Star on the Horizon: Astral Christologies and Stellar Debates in Early Christian Discourse," in Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World (ed. Scott B. Noegel, Joel T. Walker, and Brandon M. Wheeler; University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 2003), 207–21.

final distinctive feature of Rev. Magi: the text's surprisingly tolerant attitude toward religious diversity. Since Christ can appear to anyone, in any place, at any time, Rev. Magi holds him to be the source of most—if not all—of humanity's religious systems. In an extremely important passage, Christ (who is not named as such until the redactional Judas Thomas ending) tells the Magi:

And I am everywhere, because I am a ray of light whose light has shone in this world from the majesty of my Father, who has sent me to fulfill everything that was spoken about me in the entire world and in every land by unspeakable mysteries, and to accomplish the commandment of my glorious Father, who by the prophets preached about me to the contentious house, in the same way as for you, as befits your faith, it was revealed to you about me. (13:10)

According to this statement, Christ has been spoken of throughout the entire world, not just through Israel's prophets and the Magi's books of revelation (see also the Magi's similar statements at 17:5 and 23:4). This belief is quite unusual in early Christian literature, as most early Christian writers regarded the gods of other peoples as either imaginary or demonic. This more tolerant attitude perhaps has its origins in the fact that Syriac Christians had far more exposure to well-established religious traditions of Central and Southeast Asia—Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, and Hinduism, most notably—than did their Christian counterparts within the Roman Empire. As a consequence of this inclusive attitude regarding religious diversity, the Magi in Rev. Magi become followers of Christ despite never actually knowing him by the name “Jesus Christ”—a situation that the more theologically conservative redactor of the text who added the concluding Judas Thomas episode sought to remedy.³⁸

Later Influence

There are two distinct trajectories for the reception history of Rev. Magi: the use of the original Syriac form of the text in Eastern Christian communities, and the use of Rev. Magi's narrative as preserved in Op. Imperf. in medieval Europe. The former trajectory is somewhat sparse, while the latter is surprisingly rich. We will examine each trajectory in turn.

The earliest Eastern Christian text to show awareness of the Syriac Rev. Magi is not in Syriac; rather, it is the sixth-century Armenian Infancy Gospel, which is based upon a lost Syriac original. The gospel references Rev. Magi's notion that the Magi are in possession of an ancient prophetic writing by Seth; in fact, they bring this writing with them to present it to Jesus ([Arm.] Gos. Inf. 10–11 and 22–23).³⁹ In the late eighth century, about the same time as Chron. Zuq. was written, the Syriac writer Theodore bar Konai mentions that the Magi arrived in Jerusalem “in the month of flowers” (i.e., April), and that they laid their crowns at his feet.⁴⁰ Both of these elements also appear in Rev. Magi (at 17:1 and

38. For more detailed analysis of Rev. Magi's understanding of divine revelation, see Landau, “‘One Drop of Salvation’”; and Landau, “Sages and the Star-Child,” 244–66.

39. See the translation by Abraham Terian, The Armenian Gospel of the Infancy (New York: Oxford University Press, 2008), 51–52.

40. Theodore bar Konai, Book of Scholia, 7.17. For a French translation of the passage, see Theodore bar Koni, Livre des Scholies (recension de Séert) II. Mimrè VI-XI (trans. Robert Hespel and René Draguet; CSCO 432, Syr. 188; Leuven: Peeters, 1982), 51.

18:5, respectively), and the tradition about Jesus being born during the month of April is quite unusual, so it is highly probable that Theodore was familiar with Rev. Magi. Because Theodore lived in Ira and Chron. Zuq. was compiled in southeastern Turkey, this suggests that Rev. Magi had been disseminated rather widely by the end of the eighth century.

In the thirteenth century, Solomon, the bishop of Basra, wrote a compendium of biblical and extrabiblical lore known as the Book of the Bee, which demonstrates some knowledge of Rev. Magi. Solomon mentions that some Christians say that the gifts brought by the Magi were deposited in the Cave of Treasures by Adam, and that he commanded his son Seth to hand them down through the generations (Bk. Bee 39; cf. Rev. Magi 4:7). Solomon also states that some say that it was at the time of Seth that writing was invented (Bk. Bee 18), and Rev. Magi 3:3 claims that Seth wrote the first book in the history of the world. Both of these traditions, Solomon says, are not accepted by the church. This suggests that Solomon viewed Rev. Magi as heterodox in some respects, but he does not elaborate further.⁴¹

It is also worth mentioning that the list of the names of the twelve Magi and their fathers in Rev. Magi 2:3 is found in works by a number of other Syriac writers. However, the names from this list are never referenced again in the narrative of Rev. Magi, and they are so widespread throughout Syriac literature that they are likely not to have originated in Rev. Magi, but instead were added to the text at some point after its creation.⁴² Indeed, there are hints scattered throughout Rev. Magi that the Magi constituted a group much larger than twelve: the text uses the Syriac term mashritha to describe them on several occasions, a word found in the Syriac NT to translate the Greek parembolē, used almost exclusively for large assemblies of people (e.g., Acts 21:34; Heb 11:34; 13:11).

Although there are some clear indications that Rev. Magi remained known in Syriac Christian communities for several centuries after its inclusion in Chron. Zuq., the references to it are rather meager overall. In contrast, Op. Imperf.'s summary of Rev. Magi's narrative was extremely influential for understandings of the Magi in medieval Europe. Op. Imperf. was attributed, incorrectly, to John Chrysostom, and thus it was copied along with his other works. Its story about the Magi was incorporated into Jacob of Voragine's Legenda Aurea (the "Golden Legend"), an extremely popular thirteenth-century compendium of saints' lives.⁴³ In the fourteenth century, the German priest John of Hildesheim used Op. Imperf.'s narrative (along with other sources) in the composition of his enormously popular Historia Trium Regum ("History of the Three Kings"), which stands as the most detailed medieval account of the Magi.⁴⁴ The Magi legend was referenced also by Thomas Aquinas, Peter Abelard, and other medieval theologians.⁴⁵

41. For an English translation of the relevant passages see Solomon of Basra, The Book of the Bee (trans. Ernest A. W. Budge; Oxford: Clarendon, 1886), 28 and 85.

42. See the helpful tables of the names of the Magi in Syriac sources in Witakowski, "Magi in Syriac Tradition," 839–43.

43. For an English translation of the material in the Golden Legend pertaining to the Magi, see Jacobus de Voragine, The Golden Legend: Readings on the Saints (trans. William G. Ryan; 2 vols.; Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1995), 1:40, 78–84.

44. The most accessible version of the Historia Trium Regum is a Middle English recension; see Frank Schaer, The Three Kings of Cologne: Edited from London, Lambeth Palace MS 491 (Heidelberg: Universitätsverlag Winter, 2000).

45. See Thomas Aquinas, ST III, Q. 36, Art. 5, ad. 4, and Peter Abelard, Sermo IV in Epiphania Domini. For the latter, see Paola de Santis, I sermoni di Abelardo per monache del Paracletto (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 2002), 198–99.

Artistic representations of Rev. Magi's narrative exist as well: Vincent of Beauvais's Speculum Humanae Salvationis ("Mirror of the Salvation of Humankind") contains a drawing of the Magi bowing before a star containing a small child, an unmistakable reference to Rev. Magi's understanding of the Magi's star as Christ himself.⁴⁶ Moreover, two fifteenth-century paintings by the Flemish artist Rogier van der Weyden and his school show the Magi looking in awe at the star-child hovering over a mountain; one of these shows the Magi bathing in their sacred spring.⁴⁷ It is also remarkable that the Rev. Magi traditions were known by some of the early explorers of the Americas: one Spanish Augustinian was so impressed by the similarities between Incan religious practices and Christianity that he surmised that the Incans were the descendants of those evangelized by the Magi and the apostle Thomas.⁴⁸ Thus, the narrative of Rev. Magi became a valuable resource during the Age of Exploration for fitting the indigenous cultures of the Americas into the traditional Christian schematization of the world.

About the Summary

Because Rev. Magi is easily accessible in English through the present author's HarperCollins translation and his dissertation, it is unnecessary to reproduce that translation here. Instead, what follows is a detailed summary of the text (with explanatory footnotes for difficult passages) that will help readers to become aware of the specific content of Rev. Magi without having to read a translation of a Syriac text that is not infrequently verbose, repetitive, and stylistically awkward.

Bibliography

EDITIONS AND TRANSLATIONS

Chabot, Jean-Baptiste. Chronicon anonymum Pseudo-Dionysianum vulgo dictum, I. CSCO 91, 121, Syr. 3.1–2. Paris: E Typographeo Reipublicae, 1927. (Edition and Latin translation of Chron. Zuq.)

Landau, Brent C. Revelation of the Magi: The Lost Tale of the Wise Men's Journey to Bethlehem. San Francisco: HarperCollins, 2010. (English translation and commentary.)

———. "The Sages and the Star-Child: An Introduction to the Revelation of the Magi, An Ancient Christian Apocryphon." ThD diss., Harvard Divinity School, 2008. (Comprehensive study of the text; further bibliography may be found here.)

Tullberg, Otto F. Dionysii Telmahharensis Chronici liber primus. Textum e codice ms. Syriaco Bibliothecae Vaticanae. Uppsala: Regiae Academiae Typographi, 1850. (Editio princeps of Chron. Zuq.)

46. See the plate in Landau, Revelation of the Magi, 40–41; two other versions of this image are found in Hugo Kehrer, Die heiligen drei Könige in Literatur und Kunst (2 vols.; Leipzig: Seemann, 1908), 2:211, 213.

47. See the plates in Landau, Revelation of the Magi, ii, 51. These paintings today reside, respectively, in the Gemäldegalerie in Berlin and the Cloisters Museum in New York. For discussion of these artistic witness to the Magi narrative of Op. Imperf., see Jacques Duchesne-Guillemin, "The Wise Men from the East in the Western Tradition," in Papers in Honour of Professor Mary Boyce (ed. Jacques Duchesne-Guillemin and Pierre Lecoq; 2 vols.; Leiden: Brill, 1985), 1:149–57.

48. See the discussion of the Spanish search for the Magi and the apostle Thomas in Trexler, Journey of the Magi, 135–52.

STUDIES

- Banning, Joop van. Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum. Praefatio. CCSL 87b; Turnhout: Brepols, 1988.
- Hultgard, Anders. "The Magi and the Star: The Persian Background in Texts and Iconography." Pages 215–25 in "Being Religious and Living through the Eyes": Studies in Religious Iconography and Iconology. Edited by Peter Schalk and Michael Stausberg. Uppsala: Uppsala University Library, 1998.
- Kaestli, Jean-Daniel. "Mapping an Unexplored Second Century Apocryphal Gospel: The Liber de Nativitate Salvatoris (CANT 53)." Pages 506–33 in Infancy Gospels: Stories and Identities. Edited by Claire Clivaz et al. Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2011.
- Landau, Brent C. "'One Drop of Salvation from the House of Majesty': Universal Revelation, Human Mission and Mythical Geography in the Syriac Revelation of the Magi." Pages 83–103 in The Levant: Crossroads of Late Antiquity. Edited by Ellen B. Aitken and John M. Fossey. Leiden: Brill, 2014.
- . "The Revelation of the Magi in the Chronicle of Zuqnin." Apocrypha 19 (2008): 182–201.
- Monneret de Villard, Ugo. Le leggende orientali sui Magi evangelici. Studi e Testi 163. Vatican City: Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, 1952.
- Reinink, Gerrit J. "Das Land 'Seiris' (Šir) und das Volk der Serer in jüdischen und christlichen Traditionen." JSJ 6 (1975): 72–85.
- Trexler, Richard C. The Journey of the Magi: Meanings in History of a Christian Story. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1997.
- Witakowski, Witold. "The Magi in Syriac Tradition." Pages 809–43 in Malphono w-Rabod-Malphone: Studies in Honor of Sebastian P. Brock. Edited by George Kiraz. Piscataway, N.J.: Gorgias, 2008.
- . The Syriac Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius of Tel-Mahre: A Study in the History of Historiography. Uppsala: Uppsala University Press, 1987.

The Revelation of the Magi (Summary)

Introduction (chap. 1)

The compiler of Chron. Zuq. has provided his own descriptive title for the work that follows: “About the revelation of the Magi, and about their coming to Jerusalem, and about the gifts that they brought to Christ” (1:1). The text presents itself as the personal testimony of the Magi; these Magi are called by that name because they pray in silence.^a In their silent prayer, they glorify the Father of Heavenly Majesty, who is above all human thought. The only way in which the lower and upper worlds can speak about him is if the Father wills to reveal himself to them by means of a gift.

The Magi: their names and lineage (chap. 2)

The connection of the name “magi” to their practice of silent prayer is restated and, once again, the object of their prayer is the Father of Heavenly Majesty. The text supplies the names of the twelve current Magi and the names of their fathers. The Magi are described as wise men and kings who live in the land of Shir, which is on the eastern edge of the inhabited world, at the shore of the great Ocean, east of the land of Nod, in which Adam dwelt. The Magi have handed down from generation to generation books of laws and commandments, which go back to Seth, who received these revelations from his father Adam.

The transmission of the Magi’s mysteries (chap. 3)

Seth listened to the instructions of Adam with a virtuous heart, and he wrote them down in a book, the first book ever written. Seth gave the book to his descendants, and his descendants passed it down to Noah, who took the books (hereafter described in the plural) with him in the Ark during the Flood, and then passed it down to his descendants. The books continued to be handed down by Seth’s progeny until the present generation of Magi—who narrate this writing—receive them from their fathers. In accordance with the teachings of their fathers, the present Magi pray in silence, bowing their knees and stretching their hands forth toward the heavens.

The prophecy of the star (chap. 4)

Seth’s books are placed in a cave, known as the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, that is atop the Mountain of Victories, located in the eastern part of the land of Shir. Rea. Although the text suggests that there is an etymological relationship between the words “magi,” “silence,” and/or “prayer” in the Magi’s language, there is no obvious resemblance between these words in any of the relevant ancient languages. Since the Magi are said to live in a semi-mythical country, this alleged wordplay may simply be an exoticizing device intended to provide realism for the narrative.

citing the prophecy that they received from their own fathers, the fathers of the present generation of Magi instruct them to wait for a star that will appear over the Mountain of Victories, then descend to the mountain, and sit upon a pillar of light in the Cave of Treasures. The Magi are instructed also to tell their own sons about this coming star, whose great light will obscure the sun, moon, and stars. The star is a “mystery” of the Son, a being who is the visible counterpart of the Father of Heavenly Majesty. When the Magi see this star, they are to take the gifts deposited in the Cave of Treasures and follow where the star leads. They will see God appearing in the lowly human form of an infant, and they shall offer their gifts to the child and worship him. The Magi, in turn, will receive salvation from the child. Finally, their fathers exhort the present Magi that if the star does not come during their lifetime, they are to instruct their sons to pass along the prophecy to future generations until the prophecy is fulfilled.

The Magi’s monthly ritual (chap. 5)

The Magi come together at the Mountain of Victories from their own dwelling places every month. On the twenty-fifth day of each month, they purify themselves in a spring on the foothills of the mountain. The “Spring of Purification” has seven diverse trees around it, and the smell of sweet spices effuses from the beautiful mountain. On the first day of the month, the Magi climb to the top of the mountain and stand before the Cave of Treasures, bowing their knees and stretching forth their hands in silent prayer. On the third day of the month, they enter the cave, see the gifts that have been prepared for the star’s coming, and recite from Seth’s books of revelation. Then they descend from the mountain and instruct their families and anyone else who wishes to learn. When any of the Magi die, one of his sons or other relatives is raised up in his place. The Magi present their teachings to the people of Shir, though some do not wish to learn from the Magi because of their practice of silent prayer.^a

An excerpt from Seth’s books of revelation about Adam’s fall (chaps. 6–10)

The narration about the Magi, their prophecy, and their ritual is interrupted by an extended quotation from Seth’s books of revelation, mainly consisting of a speech of Adam to Seth about the circumstances of his fall, a prediction of apostasy in the end times, and an exhortation to Seth to seek after righteousness.^b The speech of Adam is prefaced by the explanation that Adam was able to prophesy about the coming star because the same star hovered over the Tree of Life in the Garden of Eden. When Adam sinned, the star disappeared from his sight and he was expelled from Eden. Adam tells Seth that he was deceived by Eve, and that Seth should take care not to let himself be deceived by her as well. Despite Eve’s complicity in his downfall, Adam admits that he did not sufficiently recognize how exalted he was above all of God’s other creations. Adam states that God was a. The passage from 5:11 that apparently describes the opponents of the Magi is confusing and may be corrupt, since it seems to lack an apodosis: “And those who did not wish to learn and distanced themselves from help because they saw our quiet way of life, that we prayed in silence, and we said our mysteries to them with honor.”

b. Although this “excerpt” probably contains some earlier Jewish traditions, there is no evidence that chapters 6–10 had a prior written existence independent of Rev. Magi. That said, its subject matter pertains very little to the narrative of Rev. Magi. From a narratological point of view, however, these chapters do serve the function of giving the impression of some passage of time between the first time that the present generation of Magi has performed their monthly ritual (in chap. 5) and the occasion upon which the star appears to them (in chap. 11).

indeed merciful in his punishment, since he did not take away from Adam the authority he possessed over all creation. In contrast, the snake was treated harshly by God, losing both its ability to speak and its feet.

Adam then predicts that the generations that come forth from him will be the venerable possessors of the ritual practices connected with the worship of the Father of Heavenly Majesty. Despite their great honor, however, they will rebel against the Father at the end of time.^a They shall blaspheme the Father, make idols, worship the sun and moon, and desire the pleasures of the world. Adam concludes his instructions to Seth by reiterating his own failure to understand the Father's ways, and encourages Seth and his generations to seek mercy from the Father when they stray. Seth writes down these instructions and other commandments of Adam in the books, which are then placed in the Cave of Treasures, and the reading of these books continues throughout the ages until the present generation of Magi.

The star's appearance to the Magi (chap. 11)

After this "flashback" to the instruction of Seth by Adam, Rev. Magi then resumes its narrative, with the present generation of Magi revealing that it was in their time that the star and its wondrous visions finally appeared. As is their custom, the Magi come together to wash in the Spring of Purification, but a pillar of light suddenly appears and hovers over the spring, terrifying the Magi. The star^b that the Magi see is unspeakably bright, far brighter than the sun, which becomes as faint as the daytime moon in the star's presence. Yet, it is only the Magi themselves who are able to see this star, since they alone are deemed worthy by the Father to hand down the prophecy through the generations.

The star descends to the Mountain of Victories (chap. 12)

The Magi finish bathing in their spring, climb the Mountain of Victories, and find the pillar of light standing in front of the Cave of Treasures. In their usual way, they kneel before the cave and pray in silence, praising God for the wonders they are seeing. Then, the heavens are opened, and two glorious men carry the star down from heaven and place it upon the pillar, filling the mountain with ineffable light. A small hand emerges from the pillar and star to comfort the terrified Magi. The star enters the cave, and a friendly voice bids the Magi to enter as well.

Epiphany in the Cave of Treasures (chap. 13)

The star gradually transforms itself into a small, humble human being, and says to the astonished Magi, "Peace to you." The being then begins a lengthy discourse about the form he has taken, what the Magi are to do, and what his mission upon the earth is. The being has taken the form of a humble human because it is impossible for humanity to see the true glory of the Son of the Father. He has humbled himself in this form and will even die upon a cross in order to bring salvation to humanity. The being instructs the Magi to a. Presumably, Adam refers here to the Magi, but this is never made explicit. The apparent prediction of the Magi's apostasy is found only here in Rev. Magi. It may be a coded reference to schisms in the community in which Rev. Magi was produced.

b. The Magi begin to describe the star in 11:5, but the star does not actually seem to appear in the narrative until 12:3, when it is carried down from heaven by two glorious men. There is a lacuna of one word in 11:3 before the phrase "in the form of an ineffable pillar of light," but "star" is probably not the missing word, since Rev. Magi seems to regard the star and the pillar of light as separate entities.

take the treasures deposited in the cave and to bring them in worship to the place^a where the being will be born in human form. Indeed, even as the being is speaking now with the Magi atop the Mountain of Victories, he is also present in the place where he will be born and in the presence of the Father. The being is actually everywhere in the entire world, because he is a ray of light from the Father of Majesty. The Father has sent him in order to fulfill everything spoken about him throughout the entire world, which includes both the prophets of Israel and the Magi's own books of revelation. The being will be a guide for the Magi on their miraculous journey to Jerusalem, where their prophecies will be fulfilled at last. The humble and frail human form that the being takes will cause the people of the world to do evil to him, but this will lead both to their own destruction and to the salvation that the Father intended.

The Magi realize Christ's polymorphy (chap. 14)

After the being has said these things to the Magi, they exit the cave with the treasures that were set aside for the coming of the star and begin to descend the mountain, rejoicing at all they have seen and heard. As they speak to one another about the revelations of the star, they realize that they each saw something different in the cave. One of the Magi saw a light with many images; another, an infant with indescribable forms; another, a youth with an otherworldly form; another, an ugly and humble human being; another, a cross and a person of light upon it, taking away the sins of the world; another saw the being powerfully descend into Sheol and receive worship from the dead; another, his ascension (from Sheol?) and his opening of the graves; and another, his ascension into heaven, accompanied by throngs of praising angels. The Magi rejoice greatly at the sharing of these numerous visions and the fact that they, among all the righteous people of the earth, were deemed worthy to see them.

The Father speaks to the Magi (chap. 15)

As the Magi rejoice, they suddenly hear a voice from the heavens that reveals itself eventually to be that of the Father himself. In a lengthy speech, the Father describes the manifold attributes of the Son.^b He tells the Magi that everything they have just experienced is merely "one drop of salvation from the house of majesty" (15:1), a tiny fraction of the Son's activities and attributes. The Son is the only being who knows the Father, and it is the Son himself who created everything in the heavenly and earthly worlds. He reveals the Father's secrets to his believers and he becomes a human being in order to destroy death and grant eternal life. He is the "bread of life," the "shepherd of truth," and the "great priest who by his blood absolves the worlds" (15:9). In spite of the Son's multiplicity of forms, he is nevertheless one with the Father.

The miraculous journey (chap. 16)

As the Father speaks to the Magi, the star is present with them also. The entire company^c gathers its provisions for the lengthy journey and the star's gifts, and sets out with the star

a. Two lacunae in 13:8 make it unclear whether or not the being specifically states the location of his birth (which is, of course, Bethlehem).

b. The detailed and extravagant speech of the Father is difficult to summarize succinctly; I have only mentioned some of its most noteworthy elements here.

c. In 16:2 we have the first of several instances of the Syriac term mashritha ("encampment") used to describe the Magi. Since this term is used in the Syriac versions of the NT to describe large groups of as their guide. In the extraordinary journey that follows, the Magi walk day and night in the light of the star, having no need of the sun or the moon. Despite their continuous travel, the Magi miraculously experience no fatigue. The star also provides a sort of dwelling-place for them to rest on the journey.^a Moreover, the Magi's provisions increase whenever the star's light shines upon them. Mountains and other rugged terrain are made level for the Magi by the star, they cross rivers by foot, and trample beasts and snakes underfoot. The star appears to the Magi in a multiplicity of forms throughout the journey, a journey that seems incredibly swift to the Magi despite the great distances.

The Magi in Jerusalem (chap. 17)

After a journey of unspecified duration, the Magi arrive in Jerusalem in the month of April. The star leads them into the city, but its inhabitants apparently cannot see the star and mistakenly regard these Magi as practicing "Magianism."^b The Magi inform the Jerusalemites about their prophecy and what they have seen, and Herod calls the "elders of the city" and asks where the Messiah and savior of the world will be born. As soon as the elders reveal that it will be in Bethlehem, the Magi see their star (again?), rejoice greatly, and set forth to Bethlehem. The Magi remark that the foolish scribes fail to believe what is written in their own sacred writings. They also state that Herod had asked them to return to tell him where the Messiah is found, but that the star told them not to obey him.^c

Arrival in Bethlehem (chap. 18)

When the Magi enter Bethlehem, they see a cave just like the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries in their own country. As with the star's initial epiphany, the pillar of light descends and stands in front of the cave, and the star with its accompanying angels descends upon the pillar. The star, angels, and pillar enter the cave, and a voice bids the Magi to enter. The Magi enter, place their crowns under the child's feet, kneel and worship before him, and offer their treasures to him.

Epiphany in the Bethlehem cave (chap. 19)

As with the epiphany in the Cave of Treasures, here again the luminous infant^d gives a lengthy discourse to the Magi. He declares that their ancient mysteries have now been completely fulfilled with his bringing of them from Shir to Bethlehem. He tells them that people, it may be that the earliest form of Rev. Magi envisioned the Magi as a group much larger than the list of twelve found in 2:3.

a. The author of Rev. Magi apparently does not regard the star's removal of the Magi's fatigue and its providing of a resting place for them as being contradictory.

b. The text at 17:2 reads: "On account of what cause have you come here? Perhaps because of the mysteries of your Magianism?" because they saw us looking up at heaven, and worshiping our sign, and praying to our guide, because they did not understand our mysteries, and they reckoned us as Magi." Obviously this is a quite difficult passage, since it implies that the central protagonists of the narrative are somehow not Magi. Presumably Rev. Magi is attempting to make a distinction between the Magi who are Seth's descendants from the land of Shir and more "common" magi who are simply astrologers and/or magicians.

c. There is no reference here or elsewhere in Rev. Magi to the "slaughter of the innocents" (Matt 2:16–18). The text simply states that Herod "was not worthy for the worship of the light that was born, because he was a dwelling of error . . ." (17:9). Whereas Matthew's Gospel is more concerned with the consequences that the arrival of the Magi and their star produce for the inhabitants of Judea, Rev. Magi is interested instead in the identity of the Magi and their star; so, its retelling of this part of the Matthean narrative seems almost perfunctory.

d. Unlike in chapter 13, there is no explicit narration here of the star's transformation into human form.

they will be his witnesses in the East, along with his disciples. The being will return to his Father when he has completed everything commanded by the Father, yet he is never actually separated from him. The being tells the Magi that when they see the sun darkened during the daytime, a great earthquake, and the dead rising from their graves, they will know that the end of the ages has come and they will see him ascending into the heavens.^a

Angels praise Christ (chap. 20)

As the star-child speaks with the Magi, the cave shines so much that it becomes like some other world. Suddenly, the voices of many (apparently invisible angelic) beings offer praises to him. They praise his creation of the worlds, his complete unity with the Father, and the salvation that he provides.

The commissioning of the Magi (chap. 21)

At the sound of these angelic praises, the Magi fall to the ground terrified. The star-child puts his hand upon them forcefully and comforts them. He tells them that as powerful as these angelic beings might seem to the Magi due to their human frailty, they are insignificant to him. There are, in fact, other things that even the angels are incapable of hearing or speaking about. Because the Magi's ancient mysteries have been completed, the star-child now dismisses them to return to their own land. They will be witnesses to him along with his disciples, and once he has ascended to heaven, he will send disciples to them. The Father and the Son are completely inseparable.^b The Son has been sent to redeem the world from Adam's sin, and will give eternal life to the Magi through water and the giving of the Holy Spirit. Unseen voices praise the Son once more.

The Magi meet Mary and Joseph (chap. 22)

The Magi go forth from the cave to begin the return journey to their homeland. Joseph and Mary, who were appointed to be the parents of the star-child, go out with the Magi.^c They see the light traveling along with the Magi, the same light that had been born in their house, and so Mary and Joseph are upset by the prospect that the Magi are taking their child away from them.

The Magi's revelation to Mary (chap. 23)

The Magi praise Mary for being chosen to give birth to the Son in human form. They tell her that her child is still inside of her^d and is in her house, even though he is also present with the Magi. This great gift does not belong to Mary alone, but is for the salvation of all the heavenly and earthly realms. The Magi urge her to look up and see that he is present a. The events predicted by the star-child seem to be the Passion, particularly its Matthean version with the earthquake and the raising of the saints (cf. Matt 27:51–53). It is curious, however, that this prediction never actually comes to pass in the form of Rev. Magi that we possess. If the Judas Thomas episode is indeed an interpolation, it is possible that the fulfillment of this prediction did actually take place in the narrative, but was obliterated when the Judas Thomas redactional material was added.

b. Much of the content of this speech is slightly rephrased from the speech of the star-child in chapter 19 (and to some degree, the speeches in chaps. 13 and 15).

c. The appearance of Mary and Joseph is quite abrupt: were they in the cave with the Magi, or were they simply in the general vicinity?

d. It is surprising that the text claims that the child is still inside of Mary, since the birth would seem to have already taken place. But this is best interpreted as another case of Rev. Magi's strong insistence on Christ's omnipresence throughout the entire world.

throughout the entire creation, and he appears in every land, since he has been sent for the redemption of all human beings.

Mary speaks to Christ (chap. 24)

After the Magi explain to Mary and Joseph the true nature of their child, the couple returns to their house.^a They find their luminous child laughing and speaking about his great mysteries. Mary and Joseph worship him, and Mary praises the child who has been given to her because of her obedience. She explains to the child that she had supposed that he was going with the Magi because of the gifts that they had offered him.

Christ blesses Mary (chap. 25)

The child praises Mary for being worthy to conceive the one who would bring salvation into the world; her deed will bestow blessing and remembrance upon her in this world, and reward in the world to come. She has redeemed Eve and her offspring, and all the worlds have peace because of her. He is now turning to his believers throughout the world, for whom he will fulfill everything promised by the Father.

The return journey home (chap. 26)

During the journey back to Shir, the star again appears to the Magi, and they worship it. The star tells the Magi that he is everywhere, and that he is even greater than the sun. When the time comes to eat, the Magi see that their provisions are now even more full than when they departed from their homeland, a miracle that causes them fear and awe. As they eat their provisions, the visions and wonders that they see in the presence of their guide do not resemble one another.^b

The Magi address the people of Shir (chap. 27)

The Magi complete their journey back to Shir under the guidance of the star, and when they arrive at the border of their land, their families and many other inhabitants of the land come to greet them and marvel at their health despite the length of their journey. The Magi narrate for the people the journey that they undertook. They mention the visions of the star that accompanied them, their visit to Jerusalem, and the epiphany of the star-child at Bethlehem in the cave that resembled the Cave of Treasures. When they began the journey back to their homeland, the Magi say, they found their provisions to be more full than what they initially had brought, and now these overflowing bags of provisions are sitting before the people of Shir. The Magi invite the people to partake of these provisions, because when they eat them, they too will be able to experience the visions and revelations that the Magi have seen.

a. In chapters 24 and 25, which take place in the house of Mary and Joseph, there is no indication that the Magi are present. If they are not, this would be the only interruption in the first-person narrative perspective of the Magi between the formal commencement of first-person narration in 3:6 (or possibly 2:6) and the clear termination of first-person narration in 28:4, just prior to the beginning of the Judas Thomas material.

b. This statement that the Magi have diverse visions is similar to what was stated about the epiphany in the Cave of Treasures in chapter 14. However, the fact that these visions take place for the Magi in the context of eating their provisions foreshadows the visions of the inhabitants of Shir in chapter 28, which are clearly connected with the people's eating of the same food (though the Magi's visions here are not expressly said to be the result of the eating of the provisions).

The people eat the Magi's food (chap. 28)

Some of the people eat from the Magi's provisions, and as soon as they do, they begin rejoicing because of the visions that they immediately see. One of the people sees a great light unlike anything in the world; another sees God giving birth to himself; another, a star of light that darkens the sun; another, a man uglier than any other human being, saving the world through his blood and his appearance; another, a lamb hanging upon a tree of life, redeeming the world through his blood; and another, a pillar of light diving down inside the earth, with the dead rising and worshipping it. The ones who eat of the provisions see many other things beyond these, and the people of the entire land come to hear the revelations of the Magi.^a Day by day, the revelations increase, all sorts of miracles are performed by the Magi, and the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ grows in the land of Shir.

Judas Thomas arrives in Shir (chap. 29)

The faith increases even more when the apostle Judas Thomas arrives in the land, sent there by the Lord. When the Magi hear of his arrival, which the star-child had promised to them, they go to meet him. Thomas^b rejoices when they come, and after they tell him about the journey that they underwent, he recognizes "that the gift of our Lord had overflowed upon them" (29:4). He tells them, in turn, about his own experiences with Christ during the Lord's earthly ministry, including his ever-changing appearances. When the Magi hear this, they glorify God and ask Thomas to give them "the seal of our Lord," baptism (29:5).

The hymn of Judas Thomas (chap. 30)

Early on Sunday, while still night, Thomas takes the Magi to a spring of water. He takes oil and sings a hymn over it. He praises Christ for the gift of the oil, which gives salvation and takes away darkness, and he praises the oil, which hovers over the water as the Holy Spirit did. Using a number of epithets for Christ, Thomas asks him to be present and come upon the believers for their salvation.

The Magi receive the Eucharist and commission to preach (chap. 31)

After singing this hymn, Thomas baptizes them, and when they come out of the water, a luminous child descends to them from heaven. The Magi fall upon the ground, terrified, and when they stand up, the child has become a glorious young man. He takes a loaf of bread, gives praise, and breaks it, giving it first to Thomas and then to them. The being then ascends into heaven once more. Thomas glorifies the amazing and diverse images in which this being appears, stating that none of the names that he is called is his true name, which only he and the Father know. Thomas thanks the Son for enduring all the suffering on humanity's behalf, despite "being exalted above all sufferings and being a kinsperson of that one who does not suffer" (31:6). The Magi echo Thomas's praise, confessing that the Son's majesty is beyond their ability to describe. As they give thanks and praise, a great a. At 28:4 the first-person narration definitively ceases, the Magi are spoken about here as if they are new characters not previously introduced into the narrative, and we have the first use of the familiar Christian terminology "our Lord." The text reads: "And there was great joy in the entire land of the East, and the nobles, and the poor, and women, and children from the entire land were gathered together in the love of our Lord before those nobles who were called Magi."

b. The text refers to this individual mostly as "Judas." Because the name "Thomas" is more familiar to many readers, I use that name here instead.

many are added to the faith day by day. Thomas tells the Magi that they must fulfill the commandment of the Lord to preach the gospel throughout the entire world, just as the other apostles have done.

The preaching of the Magi (chap. 32)

The Magi go out from there, preach about the coming of Jesus Christ, and perform miracles and healings through his name. They preach to everyone, urging all to flee from the “fearsome judgment of fire that will come suddenly to purify the entire earth from error” (32:2). By faith in Jesus Christ, all will be delivered from the fire and shall enter the eternal rest prepared for believers in his kingdom. At the end of the Magi’s missionary speech, the compiler of Chron. Zuq. adds, “The story about the Magi and their gifts has finished” (32:4).

MANICHAEISM AND THE REVELATION OF THE MAGI:

SYRIAC “CHRISTIANITIES” IN LATE ANTIQUE MESOPOTAMIA

TIMOTHY PETTIPIECE

CARLETON UNIVERSITY (OTTAWA)

ABSTRACT:

The recently published Syriac Revelation of the Magi has proven to be a remarkable addition to the corpus of early Christian apocryphal literature. This unique amplification of the traditional Nativity narrative recounts the Magi’s encounter with a “star-child” who leads them from their homeland in the far east to the birth of Jesus at Nazareth, where the polymorphic nature of Christ is revealed along with his message of universal salvation. Interestingly, the Revelation of the Magi contains several important points of contact with early Manichaean texts. This paper will examine what those shared motifs might tell us about the common milieu out of which both Manichaeism and the Revelation of the Magi might have emerged.

INTRODUCTION

Over-familiarity with the biblical narrative often obscures the strangeness of the tradition, attested by the Gospel of Matthew, that the infant Jesus was visited by a group of Persian priests. Stranger still, if the term magos is interpreted as “sorcerer.” Either way, the idea that the birth of Jesus was attended by a group of travelling magicians or Zoroastrian clergy is an odd detail to be included in the Christian foundation narrative. Unfortunately, Matthew’s account is short on specifics, other than that they were led to Bethlehem from “the east” by some astral event—an equally exotic motif—and that they brought with them some rather impractical gifts. Over time, however, Christian tradition has tried to fill in the blanks. Centuries of commentary and apocryphal mythmaking have transformed the magoi of the gospel account into the “Three Wise Men” (or “Kings”) prominently featured in nativity scenes and Christmas carols throughout many parts of the Christian world.

In fact, the tradition of the magi developed in two divergent directions. Whereas western Christian tradition saw them fashioned into Balthazar, Melchior, and Gaspar—kings from Arabia, Persia, and India respectively—eastern Christians identified twelve kings from “beyond the land of Nod.” One of the “apocryphal” texts that attests to this eastern tradition is the Syriac Revelation of the Magi.² Although conventionally dated to sometime between the late 2nd and early 4th century CE³ and associated with the city of Edessa,⁴ the origins of the Revelation of the Magi remain largely obscure. We find it preserved in the 8th-century Syriac Chronicle of Zuqnin,⁵ as part of a world history.

¹ While the utility of this term has been contested, it continues to be used (albeit reluctantly) by various scholars as a way to demarcate an important body of early Christian literature. For an extensive discussion see New Testament Apocrypha: More Canonical Scriptures, Volume I, ed. Tony Burke and Brent Landau (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2016), xxii–xxiii.

² Brent Landau has done a great service to the field of Early Christian Studies by bringing increased attention to this hitherto practically unknown Syriac text. Landau’s Harvard doctoral dissertation, under the supervision of François Bovon, “The Sages and the Star-Child: An Introduction to the Revelation of the Magi, An Ancient Christian Apocryphon” (PhD diss.,

Harvard University, 2008) contains a re-edited Syriac text along with English translation and contextual commentary. A “popular” translation was published in 2010 by HarperCollins, Revelation of the Magi: The Lost Tale of the Wise Men’s Journey to Bethlehem, while a summary of the text has appeared in New Testament Apocrypha: More Canonical Scriptures, Volume I, 19–38.

³ The text appears to have undergone several redactional stages, such as the possible later addition of the Judas Thomas epilogue (New Testament Apocrypha I, 20–23). A much shorter version of the story is found in a 5th-century Latin commentary on Matthew, known as the Opus Imperfectum. While some scholars, such as Duchesne-Guillemin, believed that both works drew on a common source (“Die Magier in Bethlehem und Mithras als Erlöser?” Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morganländischen Gesellschaft 111, no. 2 (1961): 472), Landau has argued that the Opus Imperfectum is an abbreviation of a 4th-century Greek version of the Revelation of the Magi, with the original Syriac version dated even earlier to the 3rd or 2nd century CE (New Testament Apocrypha I, 21–22). Moreover, thematic affinities with other early Christian apocrypha texts also point to a 2nd–3rd century context (New Testament Apocrypha I, 22).

⁴ Landau has asserted a partial Edessene association for the text (New Testament Apocrypha I, 23), but this is conjectural. It has become customary in scholarship to highlight the role of Edessa in the emergence of Christianity in Mesopotamia, largely due to the success of the Abgar legend, and to associate early Syriac literary traditions with that locale. This view, however, has been problematized by David Taylor (“The Coming of Christianity to Mesopotamia,” in The Syriac World, ed. Daniel King [New York: Routledge, 2019], 68–87), who highlights the historical unreliability of the traditional apostolic origin stories and advocates for a more nuanced reconstruction of the origins of Syriac Christianity. As for the Revelation of the Magi, there is no internal evidence that specifically links its origins to Edessa, other than the emphasis on Thomas, which itself appears to be a later addition.

⁵ The text was inserted into the world-chronicle by the author/compiler with no commentary (Landau, Sages and the Star-Child, 3–5).

This text is remarkable in several ways, not only does it offer an extensive and compelling amplification of a key part of the Nativity story, but it also presents a decidedly pluralistic concept of revelation, prophecy, and divine truth.

According to the Revelation's account, the magi form part of a long lineage of initiates from "land of Shir" (2.4) in the far east,⁶ who have preserved primordial revelations from Adam and Seth in a remote mountain retreat. Praying in silence, they await the appearance of a brilliant star that will outshine the heavens and lead them to further divine knowledge. When the star finally appears after many generations, it reveals itself as a polymorphic saviour and leads the magi on a fantastic journey westward to Bethlehem just in time for the birth of Jesus.⁷ After their return home, the apostle Judas Thomas arrives and explains to them the true Christological meaning of their experience. The magi are then baptized and given an apostolic commission of their own.⁸

In-depth study of the Revelation of the Magi has only just begun and its relationship with other late antique religious traditions has yet to be fully explored. Who wrote it and for what sort of audience or community are questions that remain unanswered. As a starting point for further contextualization, it should be noted that there are a number of passages in the text that resonate with terminological and theological motifs found in the surviving corpus of Manichaean literature. As such, this article will argue that several key elements found in both the Revelation of the Magi and Manichaean discourse are indicators of their emergence from a shared historical and religious milieu within early Syriac Christianity.

⁶ For perceptions of the far east in late antique literature, including the Revelation of the Magi, see Annette Yoshiko Reed, "Beyond the Land of Nod: Syriac Images of Asia and the Historiography of 'The West,'" History of Religions 49, no. 1 (August 2009): 48-87.

⁷ Early Christians have put forward a variety of explanations for the appearance of a star at the birth of Jesus (see Nicola Denzey, "A New Star on the Horizon: Astral Christologies and Stellar Debates in Early Christian Discourse," in Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World, ed. Scott Noegel et al [Pennsylvania: Pennsylvania State University Press, 2003], 207-221), although none are as theologically developed as what is presented in the Revelation of the Magi.

⁸ See Landau's full translation in Revelation of the Magi and summary in New Testament Apocrypha 30-38.

THE MAGI IN MANICHAEAN LITERATURE

Even though the figure of Zoroaster (Zarathustra) is considered to be an important part of the Manichaean prophetic lineage—along with the Buddha and Jesus—and Mani is sometimes presented as debating Zoroastrian doctrines,⁹ the figure of the magus is generally despised in early Manichaean texts due to the role played by members of the Zoroastrian priesthood in the execution of Mani¹⁰ and the persecution of his early movement. According to the Narrative of the Crucifixion, from the Manichaean Homilies codex:

When the Magi noticed how (people) asked: ‘Who, indeed, is this person who has entered (the city)?,’ [(and how others) answered] them: ‘It is Manichaios,’—when they heard [these (words), they shook] and were filled with wrath. They went and accused [him] before Kardel (καρδελ). Kardel himself told it to the assessor (συγκρατορος). Then Kardel and the assessor went [and proclaimed] the accusations to the counsellor

⁹ See Paul Dilley, “Also Schrieb Zarathustra? Mani As Interpreter of the ‘Law of Zarades’” in Iain Gardner, Jason BeDuhn, and Paul Dilley, Mani at the Court of the Persian Kings: Studies on the Chester Beatty “Kephalaia” Codex (Leiden: Brill, 2015), 101–135.

¹⁰ See W. B. Henning, “Mani’s Last Journey,” Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 10, no. 4 (1942): 941–953; see also Iain Gardner, “Mani’s Last Days,” in Gardner, BeDuhn, and Dilley, Mani at the Court of the Persian Kings, 159–208.

(Psalm-Book 15.7) and are called “impious men, mad and godless” (ἡλῶντες ἐτλαβὲ ἡλιτνοῦτε) (Psalm-Book 15.11).¹⁴

Moreover, on a more scriptural level, Manichaeans had little to no interest in the Nativity story, since they generally denied the physical birth of Jesus. In the 4th century CE anti-Manichaean disputation known as the Acts of Archelaus, Mani is presented as writing to a pious Mesopotamian man named Marcellus in order to win him as a convert to his new religion, saying:

I am completely amazed at how they can dare to call God the maker and creator of Satan and his evil deeds. Would that their vacuity had reached only this far and they did not say that the only-begotten Christ, ‘who descended from the Father’s bosom,’ was the son of a woman called Mary, and was born of flesh and blood and all the other pollutions of women” (Acts of Archelaus V).¹⁵

This position is also affirmed by the “Psalms to Jesus” from the Manichaean Psalm-Book, which state that Jesus “was not born in a womb corrupted” (Psalm-Book 53.23).¹⁶ As such, in surviving sources, Manichaean authors display no real interest in the magi as playing a role in the story of birth of Jesus,¹⁷ other than for polemical purposes. For them, Jesus has a much larger function in their cosmogonic myth as an avatar of the ruler of ¹⁴ The Psalm-Book further casts them as “brothers of the Jews, the murderers of Christ” (Psalm-Book 15.11-12) in an effort to make the death of Mani more closely resemble that of Jesus.

¹⁵ Hegemonius, Acta Archelai (The Acts of Archelaus), trans. Mark Vermes (Louvain: Brepols, 2001), 42; Hegemonius, Acta Archelai, GCS 16 (Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs, 1906).

¹⁶ C.R.C. Allberry, A Manichaean Psalm-Book, Part II (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1938).

¹⁷ On the origins of Jesus in the Manichaean myth see Majella Franzmann, Jesus in the Manichaean Writings (London: T&T Clark, 2003), 51-59.

the light realm and his chosen champion against the powers of darkness. Augustine, in fact, in his dispute with the North African Manichaean Bishop Faustus, referenced the Magi as he mocked this Manichaean notion of the cosmic Christ:

You are not ashamed, however, to speak ill of the star by which the Magi were led to adore the infant Christ. And yet you do not locate your false Christ, the son of your false first man, under a star that bears witness to him, but you say that he is imprisoned in all the stars. For you believe that he was mingled with the princes of darkness in that war by which that first man of yours fought against the nation of darkness, with the result that the world was fashioned out of the very princes of darkness who were captured in such a mingling. Hence, these sacrilegious ravings also force you to say that Christ—no longer your savior but someone for you to save when you eat those things and belch—is confined and imprisoned not only in heaven and in all the stars but also in the earth and in all the things that are born from it (Contra Faustum, 2.5).¹⁸

Unbeknownst to Augustine, the astral messiah he ridicules here is not entirely dissimilar to the saviour figure portrayed in the Revelation of the Magi.

MANICHAEAN MOTIFS IN THE REVELATION OF THE MAGI

Given the apparent lack of interest that Manichaeans would have had in the Nativity story generally and the “magi” specifically, it seems surprising that a text such as the Revelation of the Magi which seeks to amplify and expand upon their story should contain elements that appear to resonate strongly with several important concepts¹⁹ from Manichaean tradition.²⁰

¹⁸ Augustine, Answer to Faustus, a Manichean, trans. Roland Teske, The Works of Saint Augustine: A Translation for the 21st Century (NY: New City Press, 2007), 73-74; Sancti Aureli Augustini, ed. Zycha, CSEL 25.1 (Vienna, 1891), 258.

1. Father of Greatness

The first element that stands out is the terminology used by the author of the Revelation of the Magi to describe God. According to the text, as the magi reflected upon their ancient ¹⁹ This comparative exercise is based on the fact that both the Revelation of the Magi and early Manichaean texts derive from the same geographic and linguistic milieu, as well as being more or less contemporaneous with each other. As mentioned above, the Revelation of the Magi is thought to have been composed originally in Syriac sometime during the 3rd-4th centuries CE, whereas the earliest expressions of Manichaean theological discourse would have been in Syriac (the language of Mani himself) during that same period. Some of the earliest surviving Manichaean literature in Greek and Coptic shows significant traces of this Syriac substratum (particularly the “Psalms of Thomas” and the Cologne Mani Codex, see below). In fact, the Manichaean material from Kellis contains multilingual texts including Coptic-Syriac glossaries (Iain Gardner, Kellis Literary Texts, Vol. I [Oxford: Oxbow, 1996], 101-131). For these reasons, as well as the limits of the author’s linguistic abilities, this study is restricted primarily to Manichaean texts in Coptic and Greek. Further work would be needed to trace these elements further afield in Manichaean literature from Central Asia.

²⁰ It should be noted, also, that this study seeks to compare a single text (Revelation of the Magi) to a parallel religious “discourse” attested by multiple (often fragmentary) sources. Even though Mani went to great lengths to record his teachings in writing, this “canonical” tradition has been mostly lost. The theological framework articulated by Mani must be pieced together from a variety of sources, some of which show significant evidence of redaction and development by later Manichaean interpreters (see Timothy Pettipiece, Pentadic Redaction in the Manichaean Kephalaia [Leiden: Brill, 2009]), as well as a degree of regional variation (see Jason BeDuhn, The Manichaean Body in Discipline and Ritual [Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press, 2000], 1-24). At most we can speak of early Manichaean tradition(s), as opposed to what Mani himself may or may not have specifically taught. Still the proximity of these sources to one another warrants juxtaposition.

ritual tradition, they knelt before the “Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries” (ܩܠܒܬܐ ܕܡܝܫܬܐ ܕܡܝܫܬܐ ܕܡܝܫܬܐ) and “prayed and worshiped in silence, without a sound, to the Father of that heavenly majesty that is ineffable and infinite forever” (Revelation of the Magi 5.7).²¹ Aside from the (likely incidental) fact that Mani is said to have composed scriptural texts known as the Treasure of Life and the Mysteries,²² the Syriac phrase translated by Landau as “Father of Heavenly Majesty”²³ can also be rendered as “Father of Greatness” (ܐܬܪܐ ܕܡܫܬܐ) (Revelation of the Magi 5.7). As it happens, the “Father of Greatness” is the primary name for the ruler of the Manichaean light-realm used in Syriac, Greek, and Coptic Manichaean texts.²⁴ A similar figure, the “Lord of Greatness,” (marā d-rabuta)

²¹ Landau, Revelation of the Magi, 43.

²² According to John C. Reeves, terms like treasury and treasure of life “pepper the lexicon of Syro-Mesopotamian gnosis” (“Reconsidering the ‘Prophecy of Zardūšt,’” in A Multiform Heritage: Studies in Early Judaism and Christianity in Honor of Robert A. Kraft, ed. Benjamin G. Wright (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1999), 167-182) as commonly shared motifs.

²³ A slight variant occurs at Revelation of the Magi 3.5: “Greatness of the Father” (ܐܬܪܐ ܕܡܫܬܐ).

²⁴ Sebastian Brock has already signaled the importance of this association in 2006 (“An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil,” Studia Patristica 41 [2006]: 12), although without further comment. See Theodore bar Khonai’s Syriac account of the Manichaean cosmogony in Book of Scholia (Liber scholiorum, ed. Addai Scher; CSCO 69; [Louvain: Imprimerie orientale L. Durbecq, 1954], 313.15). Also attested in Greek as ὁ πατήρ τοῦ μεγέθους in the Seven Chapters Against Manichaeans 3 (see Lieu, Fox, and Sheldon Greek and Latin Sources on Manichaean Cosmogony and Ethics, Corpus Fontium Manichaeorum, Series Subsidia VI [Turnhout: Brepols, 2010], 119), and as ⲡⲓⲱⲧⲉⲣ ⲛⲧⲉ ⲧⲙⲛⲧⲛⲁⲗ in Coptic sources, including the (as yet) unpublished portions of Mani’s Living Gospel from the Synaxeis codex (Wolf-Peter Funk, personal communication). See Aloïs van Tongerloo, “The Father of Greatness,” in Gnosisforschung und Religionsgeschichte. Festschrift für Kurt Rudolph zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. Holger Preißler und Hubert Seiwert (Marburg: diagonal-Verlag, 1994), 329-342 and Paul Van Lindt, The Names of Manichaean Mythological Figures: A Comparative is also mentioned in Mandaean texts,²⁵ and as there is a close relationship between Manichaean and Mandaean literature, Geo Widengren suggested that there must be some link between the Revelation of the Magi and those traditions.²⁶

While the use of the title “Father of Greatness” is most often associated with Manichaeism, it is not unthinkable that such an epithet formed part of a shared Aramaic religious vocabulary in late antique Mesopotamia, as it is also attested in a handful of post-Manichaean sectarian theologies.²⁷ Still, given the title’s close association with Manichaean discourse it is difficult to imagine it being used by an author who wasn’t sympathetic to Mani’s ideas or seeking to appeal to them in some way.

Similarly, the Revelation of the Magi also refers to God as the “Lord of All” (ܐܠܗܐ ܕܐܡܪܐ) (32.3), a title which is found in Manichaean sources (“Lord of All” [παραῖς] ὁ παντοκράτωρ) as an alternate name for the “Father of Greatness” (Homilies 47.13-14; Kephalaia 40.10; 156.6). Once again, it is difficult to determine if this reflects a distinctively Manichaean usage or is derived from a common theological lexicon.

Study on Terminology in the Coptic Sources (Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1992), 3-16.

²⁵ See Mandaean Book of John 66.13; 67.41 (Charles G. Häberl and James F. McGrath, eds., The Mandaean Book of John: Text and Translation [Berlin: De Gruyter, 2020]).

²⁶ Iranisch-semitische Kulturbegegnung in parthischer Zeit (Köln: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1960), 74.

²⁷ Theodore bar Khonai describes the teaching of a certain John of Apamea (not the influential monastic spiritual author), in which the sole God is referred to as the “Father of Greatness” (Book of Scholia 11.76) (Théodore bar Koni: Livre des scholies (recension de Séert) I. Mimrè I-V, trans. Robert Hespel and René Draguet, CSCO, Scriptores syri 187 (Louvain: Peeters, 1981), 248. He also presents the doctrine of the (5th cent CE?) sectarian leader Batai, who promoted a kind of modified dualism whereby Good and Evil were derived from the “Father of Greatness” (Book of Scholia 11.85 (Théodore bar Koni, 256-257).

2. Revealed Books and Primordial Prophets

The Revelation of the Magi also puts an important emphasis on revealed knowledge being recorded in books. Seth, we are told, set his wisdom “down in a book” and, in fact, “from him a book appeared in the world for the first time” (3.2-3). Noah, in turn, preserved the “books of Seth about the majesty (i.e. greatness) of the Father” (3.5 ܠܫܬܐ ܠܡܠܟܐ) and took them into the Ark. These books were then subsequently preserved in the ancient tradition of the magi (3.6).

With this idea, too, we find parallels in Manichaean tradition. Whereas Mani is said to have included Buddha, Zoroaster, and Jesus in his list of prophetic predecessors, some early Manichaean texts also insert a pre-Noachid lineage going back to the biblical figure of Seth(el).²⁸ For example, in Kephalaia Chapter 1 “On the Coming of the Apostle” Mani is presented as articulating a sequence of apostolic predecessors “from Sethel [the first] born son of Adam up to Enosh, along with [Enoch]; [from] Enoch [up] to Sem [the] son of [Noah ...” (Kephalaia 12.10-12).²⁹ Seth is also listed in the Manichaean Psalm-Book as part of a litany of biblical and apostolic figures ²⁸ This sort of biblical lineage is found in a wide array of Manichaean and anti-Manichaean sources, see Michel Tardieu, Le manichéisme (Paris: Presses universitaires de France, 1981), 20-22. Moreover, the idea of “Sethian” gnosis is a well-established trope in apocryphal literature, see A. F. J. Klijn, Seth in Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic Traditions (Leiden: Brill, 1977). A discussion of a so-called “Prayer of Sethel” forms the basis of Kephalaia chapter 10 (42.24-43.21). This connection to Seth is particularly notable in light of the fact that the “abbreviated” version of the Revelation of the Magi story, found in the Opus Imperfectum, is said to be derived from an “apocryphal book in the name of Seth” (Alexander Toepel, “The Apocryphon of Seth,” in Old Testament Pseudepigrapha: More Noncanonical Scriptures, vol. 1, ed. Bauckham, Davila, and Panayotov [Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2013], 33-39).

²⁹ Polotsky, H.-J. and A. Böhlig, Kephalaia (I): 1. Hälfte [Lieferung 1-10]. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1940. See also the litany from Psalm-Book 179.

embodying the ideal of “endurance” (ΣΥΓΓΟΜΟΝΗ) (142.4), and there is even a passage from a so-called Sethian book quoted in the hagiographical account of Mani’s life preserved in the Greek Cologne Mani Codex, where Seth(el) recounts a vision of a luminous entity: “I opened my eyes and I saw before my face an [angel] whose [brightness] I could not describe [for he was] nothing other than lightning” (CMC 50).³⁰ Earlier in the same text Adam is quoted as receiving a command from “Balsamos, the greatest Angel of Light” to “receive from me and write these things I reveal to you on the purest papyrus which is not perishable or liable to worms” (CMC 49). A similar episode occurs in the Revelation of the Magi, where we are told:

Adam instructed Seth his son about ... [and about the revelation] of the light of the star and about its glory, because he [saw] it in the Garden of Eden when it descended and came to rest over the Tree of Life; and it illuminated the entire (garden) before Adam transgressed against the commandment of the Father of heavenly majesty (i.e. greatness) (ܐܕܡܐܢܐ ܕܐܬܪܐ ܕܗܝܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܠܐ ܕܥܠܐ) (6.2) (ܐܬܪܐ ܕܗܝܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܠܐ ܕܥܠܐ).

As such, in both the Cologne Mani Codex and the Revelation of the Magi we have accounts of revelatory encounters with luminous beings in the Garden of Eden which are then recorded in primordial holy books. In both contexts these episodes are used as a means to establish their protagonists’ divine authority as part of a chain of true prophecy traced back to the biblical forefathers Adam and Seth.³¹

³⁰ Iain Gardner and Samuel Lieu, Manichaean Texts from the Roman Empire (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2004), 55; Albert Henrichs and Ludwig Koenen, Der Kölner Mani-Kodex: Über das Werden seines Liebes (Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1988), 32-33.

³¹ Nicholas Baker-Brian, Manichaeism: An Ancient Faith Rediscovered (London: T&T Clark, 2011), 50-51.

3. Polymorph Messiah

Mani's notion of prophetic succession was also linked to the periodic appearance of an entity he called the "Light-Mind" (essentially a sort of Manichaean Logos) via "apostles of light" in various times and places. Most notably, Mani is quoted as stating in a discourse given to Sassanian King Shapur I that "Apostles of God have constantly brought wisdom and deeds in successive times."³² Similarly, the Manichaean Kephalaia equates "all the apostles who are on occasion sent to the world" to farmers" (9.24-25), comparing their periodic appearance with the agricultural cycle of sowing and reaping. According to John C. Reeves, Mani would have likely inherited this idea of a cyclical apostolate from the Elchasaites, a Mesopotamian sect among whom he is reported to have spent his early life.³³ According to the 3rd-century CE Christian heresiological treatise attributed to Hippolytus,³⁴ certain devotees of a Book of Elchasai:

do not confess one Christ. Rather, they believe in a single Christ above who transmigrates numerous times into numerous bodies and was recently incarnated in Jesus. Likewise, he is sometimes born from God, while at other times he becomes spirit. Sometimes he is born from a virgin, at other times not. Later on, he continues his never-ending transmigration into bodies and is manifested in many different bodies at various times.

³² As quoted by 11th century Islamic scholar al-Biruni in his Chronology of Ancient Nations (see John C. Reeves, Prolegomena to a History of Islamicate Manichaeism (Sheffield: Equinox, 2011), 102.

³³ Tardieu, Le manichéisme, 9-12; Baker-Brian, Manichaeism, 47-48; Samuel N. C. Lieu, Manichaeism in the Later Roman Empire and Medieval China (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1992), 35-50.

³⁴ Hippolytus' authorship is disputed. See Refutation of All Heresies, trans. M. David Litwa, Writings from the Greco-Roman World 40 (Atlanta: SBL Press, 2016), xxxiii-xlii.

They also use incantations and baptisms in addition to their confession by the elements. They plume themselves on their knowledge of astronomy, astrology, and magic; and they call themselves “knowers of the future” (Refutation of All Heresies 10.29.2).³⁵

In the 4th cent. CE, Epiphanius similarly stated that the Elchasaites believed Christ “was created and that he appears time and again...he was formed for the first time in Adam and he puts off the body of Adam and assumes it again whenever he wished” (Panarion 53.1.8).³⁶ The same idea is also found in the Pseudo-Clementine Homilies, which state that Christ “changed his forms along with his names from age to age” (ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς αἰῶνος ἅμα τοῖς ὀνόμασιν μορφὰς ἀλλάσσων τὸν αἰῶνα) (3.20),³⁷ and where the idea of the polymorphic “True Prophet” is traced back to what some scholars have described as a “Jewish-Christian” source document from the 3rd century CE.³⁸

The idea that the saviour has appeared periodically in many forms³⁹ also fits well with what we find in the Revelation of the

³⁵ Refutation of All Heresies, 739. See John C. Reeves, Heralds of That Good Realm: Syro-Mesopotamian Gnosis and Jewish Traditions (Leiden: Brill, 1996), 8; A. F. J. Klijn and G. J. Reinink, Patristic Evidence for Jewish-Christian Sects (Leiden: Brill, 1973), 122-123

³⁶ Reeves, Heralds of That Good Realm, 8; Klijn and Reinink, Patristic Evidence, 196-197.

³⁷ Rehm, ed. Die Pseudoklementinen I: Homilien (Berlin: Akademie, 1992), 64.

³⁸ See New Testament Apocrypha, Vol. 2, ed. Schneemelcher, (Louisville: WJK Press, 2003), 488-492, where the resonances with Manichaean and Mandaean tradition are noted.

³⁹ Landau discusses the topic of the polymorphic Christ and universal revelation in his dissertation on the Revelation of the Magi, but only engages with a small sample of possible cognate traditions (mostly biblical) (“Sages and the Star-Child,” 249-255). A survey of (the fairly extensive) evidence from both canonical and non-canonical sources is provided by Paul Foster, “Polymorphic Christology: Its Origins and Development in Early Christianity,” Journal of Theological Studies 58 (2007): 66-99.

market the text to the religiously interested reading public.⁴³ Yet is such a perspective really that unique or was it part of the text's original environment?

4. Thomas Twins

The apostle Thomas, it should be noted, is already well-known for his many Manichaean associations,⁴⁴ and the polymorphic Christ⁴⁵ is explicitly attested in Manichaean tradition. For example, the Manichaean Psalm-Book states: "You assumed different forms until you had visited all races" (42.31). In this context, Mani himself is understood as being the last of those ⁴³ The back of the dust-jacket to the mass-market edition published by HarperCollins includes quotations from well-known scholars of early Christianity such as Marvin Meyer and John Dominic Crossan about the "astonishing," "theologically sophisticated," "unique," and "radical depth" of the text. The work no doubt appeals to those seeking ancient precedent for an inclusivist and pluralist approach to Christianity in a modern context.

⁴⁴ Not only are there "Thomas Psalms" in the Manichaean Psalm-Book, but strong associations with both the Gospel of Thomas (Wolf-Peter Funk, "Einer aus Tausend, zwei aus Zehntausend: Zitate aus dem Thomasevangelium in den koptischen Manichaica," in For the Children, Perfect Instruction: Studies in Honor of Hans-Martin Schenke, ed. Bethge et al. [Leiden: Brill, 2002], 67-94; J. Kevin Coyle, "The Gospel of Thomas in Manichaeism?" in Colloque international L'Évangile selon Thomas et les textes de Nag Hammadi, Québec, 29-31 mai 2003, ed. Louis Painchaud and Paul-Hubert Poirier [Québec: Les Presses de l'Université Laval / Louvain: Éditions Peeters, 2007], 75-91; Paul Allan Mirecki, "Coptic Manichaean Psalm 278 and the Gospel of Thomas 37," in Manichaica selecta, ed. A. van Tongerloo and S. Giversen [Louvain, 1991], 243-262) and the Acts of Thomas (A. F. J. Klijn, "The So-Called Hymn of the Pearl [Acts of Thomas ch. 108-113]," Vigiliae Christianae 14, no. 3 [1960]: 154-164).

⁴⁵ A list of sources for the polymorphic Christ is provided by Henri-Charles Puech, EPHE Annuaire 73 (1964): 122-125. See also Gedaliahu G. Stroumsa, "Polymorphie divine et transformations d'un mythologème: L'Apocryphon de Jean et ses sources," Vigiliae Christianae 35, no. 4 (1981): 412-434.

many forms, since the psalmist refers to Christ as Mani's "light-twin" (ܡܥܠܝܩ ܢܘܕܝܢܐ) (Psalm-Book 42.22). The concept of the celestial "twin" is central to Mani's own prophetic and revelatory authority, as it is for all of his alleged predecessors.⁴⁶ Not surprisingly, the notion of divine twinship is also invoked in the hymn at the end of the Revelation of the Magi, where Judas Thomas describes Christ as "twinned (ܕܡܪܕܐ) with the Spirit" (30.5) and as soaring over the water "like your twin (ܕܡܪܕܐ) the Holy Spirit" (30.6).⁴⁷

Paul-Hubert Poirier has argued that the "Thomas" to whom the "Psalms of Thomas" (ܡܦܣܠܡܝܬܐ ܕܬܘܡܐ) are attributed in the Manichaean Psalm-Book could be based on a word-play involving the Aramaic/Syriac term for twin (ܡܪܕܐ),⁴⁸ which is cognate with the verb "twinned" used in the final hymn from the Revelation of the Magi (30.5). Similarly, the Greek term σύζυγος, used as a loan-word in the same passage (30.6), is used of Mani's celestial twin throughout the Greek Cologne Mani Codex. Moreover, of all the liturgical texts collected in the Manichaean Psalm-Book, the "Psalms of Thomas/Thōm" are the ⁴⁶ For a discussion of the widely attested tradition of divine twinship in Late Antiquity see Charles M. Stang, Our Divine Double (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2016).

⁴⁷ Brock has pointed out the early Syriac usage of the grammatical feminine for the Holy Spirit ("An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil," Studia Patristica 41 [2006]: 9). See also Susan Ashbrook Harvey, "Feminine Imagery for the Divine: The Holy Spirit, the Odes of Solomon, and Early Syriac Tradition," St. Vladimir's Theological Quarterly 37 (2004): 1-29.

⁴⁸ Paul-Hubert Poirier, "Une nouvelle hypothèse sur le titre des Psaumes manichéens dits de Thomas" Apocrypha 12 (2001): 9-27. According to the 10th-century Islamic scholar al-Nadim, when Mani was twenty-four years old, he was visited by an angel named "the Tawm, which is a Nabatean word meaning 'Companion'" (Bayard Dodge, ed., The Fihrist of al-Nadim, Vol 2 [New York: Columbia University Press, 1970], 774).

ones that most clearly reveal traces of an Aramaic Vorlage,⁴⁹ and display striking thematic and compositional parallels with Mandaean liturgical texts.⁵⁰ Therefore, it is not surprising that we might observe various points of contact between the Manichaean Thomas-psalms and the Revelation of the Magi.

5. Little Child of Light

The Revelation of the Magi also presents an episode that is strangely evocative of Steven Spielberg's Close Encounters of the Third Kind. When the magi have their epiphany in the Cave of Treasures, they see "(something) like the hand of a small person draw near from the pillar and the star," (12.3) and a light-being "that appeared to us in the bodily form of a small and humble human, and he said to us: 'Peace to you'" (13.1). Surprised by this luminous appearance, the light-being reassures the sages: "(do not doubt that)... it appeared to you in the form of a small, humble, and unworthy human, because indeed, the inhabitants of the world cannot bear to see the glory of the only Son of the Father of majesty (i.e. greatness) (ܠܗܘܐ ܕܐܒܝ ܕܡܠܟܐ)" (13.2).

Once again, the Manichaean "Psalms of Thomas" provide an important parallel. There, the cosmic avatar of the heavenly father is described as the "the Little One" (ܡܠܟܐ) who leaps into the abyss to do battle with the powers of darkness (Psalm-Book 204.22-27), and describe him as appearing as an "image of light" (ܕܝܡܐ ܕܠܝܬܐ) to the powers of the world (Psalm-Book ⁴⁹ Peter Nagel, Die Thomaspsalmen des koptisch-manichäischen Psalmbuches (Berlin, 1980).

⁵⁰ For example, "Psalm of Thomas 13" (T. Säve-Söderbergh, Studies in the Coptic Manichaean Psalm-Book [Uppsala, 1949] 119-120). The relationship between Manichaean and Mandaean traditions is complex, as there are multiple points of contact between both textual corpora. Säve-Söderbergh ultimately argued that the Manichaean "Psalms of Thomas" were based on Mandaean prototypes (161).

⁵¹ See Revelation of the Magi 31.4 mentioned above.

214.1-12) who are driven mad by its brightness. In reverence, the powers then proclaim: "You have come in peace, O Child of Brightness, that you shall be the illuminator of our worlds" (Psalms-Book 214.12-14). In fact, "Jesus the Child" features prominently in the "Psalms of Thomas" as one important aspect of the polymorphic Manichaean Christ.

As might be expected, a similar motif is also found in the Mandaean Book of John, although with a somewhat different prophetological focus:

A child was transplanted from	a secret was revealed in on high	Jerusalem.
The priests had dreams.
An utter silence fell upon the	an utter silence fell upon
Eulaeus,	Jerusalem.
He opened his mouth for evil,	and his lying lips.
He opened his mouth for evil,	saying to all the priests, in my vision when I lay
"I saw in my night visions,	down—
I didn't sleep, rest or lie down,	and sleep did not overtake me
	in the night.
I didn't sleep and I didn't rest—	that a star came to Elizabeth, father Zechariah,
a fire rose, burning over elder	the sun set and the lamps
three lamps appeared,	shined forth.
... ..
A shooting star burst over	a shooting star burst over
Judaea,	Jerusalem.
The sun appeared at night,	and the moon shined forth during the day." ⁵²

⁵² Book of John, 18.1-15.

In this passage a divine child is reveled from the heavenly realm, holy silence is observed, just as the sages pray silently in the Revelation of the Magi, while a star appears, as well as light in multiple forms. Even though the focus may be different, the general contours remain the same.⁵³

6. Darkness and Error

The theological hallmark of Manichaeism is its dualistic cosmological framework in which Light is radically opposed to Darkness as two pre-existent cosmic principles. This doctrine, more than any other aspect of Manichaean teaching, was the focus of fierce polemical backlash from a variety of quarters. Although not nearly as pronounced, traces of this sort of dualistic imagery can also be discerned in the Revelation of the Magi. For example, when the magi encounter Mary and Joseph in Bethlehem, Mary is said to have become “a gate for the great light (ܠܝܡܢܐ) that entered the world in grace to banish the darkness (ܠܠܝܡܢܐ)” (22.2). Later, in the Thomas hymn, the apostle asks Christ to “enlighten us and drive away darkness and error” (30.4 ܠܠܝܡܢܐ ܠܠܝܡܢܐ).⁵⁴ In Coptic Manichaean texts, ⁵³ Interestingly, the Mandaean Book of John presents Christ’s polymorphy as a sign of his duplicity and untrustworthiness (Chapter 76) as one who “changes his appearance.” See James McGrath, “Polemic, Redaction, and History in the Mandaean Book of John: The Case of the Lightworld Visitors to Jerusalem,” Aram 25 (2013): 378-379.

⁵⁴ Sebastian Brock has suggested that this may indicated the influence of “Zoroastrian terminology” (“An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil,” Studia Patristica 41 [2006]: 8), whereas Geo Widengren perceived an Iranian background behind the text as a whole (Iranisch-semitische Kulturbegegnung in parthischer Zeit [Köln: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1960], 71-72). Hultgård, however, acknowledged criticisms of Widengren’s interpretation, but nonetheless asserts that Iranian traditions were at play (Anders Hultgård, “The Magi and the Star—the Persian Background in Text and Iconography,” in Being Religious and Living Through the Eyes: Studies in Religious Iconography [Uppsala, 1998], 223).

“error” (πλᾶνη) is practically synonymous with the power of Darkness and evil in the world.⁵⁵ For instance, the Manichaean Psalm-Book states: “Let us bless our Lord Jesus who has sent us the Spirit of Truth. He came and separated us from the Error (τῆ πλᾶνη)” (9.4-5). This “Error” is most often associated with the various sects to which Manichaeans were opposed, whereas the light-child in the Revelation of the Magi explains how “error has reigned in deceit over your generations” (21.9) and that only those who possess true knowledge belong to the “race of light” (21.9 ܠܝܥܡܝܢ ܠܥܡܪܝܢ ܠܡܪܝܢ ܠܡܪܝܢ). As we might expect, this last motif (“race of light”) is also present in Manichaean Psalm-Book in a passage denouncing the “sects of Error” (ܢܐܠܘܡܐ ܢܬܦܠܐܢܝܢ) (86.14).

The use of imagery contrasting light and darkness is certainly not unique to Manichaean discourse, as it appears to have been widespread in Mesopotamia. Not only were dualistic concepts important to various forms of Zoroastrian theology, but also to the teachings of Marcion and Bardaisan, each of whom were closely associated with Mani in early Syriac tradition.⁵⁶ Moreover, the Mandaeans too made extensive use of it in their own literature, which as we have already seen has some relationship with early Manichaean texts. It is not surprising, then, that the Revelation of the Magi should display at least some dualistic tendencies.

7. Final Fire

Fittingly, the final point that ought to be highlighted in this study is how the Revelation of the Magi imagines the end of cosmic history. As much as the text is focused on the beginning of the Christian narrative, by highlighting the birth of Jesus, it closes with a (dualistic) vision of the end-time and an eschatological exhortation from the magi:

⁵⁵ See Kephalaia 21.18; 28.31; 31.30; 33.24,30; 48.34; 90.20, etc.; Psalm-Book 4.22; 8.8,24; 52.31, etc.

⁵⁶ François De Blois, “Dualism in Iranian and Christian Traditions,” Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 10, no. 1 (2000): 1-19.

Flee from the darkness (ܠܠܐ) and come to the light (ܠܝܡܐ) that does not pass away, so that you may live and have refuge under the wings of our Lord Jesus, our saviour and our great refuge on the last day, from the fearsome judgement of fire that will come suddenly to purify the entire earth from error, which has ruled over it in its deceit. And you shall be delivered by faith from the heat of the fire and shall enter that rest that is prepared for all the chosen and the believers who have believed in the child of perfect light (ܠܝܡܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܠܝܡܐ), and in eternal life, in the kingdom of my Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Lord of all (ܐܠ ܠܝܡܐ), in his heavenly majesty (i.e. greatness) (ܡܠܟܐ), in his new world (ܠܝܡܐ ܡܠܟܐ), and in his heavenly and great and never-passing away light, and in his glorious rest (32.2-3 emphasis added).

Once again, we can observe numerous resemblances to Manichaean religious discourse. For its part, the Manichaean vision of the end times foresees the final appearance of Jesus the Splendor, avatar of the “Lord of All” (see above) who will vanquish the powers of darkness and purify the world by means of a “Great Fire.” The chosen “Elect” will then be rewarded in a “New Aeon” of eternal light and rest.⁵⁷ As one Middle Persian fragment from Mani’s *Book of Giants*⁵⁸ suggests:

⁵⁷ Baker-Brian, Manichaeism, 116-118; Timothy Pettipiece, “Burn the World Down: Manichaean Apocalyptic in Comparative Perspective,” in The Armenian Apocalyptic Tradition: A Comparative Perspective, ed. Kevork Bardakjian and Sergio La Porta (Leiden: Brill, 2014), 657-666.

⁵⁸ Counted among Mani’s canonical scriptures, this work contains many points of contact with other apocryphal texts from an Aramaic background (see John C. Reeves, Jewish Lore in Manichaean Cosmogony: Studies in the Book of Giants Traditions [Cincinnati, 1992]).

...on brilliant wings they (the righteous ones) shall fly and soar further beyond and above that Fire, and shall gaze into its depth and height. And those righteous ones that will stand around it, outside and above, they shall have power over the Great Fire, and over everything in it ... they are purer and stronger [than the] Great Fire of Ruin that sets the worlds ablaze.⁵⁹

CONCLUSIONS AND IMPLICATIONS

What, then, are we to make of all the apparent similarities between the Revelation of the Magi and Manichaean theological language? While some resemblances are perhaps more on the surface level, such as imagining God and the divine realm in terms of life, light, treasure, splendor, and greatness—all of which seem to have been part of a shared Aramaic religious vocabulary—others emerge as more deeply rooted themes. Most notably:

- i) identifying God as the “Father of Greatness”*
- ii) a chain of True Prophets traced back to Adam and Seth*
- iii) a polymorphic messiah-figure who appears to all humanity*
- iv) revelatory authority granted through divine twinship*
- v) emphasis on Thomas traditions*
- vi) opposition between Light and Darkness / Truth and Error*
- vii) eschatological fire and rest*

As such, both the Revelation of the Magi and Manichaean literature construct the same basic soteriological storyline.

⁵⁹ T ii D ii 164 (trans. Hans-Joachim Klimkeit, Gnosis on the Silk Road [San Francisco: HarperCollins, 1993], 247); W. B. Henning, “The Book of Giants,” BSOAS 11 (1943): 68.

Namely, that the Father of Greatness reveals himself through a chain of true prophets extending back to Adam and Seth that have appeared in many times and places as manifestations of divine twinship. The message that these prophets deliver periodically to all humanity emphasizes the opposition between light and darkness and the error manifest in sectarian divisions. The forces of darkness and evil, however, will ultimately be defeated when Jesus returns in glory to set fire to the world and grant eternal rest to the children of light.

Does this mean that the Revelation of the Magi is a Manichaean text? I am not ready to go that far. Notably absent are a multiplicity of technical terms for the many well-defined figures from the Manichaean cosmogonic myth, other than the “Father of Greatness.”⁶⁰ Nor is there any direct or implied references to Mani himself.⁶¹ Even though Manichaean scribal activity has been observed in other pieces of Christian apocryphal literature, that does not appear to be happening here.⁶² Moreover, as mentioned above, the magi and the Nativity story were of little intrinsic interest to Manichaean authors, who found the idea of an incarnated Jesus theologically offensive. It seems more likely that the presence of common thematic elements points to a common milieu out of which both the Revelation of the Magi and Manichaeism emerged. More specifically, I would argue that both are building on a pre-existing soteriological narrative that appears to have been rooted in *variant*⁶³ forms of Christianity that developed in Aramaic/Syriac speaking Mesopotamia.⁶⁴ The exact origins of this narrative, however, remain difficult to define, as they appear tied to the notoriously complex and contested issue of “Jewish Christianity.”⁶⁵

⁶⁰ This in itself does not necessarily discount the idea of the Revelation of the Magi being a Manichaean text, as the specific technical language of the cosmogony appears to have been largely unknown to outsiders, with a few notable exceptions such as Theodore bar Khonai. Most polemical descriptions of the Manichaean myth make use of a generic template focused on its dualistic basis rather than a detailed narrative.

⁶¹ There is a somewhat oblique reference to the “Paraclete Spirit” (14.8) in the text, although this does not appear to connect with the Manichaean notion of Mani as the Paraclete promised by Jesus.

⁶² See Timothy Pettipiece, “Manichaean Redaction of the Secret Book of John,” in Fakes, Forgeries, and Fictions: Writing Ancient and Modern Christian Apocrypha: Proceedings from the 2015 York Christian Apocrypha Symposium, ed. Tony Burke (Eugene, Oregon: Cascade Books, 2017).

As mentioned earlier, the Revelation of the Magi was likely composed in Syriac, possibly near Edessa in the 3rd or 4th century CE,⁶⁶ which was an important center of early Christian activity in Mesopotamia. We also know that Mani and his early disciples wrote and preached in Syriac in the same region around the same time. Mandaic, for its part, is an Aramaic ⁶³ By variant I mean streams of early Christian tradition that diverge considerably from emerging orthodoxy.

⁶⁴ This geographic area has been described as a “crucible of cultural creativity for Jews no less than Platonists, Christians, and Manichaeans in the first three centuries of the Common Era” (Han and Reed, “Reorienting Ancient Judaism,” 148).

⁶⁵ The notoriously difficult puzzle of “Jewish Christianity” has been the subject of much debate and controversy. See Annette Yoshiko Reed, “Historicizing ‘Jewish-Christianity,’” in Jewish-Christianity and the History of Judaism: Collected Essays (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2018), xv-xxx. Typically, this hybrid term has been used to describe either an imagined segment of Jesus’ earliest followers, or in reference to certain sectarian groups identified by patristic heresiologists as outliers. In spite of the term being “anachronistic, clumsy, fraught, and contested,” (as Reed admits), it nonetheless points to a liminal historical, discursive, and even geographical space in which certain discernable expressions of late antique religious tradition and community connect themselves in important ways to both Christianity and Judaism while at the same time resisting those categorical constructs as they have come to be defined. As problematic as the term is, it nonetheless points to something that needs to be further explored and better understood.

⁶⁶ See note 4.

dialect, and communities of Mandaeans, or their predecessors, have in some form been (until recently) historically present long the Tigris and Euphrates since at least the 3rd cent. CE.⁶⁷ It is therefore not surprising that religious traditions emanating from the same time-period and geographical area would demonstrate some common characteristics and thematic concerns. In fact, as recent studies continue to demonstrate, Jewish, Christian, Zoroastrian, and Manichaean traditions regularly engaged one another in late antique Mesopotamia and display significant degrees of overlap.⁶⁸

Unfortunately, the story of early Christianity beyond the eastern borders of the Roman Empire is not one that is well-known or well-understood outside of specialized circles.⁶⁹ Thus modern readers' surprise at a text such as the Revelation of the Magi. While early missionaries would have arrived by the 2nd century CE, there was also a significant influx of Christians due to the forced deportation of hundreds of thousands of captives from the Roman Empire by Persian King Shapur I in the 3rd

⁶⁷ The recent re-assessment by Kevin van Bladel suggests that a distinctive "Mandaean" identity only emerged in the 5th century CE out of competition among other "Syro-Mesopotamia" religious groups (From Sasanian Mandaeans to Šābians of the Marshes [Leiden: Brill, 2017]).

⁶⁸ See, for example, Adam H. Becker, "The Comparative Study of 'Scholasticism' in Late Antique Mesopotamia: Rabbis and East Syrians," AJS Review 34 no. 1 (2010): 91-113; Yishai Kiel, "Study Versus Sustenance: A Rabbinic Dilemma in Its Zoroastrian and Manichaean Context," AJS Review 38 no. 2 (2014): 275-302; Yishai Kiel, "Reimagining Enoch in Sassanian Babylonia in Light of Zoroastrian and Manichaean Traditions," AJS Review 39 no. 2 (2015): 407-432 to name but a few.

⁶⁹ As Sebastian Brock has pointed out, the Eusebian model of early Christian history has linked that narrative so closely with the Roman Empire, that the development of Christianity in Persia is either omitted from that story or minimized (see Sebastian Brock, "Christians in the Sasanian Empire: A Case of Divided Loyalties," in Syriac Perspectives on Late Antiquity, 2-3).

century CE.⁷⁰ Notably, an inscription by the Sasanian high-priest Kartir (mentioned above) points to an official differentiation between two groups known in Middle Persian as nāsrāy and kristiyan.⁷¹ It has been suggested that the former group, the “Nazoreans”⁷² represents local Aramaic-speaking Christians, many of whom were still strongly connected to non-rabbinic Jewish traditions, while the latter refers to relocated “western” Christians who had more in common with the Roman church.⁷³ Similarly, Persian authorities in Syriac martyr acts from the Sasanian period seem to make the same terminological differentiation when discussing interactions with Christian communities under their jurisdiction.⁷⁴

While a more concrete history of the churches of Persia begins to take shape in the 4th century CE, prior to that, particularly in the 2nd and 3rd centuries, Iranian territories appear to have been home to an eclectic mix of doctrines and sects associated with early Christian teachers such as Marcion, ⁷⁰ Josef Wiesehöfer, Ancient Persia from 550 BC to 650 AD (New York: I. B. Tauris, 1998), 201.

⁷¹ It is difficult to imagine that Kartir would use these terms in an official inscription without understanding that they implied some important distinction.

⁷² Based on what we know from early Christian heresiological sources, the term “Nazorean” is used as a kind of catch-all to connect a cluster of sectarian groups that were all thought to derive from the so-called “Jewish-Christian” stream of early Christianity, such as Cerninthians, Elchasaites, and Ebionites. “Nazorean” is also attested as a term of self-designation found in Mandaean writings, although in a somewhat ambivalent sense, and is applied to Christians pejoratively in the Talmud (see François De Blois, “Naṣrānī [Ναζωραῖος] and ḥanīf [ἑθνικός]: Studies on the Religious Vocabulary of Christianity and of Islam” Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 65, no. 1 [2002]: 4).

⁷³ Sebastian Brock, “Christians in the Sasanian Empire: A Case of Divided Loyalties,” Syriac Perspectives on Late Antiquity, 3-6.

⁷⁴ De Blois, “Naṣrānī [Ναζωραῖος] and ḥanīf [ἑθνικός], 8.

Bardaisan, and Elchasai,⁷⁵ all of whom were later deemed “heretical” by proto-orthodox authorities, but whose doctrines were considered authoritative and foundational for the earliest forms of Aramaic/Syriac Christianity⁷⁶ in the region. As we saw above, several of the central themes and motifs common to both the Revelation of the Magi and Manichaean discourse, such as the chain of True Prophets and the polymorphic Christ, point back to such “Elchasaite” or “Nazorean” prototypes.⁷⁷

The current model of the historical development of early Christianity has long had its own version of a “dark matter” problem. There are strong indicators of an important stream of early Christian tradition that exerted considerable influence on other contemporary trajectories and against which proto-orthodoxy defined itself, but whose exact nature remains obscure, since evidence of it has been almost totally erased.⁷⁸

⁷⁵ Wiesehöfer, Ancient Persia, 205. Later, Mani himself will be added to this list of founding figures.

⁷⁶ The work of Stanley Jones has helped further refine this understanding of early Christianity in Syro-Mesopotamia (see F.S. Jones, Pseudoclementia Elchasaïticaque inter Judaeochristiana: Collected Studies [Leuven: Peeters, 2012]).

⁷⁷ Cirillo, Luigi, “From the Elchasaite Christology to the Manichaean Apostle of Light,” in Il Manicheismo: Nuove Prospettive della Ricerca. Atti del Quinto Congresso Internazionale di Studi sul Manicheismo (Dipartimento di Studi Asiatici, Università degli Studi di Napoli “L’Orientale”; Napoli, 2-8 Settembre 2001), ed. van Tongerloo, Aloïs and Cirillo, Luigi. Manichaean Studies 5. Turnhout: Brepols, 2005), 47-54. Gerard P. Luttikhuisen has referred to this idea as a distinctly “Syrian Christology” (see “The Baptists of Mani’s Youth and the Elchasaites,” in Gnostic Revisions of Genesis Stories and Early Jesus Traditions, NHMS 58 [Leiden: Brill, 2006], 178-179).

⁷⁸ Nearly a century ago, Walter Bauer argued that the prevailing forms of “orthodox” Christianity that developed during Late Antiquity were often built against a pre-existing background of traditions later deemed “heretical.” A key example of this phenomenon relates to the story of King Abgar and the introduction of Christianity to the city of Edessa

This tradition can only be vaguely discerned as a palimpsest read against the background of preserved early Christian discourse and is partly visible through heresiological labels such as Gnostic, Ebionite, Elchasaite, and Nazorean, as well as surviving early Christian and Jewish apocrypha traditions.⁷⁹ This evidence suggests that a well-developed and widespread parallel Christian tradition (or cluster of traditions) developed early on and largely independently in Aramaic-speaking Mesopotamia that presented a much different theological focus than what developed later into Nicene orthodoxy and therefore looks alien to ancient and modern commentators for whom Christianity in the Roman Empire is the primary point of reference. In particular, in these alternate traditions, a much stronger emphasis is placed on Christ's appearance (or rather appearances) in the world and his role as a revealer rather than the redemptive value of his embodiment, death, and resurrection, which were viewed as illusory. It is also differentiated by its assertion of an alternative Trinity emphasizing the femininity of the Spirit,⁸⁰ and a chain of "true prophets" periodically sent to humanity. I am suggesting, here, (Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum [Tübingen: Mohr, 1934]).

⁷⁹ Geo Widengren identified this as a form of "jüdisch-iranischen Gnosis" in specific reference to the Revelation of the Magi (Mani und der Manichäismus [Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1961], 29).

⁸⁰ This too was a reflection of its Aramaic context, in which the word for "spirit" is grammatically feminine. See Timothy Pettipiece, "Many Faced Gods: Triadic (Proto-)Structure and Divine Androgyny in Early Manichaean Cosmogony," Open Theology (2015) 1: 245–254, where it is argued that the entirety of the early Manichaean cosmogonic myth is rooted in this alternate trinitarian framework of Father-Mother-Child. François De Blois has suggested that this type of trinity tradition was "widespread" on the periphery of the late-antique world, and in fact represents the form of Christianity likely engaged with by Muhammed and the early Muslims, adding to its historical importance ("Naṣrānī [Ναζωραῖος] and ḥanīf [ἑθνικός]," 27).

that the Revelation of the Magi and the teaching of Mani represent two closely related theological trajectories derived from this stream of early Mesopotamian Christianity.

What accounts for such theological differences? The fact that these alternate Christian traditions developed in Iranian territory, during the late Parthian and early Sassanian periods, is certainly key. Sebastian Brock has suggested that the Revelation of the Magi may have, at least in part, sought to provide “a foundation legend for the Iranian Christian community.”⁸¹ Although, if we imagine the considerable religious diversity on the ground in the early Sasanian Empire, as evidenced by the inscription of Kartir, which mentions Jews (yahūd), Buddhists (šaman), Brahmins (brāman), and “baptisers” (makdag) as objects of his derision,⁸² then it is possible that the Revelation of the Magi (and the teachings of Mani for that matter) could be viewed as an attempt to bridge the gap between a diversity of communities and establish a unified soteriological framework. It is worth noting, however, that the Revelation of the Magi contains almost no overtly polemical elements, and its author does not seem interested in attacking other religious perspectives directly. Instead, a story is told of a saviour from the light-realm that appears in multiple forms throughout the ages to all people in an on-going effort to achieve universal salvation. Tellingly, at the end of the star-child’s discourse to the magi a voice is heard saying: “Amen! The will of complete salvation, joy and peace to all the worlds!” (Revelation of the Magi 21.12). One has to wonder if the very focus placed on the magi as bearing witness to the appearance of Jesus is in some sense an attempt to appeal to the imperial Zoroastrian tradition and to validate Christianity’s status as a religious minority in the Sasanian Empire.⁸³ Moreover, if indeed the author of the text was attempting to build a bridge between various neighboring religious communities, then perhaps the use of the title “Father of Greatness” itself could similarly be seen as a deliberate theological overture to Manichaean sensibilities.

⁸¹ Sebastian Brock, “An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil,” 5.

⁸² Wiesehöfer, Ancient Persia, 199.

As Sebastian Brock has also pointed out, the history of early Christianity is often distorted by the overriding emphasis placed on the Roman context, which is seen as somehow essential to its early development. From this perspective, the experience of Christians has often been stereotyped as either persecuted minority or supremacist majority.⁸⁴ Imperial Roman Christianity, as reflected by post-Nicene orthodoxy, could afford to be supremacist and exclusive in orientation, as it had the full-force of the emperors to assert its theological and ideological agendas. But what about Christianity in other contexts? For the most part, Christians in Persian territory were tolerated as a recognized religious minority. Whereas Mani, in the 3rd century, sought to replace all existing religious traditions with his own universal church, his highly polemical efforts generated enormous hostility and resulted in his execution by the state. The Revelation of the Magi, however, appears to take an equally inclusivist approach, but a more conciliatory tone, in that it avoids overt attempts to antagonize other religious communities, while seeking to integrate them into a discourse of universal salvation. Such a universalizing soteriology might appear surprising and appealing to modern readers, but when viewed in its historical context and against a broader background of other related, early Christian traditions, it is perhaps not all that original. It is simply unfamiliar.

⁸³ See Hultgård, “The Magi and the Star—the Persian Background in Text and Iconography,” 225. A similar point is made by Sergey Minov in relation to representations of the magi in the Syriac Cave of Treasures, which are said to “reflect the values and aspirations of a Christian minority group seeking to engage actively the dominant culture of the Sassanian empire” (“Dynamics of Christian Acculturation in the Sassanian Empire: Some Iranian Motifs in the Cave of Treasures,” in Jews, Christians and Zoroastrians: Religious Dynamics in a Sasanian Context, ed. G. Herman, Judaism in Context 17 (Piscataway, New Jersey: Gorgias Press, 2014), 200). Even the names of the Magi, such as Hormizd, Atrahšišat, Merodak, appear designed to make allusion to figures from prior Iranian and Mesopotamian traditions (Revelation of the Magi 2.3).

⁸⁴ Sebastian Brock, “Christians in the Sasanian Empire: A Case of Divided Loyalties,” 1–2. A similar issue has affected scholarly discussions of ancient Judaism, which until recently have placed emphasis on Graeco-Roman contexts as opposed to Parthian and Sassanian (see Jae Hee Han and Annette Yoshiko Reed, “Reorienting Ancient Judaism: Syrian, Mesopotamian, and Persian Perspectives,” Journal of Ancient Judaism 9 no. 2 (2018): 145–146).

While enigmatic and exotic on the surface, the Revelation of the Magi and its Manichaean parallels appear to have inherited and integrated significant elements from a pre-existing tradition we know largely from fragments and hostile testimonies. Not only is it theologically compelling, but it also provides another important piece to the still incomplete puzzle of “early Christianities”⁸⁵ outside the Roman Empire.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Allberry, C.R.C., A Manichaean Psalm-Book, Part II (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1938).

⁸⁵ I am not particularly fond of the plural coinage “Christianities.” However, in the case of the earliest forms of the Christian movement in Syriac-speaking Mesopotamia it does seem as though we are faced with some fairly independent trajectories of development with unique characteristics.

- Ashbrook Harvey, Susan, "Feminine Imagery for the Divine: The Holy Spirit, the Odes of Solomon, and Early Syriac Tradition," St. Vladimir's Theological Quarterly 37 (2004): 1-29.
- Augustine, Answer to Faustus, a Manichean, trans. Roland Teske, The Works of Saint Augustine: A Translation for the 21st Century (NY: New City Press, 2007),
- Augustine, Sancti Aureli Augustini, ed. Zycha, CSEL 25.1 (Vienna, 1891).
- Baker-Brian, Nicholas Manichaeism: An Ancient Faith Rediscovered (London: T&T Clark, 2011).
- Bauer, Walter, Rechtgläubigkeit und Ketzerei im ältesten Christentum (Tübingen: Mohr, 1934).
- Becker, Adam H., "The Comparative Study of 'Scholasticism' in Late Antique Mesopotamia: Rabbis and East Syrians," AJS Review 34 no. 1 (2010): 91-113
- BeDuhn, Jason, The Manichaean Body in Discipline and Ritual (Baltimore: John Hopkins University Press, 2000).
- Brock, Sebastian, "An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil," Studia Patristica 41 (2006): 2-12.
- Brock, Sebastian, "Christians in the Sasanian Empire: A Case of Divided Loyalties," in Syriac Perspectives on Late Antiquity (London: Variorum Reprints, 1984), IV.1-19.
- Coyle, J. Kevin, "The Gospel of Thomas in Manichaeism?" in Colloque international L'Évangile selon Thomas et les textes de Nag Hammadi, Québec, 29-31 mai 2003, ed. Louis Painchaud and Paul-Hubert Poirier (Québec: Les Presses de l'Université Laval / Louvain: Éditions Peeters, 2007), 75-91.
- Cirillo, Luigi, "From the Elchasaite Christology to the Manichaean Apostle of Light," in Il Manicheismo: Nuove Prospettive della Ricerca. Atti del Quinto Congresso Internazionale di Studi sul Manicheismo (Dipartimento di Studi Asiatici, Università degli Studi di Napoli "L'Orientale"; Napoli, 2-8 Settembre 2001), ed. van Tongerloo, Aloïs and Cirillo, Luigi. Manichaean Studies 5. Turnhout: Brepols, 2005), 47-54.

De Blois, François, "Dualism in Iranian and Christian Traditions," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 10, no. 1 (2000): 1-19.

De Blois, François, "Naṣrānī [Ναζωραῖος] and ḥanīf [ἡθνικός]: Studies on the Religious Vocabulary of Christianity and of Islam" Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 65, no. 1 (2002): 4.

Denzey, Nicola "A New Star on the Horizon: Astral Christologies and Stellar Debates in Early Christian Discourse," in Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World, ed. Scott Noegel et al. (Pennsylvania: Pennsylvania State University Press, 2003).

Dilley, Paul, "Also Schrieb Zarathustra? Mani As Interpreter of the 'Law of Zarades'" in Iain Gardner, Jason BeDuhn, and Paul Dilley, Mani at the Court of the Persian Kings: Studies on the Chester Beatty "Kephalaia" Codex (Leiden: Brill, 2015), 101-135.

Dodge, Bayard, ed., The Fihrist of al-Nadim, Vol 2 (New York: Columbia University Press, 1970).

Duchesne-Guillemin, Jacques, "Die Magier in Bethlehem und Mithras als Erlöser?" Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morganländischen Gesellschaft 111, no. 2 (1961): 469-475.

- Foster, Paul, "Polymorphic Christology: Its Origins and Development in Early Christianity," Journal of Theological Studies 58 (2007): 66-99.
- Franzmann, Majella, Jesus in the Manichaean Writings (London: T&T Clark, 2003).
- Funk, Wolf-Peter, "Einer aus Tausend, zwei aus Zehntausend: Zitate aus dem Thomasevangelium in den koptischen Manichaica," in For the Children, Perfect Instruction: Studies in Honor of Hans-Martin Schenke, ed. Bethge et al. (Leiden: Brill, 2002), 67-94.
- Gardner, Iain, "Mani's Last Days," in Gardner, BeDuhn, and Dilley, Mani at the Court of the Persian Kings: Studies on the Chester Beatty "Kephalaia" Codex (Leiden: Brill, 2015), 159-208.
- Gardner, Iain and Samuel Lieu, Manichaean Texts from the Roman Empire (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2004).
- Häberl, Charles G. and James F. McGrath, eds., The Mandaean Book of John: Text and Translation (Berlin: De Gruyter, 2020).
- Han, Jae Hee and Annette Yoshiko Reed, "Reorienting Ancient Judaism: Syrian, Mesopotamian, and Persian Perspectives," Journal of Ancient Judaism 9 no. 2 (2018): 144-154.
- Hegemonius, Acta Archelai (The Acts of Archelaus), trans. Mark Vermes (Louvain: Brepols, 2001).
- Hegemonius, Acta Archelai, GCS 16 (Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs, 1906).
- Henrichs, Albert and Ludwig Koenen, Der Kölner Mani-Kodex: Über das Werden seines Liebes (Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1988).

- Henning, W. B., "Mani's Last Journey," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 10, no.4 (1942): 941-953.
- Henning, W. B., "The Book of Giants," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 11 (1943): 52-74.
- (Hippolytus), Refutation of All Heresies, trans. M. David Litwa, Writings from the Greco-Roman World 40 (Atlanta: SBL Press, 2016),
- Hultgård, Anders, "The Magi and the Star—the Persian Background in Text and Iconography," in "Being Religious and Living Through the Eyes": Studies in Religious Iconography (Uppsala, 1998), 215-225.
- Jones, F. S. Pseudoclementia Elchasaiticaque inter Judaeo-christiana: Collected Studies (Leuven: Peeters, 2012).
- Kiel, Yishai, "Reimagining Enoch in Sassanian Babylonia in Light of Zoroastrian and Manichaean Traditions," AJS Review 39 no.2 (2015): 407-432.
- Kiel, Yishai, "Study Versus Sustenance: A Rabbinic Dilemma in Its Zoroastrian and Manichaean Context," AJS Review 38 no. 2 (2014): 275-302.
- Klijn, A. F. J., Seth in Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic Traditions (Leiden: Brill, 1977).
- Klijn, A. F. J. "The So-Called Hymn of the Pearl (Acts of Thomas ch. 108-113)," Vigiliae Christianae 14, no. 3 (1960): 154-164.
- Klijn, A. F. J., and G. J. Reinink, Patristic Evidence for Jewish-Christian Sects (Leiden: Brill, 1973).
- Klimkeit, Hans-Joachim, Gnosis on the Silk Road (San Francisco: HarperCollins, 1993).

- Lieu, Samuel N. C., Manichaeism in the Later Roman Empire and Medieval China (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1992).
- Lieu, Samuel N. C., Gregory Fox, and John Sheldon, Greek and Latin Sources on Manichaean Cosmogony and Ethics, Corpus Fontium Manichaeorum, Series Subsidia VI (Turnhout: Brepols, 2010).
- Landau, Brent, "The Sages and the Star-Child: An Introduction to the Revelation of the Magi, An Ancient Christian Apocryphon" (PhD diss., Harvard University, 2008).
- Landau, Brent, Revelation of the Magi: The Lost Tale of the Wise Men's Journey to Bethlehem (HarperCollins, 2010).
- Luttikhuizen, Gerard P., "The Baptists of Mani's Youth and the Elchasaites," in Gnostic Revisions of Genesis Stories and Early Jesus Traditions, Nag Hammadi and Manichaean Studies 58 (Leiden: Brill, 2006), 170-184.
- MacKenzie, D. N., "A Zoroastrian Master of Ceremonies," in W.B. Henning Memorial Volume, ed. Mary Boyce, and Ilya Gershevitch (London: Lund Humphries, 1970), 264-71.
- McGrath, James, "Polemic, Redaction, and History in the Mandaean Book of John: The Case of the Lightworld Visitors to Jerusalem," Aram 25 (2013): 375-382.
- Minov, Sergey, "Dynamics of Christian Acculturation in the Sassanian Empire: Some Iranian Motifs in the Cave of Treasures," in Jews, Christians and Zoroastrians: Religious Dynamics in a Sasanian Context, ed. G. Herman, Judaism in Context 17 (Piscataway, New Jersey: Gorgias Press, 2014), 149-201.

- Mirecki, Paul Allan, "Coptic Manichaean Psalm 278 and the Gospel of Thomas 37," in Manichaica Selecta, ed. A. van Tongerloo and S. Giversen (Louvain, 1991), 243-262.
- Nagel, Peter, Die Thomaspsalmen des koptisch-manichäischen Psalmbuches (Berlin, 1980).
- New Testament Apocrypha*, Vol. 2, ed. Schneemelcher, (Louisville: WJK Press, 2003)
- New Testament Apocrypha: More Canonical Scriptures, Volume I*, ed. Tony Burke and Brent Landau (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2016).
- Payne Smith, R., A Compendious Syriac Dictionary (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1903).
- Pedersen, Nils Arne, Manichaean Homilies, Corpus Fontium Manichaeorum, Series Coptica II (Turnhout: Brepols, 2006).
- Pettipiece, Timothy, "Burn the World Down: Manichaean Apocalyptic in Comparative Perspective," in The Armenian Apocalyptic Tradition: A Comparative Perspective, ed. Kevork Bardakjian and Sergio La Porta (Leiden: Brill, 2014), 657-666.
- Pettipiece, Timothy, "Manichaean Redaction of the Secret Book of John," in Fakes, Forgeries, and Fictions: Writing Ancient and Modern Christian Apocrypha: Proceedings from the 2015 York Christian Apocrypha Symposium, ed. Tony Burke (Eugene, Oregon: Cascade Books, 2017), 194-206.
- Pettipiece, Timothy, "Many Faced Gods: Triadic (Proto-)Structure and Divine Androgyny in Early Manichaean Cosmogony," Open Theology (2015) 1: 245-254.
- Pettipiece, Timothy, Pentadic Redaction in the Manichaean Kephalaia (Leiden: Brill, 2009).

- Polotsky, H.-J. and A. Böhlig, Kephalaia (I): 1. Hälfte [Lieferung 1-10] (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1940).
- Poirier, Paul-Hubert, "Une nouvelle hypothèse sur le titre des Psaumes manichéens dits de Thomas" Apocrypha 12 (2001): 9-27.
- Puech, Henri-Charles, EPHE Annuaire 73 (1964): 122-125.
- Reed, Annette Yoshiko, "Beyond the Land of Nod: Syriac Images of Asia and the Historiography of 'The West,'" History of Religions 49, no. 1 (August 2009): 48-87.
- Reed, Annette Yoshiko, "Historicizing 'Jewish-Christianity,'" in Jewish-Christianity and the History of Judaism: Collected Essays (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2018), xv-xxx.
- Reeves, John C., Heralds of That Good Realm: Syro-Mesopotamian Gnosis and Jewish Traditions (Leiden: Brill, 1996).
- Reeves, John C., Jewish Lore in Manichaean Cosmogony: Studies in the Book of Giants Traditions (Cincinnati, 1992).
- Reeves, John C., Prolegomena to a History of Islamicate Manichaeism (Sheffield: Equinox, 2011).
- Reeves, John C., "Reconsidering the 'Prophecy of Zardūšt,'" in A Multiform Heritage: Studies in Early Judaism and Christianity in Honor of Robert A. Kraft, ed. Benjamin G. Wright (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1999), 167-182.
- Rehm, Bernhard, ed, Die Pseudoklementinen I: Homilien, GCS 42 (Berlin: Akademie, 1992).
- Säve-Söderbergh, T. Studies in the Coptic Manichaean Psalm-Book (Uppsala, 1949).

- Stang, Charles M., Our Divine Double (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2016).
- Stroumsa, Gedaliahu G., "Polymorphie divine et transformations d'un mythogème : L'Apocryphon de Jean et ses sources," Vigiliae Christianae 35, no. 4 (1981) : 412-434.
- Tardieu, Michel, Le manichéisme (Paris: Presses universitaires de France, 1981).
- Taylor, David, "The Coming of Christianity to Mesopotamia," in The Syriac World, ed. Daniel King (New York: Routledge, 2019), 68-87).
- Theodore bar Khonai, Book of Scholia (Liber scholiorum), ed. Addai Scher; CSCO 69; (Louvain: Imprimerie orientale L. Durbecq, 1954).
- Théodore bar Koni: Livre des scholies (recension de Séert) I. Mimrè I-V*, trans. Robert Hespel and René Draguet, CSCO, Scriptores syri 187 (Louvain: Peeters, 1981).
- Toepel, Alexander, "The Apocryphon of Seth," in Old Testament Pseudepigrapha: More Noncanonical Scriptures, vol. 1, ed. Richard Bauckham, James Davila, and Alexander Panayotov (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2013), 33-39.
- van Bladel, Kevin, From Sasanian Mandaean to Šābians of the Marshes (Leiden: Brill, 2017).
- Van Lindt, Paul, The Names of Manichaean Mythological Figures: A Comparative Study on Terminology in the Coptic Sources (Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1992).
- van Tongerloo, Aloïs, "The Father of Greatness," in Gnosisforschung und Religionsgeschichte. Festschrift für Kurt Rudolph zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. Holger Preißler und Hubert Seiwert (Marburg: diagonal-Verlag, 1994), 329-342.

Widengren, Geo Iranisch-semitische Kulturbegegnung in parthischer Zeit (Köln: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1960).

Widengren, Geo, Mani und der Manichäismus (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1961).

Wiesehöfer, Josef, Ancient Persia from 550 BC to 650 AD (New York: I. B. Tauris, 1998).

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

3 1761 01690533 3

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

THE ODES AND PSALMS OF SOLOMON

PUBLISHED FOR THE JOHN RYLANDS LIBRARY AT
THE UNIVERSITY PRESS (H. M. McKECHNIE, Secretary)
12 LIME GROVE, OXFORD ROAD, MANCHESTER

LONGMANS, GREEN AND CO.

LONDON : 39 PATERNOSTER ROW

NEW YORK : 443-449 FOURTH AVENUE AND THIRTIETH STREET

BOMBAY : 8 HORNEY ROAD

CALCUTTA : 6 OLD COURT HOUSE STREET

MADRAS : 167 MOUNT ROAD

BERNARD QUARITCH LIMITED

11 GRAFTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

Apoc (N.T)
Sol
H

(32)

"THE ODES AND PSALMS" OF SOLOMON

RE-EDITED FOR

THE GOVERNORS OF THE JOHN RYLANDS LIBRARY

BY

RENDEL HARRIS

AND

ALPHONSE MINGANA

VOL. II: THE TRANSLATION

WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

2

155-266
8/6/20

MANCHESTER: AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS
LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & COMPANY, AND

BERNARD QUARITCH

NEW YORK, BOMBAY, CALCUTTA, MADRAS:
LONGMANS, GREEN & COMPANY

1920

PRINTED AT OXFORD, ENGLAND

BY FREDERICK HALL

PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

PREFACE

THE present volume contains the translation of the text of the Odes and Psalms of Solomon, as they are edited in the previous volume. A critical introduction is prefixed dealing with the main questions that affect the time and place of production of these Odes and Psalms and their interpretation, and accompanied by detailed notes to each of the Odes.

We have availed ourselves, as far as possible, of the great efflux of literature caused by the discovery of the Odes, but it has not been found practicable to give exact credit to everything that has been wisely said, nor is it consistent with the laws of charity to register all the mistakes of translation and interpretation that have been perpetrated by the various writers who have discoursed on the theme, including ourselves. We are sensible that much yet remains to be done in the explication of the Odes of Solomon, just as we are hopeful that a real advance will be registered in the present volume.

We hope, also, that the microscopic dissection of the text of these Odes, and the corresponding attempts to reach the mentality of their composer, will not wholly obliterate 'the first fine careless rapture' that accompanied their resurrection.

R. H.

A. M.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION :
I. The Identification of the Odes	1
II. Quotations of Odes in the Early Fathers	16
III. Quotations of Odes in the Early Fathers (continued) .	40
IV. The Origin and Time of the Composition of the Odes .	61
V. Christ and Solomon	69
VI. The Christology of the Odes	72
VII. The Odes and the Biblical Targum	85
VIII. Style of the Odes	91
IX. The Style of the Odes and that of the Psalms of Solomon compared	106
X. The Biblical Quotations of the Odes	110
XI. Poetry of the Odes	125
XII. Unity of the Odes	133
XIII. Syriac or Greek?	138
XIV. Syriac or Greek? (continued)	159
XV. The Coptic (Sahidic) Version	175
XVI. The Odes and Baptism	187
XVII. Harnack and the Odes	197
XVIII. Gnosticism in the Odes	203
THE ODES OF SOLOMON : Translation, with Critical and Expository Notes	207
THE PSALMS OF SOLOMON : Translation	410
CONCORDANCE TO THE ODES OF SOLOMON,	435
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL INDEX TO THE ODES OF SOLOMON	455

INTRODUCTION

CHAPTER I

THE IDENTIFICATION OF THE ODES.

WE have given in the previous volume a brief summary of the materials upon which this edition of the Odes and Psalms of Solomon is based ; and it is not necessary to repeat the descriptions which are there presented. For the sake of historical completeness we repeat, however, the evidence for the identification of the new Odes with the lost book which the Early Church spoke of under the title of The Odes of Solomon. The identification is the more necessary since the beginning of these Odes and the ending of the Psalms of Solomon are missing in the Rylands MS., and in the Nitrian MS. the greater part of the book is wanting, including the opening and the close. Thus we are precluded from appealing to introductory matter or to an attached colophon which might have contained a reference to Solomon, or to the songs themselves as either Odes or Psalms.

We begin, obviously, with the recognition that the latter part of the book contains, nearly complete, the collection known to scholars as the Psalms of Solomon, a collection extant in Greek in a number of MSS., and thought by most scholars to be directly derived from a Hebrew original. These Psalms are eighteen in number, a volume to themselves, and our MSS. show that they have been attached to a similar collection of Syriac hymns, forty-two in number. No distinction is made in our MSS. between the two collections, which are numbered continuously and described simply as Psalms. We are to show that the first forty-two hymns are the lost Odes of Solomon, and then we separate the two collections, and assign to them the titles of Odes of Solomon and Psalms of Solomon respectively: for it is certain that the two collections did not always stand together.

In the Codex Alexandrinus of the New Testament (Codex A) the index at the end of the MS. shows that there once stood in the volume the eighteen Psalms of Solomon, the close of the index being as follows:

Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰωάννου.
 Κλήμεντος ἐπιστολὴ α΄.
 Κλήμεντος ἐπιστολὴ β΄.
 ὁμοῦ βιβλία —.
 Ψαλμοὶ Σολομῶντος ιη΄.

Here we see the Psalms of Solomon standing just outside the accepted Christian books of the New Testament in the very penumbra of canonicity. There is no evidence that the Odes of Solomon stood with them, though if we judged by the contents they are much nearer to the New Testament than their companions. At a later date we shall find the two collections fused together, with the priority given to the Psalms over the Odes.

Thus in the Synopsis Sanctae Scripturae, which passes under the name of Athanasius, though it belongs to a much later date (say the sixth century) we find after the enumeration of the Antilegomena of the Old Testament as follows:

Σὺν ἐκείνοις δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ἡρίθμηνται.
 Μακκαβαϊκὰ βιβλία δ΄.
 Πτολεμαϊκὰ.
 Ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδὴ Σολομῶντος.
 Σώσαννα.

Here ᾠδὴ is clearly a misunderstanding for ᾠδαί, under the influence of the canonical Song of Solomon.

We turn in the next place to the Stichometry of Nicephorus,

Patriarch of Constantinople, in the ninth century, where we find as follows :

ὅσαι ἀντιλέγονται καὶ οὐκ ἐκκλησιάζονται·
 Μακκαβαϊκὰ γ'· στίχ' στ'·
 Σοφία Σολομώντος· στίχ'· α'ρ'·
 Σοφία υἱοῦ τοῦ Σιράχ· στίχ'· βω'·
 Ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδὴ Σολομώντος· στίχ'· βρ'·
 Ἑσθηρ· στίχ'· τν'·
 Ἰουδίθ· στίχ'· αψ'·
 Σώσαννα· στίχ'· φ'·
 Τωβίτ, ὁ καὶ Τωβίας· στίχ'· ψ'·

In this list we again see the form ᾠδή for ᾠδαί: we edit the singular because it occurs in some MSS. of Nicephorus, and because it gives us evidence that these two book-lists have a common element; but we do not justify it as Zahn tried to do, by a reference to the LXX of 1 Kings viii. 53 (οὐκ ἰδοὺ αὕτη γέγραπται ἐν βίβλῳ τῆς ᾠδῆς;) it is clearly a mistake which has come down on two separate lines: the recognition of the error shows us, as Bernard points out, that we have to qualify our statement that the junction of the Psalms with the Odes may be dated in the sixth century. After all it may be earlier.

We observe that Nicephorus has given us the content of the joined Odes and Psalms as 2,100 verses. It is easy to show from the MSS. of the Psalms of Solomon extant in Greek that they were credited with a compass of 950 verses. Thus the proportion of the two books is:

Odes to Psalms as 1,150 to 950. or as 23 to 19.

Now let us turn back to our MS. and we shall find as follows: at the beginning, three leaves are missing, the book being arranged in quires of ten leaves; these three leaves contained the first two Odes and the opening of the third Ode. The Odes then run continuously till the fourth quire, where they stop on the verso of the fourth leaf: this makes 34 leaves for the first group of songs in the MS. Then we come to the known Psalms of Solomon for which we reckon 26 leaves, and if we estimate the space required for the missing portion, we may say that the Psalms occupied 28 leaves, and that the proportion between the two parts is Odes to Psalms as 34 to 28. This agrees closely with the estimate furnished by the Stichometries, being in each case a proportion of 1.2 to 1, which enables us to identify our first group of songs with the Odes of Solomon spoken of by ps.-Athanasius and Nicephorus.

Before we pass away from this part of the investigation we may find it important to note that there is a suspicion that both the Odes and the Psalms had been discarded from the canonical and deuterio-canonical literature of the Church at Carthage at a very early date. The evidence is as follows: we possess a catalogue written in the year A.D. 359, and of North African origin, known as the Cheltenham Stichometry, from its discovery in the Phillipp Library at Cheltenham by Mommsen;¹ in this catalogue, the Salomonic writings are introduced as follows:

‘Psalmi David CLI $\overline{\text{ver}}$ $\overline{\text{V}}$.
 Salomonis $\overline{\text{ver}}$ $\overline{\text{V}}$ D profetas maiores $\overline{\text{ver}}$ $\overline{\text{XVI}}$ CCCLXX. numero IIII.’

This is at first sight somewhat perplexing: it seems as if the Cheltenham list had only one book of Solomon, or several books reckoned as one, and that the total extent of this book or books is 5,500 verses. But, as Preuschen² has suggested, the real reckoning for Solomon has got into the next line, and we should read:

‘Salomonis lib. V. $\overline{\text{ver}}$ $\overline{\text{VII}}$. CCCXX.
 profetas maiores numero IIII.’

If this restoration be correct we should have the Cheltenham list in evidence for five books of Solomon, but without any clue to the identification of the five books, or any means of comparison with the stichometry of the Psalms and Odes as given by Nicephorus.

¹ Sanday, in Studia Biblica: vol. iii. 217 sqq.

² Preuschen, Analecta, pp. 135 ff.

Now that Preuschen is correct as regards the numbers may be seen from the fact that the figure 7,320 agrees with the count which we find in the Vulgate MSS.¹ For here we have:

Proverbs	1,740 verses.
Ecclesiastes	800 „
Canticles	280 „
Wisdom	1,700 „
Ecclesiasticus	2,800 „
Total	7,320 „

This justifies Preuschen's restoration, and shows that five books of Solomon were reckoned amongst the canonical and semi-canonical books in North Africa in the middle of the fourth century, but the Psalms and Odes of Solomon are not amongst the five. The very same thing follows from the consideration of the list of canonical Scriptures contained in the Acts of the Council of Carthage in A. D. 397, for the entry in the list of canonical books, can hardly be referred to any other grouping than that which we have already described. From this time onwards the tradition of the Church is steady that there are five books of Solomon. Thus we find in Innocentius, writing at the beginning of the fifth century:

‘Salomonis libri quinque,’

‘Prophetarum libri sexdecim, Salomonis libri quinque, Psalterium;’²

And in Cassiodorus, writing at the middle of the sixth century:³

‘Psalterium librum unum; Salomonis libros quinque, i. e. Proverbia, Sapientiam, Ecclesiasticum, Ecclesiasten, Canticum Canticorum;’

and so in other places.

¹ Sanday, l. c., p. 266.

² Ad Exsuperium (Galland, Bibl., vol. viii, pp. 561 ff.).

³ De instit. div. litt., cap. xiv.

Isidore of Seville, in the early part of the seventh century, divides the five Salomonic writings into groups of three and two respectively, and explains that the two which he detaches (Wisdom and Ecclesiasticus) were really the works of Jesus the son of Sirach, but have been credited to Solomon on the ground of style :¹

‘Duo quoque illi egregii et sanctae institutionis libelli, Sapientiam dico et alium qui vocatur Ecclesiasticus : qui dum dicantur a Iesu filio Sirach editi, tamen propter quandam eloquii similitudinem Salomonis titulo sunt praenotati.’²

We have been at some pains to show the persistence of the tradition of five books of Solomon in the Church, on account of its importance in regard to the question of the reception or the rejection of the Psalms and Odes of Solomon in the African Church. If they were ever extant in the Church of Carthage, it would seem that they were very early discarded, and perhaps by the authority of Cyprian himself; but we must not assume too hastily that either the Odes or the Psalms were extant in a Latin dress. We need not spend more time over this paleographical and statistical identification; and there are, as far as we know, no further references to the Psalms or Odes of Solomon in the lists of canonical books that have come down to us, unless there should be a cryptic allusion to them in the ‘new book of Psalms written for Marcion’, which the Muratorian Canon (sec. ii–iii) condemns, or the ψαλμοὶ ἰδιωτικοί which the Council of Laodicea (c. A.D. 360) prohibits from being used in the Church. In the latter case we have the opinion of John Zonaras in favour of the identification. But Zonaras in the twelfth century was probably, like ourselves, engaged in speculation. On the other hand, if we might describe ψαλμοὶ ἰδιωτικοί as meaning Psalms of personal experience, the term would exactly suit our collection of Odes.

We pass on, then, from catalogues of canonical books and their

¹ Isidore, De ordine libb. S. Script., P. L. lxxxiii. 155 ff.

² For the persistence of the tradition as to the five Salomonic books see Nestle, Zeitschrift f. alttest. Wiss., 1909, xxvii. 294 ff.

stichometry to the evidence furnished for the Odes of Solomon by actual patristic and quasi-patristic quotation.

We begin with a reference in the Divine Institutes of Lactantius, to which, as far as we know, the attention of English readers was first drawn by Whiston in his Authentic Records.¹ Here we find Lactantius saying in the fourth book² as follows:

‘Salomon in Ode undevicesima ita dicit: Infirmatus est uterus Virginis et accepit foetum et gravata est, et facta est in multa miseratione mater virgo.’

Lactantius tells us to look for this passage in the 19th Ode of Solomon,³ and we immediately verify this on turning to our text. The only discordance appears to be the first word infirmatus, which stands in the place of an obscure Syriac word, and is itself obscure in the meaning. Of this more presently.

Before the discovery of the actual text of the Odes had made this identification possible, it had been acutely suggested by Ryle and James, in their edition of the eighteen Psalms of Solomon, that the reference of Lactantius proved that at one time more Salomonic matter was available than the eighteen known Psalms; and that it was probable that the original collection of the Psalms of Solomon was fitted with an appendix of the Odes of Solomon, the added matter being approximately equal in length to the original collection, and either Christian or marked by distinctly Christian interpolations. This was a brilliant piece of divination. It was not, however, necessary that the supposed appendix should come last. Our text shows it in the front place. No doubt there are two traditions as regards the order, as we shall see more clearly presently.

¹ Vol. i. 155.

² De Div. Inst. iv. 12.

³ There is no reason to doubt the reference which is in all MSS. of the apparatus of Brandt's edition: the number is wanting in the MS. Kk. 4. 17 of the Cambridge University Library, but is found in Gg. 4. 24 of the same collection. We must certainly edit ‘undevicesima’ in Lactantius's text: the fact that no number is given in the Epitome of the Institutes does not invalidate this conclusion. The number was not wanted in an Epitome.

It was not unnatural to infer from the existence of the aforesaid quotation in the beginning of the fourth century, taken along with the fact that Lactantius, when quoting Greek books, such as Hermes Trismegistus or the Sibyl, quotes in Greek and does not offer a translation, that the Odes were current in a Latin version at the date mentioned. Further examination throws grave doubt on the accuracy of this suggestion. On reading over the fourth book of Lactantius's Institutes we came to the conclusion that it was based throughout upon a volume of Testimonia adversus Iudaeos, agreeing closely with the treatment of Cyprian of the same theme, and that, in particular, the quotation about the Virgin Birth is one of the anti-Judaic extracts in the collection. We thus arrived in this examination at the same result as Pichon, in his study of Lactantius, who is followed pretty closely by Bernard in his introduction to the Odes of Solomon. The matter is so important in view of recent investigations, which confer an almost apostolic authority on the primitive collections of Testimonia, that we must examine the question more in detail.

Bernard, then, whose attention had been drawn to the matter by Lawlor, put the case as follows :

‘In Pichon’s study of Lactantius, it is pointed out that his Bible quotations do not exhibit any special familiarity with the Old Testament—he only became a Christian while living in Nicomedia—and Pichon thinks that he may have got them from a collection of Testimonia like Cyprian’s. If this be a well-grounded opinion, we can understand how Lactantius, alone among the Fathers, Eastern or Western, could have made the mistake of quoting the Odes as genuine Solomonic prophecy. He did not accurately know the limits or contents of the Old Testament. Other Fathers may have known the Odes, and probably some of them did, but they knew that they were not Scripture, so they did not quote them.’

‘The evidence, then, of Lactantius amounts to this—that the Odes were known, and were ascribed to Solomon before the year 305 in the district of Nicomedia. We cannot be sure of the existence of a Latin version, nor even whether Lactantius had access to them in Greek or Syriac, but we can be sure that he counted them genuine writings of Solomon.'

We agree that there is no evidence for the existence of a Latin Version; there is, however, evidence for the existence of a Latin Testimony Book, containing one sentence of the Odes of Solomon. It is the composer of this Testimony Book, or the person who interpolated Solomon into it, to whom Bernard's remarks apply about his not knowing accurately the contents of the Old Testament. Thus Lactantius moves off the scene altogether, and we have instead to chase, and if possible to catch, the editor of the Testimony Book who is responsible for the insertion of the passage. To do this we must move into a much earlier time than Lactantius. We note in passing that if it can be established that Lactantius and Cyprian are using the same Latin collection of Testimonies, Cyprian has dropped the Odes from his tradition; this agrees with what we have shown above, that they were not a part of the canonical Scriptures at Carthage in Cyprian's day. But, if Cyprian dropped the passage, to what Father, at an earlier date, are we to credit their insertion? It is almost certain, as a result of recent investigations, that the Testimony Book in its earliest form antedates the New Testament, and is of Apostolic origin. How far back towards such an early origin does the quotation of Lactantius take us? The answers to these questions are of the first importance. We shall return to them again, when we come to discuss the date and authorship of the Odes in a subsequent chapter. For the present we content ourselves with stating the following positions:

(i) Lactantius in his fourth book of Divine Institutes is working from a Testimony Book as the foundation of his argument.

(ii) This Testimony Book was written in African Latin, and agrees closely with the Testimonia of Cyprian.

(iii) Where Lactantius diverges from Cyprian, as in the addition of uncanonical matter, it often happens that the divergent and additional matter will be found in Justin Martyr.

(iv) It is a reasonable inference from the foregoing that the common origin of Testimonia of Lactantius and Cyprian is earlier than the time of Justin Martyr.

Under the first head, which can be easily verified by a careful student, a detailed proof will be found in the recently published volume entitled Testimonia.¹ We note here the following points: the chapter in which Lactantius discourses of the Virgin Birth is headed editorially as follows:

‘De Iesu ortu ex Virgine, de eius Vita, Morte, et Resurrectione; atque de iis rebus testimonia Prophetarum.’

The chapter opens as follows:

‘Descendens itaque de caelo sanctus ille Spiritus Dei sanctam Virginem, cuius utero se insinuaret, elegit. At illa divino Spiritu hausto repleta concepit, et sine ullo attactu viri repente virginalis uterus intumuit. Quod si animalia quaedam vento et aura concipere solere omnibus notum est, cur quisquam mirum putet, cum Spiritu Dei, cui facile est quicquid velit, gravatam esse Virginem dicimus? Quod sane incredibile posset videri, nisi hoc futurum ante multa saecula Prophetae cecinissent.’

It is clear from the foregoing that Lactantius is going to use Testimonies from the Prophets in proof of the Virgin Birth. He proceeds at once to the passage in the Odes, ‘Solomon says in the nineteenth Ode’, and then continues as follows:

‘Item propheta Esaias, cuius verba sunt haec: Propter hoc dabit Deus ipse vobis signum. Ecce Virgo accipiet in utero et pariet filium, et vocabitis nomen eius Hemanuel.’

This is Cyprian, Testimonies, ii. 9. And that Lactantius is not only quoting prophets, but quoting them adversus Iudaeos, appears from what follows:

‘Quid hoc manifestius dici potest? Legebant ista Iudaei, qui eum negaverunt.’

¹ Testimonia, by Rendel Harris and Vacher Burch (Cambridge University Press).

Very well, then: Lactantius quoted his passage from the Odes of Solomon by the way of a Testimony Book of an earlier day than his own, in which he found the Odes quoted as Solomon's, Solomon himself being numbered amongst the prophets. The introductory formulae:

‘*Salomon in ode undevicesima ;
Item Esaias ;*’

are easily seen to be entirely in the manner of the Testimony Book.¹

That the Testimony Book of Lactantius was in Latin, and of the Cyprianic type is seen by the fact that the editors use Lactantius's quotations to edit Cyprian by.

That Lactantius agrees with Justin in presenting an earlier type of quotation than Cyprian may be seen in a number of ways. Here is a single instance: in the eighteenth chapter of the fourth book, Lactantius quotes against the Jews a passage from Esdras:

‘Apud Esdram ita scriptum erat:

Hoc pascha Salvator noster est et refugium nostrum,’ etc.

This unknown extract from Esdras is found again in Justin's Dialogue with Trypho, chap. 72:

Καὶ εἶπεν Ὁ Εὐδρας τῷ λαῷ·

Τοῦτο τὸ πάσχα ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν καὶ ἡ καταφυγὴ ἡμῶν· and it is one of the passages which Justin says the Jews have removed from the Bible; an explanation which probably means that he used it as an argument from his Testimony Book and could not verify it from the Scriptures. The concurrence of Lactantius and Justin in anti-Judaic matter is significant. It appears, then, that as early as the first half of the second century, the Odes of Solomon could be quoted as a part of the Old Testament, and that at this date they passed as being the work of Solomon.

¹ Having shown the origin of Lactantius's quotation, the force is taken out of attempts to find parallels to the Odes of Solomon elsewhere in Lactantius. The most striking parallel is in De Divin. Instit. iv. 26 ‘Is, qui humilis advenerat ut humilibus et infirmis opem ferret et omnibus spem salutis ostenderet, eo genere afficiendus fuit, quo humiles et infirmi solent, ne quis esset omnino, qui eum non posset imitari.’ This makes a very good commentary on Ode vii. 4, ‘Like my nature He became that I might put Him on’, but is not to be taken as derived from it.

The next stage in the identification of the Odes is concerned with the fact that five of them are quoted in the curious Gnostic book which passes under the name of the Pistis Sophia, where they are definitely referred to Solomon, are evidently transcribed from the author's Biblical text, and in one instance the quoted Ode has a number from which important inferences may be made. These five Odes are printed in full in our previous volume, in the Sahidic language in which they occur, with the commentaries and explanations offered by the author of the Pistis Sophia, and we do not need to recapitulate the textual evidence. Neither is it necessary to discuss in detail the composition of this strange book, the wildest of all the productions of Gnosticism that are extant. It is sufficient for our purposes to remember that the unique MS. in which the Pistis Sophia is found is credited to the sixth century, and that the book itself can hardly be later in date than the end of the third century. At first sight, then, it appears to be the terminus ad quem for the Odes which it quotes; but we must remember what has resulted from our examination of the citation in Lactantius, that the passage in Lactantius is taken from a book of Testimonies, which are probably at least as early as the second century; so that the honour of the first chronological evidence for the Odes of Solomon does not any longer lie with the Pistis Sophia.

Let us now see the way in which the writer of the Pistis Sophia makes use of the Odes. His method consists in working out a game of question and answer between Jesus and the disciples (male and female) who are gathered round him on the Mount of Olives. The Saviour takes a Psalm of David, disguises it carefully by the substitution of Gnostic terms for the ordinary Biblical language, and then asks for the solution of the meaning and origin of the fantastic Scripture which he has manufactured. One or other of the disciples solves the riddle, and recites the Psalm which has been perverted. We have in this way what has been described as a Gnostic Targum preceding the text that is Targumized. Then, after the solution has been found, the whole Psalm is sometimes gone over sentence by sentence with its parallel Gnostic equivalent; this is what may be called for convenience the Gnostic commentary. Psalm after Psalm of the Biblical Psalter is treated in this way, and then referred to its place in the Psalter and to the Davidic authorship, usually in a formula like the following:

‘This is what your Light-Power (a substitute for the Divine Name) prophesied through David in the 69th Psalm.’

Intermingled with these Gnosticised Psalms of David, we have, as stated above, five Odes of Solomon similarly treated; and because the treatment is similar we are entitled to say that the author of the Pistis Sophia found the Salomonic matter in his Old Testament, where it ranked along with the Davidic Psalter. Let us see how he introduces them when they are identified by the disciples.

The first Ode is introduced as follows:

‘Mary the mother of Jesus answered and said: My Lord, thy Power of Light prophesied aforetime in these words through Solomon in his ninetecnth Ode and said: The Lord is on my head like a crown,’ &c.

Here the reference to the 19th Ode shows that we have the missing first Ode of our collection, taken from a text in which the Odes were preceded by the eighteen Psalms of Solomon, and numbered continuously with them, only in the reverse order of the relative position of Psalms and Odes from what we find in the Syriac MSS.

The fifth Ode is introduced as follows:

‘And it came to pass when Jesus had done speaking these words to His disciples, that Salome stepped forward and said: My Lord, my [? thy] Power constrains me to tell the solution of the words which Pistis Sophia spake. Thy Power prophesied aforetime through Solomon and said: I will give thanks to thee, O Lord,' &c.

The sixth Ode is introduced as follows:

'Peter stepped forward and said: My Lord, as to the solution of the words which thou hast spoken, thy Power of Light prophesied aforetime through Solomon in his Odes.'

The 22nd Ode is introduced as follows:

'And the Prime Mystery (i.e. Jesus) answered and said: Matthew. I bid thee produce the solution of the hymn which Pistis Sophia uttered. And Matthew answered and said: As to the solution of the hymn which Pistis Sophia uttered, thy Power of Light prophesied aforetime in the Ode of Solomon; He who brought me down,' &c.

The 25th Ode is introduced as follows:

'And the Prime Mystery answered and said unto Thomas: I bid thee produce the solution of the hymn, which Pistis Sophia hymned upwards to me. And Thomas answered and said: My Lord, as to the hymn which Pistis Sophia uttered, when she was liberated from Chaos, thy Power of Light prophesied aforetime through Solomon the Son of David in his Odes: I was rescued from my bonds,' &c.

Over and above these references to the Odes, when they are discovered by the acuteness of the disciples, we have in the commentaries an occasional reference to the Salomonic authorship; e.g. in referring to Ode vi, Peter says:

'Listen, my Lord, I will utter the word boldly (ἐν παρρησίᾳ) after the fashion that thy power prophesied through Solomon.'

Referring to Ode xxii Matthew says:

'This, then, my Lord, is the solution of the hymn which Pistis Sophia uttered. Listen, then, I will recite it frankly. The word which thy Power spoke through Solomon,' &c.

For Ode xxv Thomas is the speaker, who says :

‘ This, then, my Lord, is the solution of the Penitence which Pistis Sophia uttered, when she was freed from Chaos : listen, then, I will speak boldly (ἐν παρρησίᾳ) : the word which thy Power of Light spake through Solomon ; I was rescued from my bonds,’ &c.

It will be seen that it is only in the first Ode that we have the number of the hymn given ; fortunately for us it was so given, as it enabled us to restore the Ode to its right place. The author of the Pistis Sophia had been misled by the similarity in one of its sentences to the fifth Ode, and had attached them to the explanation of that Ode.

We have now shown that the author of the Pistis Sophia had the Odes in his Biblical text, preceded, in all probability, by the Psalms of Solomon, and like them, ascribed to Solomon. He uses them alternately with the Davidic Psalms as being of equal, or approximately equal authority. This is not, however, all that we discover from the use of the Canonical Psalms in the Pistis Sophia. About ten years before the discovery of the Odes Dr. Budge published the Sahidic Psalter in a complete form from a sixth-century papyrus MS. When* we compare the text of the Psalms in the Pistis Sophia with that of this newly published Sahidic Psalter we find that they are the same text with microscopic variations.¹ Either the Pistis Sophia was written in Sahidic, and naturally employed the Sahidic Psalter, or the translator who turned the Pistis Sophia into Sahidic reverted to the Sahidic Psalter when he came to translate the Psalms which he found in his text. And as we have shown that the treatment of the Salomonic Odes and the Davidic Psalms in the Pistis Sophia is strictly parallel, we are entitled to infer with strong probability that the Odes of Solomon have also been taken from the Sahidic Bible. That is to say.

¹ Rahlfs has pointed out that this is not true of the Psalms xxx (xxx), xxxiv (xxxv), li (lii), and cviii (cix), which show signs of independent translation ; v. infra.

before the end of the third century, there was a Sahidic Bible, as well as a Greek Bible, containing both the Davidic Psalter and the Psalms and Odes of Solomon. The antiquity which this consideration assigns to the Odes in their first form must be very great.

Incidentally we have shown that the Sahidic Bible must be also earlier than the end of the third century. This is a distinct gain to our knowledge of the versions. When Professor Burkitt wrote his article on the Texts and Versions of the Bible for the Encyclopaedia Biblica, he could only say that 'the Sahidic version is probably of considerable antiquity', and that it can be traced back to the early part of the fourth century. The suggestion which he made that the orthodox Psalter had been used by the writer of the Pistis Sophia to make his unorthodox matter more respectable is negatived by a careful reading of the book, in which the canonical Psalms are seen to be a necessary part of the argument throughout.

CHAPTER II

QUOTATIONS OF ODES IN THE EARLY FATHERS.

WE may now pass on to the consideration of the traces of the Odes in the writings of the Fathers of the Church. We have already shown that the quotation made by Lactantius comes through the medium of a collection of Testimonia very similar to the Testimonies of Cyprian, and earlier in date than the latter. It need hardly be said that these Testimonies are not of Latin origin: they must be translations from either the Greek or some Oriental language. Thus we have no Latin evidence, as yet, for the Odes. When we turn to the Greek Fathers the poverty of evidence is almost as conspicuous. The only passage, as far as we know, in Greek Patristic literature that has yet been claimed as a transference from the Odes is the introductory sentences of the catechetical lectures of Cyril of Jerusalem, addressed to candidates for baptism, to which Dr. Bernard has drawn attention. It runs as follows :

‘Already is there on you the savour of blessedness, O ye who are soon to be enlightened ; already are you gathering spiritual flowers, to weave heavenly crowns withal ; already hath the fragrance of the Holy Spirit refreshed you ; already are you at the entrance hall of the King’s house : may you be brought into it by the King ! For now the blossoms of the trees have budded ; may but the fruit likewise be perfected.’¹

It must be recognized that there is some parallelism between this passage and the first Ode of our collection, in which we have an unfading crown of Truth which blossoms upon the head of the singer, and brings forth fruits that are full and perfect.

One might, perhaps, add a further parallel for the ‘fragrance of the Holy Ghost’ from Ode xi. 15 :

‘My nostrils had the pleasure
Of the pleasant odour of the Lord.’

Dr. Bernard suggests that the first Ode had actually been sung before the delivery of the address to the Catechumens, and that Cyril’s language was suggested to him by the song.

We shall return to the question of the supposed dependence of Cyril upon the Odes in a later chapter.

Meanwhile it is sufficient to state that we have not hitherto found any other passage in the Greek Fathers which has been claimed as evidence of a direct dependence upon the Odes of Solomon : we shall now turn farther east in search of parallels, after which we will return to the evidence of Greek Patristic literature.

When we pass from the Greek and Latin Churches and examine the Syriac literature, we come across indisputable traces of the

¹ Translated by J. H. Newman in Library of the Fathers.

Odes, both in the form of direct quotations and indirect allusions. Nothing definite can be found, as far as we know, in the pages of Aphrahat; but when we come to the works attributed to Ephrem Syrus we find ourselves in an atmosphere where the Odes are certainly at home. We use the expression 'works attributed to Ephrem' because we are obliged to recognize that a good many Syriac compositions bear his name without his authority, and thus acquire an artificial eminence. We may have to revise the mark of authorship in some cases; at present it stands for what it is worth. We are looking, in the first instance, for traces of the Odes in Syriac, and we find such traces in works attributed to Ephrem.

For example, here is a certain quotation from the Odes. In a series of discourses on Paradise Ephrem tells us:

'For nothing there is idle (or useless).—Ed. Rom. iii. 584.

which is almost exactly the language of Ode xi. 23:

'There is abundant room in thy Paradise,
And nothing is useless therein;
But everything is filled with fruit.'

The Syriac of both is:

ܠܐ ܥܝܢ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ—Ephrem.
ܠܐ ܥܝܢ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ—Ode Sol.

In the same series of hymns we find that Ephrem has made explanation for us of an obscure passage in the same Ode:

'They have turned away the bitterness of the trees,
When they were planted in thy land.'—Ode xi. 21.

To which apparently the following of Ephrem corresponds:

'The Devil caused the tares to grow that he might choke the fair plants;
But the Blessed One in His glorious Paradise
sweetens their bitterness.—Ed. Rom. iii. 588.

An almost exact quotation from and imitation of the 13th Ode ('Behold, the Lord is our mirror') occurs in Ephrem, who, by the have wiped away by it: their beauties have become fair by it. Blessed is he who reproves his own hatefulness by 'the sight of' thy beauty: and on whom thou hast imprinted thy likeness.'

There can be no doubt that this section of the Hymn of Ephrem is based on the 13th Ode of Solomon (there is also an accessory parallel to Ode xv. 3, 'Eyes I have acquired', &c.). It becomes a matter of interest to inquire whether the Ode read in its first clause 'The Lord is our mirror' or 'The water is our mirror'. If we examine the composition of the poem from which our extract is taken, we see that it is a series of adorations addressed to Christ under various titles. For example, He is:

- 'The Treasurer of the Father',
- 'The High Priest',
- 'The Dew and the Hyssop',
- 'The treasure of the poor, and fountain of the thirsty',
- 'The rock upon which the Gentile Church is built',
- 'The Door of Truth',
- 'The refining furnace',
- 'The yoke that makes the bondman free',
- 'The pure mirror',
- 'The Vine',
- 'The Bread',
- 'The shipmaster who brings his ship to the haven'.

These titles of Christ show that it is Himself who is intended by the 'pure mirror', and that in Ephrem's book of Odes the 13th Ode began like ours. It is probable that the 'pure mirror' is an alternative form of the ἑσοπτρον ἀκηλίδωτον of the Wisdom of Solomon, in which case it certainly did not stand, in the first instance, for the water of baptism. That 'the Lord is our mirror' appears also from the reference to 'thy beauty', 'thy likeness'; cf. the language of the Ode, 'Love His holiness and clothe yourselves with it'.

The reader will hardly fail to note that in the successive stanzas of the hymn we have been considering, there are suggestions of further parallels with the Odes of Solomon.

For instance, we shall find that Christ is called the 'purifying dew'; this goes back to the Old Testament (Deut. xxii. 2, and elsewhere), and is a common figure in the Odes, 'Bedew us with thy dew', 'The dew of the Lord', &c. The 'gracious one who chose the Gentiles and tolerates their blemishes, because he receives the penitent', is the same Christ who in the Odes is Himself 'unpolluted by His love for the Gentiles, because they confessed Him in high places'. (See Odes iii. 10; xxxv. 1; x. 5.)

The Christ who is 'the rock upon which the Gentile Church is built', is the one referred to in Ode xxii. 12, as the 'Rock which is the foundation of everything, upon which thou didst build thy kingdom'.

The 'yoke that makes bondmen free' is illustrated by Ode xvii. 11, Ode xlii. 7, 8, 20. 'All my bondmen', 'my yoke over those that know me', 'they are free men, they are mine', and note the parallelism between, 'by thy aid he has led captive his captivity', and Ode x. 3, 'to lead captive a good captivity for freedom' (cf. Ps. lxviii. 18).

Last of all, there is the figure of Christ as the Shipmaster who brings his glorious ship out of the turbid sea to the haven of life and the haven of peace. The original of this is, of course, Psalm cvii. 30, 'So he bringeth them to their desired haven', 'they are glad because they are quiet'; but the proximate parallel is Ode xxxviii: 'the Truth led me and brought me to the Haven of Salvation—the ascent of immortal life'.

It is Ephrem, then, who is responsible for reading 'water' instead of 'Lord' in the opening of the Ode. It is quite impossible to approve his correction, however attractive it may have seemed to a primitive exegete. Dr. Abbott was certainly right when he said that 'to emend "the Lord is our mirror" into "the water is our mirror" would be, in my judgement, to degrade a simple, deep, noble and truly poetic conception into a (comparatively speaking) artificial, thin, and elaborate conceit'.¹

Mr. Aytoun reminds us that Ephrem's language has affected Moses Bar Kepha in his tract on the Mysteries of Baptism, 'When thou lookest on the water thou seest in it another in thine own likeness—like thee. Here thou wilt perceive that thou goest down to baptism one person, and comest up another instead, the new instead of the old'. The same transference of ideas can be traced in other Syriac writers.

To return to Ephrem and his acquaintance with the Odes, which is the question upon which we are engaged.

In the very obscure 24th Ode, which appears to be a combination of the Baptism of our Lord with the story of the Flood and the descent into Hades, we are told that :

'The abysses were seeking for the Lord, as women in travail :
And He was not given to them for food,
Because He did not belong to them.'

If this is rightly understood of the descent into Hades, we have striking parallels to the starving abyss in the Carmina Nisibena of Ephrem, e. g. :

'I, Sheol, was fed upon the dead,
Yes! I feasted upon corpses.
Elijah slew the prophets of Baal,
And gave me those who on the bread of Jezebel had waxed fat.
The righteous had constrained me to devour,
But Jesus compelled me to disgorge all I had eaten.'
Carmin. Nisib. 39, 18.

'Gluttonous death lamented and said, I have learned fasting which I used not to know One man has closed my mouth, mine, who have closed the mouths of many.'—Ibid. 35, 8.

The suggestion is natural that the hungry Hades in Ode xxiv is the Abyss which cries in vain for food to the triumphant Lord who liberates the imprisoned souls. In that case we should have a parallel between Ephrem and the Odes, which is not far from a dependence of the former upon the latter.

¹ Light on the Gospel, p. 416.

For another instance of the way in which Ephrem modifies the Ode from which he borrows, we may take the opening of the ninth Epiphany Hymn (i. 89), from which we took the reference furnished by 'the water':

'O John! who sawest the Spirit
Which dwelt on the head of the Son;
That She (the Spirit) might show that the head of heaven
Had descended and been baptised,
And (from the water) had gone up to be the head of earth;
You have therefore become children of the Holy Spirit.
Christ has become your head;
And you are become his members.'

Dr. Wensinck noted that the last two lines were parallel to Ode iii. 2, 'His members are with Him', and Ode xvii. 15, 'because they were members to me, and I was their head'; but he did not seem to notice that the opening sentences were based on Ode xxiv:

'The Dove flew over the head of the Messiah
Because He was her head.'

A couplet which was quite primitive in its unorthodox doctrine of the subordination of the Spirit to the Son. The play upon the word 'head' which occurs in Ephrem is due to the fact that he is trying to make the Ode which he borrows orthodox. He explains carefully that Christ is the head of heaven (not of the Spirit), and that he becomes the head of earth also, for are not believers His members? We may take it that Ephrem was acquainted with the 24th Ode, which he borrowed and modified.

The point which we have established is Ephrem's acquaintance with the Odes and his dependence upon them. This means that he had the Odes in a Syriac dress, for he did not know Greek, nor Greek literature, except as translated. Thus the Odes must have been extant in Syriac before the latter part of the fourth century.

The Syriac Odes known to Ephrem must have been the same Odes as have come down to ourselves.

A curious case of the dependence of Ephrem on the Odes may be noted in Ode xxxiv. 1, where Ephrem says:

‘The way is easy for the simple’ (Eph., R. E. ii. 486); which is an obvious adaptation of

‘No way is hard where there is a simple heart.’

In Ode xxxviii. 4 the expression

‘Because it was and is the Truth’ appears to have been reflected on ‘Because He was Truth which He (also) is’ (Ephr., R. E. ii. 388).

The next step in the inquiry as to the Patristic attestation of the Odes is the discovery that Ephrem refers to the Manichaeans, or to Bardaisan the teacher of Mani (as he calls him), a belief that the sun and moon receive mutually light one from the other. Now this belief is involved in the language of Ode xvi. 17, where the meaning was not detected by the first editors of the Odes. Literally the passage runs:

‘And by their reception one from the other, they (sc. the sun and the night) fill up (or speak) the beauty of God’ (Ode xvi. 17);

with which we compare:¹

‘Let us say what they say,
But let us not assert what they assert.
They say that it is the sun who receives this light from the moon:
Beautiful (ملم) are these receivers,
Who receive one from the other,’

(مفعلهم من صم ص) which agrees closely with the Ode:

مفعولهم من صم ص؟

the subject being, as we suppose, the sun and moon in both cases.²

¹ Ephrem, Second Discourse to Hypatius, ed. Mitchell, p. 20.

² See the note attached to the Ode in question.

the character and teaching of Bardaisan, such an inquiry, for instance, as is made in the very adequate discussion which Abbé Nau has prefixed to his study of Bardaisan in the Syriac Patrology, leads directly to the conclusion that the character of Bardaisan has been systematically blackened by Ephrem, who connects him with the worst aberrations of the Manichaeans, and thus makes a typical Gnostic out of a man who was, in all probability, as good a Christian as himself. In his early days Bardaisan was a follower of the Babylonian astrology, and he himself admitted in his later days that he had been thus misled; it was, probably, his knowledge of astrology which, in the first instance, cast a shadow over his great name. Although the fragments of the Bardesanian tradition which have come down to us are scanty, enough remains to indicate important correspondences with the teaching and language of the Odes. For example, it has been often observed that the creed of the Odists was defective in the article of the Resurrection. The teaching of Bardaisan had the same lacuna.

It appears that Bardaisan and his school held dishonouring views of the Human Body as the seat of evil, and that they interpreted the Body as the Coat of Skin which the Soul has to shed. It is clear that they had a very strongly stated doctrine of the Coat of Skin, and Ephrem makes emphatic protest against it. The heretics whom he denounces talked of the 'intoxicating foulness of the body', and that it was 'a hateful harp which prevented the melody of Truth from being played upon its strings'.¹

Ephrem protests nobly against this depreciation of the Human Body, and maintains that 'the Body is akin to all the beauties of the Soul, and a partner with it in all good things. By means of the Body the Soul preaches truth in all the world, and the Body is a pure harp for the Soul'.

Ephrem will not allow that the Soul has put on the Coat of Skin over itself. He expresses himself ironically: 'How pleasing it must have been to the subtle nature of the Soul to put on the gross coat of the vile Body! For the Body is vile according to their account'. 'But', says Ephrem, 'it is not vile, because the Soul praises Him who clothed it with the rational covering of Intelligent Senses.'¹ Ephrem makes a similar reply to the Apostates who hold the doctrine that the Body is a vile 'Coat of Skin' to the Soul, by affirming that the Body is not necessarily impure, nor the Soul necessarily pure.

¹ See Ephrem, Fifth Discourse to Hypatius (ed. Mitchell, pp. cii ff.).

'For consider the pure and righteous Body, how it is not such as the Apostates state when they say "that the Body is a covering which is from the evil Nature", nor is the Soul, as they say, from a pure root. For the eyes of the glorious body clothe themselves with chastity, its ears with purity, its limbs with glory, its senses with holiness; in its mouth is praise, and on its tongue is thanksgiving, and on its lips is blessing,' &c.²

The protest which Ephrem makes against the doctrine of the 'Coat of Skin' is a noble one. It is not necessary to assume that the doctrine, in the form in which Ephrem denounces it, is the actual doctrine of the Odes. There has been an accentuation put upon the Odes, or upon some expressions in them, in a Gnostic direction.

It is quite clear from these references that the Coat of Skin and the Harp of the Spirit, which we find so often referred to in the Odes, were a part of the theological furniture of Bardaisan and his followers, and that Ephrem resents the interpretation which they have put upon the language of the Odists; for our present purpose the coincidences in language which are involved in the teaching of the Bardaisan school and the Odes are a further proof, if proof were needed, that the Odes were known in Edessa, and that they were in theological use in the system of Bardaisan and his congeners. The Coat of Skin had, according to their teaching, replaced the original Coat of Light; that was the story of the descent of the Soul into the gross material body. The Way of Life consists in finding again the original Robe of Light. We have some account of this in the Hymn of the Soul in the Acts of Thomas, where the Soul coming from its state of pre-existence goes down into Egypt and 'forgets the imperial palace whence it came', and the imperial robe in which it had been arrayed. It is significant that Ephrem in attacking Bardaisan finds fault with this very Hymn of the Soul. He says (l.c., p. cvii):

¹ See Ephrem, Fifth Discourse to Hypatius (ed. Mitchell, p. cvi).

² Ibid., p. lxxi.

'If the Soul came from a place, as they say, who know not what they say, how and why is it not able to return to its natural place? For if it was sent forth when a child, it was here that it received understanding,' &c.

The allusion here is to the opening verses of the Hymn of the Soul,¹ which may be taken on Ephrem's showing as Bardesanian, as had been conjectured on other grounds. We are, then, entitled to say that the doctrines of the Coat of Skin and the Robe of Light, which we find in the Odes, were known to Bardaisan. Thus the Odes must have been known in Edessa before the end of the second century.

A further parallelism between the ideas of Bardaisan and the Odists will be found in the 38th Ode. In this Ode Ephrem discourses at length on Error as a form of intoxication, which Evil produces in those who go astray. Thus he says (Fifth Discourse to Hypatius, p. cxv), that 'Those things which intoxicate us also take away our memory, so that in one respect the drunken ones who go astray are not blamed, for they do not know that they are assuredly going astray.'

We have only to compare with this Ode xxxviii. 12, 13:

'They invite many to the banquet,
And give them to drink of their intoxicating wine;
So that they vomit up their wisdom and intelligence,
And the 'Deceivers' deprive them of understanding.'

'When I was a little child and dwelling in my Kingdom in my Father's House', &c.

Dom Connolly has suggested with some hesitation that there is a quotation from the Odes in an extract from Moses Bar Kepha in a British Museum MS. The passages to be compared are these :

ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲟⲩ ⲁⲟⲩ ⲁⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲟⲩ ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ

‘The likeness of that which is below is that which is above;’

Ode Sol. xxxiv 4.

ⲁⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲁⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ ⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓ

‘For they say: The likeness of what is above are those things that are below.’—Moses Bar Kepha (Exposition of the Jacobite Liturgy), in Brit. Mus. Add. 21210, fol. 51 b.

Bar Kepha is explaining that the deacons with their fans represent the cherubim and seraphim, which is good enough allegory for the ninth century. Dom Connolly says that it is obvious that there is some close connexion between the two passages quoted above; but hesitates to claim dependence of Bar Kepha upon the Odes, on account of the ambiguity of the expression ‘they say’, with which Bar Kepha introduces the matter. We do not think he need have hesitated. It is almost certain that Bar Kepha is acquainted with the Odes in this passage and elsewhere.

We have stated in a previous passage that there had not been recognized up to the present time any quotations in the Odes in the writings of the Greek Fathers, unless we were to make an exception in favour of Cyril of Jerusalem and the prologue to his catechetical lectures. We are now going to show reason for believing that Eusebius of Caesarea was acquainted with the Odes.

In the tenth Book of his Demonstratio Evangelica (c. 8), Eusebius establishes the Messianic character of the 22nd Psalm, as shown by the agreement between its language and the Passion story in the Gospels. In the course of his argument he comes to the verse in which the Psalmist describes himself as surrounded by dogs and hemmed in by a congregation of evildoers. In the text of the LXX it runs thus :

ἐκύκλωσάν με κύνες πολλοί, συναγωγὴ πονηρευομένων περιέσχον με.

The question naturally arises whether this text does not underlie the passage in the 28th Ode (v. 13), where the speaker says that

‘They came round me like mad dogs,
Who ignorantly attack their masters.’

Let us see whether this is more than an accidental coincidence.

Eusebius explains that the dogs in the Psalm are the assembly of the rulers of the Jews who sought for the blood of Christ. Isaiah had also called them dogs, stupid dogs, who did not know how to bark (Isa. lvi. 10). If they had been good dogs they would have known how to bark intelligently at the guardians of the spiritual flock of the house of Israel, and how to fawn upon and to recognize their master (ἐπιγινώσκοντας τὸν αὐτῶν δεσπότην) and chief shepherd: and they would have watchfully guarded the flock entrusted to them, and, if they had barked at all, it would have been at those who had evil designs upon the flock: instead of that, after the fashion of dogs really stupid and mad (ἐνεῶν ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ μεμνηότων) they set up a howling, and drove wild the shepherd’s sheep. There can be no doubt that in his comments on the 22nd Psalm Eusebius has made use of the 28th Ode of Solomon; for here we have not only the encircling dogs, but also the statement that they are mad and do not recognize their own master. Eusebius, therefore, knew the Odes, and it is also abundantly clear that the language of the Odes is borrowed from the 22nd Psalm, and that the speaker of the verses which we have been discussing must be Christ Himself.

And if we are satisfied that the Odist found his mad dogs in the 22nd Psalm, we shall be justified in reading in verse 17 of the Ode that for this is Psalm xxii. 18, ‘upon my vesture did they cast lots’.

‘Vainly did they cast lots against me’;

The personation of Christ by the Odist probably begins with the eighth verse:

‘They who saw me marvelled at me,
Because I was persecuted,’ &c.

In that case, too, the statement that ‘My birth was not like theirs’ is to be interpreted of the generation of Christ.

In the editio princeps it was remarked that ‘perhaps the writer was speaking in these verses as if in the person of Christ’. The observation appears to be justified.

The same passage of the Psalms which we have expounded in Eusebius recurs in Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrrhus, and with the very same explanation. Theodoret says that our Lord was surrounded by dogs and bulls, according to the Psalms: the bulls are the Jews who are, or should be, under the yoke of the law: they hand over our Lord to the unclean Gentiles, who pass under the name of dogs. After the Passion many of the dogs passed over into the rank of sons, and conversely: so that now the unbelieving Jews received the appellation of dogs because, after the fashion of dogs, they had gone mad against the Master:

τὴν κυνῶν προσηγορίαν ἐδέξαντο, ἅτε δὴ κυνῶν δίκην κατὰ τοῦ δεσπότου λυσσῆσαντες.

The concurrence of Eusebius and Theodoret in quoting the 22nd Psalm with the singular number for δεσπότης shows that we should correct the Syriac text of the Ode from ܕܥܡܝܢܐ to ܕܥܡܝܢܐ, and read that the dogs ‘came unwittingly against their Master’. Labourt and Batiffol have, in fact, translated it so; ‘comme des chiens enragés, ceux qui dans leur inconscience marchent contre leur Seigneur’. Flemming also corrected the plural to a singular.

In the Prophetic Eclogues (ii. 13) Eusebius treats the passage in the Psalm which speaks of the dogs and bulls as encircling our Lord, in an anti-Judaic manner; first, by asking definitely those who vaunt themselves of circumcision, who are the synagogue of evil doers here referred to? and next by answering his own question and saying:

‘Certain evil and beast-like powers wrought out the plot against Him, on whose account He said that “Many bulls encircled me about: fat oxen hemmed me in”; and concerning the synagogue of circumcision that made onslaught against them, he said, "Many dogs encircled me, a synagogue of evil doers hemmed me in," &c.

There can be no doubt as to the place which the Psalm occupied in anti-Judaic theology. We note, in passing, the anti-Judaic accent in the Ode.

Having convicted Eusebius of the use of the Odes in the passage about the mad dogs, we may examine into one or two further coincidences of thought and language.

In the sixth book of the Demonstratio Evangelica (vi. 9, p. 267) Eusebius is arguing, as he does in a number of places, that the 'new song' of the Psalms of David and elsewhere is a prediction of the 'new covenant'. In the 144th Psalm, for instance, we have (1) the inquiry, 'What is man that thou art mindful of him?' (2) the appeal to God to descend from Heaven. 'Bow the heavens and descend, touch the mountains and they will smoke'; (3) the resolve of the Psalmist, 'I will sing a new song unto thee, O God'.

Here, says Eusebius, the Psalmist, 'who marvels at the knowledge of God the Word toward men, is in deep amaze over His kindness, by which He took a lower place than Deity, and minished Himself of His native greatness, and made the human race worthy of His own knowledge:'

Τὴν γὰρ εἰς ἀνθρώπους γινώσκιν τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγου θαυμάζων, ὑπερεκπλήττεται τῆς φιланθρωπίας, δι' ἧς τῆς θεότητος ὑποβὰς καὶ τοῦ συμφυοῦς μεγέθους ἑαυτὸν σμικρύνας, ἡξίωσε τῆς ἰδίας γνώσεως τὸ ἀνθρώπειον γένος.

Now if we compare with this the seventh Ode of Solomon we shall find the following sequence:

'He hath caused me to know Himself without grudging in His simplicity: because His kindness has minished His greatness.'—Ode Sol. vii. 3.

There can be little doubt that the language of Eusebius depends upon the Ode. It helps us to see that 'humbled' for ἡξίωσε 'minished' was an inadequate translation.

The same argument in a narrower compass will be found in the Prophetic Eclogues (ii. 14), where Eusebius tells that :

‘In great amazement the Word says: “Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou regardest him?” For to this very end the Word of God bowed the so-called heavens and descended, in order that He might be known to the race of men to have become incarnate, though He was previously unknown to them.’

When we compare this sentence with the preceding, and with the language of the seventh Ode we can have no doubt that all these passages are connected inter se by the language of the Psalm, and that Eusebius’s comments on the Psalm involve the language of the Ode.

Our next example is from the tenth book of the Demonstratio (D. E. x. 8, p. 499), where Eusebius discourses in detail on the prophecies of the Lord’s suffering and death which are contained in the 22nd Psalm. When he comes to the verses in which Christ speaks to the Father as the one who drew me forth from the womb, and was my hope upon my mother’s breasts, he remarks that the Lord recalled those early days of Divine care for a consolation in His last agonies, and he represents the Messiah as saying :

‘Just as thou wast my help when I assumed a human body, when from the womb of her that bare me, thou thyself, my God and Father, as if playing the midwife’s part, didst draw forth from the womb that flesh which had been prepared for me of the Holy Ghost,’ &c.

in which we see that God the Father is described obstetrically, in harmony with the language of the Psalm, ‘Thou art he that didst draw me forth from the womb’. But this is precisely what is said in the 19th Ode :

‘She had not required a midwife;
For He (sc. the Father) was midwife to her.’

Thus there is no doubt that Eusebius has the 19th Ode in mind : that is shown by the use of the word μαιούμενος (acting the midwife) as well as by the coincidence in thought: but both Eusebius and the Odist are ultimately drawing on Psalm xxii.

The identification is an important one, as the passage in the 19th Ode was thought by Mingana to be decisive as to the Syriac origin of the Odes, on account of the underlying play on the senses of the word ܐܡܝܬܐ: but of this more elsewhere.

The 19th Ode has now been shown conclusively to involve the Virgin Birth, and a Divine accoucheur, and a painless delivery. So that if the Odes are from one hand the writer must have held the fully developed doctrine of the miraculous birth.

In the Prophetic Eclogues (ii. 13) Eusebius discusses the 22nd Psalm and its reference to our Lord. He says that it is matter of general consent among believers that the opening words refer to Christ, for they are the words from the Cross: then he says, in a striking and anti-Judaic manner:

‘Before we begin to take over the prophecy of the Psalm as relating to Him, we will first inquire of those who vaunt themselves over circumcision, Who is the speaker in the Psalm? for it can hardly be an ordinary person who, inter alia, says the words, “Thou art He that didst draw me from my mother’s womb,” &c. It was to Christ, Christ alone, that it was appropriate to use such words to the Father.’

Here Eusebius fastens upon the birth-care of God as something outside ordinary life and faith, in a way that shows him to have in the Prophetic Eclogues the same idea of the miraculous birth as in the Demonstratio.

It is interesting, in this point of view, to notice that the very next page of the chapter of the tenth book of the Demonstratio has significant language regarding the supernatural birth of Christ, which can be paralleled in another of the Odes, from which it is probably derived. Eusebius (D. E. ix. 8, p. 500), continuing his comments on the verse of the 22nd Psalm, says:

“Thou didst cause me to hope when I was upon my mother’s breasts”, makes our Lord say on the Cross that “it is not now for the first time that I begin to hope in Thee, but when I drew my infant nourishment from my mother's breasts, I was thought to be, like human babes, an imperfect and irrational being; yet I was not so, for even though my body was like other men's, yet it did not resemble the general in regard to power or essence," &c.'

Ἐνομιζόμεν ὁμοίως τοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων βρέφεσιν ἀτελὴς εἶναι καὶ ἄλογος· μὴ ὦν γὰρ τοιοῦτος, εἰ καὶ σῶμα μοι ὅμοιον ἀνθρώποις ἦν, ἀλλὰ οὐ κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν οὐδὲ τὴν οὐσίαν τοῖς πολλοῖς ὦν ἐμφερὴς κτέ.

This is closely parallel to Ode xxviii, v. 16, 'I did not perish, for I was not their brother, nor was my birth like theirs'.

In the very same section Eusebius discourses of the descent of the Messiah into Hades, and his language is either borrowed from the Odes, or helps us to understand the meaning of the language of the Odes in obscure passages. For example (D. E. x. 8, p. 501) he tells how Christ descended into Hades, breaking the brazen doors and smashing the iron bars, and setting at liberty those who had aforetime been the bondsmen of Hades. With this last expression we may compare the closing words of the 42nd Ode: 'they are free men and they are mine'.

In the same 42nd Ode there is a curious expression, where the Lord, descending into Hades, is said to have been gall and bitterness to it. This is borrowed from the passage in Isaiah, where the fall of Lucifer is described: in the language of the LXX:

'Hades from beneath was embittered on meeting thee.'

Ὁ ἄδης κάτωθεν ἐπικράνθη συναντήσας σοι.—Isa. xiv. 9.

The objection might be made that the description of the fallen Lucifer is not a suitable parallel for the descending Christ: but this objection is met for us by Eusebius who speaks (D. E. x. 8, p. 503) of the angry demons crowding round Jesus like birds of prey, just as they did round Lucifer in the passage from Isaiah.

If we must not say that Eusebius is here reminiscent of the 42nd Ode, we may say that his language helps us to find the passage in the Old Testament that has influenced the Odist.

As the Peshitta version of Isaiah here follows the Greek, and not the Hebrew, we cannot draw any conclusions as to the original language of the Odes. The recognition of the dependence of Eusebius on the Odes is an important strategic point gained in their interpretation. Inter alia we see that the Odes like the Demonstratio Evangelica are occupied with the interpretation of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and especially with the Psalms. Among the Psalms it is evident that the 22nd Psalm had been an especial object of study: Eusebius devotes nearly a whole book to its Messianic prophecies; and the Odist has also studied it carefully, since he took from it the reference to the 'mad dogs', to the 'casting of lots', and to the miraculous accouchement of the Virgin. This Psalm, then, must have had a larger place among the primitive anti-Judaic Testimonies than we should, perhaps, have suspected; an examination of Cyprian's Testimonies shows four extracts from the Psalm, but not the reference to the mad dogs, nor to the miraculous birth. Gregory of Nyssa has the 'mad dog' passage, and some of the Cyprianic matter in a form that is archaic and anti-Judaic. Enough has been said to emphasize the connexion between Eusebius and the Odes, and between both of them and the primitive anti-Judaic Testimonies.

The discovery of the Eusebian use of the seventh Ode enables us to take a further step in another direction.

In the Acts of Thomas, in the story of the Wild Ass that talked to the Apostle, we have a kind of doxology to Jesus into which Judas Thomas breaks out, in which occurs the following expression:

Δόξα τῇ μεγαλowsύνῃ σου τῇ δι' ἡμᾶς σμικρυνθείᾳ.

Acta Thomae, ed. Bonnet, p. 195.

the parallelism of the language to that of Eusebius invites attention: but as the Greek of the Acts is not the original, we turn to the Syriac and find the words that have been translated:

ܡܥܠܐ ܕܡܥܠܐ ܕܡܥܠܐ ܕܡܥܠܐ ܕܡܥܠܐ

Acta Thomae, ed. Wright, p. 100.

comes to the wedding of the King's daughter, he sings an epithalamium of his own, in praise of the Church as the Bride of Christ, and says of her that

'On her head dwelleth¹ the King,
Who feedeth his dwellers that are beneath;
Truth is placed on her head.'

The conjunction of these clauses is in exact parallelism with

'The Lord is on my head like a crown:

The crown of Truth was woven for me.'—Ode Sol. i. 2.

and makes it clear that the Acta are quoting the Odes. The identification is important, as it confirms what we suspected from other considerations, that the first Ode of Solomon is of the nature of an epithalamium. The crown, moreover, is emphasized as being Truth, just as it is said to be in the ninth Ode of Solomon:

'An everlasting crown is Truth,
Blessed are they that put it on their head.'—Ode Sol. ix. 8.

There is still a question to be solved as to the ultimate meaning of such a statement as 'the Lord is on my head like a crown'. The best parallel that has yet been suggested is the description of

¹ The Greek translator missed the meaning of 𐤀𐤏𐤁 in 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁

and, supposing the root to be 𐤀𐤏𐤁, rendered it ἐν τῇ κορυφῇ ἱδρύται ὁ βασιλεὺς.

He made a similar mistake on p. 𐤀𐤏𐤁, where he rendered

𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁 𐤀𐤏𐤁

'Come, dwell on this unguent as thou didst dwell on the tree'

by ἐνιδρύσθω τῷ ἐλαίῳ τοῦτῳ ὥσπερ ἱδρύνθη ἐν τῷ συγγενεῖ αὐτῷ ξύλῳ ἥ τότε αὐτοῦ δύναιμι.

second, to be available for the author of the Acta Thomae unless it can be shown that there is interpolation in the series of the Odes.

Further traces of the use of the 42nd Ode may be seen in the prayer of Judas Thomas in the bride-chamber in the first Act.

We may compare :

‘Thou didst descend to Sheol and go to its uttermost end’;
Acta Thomae, p. 90.

with

‘I descended with him to the extreme of its depth.’—Ode xlii. 12.

And :

‘Thou didst open its gates and bring up its prisoners’, Acta Thomae, ibid.

with

‘Bring us out from the bonds of darkness, and open to us the gate by which we may come out to thee.’—Ode xlii. 16, 17.

CHAPTER III

QUOTATIONS OF ODES IN THE EARLY FATHERS (continued).

WE come now to a very obscure passage in the Odes, where by a slight emendation the text can be reduced to intelligibility, and, perhaps, dependence upon the Odist can be established on the part of one of the earliest Christian Fathers.

In the 38th Ode we have a story of the triumph of the Odist over the wiles of heresy, perhaps as represented in the persons of a male and female heretic. From the allurements of heresy and the witchcrafts of error the writer is preserved by the Truth which goes with him, and which exposes to him the sophistries and dangers of the aberrant teaching. The Ode says obscurely, according to the rendering of the editio princeps :

‘(The Truth) made clear to me all the poisons of error and the plagues which announce the fear of death.’

For this the second edition substituted :

‘And the plagues of death which they think to be sweetness.’

Here a slight change has been made in the order of the words,¹ and an attempt was also made, following the suggestion of Ungnad and Stärk, to restore ܡܕܡܐ (‘sweetness’) of the MS. for ܡܕܡܐ (‘fear’). This correction is confirmed by the Nitrian MS. The sense, however, is still obscure ; for what meaning can be attached to the ‘sweetness of death’, and how could the ‘plagues of death be thought to be sweetness’, without a strong margin being allowed to the imagination as interpreter of obscure readings?

Our suggestion now is that we follow the reading of the MSS., with a possible displacement of the word ‘death’, and see what can be done to reduce to intelligibility the sentence :

‘All the poisons (or medicaments) of error, and the plagues of death, which they think (or which are supposed) to be sweetness.’

A little lower in the Ode we are told that the teachers of error operate upon their victims with intoxicating wine ; and the suggestion arises that the deadly poison has been introduced into the wine, and that the wine thus drugged has been sweetened with honey. The victims think they are drinking οἶνόμελι : and a reference to the Syriac Lexicon of Brockelmann will show that the Syriac word for ‘wine sweetened with honey’ is ܡܕܡܐ, which is very near in form and meaning to the ‘sweetness’ of the MS.

The very word ܡܕܡܐ in our MSS. can, in fact, be taken to mean ‘sweet drink’. Ephrem, in attacking Bardaisan and his heresies, uses the same figure and the same expression as the Odes. He says that Bardaisan, in composing his Psalter in imitation of David, was ‘administering to the simple bitters in ܡܕܡܐ’. Here

¹ The Syriac tolerates the detachment of the words which we throw into connexion. ‘Plagues of death’ are the same thing, of course, as ‘deadly plagues’.

سحلا is not merely 'sweetness', but something with which the poison is taken, i. e. a sweet drink. It would naturally be equated with the Greek οἶνόμελι:

أهـبـ دـمـاـm

Ephr. R. E. ii. 553 F.

We thus are able to read the sentence in the Ode thus:

'All the drugs of Error and the plagues of death which they think to be honey-wine.'

Now let us turn to the Ignatian Epistles: in his letter to the Trallians (chap. 6) Ignatius warns the Church against those heretics who are mingling poison with Christ, and who give, as it were, some deadly drug along with honey-wine (οἶνόμελι), which the unwary receives with delight (and along with his evil delight, receives death¹). Here, then, we have the very same sequence of ideas as in the Odes, erroneous teaching mingled with truth, like poisonous, deadly drugs in honey-wine.

So we suggest that the Syriac of the Odes has been trying to translate οἶνόμελι (or conversely), and has given a rendering (or a vocable) very similar to that in the Geoponica to which Brockelmann refers.

If this be the case we shall be almost obliged to admit that the Ignatian Epistles have incorporated a quotation or the equivalent of a quotation from the Odes of Solomon.

If this can be maintained we ought to be able to take certain further steps: in the Epistle of Ignatius to the Romans (chap. 7) the prospective martyr speaks of the decline of his natural passions, and of his attachment to the Cross, and says that within him the living water is talking and saying 'Come to the Father'. The water is oracular, like that of the fountain of Daphne, with which the writer was familiar. For the ὕδωρ ζῶν καὶ λαλοῦν Lightfoot argues that we ought to read ὕδωρ ζῶν καὶ ἀλλόμενον, and so to make connexion with the Gospel of John (iv. 14). The reader is referred to the note in the editio princeps (pp. 47, 48), in which it was maintained that Lightfoot's view was untenable, and it was concluded that 'our seventh Ode showed the fitness of the Ignatian expression, but that it was not necessary to assume any connection, either of place or authorship, with the Ignatian letters'. The coincidence of language was established, but not pressed. In view, however, of the possible use of the 38th Ode by Ignatius, the coincidence between the 11th Ode (verse 6) and Ignatius ad Rom. (chap. 7) may be more than accidental.

¹ Greek text somewhat obscure at the end.

The coincidences between the Ignatian Epistles and the Odes are deserving of further attention. Assuming that we are correct in finding in the Odes the Ignatian 'oenomel' into which drugs are put, and assuming that the reference to the 'talking water' is a genuine parallel, we have to ask what is the meaning of these coincidences. If the oracular water is that of the sacred spring at Daphne, as has been suggested by writers on the Ignatian Epistles, the use of the figure for spiritual inspiration might be Ignatius's own. In that case, what of the Odes? Do they copy Ignatius's language? That seems very unlikely. If the 'oenomel' is a correct parallel, it is surely original with the Odists, for it is far more likely that Ignatius, writing letters rapidly on his western journey, should quote the Hymn-book of the time, than that the early Hymn-book should have picked up an obscure passage in a letter which had hardly got into circulation at a very early date.

What shall we say? Is it possible that the Odists are themselves Ignatius? It is well known that there is a tradition in the Church that Ignatius taught the Antiochenes their hymns, that is, that he composed them, words and music. The passage is as follows:

'We must also tell whence the custom of the Church of singing antiphonal hymns had its origin. Ignatius, the third bishop after Peter of the Syrian Antioch, who also had personal intercourse with the Apostles themselves, saw a vision of angels praising the Trinity in Antiphonal hymns, and delivered the fashion of the vision to the church in Antioch: from whence also the same tradition was transmitted to other churches.'—Socrates, Hist. Eccl. vi. 8.

This is the earliest evidence, dating from the middle of the fifth century, for the tradition of Ignatius and his vision of the angelic choirs. Lightfoot points out that it is repeated by later writers, chiefly Syrian, such as Solomon of Bassora, Gregory Bar Hebraeus, Nicephorus Callistus, and Amr of Tīrhān, and says that 'a tradition which appears so late (as the time of Socrates the historian) does not deserve consideration, as containing any element of historical fact'; and that 'antiphonal singing did not need to be suggested by a heavenly vision'. Well, suppose we let the vision go. The tradition, if it has an historical nucleus at all, can hardly be reduced to less than the existence of an Antiochene antiphonal hymn-book and some possible connexion of Ignatius with the same.

Let us see if we can find any further coincidences of language. In Ode VI we have the following expression:

'Blessed are those ministers (διάκονοι) who are entrusted with that water of His.'

Here there is no need to take the term 'ministers' in an ecclesiastical sense, as limited to a third order. In Ignatius we find the following passage:

τῶν διακόνων τῶν ἐμοὶ γλυκυτάτων πεπιστευμένων διακονίαν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.—Ad Magn. 6.

Here we get the same idea of ministers entrusted with ministry, but it is of the formal diaconate that the writer is speaking; he has already referred to bishops and presbyters.

In writing to the Philadelphians, Ignatius asks them to select a special minister, to carry a message to Antioch:

χειροτονῆσαι διάκονον μακάριος ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ὃς καταξιώθησεται τῆς τοιαύτης διακονίας.—Ad Phil. 10.

Here the deacon elected is a kind of superfluous officer, chosen for a particular service. He is described as μακάριος, as in the Odes, and he is happy in being counted worthy of his ministry, which is very near to the πεπιστευμένος of the former passage of the Odes. Taking the two passages together it looks as if Ignatius had the language of the Ode in his mind when he was writing.

In Ode VII, 21 we are told that 'ignorance hath been dissipated because the knowledge of the Lord hath arrived'. This curious statement about the 'dissipation or destruction of ignorance' has a parallel in the epistle of Ignatius to the Ephesians:

'Ignorance was dissipated, the ancient kingdom was destroyed, when God was manifested as man for the renewal of eternal life.'—Ad Eph. 19.

There is a certain degree of parallelism here; but if there is any connexion the priority is with the rhythmic 'sequence of the Ode.

In Ode XVII, 10, 11 we have Christ speaking:

'Nothing appeared closed to me:
Because I was the door of everything:
And I went towards all my bondsmen to loose them.'

In the Epistle to the Philadelphians, Ignatius says that 'Christ Jesus shall loose from you every bond' (Ad Phil. 8), and this is followed by the statement that 'He is the door of the father, by which enter Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and the prophets and the apostles and the Church.'—Ad Phil. 9.

that is, Jesus Christ is the door of everybody, which is an explanation of the 'door of everything' in the Ode. Somewhat in the same way, Ignatius has modified 'all my bondsmen', to 'all your bonds'.

It certainly is suspicious that we find these parallelisms: they invite the belief that Ignatius knew the Odes closely.

Reviewing the group of passages, whose degree of parallelism we have to estimate, we may, perhaps, find sufficient reason for believing (i) that Ignatius knew the Odes; (ii) that he was not himself the Odist: as indeed his style bears no resemblance to the lofty strains of the Odes. Where the two writers come nearest together geographically is in the reference to the 'talking water', if that really means the water of Daphne. Is it possible that it is an Antiochene book of sacred songs that we have been discussing? They are certainly Antiphonal if they are not Ignatian: that part of the tradition of Socrates may be accepted.

Having traced certain agreements in thought and expression between Ignatius and the Odist we have been reminded that, quite in the early days of the criticism of the Odes, Professor de Zwaan constructed in the American Journal of Theology a spiritual parallel between the two writers.¹ He argued for 'a certain similarity', not so much between the Ignatian letters and the early Christian hymns which Dr. Harris had recovered, as between 'Ignatius and the Odist', and concluded that 'literary dependence is out of the question, but spiritual kinship is so clear in this case, notwithstanding the evident difference in character and pursuits, that one may feel sure of its testimony'.

Professor de Zwaan actually draws attention to the parallel between the language of Ignatius, Ad Eph. 19, 'Lack of knowledge was destroyed' (so translating ἀγνοια), and the teaching of the Odist, who lays 'much more stress on truth and error than on the Cross'. But apparently he did not quote the actual words of the Odist (Ode vii) with regard to the 'destruction of ignorance'. He very justly makes a parallel between the 19th Ode and the language of Ignatius in reference to the Virgin Birth, and presumes that 'Ignatius would not have heard without edification the passage which to some scholars seems incongruous with the elevated tone of the Odes'. With this judgement we are in agreement, for Ignatius when he ventures into poetical figure can be almost as unbridled in the use of the imagination as anything we find in the Odes, and, moreover, he is undoubtedly in evidence for the Miraculous Conception and Birth.

¹ Amer. Journ. Theol. for 1911, pp. 617-25.

In discussing the tradition of Socrates with regard to the choral or antiphonal singing in the Church at Antioch, it is natural to refer to the passage in which Ignatius, in his letters, suggests choral singing to the Churches to whom he has written: it may be assumed that such forms of singing were familiar in Greek Churches, at all events. In the Epistle to the Ephesians Ignatius sets the chorus, which he forms, with its face towards the bishop, having previously strung the presbytery on the bishop, considered as the framework of a lyre. 'All of you form yourselves into a chorus', says he: 'in your harmonious love, Jesus Christ is sung.'

In the Odes of Solomon, upon whose choral character Tondelli and others have rightly laid such stress, we find the chorus for the most part involved in the doxology with which so many of the Odes conclude: but there is one Ode in which the Odist does not sing in his own person, but assumes an accompanying chorus and invites it. The language is so similar to that of Ignatius that we may resort to the interpretation by parallel. The 41st Ode, then, begins as follows:

'Let all of us who are the Lord's bairns, praise Him:
And let us appropriate the truth of His faith:
And His children shall be acknowledged by Him:
Therefore let us sing in His love.

Let us, therefore, all of us unite together in the name of the Lord.'

The Ignatian parallels, the one referred to above, and a corresponding one in the Epistle to the Romans, are as follows:

'In your concord and harmonious love Jesus Christ is sung. And do ye, each and all (κατ' ἄνδρα), form yourselves into a chorus, that, being harmonious in concord, and taking the key-note of God, ye may in oneness sing with one voice through Jesus Christ unto the Father, that He may both hear you and acknowledge you by your good deeds to be the members of His Son (i. e. his children).—Ad Eph. 4.

'Forming yourselves into a chorus, in love sing to the Father in Jesus Christ.'—Ad Rom. 2.

The language of Ignatius again suggests familiarity with the Odes, and confirms our belief in their choral character; it helps us to understand what is meant by the Syriac sentence which literally says, 'His children shall be known with Him', and which evidently means, 'Shall be acknowledged by Him' (ἐπιγνωσθήσονται) in accordance with Syriac idiom.

In the editio princeps, as stated above, there were feelers thrown out without any decisive result for coincidences with the Ignatian Epistles. One passage to which reference was made was in the 41st Ode, to which we have just been alluding, where the Odist tells us that 'The Christ is really One' (xli. 15), and the parallel which was quoted was from the letter to the Magnesians, in the words, εἷς ἐστὶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός.—Ad Magn. 7.

The parallel is really stronger than the quoted words. For it continues with the statement that there is 'one temple, even God; and one altar, even Jesus Christ, who came from One Father, and is with One and departed unto One'. This passage may be taken as a comment upon the sentence in the Ode, which it actually reproduces (without the adverb 'truly'); Lightfoot has wrongly emended ὅς for εἷς.

Let us see whether Ignatius agrees with the Odist in the treatment of the heretics of his time. He has already compared them to persons who put drugs in sweet drinks. We found, also, that the Odes describe such persons as 'mad dogs who ignorantly attack their Master', the language being derived, like so much else, from an allegorical interpretation of the 22nd Psalm. Ignatius also has described the heretics as 'mad dogs' (κύνες λυσσῶντες) who bite stealthily (λαθροδῆκται), and whose bite is practically incurable (Ad Eph. 7). These are evidently the same dogs as we know in the Odes. Apparently Ignatius has misunderstood the words of the Odist as to the dogs biting (ἐν ἀγνοία), which was meant to express the ignorance of dogs failing to recognize their own particular master; Ignatius takes it to mean that the dogs bite when one is not aware of what is coming; the ignorance is in the bitten, not in the biter.

We see, then, that Ignatius regards the heretics and unbelievers as (i) poisoners; (ii) mad dogs, just as the Odist does. In the first instance the 'mad dog' was the Jew, and the mention of him came in from an anti-Judaic testimony against the Jews as a 'synagogue of evil-doers'; by Ignatius's time the application appears to be general.

A particular heresy which both writers combat is that which denied the unity of Christ's nature, perhaps a form of Docetism. Ignatius, as we have seen, may be using the very formula of the Odes ('Christ Jesus is one person').

We now come to a curious coincidence both in thought and in language between the Odes and the Epistle of Barnabas. In Ode xxxi. 10-13 the Odist is speaking in the person of Christ, and affirms:

*'I endured and held my peace,
That I might redeem my people and inherit it:
And that I might not make void my promises to the patriarchs,
To whom I promised the salvation of their seed.'*

With this we may compare Barnabas, c. 5:

'He himself endured that He might destroy death and show forth the resurrection of the dead (for that He must needs be manifest in the flesh); that at the same time He might redeem the promise made to the fathers and prepare the new people for Himself, &c.

The closest Biblical parallel is Romans xv. 8, where Christ is said to be God's minister:

εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγελίας τῶν πατέρων.

We may compare Irenaeus, iv. 15 (ed. Mass. 236):

‘Abraham, et semen eius quod est Ecclesia, per Christum Iesum, cui et adoptio redditur et haecreditas quae Abraham promissa est.’

The same arguments may be found in Justin, Dial. 119, 120. It is possible that the coincidences are due to dependence upon a primitive collection of Testimonies. The coincidence, however, between the Odist’s language and that of Barnabas is very close.

The suggestion in the foregoing passages that we have recovered a genuine parallel to the Odes in the Epistle of Barnabas encourages us to look more closely into the texture of this Epistle: for the Epistle of Barnabas is one of the least-valued books of the sub-apostolic literature and one of the most valuable. Its anti-Judaic character, combined with its constant dependence upon primitive anti-Judaic Testimonia, makes it one of the best exponents that we can find of primitive Christian belief and teaching. It quotes the Teaching of the Apostles en bloc, and not only en bloc but in separate passages.¹ The observation is an important one, as showing how Barnabas operates with his sources and is influenced by them. If, then, Barnabas uses written sources and uses them freely, as in the case of the Didaché and the Testimony Book, it is at least an open question whether he does not, in a similar manner, show reminiscence of the Odes. Let us see what the Epistle suggests in the way of parallels, over and above the reference to the 31st Ode which we have already quoted.

In i. 2 Barnabas speaks of having observed that upon his hearers there had been poured forth the Spirit from the wealth of the fountain of the Lord:

ἀληθῶς βλέπω ἐν ὑμῖν ἐκκεχυμένον ἀπὸ τοῦ πλουσίου τῆς πηγῆς Κυρίου πνεῦμα ἐφ’ ὑμᾶς.

In Ode xi. 6 we have:

‘Speaking waters touched my lips
From the fountain of the Lord plenteously.’

¹ Cf. Barn. iv. 5.

The same expression 'the fountain of the Lord' occurs in Ode xxx. 2:

'Come all ye thirsty and take a draught,
And rest by the fountain of the Lord.'

In i. 4 Barnabas apologises for his loquacity in the Christian meetings, and says that

'Although I talked much among you I know well that the Lord travelled with me in the way of righteousness.'

ἐν ὑμῖν λαλήσας πολλὰ ἐπίσταμαι ὅτι ἐμοὶ συνώδευσεν ἐν ὁδῷ δικαιοσύνης Κύριος.

In Ode xxxviii we have constant references to the companionship of the Truth with the Odists in his journey; e. g.:

'The Truth went with me':

'I walked with him':

'The Truth proceeds in the right path':

'I congratulated myself because the Truth went with me.'

Again in Ode xli. 11:

'His Word is with us in all our way.'

Again, in Ode xvii. 5:

'The thought of the Truth led me on,
And I walked after it and did not wander.'

In Barnabas iv. 12 we may note the expression used of the good man, that 'His righteousness shall go before him.'

(i. e. to judgement).

ἡ δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ προηγέσεται αὐτοῦ.

With this we may compare Ode viii. 21, 22:

'At my own right hand I set my elect:
And my righteousness goeth before them.'

Both of these passages go back ultimately into Isaiah lviii. 8 :

‘Thy righteousness shall go before thee.
The glory of the Lord shall be thy rearward.’

καὶ προπορεύεται ἔμπροσθέν σου ἡ δικαιοσύνη σου, καὶ ἡ δόξα τοῦ θεοῦ περιστελεῖ σε.

Special attention should be paid to this section of Isaiah, because it is certainly a part of the primitive Testimony Book: the section in which it occurs is actually quoted in Barnabas iii, in order to establish the doctrine of the new fast (‘Why do ye fast, saith the Lord?’); and it appears to have influenced one other passage in the Odes, viz. Ode xx. 9 :

‘His glory shall go before thee,
And thou shalt receive of His kindness and His grace.’

Either, then, Barnabas has been influenced by the Odes or by Isaiah; more probably the latter, as he is shown to have quoted the section of Isaiah to which we have been referring, and coincides in his language at one point with that section more closely than the Odists does.

In Barnabas xii. 5, where the brazen serpent is said to be a type of Jesus, we are told that :

‘Moses again made a symbol of Jesus to show that He must suffer, and that He Himself whom they shall think to have perished shall make alive again by a sign (of his cross) though Israel falls (or, shall typically make alive again’, &c.).

Πάλιν Μωϋσῆς ποιεῖ τύπον τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν παθεῖν καὶ αὐτὸς ζωογονήσει ὃν δόξουσιν ἀπολωλέκηναι ἐν σημεῖω, πίπτοντος τοῦ Ἰσραήλ.

With this description of the Christ whom they shall think to have perished, we may compare :

Ode xxviii. 9 :

‘They supposed that I was swallowed up :
For I seemed to them as one of the lost.’

Ode xxv. 5:

‘I was despised and rejected in the eyes of many;
And I was in their eyes like lead’;

where the reading ‘as lead’ has been conjectured by us to be a misunderstanding of the word ‘lost’, ‘perished’.

In Barnabas v. 7 we have already drawn attention to the statement that ‘the Lord endured, in order that He might give back the promise to the fathers’; and we have compared Ode xxxi. 10–13, ‘I endured . . . that I might redeem my people and inherit it, and that I might not make void the promise to the patriarchs’. We may now further compare Barnabas xiv. 4:

‘The Lord Himself gave (the Covenant) to us, for a people of His inheritance, having endured for our sakes.’ εἰς λαὸν κληρονομίας, δι’ ἡμᾶς ὑπομείνας.

Here Barnabas appears again to have been influenced by the language of the Odes, and our first supposition is confirmed.

Reviewing the passages to which we have drawn attention, we think there is some reason for believing that Barnabas is under the influence of the Odes, though it would clearly be unwise to assume that the parallels which we have brought forward are all of equal validity, and one or two of them may have to be rejected. It is much to be wished that some competent scholar would give us a really good edition of this important sub-apostolic document.

As we have reason to believe that Ignatius of Antioch knew the Odes, and that the language of his letters is much under their influence, it is interesting to notice that a later bishop of the same city shows similar traces of dependence upon the Odist. Theophilus is a very learned person, and occupies an important position in the evolution of theology; it is interesting to see that when he treats of the errors of the Greek poets and philosophers, whom he knows well, he uses the same figure almost exactly as we detected in Ignatius and the Odes. He says that, even if any truth was spoken by the Greeks, it was ‘Truth mixed with error. A strong poison mixed with honey and wine or any other liquid, renders the whole injurious and useless.’—Theoph. Ad Autol. ii. 12.

Καθάπερ γὰρ φάρμακόν τι δηλητήριον συγκραθὲν μέλιτι ἢ οἶνῳ, ἢ ἐτέρῳ τινί, τὸ πᾶν ποιεῖ βλαβερὸν καὶ ἄχρηστον.

We can take the case of the supposed parallel to the Odes in Theophilus one stage further.

Theophilus speaks of the mingling of Truth and Error as comparable to the infusion of some deadly drug into honey or wine or something similar :

συγκραθὲν μέλιτι ἢ οἶνῳ ἢ ἐτέρῳ τινί.—Ad Autolyicum, ii. 3.

Here we notice that it is peculiar to use ἐτέρῳ for the third place in a series of specifications, where we should have expected ἄλλῳ. Our first impulse is to set it down as a case of want of precision, such as characterizes the common Greek of the Hellenistic period. Examination of the style of Theophilus does not show any such lack of precision, but on the contrary a careful observance of Greek usage. Here, for example, is a case where he introduces two alternatives followed by a third :

τοὺς παρ’ Αἰγυπτίοις προφήτας ἢ Χαλδαίους τοὺς τε ἄλλους συγγραφείς.—Ad Autolyicum, ii. 32.¹

It will be noticed that Theophilus uses ἄλλους, and not ἐτέρους, as of course he should do. We infer, then, that if he uses ἐτέρῳ τινί in the passage previously cited, he did not have two preceding terms, but only one. The natural inference is that μέλιτι ἢ οἶνῳ stands for a single word, which has been replaced, perhaps because it was not understood : accordingly we restore οἶνομέλιτι to the text of Theophilus, in harmony with Ignatius and the Odists. We need not be surprised at the change which has occurred (if our argument be just) in the text of Theophilus, for the same kind of change was made by the translator, who turned the Ignatian Epistles into Syriac: he rendered οὐνόμελι by ܡܠܝܟܐ ܡܠܝܟܐ.

¹ Cf. ii. 4 ἔνιοι . . . ἕτεροι . . . ἄλλοι.

In another passage Theophilus corrects the Odes in an opinion, which we observed Bardaisan to hold, viz. that the sun and moon received light alternately from one another, the moon receiving light in the first half of the month, and giving it back during the period of waning. The Antioch astronomy was evidently ahead of the Edessan of the same date, the latter half of the second century. So Theophilus says:

‘The sun always remains full, without becoming less, as God always remains perfect but the moon as a type of man wanes month by month.’—Theoph. Ad Autol. i. 15.

Theophilus evidently did not believe with the Odist that the two Light Vessels poured, backward and forward, into one another. We suggest that he has corrected his Church Hymnal.

Cyril of Jerusalem has drawn upon the language of Ode xlii in which our Lord’s descent into Hades is described. The Odist says:

‘Those who had died ran towards me,
And they cried and said, Son of God,’ &c.—Ode xlii. 15.

Cyril expands the statement by specifying the persons to whom reference is made:

‘The holy prophets ran unto Him, and Moses the Law-giver, and Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, David also, and Samuel and Elijah and John the Baptist.’—Cat. xiv. 19.

That is what one might call an enlarged edition of the Ode.

It is probable that Cyril may also furnish us with the key to the obscure sentence in the same Ode, where Hades lets go the head and the feet (of the Lord) (xlii. 13). It was suggested in the editio princeps that the Head was Christ and the Feet the Saints. We notice, however, that Cyril has another explanation of ‘head and feet' of Christ. He refers the words to the two natures in Christ, and illustrates from the eating of the Paschal Lamb:

'We who are accounted worthy to partake of the spiritual Lamb, partake of the head with the feet: of the head, which means His Godhead; of the feet, that is His manhood.'

Catech. xii. 1.

Is there any early explanation of Exod. xii. 9 that runs on that line of thought?

Cyril of Jerusalem also treats the 22nd Psalm as containing a prophecy of the Miraculous Birth, though he does not, like Eusebius, speak of God the Father in midwife language, and so make connexion with the Odes. According to Cyril:

'Thou art He, says the Psalmist, that drew me out of the womb. Mark carefully the word, drew me out of the womb, which means that He was born without man, being drawn from the womb and the flesh of the Virgin: for it is different in the case of them that are born of the marriage law.'

Cyril, Catech. xii. 25.

It seems, from the artificial meaning which Cyril attaches to the word 'drew out', that he is avoiding the interpretation put on the word by Eusebius and the Odists. There is no doubt that he regards the Psalm as predicting the Virgin Birth.

A coincidence between the Odes and Irenaeus was pointed out in the editio princeps, without presenting an absolute claim for the recognition of a quotation. Now that we have the antiquity of the Odes well established there seems no reason for hesitation as to Irenaeus's acquaintance with them. The passage referred to was as follows: Irenaeus is explaining that the less God needs man, the more man needs God and His fellowship:

'In quantum enim Deus nullius indiget, in tantum homo indiget Dei communionis.'

Iren. adv. Haer. iv. 25 (Mass. 243).

Here we have the thought of fellowship with God as the expression of man's need, just as in Ode iv :

‘Thou hast given us thy fellowship :
It was not that thou wast in need of us :
but that we were in need of thee.—Ode iv. 9.

The same thought recurs a little lower in the form :

‘Ipse quidem nullius indigens : his vero qui indigent eius, suam praebens communionem.’

And again, in the following book, Irenaeus returns to the theme :

‘Nihil enim illi ante dedimus, neque desiderat aliquid a nobis, quasi indigens : nos autem indigemus eius quae est ad eum communionis (χρηζόμεθα τῆς εἰς αὐτὸν κοινωνίας).’

Iren. adv. Haer. v. 2, p. 293.

It was remarked that, in these passages, ‘the evidence is rather in the direction of recognizing a quotation on the part of Irenaeus from the Odes’. The hesitation was proper to the first exposition, but may now be discarded, and Irenaeus numbered amongst those who are familiar with the Odes.¹

Before leaving this part of the subject, we may point out some remarkable coincidences with the Apology of Aristides, c. i. In Ode vi. 5 we have the statement that ‘Nothing should be His adversary,

 Nothing should stand up against Him.’

In the Apology of Aristides we have the following statement :

‘Adversary He has none :
 For there is none that is more powerful than He :
 Anger and wrath He possesses not ;
For there is nothing that is able to stand against Him.’

¹ It is not a little curious that Ephrem twice attacks as heretical the opinion that God was in no need of man : for instance,

‘The heretics endeavour to say of Him that He is in no need at all, but that He furnished us with opportunity to be saved by all means.’
R. E. ii. 522 : cf. also R. E. iii. 12.

Was he, perhaps, attacking the Bardesanians for their use of the Odes ?

That is how the passage runs, rhythmically enough in the Syriac translation. The Greek is a mere staccato abbreviation at this point: God is ἀνώτερος πάντων τῶν παθῶν ὀργῆς τε καὶ λήθης καὶ ἀγνοίας καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν.

Now the concurrence noted above may be accidental, and the statements may be the trite phrases of Theistic teaching; but their coincidence deserves study. For this is not the only coincidence which the Odes show with the opening chapter of Aristides's Apology. Here we have also the statement (a conventional one, it must again be admitted) that ‘He stands in need of nought,

But everything stands in need of Him.’¹ which is in Ode iv. 9 in the form:

‘It was not that thou wast in need of us;
But that we are in need of thee.’

The passage about the impossibility of an adversary to God is followed in the Syriac Aristides by the words:

‘Error and forgetfulness are not in His nature;
For He is altogether wisdom and understanding.’

(The Greek abbreviation quoted above suggests that ‘ignorance’ should be added after ‘forgetfulness’.)

But this is very like Ode xviii. 8-11:

‘Thou art my God:
Error thou knowest not,
For neither knows it thee.
And ignorance’

¹ The very same statement in Tatian, Oratio, chap. 4: ‘He who is in want of nothing is not to be misrepresented by us as though he were in need.’

If the parallelism had been in a different region from that of philosophical and theological commonplaces we should have said at once that one of these writers was quoting the other. As it is the parallelisms of the sentences and the close coincidences in language seem to involve some connexion between Aristides and the Odes.

We come now to a remarkable statement, due apparently to Anastasius the Presbyter in the fifth century, which seems to refer the authorship of the Odes to Montanus in the second century or to some earlier date.

In the seventh volume of Mai's Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio there occur a number of unedited fragments from a Patristic Catena on the Incarnation. These are accompanied by a series of extracts from detestable heretics, who give their testimonies on the same theme, such as Ebion (!) Paul of Samosata, Nestorius, Theodore of Mopsuestia, &c. Amongst these we find as follows (p. 69) : Μοντανου ἐκ τῶν ῥδῶν· Μίαν ὁ Χριστὸς ἔχει τὴν φύσιν καὶ τὴν ἐνέργειαν καὶ πρὸ τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ μετὰ τῆς σαρκός, ἵνα μὴ διάφορος γένηται ἀνόμοια καὶ διάφορα πράττων.

We have here a statement that Montanus composed Odes (such at least is the natural inference on first reading the passage), and that the doctrine of the unity of the nature of Christ was taught in them; according to the quotation from these Odes, this unity existed both before and after the Incarnation. The Ode quoted would thus be capable of an anti-docetic interpretation, and would not allow that the Christ had descended upon Jesus. The emphasis in the quotation is on the word μίαν with which it opens.

Now when we turn to our Odes of Solomon, we find as follows : 'The Christ is truly one; and he was known [i. e. as such] before the foundations of the world, that he might save souls for ever by the truth of his name.'—Ode Sol. xli. 15, 16. Here we have something very like the quotation brought forward by Mai and attributed to Montanus. The anti-docetic statement as to the unity of the Messiah, i. e. of Christ in the flesh, is accompanied by a statement as to his pre-existence, not only before the Incarnation but before the foundation of the world.

Is it possible that there is any connexion between the quotation of Mai and the passage in the Odes? Assuming that the extract is rightly referred to Montanus, can he be regarded as the author of the Odes? It will be remembered that the Odes had already been claimed as Montanus's by Mr. F. C. Conybeare, and it may be admitted that the tradition as to Montanus's teaching finds excellent illustration in the Odes. On the other hand, it is impossible to regard the extract which Mai gives from his Vatican manuscript as poetical in form. It is clearly, undeniably prose. Consequently it can only be connected with the Odes as commentary is connected with text. The Odes must underlie the passage referred to Montanus, if the connexion be conceded. Upon this supposition the Odes must be as early as 175 A. D., if Montanus is glossing his own composition, or much earlier, if he is quoting a recognized Church book of sacred songs. The latter appears to be the correct conclusion, but we may allow for a margin of doubt, and for the possibility of some other explanation.

Dr. Bernard has made a great deal more than was warranted of a reference in the Syriac Testamentum Domini,¹ where a rubric for the morning office directs that there should be sung 'four hymns of praise, one by Moses, and of Solomon and of the other prophets'.

The rubric certainly does not mean 'one hymn out of a collection ascribed to Solomon'. It is, probably, nothing more than an injunction to sing the 72nd Psalm, whose heading is 'A Psalm of Solomon'.²

The parallel with Moses is explained in like manner by a reference to the 90th Psalm; it is doubtful if there is any reference at all to the so-called canticles which appear at the end of the Psalter in some copies of the LXX.

¹ I. 26.

² The Targum says it was spoken prophetically by Solomon.

CHAPTER IV

THE ORIGIN AND TIME OF THE COMPOSITION OF THE ODES.

WE now pass on to discuss the 'when and the where' of the Odes, on the assumption that they constitute a literary unity, and that the problem is not to be complicated, in the first instance at all events, by a multitude of suggested interpolations. That is, we set on one side for the present, and perhaps finally, such theories as that of Harnack, who finds the Odes to be a Jewish document, patched with Christian interpolations; we also set on one side, pro tempore, and again perhaps finally, the theory of the first edition that Odes xix and xlii betrayed a later hand and a more highly evolved doctrine than the rest of the book. We put in a plea, on behalf of the author, against his first editors and commentators, that a little more time should be spent on understanding his text before the hypothesis of interpolation is resorted to. For example, even if we conceded something in favour of a belief in strata of late theological thought in certain Odes, we must at once check ourselves from drawing hasty critical consequences, by the observation that it is these very Odes that may turn out to have the earliest literary attestation. The 19th Ode, for example, grotesque as it may seem to us in its allegory, and full-fledged in its details of the Virgin Birth, is precisely the Ode which Lactantius quotes; and we have shown that he took it from an early collection of Testimonies, an observation which at once carries us back to a time when the Odes were a part of the Old Testament, and to the second century, if not to the first.

The accuracy of the observation is confirmed by our discovery that the very same Ode is quoted by Eusebius and by Theodoret. It must be allowed that the 19th Ode has acquired chronological dignity.

Not very different is the case of the 42nd Ode, which has such a strongly developed Descensus ad Inferos involved in it. Here again we have a quotation recognized, this time by Cyril of Jerusalem, which takes us back to the year A.D. 348. Citations such as these should make us hesitate before we resort to the theory of interpolation, and the argument from the Unity of Style looks in the same direction. It seems, therefore, best to set Harnack and those who follow his method of criticism on one side, and try to solve the problem on the hypothesis that the Odes are a literary unity, with a definite time and place of production.

We reopen the investigation with a sense of a large increase in the data for the solution of the problem, since the first expositions of the subject were made. Some of the fresh data supply arguments for the time of composition of the Odes, others give suggestions both for time and place. For example, when we explain the meaning of Lactantius's quotation from the 19th Ode, and trace it to an early collection of Testimonies against the Jews, we lose the note of place, supplied by Nicomedia, and we may add, the note of language: we have no longer any evidence for Latin Odes, but we have evidence for the existence of the Odes, either in Greek or some Semitic language, at a much earlier date than Lactantius. In the same way, when we are dealing with the occurrence of the Odes in the Pistis Sophia, we keep apparently the note of place, but the note of time is made for a much earlier period than the end of the third century, when the Pistis Sophia was produced; for if the Sahidic Odes were taken from the Sahidic Psalter and were bound up with the Psalter, we are again carried backwards in time: we have first to allow for the fact that the Sahidic Bible is necessarily earlier than the Pistis Sophia (an important point for Biblical critics), but also we have to remember that the Sahidic Old Testament is disclosed to us as a translation from the Septuagint, with which, for the purposes of our inquiry, the Odes must be connected. The Egyptian note of place does not altogether disappear, but it becomes secondary and relatively unimportant.

When we come to actual Patristic quotations, or to references which are the equivalent of citations, we find as the result of careful investigation two lines of tradition opening out before us, one which may be called Mesopotamian, and the other which may be called Palestinian, or at all events, West Syrian.

The first line is marked by definite fixed points. It may be taken as proved that the Odes in their present Syriac form were well known to Ephrem. Definite quotations have been established, and general allusions abound. Later Syriac writers can be put in evidence: Moses bar Kepha, for instance, interprets the Odes baptismally, and it is possible that the Eastern rituals may show traces of their influence. For us the fixed point of departure is Ephrem, since he is a genuine Syrian knowing no Greek, and the evidence is decisive for the actual use of our Syriac text, which is thus carried back into the fourth century in Mesopotamia.

The next point for the same region and for Edessa as a centre is the somewhat less certain observation that Ephrem attacks Bardaisan for an interpretation which he makes of the Odes in the region of astronomy, where the Sun and Moon are regarded as supplying light, each to the other, the Moon receiving light during the period of its waxing and returning it in the time of its waning.

Here Bardaisan, if we have understood the matter rightly, speaks in the very language of the Odes, and makes the interpretation of the Ode quoted, an interpretation which was not unnaturally missed by the first editors. It is probable, as we have said, that we must translate the passage in the 16th Ode to which we refer in the sense that ‘Their reception (sc. of the Sun and Moon) one from the other speaks (or fulfils) the beauty of God.’—Ode xvi. 17.

Thus we may, perhaps, get another fixed point in the use of the Odes by Bardaisan. The suggestion arises that Bardaisan may, then, himself be the author of the Odes, an idea already thrown out by Newbold, upon other grounds, but without sufficient reason.¹ We do not think Newbold's investigations are to be undervalued. He was quite right in maintaining that 'no antecedent improbability precludes the ascription of the Odes to Bardaisan'; we have given above a proof that he is also right in saying that some of the Odes can be readily interpreted in the light of Bardaisan's theories (the 16th Ode, for instance). But since Newbold wrote his interesting article we have fresh information concerning Bardaisan, in the recently published Discourses of Ephrem to Hypatius, and these new Discourses require to be carefully studied; we have also, as we shall see, evidence which will take the Odes to an earlier period than that of Bardaisan.

It would have been a pleasure to endorse Newbold's suggestion of the Bardesanian authorship of the Odes, which came up also in our own field of view. Bardaisan was, no doubt, both scholar and saint, a Syrian blend of Socrates and St. John; and if we could prove him to be the author he would be a worthy author, for he was certainly a great Christian, and perhaps the greatest man that Syria ever produced. If we cannot redeem his character from the aspersions of many generations, we can salute him with a lowly reverence in passing, and make him a fixed point in the inquiry upon which we are engaged.

Bardaisan's period of literary activity is the latter half of the second century: if we set his birth in A.D. 154 and his death in A.D. 222, we conclude that the Odes (in the Syriac form in which we know them) were perhaps extant in Edessa in the latter part of the second century. There, for the present, our first line of advance stops: we cannot get any earlier Syriac patristic evidence: it stops with Bardaisan. That is a very important position gained.

Our next line of investigation runs through western Syria.

¹ 'Bardaisan and the Odes of Solomon', in Journal of Biblical Literature, vol. xxx, Part II, 1911.

We can begin, if we please, at Jerusalem. St. Cyril's Lectures are valuable in many ways beside the light they throw upon the preparation of catechumens in the middle of the fourth century, and on the Jerusalem rituals of that date. These lectures are based upon the prophets as the only authority, and the proof-texts are in the main those which occur in collections of Testimonies against the Jews. He constantly indulges in side-thrusts at the Jews, which was not unnatural considering the position which he occupied. We should naturally expect that a writer or an orator, who practises so skilfully the art of quotation, will make familiar use of a book like the Odes, which may very likely have been still in use in Jerusalem, and was itself, as we believe, deeply tinged with anti-Judaism and closely linked with the early Church method of teaching by Testimonies.

Dr. Bernard has suggested that in the prefatory lecture to the catechumens Cyril has actually used the first Ode, and the parallel is certainly a very striking one. We have shown that Cyril also quotes from the 42nd Ode, thus establishing his acquaintance with the book from first to last in the form in which we possess it. There is more light to be thrown on the Odes by Cyril, and perhaps more actual quotations may be found; but even where we cannot always find the evidence of direct citation we can see Cyril dealing with similar problems to the Odist, and sometimes correcting the explanations of the latter. For example, while Cyril approves of the reference to Christ in Psalm xxii. 10 ('thou art he that didst draw me out of my mother's womb'), he will not introduce God the Father as operating after the manner of a midwife, but explains that it refers to the drawing of flesh from the substance of the Virgin. When again he is interpreting the term Monogenēs as applied to Christ, he almost always interprets it to mean that Christ had no brother: this is what the Odist makes Christ Himself say ('I was not their brother, nor my birth like theirs', Ode xxviii. 16); so that both writers are dealing with the same problem, but we must not say that Cyril is quoting the Ode: he is probably making a popular theological statement such as was also familiar to the Odist.

Now let us move to Caesarea and to a slightly earlier date. We have shown the importance of Eusebius in the explanation of the Odes by pointing out a number of positive quotations of the first importance. As in the case of Cyril, these references are sometimes Old Testament references as well as references to the Odes. Eusebius agrees with Cyril in the use of conventional Testimonia adversus Iudaeos. He uses the 22nd Psalm when at the same time he is quoting the Odes. The one is the bridge to the other. These Eusebian extracts are not only valuable in themselves: they serve to bring the Odes with themselves into a theological system, into a propaganda of an anti-Judaic character. In this point of view it is peculiarly important to find so much stress laid upon the 22nd Psalm. The use made of this Psalm by the Odist, Eusebius, Cyril of Jerusalem, and others, shows that it was an armoury of weapons for controversy with the Jews, some of which were found ready to hand, as in the quotation of the opening words of the Psalm by the Crucified, and some of which appear to have been manufactured artificially, like the interpretation of the 'extraction of the Messiah from the womb of the Virgin'.

It will be agreed that Eusebius must have been familiar with the Odes and have shared some points of view with the Odist. He, for instance, does not try to get rid of the description of God the Father as μαιούμενος, in the way that Cyril appears to do. Much of what we learnt from Eusebius was arrived at by the study of that much neglected book the Demonstratio Evangelica, a work which is based from first to last on excerpts of the Septuagint, with occasional side-lights from the Hebrew or the Hexaplaric versions. The Demonstratio is, in fact, a Testimony Book with a Commentary, just in the same way as Cyril's work is Lectures on Testimonies: only, where Cyril calls them Testimonies, Eusebius habitually reverts to an even earlier title and calls them Legia.

The importance of these observations lies in the fact that Eusebius was working on Greek texts when writing his Demonstratio, and we may infer that he knew the Odes also in Greek. Not that he was incapable of Syriac scholarship, as we know from his actual use of Edessan records in his History; but there does not seem to be any reason to invoke Syriac at this point. If, however, any one should object to the statement, made absolutely, that Eusebius used the Odes in Greek, the question can remain open. The Greek text was certainly current when Eusebius wrote. The question of the relative priority of Greek and Syriac is not a fourth-century problem: it belongs a good deal higher up. In connexion with Eusebius's use of the Odes in the interpretation of the 22nd Psalm, we pointed out a similar use in the case of Theodoret. He, too, interprets the mad dogs that do not know their master. He, too, is a Syriac scholar in a bilingual Church and community. We think it is possible that he may be dependent upon Eusebius; if not, he is working on the same tradition, and may be reckoned as acquainted with the Odes.

Theodoret's position is a peculiar one, as he forms a link between Antioch and Edessa. It will be remembered that he was a leading agent in the extrusion of the Diatessaron from the churches in the diocese of Cyrrhus. This probably means the Syriac-speaking churches; but he himself is an Antiochene, born in Antioch in the closing years of the fourth century, and brought up in a monastery not far from Antioch. It is, therefore, natural for us to turn in the next instance to Antioch itself, where we have been fortunate enough to detect the use of the Odes by no less a person than Ignatius the Martyr. If the parallels which we brought forward are valid, then it is hardly possible to refer the Odes to any other time than the first century, or to any other district than Antioch. The question of the original language of the Odes may be left open for a little longer: Ignatius himself, though we know him by Greek writings and Greek traditions, is in many ways more like a Syrian than a Greek; and even if he should be a true Greek the church over which he ruled was Syrian as well as Greek.

In support of an Antiochene origin for the Odes we have urged above that another bishop of Antioch, somewhat later than Ignatius, shows traces of an acquaintance with the Odes. This time it is not a choice between Syriac and Greek, for Theophilus, who writes the treatise to Autolytus, in the year A.D. 168, is educated as a Greek (though perhaps of Mesopotamian origin), familiar with the Greek poets and philosophers, and altogether diverse in character from Ignatius. Yet we find him making what seems to be the same comparison that Ignatius does, of the heretics who mingle error with truth, to those who put poisonous drugs in honey-wine; and we also find him using language concerning the Sun and Moon which seems to deliberately contradict the Odists, who believes the two great lights to be vessels, which are filled alternately one from the other. Here again the antiquity of the Odes appears to be established, as well as the area in which they are most at home.

Only one further sub-Apostolic writer has been claimed by us as a possible witness to the Odes. In the so-called Epistle of Barnabas we have a writing commonly referred to the last decade of the first century, or the first decade of the second century, and generally supposed to bear marks of an Egyptian ancestry. The evidence which we bring forward from Barnabas will be thought less convincing than what we have adduced from other writers. It is not altogether negligible, even if it is not so striking as that furnished by Ephrem, Eusebius or Ignatius. It may for the present be covered by valeat quantum.

Our second line of advance has now brought us very nearly into conjunction with the first: for not only is Edessa religiously and politically adjacent to Antioch, but Bardaisan spans the space between them, as being at once a Greek scholar and a philosopher and a man of travel, familiar with cities and with men. There is no difficulty in joining up the communities to which we assign the earliest traces of the Odes ; and if we are wrong in assigning them as written at Antioch in the first century, we are not far wrong either in place or in time.

CHAPTER V

CHRIST AND SOLOMON.

A FEW words may be thought necessary on the question whether the name of Solomon attached to the Odes is more than the nom de plume of the author, or an artificial title assimilating the new Christian Psalter to the ancient Psalter of David, or to the already existing Pharisee Psalms which go under the name of the Psalter of Solomon. Clearly there is no necessity to involve Solomon in the structure of the Odes because his name is on the cover. On the other hand, it is possible that there may be a Salomonic influence in their composition. For instance, the fact of the Odes being bound up with the Old Testament in certain Greek bibles, as we have shown to be probable, would mean that they had been grouped with other writings more or less definitely accredited to Solomon. If, then, we should find that there were traces of a strong influence on the Odes from the Sapiential books, we might be led to suspect that they had been composed with the view of continuing the Salomonic tradition, in which case it is no longer a matter of a mere bookmaker's or bookseller's title. And it is certain that our Odes are frequently coloured from Sapiential books ; the margins and notes of this edition will show abundant evidence on this head. May we go further than this, and is it possible that the history as well as the supposed writings of Solomon have been drawn upon for incident or allusion? Let us take a case which is parallel to our inquiry. The Wisdom of Solomon affects to be the work of the Wise Man of Israel, and it imitates very effectively the noblest passages in the book of Proverbs, frequently borrowing whole sentences by way of justifying its title. But it does more than this: to keep up the illusion of the title, it brings Solomon himself on the scene and makes him tell the story of his own birth and education. Three whole chapters (vii-ix) tell how the royal babe grew up, became enamoured of Wisdom (whom the Most High also loved), and prayed that she might be his bride; the prayer is given in detail in the ninth chapter, and is a very noble aspiration. It is therefore open to us to raise the question whether Solomon may not be involved also in the Odes, either by historical allusion or by quotation from his supposed language and experience. With this hangs another supposition: we know that Christ in certain circles in the Church occupied a quasi-Salomonic position; on the one hand He was identified with the Wisdom of the Sapiential books, on the other He was identified with Solomon, as being 'great David's greater Son'; and one of the Psalms in which the future glories of Solomon are described was, in the earliest days of the Christian faith, pressed into the service of theology.¹

It seems that we ought at least to contemplate the possibility of some such influence in the Odes as we have described, say, in the Wisdom of Solomon. For example, in the prayer just alluded to we have the request:

'Reject me not from among thy servants (παῖδων);
For I am thy servant (δοῦλος) and the son of thy handmaid.'

It is curious that in the Odes we get a similar refrain: the 29th Ode ends as follows:

'I gave praise to the Most High,
Because He exalted His servant
And the son of His handmaid.'

Apparently Christ is here referred to. The language may be conventional; or again, it may be Salomonic.

¹ See Ps. lxxi (lxxii), 'Give the King thy judgements', &c., and the comments of the earliest Fathers upon it.

The importance of the inquiry lies in the possibility that it offers of elucidation of obscure references in the Odes. It is not surprising that the crown with which the Odist is adorned in the first Ode has been regarded by some persons as the nuptial crown of King Solomon in the Canticles: 'the crown with which his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals', and certainly the first Ode is of the nature of a spiritual epithalamium.

Equally suggestive is the possibility that the references to the Temple on the part of the Odist may find their explanation in the story of the building of Solomon's temple. In the fourth Ode it has been conjectured that the words

'Thou hast given thy heart, O Lord, to thy believers' (Ode iv. 3), might be illustrated by the promise of the Lord to Solomon that

'My eyes and my heart shall be there continually' (2 Chron. vii. 17),

so that the Odist may have had Solomon's Temple in his mind when he began the Ode with the affirmation that

'No man, O my God, changeth thy holy place.'

For we find in the Wisdom of Solomon, in the prayer which we quoted above, the same assertion of the eternity and immovability of the Divine dwelling-place :

'Thou didst bid me build a temple in thy holy mountain :
And an altar in the place of thy tabernacling,
An imitation of the holy Tabernacle
Which thou didst prepare from the beginning.'
Sap. Sol. ix. 8.

These words may furnish us with the very key that we need to the understanding of the perplexing fourth Ode.

The writer sees two temples, one the Salomonic building, which can be changed and moved; the other and elder, the spiritual sanctuary of which the Jewish temple is, at best, the transient mimicry. Other suggestions may be made in the same directions.

They must of necessity be tentative in our present state of knowledge and of criticism. It seems, however, to be proper to allude to the possibility of further Salomonic elucidations, even if they have, at first, to be covered by a cautious valcat quantum.

The case for a Salomonic element in the Odes will be much strengthened, if our interpretation of the 37th Ode should acquire probability. In this Ode we have suggested that the Odist personates Solomon himself in his prayer at the Dedication festival, and in his subsequent reception of a gracious message from God. Even if we suppose the language to describe the Odist's own experience of answered prayer, it is couched in the language of Solomon, so that the Odist had the King of Israel in his mind when he wrote: that is, the reference of the Odes to Solomon belongs to the original collection, and not to the hand of any later bookseller or editor.

We may also refer to the suggestion made by several who have written on the Odes, that it is Solomon, under his other name of Jedidiah, or Beloved of the Lord, who is responsible for the appearance of the 'Beloved' in the third Ode. Abbott draws attention to the language employed in 2 Samuel xii. 24:

'There is in the second book of Samuel a record connecting "love" with the anticipations formed by some about the infant king: and he (i.e. David) called his name Solomon. And the Lord loved him, and sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, and he called his name Jedidiah.'

CHAPTER VI

THE CHRISTOLOGY OF THE ODES.

SINCE the Odes were first published a good deal of light has fallen, from one quarter or another, on the dogmatic position of the writer, and especially upon his Christology. It has, for instance, become increasingly clear that Christ is often made to be the chief speaker in the Odes, so that the structure of an Ode can be resolved into (i) a prologue on the part of the Odist; (ii) an oracular statement made ex ore Christi; and (iii) a doxology, which is meant for the congregation to participate in, when the Ode is recited or sung. We have tried to indicate the transitions between the parts of such Odes by the insertion of the words Christus loquitur or Doxologia; and it will probably be found that the understanding of the Ode is much assisted by the division thus made, though it may be admitted that there will be a margin of uncertainty as to the points where the dividing chasms have to be placed. By making Christ speak for Himself the Odist secures a position of literary advantage for the enunciation of dogmatic truth. It is almost equivalent to the 'thus saith the Lord' of the ancient prophet, or the words of Paul when he affirms that 'this we say unto you by the word of the Lord'. Indeed, the Odist sometimes casts his thought of personal inspiration into this very mould, as, for instance, when he asks (Ode xxvi), 'Who can so rest (or, Oh! that one could so rest) on the Most High, that with (God's) mouth he may speak?', language which recalls Jeremiah xv. 19, 'Thou shalt be as my mouth'. The singer is, in fact, a prophet as well as a poet, and uses prophetic formulae and prophetic emphasis.

We might take as an illustration of the illumination which is thus cast upon the Odes a specimen Ode like the 28th, of which the editio princeps was not able to say more than that 'in some respects the Psalm appears to be Messianic in a Christian sense, for the writer concludes his exulting strain over enemies who had come round him like mad dogs, and had left him for dead, with the remark that it was not possible for them to blot out the memory of one who existed before them, and who was of a different birth from theirs'; and it was added that 'Perhaps the writer is speaking in these verses, as if in the Person of Christ'.

The hesitation was quite proper to a first inquiry, but it may be finally laid aside. The passage about 'mad dogs that ignorantly attack their master' has been definitely recognized in Eusebius and in Theodoret as an expansion and interpretation of the 22nd Psalm, and further investigation shows other traces of the same Psalm, interpreted Messianically.

The statement that 'I was not their brother, nor my birth like theirs', has been shown to cover the doctrine that the Son of God is Monogenēs or Only-begotten, without a brother, and that His birth was miraculous. The evidence of Cyril of Jerusalem, to which we have referred above, will be found to be decisive on the first of the points involved. Thus Christ is certainly the speaker, and says definitely in the Ode:

‘ I am the Only-Begotten Son,
I am miraculously born,’

just as He is the speaker in the 22nd Psalm, according to the view of primitive Christians.

Yet it is not easy to mark the exact point where the Ode modulates, so that the Odist's 'I' becomes the 'I' of the Messiah. Probably the change of key is at the words:

‘ They who saw me marvelled at me.’

We should then have an exactly parallel situation to that in the 41st Ode where the Odist stops his own recitative with the words:

‘ Let us exult with the joy of the Lord,’

and the Lord begins with:

‘ All they that see me will be astonished at me,’ and continues certainly as far as the stanza:

‘ The (Father of Truth) possessed me from the beginning:
His wealth begat me, and the thought of His heart.’

Even where we have to allow a margin of residual uncertainty for the translation from speaker to speaker, it is a great advantage to have dogmatic statements made as if by Christ Himself at first hand.

The last instance to which we referred leads to another very important discovery, which has gradually drawn the attention of the students of the Odes. In the words just referred to Christ is speaking not only in His own person, but in the person of Wisdom, for the language is borrowed from the eighth chapter of Proverbs :

‘The Lord possessed me in the beginning of His way.’

Prov. viii. 22.

Thus Christ is made to say that ‘He is the Wisdom of God’, and this is only one of a series of passages in which the Christology of the Odist is based upon the Sapiential books. It is hardly necessary to remind the dogmatic theologian of the importance which the eighth chapter of Proverbs plays in the history and evolution of the Nicene Symbol, but it is necessary, both for the understanding of the Odes and of the primitive Christology, to point out that other Sapiential books are treated in the same way as we have seen the Odist treat Proverbs, and that the seventh chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon in particular is a rich and fertile soil for the growth of Christian formulæ. Here, for example, we find Wisdom defined as Monogenēs, as an ἀπαύγασμα or Effulgence of God, as an ἀπόρροια or Efflux of His glory, as an ἀτμός or Emanation of His power, and as an ἑσώπτρον or Mirror of His activity. Monogenēs needs no explanation; it is fundamental to the Christian Symbol; the Effulgence also is well-known, since it passed from the Wisdom of Solomon to the Wisdom of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews. We shall show in another place the importance of the doctrine of Efflux, both for the understanding of the Odes and of the Pistis Sophia, as well as for its Nicene relations. It is curious that the Odist treats it as the Efflux of an irresistible stream of Water, while the Pistis Sophia makes it an outburst of Light. Origen in his commentary on Romans leans to the interpretation of the Pistis Sophia, and so does Athenagoras.

The Lord as the Mirror is the key to the very beautiful 13th Ode in our collection.

The knowledge that Wisdom-texts are being employed by the Odists makes it interesting to inquire whether there are any traces of the definition of Wisdom (or the Sophia-Christ) under the connotation of ἀτμίς.

It will help us to understand the part which these terms ἀτμίς, ἀπόρροια, and ἀπαύγασμα have played in the definition of Christ as the Wisdom of God, if we transcribe some passages from the Commentary of Origen on the Epistle to the Hebrews:

‘Cum autem discutitur hoc quod dictum est de Filio Dei, quod est splendor gloriæ (sc. ἀπαύγασμα), necessario videtur simul disserendum et illud quod dictum est, non solum quod splendor est lucis æternæ, sed et quod huic simile in Sapientia Salomonis refertur, in qua seipsam Sapientia describit dicens: Vapor enim est virtutis Dei, et aporrhæa gloriæ Omnipotentis purissima (Sap. vii. 25).

Oportet autem scire nos quia per ineffabilia quaedam, et secreta ac recondita quemdam modum sibi faciens, Scriptura Sancta conatur hominibus indicare, et intellectum suggerere subtilem; vaporis enim nomen inducens hoc ideo de rebus corporalibus assumpsit, et vel ex parte aliqua intelligere possimus, quomodo Christus, qui est Sapientia, secundum similitudinem eius vaporis qui de substantia aliqua corporali procedit, sic etiam ipse ut quidam vapor exoritur de virtute ipsius Dei: sic et Sapientia ex eo procedens, ex ipsa Dei Substantia generatur. Sic nihilominus et secundum similitudinem corporalis aporrhææ, et dicitur “aporrhæa gloriæ Omnipotentis pura quaedam et sincera”. Quæ utraque similitudinis manifestissime ostendunt communione substantiæ esse Filio cum Patre. Aporrhæa enim ὑποούσιος videtur, id est, unius substantiæ cum illo corpore ex quo est vel aporrhæa, vel vapor.’

These comments show how Christ was identified with Wisdom on the one hand, and with the descriptions of Wisdom on the other, and how the Nicene formula was anticipated. In the argument of Origen ἀπόρροια and ἀτμίς are a pair of corporeal illustrations of the Homoousian doctrine. We have found the ἀπόρροια in the Odes, let us now look for the ἀτμίς.

Gressmann thinks that instead of λογ in Ode xii. 5 (expression), we should at the second time read λωλ (= ἀτμίς), so as to render :

‘The swiftmess of the Word is inexpressible,
Like an ἀτμίς is its swiftmess and its sharpness.’

Some such restoration seems necessary, and if it can be justified, then the ἀτμίς as well as the ἀπόρροια is a part of the intellectual furniture of the Odist. See further our note on the verse in question.

As soon as we have detected in the Odes at any point the use of the Sapiential terms to which we have been referring, we see that the pre-existence of Christ is affirmed in the generation of the Divine Wisdom, to which Origen would add that the consubstantiality of the Father and the Son is also involved: but the Odist will hardly have seen as far into possible controversy as this. He is nearer to the Pauline position that ‘Christ is the Power of God and the Wisdom of God’, without undue elaboration of what is involved in that doctrine.

Where the Odist does seem to be face to face with controversial matter is in the 41st Ode, where Christ is described as the Word that was beforetime in the Father, after which the Odist adds:

‘The Christ is truly One:
And He was known before the foundation of the world.’

The words ‘The Christ is truly one’, taken along with the other statements as to His pre-existence, suggest a controversy over a division in the Nature of Christ, such a controversy as finds reflection in the first Epistle of John (1 John iv. 3) where we are told that πάν πνεῦμα ὃ λέει τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐκ ἔστιν, and where some Docetic fission of the Nature of the Son appears to be contemplated. It would be, however, premature to affirm that the Christology of the Odist can at all points be compressed within the limits of orthodox definition, for at the early date to which we have referred the composition of the Odes it was easier to be unorthodox than to be logically exact.

In regard to the Incarnation, we have had the advantage of a slight improvement in the translation of a passage in the seventh Ode, which we are now able to recognize as having been quoted by Eusebius. As we have already discussed the passage in the chapter on Quotations from the Odes in the early Fathers, it is only necessary to remind ourselves that the verses :

‘He hath caused me to know Himself,
Without grudging in His simplicity,
Because His kindness hath minished His greatness.’

Ode vii. 3.

are accurately reflected in Eusebius, who, in his comment on the 144th Psalm, speaks of Christ as τῆς θεότητος ὑποβὰς καὶ τοῦ συμφυοῦς μεγέθους ἑαυτὸν σμικρύνας.—Euseb. D. E. vi. 9, p. 267.

There can be no doubt that the verses in the Ode are descriptive of the Incarnation.

Enough has been said to show that the Odist is a person of no slight theological knowledge, and that the terms he employs are, for the most part, theologically correct.

It is increasingly clear that the Christology of the Odes is based (i) upon the prophecies, and those passages which were assumed to be prophetical, in the Old Testament ; (ii) upon the descriptions of Wisdom in the Sapiential literature. Under the first head, as we have seen, the Psalms occupy an extraordinary place, and amongst the Psalms, such as have always been held to be Messianic. The 22nd Psalm in particular has thrown great light on the composition of the Odes. The Odes make Christ speak in his own person, and the language spoken is a reflection from the Psalms. This need not surprise us, for the same thing which the Odist did in poetry the evangelical historian did in prose. We do not yet know whether those incidents in the Gospel which reflect the language of the 22nd Psalm, for example, are all of them genuine history; but we may be sure that in some cases the imagination of the writer has been assisted and the language found for him by the Psalms with which he was familiar, or which he may actually have studied for coincidence. Take, for example, St. Luke's allusion to the 'acquaintance of our Lord, who stood afar off' at the time of the Crucifixion: the incident is natural enough, but the language εἰστήκεισαν δὲ πάντες οἱ γνωστοὶ αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ μακρόθεν.

Luke xxiii. 49, is based on the Psalms: the margin of Nestle's New Testament carries the references (from Hort) to Psalms lxxxviii. 8, xxxviii. 11, and underlines as above, the precedence being given to Psalm lxxxviii. 9, which in the LXX is:

ἐμάκρυνας τοὺς γνωστούς μου ἀπ' ἐμοῦ.

ἔθεντό με βδέλνυμα ἑαυτοῖς.

This recognition of our Lord's 'acquaintance' in the narration of Luke helps us to the understanding of a difficult passage in the opening of the 42nd Ode, which runs as follows (the text had lost a clause in the Rylands MS. which we have restored from the Nitrian MS.):

'I became of no use to those who know me;
For I shall hide myself
From those who did not take hold of me;
And I shall be with those who love me.'

The speaker is certainly Christ, as was indicated in the editio princeps by a note attached to the opening clause. It is clear that the language is again that of the 88th Psalm; 'those who know me' is τοὺς γνωστούς μου of the LXX: the words 'I became of no use' reflect ἐγενήθην ὡς ἄνθρωπος ἀβοήθητος.

in the sixth verse of the same Psalm, the opening clause of the Ode being quam proxime in Greek:

ἐγενήθην ὡς ἀβοήθητος τοῖς γνωστοῖς μου.

The Greek ἀβοήθητος in the sense of 'helpless' is not badly represented by the Syriac ܐܡܝܢ ܠܐ 'no use', and it is possible that here also we may be able to convict the Syriac of being secondary.

What is of more importance at this point is that we have found the clue to the interpretation and the composition of the Ode. The Psalm has been taken as prophetic of the Descent into Hades, an interpretation which is invited by the words ἡ ζωὴ μου τῷ ἅδῃ ἤγγισεν.

and which was commonly assumed to underlie the words

ἐν νεκροῖς ἐλεύθερος.

So in the Ode, the words 'I went down with him to its utmost depth', reflect Psalm lxxxvii (lxxxviii) 7:

ἔθεντό με ἐν λάκκῳ κατωτάτῳ.

We also have the key to the opening words of the Ode, for the Psalm tells us in the tenth verse:

καὶ ἐέκραξα πρὸς σέ, κύριε, ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν.
διεπέτασα τὰς χεῖράς μου.

So the opening words of the Ode in reference to the stretching out the hands and approaching the Lord, are to be either referred to Christ Himself, or they are anticipative and mimetic of one of the verses in the Psalm, 'the stretching out the hands being His sign', which the writer has identified in the Psalm.¹

¹ We find the same quotation in Altercatio Simonis et Theophili, vi. 22.

That the Psalm in question early supplied Testimonies to the Death and Resurrection of Christ appears certain, though some leading exegetes like Theodoret (following, no doubt, the lead of Theodore) prefer to interpret the whole Psalm of the Jews in captivity.

In the Testimonia of Gregory of Nyssa, we find under the chapter on the Cross (cap. vii):

καὶ πάλιν ἔθεντό με ἐν λάκκῳ κατωτάτῳ (Psalm lxxxvii (lxxxviii) 7).

and in the chapter on the Resurrection (cap. viii):

καὶ πάλιν ἐγενήθη ὥσεὶ ἄνθρωπος ἀβοήθητος, ἐν νεκροῖς ἐλεύθερος (Psalm lxxxvii (lxxxviii) 6).

Cyril of Jerusalem takes the whole Psalm to be spoken ex ore Christi, and refers to the words just quoted (see Cat. xiv. 8), which we have shown to underlie the speech of Christ in Ode xlii. 3.

Augustine also, commenting upon the Psalm, says:

‘Let us therefore now hear the voice of Christ singing before us in prophecy, to whom His own choir should respond either in imitation or in thanksgiving.’

We said that it could be proved from the language of Cyril of Jerusalem, that the Odist believed Christ to be (1) Monogenēs or Only-Begotten; (2) Miraculously born. The passage which we were discussing was as follows:

‘I was not their brother,
Nor my birth like theirs.’—Ode xxviii. 16.

The language is, at first sight, somewhat alien to the Spirit of the Incarnation: there is a touch of contempt mingled with its necessary superiority. It does not square with Paul’s interpretation of Christ as the First-born among many brethren, nor with the writer to the Hebrews in saying that he took part in the flesh and blood of the children. It would be easier to find patristic parallels to the second clause ('my birth not like theirs') than to the first clause, 'I was not their brother'. Let us see if we can find the key to the language. It is clear that the Odist is not speaking of Christ as the πρωτότοκος (the first stage of evolution of the Wisdom doctrine, according to which Wisdom was God's First-born, and Christ was the Wisdom of God): the alternative term to πρωτότοκος is μονογενής, the former representing Pauline Christology, the later Johannine. It can be shown that it is to this term μονογενής that the explanation belongs of the words 'I was not their brother', in the sense that the Only-Begotten has no brothers.

Suppose we turn, then, to the Catechetical Lectures of Cyril of Jerusalem: we find the following statements:

'A Son Only-Begotten, having no other for His brother; for therefore is He called Only-Begotten, because He has no brother.'—Cat. xi. 2.

'When thou hearest of the First-born, think not that this is according to men; for the first-born among men may have other brothers also.'—Cat. xi. 4.

'Neither has He who begat, a father, nor He who is begotten, a brother The Father being eternal, eternally and ineffably begat One Only Son, who has no brother.'—Cat. xi. 13.

'As there is One God the Father and no second Father: and as there is One Only-Begotten Son and Word of God, who has no brother.'—Cat. xvi. 3.

Thus, according to Cyril, we are to interpret 'Only-Begotten' in the sense of not having a brother; and even the term First-born has to be used judiciously for fear the conclusion should be drawn that Christ had brothers. We may, therefore, take it as the meaning of the Odist that Christ is the Only-Begotten and is miraculously born. This does not mean that the Odist is using St. John, but that he has a theology parallel to the Johannine. He is nearer to the Gospel of John than he is to the Epistle to the Colossians. Dependence, however, is not proved, for Monogenēs is one of the terms that is taken over from the description of Wisdom, and not necessarily borrowed from the Gospel.

The difficulty of reconciling the two titles of Christ, μονογενής and πρωτότοκος, must have been felt very early: and it remained as an objection which heretics employed against the Nicene faith. Basil, in his treatise against Eunomius, meets the objection by saying that one can be first-born without introducing any brothers, for was not Christ called the first-born son of the Virgin?

ὥστε οὐκ ἀνάγκη ἀδελφοῦ πρωτότοκον λέγεσθαι.

The objector's case was stated as follows:

εἰ πρωτότοκος ὁ Υἱός, οὐκέτι μονογενής· ἀλλ' ὀφείλει καὶ ἄλλος εἶναι, οὗ πρωτότοκος λέγεται.—Adv. Eunom. iv (292 E).

It was assumed that Monogenēs meant brotherless: but first-born could not mean that.

Basil's argument was a mere evasion, for the terms in dispute were not used of the natural birth of Christ.

Up to this point the inquiry into the doctrine of Christ that is held by the Odist leads to the conclusion that it is Nicene in a nascent form. There is no doubt as to the pre-existence of Christ (Ode xli. 15, &c.) or to His pre-eminence; He is the Head of the Church and believers are His members (Ode xvii. 15, &c.). He is the Word of God (Ode xvi. 8, 19; xli. 11, 14; vii. 7; xii. 5, 12; xxxii. 2) and the Wisdom of God (Ode vii. 8; xli. 9); the unique Messiah miraculously born (Ode xxviii. 16). Against the Docetists the Odist is firm that the Christ is One (Ode xli. 15), against the Jews that He is the Lord (Ode xxix. 6).

There are, however, some elements of a heretical or incompletely developed character in the Odist's views. In two places, perhaps, the Christ is spoken of as one of the Divine Neighbours (Ode xxi. 7; xxxvi. 6), an expression which co-ordinates Him with the angels in rank; in the 36th Ode, the statement is made almost as in the Koran, where Jesus is called 'one of those that are near to God'; and in that very same Ode we have the Odist's description of Christ as 'Most Glorified among the Glorious and Greatest among the Great Ones'. It will take some justifying to make these expressions theologically innocuous.

The Odist's doctrine of the Holy Spirit is, as we have already seen, so unorthodox in its subordination of the Spirit to the Son, that Ephrem had to alter it. In one place in the Ode already referred to (Ode xxxvi. 3) the Spirit is represented as the Mother of Christ! (we find a similar statement in Aphrahat, Dem. xviii, col. 840).

When we come to the Passion of Christ we do not find anything that we can call a doctrine of the Atonement in the Pauline sense of the word: he does not teach the forgiveness of sins, but only the abolition of ignorance, a very good doctrine and deserving a place in the creed, but not exactly the same as the other. The Odist is, however, well acquainted with the details of the Passion, especially where such details are accompanied by prophetic correspondence.

If the writer is un-Pauline in the matter of the sacrificial aspect of Christ's death, he is equally un-Pauline in the article of His resurrection. A single doubtful allusion exhausts his reference to it (Ode xxxi. 11). The fact is that he is like Bardaisan on the question of the Resurrection; he doesn't hold his doctrine of the future life in that form: we may call him unorthodox or not according to our predilections. The Odist believes in eternal life as attainable and attained in the present life; this reduces his doctrine of the last things almost to zero; it is possible, however, that in this direction we may find further reason for classifying him as a Johannine Christian, in view of the very limited eschatological outlook of the Fourth Gospel. If the Odist is weak on the article of the Resurrection he makes, on the other hand, a speciality of the Descent into Hades, as our notes will abundantly show.

Enough has been said to indicate the place of the Odist in schools of Christian thought.

CHAPTER VII

THE ODES AND THE BIBLICAL TARGUM.

WE find in the course of our examination into the linguistic phenomena which are offered by the Odes that there are cases, apparently of an indubitable character, where the Odes have come under the influence of the Targums; and if this can be established there are two directions in which the influence may have come into play: first of all, there is the natural and direct use of the Targum by a person who has a knowledge of the Hebrew language, or, at least, of its related Aramaic; second, there is a possible influence through the Syriac version of the Old Testament, which (like the Old Syriac Version of the New Testament) occasionally shows traces of a Targumist hand. Thus the question of Targumist influence is of importance in the determination of the original language of the Odes. If, for instance, there should be a probability that the original form of the Peshiṭta version of the Old Testament showed at any point the same trace of Targum that we find in the Odes, the natural conclusion would be that the Ode in question has imitated the Peshiṭta text, and is itself a Syriac product. If, however, any of the Odes, using Biblical matter, shows traces of the Targum, where the corresponding passage in the Peshiṭta does not show it, then (unless the Peshiṭta has corrected its Targumisms away) the Odist had access to the Targum outside the Peshiṭta, and may probably be independent of the Syriac version. We shall see presently how to apply these criteria. Meanwhile, if the traces of the Targum can be detected, we may say in advance that it is extremely improbable that the Odes were composed in Greek. It would almost reduce the choice of origins to Hebrew, Aramaic, or Syriac. We reserve, of course, the case of a bilingual writer, who should be at home both in Greek and in Semitic. How, then, shall we establish our statement as to the existence of cases of Targumism in the Odes? For the detailed evidence in individual cases we must refer to the notes under the Odes in question: but some general statements may be made. The first suspicious case upon which we stumbled was in the first Ode of the collection, which showed an inner connexion with the first Psalm in the canonical Psalter, in its allusions to a never-withering and always fruitful crown upon the head of the Odist. 'His leaf also shall not wither', 'He brings forth his fruit in his season', being, in fact, a tree of righteousness, well-placed by abundant streams of water. Then, at the end of the Ode, came the obscure remark, 'Thy fruits are full and perfect, full of thy salvation'. The suggestion arose whether this could be the equivalent of the sentence in the first Psalm that 'whatsoever he doeth shall prosper'. Could the words 'he doeth' refer to the 'tree' which immediately precedes? In that case the 'doing' of the tree, as in the first chapter of Genesis ('tree of fruit, making fruit'), is the fruit that it produces. And if this fruit is prosperous the words 'full and perfect' are the natural comment. At this point we turn to the Targum and find that it has made this very explanation; and, curious to say, one-half of the explanation, the 'perfectness' of the fruit, survives in the text of the Peshiṭta, which does not, however, make it clear that it is the tree that is making a perfect product.

This is a very good case to begin with: it shows that there is a nexus between the Ode and the first Psalm in matter that is derived from the Targum or from the Syriac version in an early form of its tradition.

Now let us take another illustration. In Ode xxix. 8 the writer says that the Lord has given him 'the rod of His power':

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ

We recognize at once that this peculiar expression is taken from the 110th Psalm. On turning to the Peshiṭta text, we find a partial coincidence:

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ

the word for 'rod' is the same: the word for 'power' is different. If the Odist varies from the Syriac Psalm he varies equally from the Targum, with which the Syriac Psalter at this point agrees.

Using the result thus obtained of the dependence of the Odist upon the 110th Psalm, we see at once that there must be further coincidence or dependence; for the 'rod of power' in either case is to be used for the suppression of one's enemies. Then we observe a peculiarity of the Odist; his military operations are to be undertaken 'by the word of the Lord', and victory over his enemies is attained through 'the Lord overthrowing them by His Word'. Should we write in our translation 'word' or 'Word'? We translated at first without a capital letter; but on looking at the first verse of the Psalm we find that 'the Lord said unto my Lord, sit still, &c., until I subdue thy enemies': and on turning to the Targum we find that 'the Lord said by His Word'; so we are led to use a capital letter, and to find the origin of the references in the Ode in question.

The case differs from the preceding in that there appears no trace of the Targum's expression in the Peshîṭta. In this way we are able to affirm that the language of the Odes is at certain points under the influence of the Targum on the Psalms: and if this conclusion is correct the observation will be far-reaching in character. We shall find our Odist in a Jewish area; he may even be a Judæo-Christian. In one case at least we have shown an acquaintance with the Hebrew text as against its Targum (and the leading translations), for the Odist knows both the readings in Proverbs viii. 22, the 'Lord possessed me', and 'the Lord created me'. The former is the Hebrew reading: the latter that of the Targum, the LXX, and the Peshîṭta. Evidently we shall have to enlarge our idea of the scholarship of the author of the Odes; for he appears to be a scholar as well as a poet.

The recognition of occasional Targumic traces in the language of the Odes raises a further question; are there any instances of the influence of those devices which are employed by Targumists, in order to avoid the repetition of the Divine Name, or to escape from describing the Divine action in human terms, such as attribute to the Lord 'hands, eyes, organs, and dimensions'? We have already referred to the leading instance of such substitution, in the introduction of the 'Word of God' in the 110th Psalm, and the reflex action from the Targum in the 29th Ode. Let us see if we can find traces of similar substitutions.

In Genesis iv. 14, 'Cain said unto the Lord Thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth, and from thy face shall I be hid.' Here the Targum first of all gets rid of the conversation between Cain and God, by substituting 'Cain said before the Lord', and then he has a double difficulty before him; (i) the reference to the face of God, (ii) the supposition that anything can be hidden from God. To avoid this he first replaces 'face of God' by 'from before God', and then he boldly says that 'it is impossible that I shall be hid'. We notice that the Targumist (Onkelos) objects to the 'face of God' and resorts to a circumlocution. Here we come across a curious feature of the Odes: the Odist on several occasions refers to the 'face of God', which sometimes comes in very awkwardly in the context, but he appears to have equated it in his mind with the Memra or Logos, so that the difficulty is got rid of in another way. Thus he says in Ode xxii. 11:

'Thy way was without corruption And thy Face:'

and in Ode xxv. 4:

'Thy Face was with me,
Which saved me by thy grace.'

Here the expression 'thy Face' would not be used by a strict Targumist, but the Odist uses it of Christ, and does not find any difficulty in it. It has become for him one of the terms of a new and lawful vocabulary.

In order to see more clearly how the writer uses these quasi-Divine Names, we may compare Ode xv. 8, 9:

‘I have put on incorruption through His Name,
I have put off corruption by His grace:
Death hath been destroyed before my Face:
Sheol hath been abolished by my Word.’

Note the parallelisms between the ‘Face’ and the ‘Word’: it suggests that God is the speaker (through the prophet) in the last two lines, and that the Word is the Logos. We observe further that the Odist has another Targumist substitution in the use of the ‘Name’ of God, again, as it seems, as an equivalent of the Divine Word.

We may compare for this equivalence Ode xxii. 6:

‘Thou wast there and didst help me:
Everywhere thy name was a rampart to me.’

In another Ode the ‘name’ is thrown into parallelism with the Holy Spirit. Ode vi. 7:

‘The praise of His name He gave us:
Our spirits praise His Holy Spirit.’

A very interesting passage, charged with Targumic language, will be found in Ode xxxvi. 2:

‘The Spirit made me stand on my feet in the high place of the Lord,
Before His perfection and His glory.’

Here both of the terms ‘perfection’ and ‘glory’ are used as paraphrases for ‘the Lord’; the ‘glory’ (שְׁכִינָה or יְקִיר) is a common Targumic substitution. In the next line of the Ode the speaker is Christ, and the reserve in language is not necessary; accordingly the Odist says:

‘The Spirit brought me forth
Before the Face of the Lord.’

Here the language is proper ex ore Christi, but not proper (to the mind of the Targumist) for an ordinary person.

There is no doubt that the use of Targums has contributed to the religious language of the time and the place where they were current. A Targumist does not say 'God knows'; he says, 'It is revealed and known before the Holy One, blessed is He'. Thus in Genesis xlix. 16 Judah must not say, 'God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants'; he says instead, 'From before the Lord there has been found iniquity in thy servant.' Such expressions readily become conventional, at least among Aramaic-speaking peoples. They pass into the religious language of the time.

Accordingly, when the Odist in Ode iv. 12 wishes to say that God knew all that was going to happen to the Temple, he expresses it thus:

'The end was revealed to thee:

ܠܡܥܢ ܕܝܠܕ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ

All was revealed to thee as God.'

ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ

Notice, too, how the Odist reminds the Lord of the impossibility that He should repent of anything that He gave or designed. This is one of the crucial cases for a Targumist, who, when he finds in the Scripture that God repents of having made man, as in Genesis vi. 6, for example, resorts to the device of the 'Word' by whom God acts, and says:

'God repented in His Word that He had made man.'

Our Odist is equally sure that God could not change His mind: he is almost a Targumist, and moves in the circle of ideas to which Targums belong. A careful study of Targumic language will, no doubt, throw much light upon the language and the thought of the Odes.

For example, in Genesis iii. 5, the serpent says: 'God doth know : ye shall be as God (אלהים) knowing good and evil.' This language would certainly offend the Odist who would say :

'Evil thou knowest not, neither doth it know thee.'
Cf. Ode xviii. 9, 10.

The Targum evades the difficulty of translating Elohim as a real plural (and so does the Authorized Version): accordingly we have:

'It is revealed before God ;

Ye shall be as the magnates, knowing between good and evil.'

Here the word 'magnates' (רברבין) is meant to express the 'angels' or the 'heavenly beings'.

We notice it is the very expression which the Odist puts into the mouth of Christ in Ode xxxvi. 4 :

'I was glorified amongst the glorious ones,
And great amongst the magnates.'

The language of the Odist overlaps that of the Targum; they have much in common.

Perhaps enough has been said in support of the thesis that there is common matter (both in language and in ideas) between the Odist and the Targums. The Odist himself lives next door to the Synagogue and in the Jewish quarter.

CHAPTER VIII

STYLE OF THE ODES.

WE can state with confidence that the Syriac style used in the Odes is not that of the Edessene productions represented by the Peshitta Version of the Old Testament, the Hymn of the Soul in the Acts of Thomas, the Book of the Laws of Countries, the Acts of Thomas generally, the poetical works of Ephrem, &c. In all these works there is a certain freedom of writing and ease of expression which cannot be clearly detected in the Odes. Much of this harshness may, perhaps, be accounted for by the allegorical allusions which sometimes underlie the outer form of the words; but when every allowance is made under this head there remains always something which distinguishes the style of the Odes, say, from that of the canonical Psalter.

Two hypotheses may here be put forward: either the writer was working with a language which had not undergone a long period of development resulting in the fixity of the terms employed, or that he was translating from another language a text that was itself obscure; in this case, not wishing to indulge in countersense or nonsense, he might have tried to follow the original more closely than was consistent with a fine literary style. His choice of terms is, however, very happy, and one could with difficulty substitute a better lexicographical vocable for that adopted in his actual phrases. A Syriac scholar with a tried taste in Syriac language might perhaps reproach the Odist (or his translator) with an occasional weakness in the construction of a sentence, but not with a wrong use of a word. The terminology is, therefore, archaic, and certainly cannot be placed after the seventh century of our era, when foreign linguistic influences, already in existence, began to make themselves felt in a more accentuated manner in the Syriac language.

As an example to illustrate the first hypothesis we may quote the two terms used to express the 'Word', or the Johannine λόγος: ܦܬܓܠܗܡܐ (pethghāma) and ܡܠܠܬܗ (melletha). The first word, derived from a Persian root, is in classic Syriac used exclusively in the sense of word 'in concreto', i.e. vocable, sentence, order, answer; the second, which is employed in the Syriac New Testament to express the Johannine λόγος, has acquired in post-biblical Syriac, from the end of the second century onwards, the meaning of word 'in abstracto'. In reading the Odes we find that in two of them (xvi and xli) ܠܠܗ is used to express 'Logos'; but this same λόγος is expressed by the inadequate ܠܠܗ in the Odes xii, xxxii. No Christian Syrian writer would have ever used, in speaking of Christ, such an unchristian and unevangelical expression if he were writing long after the end of the second century, i.e. after the vulgarization of the Syriac Gospels, any more than a modern English theologian would say that 'in the beginning was the vocable'.

It is certainly remarkable that the Syriac Odes should prefer to speak of Christ, the Word of God, under the term ܠܠܗ (pethghāma) rather than the term ܠܠܗ (melletha). It suggests an early date for the text when we find that so little regard is paid to the ecclesiastical use of terms. The use of pethghāma as an equivalent for Logos must have soon become obsolete under the influence of the Syriac Gospels; all through the Syriac literature the rendering of the Gospel of John, where λόγος = ܠܠܗ (melletha), is the conventional one. There is, however, a slight trace of the existence of a double translation in Syriac, corresponding to the usage of the Odes and to the Latin Sermo and Verbum: in Aphrahat (i. 389) we find Christ described as ܠܠܗ ܠܠܗ where two possible renderings stand side by side. And in the very same sequence (i. 392) there is a trace of a third attempt at the rendering of λόγος; for Aphrahat goes on to say that 'it is written, In the beginning was the Voice (ܠܠܗ kāla) which is the Word (melletha)'. In this connexion we must remark that in the prophetic Books of the Old Testament Peshiṭta the use of melletha and pethghāma alternates confusedly without any difference of meaning, because the Johannine and Christian conception of λόγος is not well developed at the time of their translation. On the hypothesis of a Greek original, the translator, believing the Odes to be the work of the Biblical Solomon, must have adopted the unsettled terminology of the Old Testament. On the other hand, would not this Syrian Christian translator have preferably used the word melletha to make the sentence more applicable to Christ, the Word of God?

The phraseology of the Syriac text in connexion with the word ܐܝܠܐ (= spirit or wind) deserves also special notice. In the Syriac Old Testament, when this term is applied exclusively to the wind or to the spirit of men and angels, it has commonly the feminine gender, and when applied to the Spirit of God it is also used more in the feminine than in the masculine gender, except in the expression ܐܝܠܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ (holy spirit) where it is generally used in masculine (cf. Ps. li. 11, &c.). At the beginning of Christianity in the Syriac Churches, the Christian Holy Spirit, as constituting a personality distinct from God the Father, was frequently spoken of as feminine; it is so used by Aphrahat, by the old Syriac versions, and generally by Ephrem, possibly under the influence of Old Testament phraseology. To give the word a more orthodox meaning, when these versions were revised sometime in the second half of the fourth or beginning of the fifth century into the Peshiṭta, or Vulgate version of all the branches of the Syrian Church, the revisers changed it into masculine in John xiv. 17, 26, xv. 26, xvi. 13, 14; Luke xii. 12; but it has been retained as feminine in Luke i. 35, ii. 25, iii. 22, iv. 1; John vii. 39, and John i. 32 (but with the elimination of the word 'Holy').

After the fifth century, the expression 'Holy Spirit', ܐܝܠܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ, Christian or Judaic, became conventionally masculine (cf. Eph. iv. 30, Pesh.); and the Christian Holy Spirit with ܐܝܠܐ alone, and to some extent with the expression ܐܝܠܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ, is also commonly masculine, except in the passages where the wording is visibly inspired from the corresponding passages of the Peshiṭta and Ephrem. We give the only instances to the contrary with the adjective ܩܕܝܫܐ, and it is even possible that in two of these instances the 'Spirit of God' was understood by the translators in the sense of that of the Old Testament, and not of the Christian Holy Spirit, a person distinct from the Father. This is probably the case with Aphrahat (ii. 128), where ܐܝܠܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܥܝܠܐ (His Spirit) is used, and with the colophon to the Lewisian text (page 268, edit. Lewis), and with 1 Thessalonians iv. 8 (= Ezek. xxxviii. 14).

Possibly this could not be applied to Luke ii. 25-6 in the Lewisian text, where ܡܫܠܗ ܕܡܫܝܚܐ is employed. These are the only instances against the stereotyped formula which we have noticed in the Syriac literature. Probably one or two other instances have escaped our notice, but they will hardly counterbalance the thousands of examples which might be given to the contrary.

Coming to the Odes, we notice that the expression ܡܫܠܗ ܕܡܫܝܚܐ is used in the masculine in the stereotyped Syriac formula for the 'Holy Spirit', Judaic or Christian (see Odes vi. 7, xi. 2, xiv. 8, xxiii. 22 B). But in the famous Ode xix, which contains indubitable marks of the Christian 'Holy Spirit' outside the sphere of the stereotyped formula, we see the Holy Spirit spoken of as feminine. If the Syriac text had seen the light long after the sixth century we should have expected a more natural masculine use of ܡܫܠܗ ܕܡܫܝܚܐ. Not once is the word used in the feminine in the works of Severus, Patriarch of Antioch, translated from the Greek into Syriac by Jacob of Edessa about 698 (Patrologia Orientalis, iv. 1-94; viii. 100-280 et seq.).

On the other hand, there is a sentence which would suggest that the style of the Odes is dependent on that of the New Testament Peshiṭta. Ode xli. 15 has the expression ܡܫܠܗ ܕܡܫܝܚܐ 'the foundations of the world'. This is the Peshiṭta rendering of καταβολή κόσμου (cf. Matt. xiii. 35; John xii. 24; Ephes. i. 4). This coincidence, which is not to be lightly disregarded, is discussed in our note to the Ode in question and by E. A. Abbott in The Fourfold Gospel, p. 408 seq.; see also p. 122 of the present volume. Whether the phraseology of the Odes is dependent on the Syriac Old and New Testaments is discussed in another chapter. As far as the particularities of the Syriac text are concerned the philological notes placed at the end of every Ode may be found useful.

The subject being so intricate, it would be rash to attach the style of the Odes to that of a known group of authors, or a determined school of thought, and it would be highly precarious to try to fix the epoch of their composition by the outward form of style.

On the one hand they certainly contain many of the elements which characterize a Syriac composition under Greek influences, and in this respect, were it not for some extraneous considerations arising chiefly (1) from a certain play on the different meanings of some Syriac words; (2) from the almost certain hypothesis that Ephrem (d. 373) knew them in their present form; (3) from a certain literary ascendancy which the Syriac text possesses when compared with the Coptic translation and the Latin quotation of Lactantius—we should without hesitation have asserted that they were a translation from a Greek original. The only Syriac translations of Greek originals in the time preceding Ephrem, from which we can form a judgement as to the nature of early translations, are the Old Syriac Gospels; but the slight linguistic coincidences between the Odes and the Lewisian and Curetonian Versions do not seem to be sufficiently numerous to enable us to draw a safe conclusion of a constant relation between the style of the Odes and the style of the Gospels. Something, however, emerges clearly from an even superficial reading of the phrasology of the Odes, viz. that the difficulty of translation of some words lies not so much in their lexicographical or grammatical formation as in the precise meaning, sometimes hidden and mystical, which the author himself appears to have given them.

Everything well considered, there is much truth in F. C. Burkitt's verdict to the effect that no theory of the origin of these Odes is satisfactory which regards the Syriac translation (? text) that we possess otherwise than as an exotic. This is true if a comparison is established between the stylistic method of Acta Thomae (which, however important for a theologian, not many Syrians would consider as a model of Syriac composition) and the Odes, but it would somewhat exceed the boundaries of truth if that comparison were established with the writings of Sergius of Resh'aina, John of Ephesus, Jacob of Edessa, Maraba, Paul the Persian, &c.

In other words, Syrian authors with a Hellenic education write Syriac in a very different way from that of a man who knows no Greek. The Acts of Judas Thomas were written by a man who knew no Hellenic culture, and the works of Jacob of Edessa reflect the Hellenic education of their writer. A learned Syrian with a Hellenic education would write in a more grammatical Syriac than that used by Ephrem himself, would employ happier and more technical terms; but any one would notice that his style lacked that grace and flexibility which characterize a man without any exotic influence, such as Ephrem. The stiffness and the absence of characteristic native idiom, which would surely be found in the style of the former, would not prohibit our referring the composition to a real Syrian, who was writing in his own language.

Generally speaking the phraseology of the Odes is harmonious and correct, and stands in a very marked contrast with some extant Syriac translations of Greek originals, instances of which are found in the Psalms of Solomon, the Geoponica, the Aphorisms of Hippocrates, the Didascalia, &c. There are even sentences which could scarcely have been found in Greek thought or in Greek phrase. Ode xii. 6 has ܐܠܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ And it (the Word) never falls, but standing He stands, for 'He stands firmly and continually'; Ode xxviii. 4 has ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ He blessing blessed me for 'He surely and frequently blessed me'. If the opinion held by all Semitists that the so-called mimmed infinitive used to give more emphasis to the verb is an undoubted Semitism, there is reason to believe that the instances above quoted, if not pure inventions of the unknown translator, are genuine marks of a Semite. Instances to the contrary are, however, numerous, and an examination of the early and late Syriac translations of Greek originals is instructive.

In the old Syriac Gospels, where the translated text is not so servile to the Greek as that of the Peshitta, this linguistic phenomenon occurs more than once; examples: Matt. ix. 24 (Lewis), v. 32 (Lewis and Cureton); Luke viii. 50 and 53 (Cureton), xvi. 18 (Lewis), xxii. 15 (Lewis and Cureton); John vii. 47 (Lewis and Cureton).

In all these passages the revisers of the N.T. text have eliminated the mimmed infinitives, which are no more found in the Peshiṭta. The elimination has been effected as follows: ܡܝܡܡܐ (bis) for ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ : ܡܝܡܡܐ (bis) for ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ : ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ : ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ for ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ : ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ for ܡܝܡܡܐ ܡܝܡܡܐ.

In all these examples the employment of the infinitive was facultative, and the revisers eliminated it: sometimes, however, it has been overlooked, and once it appears to have been retained because its position was necessary to the expression of the thought (see John ix. 9, x. 20, xiii. 29). The case is similar where the evangelist is quoting from the Old Testament where the phenomenon exists in the Hebrew and Syriac texts, as in Mark vii. 10, &c.

As far as the Syriac Acts of the Apostles and the Pauline Epistles are concerned, the use of the infinitive referred to above seems to be infrequent, and is generally confined to Biblical quotations from the Old Testament and to passages where a special stress is required by the Greek context, such as 2 Corinthians viii. 10, x. 9, xi. 7; Philippians i. 29; Romans xiv. 4 (as in Ode xii. 6). As we have already said, these phrases may be considered as remnants from the old Syriac Epistles, and for this reason they might not have been touched, out of respect for an ancient text.

The Syriac translations of the sixth century onwards offer very few instances of a constant use of this linguistic phenomenon, and for all practical purposes they may be left out of the question. We have not found it employed in the translation of the works of Severus of Antioch given in vol. viii of Patr. Orient. except on p. 245 in a quotation from 3 Kings xix. 10, which has no bearing on our case.

In the following example there may have been in the mind of the Odist the idea of a substantive derived from its verb, ܡܝܡܡܐ (truth) from ܡܝܡܡܐ (to be firm). This could hardly have been the case if the author was a passive translator from a Greek original, because in this last language, the common word 'truth' is not derived from a common verb meaning to 'consolidate'.

ܐܢܝ ܐܫܬܝܠܡܐ ܥܠ ܐܝܢܐ ܕܐܝܬܐ

'And I was established (= confirmed) upon the rock of truth (= firmness)' (Ode xi. 5).

This phenomenon is to be carefully distinguished from the use of a noun of action or a mere substantive, with or without any preposition before or after the verb. Any Syriac book affords examples of such sentences, especially where the noun of action has constituted something like an inseparable expression with the verb from which it is derived. It will be useful for future investigation to give a list of all such phrases found in the Odes and Psalms of Solomon. They do not constitute by themselves an irrefragable token of Semitism, but their frequency in a work is a good guarantee that it emanates either from a Semite or from a man with Semitic learning and influenced by a Semitic Bible. It is a semi-play on words which is not to be completely disregarded.

(a) Examples with a preposition :

ܐܬܝܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'They defiled the sanctuary of the Lord with defilement.'

Ps. Sol. i. 8.

ܐܬܝܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'That thou mightest be justified, O God, by Thy justification.'

Ps. Sol. ix. 3.

ܐܬܝܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'Thou didst surely covenant.'—Ps. Sol. ix. 19.

ܐܬܝܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'I was covered with the covering.'—Ode Sol. xxv. 8.

ܐܬܝܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'Let our faces shine by His shining.'—Ode Sol. xli. 6.

הַחַיִּים הַחַיִּים

'Error erred.'—Ode Sol. xxxi. 2.

Another phenomenon which goes to the credit of the Semitic origin of the Odes is the repetition of the same root as has occurred in a previous word of the sentence, although an interval may separate the two occurrences of the root. This is a proof of a continuous attention on the part of the Odist which in some cases is quite different from the function of a translator.

Examples:

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים
וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'And vain people supposed that it was something great :
And they came to resemble it and became vain.'—Ode xviii. 12.

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים
וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'And they travailed from the beginning,
And the end of their travail was life.'—Ode xxiv. 8.

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'The seers shall go before Him,
And they shall be seen before Him.'—Ode vii. 18.

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים
וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'And they turn away from wickedness to thy pleasantness :
And have turned from themselves, &c.'—Ode xi. 21.

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים
וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'Let us also be saved with Thee :
For thou art our Saviour.'—Ode xlii. 18.

More important for all purposes is the play on the different meanings of a verb, or a noun. For example :

וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים : וַיֵּבֶשׁוּ הַיַּמִּים

'And I saw the destroyer of the corruptor.'—Ode xxxviii. 9.

وَأُفْصِلَ دِينَهُ فَمَعْلَمٌ

'And there was seen at its head
A head which was revealed.'—Ode xxiii. 18.

The first example, if translated by 'corruptor of the corruptor', or 'of the corruption', would scarcely yield any meaning; obviously its true meaning is, 'destroyer of the corruptor'. The author is therefore playing on the different meanings of the verb سَدَّ 'to destroy' and 'to corrupt'; he used it first in the sense of 'to destroy', and second in the sense of 'to corrupt', and this apart from his other play on the two different forms of the verbal participle. Curiously enough the same play on words occurs, but in a lesser degree, in 1 Corinthians iii. 17:

مَنْ يَسُدُّ مَسْجِدَ اللَّهِ مَحْجُودٌ

'Him that corrupts the temple of God, God shall destroy.'

But this unique instance can hardly weaken the above statement.

In the second example the play is on the two meanings of the word رَأْسٌ, which means 'head', 'chief', and 'beginning', but as the meaning of the whole Ode is problematical it would not be safe to build much on a 'sealed letter', although at the first sight it would seem that the first رَأْسٌ is to be translated by 'beginning', and the second by 'head', or 'chief'. In Ode xxiv. 1 a play exists on the same word رَأْسٌ 'head' and 'head, superior', but this might have arisen also with the Greek κεφαλή.

Three other plays upon the different meanings of a word, in which a contrast is also established between these meanings, deserve consideration:

وَأَزَلْتُ عَنْكَ خِطَمَكَ
وَأَزَلْتُ عَنْكَ خِطَمَكَ

'I removed from me the raiment of skins
For thy right hand lifted me up.'—Ode xxv. 8, 9.

سبحوا في هذا يوم ولا تملأوا من هذا فكلوا حلالا في حرم لا حلالا حراما

'And they made me a criminal when I rose up,
 Me who had not been condemned.'

'And they divided my spoil,
 Though nothing was due to them.'—Ode xxxi. 8, 9.

يَوْمَ لَا يَمْلَأُ الْعَالَمُ شَيْئًا وَحَسْبُ الْعَالَمِ شَيْءٌ

'All the thirsty on earth were given a drink of it:
 And thirst was done away and quenched
 They have assuaged dry lips:
 And the will that had fainted they have raised up.'

Ode vi. 11, 14.

In the first example أُزِمَ with عَمَ means 'take off', and أُزِمَ alone means 'to extol, exalt, enhance'. The second example contains a contrast between 'to condemn', حَسِبَ 'condemned, culprit', and شَيْءٌ 'something due to somebody'. The third example, although the two terms of the linguistic play are separated from each other, requires also careful examination on account of the corresponding Coptic text; the words are the verb أَمْلَأَ 'to be dissolved, to perish', and the past participle حَمَلًا 'paralytic'. The Coptic expresses also the same words by the same root.

A last linguistic feature worth mentioning is the tendency of the Odist to repeat the same verb in the same sentence with the substantive derived from it. For example:

أَمْلَأَ الْعَالَمُ شَيْئًا شَيْءٌ هُوَ الَّذِي آمَنَ بِهِ

'I believed, therefore I was at rest:
 For faithful is He in whom I have believed.'—Ode xxviii. 3.

לא אצטע דלאסס דאסלא; דאסלא
 אפלא אפאסלאסס; אסא; דאסא; דאסא

‘And the dykes (lit. restraints) of men were not able to restrain it:

Nor the arts of those whose business it is to restrain waters.’

Ode vi. 9.

לוא אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס
 אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

‘And I saw the Destroyer of the Corruptor, when the Bride that was being corrupted was adorned, and the Bridegroom was corrupting and being corrupted.’—Ode xxxviii. 9.

אסא; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

‘And understand my knowledge,

Ye who know me in truth.’—Ode viii. 12.

אסא; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס
 אסא; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

‘Keep my secret, ye who are kept by it

Keep my faith, ye who are kept by it.’—Ode viii. 10.

Apart from these general remarks upon the stylistic method of the Odist the following particular observations may be added as a corollary:

(1) Verbs are sometimes used in an absolute manner without any complements. For example:

לא אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

Ode xlii. 10.

אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

Ode iii. 7.

אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס
 אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

Ode xix. 5.

אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס; אפאסלאסס

Ode ix. 7.

(2) In a contrast between terms, instead of a single verb expressing a negative, there is a tendency to use a positive word with the negative participle ܠ. For example :

ܠܚܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܕܠܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ
ܡܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܕܠܐ ܕܚܝܬܐ

Ode xv. 8.

ܠܡܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܕܠܐ
ܡܕܠܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܝܬܐ ܕܚܝܬܐ

Ode vii. 21.

Even without any contrast this phenomenon occurs with the words ܡܕܠܐ and ܠܡܝܬܐ in xviii. 11, xxxiii. 12; this feature, which answers to the privative alpha and the English prefix un or in, loses its value when it is preceded by a dālath, because in this case the word has exactly the English meaning of 'without'.

This contrast between terms by means of ܠ is, generally speaking, much used in Syriac literature, even by writers who knew no Greek, and no serious conclusion can be drawn from it in favour of an anti-Syriac original; one example from Ephrem will suffice :

ܡܝܬܐ ܠܡܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܕܠܐ ܕܚܝܬܐ

'His knowledge will become ignorance, and His existence non-existence.'—Mitchell, p. 173.

(3) The future tense is more frequently expressed by the aorist than by the verbal participle.

(4) The Odist has a marked predilection for the use of ܠܡܝܬܐ with a substantive; expressions such as 'without death', 'without corruption', for 'immortal', 'incorruptible'.

CHAPTER IX

THE STYLE OF THE ODES AND THAT OF THE PSALMS OF SOLOMON COMPARED.

SINCE the two manuscripts of the Odes couple with them the Jewish Psalms of Solomon, it may be useful to examine whether in their stylistic form they resemble so closely each other that one could, on the hypothesis of a translation, safely ascribe both pieces to a single translator.

In the foregoing pages it has been pointed out that there is much in the Odes which would be explained by the supposition of Greek influence; this being the case we should, generally speaking, expect to find more harmony between the phraseology of the Odes and the Psalms than between, let us say, that of Ephrem or Aphrahat and the Odes. The difference between a work which is under Greek influence and another which is a direct translation from the Greek, is not as great as that which exists between the first work and the compositions of a genuine Syrian writer without any Hellenic culture. There need, therefore, be no wonder if a comparison between the style of early Edessene productions and that of the Odes and Psalms of Solomon should show that the Odes are nearer to the Psalms than to the Edessene productions. Notwithstanding all this, there are linguistic characteristics, some general and some particular, which suggest that both works could not have emanated from a single man.

General Characteristics.

1. The Psalms, contrary to the Odes, contain some obvious mistakes which point to a Greek original; scholars interested in the Syriac translations of Greek composition know that from A. D. 400 to 700 they were very literal, and even somewhat servile. The translators, out of respect for their text, used to follow it so closely that often they transgressed in a flagrant manner the very rudiments of their language. The Psalms of Solomon offer a striking example to the point. In Psalm iii. 16 the translator, who was rendering literally the Greek sentence, used instead of ܠܗܝܠܝܡ in plural ܠܗܝܠܡ in singular, as it was before him in Greek, overlooking the fact that the subject of the verb, the word ܡܬܐ 'life', was only used in the plural, contrary to the Greek ζωή. The same mistake of translation, although in a lesser degree, occurs in the Peshitta rendering of John i. 4 ἐν αὐτῷ ζῶν ἦν = ܕܡܬܐ ܡܬܐ ܡܬܐ.

2. All the above linguistic features which add to the value of the Syriac text of the Odes, and their correctness of style and the harmony between their sentences, are, generally speaking, absent in the Psalms. Further, some phrases of the Psalms suggest that they are a mediocre piece of work so far as the Syriac is concerned; and contain even expressions foreign to Syriac. For example:

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. i. 5.

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. ii. 35.

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. iv. 13.

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. viii. 17.

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. ix. 7.

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܟܐ

Ps. Sol. xvi. 3.

Particular Characteristics.

The difference between both styles will be more clearly understood in the case when the writer had the liberty of choice between two forms of verbs or two ways of expression. The case would be similar if in two Latin compositions the writer of both had used in one of them the form amaverunt in exclusion of amavere, or vice versa. If many such divergent forms occur in a pair of writings which are under consideration there is reason to believe that their author was not the same man. A cumulative evidence by many grammatical licenses of this kind would suggest that it would at least be highly precarious to assign both pieces to a single man; le style c'est l'homme.

Here are the main stylistic ways of expression which characterize the Psalms and the Odes, and seem to separate both compositions from each other.

1. The Odes, but not the Psalms, have used a conjugated לו with the principal verb to express indicative and subjunctive. For example:

סחלל! ומלל! א'מם ללל! עם ועם
לו? מלל! לל! חללללל

Ode xxxv. 1, 2.

סחלל! ועם? מלל! מלל! עם? חללללל

Ode xxxviii. 14.

עם? מלל! מלל! מלל! חללללל

Ode xxxix. 8.

מלל! ולא? מלל! חללללל

Ode xlii. 14.

2. The Psalms, but not the Odes, have used the otiose corroborative with both pronouns and לו, declined. For example:

מלל! עם? מלל!

Ps. Sol. v. 16.

דָּחַלְךָ וְיָחַם

Ps. Sol. ix. 3.

3. The Psalms, but not the Odes, have used the apocopated form of pronouns with the declined verbal participle. For example :

לְחַלְלֵךְ וְיַחַלְלֵךְ וְיַחַלְלֵךְ וְיַחַלְלֵךְ

Ps. Sol. iii. 1.

לֹא יִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

Ps. Sol. v. 5.

4. The Psalms, but not the Odes, have used the third person plural with the form of the paragogic nun. For example :

וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

Ps. Sol. ii. 14.

5. The Psalms, but not the Odes, have used an otiose ware :

וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

‘He falls and because his fall is grievous, (and) he rises not again.’—Ps. Sol. iii. 13.

וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

‘And if it should be that he repeats his gift,
And does not grumble, (and) that is a wonder.’

Ps. Sol. v. 15.

וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

‘And every petition of the soul that trusts in Him, (and) the Lord fulfils it.’—Ps. Sol. vi. 8.

6. The Odes, and not the Psalms, have put the mimmed infinitive after the object :

וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח וְיִשְׁכַּח

‘And the power of the men of might to bring down.’

Ode xxix. 8.

וְהַיְשָׁרָה לְחַיֵּיהֶם כְּחֹדֶם

'And victory to take by His power.'—Ode xxix. 9.

On the other hand some identical constructions of sentences are found in both Psalms and Odes, possibly owing to the fact that no other reasonable ways of expression were available. Of this category are to be counted:

1. The comparison between two objects by means of כִּי and כַּמֶּנֶּחֱ, 'as so'; see Ps. Sol. xvii. 2, &c., and Ode vii. 1, &c.

2. The use of מִ and עַד, 'from to'; see Ps. Sol. xvii. 21, &c., and Odes xi. 4, xxvi. 7. Ode vii. 14 has, however, עַד only without warw.

These are the main points of similarity and dissimilarity between the style of the Odes and that of the Psalms. Although the linguistic features which distinguish both compositions from each other are not very striking there is sufficient evidence to show that they emanate from two different writers.

CHAPTER X

THE BIBLICAL QUOTATIONS OF THE ODES.

THE question of the Biblical quotations found in the Odes is very important, involving as it does many interesting points in regard to their age, their original language, and the country in which they were written. Unfortunately, as very few quotations can clearly be singled out in the Odes, their total effect is somewhat impaired. There are, however, some unmistakeable semi-quotations drawn from the Scriptures which bring the whole collection into relation with an extensive Biblical nucleus. Now if these semi-quotations are in harmony with the LXX there is reason for believing that the Odes which contain them were originally written in Greek; if, on the contrary, there are linguistic features which suggest their dependence on the Hebrew text, it would not be very rash to state that their first author was a Judaizing writer, who availed himself of the Scriptural text with which he was familiar in his Synagogues or in his Church. Finally, if these quotations agree with the Peshiṭta Version of the Syriac speaking churches, there would be ample justification for the belief that the Odist, or, at least, his translator, was drawing his phraseology from a text with which he was already acquainted.

An English theologian of the twentieth century, when quoting Psalm i. 4, or translating a Latin book in which the verse is quoted, would hardly say, 'But are as the stubble that the wind carrieth away', but would very probably, as far as the text which he is translating would allow, use 'chaff' for 'stubble', and 'driveth away' for 'carrieth away'. As a matter of fact, this very verse is quoted in Ode xxix. 10, where the verb ܠܐܝܬܐ of the Peshiṭta is superseded by ܡܥܠܐ, the writing of both being as follows:

Peshiṭta: ܠܐܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

Odes: ܠܐܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

It is worth noting that a semi-quotation of this verse by Aphrahat has also ܡܥܠܐ for ܠܐܝܬܐ (ii. 117).

Verses like this are numerous; the most striking parallelisms and coincidences are the following:

Ode xxvi. 11: ܠܐܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

'Who is able to interpret the wonders of the Lord?'; and Psalm cvi (cvii). 2, which is quoted here, has: ܠܐܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ with a change of the verb ܠܐܝܬܐ into ܡܥܠܐ, and the addition of the verb ܡܥܠܐ, the position of which is facultative in interrogative and admirative sentences combined. The idea of 'interpretation of the wonders of the Lord' occurs several times in the canonical Psalter, and it is always translated in the Peshiṭta by ܠܐܝܬܐ (see Pss. ix. 15, xxviii. 4, cv. 2).

Ode xxix. 8 has סֶהֱלָה וְסֶהֱלָה 'The rod of His power'. This rod of power occurs in the canonical Psalter (Ps. cx. 2), and is there expressed by the Peshiṭta as סֶהֱלָה וְחֶמְלָה. Note the change of the language of the Psalter.

Ode xxvi. 4 has אֶחָד חֲמָה עִם כָּל הַלֵּב 'I will cry unto Him with my whole heart'. The idea of crying from one's whole heart is in Psalm cxviii. 145, where it is expressed in the Peshiṭta with the verb הִלָּל, and not חָלָל as in the Odes.

Ode v. 8 has אֲסַעֲדֵה חֵטְאִים לֹא יִשְׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים לָהֶם 'For they devised a counsel, and it has come to nought' (lit. it has not been for them). The idea of 'devising' a counsel which does not succeed is in Psalm xxi. 11, where it is expressed by the Peshiṭta as follows: אֲסַעֲדֵה לֹא יִשְׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים לָהֶם with the substitution of אֲסַעֲדֵה for אֲסַעֲדֵה.

Ode xxx. 4 has רַחֵם וְדַמְעָתוֹ הֵיאָה חֶמְדָּה מִדְּבַר 'Much sweeter is its water than honey'. A parallel sentence of Psalm xix. 10 is as follows: וְדַמְעָתוֹ הֵיאָה חֶמְדָּה מִדְּבַר 'And sweeter than honey'. The Odes have changed חֶמְדָּה to חֶמְדָּה.

In some other verses, the same words are used in the Odes as those found in the canonical Psalms. Generally, however, this happens in the case when another word could hardly be substituted for that used in both compositions; further, in most of these occurrences, the Odist seems to have purposely changed the nature of the text from which he was drawing his inspiration. For example:

Ode v. 11: וְיִשְׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים לָהֶם 'And because the Lord is my salvation, I will not fear.'

And Psalm xxvii. 1: וְיִשְׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים לָהֶם 'The Lord is my salvation, whom shall I fear?'

Ode xxix. 1, has וְיִשְׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים לָהֶם 'The Lord is my hope, in Him I shall not be confounded;'

and in several passages of the Psalms the sentence is constructed as follows :

ܐܠܗܝܐ ܠܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'In the Lord I put my hope, I shall not be confounded' (Pss. xxii. 5, xxv. 2, xxxi. 1, lxxi. 1, &c.).

Ode xvii. 9 has ܐܠܗܝܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'And I broke in pieces the bars of iron'; and Psalm cvii. 16 has ܐܠܗܝܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'And he has broken in pieces the bars of iron'. Cf. also Isaiah xlv. 2.

Ode xxviii. 13 has ܐܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'And they came round me like mad dogs'; and Psalm xxii. 16, from which the idea is drawn, has ܐܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'Dogs came round me'.

Ode xxix. 11 has ܐܠܗܝܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'Because He exalted His servant and the son of His handmaid'. The idea of 'servant and son of handmaid' is in Psalm cxv. 16, where it is expressed ܐܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'I am thy servant and son of thy handmaid'. There was possibly no other way to express such an idea in Syriac.

In some verses the change of words between the phraseology of the canonical Psalms and that of the Odes is confined to a particle or to a facultative way of expressing the comparative or superlative. For example: Ode iv. 5 has, 'For one hour of thy faith is more precious (= better) than all days and years'. There is probably a relation between this verse and Psalm lxxxiv. 10, which has: 'For a day in thy courts is better (= more precious) than a thousand.' The Odes express the Syriac comparative 'better' or 'more precious' with ܡܝܬܐ instead of that of ܕܡܝܬܐ used in the Psalms. Ode xiv. 1 has ܐܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'As the eyes of a son to his father.' The verse has a certain relation with Psalm cxxiii. 2, which has three times the particle ܡܝܬܐ instead of ܕܡܝܬܐ of the Odes, and in no case any attempt is made to put the suffix pronouns at the end of ܡܝܬܐ. One of these three cases is: ܐܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ 'As the eyes of servants to their masters'.

The idea that a mischief should return upon the head of those who do it is expressed in Psalm vii. 16, and in Ode v. 7. The difference in phraseology is in the use of the preposition 'upon', which follows the verb פָּעַל . This preposition is עַל in the Odes, and עַל in the Psalms.

In Ode xxxviii. 1 the starting-point of the thought is undoubtedly Psalm xlii (xliii). 3, where God is implored to 'send out His Light and His Truth, that they may lead me and bring me to His holy mountain'. In the LXX of the Psalm the Hebrew tenses have been rendered by the past tenses, αὐτά με ὡδήγησαν καὶ ἡγάγον με·

which makes even closer agreement with the Ode. In the Peshitta version the coincidences have almost disappeared. Instead of 'Truth' it has 'Faith', instead of 'lead me' it has 'comfort me'.

In Ode xiv. 4, 5 we have distinct traces of the influence of Psalm xlvii (xlvi). 15, and Psalm xxx (xxxi). 4. The Odist prays that the Lord may be his guide even to the end (עַד סוֹף הַיּוֹם), he has substituted 'the end' for 'death', but agrees with the Hebrew and its dependent Peshitta in the use of the verb לְהַדְרִיךְ ('to guide'), while the LXX has the more remote ποιμανεῖ. After the manner of the Odist we have in the next verse the influence of Psalm xxx (xxxi). 'For thy name's sake lead me and guide me', where the Peshitta does not mention the idea of guidance, which is involved in the Hebrew and the LXX. Here again the Odist shows independence of the Peshitta tradition.

In Ode xxviii we have signalized a reference to the 22nd Psalm in the 'mad dogs who come round their master'; a further reference from the same Psalm, 'they cast lots for my vesture', will be found in the seventeenth verse of the Ode:

'Vainly did they cast lots against me.'

In the next verse of the Ode, the Odist appears to be drawing upon Psalm cxviii (cxix). 161:

'Princes persecuted me without a cause' (κατεδίωξάν με δωρεάν), for which the Ode has :

ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ.

The Peshiṭta of the Psalm has :

ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ

These are the most striking parallels and semi-quotations which attract the attention of the reader of the Odes in relation to the canonical Psalter.

In leaving the Psalms for the purpose of consulting some other prophetic books of the Old Testament, we shall find that such parallels and semi-quotations are less numerous and less significant. The most striking are the following :

Ode viii. 21 has ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ 'And my righteousness goes before them'. This is related to Isaiah lviii. 8 ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ 'And thy righteousness shall go before thee', with the change of ܡܝܢ of the Peshiṭta to ܡܝܢ of the Odes.

Ode xxii. 9 has ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ 'Dead bones, and it covered them with bodies'. This is possibly under the influence of Ezekiel xxxvii. 4-6 :

ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ . . . ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ

'Dry bones and I will cover you with skin.'

The changes of ܐܢܝܢ 'dry' into ܐܢܝܢ 'dead', and of ܐܢܝܢ 'bodies' into ܐܢܝܢ 'skin', is probably due to the Odist himself, and has, therefore, no bearing upon the phraseology of the Syriac text.

In Ode xii. 3, 11 we have allusions to Wisdom as being the Mouth of the Lord, or the Mouth of the Most High, which are parallel to the language of Sirach xxiv. 3 sqq.

We compare :

Ode xii. 3: ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ and Ode xii. 11: ܐܢܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܗܘܢ with Sirach xxiv. 3 ἐγὼ ἀπὸ στόματος Ὑψίστου ἐξηλθον.

The Peshiṭta of Sirach has ܐܢܝܢ, where again we see the Odist to be independent of the Peshitta. The whole of the 12th Ode is a Wisdom composition, showing striking parallelism with the Praises of Wisdom in Sirach xxiv.

In Ode xxiii. 1-3 the song is based directly upon some sentences in the Wisdom of Solomon iii. 9 and iv. 15. Thus we have for a parallel to the statements that ‘Grace (ܠܚܥܥܐ) is of the elect (ܚܝܠܐ): and Love (ܥܕܐ) is of the elect; and who shall receive it but those who have trusted (ܠܡܨܕܝܡ) in it,’ in the verses Sap. Sol. iii. 9:

οἱ πεποιθότες ἐπ’ αὐτῷ συνήσουσιν ἀλήθειαν·
καὶ οἱ πιστοὶ ἐν ἀγάπῃ προσμενοῦσιν αὐτῷ
ὅτι χάρις καὶ ἔλεος τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς αὐτοῦ.

The underlined Greek words agree with the language of the Ode, and are reflected exactly in the Peshitta. It is to be remarked that the coincidence is here so exact between the language of the Ode and the Peshitta.

In the 20th Ode there is a recurrent allusion to the language of Isaiah lviii to which an indisputable reference had already been made in the eighth Ode (‘Thy righteousness shall go before thee’). In the 20th Ode this has been modified to ‘His glory shall go before thee’; and if this parallelism be admitted for Ode xx. 9 with Isaiah lviii. 8 we can hardly avoid recognizing some allusion to Isaiah lviii. 7 in the somewhat obscure verse in Ode xx. 6. Here, then, the parallel will be made with:

‘When thou seest the naked that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thy own flesh: then shall thy light break forth as the morning and thy healing shall spring forth speedily, and thy righteousness shall go forth before thee.’

This reference, however, does not supply all that the Odist has in mind: his naked person is the one who has left his garment in pledge. This comes from Exodus xxii. 24-6, where the pledged garment must be restored before sundown, because it is the covering of a man's nakedness. It is not easy to find close coincidences of language between the Ode and either the LXX or the Peshitta: the underlying ideas, however, seem to be the same.

These are the most obvious Biblical semi-quotations. It is noticeable that their phraseology in the Odes is not always in accordance with the wording of the Old Testament Syriac. As far as the sense of the sentences is concerned we cannot know from them the kind of text the Odist was using; because in some cases this sense is exactly the same in Hebrew, Greek, and Syriac; but as far as the wording is concerned the divergences are sometimes striking, and frequently more noticeable in the case where the quoted phrase has more the form of a real citation than of a mere inspiration, and this is all the more worthy of consideration.

It should be noted that in a few Syriac translations of Greek originals, the wording of the sentence does not resemble that of the Old Testament Peshitta; this is especially the case with the homilies of Severus of Antioch, translated by Jacob of Edessa (Patr. Or. iv, viii). This anomaly may frequently be explained by the fact that the text of the Septuagint had a meaning which that of the Peshitta could not exactly render, and the translator not wishing to weaken the statement of the first writer, translated literally the terminology which was before him, even to the detriment of his own Version of the Bible. It is a well-known fact that Syrian authors were fond of literal translation.

Outside the sphere of the Syriac phraseology, some quotations seem to suggest that the Odist was using the Hebrew text rather than the Septuagint. Verse 4 of Psalm i quoted above is in Hebrew: אִם-כֶּמֶן אֲשֶׁר תִּרְפֹּנוּ רוּחַ, which strictly means 'Like the chaff which the wind driveth away'. In the Septuagint the text is longer and paraphrastic at the end:

ἀλλ' ἢ ὥς ὁ χνοὺς ὃν ἐκρίπτει ὁ ἄνεμος ἀπὸ προσώπου τῆς γῆς.

The Syriac ܐܡܟܡܢܐܫܪܬܪܦܢܐܪܘܚܐ is exactly the Hebrew text faithfully translated. The sentence of Ode xxix. 10, in which the text is quoted, is in complete harmony with the Hebrew and with the Peshiṭta, except in the wording of the phrase where وَعَمَلًا is used for وَعَمَلًا; but it obviously lacks the additional sentence ἀπὸ προσώπου τῆς γῆς. One might, perhaps, say that if the Odist was using the LXX he would have added these final and additional words in a way similar to the following: مَعِ الْقَدِ الْوَحْدِ 'From the face of the earth'. (The Vulgate is in accordance with the LXX in exhibiting a facie terrae.) The Hebrew, the Targums, and the Peshiṭta are at one against the LXX and its dependent Vulgate; and the Odes follow the first group of texts.

The twelfth verse of Psalm xxi, is in Hebrew חֲשַׁבוּ מִזְמָה בָּל יוֹכְלוּ 'they have devised a counsel, but they were not able' (to perform it). In the LXX and the Vulgate the idea of performing the counsel which underlies the Hebrew sentence, but which is not expressed in words, is stated as follows: διελογίσαντο βουλήν ἣν οὐ μὴ δύνωνται στηῆσαι and 'cogitaverunt consilia quae non potuerunt stabilire'. The word στηῆσαι (stabilire) is not expressed in Hebrew. The Syriac Peshiṭta and the Targums are exactly like the Hebrew except that the Targums paraphrase the word מִזְמָה and add the suffix 'thee' at the end of the last verb. The sentence of Ode v. 8 is more in harmony with the Hebrew and the Peshiṭta than with the LXX, but instead of وَلَا يَصْحَرُ سَلَا 'and they were not able' it exhibits وَلَا يَصْحَرُ سَلَا 'and it did not succeed for them', or simply 'they were not able'.¹

The Ode, therefore, is in harmony with the Hebrew, the Peshiṭta, and the Targums, against the Septuagint and the Vulgate, in not expressing the idea of stabilire.

Some verses seem to suggest remotely a borrowing from the Hebrew text and not from the Peshiṭta and Septuagint. In Ode xli. 9 the Christ says: 'For the Father of Truth remembered me, He who possessed me from the beginning.' In Proverbs viii. 22, Wisdom says: 'The Lord possessed me in the beginning of His ways.' If there is any relation between these two verses the Biblical thought must have come to the mind of the Odist through the Hebrew text, because all the Versions of the Bible, except the Vulgate, convey the idea of creation, and not of possession; Peshitta כִּבֵּשׁ; the Targums בִּרְאִי; the Septuagint ἔκτισέν με; but the Hebrew קָנִי and the Vulgate possedit me. We must observe, however, that the alternative reading in Proverbs viii. 22 has also found a place in our Odes; in Ode vii. 8 we are told that 'He who has created Wisdom is wiser than His works', which implies the reading of the LXX (ἔκτισέν με). The author of the Odes must, therefore, be credited with a knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek texts. This is especially interesting because the Greek Church did not get back to the Hebrew reading before the time of Eusebius and the Arian controversy. A case of no slight interest occurs in Ode xxv. 4, where the Odist says:

¹ The Syrians frequently say لَا يَصْحَرُ سَلَا 'I was not able to do this'. This expression may even be considered as a Syriacism.

'Thy Face was with me,
He who saved me by thy grace.'

The peculiar expression 'Thy Face' is due to Exodus xxxiii. 14, where God promises Moses that His presence will go with him, and that He will give him rest. Here the word which is commonly rendered 'presence' is in the Hebrew 'Face'. This 'Face of God' which accompanied Israel was identified by the early Christians with Christ, the Angel of the Covenant. It was an awkward expression for those who wished to avoid anthropomorphic representations of Deity, especially in view of the statement that no man can see the Face of God. Accordingly the Septuagint replace the Hebrew expression, and say, 'I myself will go before thee'; while the Peshitta alters it into an injunction to 'walk before me'. When we turn to the Targum of Onkelos, we find that the 'Shekinah' replaces the 'Face'. Even more curious is the manipulation of the passage by the Targum of Jonathan. Apparently the Odist is working from the Hebrew, with whose text he is directly acquainted. If our explanation is correct the Odist at this point does not Targumize. Possibly the Odist also has in mind Genesis xxxii. 30, 'I have seen God face to face, and my life has been saved'. Here the Targums and the Peshitta replace the God whose face is seen by the Angel of God.

On the other hand, verse 11 of Ode xxvi: 'Who is able to interpret the wonders of the Lord?' is more in harmony with the Targums than with any other version of Ps. cvi [cvii]. 2, because all the versions, including the Hebrew text, omit the verb. 'Who is able', which is clearly expressed in the Targum by מן יכל למלא.

Many similar cases of dependence of the Odists upon the Targums are treated elsewhere.

The only verse in the Odes which offers a definite savour of a borrowing from the Septuagint is the following: 'An everlasting crown is Truth; blessed are those who set it on their heads; a stone of great price it is' (ii. 8, 9). In Psalm xx. 4 mention is made of a crown which the Hebrew expresses as עֹרֶת פָּז 'the crown of paz'.¹ The Peshitta rendering of paz is ܨܡܚܬܐ, 'glorious' crown. The Septuagint understood it in the sense of a 'crown of precious stones', στέφανον ἐκ λίθου τιμίον. Since no other mention is made in the Old Testament of a crown of precious stones it is clear that this verse of the Psalms was in the mind of the Odists, who, in this case, would have worked on it in explaining the nature of the crown which it contained. But on this point v. infra.

Coming to the semi-quotations from the New Testament we notice that we are less fortunate in our investigations, because although many thoughts expressed in the Odes are found in some passages of Johannine and Pauline writings, yet no clear borrowing of a complete sentence can be singled out. These identical thoughts in the Odes and in the New Testament are more of the nature of parallels than of any form of quotation. The verses which can be better paralleled with statements found in the New Testament are the following:

¹ The origin of this word, which sounds more Persian than Semitic, is problematic; we may compare the Arabo-Persian baz 'rich dress', 'fine linen'. In default of a better sense the English Bible has rendered it by 'pure gold'.

Ode xxii. 12 says, 'And that the foundations of everything might be thy rock (or stone); and on it Thou didst build thy Kingdom.' Matthew xvi. 18 has: 'Thou art Cephas, and upon this rock (or stone) I will build my Church . . . And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.' In both texts the words used to express 'to build' ܕܒܢܐ, 'Kingdom' ܡܠܟܘܬܐ, and 'stone' ܐܝܬܢܐ, are identical.

Ode xxix. 8 has: 'That I might subdue the imagination of the people and to bring down the power of the men of might'; and Luke i. 51-2 says: 'He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts; he hath put down the mighty from their seats.' The words which in these quotations are nearest to one another are those which express the idea of 'to lower'—in the Odes ܡܕܡܝܢ, and in the Syriac Gospel ܡܨܦܐ (Peshiṭta), ܡܨܦܐ (Lewisian); and 'imagination'—in the Odes ܡܨܦܐ, and in the Syriac Gospels ܡܨܦܐ (Peshiṭta and Lewisian); and 'powerful men'—in the Odes ܡܨܦܐ, and in the Syriac Gospels ܡܨܦܐ (Peshiṭta and Lewisian).

It is to be observed that the whole of the language in Luke i. 51, 52 appears to be borrowed from the Song of Hannah in 1 Samuel ii, with occasional colouring from the Psalms: e.g. Psalm lxxxviii (lxxxix), 10. We have also a similar strain of thought in 2 Corinthians x. 5: 'Casting down (ܡܨܦܐ) imaginations (ܡܨܦܐ) and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God.' It will be very difficult to establish a direct connexion between the Odes and St. Luke, unless there should be closer linguistic agreement.

As far as the phraseology of the Odes is concerned the most obvious New Testament verses, which might have affected it, may be summarized as follows:

The idea of a babe leaping in the womb is expressed by the same words in all the Syriac versions and the Odes.

ܡܨܦܐ ܡܨܦܐ, are the words used by the Lewisian and the Peshiṭta Versions of Luke i. 44, and in Ode xxviii. 2.

The idea that the sword will not separate us from the Lord is in Romans viii. 35 expressed in words different from those used in Ode xxviii. 4; for whereas the Odes use فجى to express 'separate', the Syriac version of Romans exhibits فجى, and whereas the Odes use سفا to express 'sword', the Syriac of Romans has سدا.

The idea of 'walking' in the Lord is expressed by the verb محر in Ode xxxiii. 13, and Colossians ii. 6.

The idea of a voice reaching its destination is expressed in Luke i. 44, and in Ode xxxvii. 2, by the phrase 'the fall of the voice' (بفلا ملا), the only difference being the use of the particle of the indirect complement. This particle is حما in the Odes and و in the Peshitta and Lewis texts.

The idea of Christ having been humbled, and then exalted, is expressed in Philippians ii. 8-9 with the verb محر 'to humble', and فجى 'to exalt', while in Ode xli. 12 فوم is used to express 'to exalt'.

The idea expressed by the sentence 'before the foundation of the world' has a different phraseology in the Old and the New Testaments and the Odes. Ode xli. 15 has محر ميم لأصله وحصله. This is identical with the Peshitta rendering of πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου of the Greek of the New Testament. The Old Syriac versions, both Lewisian and Curetonian, render this Greek expression by the simple word محر ميم (Matt. xiii. 35 = Ps. lxxvii [lxxviii]. 2), which means 'from the beginning'. In Matthew xxv. 35 there is a lacuna in the Old Syriac versions, and we do not know how the Greek phrase was rendered. In John xvii. 24 the Curetonian text is missing, and the Lewis text follows the Greek reading πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, and gives us محر ميم لأصله وحصله 'before the world was'. The same idea is found in Proverbs viii. 23, 29, but it is expressed in a very different manner.

The idea of God not repenting of what He does is in Romans xi. 29; and in Numbers xxiii. 19, and in Ode iv. 11. In Romans it is expressed by the verb فجى, in Numbers by لأصله, and in the Odes by لأصله.

The idea of imploring God to be delivered from the Evil One is in the Lord's Prayer, which was evidently known to every Christian. In all the Syriac versions of Matthew vi. 13 the sentence 'Deliver us from the Evil One' is rendered by the verb ܦܕܝܬ (padiš), but in Ode xiv. 5 it is expressed by the verb ܦܬܝܬ (pāš). The divergence in phraseology is remarkable.

In Ode vii. 23 we have a parallel to the language of 1 Corinthians. The Odist, who is emphasizing the importance of Christian song and praise to God, says:

'Let there be nothing without life (ܐܠܐ ܚܝܐ)
Nor without knowledge, nor dumb' (ܐܠܐ ܥܠܡܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ).

With these we compare 1 Corinthians xiv. 7:

τὰ ἄψυχα φωνὴν διδόντα,

and 1 Corinthians xiv. 10:

τοσαῦτα εἰ τύχοι γένη φωνῶν εἰσιν ἐν κόσμῳ, καὶ οὐδὲν ἄφωνον, of which passage the Peshitta rendering is:

ܐܡܥܝܢ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

and ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

where the Ode has ܐܠܐ ܥܠܡܐ instead of ܐܠܐ ܚܝܐ. Here again we note the independence of the Odist as compared with the Peshitta.

In Ode vi. 6 we have an interesting parallel in the language of 1 Corinthians ii. 12. The passage in the Ode expresses the desire of God 'That those things should be known which by His grace have been given to us.'

This is nearer to the Greek of Corinthians, ἵνα εἰδῶμεν τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ χαρισθέντα ἡμῖν

('that we may know the things that are freely given us of God') than to the Peshitta rendering:

ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

Thus either the passage in Corinthians is borrowed from the Odes, or the Odes have made use of the text of Corinthians, and have given us the borrowed passage in an earlier and more exact translation than we have in the Peshittā, where the graciousness of the gift (χαρισθέντα) is not so clearly stated.

In Ode xxxviii. 16-21 we have a sequence which is closely parallel to the argument in 1 Corinthians iii where Paul explains that, although he had planted and Apollos watered, they were really only under-workers with God, so that the planting was really God's. And he says the same thing when he turns to a parallel figure of the building of a house, that, although he might have laid the foundations, God was really the builder. All of this is taken up by the Odist, who refers the laying of foundations and the planting of the field to the Lord, with the watering and the husbandry of the same, and with the remark that the Lord alone is to be glorified.

These coincidences are so minute and so varied that we can hardly believe the Ode to be independent of the Epistle. The Odist has made the Pauline position more clear by leaving Paul out entirely.

In Ode xiv. 10 the Odist concludes with the sentiment that 'God is able for all our needs', which is nearly parallel to Philemon iv. 20, 'My God shall supply every need of yours'. 'Need' (χρεία) is in the Ode ܐܬܬܬܡܢ, in the Peshittā ܬܬܡܢ. Further, the Peshittā follows the Greek in rendering πληρώσει ('shall fulfil') literally, which the Odist explains in the sense of Divine ability (ܡܚܝܐ).

In Ode xxxiii. 13 we have noted the coincidence with the Pauline language in Colossians ii. 6, 'walk ye in me' being parallel to 'receive Christ Jesus the Lord and walk in Him'. Thus Wisdom who speaks in the Ode is understood to be Christ, as in other passages, and there is an exact agreement between the Ode and the Greek or the Syriac of Colossians.

In Ode xxviii. 3 we have what may be a case of dependence of the Odist upon the Epistle to the Hebrews (or conversely).

It is certainly remarkable that the peculiar expression of the Odist :
 'I believed, therefore I rested', should coincide so closely with the Biblical language :
 'We who have believed, do enter into rest.'

CHAPTER XI

POETRY OF THE ODES.

IN the Semitic languages there is a great difference between a poetical style and poetry. In the Hebrew of some books of the Old Testament there is a poetical style of high charm, with a certain cadence and rhythm in the arrangement of phrases created by the use of the well-known parallelism ; but poetry, as consisting of short and long vowels, or of an equal number of syllables divided into two stanzas, or, as Arabs and Syrians call them, two 'houses', is utterly missing. The first category of poetry is only parallelistic, and the second is metrical and may be parallelistic as well.

As to the Arabic language, its poetry from the middle of the seventh century onwards is classed with the second category of metrical poetry. Before the seventh century we are not in a position to know how this poetry was constituted. The numerous poetical compositions known as 'early Arabian poetry', and represented chiefly by the well-known Mufaḍḍalyāt, Mu'allakāt, Ḥamāsah, and ʿJamharah, are enveloped in a thick mist of prehistoricity and spuriousness, and in the present state of our knowledge we may assert that till fuller light dawns they can hardly stand in the domain of a positive study. Before this metrical poetry showed itself with all its complicated rules there was the saj' or rhymed prose of the nomads, in which traces of ancient Hebrew parallelism are numerous and undoubted. But the same parallelism is, generally speaking, absent in the subsequent elaborate development of poetry. The Arabic poetry is, therefore, useless so far as the Odes are concerned.

Let us now examine the Syriac poetry. The style which greatly influenced the poetry of the Syrians from the fourth to the twelfth centuries is that of Ephrem. If in abstract and original studies he has found some critics who perhaps not very unjustly lowered his talent far below the rate of his fame, no one has the right to deny that by the multiplicity and the charm of his poetical compositions he has the first place among ecclesiastical poets in general, and certainly so in all the branches of the Syrian Church. The poetry of this Father is metrical and parallelistic: but obviously Ephrem did not invent Syriac poetry. What kind of poetry had the Syrians, then, before Ephrem? We have at our disposal three independent sources from which to draw our knowledge: (1) the Hymn of the Soul; (2) poems of Ephrem purporting to imitate those of Bardaisan: (3) genuine quotations from Bardaisan.

The Hymn of the Soul has found many editors and translators. It was almost certainly written in the school of Bardaisan by one of his disciples about 180 to 220. It is precarious, however, to assert that Bardaisan himself was its writer, because of the exclusively Syriac colour of its phraseology. Had Bardaisan, who knew and wrote Greek as well as Syriac, written it, he would have left traces of his Greek science in it. The poetry of this Hymn is parallelistic and partly metrical, but the metre is frequently imperfect, owing to the fact that the silent letters of the declension might have been pronounced in some cases at that early time, or possibly owing to a certain corruption of the text by the copyists. As it stands the poem can be reduced to the five, six, and the seven-syllable metre: but in respect of its syllabic rhythm it is far below the metrical perfection which the majority of Ephremic compositions can justly claim.

Ephrem, according to the Roman edition of his works (iii. 87-128), wrote seventeen hymns in imitation of the tune of the Psalms written by Bardaisan, or sung by his disciples. These hymns have generally stanzas of four metrical lines, three of which have twice five syllables, and the last one once seven syllables; but frequently also the order is inverted, and one finds in them lines of nine syllables:

دعلا حلا دعلا حلا (R. E., p. 127) or of thirteen syllables, which in the last analysis can be reduced to two lines of four syllables, and one of five:

دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا (ibid.)

However imperfect the metrical arrangements appear sometimes to be, the parallelism is in all of them obvious and perfect in all its details.

As far as the Psalms which Bardaisan wrote are concerned we are in complete ignorance. If the information of Ephrem has any historical value (and it surely has) his Psalms were 150 in number, apparently in imitation of their proto-type, the Psalms of the King-Prophet. Appropriate to the point which concerns us are the words (ii. 554, R. E.):

دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا
دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا دعلا

‘(Bardaisan) wrote hymns and adapted (them) to airs; he composed Odes and introduced rhythms¹ (in them); he divided the words in measures and weights.’

We can infer from these words that Bardaisan’s Odes certainly contained rhythm; but it is not clear whether the terms ‘measures and weights’ refer to the metrical arrangement as we understand it in our days. The critics have generally understood them in this sense, and the tradition of the end of the fifth century affirmed that Ephrem’s orthodox hymns were written to counteract the nefarious effect produced by Bardaisan’s heterodox psalms. All this is a theme for speculation to amplify.

The only clear quotations from Bardaisan are given by ¹ The word دعلا refers probably to a parallelistic poetry, and no metrical arrangement was intended by Ephrem when he used it. Theodore Bar Kewani says that the Psalms of David and the books ascribed to Solomon are written in دعلا (Corp. Script. Christ. Orient., vol. lxx, p. 323).

Theodore Bar Kewani (seventh century), and have been published by H. Pognon in Inscriptions Mandaites des coupes de Khoubir, 1899, pp. 122-3;¹ these quotations contain five stanzas from a work written by Bardaisan, and are in some passages difficult to understand. Their poetry is parallelistic and rhythmical with an apparently defective metrical arrangement of six, seven, and eight syllables. The last stanza is as follows:

: ܠܐܘܢ ܕܠܐ ܠܐܘܢ : ܐܝܢܐ ܕܠܐ ܐܝܢܐ ܐܝܢܐ ܕܠܐ ܐܝܢܐ : ܐܝܢܐ ܕܠܐ ܐܝܢܐ

i.e. 'The air rejoiced in it: And there was quiet and rest,
And the Lord was glorified in His wisdom, And thanks mounted to His grace.'

After these preliminaries, the poetry of the Odes may be summarized as follows:

Rhythm and Strophe.

The rhythm proceeds regularly throughout; we give two examples according to the terminology sanctioned by G. B. Gray in his Forms of Hebrew Poetry (pp. 132-3).

Example of a balancing rhythm:

'And His members are with Him
And on them do I hang and He loves me.'—iii. 2.

Example of an echoing rhythm:

'Distil Thy dew upon us
And open Thy rich fountains that pour forth to us milk and honey.'—iv. 10.

Generally two parallelisms constitute a strophe of complete meaning. For example:

'Open ye, open ye your hearts to the exultation of the Lord,
And let your love abound from the heart and even to the lips,
To bring forth fruits to the Lord, a holy life,
And to talk watchfully in His light.'—viii. 1, 2.

¹ They have been re-edited by Nau in Patrologia Syriaca, ii, p. 517, and by A. Scher in Corp. Script. Christ. Orient., vol. lxi, p. 308.

Frequently, however, one parallelism and a half constitute a strophe:

‘My heart was cloven and its flower appeared,
And grace sprang up in it,
And it brought forth fruit to the Lord.’

Metre.

Strictly speaking, no regular metrical measures are found in the Odes. However, by scanning carefully the lines many half-strophes fall into seven-syllabled metre, the most used in Syriac literature; next come the fifth, sixth, and fourth-syllable metres:

[illegible]

(seven syllables) Ode iii. 2.

واللهم! صلهم وحدهم : صلهم حلقه ومعههم :

[illegible]

(six syllables) Ode xxxix. 1, 2.

[illegible]

معدلاتی؟ مع ۵۵۵:

(five syllables) Ode xxviii, 11.

۹۵۵ : ۱۰۵۵ : ۱۰۵۵ :

۱۵۵۵ کج ۱۵۵۵.

(four syllables) Ode ix. 1, 2.

A combination of this syllabic arrangement gives even lines of 8, 9, 10, 12 syllables; but the arrangement being so unsteady and somewhat superficial, it has not been found necessary to follow it in our numbering either of the verses of the text or of those of the translation.

Parallelism.

The Aramaeo-Hebraic parallelism is represented in the Odes from beginning to end with all its subdivisions. We give an example of complete and another of incomplete parallelism.

Complete :

'The work of His hands
And the fabric of His fingers;
The multitude of His mercies
And the strength of His word.'—xvi. 6, 7.

Incomplete :

'I have been united
For the lover has found the beloved.'—iii. 7.

The numbers of the verses of the Odes have been adapted to parallelism. This adaptation, as in the case with the canonical Psalter and some prophetic books, can sometimes be amplified by subdivision of the text so that one parallelism should contain two verses instead of one; the examples just quoted can serve as an illustration :

- '1. I have been united for the lover has found the beloved,
2. In order that I may love Him that is the Son
I shall become a son.'

In many cases we have assigned one number which we have, however, divided into two by means of letters 1 a, 1 b. This might have been done for some other cases, but in occurrences of this kind there is a great deal of variety in the possible arrangement, so that here, too, the best thing to do is to leave the matter to every one's own judgement.

Parallelism is not always a good guarantee for the right translation of a verse; for example :

'And let our faces shine in His light
And let our hearts meditate in His love
By night and by day
Let us exult with the joy of the Lord.'—xli. 6, 7.

It is evident that we ought to join the sentence 'By night and by day' to the preceding member; for the Odist is imitating the first canonical Psalm (Ps. i. 2); but the poetical parallelism contradicts that of the MS., and requires that the same sentence should be attached to the following member :

‘ By night and by day
Let us exult with the joy of the Lord.’

In many other places the sense was not so obvious ; in such cases, we have followed the indications of the MS., leaving the ultimate question of division of the verses to be decided by every one’s own taste. For example :

‘ And His cleaving (of my heart) became my salvation,
And I ran in the way, in His peace,
In the way of truth.
From beginning and even to the end
I acquired His knowledge,
And I was established upon the rock of truth.’—xi. 3, 4.

It is obvious that one may refer the sentence ‘ From beginning and even to the end ’ to the first member, as meaning, ‘ I ran in the way of truth from beginning and even to the end ’ ; and one may refer it equally well to the following member as meaning ‘ From beginning and even to the end I acquired His knowledge ’. In such cases it was safer to follow the MS. and leave speculations aside.

We conclude this short study by remarking that the poetical style, or the poetry, of the Odes is more Hebraic and Bardesanian and more early Syriac than Ephremic, or later Syriac ; and, with some reserve for our ignorance of early Syriac poetry, we would venture to add that it is more Hebraic than early Syriac, except in supposing (and this might probably have been the case) that the early Syriac poetry was modelled on that of the Hebrew of the Old Testament.

Another question dealing with the Odes will not be out of place here. Since they are undoubtedly written in poetical style, and are devotional hymns, have they ever been used in the churches ? To this question we can only give a very imperfect answer, owing to the fact that the books containing the breviaries of the Syrian Churches which we were able to read were printed for the use of those Syrians who are in communion with the Church of Rome. Generally the printing of these books is undertaken by the Roman congregation De Propaganda Fide, and the editors carefully expunge from them everything that is not in accordance with the doctrine of Rome and its canon of the Bible; such is the case with the Breviarium Chaldaicum of the Eastern Syrian Church (1886-7, Paris, vols. i, ii, iii), and the Breviarium iuxta ritum eccles. antioch. Syrorum of the Western Syrian Church (1886-98, Mosul, vols. i, ii, iii, iv, v, vi, vii). For purposes of comparison we have read the first publication and the first three volumes of the second, and we have not found any use of the Solomonic Odes in them.

Our knowledge is, therefore, reduced to our two MSS. From the indications of H it appears that the text was sung in the churches, or in some devotional meetings, of the Western Syrians. Syrians in general have the habit of dividing a verse of the canonical Psalms into two, and of inserting a Hallelujah between the two parts. The English reader would have an idea of this process if in all half-verses of the second Psalm he were to read: 'Why do the heathen rage, Hallelujah, and the people imagine a vain thing. The Kings of the earth set themselves, Hallelujah . . .,' &c. The Western Syrians have every day such Psalms sung in public with a special tune, the one used in the evenings being invariably the 91st. Coming to the Odes, the facsimiles will show that in the first part of them the verses have the letter α , sign of Hallelujah, inserted between the first and the second member, and this is an unmistakable mark that these same verses were sung in an ecclesiastical gathering, or, more probably, in the churches. It is necessary, however, to point out that the letter α of Hallelujah is only exhibited in Odes iii-xxviii, and is missing in Odes xxviii-xlii.

CHAPTER XII

UNITY OF THE ODES.

As Kittel has rightly pointed out, a composition transmitted to posterity as a literary unity is to be so considered until the contrary is established beyond doubt. The first serious attempt to challenge the unity of the Odes has been made by Harnack, who, believing them to be a Jewish production, found himself bound to declare all the obviously Christian passages which they contain to be mere interpolations. An attentive perusal of the Odes makes it probable, however, that, generally speaking, all of them emanate from a single source. This can be proved by the contents of the Odes and by their form.

 1. Contents of the Odes.

The concordance to the text of the Odes placed at the end of this volume will be useful for our investigations. It will be found that in general the theme developed by the Odist is one throughout. The most striking features in the whole collection may be summarized as follows:

Love. Ode iii. 2-5: 'And (His?) members are with Him, and on them do I hang, and He loves me. For I should not have known how to love the Lord, if He had not loved me. For who is able to distinguish love, except one that is loved? I love the Beloved, and my soul loves Him, and where His rest is, there also am I.' See further vi. 2; vii. 19; viii. 1, 13; xi. 2; xii. 12; xiv. 6; xvi. 2, 3; xvii. 12; xviii. 1; xxiii. 3; xl. 4; xli. 2, 6; xlii. 7, 9. Besides, the verb meaning 'to love' is used five times, and the adjective 'beloved' three times.

Knowledge. Ode vi. 6: 'The Lord has multiplied His knowledge, and is zealous that those things should be known which by His grace have been given to us.' See further vii. 7, 13, 21; viii. 8, 12; xi. 4; xii. 3; xv. 5; xvii. 12; xxiii. 4; xxxiv. 5. Besides, the verb meaning 'to know' is expressed forty-five times.

Ignorance is expressed in vii. 21, 23; xi. 8; xviii. 11; xxviii. 13.

Faith. Ode iv. 5: 'For one hour of thy faith is more precious than all days and years.' See further viii. 11; xvi. 4; xxii. 7; xxviii. 3; xxix. 6; xxxiv. 6; xxxix. 5, 13; xli. 1; xlii. 9, 19.

Truth. Ode viii. 8: 'Hear the Word of Truth and receive the knowledge of the Most High.' See further ix. 8; xi. 3, 5; xii. 1, 2, 12, 13; xiv. 7; xv. 4; xvii. 5, 7; xviii. 6, 15; xx. 9; xxiii. 18; xxiv. 10, 12; xxv. 10; xxxi. 2; xxxii. 2; xxxiii. 8; xxxviii. 1, 4, 7, 10, 15; xxxix. 10; xli. 1, 9, 15, 16.

Error. Ode xv. 6: 'The way of error I have left and I went towards Him.' See further xviii. 10, 14; xxxi. 2; xxxviii. 6, 8, 10. For the use of the verb meaning 'to err' see xvii. 5; xxxi. 2; xxxviii. 4, 5, 11.

Glorification or Praise. Ode vi. 7: 'And His praise He gave us for His name.' See further x. 4; xi. 17; xii. 4; xiii. 2; xiv. 5; xvi. 1, 2, 5, 20; xvii. 16; xviii. 16; xx. 9; xxi. 9; xxvi. 1, 5; xxix. 2, 11; xxxi. 3; xxxvi. 2; xl. 2; xli. 4, 16. Besides, the verb meaning to 'glorify', to 'praise', is used twelve times.

Rest. Ode iii. 5: 'And where His rest is, there also am I.' See further xi. 12; xiv. 6; xx. 8; xxv. 12; xxvi. 3, 10, 12; xxviii. 3; xxx. 2, 7; xxxv. 6; xxxvi. 1; xxxvii. 4.

Grace. Ode iv. 6: 'For who is there that shall put on Thy grace and be injured?' See further v. 3; vi. 6; vii. 22, 25; ix. 5; xi. 1; xv. 8; xx. 7; xxiii. 2, 4; xxiv. 13; xxv. 4; xxix. 2, 5; xxxi. 3, 7; xxxiii. 1, 10; xxxiv. 6; xxxvii. 4; xli. 3.

Light. Ode vii. 14: 'And He set over it the trace of His light.' See further v. 6; vi. 17; viii. 2; x. 1, 6; xi. 11, 19; xii. 3, 7; xv. 2; xvi. 15; xxi. 3, 6; xxv. 7; xxix. 7; xxxii. 1; xxxviii. 1; xli. 6, 14.

Darkness. Ode xi. 19: 'And they grow in the growth of thy trees, and they change from darkness to light.' See further v. 5; xv. 2; xvi. 15, 16; xviii. 6; xxi. 3; xxxi. 1; xlii. 16.

Thought. Ode ix. 3: 'The word of the Lord and His good pleasures, the holy thought that He has thought concerning His Messiah.' See further ix. 4-5; xii. 4, 7; xv. 5; xvi. 8, 9, 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 14; xx. 2, 3; xxi. 5; xxiii. 5, 19; xxiv. 7; xxviii. 19; xxxiv. 2; xxxviii. 21; xli. 10.

Mark, Trace, Seal. Ode iv. 7: 'For Thy seal is known and Thy creatures are known by it.' See further vii. 14; x. 6; xxiii. 8, 9, 12; xxvii. 2; xxix. 7; xxxix. 7, 10, 11; xlii. 1.

Way. Ode vii. 13: 'For it is to Knowledge He hath appointed His way.' See further iii. 10; xi. 3; xii. 6; xvii. 8; xxii. 7, 11; xxiii. 15; xxiv. 13; xxxiii. 8, 13; xxxiv. 1; xxxviii. 7; xxxix. 7, 13; xli. 11; xlii. 2.

Righteousness and Justification. Ode viii. 5: 'Ye who were despised be lifted up, now that your righteousness has been lifted up.' See further viii. 21; ix. 10; xvii. 2; xx. 4; xxv. 10, 12; xxix. 5; xxxi. 5; xxxvi. 7; xli. 12.

Corruption and Incorruption. Ode viii. 23: 'And ye shall be found incorrupt in all ages to the name of your Father.' See further vii. 11; ix. 4; xi. 12; xv. 8; xvii. 2; xxi. 5; xxii. 11; xxviii. 5; xxxiii. 1, 7, 12; xxxviii. 9; xl. 6. Besides, the verb meaning 'to corrupt' is used fifteen times.

Life. Ode ix. 4: 'For in the will of the Lord is your life, and His thought is everlasting life.' See further iii. 9; vi. 18; viii. 2; x. 2, 6; xv. 10; xxii. 10; xxiv. 8; xxvi. 9; xxviii. 6; xxxi. 7; xxxviii. 3; xl. 6; xli. 3; xlii. 14. Besides, the verb meaning 'to live' is used seven times, and the adjective meaning 'living' eight times.

Salvation. Ode v. 11: 'And because the Lord is my salvation I will not fear.' See further vii. 16; xi. 3; xv. 6; xvii. 2; xviii. 7; xix. 11; xxi. 2; xxv. 2; xxviii. 2; xxxi. 13; xxxiv. 4; xxxv. 2; xxxviii. 3; xl. 5. Besides, the verb meaning 'to save' is used seventeen times.

Word. Ode x. 1: 'The Lord hath directed my mouth by His Word.' See further vii. 7; viii. 8; ix. 3; xii. 3, 5, 8, 10, 12; xv. 9; xvi. 7, 8, 14, 19; xviii. 4; xxiv. 9; xxix. 9, 10; xxxii. 2; xxxvii. 3; xxxix. 9; xli. 11, 14; xlii. 14.

Face. Ode xi. 14: 'My eyes were enlightened and my face received the dew.' See further viii. 14; xiii. 2, 3; xv. 2, 9; xvii. 4; xxi. 6, 9; xxii. 11; xxv. 4; xxxi. 5; xxxvi. 3; xl. 4; xli. 6; xlii. 13.

Right-hand. Ode xix. 5: 'And gave the mixture to the world without their knowing, and those who take it are in the fullness of the right hand.' See further viii. 6, 20; xiv. 4; xviii. 7; xxii. 7; xxv. 2, 7, 9; xxviii. 15; xxxviii. 20.

Some less general but more characteristic topics of the Odes are the following:

1. Allusions are made to a mystical crown in Odes i. 1; v. 12; ix. 8, 9, 11; xvii. 1; xx. 7.

2. Four passages mention a harp, generally the Lord's harp on which the believer wants to play. Odes vi. 1; vii. 17; xiv. 8; xxvi. 3.

3. The idea of God being the helper of man is expressed in vii. 3; viii. 6; xxi. 2, 5; xxii. 6; xxv. 2, 6; xxvi. 13.

4. The idea of experiencing an effect on the face, or of acquiring a new face, is expressed in xvii. 4; xxi. 9; xl. 4; xli. 6. See for further references the above heading, Face.

5. The offering to God of the fruit of the lips (Heb. xiii. 15) is mentioned in viii. 1-2; xii. 2; xvi. 2; xx. 4; xxxvii. 2-3; xl. 2.

6. The figure of the milk from the breasts of God is emphasized in viii. 16; xiv. 2; xix. 2-3; xxxv. 4-6; xl. 1.

7. The joy felt by good people is found in vii. 1-2, 17; xv. 1; xxiii. 1; xxxi. 3, 6; xxxii. 1.

8. The peace in which true believers live is mentioned in viii. 7; ix. 6; x. 2; xi. 3; xxxv. 1; xxxvi. 8.

9. The general idea of fruits of God or man is expressed in iv. 4; vii. 1; viii. 2; xi. 1; xiv. 6-7; xvii. 13; xxxvii. 3.

10. For putting on of Christ, His grace, His light, &c., see iv. 6, 8; vii. 4; xiii. 3; xv. 8; xx. 7; xxi. 3; xxiii. 1, 3; xxxiii. 12; xxxix. 8.

11. On the rescue from bonds effected by Christ by His descent into Hades or otherwise, see x. 2-5; xv. 9; xvii. 8-16; xxi. 2, 4; xxii. 8-9; xxv. 1, 3-4, 9, 11-12; xlii. 11-20.

12. The idea of God being our hope is in v. 2, 10; xxix. 1; xl. 1.

From the foregoing quotations and references it seems to us probable that the Odes are derived from one source. The characteristic features which form their essence link them, indeed, to one another so closely that it is very difficult not to ascribe the whole collection to a single man, or, at all events, to a single school of thought. This unity of thought had evidently been noticed by Harnack himself, for he writes 'Nimmt man sie in der Gestalt, in der sie uns vorliegen, als eine einheitliche und originale Sammlung'.

2. Form of the Odes.

If we examine the form in which the Odes have come down to us it will appear that as their main thoughts and theological expressions are one, the thread of their narrative is also unmistakably one. The following considerations will render this view probable :

(a) In all the above features the Syriac words used are identical. In case of the Odes being a translation from another language it goes to the credit of the Syrian translator that so little change in the lexicological form of the narrative is noticeable in his work. Two instances only to the contrary are somewhat striking ; the first is the employment of the verbs ܠܡܠܝܬ and ܠܡܠܝܬ in the sense of 'to love'. Lexicographically speaking, the former conveys more the sense of 'love' than the latter, which naturally means to 'unite in friendship, to befriend, to pity'. This etymological sense is, however, not followed by Syrian writers, with whom both verbs have acquired an almost identical meaning, although in their derived nouns of action the etymological distinction is frequently preserved. The second example is the alternate use of ܡܠܬܐ and ܡܠܬܐ to express 'Word' or 'word', cf. p. 92. Some other instances may be mentioned here, such as ܡܠܬܐ and ܡܠܬܐ 'thought', 'intention', ܡܠܬܐ and ܡܠܬܐ 'rest', ܡܠܬܐ and ܡܠܬܐ 'ode, psalm', &c. But since the exact meaning conveyed through them by the first author is not clear, the determination of their linguistic meaning would require useless lexicographical subtleties on which much should not be built.

(b) Some Odes are united to one another by the same process of introducing the subject. So Odes viii, ix, x, and xiii begin with the imperative 'open ye'. Odes iii, vii, viii, xiii, xxxiv end with an exhortation to the believers or singers, and Odes xi, xvi, xvii, xviii, xx, xli with a doxological formula. The beginning of Odes vi, xiv, xv, xvi, xxviii have an identical way of expressing a comparison.

CHAPTER XIII

SYRIAC OR GREEK?

WE come now to one of the most difficult parts of our inquiry. the determination of the original language in which the Odes were composed. We shall assume them to be Christian, for all objections on this side are either superficial and need not be regarded, or they are such as are evanescent as soon as we succeed in getting at the meaning of the author. No one who has spent any time on the study of the book would lay any stress on the fact that the name of Jesus does not appear in its pages, for it is clear that the author has a distinct Christology, not very different from that of the Nicene theology, and employs most of the terms and figures in which the early Christians expressed their doctrine of the Divine nature. His Christ is the Christian's Christ, with an Incarnation in terms more pronounced, in some respects, than the New Testament itself.

In many of the Odes, Christ is Himself, the speaker, for whom the Odist artificially moves on one side, after a slight overture, and who is the subject of the final doxology with which the Ode concludes, at least in certain cases.

Consequently our problem reduces to this: we have a Christian book of hymns written in or on the borders of the first century, and we have to decide whether of two forms to which we trace it in early times (the Greek or the Syriac), either can be regarded as the origin of the other. Did the Odist write in Syriac? and did someone render him into Greek? Or was it the converse? Is it possible that the author was responsible for the issue of his work in a bilingual form? For we have great bilingual scholars like Bardaisan capable of writing such Odes, and we have great bilingual Churches like Antioch capable of singing them. We shall try in the present chapter to clear up the relation between the Greek and the Syriac. If any further hypothesis should be necessary, such as the existence of another Semitic speech behind the Greek and Syriac, we can resort to it, but certainly not before it is necessary; for the antiquity of both Greek and Syriac forms of the Odes is now well attested.

One of the first things which the student of the Odes will gather from the translations which are offered in the present volume is the unusual amount of Semitism in the language of the Odes. There is a constant recurrence of paronomasia, to which we have drawn attention elsewhere, which at first sight, at all events, appears to be Semitic paronomasia; such cases as:

‘I was truthed on the rock of truth.’—Ode xi.

‘I was covered with the covering of thy Spirit.’—Ode xxv.

‘Blessing He blessed me.’—Ode xxviii.

‘My heart gushes out a gush.’—Ode xxxvi.

and the like.

Besides these Semitic idioms and assonances there are instances of Semitic word-play which at first sight seem inexplicable except in the Syriac language. It was not surprising that the ‘midwife’ passage in Ode xix should have been claimed by Mingana as a decisive Syriacism, since such language as ‘She had not sought a midwife (ܡܕܝܢܐ),

For He was midwife to her (ܡܕܝܢܐ),’ does not appear, at first sight, to be possible except in Syriac, for in what other language would it be possible to produce or reproduce the word-play? Thus we find ourselves face to face with a row of decided Semitisms, such as would not normally occur in translation, and the first suggestion is to conclude that the Syriac Odes have precedence over the Greek Odes.

The same suggestion comes up when we explore into the Greek Odes which underlie the Coptic tradition. Cases occur in which the Syriac appears to be the better text than the Copto-Greek text, and perhaps to be responsible for it. Here is an extremely suggestive instance. The opening of the fifth Ode is in Syriac:

ܡܕܝܢܐ ܕܝܗܝܐ ܕܡܕܝܢܐ of which the natural translation is:

‘I will give thanks to thee, O Lord.’

The Coptic equivalent to this has caused hesitation to translators, who have wavered between ‘Gratias tibi agam, domine;’

and ‘Manifestabo tibi, domine;’

and it is not surprising that the second translation, which is a literal rendering of the Coptic, should be regarded as a misunderstanding of the Syriac, through the substitution of ܡܕܝܢܐ for the almost equivalent ܡܕܝܢܐ. If such a substitution could be justified, and if parallel cases of misreading or misunderstanding could be found, the Syriac would move into the place of honour.

These, then, are some of the directions in which a careful study of the related texts is necessary. Even a late Syriac text like ours would acquire predominance if it furnished explanation of variants or readings in Greek or Coptic, and if it was intelligible where the Greek was, relatively to itself, obscure; and in our case the Syriac is no longer to be regarded as late, for its antiquity is established. The MSS. may be modern, but the text is that of Ephrem, and, perhaps, of Bardaisan.

On the other hand, we shall have to walk warily, if we are to reach the true solution. For example, in the sporadic instances already cited, no conclusion is to be drawn from the expression in Ode xxviii :

ܐܠܗܐ ܕܥܡܝܐ ܒܝܪܟܝܐ

‘He has richly blessed me;’

for this is a reproduction of Genesis xxii. 17, where the LXX is εὐλογῶν εὐλογήσω σε, and may just as well be a reproduction of a Greek text as an original Semitism of the Odist.

In the same way the instance of misunderstood Syriac in the opening verse of Ode v disappears upon closer examination. The case is exactly the same as that in which Pistis Sophia quotes the 107th Psalm, where the German translators have again given us :

‘Manifestate Domino, quod (l. quia) est χρηστός:’

it is, however, the regular translation of the LXX :

ἐξομολογείσθε τῷ Κυρίῳ ὅτι χρηστός κτέ.

and should have been translated :

‘Gratias agite Domino,’ &c.

We were, then, correct in explaining the Syriac word as ἐξομολογήσομαι, but wrong in suggesting ‘manifestabo’ as a translation of the parallel Coptic. With the translation corrected the supposed Syriac variant disappears. It was a mere blunder of the first German translators in the use of the Coptic dictionary.

The ‘midwife’ passage is not so easy to clear up. Here the paronomasia in the Syriac is very pronounced, and the challenge to produce a similar one in Greek is very resonant. We may find the key, perhaps, in Eusebius, who has used the Greek Odes in this very passage, and who speaks of God the Father as μαιούμενος. This suggests a Greek rendering :

οὐκ ἐξήτησε μαῖαν

ἐκεῖνος γὰρ ἐμαιώσατο αὐτήν.

and when we write it down in that form we see another possible word-play involved in the text; for the word μαίδομαι, 'to bring to bed', has another word, so closely related to it as hardly to be distinguished from it, viz. μαίωμαι, 'to seek'. We must, therefore, replace ἐξήγησε by ἐμαίετο (or some nearly coincident form): we may then restore as follows:

*οὐκ ἐπεμαίετο μαῖαν
ἐκεῖνος γὰρ ἐμαιώσατο αὐτήν.*

The paronomasia would then be double in Greek; and the Syriac would have cleverly retained one half of it.

These considerations will show how careful one needs to be in avoiding hasty or premature solutions of the problem.

It may perhaps be thought that this attempt to reconstruct the lost Greek of the sentence in the Ode which describes the miraculous birth has the inherent weakness of conjectural restoration and of over-subtlety. The following consideration will operate in support of the theory of an original Greek at this point. The Syriac sentence is certainly an exposition of the verse in the 22nd Psalm to which allusion has been made above; but this verse is not extant in the Peshitta version; it is replaced by something quite different. It follows, then, that unless we assume the Peshitta version as we possess it to have varied from its original type, the verse in the Psalm cannot have been expounded in the Syriac, but only from the Greek, or (in the last resort for possible sources) from the Hebrew.

This makes it possible that we have restored the Greek with some measure of correctness, and that the Greek is the original rather than the Syriac.

On the other hand, the sentence which is wanting in the Peshitta is extant in the Targum, and we must reserve the possibility that the Odist was acquainted with the Targum. For such an acquaintance might exactly reverse the argument, and reduce to zero the value of our Greek speculation. Mingana's argument for Aramaism would hold the field.

Now let us see whether there are other directions in which we can pick up clues for the determination of priority. Here is an extremely interesting case at the close of the 25th Ode. In this Ode the sentence, 'I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord', was emended wrongly in the first edition to 'I became admirable by the name of the Lord', on the ground that the former expression was unintelligible. There was no need of such a correction. It means 'I became a Christian by the name of Christ', or 'I became Christ's by becoming a Christian'. We may compare the following passages:

Just. Ap. i, 12: 'Jesus Christ, from whom also we have received the appellation of Christians.'

Just. Dial. 63: 'The Church, which arose from his name and partakes of his name (for we are all called Christians).'

Just. Dial. 96: 'You curse all those who from Him have become Christians' (τῶν ἀπ' ἐκείνου γενομένων Χριστιανῶν).

Just. Dial. 117: 'All those who by the Name of Jesus have become Christians.'

Iren. Adv. Haer. iii. 17: '(in Antiochia) pro fide, quam in Christo habebant, vocati sunt Christiani.'

So there seems no doubt as to the meaning of the words 'I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord'. We may set down the following as an equivalent Greek sentence:

ἐγενόμην δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ.

or:

ἐγενόμην δὲ τοῦ Κυρίου, διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ Κυρίου.

If this is correct the next sentence, 'I was justified by His gentleness', should stand for:

ἐδικαιώθην διὰ τῆς χρηστότητος αὐτοῦ with employment of the favourite paronomasia between χρηστός and χριστός, with which we are familiar in Justin Martyr and elsewhere.

The transition of thought is exactly the same as in Just. Ap. i, 4:

Χριστιανοὶ γὰρ εἶναι κατηγορούμεθα· τὸ δὲ χρηστὸν μισεῖσθαι, οὐ δίκαιον

where there is no need to correct Χριστιανοί to χρηστιανοί.

That we have rightly restored χρηστότης in the Greek appears by a reference to the Coptic text, where the word has been preserved with a slight modification (ⲁⲓⲧⲙⲁⲓⲟ ρⲡ ⲧⲉⲕⲁⲡⲧⲭⲣⲏⲥⲟⲥ). The Coptic translator, however, did not know what to make of the previous sentence, which is altogether omitted. The existence of this favourite early-Christian play on words is evidence that the Ode was composed in the Greek language: in the Syriac the allusion disappears, nor is the first clause intelligible.

The correctness of our interpretation may be further seen by the light which it throws upon the New Testament itself. When, for example, Paul tells the Corinthians (iii. 23) that they are Christ's, and that Christ is God's, he means that, being Christians, they are Christ's by the name of Christ, and are in a relation of ownership to or of derivation from Christ, just as Christ is in a relation to God, implying either sonship or dependency. Even more striking is the light which is cast upon a passage in the Gospel of Mark, by this expression of 'becoming the Lord's by the name of the Lord'. In Mark ix. 41 we have the following sequence:

ὅς γὰρ ἂν ποτίσῃ ὑμᾶς ποτήριον ὕδατος ἐν ὀνόματι, ὅτι Χριστοῦ ἔστε, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῦ.

The difficulty here is to determine what is meant by 'in the name', and also to explain how, at the time involved in the narration, Jesus could speak to his disciples as 'belonging to Christ'. Matthew (x. 42) apparently gets over the difficulty by saying that the name is 'the name of a disciple', and leaves out the clause about Christ's ownership; but this does not explain what is meant by the 'name of a disciple'; is it the same thing as the 'name of a prophet'? Matthew appears to mean something of the kind, to judge from the preceding verse, but he has clearly misunderstood Mark, who either means :

'In my name, because ye are Christ's,'

or :

'In the Christian name, because ye are Christ's.'

The Ode comes to our aid at this point, and shows that the alternatives mean the same thing. We are Christ's because we are Christians. The name is, therefore, the name of the Lord.

The play upon Christos and Chrestos is a very early one, and probably belongs to the period of the nicknames of the Antiochenes. There is a reflexion of it in the New Testament ; cf. Ephesians ii. 7 :

ἐν χρηστότητι ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

Here the paronomasia is easily missed by the modern student : it would be quite otherwise with a Christian of the first or second century, who is always trying to explain to his tormentors why he is anointed, and how he is good.

For instance, in Tertull. Apol. 3, we have :

'Nemo retractat, ne ideo bonus Caius et prudens Lucius, quia Christianus' (i. e. χρηστός = bonus aut prudens).

Ad Nationes, i. 3 'Christianum vero nomen, quantum significatio est, de unctione interpretatur : etiam cum corrupte a vobis Chrestiani pronuntiamur sic quoque de suavitate vel bonitate modulatum est' (i. e. χρηστότης = suavitas aut bonitas).

The ultimate origin of these etymologies is, as is generally agreed, to be sought in Antioch.

Such an instance as that which we have been discussing almost implies that the Ode was composed in Greek ; for the play upon Christos and Chrestos is only to be made in that language. When it passes into another language, as in the sentence quoted from Tertullian, it requires the assistance of a commentator to make the argument intelligible. We shall assume then, provisionally, that the Ode in which the writer talked of becoming the Lord's by the name of the Lord, and of being justified by His goodness, is a Greek composition.

In the foregoing discussion we could readily imagine ourselves back in early times and at Antioch, where believers were called Christians as belonging to Christ, with ironical references to their personal ointment or superior goodness, according to which they became either Christs, or Chrests because they were Christ's. The believers accepted all these titles and appellations. They even took the title of Christ to themselves personally, and gave the explanation of it in the sense that they had received a Divine Anointing. In consequence of this, we cannot always tell whether the word χριστός in early Christian tradition belongs to the Lord or to His followers; and similar difficulties arise in the Odes upon which we are engaged. In Ode xxxvi. 6 the writer says:

'He anointed me from His own perfections:
And I became one of His neighbours.'

The first edition remarked on this sentence that it 'was almost impossible to determine whether the Psalmist is speaking in his own name, or in that of the Messiah, or whether it is an alternation of one with the other'. Most probably the Odist, as in so many other cases, is speaking in the person of Christ, but the sentence which we have quoted shows that the decision is not an easy one to make. We might have quoted Theophilus of Antioch on the other side, who says: 'We are called Christians because we are anointed with the oil of God' (ad Autol. i. 12).

The foregoing argument for interpreting the name as the Christian name, followed by a play upon χριστός and χρηστός, is undoubtedly a very strong one. Let us see whether there is anything that can be said on the other side.

It is possible that the expression

'I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord' may be derived from the Old Testament. For instance, in Isaiah xlv. 5 we find the following prediction of the admission of proselytes to the covenant of Israel :

‘One shall say, I am the Lord's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel.’

We may fairly assume (at all events as a working hypothesis) that this passage underlies the language of the Ode. It is quite in the Odist's manner to say ‘by the name of the Lord’ instead of ‘by the name of Jacob’ or ‘by the name of Israel’. But then this rules out the LXX as the starting-point of the Odist's thought, for the LXX has

Οὗτος ἐρεῖ, τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰμί·

while on the other hand the Peshiṭta says exactly :

ܐܢܝܢ ܕܝܥܢܐ ܕܝܥܢܐ ܕܝܥܢܐ

‘This one will say, I am the Lord's.’

Thus the Syriac would become the prime authority and not the Greek : the reference to χρηστότης, which certainly stood in the Greek text of the Ode, might be due to the fact that the Odist was bilingual, but would hardly have originated in the Syriac.

We have discoursed at some length on this passage in the Odes on account of its importance. At this stage of the argument we can hardly draw a final conclusion, as the considerations on either side are so strong. We must look to the rest of the Ode to see whether it furnishes further indications of Greek or Syriac origin.

It is interesting to notice, in passing, that the passage in Isaiah was recognized as being the language of a proselyte. The Targum, for instance, says, ‘I became one of the God-fearers’, which is the regular term for Gentiles who attach themselves to Judaism, and occurs in the New Testament itself. Thus we shall raise the further question as to what kind of proselyte is speaking, and perhaps revive for further study the theory of Professor Menzies that the Odes are the Hymns of Jewish Proselytes. Every stone must be turned, and turned again!

We propose in the next place to try and explain the opening verses of the 38th Psalm, which have been the centre of a good deal of discussion. The Syriac tells us that the Odist ‘Went up into the Light of Truth as into a chariot’, and then that the Truth took him and led him, preserved him from rocks and waves (?) and brought him to the haven of salvation. The suggestion was made that the language was that which describes a sea-voyage, and that the writer had embarked on the good ship ‘Light of Truth’. Carriages naturally do not require special names, and travelling in a carriage involves more delight than danger, and does not end up in a haven, except by extreme poetical licence. At this point the Syriac lexicons barred the way: they could not supply a sufficiently early instance for the translation of markaba (ܡܪܟܒܐ) as ‘ship’; but the text of the Odes, whether translated or original, is certainly early: so it seemed that the rendering ‘chariot’ would have to stand. On that supposition it was natural that the word for ‘waves’ should be read as ‘cliffs’ or ‘valleys’: though why ‘cliffs’ should be a special terror to carriages was not clear. Some persons wished to get rid of the ‘haven’ which had been misread in the editio princeps; but this word is certain: it is guaranteed by manuscript authority, and by the fact that it is a quotation from Psalm cvii. 30. The 42nd Psalm is also in evidence, for it is thence that the language is derived about the leading and guiding of the Truth. In the LXX it runs thus:

ἐξαπόστειλον τὸ φῶς σου καὶ τὴν ἀλήθειάν σου αὐτά με ὡδήγησαν καὶ ἡγαγόν με.—Ps. xlii (xliii). 3.

Moreover, the Ode here, in the use of the past tense, is nearer to the language of the LXX than to that of the Hebrew or the Peshiṭta. So we are led to look for some Greek word (such as ὁχημα) by which to explain the Syriac.

The two Psalms quoted must be the key to the understanding of the Ode. It occurs to us to inquire, also, whether this Ode (whatever be its original meaning) may not have been interpreted in later times in a baptismal sense, as indeed Dr. Bernard maintains to have been the meaning of the whole body of the Odes. For instance, it appears to have been so interpreted in the Nestorian ritual, where we find the following sequence:¹

‘Save me, O God, by thy name (Ps. liv. 1). In the hidden valleys of the world thou walkest as in the sea, O thou who art unbaptised; hasten to come to the glorious haven of baptism And he led them to the haven where they would be (Ps. cvii. 30): to the covenant of the haven of life we have come: to the glorious resurrection of Christ our Saviour.’

Here we recognize at once the reference to the same Psalm that certainly underlies our 38th Ode. And the rest of the language, with its picturesque confusion between land and sea, reflects closely the Ode itself. In the mind of the composer of the Liturgy, Baptism is the ritual and the Church the haven. We find something similar as far back as Theophilus of Antioch. It is not, however, in the Nestorian ritual only that we find suspicious traces of the 38th Ode. We have already suggested that the difficulty in translating the Syriac, which seems to record the feat of taking a chariot and going to sea, was due to a natural misunderstanding of a Greek word susceptible of two meanings, to which the Syriac translator has given the more common meaning. What is remarkable is that Cyril of Jerusalem is, perhaps, guilty of the same misunderstanding, because he did not realize that the usage was poetical. He calls baptism the ‘chariot to heaven’; and the expression is so peculiar that we naturally connect it with the opening sentences of the 38th Ode. What then is the term which

¹ Nestorian Ritual, ed. Conybeare and Maclean, p. 335.

Cyril uses? If we look at his introductory lecture, from which Dr. Bernard drew his striking baptismal analogies, we shall find him describing baptism as ἐνδυμα φωτεινόν· σφραγίς ἁγία ἀκατάλυτος· ὄχημα πρὸς οὐρανόν· παραδείσου τρυφή.

All of these expressions are borrowed from or illustrated by the Odes; and the ὄχημα is the 'chariot' of Ode xxxviii. Only it ought not to have been rendered 'chariot' (for the word may be rendered 'ship') except on the assumption that Cyril misunderstood it. If he did misunderstand it there is no need why we should follow him: there is, however, the residual possibility that his translators are at fault (including J. H. Newman). Every one did not misunderstand the language. For instance, in the Coptic Book of the Resurrection of Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle,¹ we find the following language used by the Apostle Thomas:

'Behold! Jesus Christ set me on board the ship of Salvation, and brought me into the haven of peace.'²

The advantage of the new interpretation is that it rids us of the difficulty which Syriac students had felt in attaching the meaning 'ship' to the Syriac word. We get rid also of the confusion in the language of the Ode, where the terrors of travels in a coach are described in terms of rocks and waves. We have no need of emendation of the translation of the text in order to get rid of the 'waves'. The 'haven' for the chariot is no longer a matter of allegory; and, most important of all, we see that the Greek is the original which has been the subject of misunderstanding.

We referred above to the possibility that Theophilus of Antioch was also acquainted with the good ship 'Light of Truth'. On this point we note as follows: The first thing that would occur to a thoughtful person on reading the Ode would be that the Truth stands for the ship as well as for the shipmaster. The 'Light of Truth' is the name of the ship, the 'Light' and the 'Truth' of the 42nd Psalm correspond to the 'Truth' in the Ode which has charge and direction of the passengers in the ship; thus the ship and the shipmaster appear, as far as nomenclature goes, to be interchangeable. The peculiarity appears to have struck Theophilus of Antioch; in presenting an argument for the necessity of Faith he tells Autolycus that one cannot cross the sea unless he first trust himself to the ship and the shipmaster :

¹ Loc. cit., p. 211.

² The ordinary Sahidic word for 'ship' is employed, and there is no Greek transliteration to assist us.

τίς δύναται διαπερᾶσαι τὴν θάλασσαν ἐὰν μὴ πρῶτον ἑαυτὸν πιστεύσῃ τῷ πλοίῳ καὶ τῷ κυβερνήτῃ ;—ad Autolycum, i. 8.

The conjunction of ideas may have been suggested by the terms of a familiar hymn : to go on board was an act of faith.

Theophilus is, perhaps, under the influence of the same opening verses of the 38th Ode at a somewhat later point, where he explains how advantageous to the storm-tossed voyager are those islands which have havens in which they may take refuge, and how they are guided to these havens and anchorages by the Word of Truth. And he explains that the havens are to be understood mystically as being Christian congregations, that is, holy Churches. The whole passage is inspired by the Ode, and is, like the Ode, a parable of Truth and Error. We will transcribe the passage, and underline the expressions which are especially reminiscent of the Ode :

'Just as in the sea there are islands inhabited, well-watered and fruitful, having anchorages and harbours, so that the storm-tossed mariners may find refuge in them : so God has given to the world; wave-driven and storm-tost by sins, assemblies (I mean holy Churches) in which, as in havens with good anchorage, there are to be found the teachings of the Truth, to which those who wish to be saved flee for refuge, having become lovers of the Truth, and desirous to escape the wrath and judgement of God. And just as there are other islands, rocky and waterless and barren and beast-ridden and uninhabited, to the hurt of the mariners and the storm-tost, where ships are broken and those who go on board of them perish, so is it with the teachings of the Error (I mean heresies) which utterly destroy them who meddle with them. For such persons are not led by the word of Truth, but like pirates, when they have filled their ships, run them on the aforesaid places, with the object of utterly destroying them, so does it happen with those that wander from the Truth, and are utterly ruined by the Error.—Theoph. ad Autol. ii. 14.

The motive of the foregoing allegory is to be sought in the first chapter of Genesis, where the Synagogē, or gathering together of the waters, is described, and where the dry land appears. This leads to the describing of the islands of the sea, as above, and to the mystical explanation of the 'Congregation of the Waters'. Theophilus found these explanations a convenient starting-point for the description of Truth and Error, of which one guides to the haven and the other runs on the rocks. He makes his parable, as we have said, in terms that are reminiscent of the 38th Ode of Solomon.

It appears, then, that there are at least three distinct traces of the influence of this 38th Ode on his mind: for besides this parable of Truth and Error, there is the description of heresy as deadly poison mixed with wine, and the joint faith in the Truth as the ship and the shipmaster. It is, however, quite likely that this argument for a Greek original, and the interpretation attached to it, are too subtle to carry conviction. To begin with, although ἔχρημα is a poetical term for a ship, it is not the natural one: and if the word is somewhat strained, the interpretation is even more so. The main difficulty lies in the use of the word 'haven', which appears to be out of place in overland travel. That such overland travel, however, is contemplated, appears to be involved in the subsequent language of the Ode, where the Truth (ver. 7) takes the traveller on the right road. This is not nautical language. We leave the discussion with a margin of uncertainty.

Now let us turn to another point in which the study of the doctrine of the Odes throws light upon the language in which that doctrine is expressed. We have shown elsewhere that the writer has a Christology which contains the germs from which the Nicene Creed was evolved. For instance, there is the doctrine of the pre-existent Wisdom of God, co-eternal with the Father and identified with the Son. The proof-text for this doctrine, from which all the later theological developments take their rise, is Proverbs viii. 22 ff., where Wisdom says :

‘The Lord possessed me in the beginning’ :

or according to the LXX :

‘The Lord created me the beginning’ :

These words with their context were transferred at an early date in the first century from the Wisdom of God to Christ as the Wisdom of God ; and it is to be noticed that both the Hebrew and the LXX forms are involved in the Christology of the Odes.

Thus in Ode xli. 9, apparently ex ore Christi :

‘The Father of Truth remembered me ;
He who possessed me from the beginning.’

and in Ode vii. 8, in an impersonal manner, God is said to have ‘created Wisdom’, which involves the reading ἐκτίσέ με. As we have pointed out, the Church teachers used almost exclusively the LXX rendering, and got into difficulties thereby ; and did not recognize, as far as we know, before the time of Eusebius, that the Hebrew text had another sense than the LXX. These passages suffice to show that we are in a region of thought where Christ has been recognized as the Wisdom of God. So we may proceed to inquire into the use, if any, which the Odes make of the language in which Wisdom is described (and Christ by implication) in the Old Testament. This we have done in another chapter, and we only repeat some of the matter in order to prepare the way for the question as to whether the particular title ἀπόρροια is found in the Odes.

The statement of the case for ἀπόρροια is as follows:

(i) It is an undoubted title of Wisdom in Sap. Sol. vii. 25, where Wisdom is said to be 'a pure effluence from the glory of the Almighty'.

(ii) It was applied to Christ as being the Wisdom of God; as Origen says in his commentary on Romans:

'Ipsius unius Paterni fontis (sicut Sapiencia dicit) purissima est manatio Filius.

Here the Son is defined in Sapiential language as the ἀπόρροια of the Father.'

(iii) It appears, however, that a good while before Origen's time the title had been transferred to the Holy Spirit, as indeed Origen was aware, for he goes on to say that the term 'Wisdom of God', may be also applied to the Holy Spirit:

'Hoc idem autem Sapiencia Dei etiam de Spiritu Sancto intelligi debet, ubi dicit: Spiritus Domini,' &c.—Sap. Sol. i. 7.

We can see the change already made in the following passage from Athenagoras:

'The prophetic spirit also is in concord with our argument, for it says. "The Lord created me the beginning of His ways, for His works". Yea, and the very Spirit that was operating in those who made prophetic utterances we affirm to be an effluence (ἀπόρροια) of God, flowing forth (ἀπορρέον) and reflected back again like a ray of the sun.'¹

Thus Athenagoras first finds Christ in the Wisdom doctrine of Proverbs, and then finds the Holy Spirit in the same Wisdom as described in the Wisdom of Solomon. The transference of this particular title of Wisdom from the Son to the Holy Spirit had, then, already been made as early as the time of Athenagoras (A.D. 177). Wisdom generally had been transferred as a title to the Holy Spirit by Theophilus of Antioch in the famous passage in which he says that the three days which elapsed before the creation of the luminaries are a type of the Trinity, i. e. of God and His Word and His Wisdom.

¹ Athenagoras, Supplicatio 10.

It appears, then, that ἀπόρροια is a classic term in the evolution of Christian theology. It denotes the procession of the Son from the Father, and the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father (and the Son). Now turn to the Odes. The sixth Ode opens with a prologue about the impossibility of resistance to God, and the impracticability of taking the position of an adversary to Him. The writer is thinking of the Wisdom of God which is described in the Sapiential Books in just such terms:¹ e. g.

Prov. iii. 15 οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται αὐτῇ οὐδὲν πονηρόν.

Sap. Sol. vii. 30 σοφίας δὲ οὐκ ἀντισχύει κακία.

From this prologue the Odist proceeds to his main theme, the coming of the ἀπόρροια: 'for there went forth a stream and it became a river', &c. It is clear that this effluence is either Wisdom itself, or it is some point of view of Christ or the Holy Spirit. In any case it is the classic ἀπόρροια that has turned up. Fortunately for us the Sahidic Bible preserved the term, and its importance was so evident that the writer of the Pistis Sophia makes it one of his main themes. He knows, moreover, that it was susceptible of an interpretation as an ἀπόρροια of Light as well as one of Water, and changes the Ode accordingly, with a persistent reference to the efflux of Light, of which the unfortunate Pistis Sophia has been deprived by malevolent powers. No one can read or understand the Pistis Sophia who does not observe the stress that is laid in it on the efflux of Light. The use and importance of the term being established and conceded, we can by no means derive the language or the involved doctrine from the Syriac language.

The Odist says in the Syriac that 'there went forth a brook'; this is quite colourless, and has nothing in it to guide us to the ¹ See, however, on this point the coincidence which we have noted with the Apology of Aristides.

Sapiential thought or language: in fact it misleads us, rather than leads us, for it suggests the torrent in Ezekiel which flows from the Temple, and our investigation has shown that this is not the right quarter in which to find the ἀπόρροια or its meaning. The use of this Greek term, taken from a Greek book, and expressive of a Greek theology, is, at first sight, decisive against the possibility of a derivation of the Odes from an original Syriac. The sixth Ode, in its fundamental conception, is Sapiential. The argument would be equally decisive against the belief in any other Semitic origin for the Odes; for the Wisdom of Solomon is a fundamentally Greek book, which has no Hebrew original behind it; and even if it had such an original (as Professor Margoliouth once tried to maintain), the chance that the Odist's 'translator' would have turned up the form ἀπόρροια in making his rendering is quite negligible. Thus the Odes are seen to be fundamentally and altogether Greek, unless the argument can be met from other quarters.

Now let us return to the seventh Ode, from which we have already detected a quotation in Eusebius. There is still something to be cleared up in the passage of the seventh Ode which we have been considering in a previous chapter. If we consider the verses referred to,

‘He hath caused me to know Himself without grudging, in His simplicity
For His kindness has minished His greatness,’ the question will arise as to the meaning of the words ‘In His simplicity’, when taken in connexion with the Incarnation, to which we have shown the succeeding words to apply. If we turn the words back into Greek we have:

ἐν τῇ ἀπλότῃτι αὐτοῦ, ἡ γὰρ χρηστότης αὐτοῦ ἐσμίκρυνε τὴν μεγαλαιότητα.¹

Now let us turn to Tatian's Oration to the Greeks. We shall find ¹ Connolly has already noted this: J.T.S., 1913, p. 531.

that after establishing the doctrine of the One True God, he goes on to state the doctrine of the Logos as follows :

‘With Him, through rational power, the Logos also itself which was in Him subsisted. By the will of his ἀπλότης springs forth the Logos ; and the Logos, not having gone into vacuity, becomes the First-born Work of the Father.’

Tatian, Oratio 5.

The words θελήματι τῆς ἀπλότητος, when spoken of the Incarnation, correspond closely to the language of the Ode. The only question is as to the meaning of the word ἀπλότης, which the Syriac gives in the sense of ‘simplicity’. If this is really the meaning, the ‘simplicity’ referred to is that of the Divine Nature, alone in itself, and yet possessing in itself the δύναμις λογική. Thus the Divine Goodness makes His simple nature known by ministering His greatness. It has been suggested, however, that we ought to take the later meaning of ἀπλότης, and interpret it as ‘liberality’ and ‘wealth’, just as we interpret ἀπλῶς to mean not merely ‘simply’ but ‘abundantly’. We should then have the sentence,

‘By His liberality His kindness minished His greatness.’

Now turn back to the Syriac, and we shall see the alternative translation involved in the words ‘without grudging’, which correspond ordinarily to ἀφθόνως, and really mean ‘abundantly’, ‘liberally’. Thus the Syriac may have made two translations of ἐν τῇ ἀπλότητι αὐτοῦ, and in that case is not the original. The Greek is the original, and corresponds closely to the language of Tatian, who may even have been acquainted with the Ode. A parallel passage in the Odes will be found in Ode xli. 10, where Christ is made to say :

‘His wealth begat me
And the thought of His heart.’

The arguments for a Greek original which we have been considering thus far are as follows :

(1) The ‘midwife’ passage in Ode xix : where the dependence is on the 22nd Psalm.

(2) The 'proselyte passage' in Ode xxv, with a probable dependence on Isaiah xlv, and a possible Greek play upon χρηστός and χριστός.

(3) The 'chariot' passage in Ode xxxviii, which depends on Psalm xliii and Psalm cvii, and has a possible reference (to which we have endeavoured to do justice) to the initiation of baptism.

(4) The 'Efflux' passage in Ode vi, with the assumed dependence on Sap. Sol. vii.

(5) The linguistic argument in Ode vii.

These are the five strongest arguments that we have found for a Greek-original: of these, we may say on review that the evidence for (1) inclines rather to the Greek side, unless we can adduce the Targum to turn the scales; for (2) the evidence is again somewhat in favour of the Greek, but not decisively. In (3) the difficulty of the Syriac reading is relieved (but not really got rid of) by substituting the Greek counterpart, and no definite conclusion can be reached; in (4) the argument for a Greek original appears at its clearest and strongest; in (5), the linguistic argument is somewhat on the side of a Greek original. The argument is not final, and it does not necessarily carry the whole body of the Odes, but it certainly has the field at present as regards the Odes in question.

Other suggestions of a Greek original may be found in the papers of Frankenberg, Preuschen, and Connolly, and will be discussed later.

It remains to be considered whether any light is thrown upon the original text of the Odes by the Biblical or semi-Biblical quotations which they contain. On this question of Biblical citations we have made a careful study in a previous chapter; the results of that examination would be naturally affected by the early date to which we have referred both the Odes (if Greek) and their Syriac form. It will be useless to look for coincidence with the Peshitta version of the New Testament in a document which antedates the time of Ephrem and Bardaisan. With the Old Testament the case is different, for there is reason to believe that some parts of the Old Testament were rendered into Syriac at a very early date, directly from the Hebrew. So that here coincidences with the Peshitta on the part of the Odes would have weight. We have, however, seen that in the case of the most obvious Biblical semi-quotations their phraseology in the Odes is not always in accordance with the wording of the Old Testament Syriac. There are suspicions of an occasional Hebrew influence in quotations, and now and then the text of the Septuagint asserts itself; but it does not appear as if there was much in this region of inquiry to turn the scales very definitely one way or the other.

The real question that remains is as to whether there are sufficient genuine Semitisms in the Odes to set off against the numerous cases in which we have affirmed the existence of Greek language and Greek thought.

CHAPTER XIV

SYRIAC OR GREEK? (continued).

UP to this point we have found ourselves still in the region of uncertainty: some considerations pleaded strongly for a Syriac (or at all events a Semitic) original; others suggested Greek expressions at the back of the tradition of the Odes. Where we have thus far traced Biblical coincidences we did not get much that weighed the scales on one side or the other. Evidently we must make a closer study both of the Biblical allusions and of the general fabric of the Odes.

One thing, however, is coming out clearly, viz. that the portion of the Bible which, more than any other, underlies the Odes, is the Canonical Psalter, and next to that come the Sapiential books and Isaiah.

It may be suggested that this was something which could have been guessed in advance; for if we are making a book of hymns or Psalms of any length, it is only natural that it should imitate the style and thought of such Psalters as are already in existence.

This may readily be granted, so far as the use of the prevailing modes of thought is concerned, or the use of known metres and tunes. Ephrem, for instance, in order to displace Bardaisan's hymns and counteract their witchcraft, had to use Bardaisan's tools, his metres, and his harmonies; and Bardaisan went further than this: for if Ephrem tells true, he imitated David by making a new Psalter of 150 Psalms. Such a Psalter does more than affect unconsciously the style of Hebrew sacred song; it becomes a deliberate imitation, surely not confined to mere number. So the question is raised for us whether our book of Odes is also, in a deliberate sense, dependent upon the Psalter. That is the question to which we address ourselves. If it turn out that the question is answered affirmatively, and that the Odist has constantly one eye fixed on the Canonical Psalter, we may be in a position to decide more definitely the question of the dependence of the Odist upon the Septuagint or the Peshiṭta, that is, upon the relative order of the Greek or Syriac Odes.

Before we examine this point we may say a word or two about the supposed Bardaisan Psalter and certain Psalters that may be grouped with it or related to it.

The tradition of the Church knows of at least three second-century Psalters, besides our Odes, which cannot be later than the second century. That is, to all appearance, there were four separate Psalters current in the second century.

Now of these, the first is ascribed to Valentinus, the second to Marcion, and the third to Bardaisan. Of Valentinus and his Psalter Tertullian speaks with contempt:

‘Nobis quoque ad hanc speciem Psalmi patrocinabuntur, non quidem apostatae et haeretici et Platonici Valentini, sed sanctissimi et receptissimi prophetae David.

De Carne Christi, chap. 20.

Of Marcion we have a well-known statement in the Muratorian Canon, that amongst the books which the Church does not receive, and the authors whom it rejects, must be reckoned the new Psalter made for Marcion, and its authors :

‘Qui etiam novum psalmorum librum Marcioni conscripserunt.’

Of Bardesanes, Ephrem tells us that he composed hymns and Psalms in various metres, that he imitated David and composed 150 Psalms, and that he administered his false doctrine in this way to simple-minded people, like poison in ܡܕܡܐ (Patr. Syr. ii. 495).

The suggestion naturally arises whether these three lost Psalters are really independent, and whether they do not reduce to a single Psalter. Valentinus and Bardaisan are known to have some connexion one with the other, the latter having been, it is said, at one time a disciple of the former. On the other hand the tradition of independent Psalm-writing in Syriac is closely bound up with the name of Bardaisan and his followers ; Ephrem could not have made a mistake on that head. So if any one is to disappear it should be Valentinus. We should be left in that case with Bardaisan as the great Psalmist of the second century, unless it could be shown that he had imitated Valentinus as well as David.

It becomes a matter of great interest to determine whether our new Odes are in any way related to the Psalms that we are discussing. Do they also imitate the Canonical Psalter ? Are they heretical, say with Valentinus as author in general, as Preuschen promises to prove ? Or with Valentinus and Bardaisan in particular, in ignoring the resurrection of the body ?

It will be seen that the relation of the Odist to the Canonical Psalter is really one of importance ; we must clearly do more than pick up a stray reference. The matter requires a closer scrutiny.

The inquiry is complicated, as Connolly and others have pointed out, by the fact that the Odist, when he quotes, deliberately alters his text. If, for instance, he is quoting as Paul does, the words :

‘I believed, therefore have I spoken’,

he makes out of it :

‘I believed, therefore I was at rest.’

And it follows from this that when we find him quoting the Psalter the agreement is often, of necessity, limited; but, whether limited or not, it is that agreement that we are in quest of; the disagreement is not to be reckoned as of the first importance in the case of free-handling and of adaptation like that which the Odes offer us. It is the agreements that count. We know, then, what to ask for in searching the Odes that we may find the Psalms. We are looking for unmanipulated sentences and half-sentences and expressions. For we do find them, not merely those sentences which we have already tabulated, but a great deal more, and the closer we look the more we shall see. In not a few cases we can detect (i) a Psalm underlying the Ode. (ii) we can watch the Odist picking up the bits of the Psalm on which he is working and putting them together in the Ode that he is composing. The key to the Ode will then lie in the printing of a certain Psalm of David by the side of it and using it as a search-light. It will be convenient to do this generally in the notes that we attach to each translated Psalm, but one or two specimens may be given here in order to illustrate the method, and to help us with our problem of the relations of the Syriac to the Greek.

For example, when we read our first Ode, with its reference to a crown upon the writer's head that does not fade nor wither, but blossoms and bears fruit, we are evidently under the influence of the first canonical Psalm, where the righteous man is described under the terms of a tree planted by rivers of water, whose leaf does not wither, and which brings forth its fruit in its season. So much being clear, we have to find the motive for the statement in the Ode, that ‘Thy fruits are full and perfect,

Full of thy salvation.’

The parallel to this is:

‘Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper’, taking ‘doeth’ in the Hebrew sense of ‘producing fruits’, (עֲשֶׂה פֵּרוֹי).

and making the subject of the verb the 'tree' in the previous sentence. This is actually the sense given by the Targum, and the Peshiṭta Syriac has preserved a trace of it by saying:

'Whatever he does he perfecteth'.¹

This will serve as an illustration of the action of the Psalter upon the Ode. In the present case it seems clear that the action could not have been effected through the LXX. It might have come through the Targum or an early form of the Peshiṭta (which is known to have been under the influence of the Targum).

Now we begin to see the direction in which to go to work. Let us take another instance. In Ode xvii. 9 every one will recognize that the words

'I brake in pieces the bars of iron' come from the 107th Psalm (Ps. cvi (cvii). 16). The agreement is complete as far as the Peshiṭta Psalter goes, every word used being the same; but one must not form a hasty judgement since both the Ode and the Peshiṭta have transliterated the Greek word for 'bars', which occurs in the LXX (μοχλούς). Why should they transliterate at all? Is their agreement in this transliteration a proof of interdependence? Does it mean that there was a Greek Ode for the original, agreeing at this point with the LXX, or was it a Syriac Ode that agreed with the Peshiṭta? A pretty problem!

However, we have caught the Odist pilfering from the Psalm, and we look round for more: in verse 4 the Odist says that 'the choking bonds were cut off by His hands'; on comparing the text with the Peshiṭta, we find that this is the same as verse 14 of the Psalm, which appears in the Greek as 'He brake their bands in sunder'. Here, then, we have a crucial instance. The Odist is not using the Greek Bible; he is using the Peshiṭta rendering of the Hebrew text.

¹ We follow the traditional vocalization.

establish', and 'to be true'. This appears to be decisive as to the dependence of the Odist upon the Syriac text.

We had a precisely similar word-play on the very same root in Ode xi. 5 ('I was established upon the rock of truth'); vide supra, p. 99.

These instances will show that we have picked up an important clue. We prove the dependence of the Ode (in these particular cases at least) from the Peshiṭta. That is a great point gained: it has history and chronology in it. It has long been suspected that portions of the Old Testament were done into Syriac at a very early date, by Jewish hands (or with the assistance of Jewish hands), and long before any portions of the New Testament had been done into Syriac. Such portions were the Psalter, then the Pentateuch, and perhaps some part of Isaiah. Our Odist has used this rendering.

If we can find sufficient cumulative evidence of this kind we may state the result in a general form. For this the reader is directed to the notes on the separate Odes. Supposing this reasoning to be justified, we must now go over the previous arguments on the opposite side, and see if they can be countered. If not, we shall have a bilingual Psalter, some of which was produced in Syriac and some in Greek, and then each part translated from the primary to the secondary language. In any case it must have been translated so early that we may safely assume its origin to be in a bilingual community, such as the district of Antioch. Probably the arguments referred to for Greek origins can be met upon further study. Provisionally, then, and with all due homage to light that may come from unexpected quarters, we suggest tentatively that the Syriac of the Odes is the original language in which they were composed.

On reviewing the foregoing argument, it may be instructive to compare the Odes with the Psalms of Solomon; and some one might say that the very same treatment may prove the Psalter of Solomon to be under the influence of the Peshiṭta Old Testament, whereas we know that they come into the Syriac by translation from the Greek. Let us examine into this a little more closely.

It is evident to the most superficial reader who looks at the text of the Psalms of Solomon that it is saturated with Biblical language. If we remove the historical references and allusions to Pompey the great dragon and the Romans, we have often a mere cento of Old Testament references for the residue. A glance at the uncial-typed words in the edition of Ryle and James will show what we mean. When, however, we come to the detailed examination of these borrowed words and phrases, we do not find that the writer takes any special theme, as the Odist does, and reverts to it. We have only noted one place where a Psalm of the Old Testament that has been quoted appears to have lingered in his memory. In Ps. Sol. v. we have the following sequence :

Ps. Sol. v. 11. Thou givest rain in the desert to cause the grass to spring up, (Ps. civ. 11.)

v. 12. to prepare food in the wilderness for every living thing, (Ps. civ. 28 ; Ps. cxlv. 16.)

and if they be hungry, to thee they will lift up their faces. (Ps. civ. 27 ; Ps. cxlv. 15.)

v. 14. His soul shall be satisfied when thou openest thy hand in mercy. (Ps. civ. 28 ; Ps. cxlv. 16.)

There is no necessity, however, to refer more than the first of the passages quoted to the 104th Psalm, the remainder come from the 145th Psalm. Nor is there any peculiar agreement of the Psalter of Solomon at this point with the Syriac Psalter. So far from any such agreement being detected, the evidence is in the other direction.

We have examined a good many cases of occurrence of Biblical language in the Psalms of Solomon without finding more than superficial or inevitable coincidences ; and there are many divergences in the language, and no special Syriac singularities. This is what we should naturally have expected. Our reason for alluding to it is to remove any possible misapprehension with regard to our linguistic criticism of the Odes.

Suppose we try and tabulate in a preliminary manner some of the results as to the original language of particular Odes which we have tentatively reached. We anticipate some results that will be worked out in the notes.

Ode i. Certainly of Semitic origin. (See explanation of 'fruits full and perfect'.)

Ode iv. Of Semitic origin: traces of Targumism.'

Ode vi. Probably of Greek origin (reference to the ἀπόρροια of the Divine Wisdom).

Ode vii. Of uncertain origin; contains Wisdom references (Prov. viii. 22) and has very early attestation.

Ode viii. Of Syriac origin with some traces of Targumic influence Ode ix. At first sight appears to be under the influence of LXX (cf. λίθος τίμιος), but see note, and reserve judgement.

Ode xvii. Based upon the 107th Psalm, Syriac version.

Ode xix. If the Ode is based on Proverbs ix it is a Greek Ode; the references to Psalm xxii are capable of either Greek or Syriac illustration.

Ode xx. Based on Isaiah lviii, and the evidence is in favour (but not conclusively in favour) of a Syriac origin.

Ode xxi. Certainly modelled on Psalm xxx in the Syriac version.

Ode xxiii. Probably based in its opening verses on the Greek of the third chapter of Sap. Sol.

Ode xxv. Decided suggestion of a Greek origin in closing verse.

Ode xxvi. Probably based on the 107th Psalm in Syriac (but some hesitation on account of the form of the refrain of the Psalm in the Peshitta).

Ode xxviii. Shows significant coincidence with the Syriac Psalter (an objection on the part of Connolly that in verse 4 it reflects a Greek δῖό).

Ode xxix. Indecisive references to the Psalter.

Ode xxx. Depends upon 24th chapter of the Wisdom of Sirach; probably Greek original.

Ode xxxvii. Probably Semitic in origin (suggestion of influence from Targum; cf. Ode i).

Ode xl. Apparently connected internally with Ode xx, and like that Ode dependent upon the Syriac of Isaiah lviii.

Ode xli. Shows acquaintance with the Hebrew of Proverbs viii. 22.

Ode xlii. Depends on Psalm lxxxviii, but not decisive as to Syriac or Greek.

This is a rapid glance at the phenomena of the textual transmission (omitting altogether the Syriacisms and Semitisms which we have collected elsewhere). It is perplexing because of the cross-evidence within the individual Odes. It would have been easy to affirm bilingual authorship and refer the hymns to the use of a bilingual church; but we have against this the lack of decisive evidence within the particular Psalms, and sometimes there is ambiguity which arises from the evidence being given on both sides. If we had to decide at this point we should be tempted to say that the Wisdom Odes were composed in Greek and the rest in Syriac; but the conclusion would be too rapid.

There remains, then, the internal evidence of Syriacism. This is abundant, but it requires sifting. For example, it is not a peculiar Syriacism to say that 'all who overcome shall be written (booked) in her book', for how else could one express it in Syriac?

There are, moreover, cases of supposed Syriacism like the 'midwife' passage in Ode xix, where the evidence can be countered as we have shown, so that it is not possible to leave the Syriac label any longer on the text without an attached mark of caution.

There are, however, very many Syriacisms and Aramaisms which we have tabulated, far beyond the natural accidents of a translator. Wellhausen made a distinction between 'biblisms' and 'Aramaisms', conceding the former and denying the latter. We may concede all the possible 'biblisms' like 'blessing he blessed me', and we have still a rich harvest of remaining Aramaisms. It is probable that these will be the deciding factor in the question, and will require us to admit that the greater part of the Odes (to say the least) are of Syriac origin (vide supra, pp. 97-104).

Amongst the Aramaisms those will be felt to be of the greatest weight which involve Syriac word-play, with various meanings for the same root, or for related roots. Upon such cases, where they can be clearly made out, and upon the cases of influence from the Targums and the methods of Targums, the decision as to origins will ultimately be made (vide supra, pp. 101-3, 164).

To give one or two more illustrations, the 35th Ode will exhibit even to the eye of a person that knows no Syriac, that the writer is using recurrent expressions, almost coincident in form. The words ܕܝܐ, ܕܝܠܐ, ܕܝܠܝܐ, and ܕܝܠܝܐ stand up from the page. The Syriac scholar knows that three different roots are being played with, conveying the ideas of 'dew', 'shelter', and 'boyhood'. These ideas are woven together in the Ode, and the assonance, which even the eye can detect, is the key to the Ode. This cannot possibly be Greek work: it may be bad philology, but it is Syriac philology. And when we have proved this 35th Ode to be a Syriac product, a very little study will show that the result carries with it a similar conclusion for other Odes, such as the 36th Ode where the same 'cloud of dew' is detected, and can be traced to an ultimate origin in the Syriac of Isaiah and the Targum.

Equally decisive is the study of Targum quotations and the use of Targum methods of interpretation. The Odes are full of both. The Odist is always avoiding anthropomorphism in the Targumist's manner. He is constantly saying 'Before the Lord' instead of 'the Lord', or quoting the 'Name of the Lord', or the 'Word of the Lord', in the place of 'the Lord'. As soon as we take this key into our hands any number of textual locks fly open. We see at once why, in Ode xxix. 9, 'War is made by the Word', and 'Victory taken by the Word', for the writer is making metre out of the Targum on the 110th Psalm.

We see why in Ode xxii 'the name of the Lord' was surrounding the Odist; it is a Targumist periphrasis for 'the Lord is round about his people' (Ps. cxxv. 2). And it is not merely an oral Targum, or the method of an oral Meturgeman that is employed; sometimes we catch the Odist poring over a written Targum and picking up stray expressions from it. See the notes on Ode xxxv, where it is shown that the motive for the expression 'More than shelter was He to me' is caught up from the Targum.

No doubt these discoveries of the influence of the Targum and its closely related Peshiṭta text upon the Odes are of ultimate importance for the history of the Targum itself; but the immediate result is that they carry the Odes back into the time when the Church was still adjacent to the Synagogue, and they show conclusively the Aramaic origin of the Odes in which the influence of Targum can be traced.

We may make a reserve, if we please, for the possible bilingualism of the author; he may have known some Greek, he must have known a great deal of Aramaic; he may have known the Septuagint; he must have known the Hebrew, the Peshiṭta, and the Targum. With the reserve in question which comes under the formula exceptis excipendis, we affirm the Aramaic origin of the Odes. The result has been reached after a close and careful inquiry, with the scales vibrating alternately to this side and that; in our judgement they have now inclined to one side.

It must be clear to any who has followed carefully the argument up to the present point, that the introduction of the idea of the Targum is the decisive factor in the solution of the problem before us. If we can show either the methods of a Meturgeman or the actual use of a Targum, the problem is solved so far as relates to the Odes in which such methods and influences are at work.

It would take us too long to discourse at length on the mentality of the Aramaic interpreter of the Scripture to a congregation; and in the collection of readings that may be fairly described as Targum we have a wide area to select from. We know that we must not ascribe personality to God in terms borrowed from human life, and that we must say 'Word of God' instead of 'God'. We must not say that 'God sees' or that 'God knows', much less that He 'walks' or 'smells sweet savours'. If we want to say that 'He knows', let us say 'it is revealed and known before Him', and generally let the periphrase 'done before Him' be used for everything that He does. This consideration alone should have betrayed the secret to us; for the Odist uses the very expression 'it was revealed' which is current all over the Targums (ܠܗ ܐܪܝܬܐ). And the abnormal recurrence of ܡܡܐ (before a person) should have been recognized.

As for expressions to be avoided, a good plan will be to read through a section of the Pentateuch or Prophets or Psalms, and see what changes are chronic. For example, God is never called 'a rock' in the Targums, but he may be called 'the strong one'. In the Psalms where the appellation of 'rock' occurs, this substitution is chronic; and we shall see why the Odist who is working so constantly on the Psalter never uses the term. In one case there is a reference to 'foundations laid upon God's rock', but that is not the same thing. What was the ultimate reason for the avoidance of the term we are not at present in a position to determine.

The recurrence in the Odes of the expression 'His Word' is not to be taken as necessarily Targumic; but sometimes it must be so taken, for it will be seen to be a substitute for, or an evasion of, the utterance of the Divine Name. When we say that 'His Word' is with us in all our way', or that the Lord has 'bridged the rivers by His Word', or 'my voice fell to him and his Word came to me', we are dealing with what may fairly be labelled as Targum.

This relates, however, to the method of the Meturgeman, which appears to be also, if occasionally, the method of the Odist. Method is one thing: actual employment of existing Targums is another. It is here that our investigation becomes decisive, for we shall find over and over again that we have to refer an expression in the Odes to the Targum or to the closely related Peshîṭta, if we are to understand it rightly. The proof of this statement must be sought in the foot-notes to the separate Odes. We believe it will be accepted as final and conclusive.

This does not mean that the Odist is always making or quoting Targum. Sometimes he speaks as a Meturgeman would have been slow to do, of God's 'right hand', or the 'Lord's hand': and we doubt if any Meturgeman would have invented or tolerated the 'breasts of God'. The use of such expressions does not invalidate the statement that the Odist can be shown to have, in certain places, Targumized.

We must observe also that the value of this discovery is two-fold: first of all, it is of value with regard to the Targum itself, whose antiquity and written transmission is established more clearly than ever; second, it makes the Odes themselves into a commentary upon the older Scriptures as well as a book of songs. Such a commentary is of the highest value; just as the Targum on the Scripture is regarded by the interpreter of Scripture as an 'inestimable treasure', so the Odes, in so far as they reflect the Targum, acquire additional worth and value, and constitute a precious link between the Judaism of Palestine in the first century of our era and the Christianity of the same period.

Enough has been said to accentuate the importance of the conclusions to which we have been led in a somewhat extended and often perplexing investigation.

A very judicious summary of the arguments for and against a Greek original for the Odes will be found in Tondelli's excellent edition to which we have already made reference. Tondelli, indeed, concludes for a Greek original, but that is not altogether surprising: many of the considerations which we have adduced for an opposite view are new, and our own first judgement was the same as that of Tondelli and the majority of the critics. Bernard, however, expressed his belief definitely in a Syriac original, though he was unable to work the thesis out; Abbott made a strong fight (against Connolly and others) for a Semitic base; and Grimme went so far as to turn the Odes back into classical Hebrew, and even declared that they showed traces of Acrostic arrangement according to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet! Bruston brought forward cases of Syriac assonance, and of Syriac corruption, but as Tondelli rightly observes, his instances were not very strong. For example, it was surely incorrect to suppose that in the opening verse of Ode xxxiv there was an intentional assonance between ܡܡܡܐ (hard) and ܡܡܡܐ (simple): the Oriental does not confuse the sounds in question: to him, at all events, they are not assonant.

On the other hand, many of the arguments for a Greek original have also disappeared in the course of the investigation. It was quite natural to suppose that when the Odist uses the expression ܡܡܡܐ ܡܡܡܐ, he was translating literally from the Greek μεγαλοπρέπεια in the two instances where the expression occurs. Only it had been overlooked that the Syriac Psalter had already made the expression common property, so that there was no need to think of translation at all. The same thing is true of a number of primitive forms like ܡܡܡܐ ܡܡܡܐ = ἄφθαρτος or ܡܡܡܐ ܡܡܡܐ = ἀφθόνως; for it can be shown that such forms were at home in the Syriac language and literature from the earliest times; Ephrem, for example, uses them freely, and without any possible suspicion of translation. There is really no reason why the writer of the Odes, if a Syrian, should not have employed the transliteration of πρόσωπον, κίνδυνος, or γένος. These are superficial Grecisms, and not necessarily evidences of an immediate derivation from Greek. Frankenberg, by retranslating the Odes into Greek, was able to take the argument somewhat deeper; the suggestion in Ode xxx that the couplet:

‘It flows forth from the mouth of the Lord,
And from the heart of the Lord is its Name,’

had been affected by a misreading of νᾶμα (flow) for ὄνομα (name) was certainly striking, and restored parallelism to the members of the couplet. It is, however, possible that there may be a Syriac explanation of the passage. See our note on the verse.

Another suggestive instance is in the 13th Ode, where Frankenberg and Preuschen would have us restore ‘Open your eyes and see yourselves in Him’;

thus reading αὐτοὺς (= ἐαυτοὺς) instead of αὐτοῦς, and crediting the translation with a wrong reference of αὐτοῦς to the eyes instead of the observers. The suggested modification of an assumed underlying Greek text was very attractive. We should also note that the expression in Ode vii. 17 (‘harp of many voices’) may very well be the equivalent of a Greek κιθάρα πολύφωνος.

Somewhat different is Nestle’s suggestion that in Ode vii. 12 we should read οὐσία for the implied θυσία, a very easy change in Greek uncial writing. This interpretation would give us an original sentence to the effect, ‘He granted me that I should ask of Him and partake of His nature’, presumably in the attainment of immortality as a gift of God. We might compare 2 Peter i. 4, where believers are said to become ‘partakers of the Divine Nature’, but here the word is φύσις and not οὐσία. There is, however, a doubt whether any change is necessary: we have suggested in the note that the Syriac is intelligible as it stands, and that it means:

‘That I should ask of Him
And receive of His largesse.’

These, then, are some of the best cases for Grecism.

Connolly, who spent a good deal of time and labour in vindicating the priority of the Greek text, made an interesting point out of the words:

‘I believed, therefore I was at rest.’¹

The argument is that the Odist, after his usual manner, is imitating a canonical Psalm with slight variations in the terms of speech or the language used. In this case it will be Psalm cxvi. 10.

¹ Is there any connexion with Heb. iv. 4: ‘We who have believed do enter into rest’?

'I believed, therefore have I spoken', and we are entitled to affirm that the word 'therefore' is taken from the Psalter. It answers, in fact, to the διό of the Septuagint, which will be found reflected in the Pauline correspondence at 2 Corinthians iv. 13. This διό is not represented in the Syriac text of the Psalms, which simply says, 'I believed and I spake'. Connolly, not unnaturally, concluded that it was not the Syriac Psalter that underlay the language of the Ode. A past tense, too, seemed to be postulated for the model which has been imitated by the expression 'therefore I was at rest'; and this is not the Hebrew of the Psalm which runs:

'I believe, therefore I will speak.'

Thus there was a slight balance in favour of the Septuagint. We note, however, that the Targum has also the desiderated 'therefore', so that its omission by the Peshitta is not quite decisive of the question. As it stands, the balance of the argument is on Connolly's side, unless it should be overborne by the general considerations contained in the previous pages of the present work.

We may now relegate the discussion of other and minor points of difference between the Greek hypothesis and the opposing Syriac to the notes attached to the translation of the individual Odes. We have been anxious not to omit anything of importance in the extant criticisms of the Odes, but it is permissible to pass over in silence some things which do not require a serious refutation or a sustained discussion.

CHAPTER XV

THE COPTIC (SAHIDIC) VERSION.

WE have already explained that five of the Odes of Solomon are found embedded in that curious Gnostic book which goes under the name of Pistis Sophia. In this book a number of the Psalms of David and the afore-mentioned five Odes of Solomon are the basis of the penitences which the unfortunate Sophia addresses to the Saviour, disguised in each case by the substitution of Gnostic language for that of the selected Psalm or Ode. Then the Psalm having been identified by some one of the Disciples, male or female, we have the actual text of that Psalm or Ode, after which in a number of cases the Gnostic Targum and the Biblical text are gone over, sentence by sentence, for the purpose of comparison, so that we have the Ode or Psalm in two forms, and sometimes in what looks like a third.

Evidently we must try and find out what light the text of the Pistis Sophia and the methods of its author can throw on the origin of the Odes.

The first thing that comes to light in reading the Pistis Sophia is that its Old Testament is the Septuagint, and not the Hebrew nor the Peshitta Syriac, which is based for the most part on the Hebrew.

For instance, the first passage of Scripture discussed is Isaiah xiv. 1, 3, 12, which is explained as follows by the Virgin Mary (in quoting we use the translation of Schwartze-Petermann):

‘Locuta est hoc modo vis. quae in Esaia προφήτῃ et protulit eum in παραβολῇ πνευματικῇ, tempore quo dixit de ὁράσει Aegypti, id est:

‘Ubi, igitur, Aegypte, ubi sunt tui divinatores, et ordinatores horae: et hi, qui vocant e terra et hi, qui vocant ex sese. Monstranto tibi facinora, quae perpetrabit Dominus Sabaoth.’

The heading, ὁρασις Αἰγύπτου, and the equivalents for ἐκ τῆς γῆς φωνούντας and ἐγγαστριμύθους, betray the use of the Septuagint, or of an Egyptian translation based upon the Septuagint.¹

In this passage it will be found on examination that it is Jesus who is speaking Gnostically and is interpreted by Mary. A similar case will be found when we come to the sixth Ode of Solomon, where again it is Jesus who has to be interpreted and not the repentant Sophia. So it was not absolutely true that the book was made out of the penitences of Sophia, which some have imagined, apparently without sufficient reason, to be incorporated from without in the texture of the Pistis Sophia.

¹ The chapter quoted must have been often in use in the propagation of the Christian religion in Egypt, since it predicts the return of Egypt from idolatry to monotheism and the service of Jahweh.

Returning to the text of the Psalms in the Pistis Sophia we may make comparison with the Sahidic Psalter recently published by Dr. Budge from a papyrus of the sixth century, and we shall find in the greater part of the Psalms discussed, that the coincidence is so close (often there will hardly be a sensible variation in the texts) as to leave no doubt that the Sahidic Psalter was extant when the Pistis Sophia was written, and that it was employed by the author. Now this Sahidic Psalter is simply the Septuagint done out of Greek into Sahidic. Unless, then, the Pistis Sophia has substituted the Sahidic version for some other version which lay before the author, of which he has avoided the trouble of making a fresh translation, there is a strong presumption that the Pistis Sophia is a genuine Coptic book, and not a rendering of some other work (Greek or Syriac) into Coptic. Let us see if we can confirm this by a closer examination.

Towards the end of the book the problem is raised as to what is to be done with persons who are baptised but do not bring forth fruits meet for repentance. The story which deals with the problem is as follows :

‘After these things Jesus, seeing a woman who came to repent, baptised her three times, though she had not done anything worthy of baptism. And the Saviour, wishing to try Peter, in order to see whether he was merciful and remitted sins, as He had commanded him, said to Peter: “Lo! these three times I have baptised this soul, and in these three times she has done nothing worthy of the Mystery of Light. Why then does she also render the body useless? Now, therefore, Peter, perform the Mystery of Light, which cuts off souls from the Inheritance of Light; perform that mystery, so as to cut off this woman from the Inheritance of Light.” When the Saviour, therefore, had said these things, he tried Peter, to see whether he was merciful and forgiving. When, therefore, the Saviour had said these things, Peter said, "My lord, leave her alone this time also, that I may give her the sublime mysteries. And if she turns out useful, you allow her to inherit the Kingdom of Light." When Peter had said these words, the Saviour recognized that Peter was merciful like Himself and forgiving.'

Evidently we have been treated to a Gnostic Targum upon the parable of the barren fig-tree in Luke xiii. The explanation promptly follows, for the writer continues:

'When, therefore, all these things had taken place, the Saviour said to his disciples, "Have ye understood all these things and the pattern of this woman?" Mary answered and said, "My lord, I understand that mystery of the words which were done to this woman; concerning the things, then, that were done to her, thou didst speak to us aforetime in a parable, saying: 'A certain man had a fig-tree, in his vineyard. And he came seeking its fruit, and found nothing in it. He said to the gardener: Lo! three years do I come seeking fruit in this fig-tree and I find nothing in it. Cut it down, therefore, why does it also cumber the ground? But he answered and said to him: My Lord, let it alone this year also until I shall dig about it and give it dung; and if it produce fruit next year, you leave it alone; but if you do not find anything you cut it down.' Behold, my lord, this is the solution of the matter." The Saviour answered and said to Mary: "Very good, spiritual woman, that is exactly the case."

Here, then, we have a parable of the New Testament treated in precisely the same way as the Psalms and Odes. We have a passage of the Sahidic New Testament before us, and a Gnostic Targum, apparently, on the same. When we look closely at the Sahidic text we see a number of readings peculiar to that version. For instance, the lacuna in the unfinished Greek sentence in verse 9:

καὶν μὲν ποιήσῃ καρπὸν εἰς τὸ μέλλον—is filled up by the explanatory word αἰκμας (= sinis cam): the word creeps back into the Greek in the bilingual (Graeco-Sahidic) codex T in the form ἀφήσεις.

Now let us look back at the Gnostic Targum on the passage and we find the same Sahidic gloss in the sentence :

‘ Et si fuerit utilis, sinis cam κληρονομεῖν regnum lucis.’

From which it appears that the Targumist was also operating on a Sahidic text. So then, for our purposes, it is clear that the Pistis Sophia is a Sahidic book, and the writer is using his Sahidic Bible, from which he took, as need required, Psalms, Odes of Solomon, Prophecies of Isaiah, Gospels, &c. The Old Testament upon which he operated was itself based upon the Greek text of the LXX, and the Odes of Solomon were, for the author of the Pistis Sophia, a translation of the Greek, fragments of which lay before him in the untranslated Greek words that adorn his text. Now when we examine side by side the Coptic text of a Psalm of David, as it occurs in the penitences of Sophia, with the same Psalm as it occurs in the Sahidic Psalter of Dr. Budge, we see no difference, or hardly any difference, in the transferred Greek words, any more than we do in the Psalms generally. Occasionally one or other of the contrasted texts may replace a Greek word by its Coptic equivalent : for instance, in Psalm xxxiv (xxxv). 3 :

ⲁⲕⲓⲥ ⲡⲓⲧⲁⲩⲩⲭⲏ ⲛⲉ ⲁⲡⲟⲕ ⲡⲉⲡⲟⲩⲱⲧⲏⲣ

the Pistis Sophia has

. ⲡⲉⲡⲟⲩⲱⲧⲁⲓ (= σωτηρία).

In Psalm xxx (xxxi). 12 :

ⲁⲓⲣ ⲑⲉ ⲡⲟⲩⲛⲁⲁⲩ ⲉⲁⲩⲱⲣⲡⲓ :

the Pistis Sophia has

. ⲡⲟⲩⲥⲕⲉⲩⲟⲥ :

In the former case the Psalter has the original Greek word (σωτήρ standing for σωτηρία) ; in the latter the Pistis Sophia has preserved the original σκεῦος of the Septuagint. In neither case has the Coptic text been Grecized by the author of the Pistis Sophia.

The importance of these observations lies in their application to the Odes that are mixed with the Psalms in the Pistis Sophia.

In every case where a Greek word, or a fragment of a Greek word, is found in the text of the Odes in the Pistis Sophia, we are entitled, unless some strong reason can be shown to the contrary, to read back that Greek word into the lost Greek of the Odes. We have already seen the importance of this in the Sapiential word ἀπόρροια, which is thus vindicated for the Ode in which it occurs; and we may be sure that such a highly specialized and profoundly theological word never came into our Coptic text except from the Greek. A Syriac intermediary or a Hebrew antecedent is not to be thought of.

The next thing that we may be reasonably sure of is that the primary authority for the text of the Ode is not the Gnostic Targum; it must be clearly shown that the text which underlies the Targum differs from that which is in the Bible of the composer of the Pistis Sophia, before the Targum comes into evidence at all; and even when it differs the Biblical text has a prejudice in its favour; it must not be disturbed except for very strong reasons.

We may, however, observe that occasionally the Biblical text in the Pistis Sophia shows internal traces of variation or of correction. Here is an instance:

In Psalm lxviii (lxix). 2, where the text of the LXX is ἐνεπάγην εἰς ἰλὸν βυθοῦ,

the Sahidic has, according to Dr. Budge's edition, ⲁⲓⲩⲱⲗⲉ ⲉⲩⲗⲟⲓⲣⲉ ⲙⲡⲓⲟⲩⲏ:

while the Pistis Sophia has ⲁⲓⲩⲱⲗⲉ ⲏ ⲁⲓⲩⲱⲗⲉ ⲉⲩⲗⲟⲓⲣⲉ ⲙⲡⲓⲟⲩⲏ:

(‘infixus sum aut immersus in coenum abyssi’).

Here we have an alternative rendering for ἐνεπάγην which has crept into the text. Lower down in the Psalms, where the word recurs (ἵνα μὴ ἐνπαγῶ), there is no variation suggested. The first rendering is clearly ⲁⲓⲩⲱⲗⲉ: the other is a reviser's correction. The advantage we gain from such corrections is, that we can see that the Sahidic Psalter has a history of its own, even before the time when we find it made use of in the Pistis Sophia. We must also be careful to see that we do not justify casual omissions of single words, half verses, &c., with which any manuscript is likely to be affected.

Let us now look a little more closely into the relations one to another of the forms in which the Pistis Sophia presents to us any Ode of Solomon which it quotes or works over. In the most extended case we have three forms: (i) the Ode itself; (ii) the Gnostic Targum on the Ode; (iii) the Commentary upon the Ode, which last is made by taking sentences, one after another, from the Ode and equating them with their proper Targum. Strictly speaking, the third form ought to add nothing to the other two; for if the sentences are properly transcribed and accurately paralleled, no new matter is introduced. But we shall find cases in which this is not confirmed. If we call the Coptic text C, the Targum T, and the Commentary com, then com ought to break up into two parts, com 1 and com 2, of which com 1 should equal C and com 2 should equal T. We must examine carefully into cases where this is not found to be verified.

Suppose we take a specimen passage. In the sixth Ode we find the following sequence (we quote the Latin rendering of Schwartz-Petermann for convenience, without trying to reform it in every particular):

verse 15 comprehenderunt animas ($\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$) eiicientes halitum, ne morentur.

verse 16 restituerunt membra ($\mu\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\eta$) quae ceciderunt.

For this the Targum is:

vivificarunt $\sigma\hat{\omega}\mu\alpha$ eius $\vartheta\lambda\eta\varsigma$, in qua nullum lumen, haec quae peritura est aut haec quae perit, et constituerunt eius vires omnes, quae erant solvendae.

And the Commentary is:

verse 15, com 1 vivificarunt $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$, eiicientes halitum, ut ne morentur.

com 2 vivificarunt σῶμα eius ὕλης, a quo lumina sua abstulerunt prius, hoc, quod erat perituum.

verse 16, com 1 constituerunt μέλη, quae collapsa sunt, aut ut ne collaberentur.

com 2 quum intulissent in eam eius lumina, constituere (i. e. erexere) eius vires omnes, quae erant dissolvendae.

Here we have three peculiarities to explain: (i) the substitution of vivificarunt for comprehenderunt in com 1; (ii) the double rendering in the Targum which is not exhibited by com 2; (iii) the double rendering in com 1, which does not appear in C.

That comprehenderunt is right may be seen from its correspondence with the Syriac: the eye of the Commentator has wandered to the Targum which he was comparing with the text, so as to read vivificarunt. The double rendering in the Targum, which wavers between a future participle and a present tense, appears in the Coptic in the form:

ταῖ ε πεσπατακο πε

ἢ ταῖ ε ψαστακο

Here we may recognize a variant translation of the Greek, just as we did in a previous case: we conjecture that the difficulty arose in translating the Greek text:

ψυχὰς αἵτινες ἐμελλον ἀποθνήσκειν which would answer very nearly to the Syriac:

ܡܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܡܪܝܡ

The alternative reading probably found its way in from the margin of the text of the Odes.

The other double translation is similar: the text of the Odes has:

αγαθο ἢ ῥεν μελος ερατογ ε αγρε to which the Commentary adds:

ἢ γε ἢ πεγρε

We need not assume any variation in the underlying Greek, it was probably :

ἀνώρθωσαν τὰ μέλη τὰ παραλελυμένα, very nearly as in Isaiah xxxv. 3.

If we make an allowance for a few cases in which the reading of the Targum may be nearer to the Syriac than the reading of the Coptic Ode, we do not need to make any detachment of the Targum from the Coptic text which accompanies it, so as to assume that the Gnostic parts of the Pistis Sophia belong to an independent tradition which has been re-incorporated with the Odes by the author of the Pistis. We have already pointed out that the same method of Gnosticising a Scripture text prevails throughout the book, and is applied both to Old and New Testaments. Any thoughts of separating out the Penitences of Sophia must be abandoned.

Mr. Worrell has attempted, in the Journal of Theological Studies for October 1911, to prove that 'the Syriac through its ancestor was influenced by those very Gnostic Hymns which are now in the Pistis Sophia, and that these were at an early date in circulation apart from that book, and wholly independent of it, forming a collection of Gnostic Hymns parallel to the orthodox Odes from which they were derived'. We have not been convinced by his reasoning, which is incompatible with what we believe to be the right view of the antiquity of the Syriac text; nor do we think with him that 'for several reasons it is likely that the Pistis Sophia was composed in Greek and translated into Coptic as a whole'. It is possible that there may be sections (perhaps of Valentinian origin) to which this supposition of Greek origin will apply, but we do not think it is true of the Penitences of Sophia, nor of the Pistis Sophia as a whole. Special cases of the kind to which Mr. Worrell alludes, and upon which he builds his arguments, will be found discussed in our notes as they arise.

The question of the relations between the Coptic and Syriac Odes would have to be considered from quite another point of view if it could be maintained that the Syriac Odes were Nitrian in origin. Tondelli, in his excellent book Le Odi di Salomone, has tried to prove this,¹ first, by affirming, with Burkitt, that the MSS. of the Odes are Monophysite in origin; second, by a detailed proof of the close connexion between Syrian and Egyptian monachism; and third, by laying stress on the fact that our oldest MS. comes from Nitria, and that the Odes were certainly at home in Egypt at a very early period. But he sees clearly the weakness of the position, and admits that the Nitrian origin of the Syriac text would have to be abandoned if the dependence of Ephrem upon the Odes, as maintained by Harris and Wensinck, were conceded.²

We have given further proofs, not only of the dependence of Ephrem on the Syriac Odes, but, probably, also of Bardaisan. So that it is not necessary to follow the Nitrian hypothesis any further. The Odes were extant in Greek and in Syriac before the Nitrian desert was thought of as a paradise for monks, a home alike for learning and religion.

There is one direction in which the foregoing reasoning may appear to be invalidated. We tested our Sahidic Psalms where they occurred in the Pistis Sophia by comparing them with Dr. Budge's Psalter, and found the agreement to be phenomenally close, except for five Psalms which occur on pp. 86-110 of the Pistis. Rahlfs had compared the Psalms with a Berlin MS. of the Sahidic Psalter, and had made the same statement.³

The question arises as to how we are to explain the variation of the text of these five Psalms, viz. Psalms xxx (xxxi), xxxiv (xxxv), li (lii), cviii (cix), cxix (cxx). Do they constitute with their Gnostic counterparts a separate document which has been incorporated with the Pistis Sophia? Or are they a section of the Pistis Sophia which has escaped revision or been unequally revised, by comparison with the Sahidic Psalter? Let us first of all make the matter clearer to our minds by actually comparing the text of the shortest Psalm of the group with the Sahidic Psalter, Psalm cxix (cxx). There are certainly variants in the translation, e.g. in verse 4 the Pistis has ⲙⲟⲗⲥ where the Psalter has ⲧⲏⲙ ; and in verse 7 the Psalter has ⲙⲁⲓⲛⲉ ⲟⲩⲉⲛⲓ where the Pistis has ⲙⲁⲓⲛⲉ ⲛⲱⲙⲁⲓ , the meaning in each case being the same. The only variation in the underlying Greek text appears to be η for $\kappa\alpha\iota$ in verse 3, a variant which will be found in the apparatus of the LXX. The text of the Psalter keeps closer to the Greek in rendering $\rho\omicron\lambda\lambda\acute{\alpha}$ in verse 6 by $\epsilon\mu\alpha\tau\epsilon$, than the Pistis, while the Pistis has ⲉⲡ ⲟⲩ ⲙⲏⲛⲏⲥ ⲡⲓⲙⲁ (= in multis locis).

¹ Loc. cit., p. 38.

² 'L'origine nitriaca della versione sarebbe da negarsi qualora si dovesse riconoscere la dipendenza di S. Efrem dalle Odi, sostenuta dall' Harris, Expositor dicembre 1911, e Wensinck, Expositor febbraio 1912.'

³ Die Berliner Handschrift des sahidischen Psalters, 1901.

In both versions the last clause of verse 6 is placed after the first clause of verse 7, a very striking agreement. Even more remarkable is the fact that the very same Greek transliterations ($\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$, $\acute{\alpha}\nu\theta\rho\alpha\kappa\epsilon\varsigma$, $\epsilon\iota\rho\eta\nu\iota\kappa\acute{o}\varsigma$, $\epsilon\iota\rho\acute{\eta}\nu\eta$), occur in both versions. If this feature is consistently present throughout the group of Psalms, then the two translations are not independent. Suppose we test the matter further in Psalm xxx (xxxi).

The translations differ as before at certain points: e.g. in verse 5 the Greek $\pi\alpha\gamma\acute{\iota}\varsigma$ is rendered by ⲛⲁⲩ in the Pistis, and by ⲥⲟⲣⲥⲥ in the Psalter,¹ and there are a good many other differences, but apparently none that imply a different Greek text. The transliterations which are common are as follows: $\delta\iota\kappa\alpha\iota\omicron\sigma\acute{\upsilon}\nu\eta$, $\pi\nu\epsilon\upsilon\mu\alpha$, $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$, $\epsilon\upsilon\phi\rho\alpha\acute{\iota}\nu\epsilon\sigma\theta\alpha\iota$, $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ (ter), $\acute{\alpha}\nu\alpha\gamma\kappa\alpha\iota$, $\theta\lambda\acute{\iota}\beta\epsilon\iota\nu$, $\kappa\lambda\acute{\eta}\rho\omicron\iota$, $\acute{\alpha}\sigma\epsilon\beta\epsilon\acute{\iota}\varsigma$, $\delta\acute{\iota}\kappa\alpha\iota\omicron\varsigma$, $\acute{\alpha}\nu\omicron\mu\acute{\iota}\alpha$. The only variation in transliteration is that the Pistis has $\sigma\kappa\epsilon\upsilon\omicron\varsigma$ in verse 12, where the Psalter has a Sahidic equivalent ⲉⲡⲁⲁⲓⲛ . These coincidences again can hardly be accidental: they suggest that the translations are not to be considered as independent.

Of the two the Pistis appears to be the earlier in the retention of the Greek $\sigma\kappa\epsilon\upsilon\omicron\varsigma$, which has disappeared in the Psalter: the two versions are not, however, to be regarded as different. It appears, then, that a certain point in the Pistis,¹ perhaps in a particular quire or quires of the original composition, the writer (or was it his translator?) used a second copy of the Sahidic Psalter, of a somewhat earlier type, but not fundamentally different from the one which he normally employed. We see no reason for assuming discontinuity in the text of the Pistis, or interpolation. The argument of the book is continuous, and the text must not be broken up.

¹ The same variation occurs in Psalm xxxiv (xxxv). 7, 8, but in the latter part of verse 8 the Psalter and the Pistis reverse their translation.

It is not necessary for our present work to decide all the unsettled questions with regard to the Pistis Sophia. Schmidt is very decided that it and all the associated Gnostic books are translations from the Greek: he will not hear of a possible Sahidic original. We suggest that the matter needs some further elucidation. If the original is Greek, the Sahidic Bible has been used by the translator in presenting the Psalms and other parts of the Scripture that were in his text. In that case there should be no Sahidic variants in the Gnostic portions of the book. Are we quite sure of this? If such Sahidic variants should be detected, could the Greek original be any longer maintained?

We may be satisfied that the Odes of Solomon were extant both in Greek and Sahidic, and that the Sahidic (however it passed into the Pistis) is based on an original Greek.

It should be noticed, in leaving this part of the inquiry, that there is reason to hope that the Odes may some day turn up in a complete form in Sahidic. Another direction that seems hopeful for further discovery is the literature of the Ethiopic Church. The Abyssinians have a literary cult of Solomon, whom they regard as the father of their first king, through the much-wandered Queen of Sheba. For this reason they assiduously copied the book of Proverbs, the Canticles, and the Sapiential books. It is very likely that they paid attention to the Odes of Solomon also, though we have not yet found any trace of them in the Ethiopic literature.

¹ The change occurs in the MS. of the Pistis between ff. 79 and 99; this looks like quires 9-10 in a book written in quires of ten leaves.

CHAPTER XVI

THE ODES AND BAPTISM.

LET us now turn to the discussion of the interpretation made of the Odes of Solomon by Dr. Bernard, according to whom they are a series of baptismal hymns to be employed ritually in the initiation of catechumens in the period that precedes the Easter baptisms. They are not mystical in the sense of being pure spiritual aspirations, and expressions of personal experience; they are to be regarded as sacramental in intention, and almost, if not quite, liturgical in character. Even the fact of their being forty-two in number is significant; for they were to be sung de die in diem during the period that extends from the first Sunday in Lent to Easter Eve. As they are of a Palestinian, or at all events a West-Syrian origin, it is natural to explain their occurrence in the lectures of St. Cyril of Jerusalem to the candidates for baptism in the year A.D. 348. Bernard was able to show that the opening lecture of the series was marked strongly by reminiscence of the first Ode of Solomon; and on the hypothesis offered it was significant that the 42nd Ode, which deals with the release of the prisoners in Hades, should fall on the Saturday before Easter. Cyril, indeed, does not give a special lecture on the Descent into Hades (if indeed he has the article in his creed), and on Easter Eve he is occupied with the Resurrection of the Body, the Catholic Church, and the Life Everlasting.¹ He does discuss the subject in his fourteenth lecture, on the Resurrection of Christ, and here, as we have already pointed out, there is a distinct reminiscence of the 42nd Ode (vide supra, p. 55). The acquaintance of Cyril with the ¹ The Lectures were twenty-four in number, one of which is introductory, and the last five are post-baptismal, and delivered after Easter, so that chronological parallelism between the supposed Lenten Odes and the Lessons to Candidates must not be unduly pressed.

Odes must be conceded, as we have shown in a previous chapter; and it is an acquaintance with the same book of Odes that is known to ourselves.

Assuming, for a while, Dr. Bernard's position and using Cyril's lectures as a commentary on the Odes, we can readily find a number of striking parallels, over and above the crown which blossoms and bears perfect fruit in the first Ode and in the Introductory Lecture.

In the first lecture Baptism is spoken of as the 'Seal of Salvation, that wondrous seal at which devils tremble, and which angels recognize': this suggests that we identify the Seal in Ode iv, which is 'known to God's creation, and with which the elect archangels are clad', with the Seal of Baptism.

In the same lecture, believers are spoken of, as 'planted in the spiritual Paradise and receiving a new name'. The 'Paradise' references in the Odes are striking, especially Ode xi, 'Blessed, O Lord, are they who are planted in thy land and who have a place in thy Paradise!'

The injunction of the Odes to 'keep my mystery' (Ode viii. 10) is interpreted by Dr. Bernard as being equivalent to a Disciplina Arcani, according to which the initiates into mysteries, whether Christian or non-Christian, were solemnly forbidden to divulge the rites in which they took part. Dr. Bernard has been criticized for this interpretation, as if it were impossible that there could have been any secret about Christian Baptism, concerning which every one was well-informed, and which the early Christians, like Justin Martyr, were not slow to discourse upon. The criticism was not well-founded. It is certain that St. Cyril, at all events, in his opening lecture, put the initiates on their honour in the very language of the Odes. 'If', said he, 'one should ask what the teachers have said, "Tell nothing to a stranger; for we deliver to thee a mystery, even the hope of the life to come; keep the mystery for Him who pays thee".' If the language seem somewhat Eleusinian, and Cyril poses as a hierophant, that may very well be the attitude of the Christian teacher in his day; and on this point Dr. Bernard interprets correctly the mind of St. Cyril.

In the very same introductory lecture Cyril describes the benefits of Baptism in glowing language: it is the 'ransom of captives; the remission of offences; the death of sin; the regeneration of the soul; the garment of light; the holy seal indissoluble; the chariot (or perhaps ship) to Heaven; the delight of Paradise the procuring of the Kingdom; the gift of Sonship'. Special attention should be paid to those italicised terms, which are susceptible of illustration from the Odes.

These illustrations will suffice to show the way in which Cyril's lectures may be used to throw light on the Odes. As we have previously shown, his acquaintance with them must be conceded, and his use of them is demonstrated. He knows them well; they colour his language, and affect his doctrine; and he has employed them in a number of instances in the sacramental as well as the mystical sense.

In the next place, Dr. Bernard shows that there are a number of baptismal hymns extant, and attributed to Ephrem the Syrian, a contemporary of Cyril of Jerusalem, in which there are undoubted traces of the use of the Odes. They appear to have been composed for the festival of the Epiphany, which marks them off as a distinct tradition from the Easter baptisms at Jerusalem upon which Cyril is engaged. Bernard makes a special study of the thirteenth of these Hymns of the Epiphany, and deduces a number of parallels. The matter deserved a closer study.

We have shown in a previous chapter the dependence of Ephrem upon the Odes, and his use of the similitudes that are either borrowed from the Odes or may be brought into connexion with them; and this dependence was not deduced from the Epiphany Hymns: the first passage which we have identified was from Ephrem's Discourses on Paradise; in which we detected a quotation from the 11th Ode of Solomon. Again, among the Hymns on the Church and on Virginity we found Ephrem carefully re-editing and expanding the 13th Ode of Solomon (the 'mirror' Ode). We were able to establish that he knew the Ode in the form in which we have it:

'Behold, the Lord is our mirror'; and on comparison with the first of the Epiphany Hymns, we found the same Ode employed with this modification:

'The water! its nature is like a mirror.'

So it was clear that Ephrem had in writing the Baptismal Hymns for the Epiphany changed 'the Lord' ܠܕܝܢ into 'the water' ܡܝܐ. If then the Ode in question was originally baptismal, it was now become baptismal in a new and indisputable manner. There can be no doubt about Ephrem's use of the Odes, nor about his power of adapting them to the theme upon which he is working.

The Epiphany Hymns are charged with baptismal allusions, borrowed from the Scriptures and from the Odes of Solomon. The question is at once raised as to whether this exegesis is valid, either in the one case or the other. To take an example, Ephrem says in the seventh of the Epiphany Hymns that Moses appealed to the children of Lot for water (which was to be paid for) and a right of way. He was refused both. But under the New Covenant we have living water gratis and a path that leads to Eden. Obviously Ephrem has read 'water' to mean 'baptism' mystically, and 'the path' to mean the 'way to Paradise'. This is illicit in exegesis, but at least it shows that Ephrem believed that 'baptism' and 'living water' in this connexion were the same thing, and that baptism was the entrance to Paradise, just as Cyril believed it to be.¹ Are we justified in carrying this method of interpretation back to the time of the composition of the Odes? We can easily carry it forward and find later Syriac writers, like Moses Bar Kepha, who will expand and dilate upon the baptismal language of the Scriptures and of the Odes, but how far back did this manner of teaching prevail? It is full-fledged in Ephrem: was it nascent in the Odes? It is good for the end of the fourth century, did it prevail at the beginning of the second century or the first?

¹ Ephrem sometimes uses 'living water' for the grace of God: he says that Judas the traitor drank living water (Brev. Chald. ii, p. 99).

Here is an instance from the very same hymn which is more favourable to Dr. Bernard's view. Ephrem draws a baptismal illustration from the lapping of water by Gideon and his men, and infers that those who go down to the victorious waters will get the victor's crown. Shall we make a parallel with the ninth Ode of Solomon?

'Put on the crown

All those who have conquered shall be written in His book,
For their book is victory'

Evidently the Ode will not bear the strain of such interpretation. But Ephrem continues:

'Ye baptized take your torches,
Like the torches of the Gideonites:
Conquer the darkness with your torches:
The stillness with your Hosannas.'

This, too, is illicit exegesis, except that for our purposes it is valuable as showing that the newly baptized carried torches in the fourth century and shouted Hosannas: but this is the very thing which has been suggested as an illuminant for the obscurity of Ode xxv. 7:

'Thou didst set me a torch at my right hand and at my left.'

And as the same thing occurred in the mysteries of Isis, why may it not have occurred in an early Christian ritual? To which the answer probably is, What do you mean by early? How early? Do you mean the third century or the first? The time just before the Nicene Council, or the time just following the Council of Jerusalem? It must be admitted that Dr. Bernard has established a number of important coincidences between the Odes and the fourth-century rituals; but almost all his authorities are subsequent, not merely to Apostolic times, but to sub-apostolic writings and to the early apologists. Is not Dr. Bernard reading into the Odes a liturgical evolution of a later period? Or are we wrong in having carried the Odes so far back into primitive times?

Let us look at the matter from another point of view. Suppose we had discovered, instead of a Christian Psalter, some Psalms from the Hebrew Psalter, imagined to have been lost. Would it not have been just as easy to read baptismal allusions into them as into the Odes? The first Psalm, for instance, would make almost as good a parallel for Cyril, with its trees planted by rivers of water, and its leaves that never fade, as is furnished by the first Ode. And the second Psalm, with its adoptionist language ('Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee') actually carried over into the Western text of the Baptism of Jesus, would be almost irrefutable.

Now the supposition that we are making is not an idle one. The first Psalm was actually handled in this way, as being, according to Barnabas, predictive of the 'water and the Cross'. He differs from our odist in the emphasis which he lays upon the 'cross', and agrees with him in the stress laid upon the 'water'. The passage in Barnabas is very suggestive; it runs as follows:

'And again he saith in another prophet: And he that doeth these things shall be as the tree that is planted by the parting streams of waters, which shall yield his fruit at his proper season, and his leaf shall not fall off, and all things whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. Not so are the ungodly, not so, but are as the dust which the wind scattereth from the face of the earth. Therefore ungodly men shall not stand in judgement, neither sinners in the counsel of the righteous, and the way of the ungodly shall perish. Ye perceive how he pointed out the Cross and the water at the same time. For this is the meaning: Blessed are they that set their hope upon the Cross, and go down into the water; for He speaketh of the reward at His proper season; then, saith He, I will repay. But now, what saith He? His leaves shall not fall off. He meaneth by this that every word which shall come forth from your mouth in faith and love, shall be for the conversion and hope of many.'

This is a very instructive case of the way the ecclesiastical and allegorical mind finds what it looks for in the Scripture:

'quaerit sua dogmata quisque, invenit et pariter dogmata quisque sua.'

If Barnabas can do this on the ancient Psalter, why should not the like be done on the new Psalter, which we have seen to have been at an early date attached to the elder volume, of which, indeed, it is in part a reflexion? We conclude, then, that great caution is necessary before we infer that a book, which has been treated to a baptismal or liturgical exposition, is itself baptismal or liturgical. To complete the proof we shall need some much earlier evidence than Dr. Bernard has brought forward, or we shall have to reduce the evidence for the antiquity of the Odes.

Dr. Bernard, naturally, sees this quite clearly, and goes in search of the early baptismal rituals. With a correct instinct (for his whole work is full of just and felicitous intuitions) he takes the Liturgy of the Church of Antioch, so far as it has been restored from the writings of Severus the patriarch in the sixth century, and from the writings of Chrysostom. In this restored ritual Bernard sees ecclesiastical form and usage which go back to the second century, and he concludes (p. 64) that 'The Liturgy of Antioch is, without doubt, much older than the days of Chrysostom, and it may well have been in existence, in its main features, in the second century. It is even possible that the parallels which have been indicated between the phrases of the Prayer for the Catechumens, and the words of our Odist, show that the writer of the (eighth) Ode composed his poem with these phrases in his mind.'

We have no space to discuss the parallels to which Dr. Bernard refers, which do not seem conclusive: the point which we lay stress on is that, even if we take the Antioch Liturgy back to the second century, in the form which we can trace in the fourth century, or the sixth, we are still very far from the date to which the investigation in the present volume refers the composition of the Odes. Bernard makes the following judgement as to the time and place of production of the Odes (p. 42):

‘It is clear that the Odes are of Syrian, or Palestinian origin. The Baptismal allusions which abound are always to beliefs and practices current in the East; with Western ceremonial they have little affinity.’

We agree that the Odes have nothing to do with the Western Church and that they are Syrian or Palestinian in origin.

‘They can hardly’, said Bernard, ‘be later than A.D. 200, and may be some years earlier . . . It is not likely that the baptismal ritual was so fully organized as it appears to be in these Odes, before the days of Justin Martyr. I incline, then, to a date between 150 and 200 for their origin, and preferably in the latter half of that period.’ We note the admission with regard to the evolution of the baptismal ritual.

There is another direction in which we have found serious difficulty, as we have gone over the ground of this new edition, not without some attraction to Dr. Bernard’s position, nor without a sense of admiration at once for the learning which is involved in his material and the skill with which he employs it.

We find that, in a number of directions, the Odes have suffered from a want of adequate knowledge of the theology of the time in which they were composed. It is clear that they belong to a time when the Wisdom-Christology was passing into the Logos-Christology, and had not yet been practically effaced by it. We have shown that a number of the original Sapiential terms are still lying about in the Odes. The ‘Mirror’ of the 13th Ode is certainly Christ, and Christ as Wisdom. The situation is reflected for us in the Apocryphal Acts of John, where Jesus says:

‘I am a mirror to them that know me.’

It is the ‘unspotted mirror of the Father’ in Sap. Sol. vii. 26. For this reason alone we are forbidden to take the mirror, as Ephrem and Moses Bar Kepha do, in a baptismal sense, as if it were a water mirror, with the candidate for baptism standing before it like a new Narcissus, to see his old face passing into his new. The same thing is true of the ἀπόρροια or Efflux in Ode vi. Here again the editio princeps went wrong in its interpretation, following a previous lead of Ryle and James in their book on the Psalms of Solomon, in the suggestion that the Ode had to do with the river in Ezekiel. It was a natural conclusion, deduced from the growth of the ἀπόρροια or Efflux, from brook to river. The term belongs to Wisdom, and the Efflux is either the Holy Spirit, or, in an experimental sense, the knowledge of the Lord. In favour of the identification with the Sapiential language we may compare what is said in the opening verses, as to the improbability of resisting or standing up against the Lord, with what is said of His Wisdom in Sap. Solomon; and the growth of the stream is anticipated in the clause which tells us that the Lord has multiplied His knowledge.¹ This Knowledge is the Divine Wisdom, which is here identified with the Holy Spirit, for the writer says:

‘Our Spirits praise His Holy Spirit:
For there went forth an ἀπόρροια.’

Thus there is no reference at all to baptism: the mysticism of the writer is in a different region; and though he makes his irresistible Wisdom into a stream of water, the author of the Pistis Sophia knew that it was really an efflux of Light, a companion term to ἀπαύγασμα. This Ode must be removed from the argument; and the parallels which prove that the waters in Ezekiel are baptismal are no longer valid.

¹ That the Efflux ‘filled everything’ is due, as Tondelli points out, to the prophecy that

‘The earth shall be full of the Knowledge of the Lord
As the waters cover the sea.’—Isa. xi. 9.

or we may compare πνεῦμα Κυρίου πεπλήρωκε τὴν οἰκουμένην.—Sap. Sol. i. 7.

One other feature of the Odes deserves some attention. Dr. Bernard agrees with ourselves that in a number of Odes there is a change in the personality of the speakers between the Odist and Christ. It is difficult to mark the exact point at which the prophetic speech becomes 'thus saith the Lord'. A great deal depends on this determination in Dr. Bernard's argument. For instance, in the 26th Ode, Bernard puts the heading

'A song of the baptized Christian.'

We have, on the other hand, come to the conclusion that the 'Luminary, the Son of God' in verse 3, is Christ Himself, and that the following stanza should be translated :

'I was the most glorified amongst the glorious ones,
And the greatest among the great ones.'

This being so, the being who is brought forth by the Spirit as Mother is Christ. Christ is the anointed of God, and is spoken of (a phrase preserved in the Koran) as one of the Divine Neighbours. The theology of the Ode is not quite settled into orthodox terms and distinctions, but it is not to be taken as deliberately unorthodox. If our view here is right and our translation correct, there is no reference to a baptized and illuminated Christian in the Ode. It becomes increasingly clear that the Odes are not dominated by a single theme, as Dr. Bernard's theory requires.¹ When the various subtractions are made from that theory, which the foregoing arguments require, it does not follow that there is nothing left of the nature of a baptismal allusion. The editio princeps and several of the first commentators may have overstated the matter in one direction, just as Dr. Bernard has done in another.

The 'crown', however, is gone, and the 'efflux' and the

¹ Tondelli, to whose excellent study of the Odes we have already referred, says of the theory of a single dominant interpretation (loc. cit., p. 120): 'Non vi potrà mai essere una interpretazione unica di cantici tanto variati.'

'torches', and the 'coat of skin': perhaps the 'seal' remains, but this 'seal' is also in the Psalter of Solomon, and appears to mean 'a mark of ownership' or 'talisman'.

On the whole, we must conclude that the Odes, taken en bloc, are not baptismal hymns, that they have nothing to do with the forty days of Lent, that they do not respond to the tests of a highly evolved ritual; and that such references to baptism as may remain are merely occasional and not structural.

CHAPTER XVII

HARNACK AND THE ODES.

WE come now to the explanation of the genesis and structure of the book of the Odes of Solomon, which was put forward by Harnack, and endorsed by Spitta, Diettrich, Grimme, and others, viz. that they are a collection of Jewish Odes, which have passed, as so many other Jewish books, into early Christian hands, and have been the subject of Christian interpolations and corrections. These interpolations Harnack essays to define, and in so doing lays himself at once open to the counter-criticism that what is interpolated is of the same fabric as what is original. The old cloth and the new patch are so exactly of the same material, that one naturally concludes that the coat was not really torn nor mended. In many cases, that is, our closer study has removed the apparent discontinuities in the sequence of the Odes.

According to Harnack, then, the Odes were originally composed by a Jewish mystic, somewhere in the period between 50 B.C. and A.D. 67, and were re-handled by a Christian mystic about the year A.D. 100. This is very nearly the date arrived at by ourselves for the completed volume. The limits of time for the assumed earlier Jewish mystic are defined, (i) by the fact that they are later than the Psalter of Solomon, with which we often find them associated; (ii) by the assumption that the Temple at Jerusalem is still supposed to be standing in the time of the first writer, as is inferred from the language of the fourth Ode, and is an object of his religious affection. On the former of these points there can hardly be a doubt ; but the question of the Odist's references to the Temple will require some further study before the obscurities that are attached to it can be said to have disappeared. We may have to admit that the Temple is gone.

Meanwhile it must be said over again that the hypothesis of Harnack has many antecedent objections. The hypothesis of a Christian, or Judæo-Christian composer, who betrays (at first sight at all events) few of the external signs of Christianity, because of the elevation of his personal experience above the levels of ritual practices and dogmatic definitions, is replaced by Harnack by the hypothesis of a Jewish composer who is as free from definite traces of Judaism as the assumed Christian writer is of the corresponding elements of Christianity. The man who, as far as his language goes, had no Eucharist is replaced by a man without a Passover. The man without a doctrine of Penitence is replaced by a man who has no doctrine of sacrifice and no Day of Atonement. The man who moves so lightly among the early Christian orders as not to refer to a bishop, while apologizing for his own priesthood, and apparently confounding deacons with evangelists, has to be replaced by a Jew who loves the Temple, but has not a word to say of the associated priesthood and ritual ! At first sight, as we say, this looks very unlikely, and it is made more so by the necessary deduction that the assumed non-ritualist, undogmatic, mystical Jew suffered interpolation at the hands of an equally non-ritualistic, undogmatic, and mystical Christian ! Probability is against the conjunction. The argument may be challenged for either of the two contrasted pictures ; for it has been argued that the Christian Odes are coloured by Christian cult, and it is certain that they are saturated by Christian theology, and this modifies one side of the contrasted mysticisms, at least to some extent ; while the hypothetical Jew, who occupies the other side, is still a creature of the air, for whom no historical or literary corroboration is yet forthcoming. And whatever may be the personalities dissected out of the authorship of the Odes, the crowning objection will probably be found in the internal unity of the Odes to any theory of interpolation.

Let us now come, for a few moments, to the Temple references.

In the fourth Ode the singer commences with a eulogy on the unchangeable and eternal Holy Place of the Most High, over which human hands have no power.

In the sixth Ode, the river of life (whether it be the Holy Spirit, or the Knowledge of God, or whatever else) comes to the Temple and apparently sweeps it away, and flows out to cover the face of the whole earth. On the first publication of the Odes it was naturally supposed that we had found a historical landmark. The Temple in the sixth Ode is certainly the Jewish temple, whatever happens to it, be the waters friendly or hostile. Assuming that the Temple in the fourth Ode was also the Temple of Solomon, it was argued by Harris that it was probably in recent ruin, and that attempts had been made to build it elsewhere or to find it elsewhere. Harnack, however, while agreeing as to the sympathetic attitude of the Odist, thought the Temple was still standing. To these views there has been a chorus of objection. It was maintained, and with much justice, that the Temple of the fourth Ode, which could not be replaced or displaced, was spiritual and not local, and that it stood either for the Christian believer or for the Christian Church; and if this objection were valid, then the supposed historical landmark had disappeared, at least as far as the fourth Ode is concerned.

If, however, the writer of the fourth Ode is looking away from the Jewish temple in the first verse of the Ode, he is certainly casting sidelong glances at it in the following stanzas. His reference to God's heart, as given to believers, is based upon God's promise to Solomon, at the Temple Dedication, that his 'eyes and his heart should be there continually' (2 Chron. vii. 17). And his statement that 'one hour of thy Faith is more precious than all days and years', is an evident adaptation of the language of the 84th Psalm ('a day in thy courts'), a Psalm whose motive of deep affection is expressed in the very first verse, 'How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts: my soul longeth, yea even fainteth for the courts of the Lord'. Clearly we are entitled to say that the Temple at Jerusalem is not out of the field of view of the Odist. May we not go further and say that it is an object of intense affection, not only for its own sake, but because of a disaster that has befallen it? For the Odist who begins with the theme of the spiritually unchangeable Sanctuary, comes in the closing verses to the question whether God may have gone back on His promises to His people, and ends his song with the statement that whatever happened was not only in the Divine foreknowledge, but also that the thing which happened had actually been done by God Himself. We translated the last sentence of the Ode in the sense that

'Thou, O Lord, hast done it all.'

In this point of view, the outward temple has gone: its removal was God's own doing. The Temple was, indeed, Solomon's, but it was Solomon's in the sense indicated by the Wisdom of Solomon (ix. 8):

'Thou didst bid me build a temple in thy Holy Mountain:

An imitation of the Holy Tabernacle,
Which thou didst prepare from the beginning.'

There is, then, no need to interpret the fourth Ode as anything but a Christian product; and it should have been composed at a later date than A.D. 70.

Turn now to the question of the supposed interpolations: here is Harnack's first list of Christian additions:

- iii. 7.
- vii. 3b-6, 12, 15.
- viii. 22-fin.
- ix. 3b.

- x. 4-fin.
- xvii. 10-fin.
- xix.
- xxiii. 18-fin.
- xxiv. 1.
- xxvii.
- xxix. 6, 7a.
- xxx. 3-fin.
- xxxvi. 3, 4.
- xxxix. 11.
- xli. 1-7, 11a, 11b-fin.
- xlii. 1-2 (3-11 partially) 12-fin.

Notice that the 28th Ode is not classed as Christian; we have shown that it is in great part made up out of the 22nd Psalm, and used, as the Christian Fathers generally use it, in an anti-Judaic and Messianic manner. Here is a whole Ode that has been carried off from its proper owner. Try another Ode. Harnack sees that Wisdom occupies an important place in the theology of the Odes (and so does Diettrich); but when Wisdom speaks or is spoken of in the terms of Proverbs viii. 22 ('the Lord possessed me' or 'the Lord created me'), the reference is almost certainly to Christ as the Wisdom of God: all such passages when spoken of a particular person are Christian. Thus in Ode vii, while making liberal excisions, Harnack has left standing the words

'He who created Wisdom',

and

'He who created me'.

The Christology of the sentences may be awkward, but it is real Christology. Or take Ode xxv, in which Harnack finds no Christian insertions; notice the suggestion (it hardly amounted to proof) that we have given elsewhere, that the name of Christ is actually played upon in the closing sentences:

'I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord,' &c.

And in the same way we might continue with other passages and other Odes, and we should end with a feeling of uncertainty, not with regard to the question whether there were any Christian interpolations in the body of the Jewish Odes, but whether we could find any Jewish elements at all in the body of a Christian Psalter. We are willing to reserve a small residual margin for actual Judaism and future examination. It is doubtful if it would be enough to make a historical antecedent out of for the book of Odes. In that sense, then, we put Harnack and Spitta and their colleagues on one side. The position is untenable.

A brilliant but unsuccessful attempt to find a middle ground between Harnack's view that the Odes were Jewish with Christian interpolations, and the view that they were Judaeo-Christian with some later additions, was made by the late Professor Menzies, who suggested that they might be 'Psalms of the Proselytes', i. e. of the Gentiles who were proselytes to Judaism. It is well known that all the great cities of the East had communities of God-Fearers, who had embraced Judaism in its more liberal forms of presentation; and such communities, often numbering amongst themselves persons of social distinction and good education, would easily give rise to literary developments, such as the Odes before us, in which there is a universalism which expresses itself in terms that are either those of a nascent Gentile Church outside Judaism, or an absorbed Gentile constituency within Judaism.

Professor Menzies thought that by an intermediate view that the Odes were the work of Jewish proselytes, it would be possible to explain the presence of Jewish traits in the Odes and the affirmed absence of Christian characteristics. At the same time the unity of the collection was emphasized and established.

It was a brief but suggestive statement of a theory which does not need to be refuted in detail. We do not think that any reader of the present volume is likely to conclude that there is an absence of Christian elements in the Odes, nor that the Christ who is referred to is simply the expectation of Judaism. There is too large a volume of Christology to be carried on the back of proselytes to Judaism.

CHAPTER XVIII

GNOSTICISM IN THE ODES.

AS it has been affirmed in several quarters, and particularly by Gunkel, that the Odes are a Gnostic product, and as Preuschen has put forward a more definite charge than that of Gnosticism, and promises to show that they are due to the arch-Gnostic Valentinus, it may be as well to devote a little space to the consideration of this theme. In one respect the course of the argument that sustains the hypothesis is not unlike that of Dr. Bernard: one searches for parallels to the Odes in Gnostic writers, just as Dr. Bernard searches for them in liturgies, and then the conclusion is drawn that the Odes have a Gnostic origin in the one case, or a liturgical ancestry in the other. It is not difficult to find a certain amount of coincidence between such Gnostic writers as are known to us and the Odes. The very fact that such stress is laid on the place of Knowledge by the Odists as a factor in redemption invites the parallel with Gnosticism, and distinct and personal allusions may be traced—or imagined.

Valentinus, for example, was not so far from the Kingdom of God, or from St. John as its exponent, that he could not claim a share in the Johannine parallels which the Odes afford; and if the third Ode of the series is found to contain a sentence which re-echoes the Johannine doctrine that 'we love, because He first loved us', Valentinus also taught that 'God the Father was all love, but love is not love where there is no object of love. So the Father begat two emanations, νοῦς and ἀλήθεια.' And the claims made on behalf of Valentinus may be reinforced by the fact that the Bardesanian school, amongst whom we have found traces of the Odes, is known to have been under his influence. We suspect, however, that just as in the baptismal passages, where such may be established, there is a tendency to make the first last and the last first. As far as our inquiry has gone, the Odes vindicate their antiquity against any Gnostic School of which we have clear knowledge. A good example is the Coat of Skin, which the Odist casts off when he becomes a believer. This shedding of the old Adam has a very distinct commentary supplied by the ritual and liturgies of baptism; but it also became a highly developed Gnostic product amongst Bardesanians and Manichees, as we know from Ephrem. Is it necessary to put a special label on the Odist, because he has supplied material to the Church ritual or the heretic speculations?

There is, in the Odes, what looks very like a Virgin of Light, such as might serve again for the speculative mind, in Edessa and farther East; and Ephrem takes his opportunity to rail at the lady: but she is orthodox enough in times when the Church was regarded either as a Virgin or as a Mother, or, perhaps, as both. And since she is really, as the poet Spenser says, 'Sapience, that sits in the bosom of the Deity', there is no need artificially to Gnosticize her.

If in any special cases we do find a good Gnostic parallel we must examine it carefully and see what it involves. The Gnostics have as good a right to use the Odes as they have to the rest of the Scriptures (Irenaeus will say they have none at all: then they have as little a right to the use of the Odes as to the rest of the Scriptures). Stölten's attempts to find such parallels are a great failure: even the Pistis Sophia is brought in to swell the tale, as if the Pistis were not itself quoting the Odes! There are, however, one or two cases where parallel is suggestive and might lead to a recognition of an actual acquaintance. For example, there is the case of Marcus the Gnostic. Irenaeus's bête noire, who harried the flock of Christ in Pothinus's day, and provoked the good man into iambic verse. He (Marcus) tells us that 'the dissolution of ignorance is the knowledge of the Father', which is very like a verse in the seventh Ode of Solomon (Ode vii. 21). If he quoted the Ode, we have one more early second-century authority for the existence of the collection, but no authority for making a Gnostic out of the Odist. The same is true if it is an independent parallel. It may be readily conceded that Knowledge and Love have more place in the Odes than Penitence and Confession; but that does not make them Gnostic products: at the worst they are only suggestive of possible and later developments.

We do not think there is any case, at present, for pressing the claims of the Gnostics to the authorship of the Odes. Valentinus himself is not early enough; and we do not think any one is going to claim these lovely songs of the Spirit for Cerdo, or Cerinthus, or Simon Magus.

In passing we may say that Dr. Conybeare's suggestion that the Odes are Montanist is also out of court, on the ground both of date and locality; we do not wish to imply that Montanism is a heresy: if the Montanists knew the Odes they would have found them congenial and sung them in good faith, perhaps in contrasted choirs, Priscilla leading on one side, and Maximilla on the other: but they can hardly have composed them.

ODES OF SOLOMON

ODE I

- 1 The Lord is upon my head like a crown ;
And I shall not be without Him.
- 2 The crown of truth was woven for me ;
And it caused thy branches to bud in me ;
- 3 For it is not like a withered crown that buddeth not :
- 4 But thou livest upon my head ;
And thou hast blossomed upon my head :
- 5 Thy fruits are full-grown and perfect ;
They are full of thy salvation.
(Hallelujah.)

Cf. Sap. Sol. and Acta 1
p. 220.

Ps. i. 3 ; cf.
v. 4.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is not found in the Syriac MS. which is imperfect at the beginning : it has been recovered from the Coptic text, where it is introduced in the following manner :

‘ Mary, the mother of Jesus, answered and said : My Lord, these are the words in which your Power of Light prophesied aforetime through Solomon in his nineteenth Ode, and said : ‘The Lord,’ &c.

This must, then, be one of the two missing Odes at the beginning of the collection ; and it is a natural suggestion that it was numbered as the nineteenth, because the collection of Psalms of Solomon, eighteen in number, preceded the Odes. This is, therefore, the missing first Ode.

We may call it, if we please, a Coronation Ode ; it represents some great experience in the spiritual life of the writer, who has been crowned or garlanded with God in the form of Truth. The same figure recurs in Ode v. 12 in very similar language :

‘He (the Lord) is as a garland upon my head,
And I shall not be moved:
Even if everything should be moved,
I stand firm.’

We have it also in Ode ix. 8, 9 :

‘A crown eternal is the Truth,
Blessed are they who put it on their heads.
There’s a battle to fight ere the crown be attained.’

Again, in Ode xvii. 1, 2 :

‘I was crowned by my God :
And my crown is living.
And I was justified by my Lord :
My salvation is incorruptible.’

Also in Ode xx. 7, 8 :

‘Put on the grace of the Lord without stint :
And come into His Paradise and make thee a garland from His tree,
And put it on thy head and be glad.’

It is reasonable to interpret all these passages in a similar way. Various lines of thought suggest themselves for the further elucidation of the crown : the first is that it is the same crown or wreath that is spoken of in the New Testament : here in two places we have an allusion to a lost saying of Jesus :

‘The Crown of Life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.’—James i. 12.

‘Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the Crown of Life.’—Apoc. ii. 10 ;

in both of which cases the crown is the victor’s reward after trial ; the victor being at the same time thought of as a lover. In the Epistle of James the matter is introduced by a reference to the man who endures trial (πειρασμόν), stands the test (δόκιμος γινόμενος), and accordingly receives the crown ; in the Apocalypse, the Church at Smyrna is warned of the impending trial ; the devil is going to cast some of them into prison, that they may be tested (πειρασθήτε) : so they must be faithful till death.

It is natural to interpret the crown in these cases as the Victor's Crown.

In 1 Peter v. 4, we have the 'unfading crown of glory' promised to the faithful pastors of the Church; the blessing is here particular and not general, as is indeed the case with the crowns or garlands of the faithful Smyrneans, but it may be regarded with the former instances as a crown or reward at the end of a faithful life or a prolonged struggle: in other words, the crown is prospective. The same thing is true in the Pastoral Epistles, where a man gets his crown by a properly fought conflict (he will not get it unless he fights fair and unless he wins through, 2 Tim. ii. 5), by finishing the course and by keeping the faith, in which case there is reserved for him the garland of righteousness (2 Tim. iv. 8). The New Testament doctrine of the Crown is, therefore, consistently prospective.

On the other hand, in the Odes, the experience is in the language and terms of the present (or even of the past) rather than the future. The crown appears to be the same as Peter's, one that does not fade away, and the same as in James and John, in that it is a living crown and a lover's crown; but the writer already has his amaranth on his head. It is the same crown of victory, but the Odist suggests that in some sense the battle is over: for instance, in the ninth Ode, to which we were referring just now, with the injunction to 'put on the crown in the true covenant of the Lord', we are told that it is the believer's by right:

10 'Righteousness hath taken it, and hath given it to you:

11 All those who have conquered shall be booked in his book.'

Here the crown is again a crown of righteousness, a reward of victory, apparently regarded as an attainment in the present life. In one case, indeed, the Odist appears to regard his crown retrospectively, as in the 17th Ode, with its living crown that is parallel to the divine justification: ('I was crowned by my God, &c.'). The difference, then, between the crown in the Odes and the crown in the New Testament is a difference of time and attitude: otherwise the language shows that the crown spoken of is the same.

The New Testament parallels, then, suggest that the crown is a Corona Militis, a wreath of victory, present or prospective. The question, however, arises whether there may not be other directions of explaining the symbolical language of the Odist, beside the military conception which prevails in the New Testament. Roughly speaking, there are four directions of coronation possible:

- (i) The Corona Militis already referred to.
- (ii) The garland of the person initiated into the Greek Mystery Religions.
- (iii) The garland of the newly married.
- (iv) The garland of the newly baptised.

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish whether a crown referred to should be classified under the first or second head. For instance, in the rites of Mithras, the worshipper, when he is introduced to the degree of miles has a crown offered to him, which he repels, saying in language not unlike that of the Odes, that 'Mithras is my Crown'.¹ Is that any other than a soldier's wreath? In the mysteries of Isis, as Tondelli points out,² the initiate is decorated with a garland of palm, and clad in a robe of heaven; he stands with a burning torch in his hand, and is honoured as an apotheosis of the Sun-god.³

The description, as we shall see, has remarkable parallels with the Christian initiation, and we can hardly avoid the conclusion that the neophytes of one religion have borrowed from the customs of the other: the Christian religion has been coloured from the Greek Mysteries. We must examine whether the references to the Crown in our Odes are due to an imitation of the Greek mysteries. Is it a real crown that the writer is speaking of, used as a symbol of spiritual truth and experience, or is it, as in the New Testament, a mere figure of speech?

The two other directions in which coronation may be looked for are the marriage and baptismal rites. There is much to suggest marriage symbolism in the Odes. Some persons have not unnaturally found the crown in the Canticles ascribed to King Solomon:⁴

'The crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals'—Cant. iii. 11.

¹ Cumont, Monuments, i. 318.

² Le Odi, p. 137.

³ Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen, p. 29.

⁴ So Batiffol in Revue Biblique for Jan. 1911, p. 36.

In that case, the speaker in the opening Ode (and wherever the crown is referred to), is Solomon himself or some one posing as Solomon: but this explanation is, at first sight, somewhat unnatural; moreover, some one may object that we do not even know for certain that the ascription of the Odes to Solomon is primitive. The crown, in the first Ode, if it is a nuptial crown, is the bride's crown. Any one who has taken part in a Greek or Oriental marriage ceremony, will know that an actual coronation is an essential part of it: for that reason, the hypothesis of the nuptial crown is not to be excluded. In the West Syrian rite the officiating priest says:

‘A crown is in thy hands, O Lord:
And it descends from heaven
On the head of the married pair.’

It cannot be denied that the language of the Odes is amatory. Take, for example, the third Ode; here Christ is the Beloved, the believer is the Lover; they have been joined together and their natures mingled (as was said in the editio princeps), like water mingled with wine. When that sentence was written, it had not been noticed that the illustration was one of those that are employed by the Sufis: and indeed, it would be easy to describe the whole of the third Ode as a Sufi product. It is high mystic. Compare the following rendering by Hastings of one of the Songs of Jalāl-ud-Dīn Rūmī:

‘With thy sweet soul this soul of mine
Hath mixed as water doth with wine.
Who can the Wine and Water part
Or me and thee when we combine?
Thou art become my greater self;
Small bands no more can me confine,
Thou hast my being taken on,
And shall not I now take on thine?’

Whatever Jalāl-ud-Dīn may have meant by his dangerously pantheistic language, the Odes of Solomon go a long way towards him. We may compare further Ode vii. 4:

‘He became like me that I might receive Him:
Like myself was He reckoned that I might put Him on.’

As we have said, this is genuine mysticism, the language of the Inward and Upward life. The Christianity involved is experimental and it is ecstatic. It is not impossible, then, that the reference to the Crown might be borrowed from nuptial rites, interpreted mystically.

The objection to this point of view is that it does not cover all the passages referred to, and that it appears to take us further from the New Testament than any of the alternative explanations.

Fortunately, we are able to detect a remarkable confirmation of this view, which almost settles the question of interpretation for us. We have shown that this first Ode is imitated in the hymn which Judas Thomas sings at the royal wedding-feast, where he definitely sets the espousals of the Church over against the nuptials that were proceeding in the palace. There can be no doubt as to the origin or interpretation of a hymn which begins: (Acts of Thomas, p. ٥٥),

‘My Church is the daughter of light,
On her head dwelleth the King:
Who feeds all His inhabitants below:
Truth is placed on her head.’

It is clear, then, that the Ode was understood to be an epithalamium in the earliest days of the Christian Church in Syria.

The Syriac hymn quotes also from another famous epithalamium, the 45th Psalm, in which the nuptials of Solomon are supposed to be described, e. g.

‘Her garments are like unto flowers:
The smell whereof is fragrant and pleasant;’

which is an imitation of ‘All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes and stacte’. We take it that he made his nuptial song out of existing epithalamia; we see that the crown is a bridal crown.

The fourth explanation is that of Diettrich and Bernard and others, who maintain that the reference is to the baptismal circlet, which is still in use in the East: indeed, according to Bernard, the whole of the Odes are Baptismal Hymns, and they are meant to cover the period of instruction of catechumens, who are preparing for the Easter Baptisms in the Early Church. We have said that these baptismal circlets are still in use: one of the editors of this volume has, in fact, baptized more than a hundred children in this way; and there is no doubt that it is a part of the ancient Syrian rule before the introduction of infant baptism, as well as among the Armenians, Copts, and Abyssinians. So the question is raised whether these baptismal customs can be referred to a sufficiently early date, or the time of the composition of the Odes to a sufficiently late date, to admit of an interpretation of the language of the Odes in terms of primitive Christian ritual.¹ The problems referred to have been discussed in the Introduction to this volume, and the arguments pro and con need not be repeated here. It seems clear that if any one of the garland-Odes is baptismal, the rest may properly be assigned to the same category: for in this regard, Odes i, v, ix, xvii, and xx belong together, and we find a common interpretation for their common language.

In Ode ix. 8, 9, the crown is taken from the 21st² Psalm, probably from the Greek Bible, as may be seen from a reference to our note at that point. The allusion is important for the question of the linguistic origin of the Odes, but it is also to be noted that it is the royal crown that is spoken of in the Psalm: ('The King shall rejoice in thy salvation, &c.'). Is this Psalm used baptismally? It is certainly a favourite with the Odist, who quotes it again (Ps. xxi. 11 = Ode v. 8) in the fifth Ode, where again we have reference to the crown in verse 12. This should naturally be taken as another loan from the same Psalm.

A remarkable series of parallels to this Ode are pointed out by Bernard in the Procatechism of Cyril of Jerusalem: e. g.

'Already ye (catechumens) are gathering the spiritual blossoms for the weaving of heavenly crowns, . . . for there have now appeared blossoms on the trees; may the fruit also be perfect.'

Here is one which looks in the same direction from the Hymns of Ephrem for the Epiphany Festival:

'Beautiful are your garments:
Splendid your crowns:
Which the First-Born has woven for you:
Crowns which do not wither
Have been set on your heads.'—(ed. Lamy, i. p. 111.)

Does not Ephrem here also take over the language of the first Ode and ¹ Diettrich has shown that the oldest Nestorian Baptismal Liturgies knew nothing of the crowns, which do not come into the written rituals before the seventh century. See Nest. Taufliturgie, pp. 49, 87.

² Ps. xxi. 3 (= xx. 3 in the Greek version).

not merely illustrate it: the reference to the 'weaving for you' a crown is very like the language of the Odist.

In that case Ephrem¹ has interpreted the language of the Ode baptismally, as he did with everything that he could lay his hands on in the Old Testament.

Two other points of interest come up in connexion with this first Ode. One is the question as to the origin of the expression about 'the full and perfect fruits of God' at the close of the hymn. The other is a suggestion that a line, or perhaps a couple of lines, has been dropped at the end of the Ode, and wrongly restored. We are in the region of speculation, but not, we hope, aberrant or wanton speculation.

First with regard to the full and perfect fruits. To explain these, we start from the position that the Odist has been imitating in some of his lines the first Psalm in the canonical Psalter. The unfading leaves of his crown are reminiscent of 'His leaf also shall not wither,

And whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.'

We suggested that he has understood the second line of the couplet to refer to the tree, and not to the man who is likened to a tree. That is to say, 'doeth' (עָשָׂה) means 'produceth'; (it is, in fact, the ordinary word for bringing forth fruit, and finds its equivalent in the New Testament as ποιεῖν καρπούς). In what sense is the word to be understood that 'All the fruit it produces is prosperous.'

The answer is that the fruit is full and perfect.

Now turn to the Targum on the Psalms. We find that the Targumist takes this very view. For him, also, it is the tree that prospers, and not the man; and he explains that it means,

'Every seed-germ germinates and prospers.'

This is a striking and unexpected confirmation of our suggestion. Moreover, when we turn to the Peshitta version of the Psalms, we find a curious reminiscence of or parallel to the 'perfect' fruits of the Ode. Here we find

ܐܠܝܗܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ

'And all that he does (or makes) he perfects (or is perfected).'

Here again it is quite possible that the translator interpreted the prosperity to belong to the tree; but the vocalizers have referred it to the man.

This, then, is our tentative explanation of the closing sentences of the Ode. It is an interpretation of the first Psalm.

Now with regard to the stray verse. In Ode iv the sequence of the Hymn is broken by the insertion of the fourth verse:

- 3 'Thou hast given thy heart, O Lord, to thy faithful:
- 4 [never wilt thou be barren (idle) nor be unfruitful]:
- 5 For a single hour of thy faith
Is better than all days and years.'

Suppose we remove the intrusive matter (so as to restore the sequence in the fourth Ode) and put it at the end of the first Ode.

'Thou livest upon my head,
And thou hast blossomed upon my head:
Never wilt thou be barren nor unfruitful:
Thy fruits are full and perfect:
Full of thy salvation.'

We suggest, then, that the verse has dropped out of the first Ode, and having been written on the margin has been wrongly restored to the fourth Ode.

ODE II

This Ode is missing.

ODE III

- 1 I clothe (them) with:
- 2 And (His) members are with Him,
And on them do I hang; and He loves me.
- 3 For I should not have known how to love the Lord,
If He had not loved me.
- 4 For who is able to distinguish love,
Except one that is loved?

Ct. 1 John iv. 19.

The verb is used also in an absolute manner by Ephrem, without any complement, and its meaning cannot be clearly established :

ܐܢܝܢ ܕܝܢܝܢ ܕܝܢܝܢ ܕܝܢܝܢ ܕܝܢܝܢ

‘And if thou joinest, they will count thee as a deceiver.’—ii. 468, R. E.

In this verse of the Odes there is reason to believe that it has the notion of mixture, union, and participation..

In the next line, the translation is given by eliminating the dālath before ܐܢܝܢ, as we have suggested to be probable. In maintaining the reading of the MS. we could translate ‘Because I shall love that Son, in order that I may be son (myself)’.

v. 9. The MS. has the siamē-points over the word ܐܢܝܢ living, which implies that the word is to be understood in the sense of ‘life’. The copyist’s punctuation seems, however, not to be well adapted to parallelism with the preceding verse. To call the Christ ‘the living one’ is one of the characteristics of the Syrian Church, e. g. ‘O Living One, who went down to the abode of the dead’ (Breviar. Chald. ii. p. ܕܕܕ). Cf. Acta Thomae, p. 235, and see also Ephrem iii. pp. 33, 135, 149 (R. E.). On the other hand, in view of some other passages of the Odes (cf. xxviii. 6, &c.) it would be wiser not to take the above view as irrefragable, and it is even possible that the reading of the MS. may be right.

v. 10. The dālath before ܐܢܝܢ is quite correct (against Frankenberg).

Expository Notes.

The scope of this Ode as a genuine mystical product has been pointed out in the notes to the previous Ode. In verse 2, there is confusion in the MS. between ‘my members’ and ‘His members’. As it is not easy to see how a person can hang on his own members, we have adopted the second reading. In that case, we have a Pauline reminiscence in 1 Cor. vi. 15, &c.

In verse 7 the translation proposed by Flemming, ‘For the Lover has found the Beloved’ has been accepted, although it interferes somewhat with the parallelism of the verses, which seem to require us to take ܐܢܝܢ in the same sense in successive stanzas. We have suggested as an alternative to read ‘that I may be found a lover to the Beloved’. After the words ‘I have been united (or ‘mingled’), the necessary expletive ܕܐܢܝܢ has been added in the translation. We may compare Acta Thomae (ed Wright, p. 11) 'that with thy humanity he might be mingled (or united)'.

In verse 9 the ancient name of Jesus, 'the Living One', has been restored as has been done in the Revised Version of Apoc. i. 17 ('The First and the Last and the Living One'). For another example we may take Acta Thomae (p. 82), 'Thou art the Living One, the Son of the Living One.' Note that the expression can be traced again in Ode viii. 22, if we translate the verse

'Ye who are kept abide in Him that liveth,'

the Living One referred to being clearly Christ.

The strongly Johannine cast of the Ode will have been noted. The Ode is a hymn written on the theme, 'We love Him because He first loved us' (1 John iv. 19), with perhaps a reference also to the doctrine that 'he that is joined to the Lord is one Spirit' (1 Cor. vi. 17). Whether we are to recognize actual quotations or distinct references depends on the general decision as to the priority of the Odes to the Fourth Gospel and the Pauline Epistles, or the contrary. These questions are discussed in the Introduction.

The whole Ode, like the first Ode, is of the nature of an epithalamium. Bacon described it rightly (Harvard Theol. Rev. for 1916, p. 382) as 'a song in the vein of Canticles'.

ODE IV

- 1 No man, O my God, changeth thy holy place;
Nor is (one able) to change it, and put it in another place.
- 2^a Because he hath no power over it;
- 2^b For thy sanctuary Thou designedst before thou didst make places :
- 3^a That which is the elder shall not be changed by those that are younger than itself:
- 3^b Thou hast given thy heart, O Lord, to thy believers.

Cf. 2 Chron. vii. 16.

- 4 Thou wilt never fail,
Nor wilt Thou be without fruits:
- 5 For one hour of thy Faith Cf. Ps. lxxxiv. 10.
Is more precious than all days and years.
- 6 For who is there that shall put on thy grace, and be injured?
- 7 For thy seal is known:
And thy creatures are known to it.
- 8 And the hosts possess it:
And the elect archangels are clad with it.
- 9 Thou hast given us thy fellowship:
It was not that thou wast in need of us;
But that we are in need of thee.
- 10 Distil¹ thy dews upon us;
And open thy rich fountains that pour forth to us milk and honey.
- 11 For there is no repentance with thee: Cf. Rom. xi. 29 and
Num. xxiii. 19.
That thou shouldest repent of anything that thou hast promised.
- 12 And the end was known² to thee:
- 13 For what thou gavest, thou gavest freely:
So that thou mayest not draw back and take them again.
- 14 For all was known to thee as God;
And set in order from the beginning before thee:
- 15 And thou, O Lord, hast made³ all things.
Hallelujah.

¹ Lit. bedew.² Lit. revealed.³ Or, done.

v. 4. The language is nearly the same as that used to describe Paradise in Ode xi. 23. We might, therefore, translate ‘Never wilt thou be idle (or inoperative).’

v. 6. Grimme’s suggestion of מעיל for מעיל is possible but not necessary.

v. 7. The MS. has סביב ‘are known to’ for which we have suggested סביב ‘(thy creatures) know’. This is, perhaps, a daring emendation, since the translation of the text as it stands, ‘And thy creatures are known to it’, i. e. ‘and it knows thy creatures’, is sufficiently clear.

v. 8. The MS. does not warrant סביב ‘and thy hosts’ printed in the text; it is more probably סביב ‘and the hosts’. Cf. Ode xvi. 14. In the second member of the verse the word סביב which the text gives between parentheses is unwarranted by the MS., and is useless. Instead of סביב ‘are clad with it’, Connolly suggests חבש ‘hold it’, which is plausible.

v. 13. סביב of the MS. probably stands for סביב. Frankenberg’s derivation of the word from סביב is improbable. Barth unnecessarily suggests the eliminating of the waw before סביב. The objective pronoun סביב is used by Synthesis for סביב, the subject being סביב.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is the most important in the whole collection on account of the historical detail with which it appears to commence. The natural explanation would be that there had been some attempt to deny the sanctity of the Temple at Jerusalem, or to transfer that sanctuary to some other spot. The writer resists any such attempts as impious, and is quite sure that they are outside the sphere of human power: for God cannot contradict or withdraw His promises. His promises are His predestination. The Sanctuary was designed from the beginning and known to the Lord from the first. Whatever may have happened in apparent contradiction of God’s promises regarding His continual dwelling in the Sanctuary, is itself to be regarded as a part of God’s design, and the writer concludes His song by saying that ‘God has done it all’.

The sanctuary itself has right of prescription against all other sanctuaries.

It is a pre-existent creation. The proof of this is on the Jewish side in Pirke Aboth, vi. 10 :

‘Five possessions possessed the Holy One, blessed is He, in this world; and these are they: Torah, one possession; Heaven and earth, one possession; Abraham, one possession; Israel, one possession; the Sanctuary, one possession . . . the Sanctuary, whence is it proved? Because it is written, The place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established (Exod. xv. 17); and it saith, and He brought them to the border of His sanctuary, and even to this mountain which His right hand has possessed.’—Ps. lxxviii. 54.

To these proofs, which the Rabbinical writers give, might be added a reference to Psalm lxxiii. (lxxiv.) 2, ‘Remember thy congregation which thou hast purchased of old . . . This is Mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt’ (cf. LXX $\eta\varsigma \epsilon\kappa\tau\acute{\eta}\sigma\omega \acute{\alpha}\pi' \acute{\alpha}\rho\chi\eta\varsigma$)

The situation in this Psalm is exactly similar to that which occurred at the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. The sanctuary is in ruins and burned by fire; and the similarity of the former and the latter desolations (which the Jews recognized to be even a similarity of date) provoked a similarity of prayer and complaint. Hence the earliest Psalmist entreats the Lord ‘not to withdraw His hand’ (Ps. lxxiii. 11) and to ‘have respect unto His covenant’ (v. 20). The later writer says, ‘Do not withdraw thy gifts nor repent of thy promises’. Thus the Temple as the outward dwelling-place of God and the symbol of His covenant, is before the mind of the Odist, as it was before the Psalmist.

It is clear that the Temple in the Ode is a real temple, with which the Odist is in a sympathetic relation. Neither here, nor in the language of the sixth Ode, where the Temple is spoken of, have we any right to explain it away. The actual Temple is necessary in the explanation of the fifth verse :

‘Thou hast given thy heart, O Lord, to thy believers,’ where a reference to God’s message and promise to Solomon that ‘My eyes and heart shall be there continually.’ (2 Chron. vii. 16.)

removes the apparent discontinuity of the Ode, and relieves us of the resort to interpolation which Harnack suggests.

In the fifth verse one could not miss the reference to Psalm lxxxiv. 10, where 'A day in thy courts' is imitated by the Odist into 'An hour of thy faith superior to all days and years'. The reference ought not to be made without observing that the Psalm imitated (the 84th Psalm) is from the beginning a Temple Psalm; and that the opening sentence, 'How amiable are thy tabernacles' would acquire a sorrowful and a poignant meaning in the time of a national disaster. We shall probably, then, be safe in placing the writer within sight of Jerusalem, and of Jerusalem in ruins. The Scriptural references which lie behind our Odes are references to the actual temple at Jerusalem, the Salomonic temple. Just as in Ode vi, where the mighty stream that overflows everything has for its goal the actual Temple, we cannot start with allegory: the actual Temple must be there in the first instance, and it was natural enough that the Salomonic Odes should contain reference to the Salomonic building, especially in the time when the foremost thought in many religious minds was the question, what has become of the Temple, or what is going to become of it.

This state of mind which, in our view, has a chronological element in it, is quite consistent with a spiritual interpretation, either on the part of a pious Jew, that the real Temple is the ideal, heavenly structure, or the interpretation of the Christian that it is the Church.¹

Returning to our Ode, we see that a series of fresh questions is raised in verses 6-10: what is meant by the grace, the seal, the fellowship, the dew, the milk and honey? We seem here to be in another region of thought quite away from the question of the mutability of the Temple service. Two solutions have been offered for the apparent discontinuity: one is Harnack's, that the Ode is a Jewish one interpolated by a Christian hand; the other is that of Bernard that the Ode must be interpreted in the light of the ritual of baptism. We have discussed these views in our Introduction, and the trend of our investigation is in favour of the belief that the Odes are Christian throughout and have not been interpolated. Whether they are baptismal to the extent that has been suggested appears to us to be, at least, doubtful. For instance, in the verses to which we were referring, it is difficult to see the sense in which an early Christian writer could speak of the heavenly hosts as possessing the baptismal sign, or the angels as being clad with baptismal grace. There is, however, some slight evidence for such a belief, and Dr. Bernard has underestimated it. Not only have we the testimony of Clement of Alexandria that Theodotus the Gnostic taught that 'the angels were baptized at the beginning into the redemption of the name of Him that came down in the Dove upon Jesus and redeemed Him'¹ (and this evidence of a gnostic interpretation does not exclude a correspondingly Christian thought), but we have the still more surprising belief in Jewish circles that the angels were circumcised, and every Patristic student knows, and our Odes themselves may be in evidence upon the point, how keen the early Christians were to carry over the ideas attaching to circumcision and re-translate them into the language of the New Faith. It is not, then, impossible, that a Christian writer should have restated the Jewish belief concerning angels in a Christian form.

¹ To take a single reference, Zahn says (p. 753): 'Dadurch wird klar, dass er nicht an ein von Menschenhänden bereitetes Gotteshaus mit Vorhöfen und Altären denkt, wie der alte Psalmist, sondern an ein geistliches Haus.'

The Jewish belief is found in the Book of Jubilees, c. 15, as follows:

'And every one that is born, the flesh of whose foreskin is not circumcised on the eighth day, belongs not to the children of the Covenant which the Lord made with Abraham, but to the children of destruction: nor is there, moreover, any sign on him that he is the Lord's, but (he is destined) to be destroyed and slain from the earth, and to be rooted out of the earth, for he has broken the covenant of the Lord our God. For all the angels of the presence and all the angels of the sanctification have been so created from the day of their creation, and before the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification He hath sanctified Israel, that they should be with Him and with His holy angels.'

Here, then, the angels are represented as circumcised. Dr. Charles does not suggest the reason for this belief, nor point out its polemical necessity; but in a foot-note he adds the important observation that 'our book knows nothing of the later traditions that the patriarchs such as Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Terah, Jacob, and six others were born circumcised'. The reference is important, because it takes us into the region of polemic. Every Patristic student knows that one of the points of attack of the early anti-Judaic writers was precisely this question of the uncircumcised righteous of the days before Abraham. And the obvious reply of the controversialist Jew on the opposite side was to say that the patriarchs were really circumcised. Why is it not mentioned? The answer is that they were born so. To which there is no further reply. Cadit Quaestio. It is natural to suppose further that the circumcised angels who were born so is an exaggeration of this very defence of the uncircumcised Just. They were as the angels in Heaven. But this opened up the further challenge, 'Quomodo circumcisi sunt, qui non habebant membrum virile?' If any one doubts whether this question was actually raised, let him turn to the *Ethiopic Book of the Secrets of Heaven and Earth*¹ where he will find the necessary detail as to the virility of the angels with Scripture proof and dimensional observation.

¹ Clem. Alex. Exc. ex Theod. 22.

It is necessary to go into this in some detail, because the doctrine of the necessity of circumcision, which is emphasized so strongly in Jubilees, is of necessity a Jewish doctrine. And if an early Gnostic writer like Theodotus maintains that the angels were baptized, he is converting Judaic arguments to anti-Judaic uses.

If it had not been for this curious preservation of the fragment of Theodotus by Clement of Alexandria, we should have said without hesitation that the verses about the angels in the Ode before us were definitely Jewish, and, in that case, we should have established Harnack's position that we are not dealing with a genuine Christian product. That fragment of Theodotus (the importance of which Dr. Bernard did not sufficiently realize) calls for a stay of judgement on the points at issue.

The investigation, so far as it has gone, will at least serve to remind us of the importance of the right understanding of the primitive anti-Judaic polemic, especially on its fundamental points, Circumcision, the Sabbath, and the Sanctuary. The question of Circumcision was raised in Judaism long before Christianity appeared. It was one of the features of the Hellenistic movement before the rise of Pharisaism, when the Jews took such pains to get rid of the sign, and to assimilate themselves to Greek manners. It is, therefore, extremely likely that part of the Christian polemic against Circumcision, say the objection on the score of the uncircumcised patriarchs, is prae-Christian; and we need to keep this possibility in mind when discussing what is said on the subject by early ¹ Patr. Or., vol. i, p. 12. The writer quotes from Jubilees, as an authority for the circumcision of the angels.

Christian writers or early Christian books of Testimony. The person who is not familiar with anti-Judaic propaganda may be reminded that anti-Circumcision is not only in the New Testament, but that it pervades the first deposit of the literature. We do not, indeed, find it argued in the way Theodotus suggests. Justin Martyr is content to say that Enoch and the rest of the Patriarchal Company had the spiritual circumcision like ourselves. He does not say that they were baptized; he seems to avoid the inference, for he says that it is we, who had been sinners, who receive the covenant of circumcision through baptism. The contrast should be noted as well as the concordance.

In the earliest known forms of the Testimony Book anti-circumcision is one of the prominent articles. In verse 3 we have something like an imitation in Theophilus, ad Autolycum, iii. 15 :

τὰ γὰρ μεταγενέστερα οὐ δύναται ποιεῖν τὰ αὐτῶν προγενέστερα, a reference which may help us to restore the lost Greek.

For the Baptismal parallels, we may take :

Baptism as grace (verse 6). Basil (P. G. col. 373) :

χάριν λέγειν τὸ βάπτισμα ἔθος.

For baptism as seal; and as mark of ownership. Greg. Naz. (P. G. 36, 361-4) :

σφραγὶς δέ, ὡς συντήρησις, καὶ τῆς δεσποτείας τοῦ Κυρίου σημεῖον.

For baptism as dew : Ephrem, Hymn V in Eriph., verse 15 :

ܠܕܥܠܡ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

(from thy dew besprinkle my lowliness), &c.

We need not suppose that 'dew' acquires a merely baptismal connotation in the Syrian service books. Here are a few stray references from a volume of Jacobite prayers and sequences.

'Thy dew (ܕܥܝܢܐ) of grace and mercy

Bedew (ܕܥܝܢܐ) upon the faces of thy worshippers.'

This reference is important on account of the parallelism with the eleventh Ode v. 14 ('my face received the dew'), as well as with this fourth Ode :

and it is certainly not baptismal.

Again :

‘Let thy dew (𐤁𐤊𐤋, O Lord the Saviour, descend to Sheol, and bedew (𐤁𐤊𐤋) upon the bones of the faithful departed.’

Here, again, there is no question of baptism, for the faithful dead are assumed to have been baptised. Apparently the ultimate origin of the expression as applied to the dead rests on Isa. xxvi. 19 :

ἡ γὰρ δρόσος ἡ παρὰ σοῦ ἕλαμα αὐτοῖς ἐστίν.

Note above the repetition of the idea: ‘let thy dew bedew’. Here is another sentence to be used as a preface to the 35th Ode :

‘Bedew, (𐤁𐤊𐤋) O Lord, the dew (𐤁𐤊𐤋) of thy grace upon the thirsty minds of our souls, that are dried up by sin.’

v. 9. The thought in verse 9 that God does not need us, but that we need God, is a common religious expression in Greek and early Christian literature. It occurs, for instance, in the Apology of Aristides, c. 1: ‘There is no deficiency in Him, and He stands in need of nought, but everything stands in need of Him.’

In the fourth book of Irenaeus against Heresies the doctrine becomes a text upon which Irenaeus dilates for many pages, often in language suggesting the use of the Odes, and like the Odes, explaining that God gives us His fellowship, though He does not need us, nor our love, nor our gifts, nor our sacrifices. For example :

‘Non quasi indigens Deus luminis, plasmavit Adam.’—Ed. Massuet, p. 243.

‘In quantum enim Deus nullius indiget, in tantum homo indiget Dei communione.’—p. 244.

‘et communionem habere cum Deo : ipse quidem nullius indigens ; eis vero qui indigent eius, suam praebens communionem.’—p. 244.

‘Ipse quidem nullius horum est indigens.’—p. 244.

‘Nihil tamen indigente Deo ab homine.’—p. 247.

‘Haec autem gloriosum quidem faciebant hominem, id quod deerat ei adimplentia, id est amicitiam Dei ; Deo autem praestabant nihil ; nec enim indigebat Deus dilectione hominis.’—p. 247.

‘Non indigens Deus servitute eorum non indiget Deus oblatione eorum.’

‘Sed et suis discipulis dans consilium primitias Deo offerre ex suis creaturis, non quasi indigenti.’—p. 249.

‘Offerrimus autem ei, non quasi indigenti. sed gratias agentes : Deus non indiget eorum qui a nobis sunt, sic nos indigemus offerre aliquid Deo.’—p. 251.

The same formula recurs in Bardaisan :

‘Everything that exists is in need of the Lord of all.’—Patr. Syr. ii. 548.

And in Ephrem (perhaps in criticism of Bardaisan), we find the statement :

‘The Sons of Heresy strove to interpret (or proclaim) concerning Him, that He is in no need whatever.’—ed. Rom. ii. 522.

The formula turns up again in the (late) Hebrew Testament of Naphtali :

‘It is not that He hath need of any creature, but that all the creatures in the world have need of Him.’—Test. XII. Patr., ed. Charles, p. 237. 6.

v. 10. The reference in verse 10 to ‘milk and honey’ may be taken allegorically of the experience of souls who reach the spiritual Land of Promise, or symbolically by the sacramental use of milk and honey in the reception of newly-baptized persons, or in the Eucharist of certain non-Catholic bodies. There are certainly traces of a milk-and-honey sacrament in the early Church. For example, in the Epistle of Barnabas, we have a question raised as to the meaning of the milk and honey in the Old Testament. And after some preliminary allegorising to show that the believers in Jesus are themselves the good land, he asks ‘Why milk and honey?’ And the answer is that ‘the young child is first quickened with honey and then with milk.’¹

Probably this refers in the first instance to a folklore custom in connexion with newly-born children, but it seems to have very early developed into a Christian sacrament for new converts, who had been born again into the Kingdom of God.

¹ Besides Barnabas, we may refer to Tertullian, De Corona, c. 3 (‘inde suscepti lactis et mellis concordiam praegustamus’), adv. Marc. i. 14. Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 6 (p. 128) and Coptic Canons, ii. 46.

The baptismal liturgy of the Ethiopic Church will furnish a good illustration of the reception of the neophyte with milk and honey:

‘Discedentibus lac et mel datur et manu capiti imposita hac benedictione dimittuntur; ite in pace, filii baptismi.’¹

It is not, however, by any means clear that the ‘milk and honey’ passages in the Odes will bear this interpretation. Ephrem attacks certain heretics (probably his favourite sport, the followers of Marcion and Bardaisan), who practice an actual Eucharist in milk and honey.

‘Instead of bread, (figure of) the show-bread, they offer the sacrifice of honey and milk, but although these are pure, they had no right to disturb by these (the order of the Church). For honey was not sufficient for a sacrifice, nor milk for aspersion and libation.’—Ephrem., R. E. ii. 543.

ODE V

1 I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord;

Because I love thee:

2 O Most High, do not thou forsake me,

For thou art my hope.

3 Freely I have received thy grace;

I shall live² thereby.

Cf. Matt. x. 8.

or, May I live.

4 My persecutors will come but let them not see me.

Cf. Jer. xx. 11.

5 Let a cloud of darkness fall on their eyes,

And let an air of thick gloom darken them.

Cf. Ps. lix. 13 and lxix. 23.

6 And let them have no light to see,

That they may take hold upon me.

7 Let their counsel become thick darkness:

Cf. Ps. vii. 16, 17.

And what they have cunningly devised, let it return upon their own heads.

¹ See Trumpff, Taufliturgie der Aeth. Kirche in Abhandl. der I. Klasse der K. Akad. d. Wiss. (1878, München), Bd. XIV, Abth. iii, S. 153.

² Or, may I live.

- Cf. Ps. xxi, 12. 8 For they have devised a counsel,
And it has come to nought.
- Cf. Copt. (Powerful as they were, they were overcome).
9 They have prepared themselves maliciously,
And were found to be ineffective.
- 10 For my hope is upon the Lord;
And I will not fear :
- Cf. Ps. xxvii, 1. 11 And because the Lord is my salvation, I will not fear.
- 12 And He is as a garland on my head,
And I shall not be moved ;
- Cf. Ps. xxx, 7. 13 Even if everything should be shaken,
I stand firm :
- 14 And if (all) things visible should perish,
I shall not die ;
- 15 Because the Lord is with me,
And I am with Him.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. In comparing the Coptic and Syriac texts of this Ode, we are struck at once by the Coptic opening ; the natural translation of the Coptic verb is 'manifestabo tibi' ; and we should at first sight conclude that this is a misunderstanding of the Syriac text by the substitution of ܡܠܝܬܐ for ܬܝܫܒܐ ; i.e. 'I will make known' for 'I will give thanks'. It should, however, be noted that if the Coptic is a translation from the Greek, it is certain that we have here the rendering of the Greek ἐξομολογήσομαι exactly as in Gen xxix. 35 and elsewhere. There is, therefore, no difference between the Coptic and the Syriac.

v. 5. In the Syriac known to us, we cannot see a good meaning for the plural word ܕܚܕܝܬܐ which we have translated from the context by 'thick darkness'. This rendering is suggested by the root ܕܚܠ, when used of 'darkness' or 'tumour'. If it is not a word completely mutilated by copyists, it must be registered in any future Syriac dictionary. It seems to refer to a kind of mirage, hallucination, or to a defect in perception, which notion is generally expressed in Syriac with a plural noun, cf. ܕܚܠܐ, ܕܚܠܐ, ܕܚܠܐ. One might also suggest a substitute ܕܠܐܕܒܐ 'to perdition, to nothing', which would answer to the Coptic 'inefficax', but it is rather a violent change. If one is allowed to substitute a word, ܕܚܠܐ, which is used in verse 5, would be the best.

In verse 8 the Coptic has the equivalent of

'nec factum est illis', which is suspiciously like good Syriac.

Expository Notes.

The interest of this Ode lies in the fact that at this point we begin to strike the coincidences with the Pistis Sophia. The latter part of the Ode from the twelfth verse was similar in its language to the first Ode of the collection, and led to a misunderstanding on the part of the Gnostic Commentator, who mistook one Ode for the other, and so, providentially, preserved for us in his comments the missing first Ode in the collection. Whether this fifth Ode is Christian or not did not appear decisively at the first reading. It contains a somewhat Jewish section in verses 4-9, with prayer for the discomfiture of one's enemies. If there is a definite Christian feature, it is, perhaps, the garland upon the singer's head, which occurs in several Odes, sometimes in a definitely Christian context. The close of the Ode is a noble expression of trust in the Lord, amidst adverse circumstances, which one instinctively compares with the close of the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. We do not doubt, therefore, that it is a Christian composition.

The writer is dependent upon the Davidic Psalter, either directly or through the medium of a book of extracts. The prayers for the confusion of one's enemies are taken ultimately from Psalm lxviii. (lxix.) 22, &c., from which Psalm loans are made in Romans xi. 9, 10 (the anti-Judaic section of the Epistle, chiefly made up out of Testimonia). In verse 10 the model is in Psalm xxvii. 1: 'The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?'

The Syriac is a little nearer to the Hebrew ('my salvation'); the Coptic and the Greek, ('thou art my Saviour').

In verse 2 the Coptic has 'O Lord' for the Syriac, 'O Most High'; The Gnostic Targum has in a neighbouring clause, 'O light (i. e. God) of the height'; it has been suggested that this is a reflexion from the Syriac 'Most High'; it is not clear, however, that the clauses are parallel.

In verse 4 the relation between the Sahidic and Syriac texts is again obscure: the Sahidic has 'fall' for the Syriac 'come', and the Gnostic Targum appears to know both readings: for it has 'Let them fall let them come and not see me'. But the Syriac also has 'fall' in verse 5 for the Coptic 'cover'. It is not safe, under such confusions in the text to draw any conclusions as to the relations between the Gnostic Targum and the Text.

ODE VI

- 1 As (the hand) moves over the harp, and the strings speak;
- 2 So speaks in my members the Spirit of the Lord,
And I speak by His love.
- 3 For He destroys what is foreign,
And everything is of the Lord.
- 4 For thus He was from the beginning,
And (shall be) to the end.
- 5 That nothing should be His adversary,
And nothing should stand up against Him.
- 6 The Lord has multiplied His knowledge;
And was zealous that those things should be known which by His grace have been given to us.
- 7 And the praise of His name He gave us:¹
Our spirits praise His holy Spirit.

¹ Lit. And His praise He gave us for His name.

- 8 For there went forth a stream,
And became a river great and broad:
It swept away everything, and broke up and carried away the Temple.
- 9 And the restraints (made) by men were not able to restrain it,
Nor the arts of those whose (business it is to) restrain water.
- 10 For it spread over the face of the whole earth,
And it filled everything.
- 11 All the thirsty upon earth were given to drink (of it):
And thirst was done away and quenched:
- 12 For from the Most High the draught was given.
- 13 Blessed then are the ministers of that draught,
Who have been entrusted with that water of His:¹
- 14 They have assuaged the dry lips,
And the will that had fainted they have raised up:
- 15 And souls that were near departing
They have held back from death:
- 16 And limbs that had fallen
They have straightened and set up:
- 17 They gave strength to their coming
And light to their eyes.
- 18 For everyone knew them in the Lord,
And they lived by the water an eternal life.

Cf. Sap. Sol. vii. 25.Cf. Ezek. xlvii.Cf. Hab. ii. 14.Cf. Isa. xxxv. 3; Heb. xii. 12.Cf. Isa. lxi. 9;
John iv. 14.

Hallelujah.

¹ Or, its water.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. ܐܝܕܐ 'hand' is not found in the manuscript, where a small erasure has caused a word to disappear, leaving only the final alph. This alph seems to have a certain stroke joining it with the preceding letter; in this case the word could not have been ܐܝܕܐ but perhaps ܐܝܪܐ 'spirit' (so Barnes), or another short vocable; cf. the following:

ܐܝܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܐܝܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܐܝܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܐܝܪܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ

Bar Penkāyé, p. 147; MS. in John Rylands Library.

'Behold I am like a pen in the hand of the writer: that is to say, a harp, and the Holy Spirit sings in me.'

We have a possible reminiscence of the Odes in this sentence of John of Phenek.

v. 3. In view of the rules dealing with the attributive adjective Schulthess has suggested a dālath to be added to ܕܠܐܝܢ of the MS. In poetry, one meets occasionally with a word before which this dālath has been omitted. This same dālath is eliminated frequently after ܕܠܐܝܢ as in ܕܠܐܝܢ ܕܠܐܝܢ (Bar Penkāyé, p. 70.)

'Something strange happened to thee.'

In the next line, Gressmann's reading ܕܠܐܝܢ 'recalcitrant' instead of ܕܠܐܝܢ 'of the Lord', and Grimme's suggestion of ܕܠܐܝܢ 'bitter', are not necessary.

v. 6. Grimme's emendation of ܕܠܐܝܢ for ܕܠܐܝܢ of the MS. is grammatically erroneous. The addition of a yōdh to the third pers. fem. plur. also frequently used by copyists is not warranted by the Syriac Grammar (cf. Ode vii. 20).

v. 8. The translation which would make ܕܠܐܝܢ the object of the three verbs ܕܠܐܝܢ, ܕܠܐܝܢ, ܕܠܐܝܢ, and which would take the lāmādh of ܕܠܐܝܢ as dative as if 'it swept everything, broke up (everything) and brought (everything) to the temple' is the less probable, because (1) it would have been more natural in Syriac to put ܕܠܐܝܢ at the end of the verbs, (2) the verb would be logically in the wrong place; what would 'break up everything to the temple' mean in Syriac? That the verb ܕܠܐܝܢ is used in the Odes with the sense of '(waters) carried' is evident from Ode xxxix. 1. The Coptic text is perplexed over this verb, and omits the translation; and, wrongly taking the lāmadh as a sign of dative and reading 𐩧𐩣 for 𐩧𐩣𐩬, exhibits: 'Attraxit eos omnes (?) et conversa est super templum.' Bacon, quoting Torrey, suggests for the last words an Aramaic original which would have been misunderstood by the translators; the theory is that the original was a Biblical Aramaic, 𐤀𐤋𐤁 𐤐𐤂𐤏𐤁 𐤏𐤋𐤁𐤏𐤁 'and there was nobody to impede'. The negative 𐤏𐤋𐤁 would have disappeared by loss or by neglect, and the translators would have taken the 𐤐𐤂𐤏𐤁 as a verb 'to carry', whereas it simply meant 'there was nobody to restrain'. This makes an excellent introduction to the following verses about the restrainers.

v. 18. This is the only meaning the Syriac sentence can have. In adding a 𐤒 before 𐤏𐤋𐤁 we obtain the sense of the Coptic 'the water of the eternal life'.

Expository Notes.

This is the second of the 'Temple' Odes, if we do not get rid of the reference to the Temple in the text: by means of the ingenious suggestion made by Professor Torrey that the words 'and it carried away the Temple' might be a perversion of an original Aramaic expression 'and there was none to restrain'. We do not propose, however, to alter the text at this point; it is intelligible as it stands.

The Ode appears, at first sight, to exhibit a change of subject at the eighth verse, where the stream of living water is introduced. The discontinuity disappears on a closer study of the preceding verses, in which the writer shows, by way of preface, that it is impossible to resist God, and that the diffusion of His knowledge is certain, in fact, it is already accomplished. He has in mind Habakkuk ii. 14, 'the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God as the waters cover the sea'; and Psalm lxxii. 19, 'Blessed be his glorious name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory'.¹ The first of these passages is the key to verse 6, 'The Lord has multiplied his knowledge', and to verse 10, 'It spread over the face of the whole earth and it filled everything'. The tenth verse is anticipated in the sixth.

The passage in the Psalm is the reason for the reference to the praise of His glorious name in verse 6. We can see the mind of the writer at work. He then proceeds to describe the flowing out of the waters and their destination. The Greek term employed in the Coptic Ode (out of which the writer of Pistis Sophia makes such extraordinary Gnostic developments) describes the flood as ἀπόρροια. This takes us to the language of the Wisdom of Solomon, vii. 25, where wisdom is described as 'an effluence of the glory of the Creator'. Here again we have the idea of the diffusion of the knowledge of the glory of God.

¹ Perhaps also we should refer to Sap. Sol. i. 7: 'The Spirit of the Lord has filled the earth.'

Further, the restrainers who build dykes to stop the flow of the stream are anticipated in verse 5 ('Nothing shall stand up against Him').

In this Psalm we are again fortunate in having a large part of the Coptic text preserved to us; and as is common in Coptic texts, Greek words are exhibited in it. It was the occurrence of the Greek word ἀπόρροια, and the use of it by the Gnostic writer Pistis Sophia, which led Ryle and James to suggest, with some hesitation, that the Odes are Gnostic, in which supposition they were followed for a time by Harnack (Hist. of Dogma, i. 207, note). Ryle and James were, however, careful to say that 'We cannot see that there is anything unmistakably Gnostic in the doctrine'; and Harnack has also, since the publication of the complete Odes, withdrawn the suggestion.

The comparison of the Syriac and Coptic texts in this Ode is very instructive. In verse 9 the Coptic has a text which involves a Syriac ܡܢܬܠܐ ('buildings') in place of ܡܚܬܠܐ ('restraints'). Clearly the latter is the right form, and corresponds to the presence of ܡܠܠܐ and ܡܚܠܐ.

In verse 14 the Coptic has converterunt, which suggests a Syriac text ܩܝܡܐ or ܩܡܐ instead of ܩܡܐ, which is clearly the right reading. In the latter half of the verse the translation of the Coptic text is in error and there are two letters missing in the text itself: 'accipiebant gaudium cordis qui soluti erant', should be corrected to 'propositum cordis', which would answer to the Syriac; and instead of accipiebant the addition of the letters ܥܐ¹ to the verb give us elevabant which answers to the Syriac ܥܠܥܒܐ.

More difficult is the variation in verse 17, where we have apparently παρουσία underlying the Syriac, and παρησία underlying the Coptic. The parallelism between the second clauses of the 14th and 16th verses should be noted (~~παρουσία~~), and it is natural to infer that to the paralysed will we should affirm paralysed limbs. But this takes us, as suggested in the margin, into Isaiah xxxv (τὰ παραλελυμένα γόνατα), and makes it increasingly likely that for παρουσία we should read some word expressing 'paralysis'.

¹ ܐܕܥܐ for ܐܕܐ.

We cannot, however, regard the question of the reading as satisfactorily settled. There is something to be said for the Coptic παρρησία. It is a word which had almost an esoteric meaning in early Christian circles, and in the New Testament it describes the Christian attitude before the judges of earth and the Judge of Heaven. It may turn out to be the right word; in that case the Syriac is simply a misreading of an original or transliterated Greek from παρρησία to παρουσία. No other satisfactory suggestions have been made. Gressmann¹ suggests ἄρρωστία, which is a long way off either the Syriac or the Sahidic. It would make excellent sense, and a perfect parallel.

The last verse of the Ode is obscure. What does it mean that 'every one knew them in the Lord'? Is it any clearer if we translate 'They all recognized one another in the Lord'?

Perhaps the Odist is drawing upon Isaiah lxi. 9: 'all that see them shall acknowledge them', but then an additional clause is required. We may imagine a sentence

'Every one acknowledged them (That they are the Israel of God)'; and the concluding half-verse might then be an imitation of 'Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation':

for 'to live an eternal life' is, in Syriac, a good translation for 'to be saved with an eternal salvation' (Isa. xlv. 17). We leave it as an unsolved problem.

This Ode is one of those that furnish the strongest ground for the belief in a Greek original. The ἀπόρροια of which the Ode speaks has been shown to be a characteristic term, of the Wisdom-Christology; and it has also been pointed out that the Odes are strongly marked in other places by the doctrine of the Divine Wisdom which the Christians identified with Jesus Christ.

As, however, there is a good deal of evidence in favour of the belief that the Odes were originally written in Aramaic and not in Greek, it becomes proper to inquire what re-statement or alternative interpretation ought in that case to be made of the Ode before us.

¹ Deutsche LZ., 1911, No. 46.

It will still be true that the flowing stream is the stream of the Divine Knowledge which covers the whole earth as the waters cover the sea, and which is identified by the sequence of the Ode with the Holy Spirit: but ought we any longer to lay stress on the term ἀπόρροια if that term only comes in by way of a translation? Is there any alternative origin for the river?

In this connexion we may observe that amongst the titles given to Christ in the Testimony Books, we not only find that Christ is identified with Sophia, but we find traces of the description of Him under the title of River.

Eusebius in his treatise against Marcellus enumerates a number of titles of Christ with appropriate proof-texts, nearly all of which are traditional Testimonia. Amongst them we find

‘And he was called River by the one who said, The rushings of the river make glad the City of God: (Ps. xlv. 4).’—Euseb. c. Marcell. i, p. 97.

So the suggestion arises whether this passage in the Psalm may be the theme of our Odist. The passage turns up again in the Demonstratio Evangelica of Eusebius, in sequence with the 25th chapter of Isaiah, and Eusebius, having quoted the Psalm, proceeds to say that ‘this passage indicates the unremittent flow (ἐπιρροήν) of the Divine Spirit, which has its source from above and waters the City of God’. We notice how near Eusebius came to calling the river in the Psalm an ἀπόρροια. Augustine, too, in commenting upon the Psalm, asks the question:

‘Qui sunt isti impetus fluminis?’

and replies,

‘Inundatio illa Spiritus sancti, de quo Dominus dicebat,’ &c.

Now let us see whether, on the hypothesis that the 46th Psalm has been used by the Odist, we can find any linguistic agreement between the Ode and the Psalm in Syriac or in the Aramaic of the Targum.

The verse which we have to discuss is translated in English, following the Hebrew, as follows:

‘There is a river, the streams whereof make glad the City of God, the holy place of the Tabernacles of the Most High.’

The Syriac, however, and the Targum do not translate like this; they begin with 'Streams of rivers', and we notice that the word for 'stream' is precisely the word ܐܪܝܬ in the Ode. Here, then, we may, perhaps find the origin of the 'brook' or 'stream' that became a 'river'.

In the next place we notice that the river is to irrigate the City of God, and in particular the sanctuary. Here, then, we have the suggestion that the river which sweeps everything away and brings to the Temple (ܐܪܝܬܐ ܕܡܡܠܐ) does precisely what the Psalm says it ought to do: there is, perhaps, no need to alter the text at all, even by the insertion of an object. If, however, we like to make a free emendation, it would be possible to read ܐܪܝܬܐ ܕܡܡܠܐ 'it made glad the Temple'; but this is not quite fair to the existing text. Why should it not simply come to the Temple?

The Targum on the Psalm has a curious interpretation of the streams and the City; it says:

'The peoples are like rivers and their fountains: they come and make glad the City of God; and they pray in the Holy House of God, in the tabernacle of the Most High.'

This brings out again the connexion between the streams and the Temple: they are streams of proselytes, according to the Targum. There is, however, not much linguistic parallel between the Targum and the Ode. On the whole, it appears to be possible that the Odist has the 46th Psalm in mind, especially since we have reason to believe that the 'river' in that Psalm was an ancient Christian testimony.

A further alternative interpretation may be offered. The question arises whether this stream, which we have identified with the Knowledge of the Lord, which is to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, is not immediately derived from the 24th chapter of Sirach, where Wisdom enunciates her own praises. In v. 30 she says 'I came out as a stream from a river', and in v. 31 with a change in the metaphor,

'My stream became a river, and my river became a sea!'

The parallel with the Ode is very close and suggestive. We may also compare v. 25

[The Most High] maketh wisdom abundant as Phison and as Tigris, with the language of the Ode,

The Lord has multiplied the knowledge of himself.

Unfortunately the Syriac version of Sirach does not help us here.

ODE VII

- 1 As is the motion of anger over evil,
 So is the motion of joy over the Beloved,
 And brings in of its fruits without restraint.
- 2 My joy is the Lord, and my motion is towards Him:
 This path of mine is excellent.
- 3 For I have a Helper, to the Lord.
 He hath shown Himself to me without grudging in His simplicity;
 Because His kindness has minished His greatness.
- 4 He became like me that I might receive Him.
 In similitude was He reckoned like me, that I might put Him on.
- 5 And I trembled not when I saw Him;
 Because He was gracious to me.
- 6 Like my nature He became, that I might learn Him.
 And like my form, that I might not turn back from Him.
- 7 The Father of Knowledge
 Is the Word of Knowledge:
- 8 He who created Wisdom
 Is wiser than His works:
- 9 And He who created me when yet I was not Knew¹ what I should do when I came into being:

¹ MS. 'knows'.Euseb. D. E. vi. 9.

Cf. John i. 12.

Cf. John i. 1.

Cf. Prov. viii. 22
(LXX).

- 10 Wherefore He pitied me in His abundant grace And granted me to ask from Him and to receive from His sacrifice ;
- 11 For He it is that is incorrupt ;
The perfection of the worlds and the Father of them. Cf. Isa. ix. 6 (Heb.).
- 12 He hath given Him to appear to them that are His ; Cf. John i. 11.
That they may recognize Him that made them ;
And that they might not suppose that they came of themselves. Cf. Ps. c. 3.
- 13 For it is to Knowledge He hath appointed His way ; Cf. Prov. viii. 22.
He hath widened it and extended it and brought it to all perfection.
- 14 And He set over it the traces of His light ;
And it proceeded therein even from the beginning to the end. Cf. Sap. Sol. viii. 1.
- 15 For by Him He was served,
And He was pleased with the Son ; Cf. Mark i. 11, &c.
- 16 And because of His salvation He will take possession of Cf. Matt. xi. 27.
everything ;
And the Most High shall be known in His saints :
- 17 To announce to those that have songs of the coming of the Lord
That they may go forth to meet Him and may sing to Him, Cf. Matt. xxv. 6.
With joy and with the harp of many tones.
- 18 The Seers shall go before Him,
And they shall be seen before Him ;
- 19 And they shall praise the Lord in His love ;
Because He is near and seeth ;

- 20 And hatred shall be taken from the earth;
And along with jealousy it shall be drowned:
- 21 For ignorance hath been destroyed;
Because the knowledge of the Lord hath arrived.
- 22 Let the Singers sing the grace of the Lord Most High;
And let them bring their songs;
- 23^a And let their heart be like the day,
And like the excellent beauty of the Lord, their harmonies;
- Cf. 1 Cor. xiv. 7, 10. 23^b And let there be nothing without life, Nor without knowledge, nor dumb.
- 24 For (the Lord) hath given a mouth to His creation,
To open the voice of the mouth towards Him; and to praise Him;
- 25 Confess¹ ye His power;
And show forth His grace.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. We could take the verb  in both meanings (a) 'He causes to enter, introduces' from ; (b) 'He gives, yields fruits' (Ar. اَغْلَى) from . The second meaning is more appropriate.

v. 3. We have suggested in the text that this sentence might be regarded as an attempt to translate βοηθὸν γὰρ ἔχω τὸν Κύριον, but in taking the lāmādh of  as meaning direction to, we should have the good literal meaning 'Because I have a helper to the Lord', as Labourt rightly suggests. In the preceding verse, there is a mention of the way of the

¹ Perhaps 'Manifest'.

Odist to his Lord; his way is easy and good, and he is joyful in walking in it towards God because he has the Christ as a companion and helper who, in his own words, 'showed Himself (or His soul) to me, 'without grudging in His simplicity'. That this is probably the meaning of the sentence is also attested by the fact that it is the Odist who is speaking here, and not the Lord Christ who showed Himself to him. The Father of the Lord comes in verses 12, 15, 16, where, especially in this last verse, He is called ܡܕܝܚܐ 'The Most High'. It is worth noticing that in Ode viii, verses 6, 8 where the word ܡܕܝܚܐ 'helper' occurs, there is also the same occurrence of both ܡܕܝܚܐ and ܡܕܝܚܐ; in Ode xxi. 2, this 'helper' who is the Lord is again assisting the Odist. In Ode xxv. 2, God is again the 'helper' of the Odist.

The expression ܡܕܝܚܐ ܐܠܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ equivalent to ἀφθότως is frequently used in Syriac literature, e. g.

ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ

'In this propitious month Thy bounty overflowed abundantly upon all.'—Ephr. ed. Lamy, II, 773.

Cf. also in the Roman edition II, 453; III, 72, 88 and in Syr. Syr., p. ٥. Cf. also

ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ ܡܕܝܚܐ

Bar Penkāyē, p. 99 (MS. in John Rylands Library), ibid., p. 2.

'They give without grudging as it was given to them.'

The use of the expression does not necessarily imply translation.

In the next line, Connolly has argued that ܡܕܝܚܐ might be a translation of ἀπλότης, 'liberality' and 'simplicity'. If this surmise is considered as possible, it holds good in Syriac also, where the word has the more appropriate meaning of 'kindness', 'gentleness', 'meekness'; see Vocabulaire chaldéen-arabe, and Dictionnaire de la langue chaldéenne. One might also compare the sense of the word in Odes xxvii. 3; xlii. 2, in the sense of 'outstretching [of hands]', 'extension', and possibly 'crucifixion'.

In the third line the opinion expressed by Labourt that instead of ܡܕܝܚܐ we might read ܡܕܝܚܐ is improbable without changing the verb ܡܕܝܚܐ as well.

set as His way' (so also Connolly). The Syriac wording, however, would be somewhat weak. Ode xviii. 7, contains a similar phrase, and in view of the uncertainty of the real meaning of the sentence, we have left in the translation a rendering which is more in harmony with the ordinary course of a Syriac way of expression.

* Frankenberg suggests the elimination of the fem. He' from ܠܗܝܬ. This is good but not necessary. When emphasis is intended in a sentence the suffixes may be used redundantly.

v. 14. One could also translate ܠܗܝܬ 'and I walked'. We have retained the reading of the MS. which, by exhibiting a dot over the taw, induces us to translate 'it proceeded', referring by it to 'way'. Gressmann proposes to read ܠܗܝܬ 'steps', and Frankenberg ܠܗܝܬ.

The expression 'the traces of the light' (ἵχνη τοῦ φωτός) is obscure; it occurs again in Ode xv. 6, and evidently has a special meaning: the ἵχνη are footprints which one follows: the context suggests walking.

v. 15. Instead of ܠܗܝܬ 'He was served' or 'wrought' of the MS., we have suggested the slight emendation of ܠܗܝܬ 'He was sent'.

We cannot say 'By it (knowledge) He was served', on account of the feminine suffix required in that case; so we render 'By Him' and refer back to verse 12.

In the last clause of the verse a similar difficulty arises: we have rendered it as 'the Father pleased in the Son' rather than 'Wisdom (the Mother)'.

It is possible that we have here an allusion to God's delight in Wisdom as his chief workman (Prov. viii. 30), the 'Son' having displaced the original Wisdom-idea. In that case we should have read ܠܗܝܬ for ܠܗܝܬ (the mere addition of a single dot).

v. 17. Frankenberg's suggestion that we should eliminate the dālath of ܠܗܝܬ and consider the word as a direct complement to ܠܗܝܬ is not necessary, in spite of the plausible meaning which the sentence would have: To announce the coming of the Lord to . . .

Bruston proposes to read ܠܗܝܬ 'announce well'. This emendation is, however, improbable, inasmuch as an expletive particle is commonly placed after the verb; further, it is obviously erroneous to use here the particle ܠܗܝܬ in the sense of 'well'.

v. 18. The suggestion made by Gressmann and followed by Kittel that ܣܠܬܐ can be taken as a past participle ܣܠܬܐ , is not very good as far as the Syriac is concerned. The paronomasia in the text should be noted.

v. 19. Gressmann unnecessarily proposes ܕܣܠܬܐ 'and He is seen' for ܕܣܠܬܐ 'and He sees' of the MS.

v. 20. Cod H has ܕܣܠܬܐ . A yodh is frequently added by the copyist at the end of the 3rd pers. fem. sing. of the aorist. Its insertion is more frequent in modern than in ancient manuscripts, and in the case of the two MSS. of the Odes, it is much less used by B than by H. Grammatically this yodh is erroneous. See Mingana, Syr. Gram., No. 204.

v. 23. Gressmann proposes unnecessarily ܕܣܠܬܐ 'their breath' for ܕܣܠܬܐ 'their harmonies'. Grimme, favoured by Kittel, considers ܕܣܠܬܐ to be a mistake for ܕܣܠܬܐ 'etwas Widerstrebendes'. This emendation does not seem, however, to be in harmony with the verse. Probably a ܕܣܠܬܐ which appears twice in the following member of the verse, has by inadvertence been omitted by the scribe. The meaning it gives is obvious and appropriate. Connolly's suggestion ܕܣܠܬܐ becomes unnecessary.

v. 24. Gressmann unnecessarily proposes ܕܣܠܬܐ 'voice and mouth' instead of ܕܣܠܬܐ 'the voice of the mouth' of the MS.

v. 25. In the text we have printed ܕܣܠܬܐ and added the following note, 'Perhaps ܕܣܠܬܐ '. As it happens, this is actually the reading of the MS.!

Expository Notes.

There are a number of obscurities in this Ode, both in the text and in the translation. We have not succeeded in resolving them all. It is clear that the Odist is occupied in the first instance with the Incarnation, considered as a diminution of Deity for the sake of the human race, who are thus made capable of an elevation that should correspond with the Divine descent. Salvation consists in the right understanding of this mystery; it is a case of Salvation by Knowledge, so that on the surface it might seem as if the Hymn were Gnostic: but not all that affects Gnosis is Gnostic.

The word which we have translated 'impulse' in verse 1 is literally 'running'. The suggestion arises as to whether the language may not be based upon Cant. i. 3, 'Draw me, we will run after thee', where the person addressed is the Beloved. Thus the identification of the Beloved leads to the identification of Canticles as the source of the 'running'. It is a 'chase of joy', because the text in Canticles goes on with 'we will rejoice and exult in thee'. The 'helper' in v. 3 of the Ode may, perhaps, be involved in 'draw me, we will run'.

If the foregoing identification of the sources of the Odist is correct, we need have no doubt that the title Odes of Solomon is primitive, and that the Odes have been attached to the group of Salomonic writings.

Dr. Abbott has made a similar suggestion of dependence upon Canticles (see 139 ff.).

We had the advantage for the interpretation of this Ode in the discovery of quotations made from it by certain early Fathers. The most important was a passage in Eusebius, Demonstratio Evangelica (vi. 9, p. 267), to which we have drawn attention in a previous chapter. We showed that Eusebius, commenting on the 144th Psalm, explains that the Word of God, out of His kindness to men and His knowledge of them, minished Himself of His proper greatness, in order to make the human race worthy of His own knowledge. The coincidence in the language and in the thought with the expressions and ideas of the Ode enabled us to say that Eusebius had the Ode in his mind and was using it. We were able to show that the Ode had also been used in Syriac by the Acts of Thomas, (ed. Wright, p. 88), a reference which was valuable, in view of the known antiquity of these Acts and their Gnostic character.

The argument of the Odist that the Word became like us in order that we might become like him, may be illustrated from Ephrem's Carmina Nisibena (No. 3, p. 79):

'He Himself in His goodness put on the human form, that He might gather us together and make us like to Himself. These things were done to our advantage, because that nature (lit. substance) became like to us, in order that we might become like to it.'

It is quite possible that Ephrem is working from our Ode as a base.

The same thing is true of the fourth of the Epiphany Hymns, where the language is used of the putting on of Christ in the act of baptism, by those who have previously put off the old man symbolically by a change of raiment. Thus we are told:

iv. 11. 'How did the great one, who in His love was minished (ܐܕܡܢ ܕܥܠܝܐ) become persecuted by those who denied Him, and was adored by the watching (angels)!'.

12. 'Let us become like Him who made Himself less than all and who being thus minished made all men great.'

(See also Ephrem. R. E. iii. 55, 58, 132).

The Incarnation is regarded as the Incarnation of the pre-existent Logos, who is here spoken of under the term Wisdom, in harmony with the language of Prov. viii. 22 ('the Lord created me'). It is important to note that the verse of Proverbs is here used in the language of the LXX: Κύριος ἔκτισέ με. Elsewhere the Odist uses the same passage in the Hebrew form, 'the Lord possessed me'; see Ode xli. Thus, if the unity of the Odes be conceded, the author was acquainted with both forms of the text, which is more than can be said of the Christian teachers for the next two centuries, who systematically bombard the Jew with the text of the LXX.

As the Incarnation is the incarnation of the Divine Wisdom, it was natural that salvation should consist in the knowledge of the Lord, and that we should have an article in the creed on the Abolition of Ignorance corresponding to the conventional one on the Forgiveness of Sins. The writer says so positively, verse 13:

'To Knowledge He hath appointed His way:'¹

(which is a variation on Prov. viii. 22, 'The Lord created me His way'); and verse 27:

'Ignorance hath been destroyed because the Knowledge of the Lord has arrived.'

We have shown in a previous chapter that traces of this formula are to be found in the letters of Ignatius:

ἡφανίζετο κακίας ἄγνοια· καθηρέϊτο παλαιὰ βασιλεία.

the new Kingdom is inferred to be the Knowledge of the Lord. We see now that our position in regard to the ἀπόρροια (of Wisdom) in Ode vi, that it represents the Knowledge of the Lord which covers the earth, was a correct one.

Ignatius continues his reference to the abolition of ignorance with the words 'When God was manifested as man for the renewal of eternal life'; the abolition was the result of the incarnation, exactly as in the Odes. And we have shown in a previous chapter that Marcus the Gnostic also taught that the 'abolition of ignorance became the knowledge of Jesus'.

¹ Batiffol suggests a slight emendation:

'Il a dirigé ma voie vers la science.'

We can now see why the Odist says at the close of his song that 'there shall be nothing without life or without knowledge', for from his point of view eternal life consists in the knowledge of the Lord. We have something to the same effect in the Gospel of John (xvii. 3):

'This is life eternal, that they might know thee and Jesus Christ.'

There is nothing necessarily Gnostic about it in a heretical sense; but it might easily become a point of departure for Gnostic teaching.

The term ܐܠܗܐ ܕܝܫܘܥ should be the exact equivalent of ἄγνοια; but it is good Syriac and not merely a translation. Cf. Ephrem (ed. Mitchell, p. 173):

ܐܠܗܐ ܕܝܫܘܥ ܐܠܗܐ ܕܝܫܘܥ

Stölten has pointed out that Marcus the Gnostic, of whom Irenaeus has so much to say, has an expression very like that in the Odes. Amongst other silly sports, in some of which early orthodox people also joined, he amused himself with Gematria over the name of Christ and the name of Jesus. The knowledge of the Lord, according to Marcus, was the knowledge of His name, and the letters and numbers thereof. When the name of Jesus with its six sacred letters was disclosed, then 'those who knew him ceased from ignorance, and mounted from death to life; the Name itself became to them the Way to the Father of Truth. For the Father of the universe willed the abolition of ignorance and the destruction of death. But the abolition of ignorance became the knowledge of Him'. (Iren. ed. Mass. 76.)

This is very close to the language of the Ode. It is capable of an orthodox interpretation, and it is possible that Marcus was only stupid and not exactly heretical at this point. He was proving an orthodox truth in a foolish manner: the truth itself was in the Ode. We may, perhaps, take this as an instance of the ill-luck that the Odes had in falling into the hands of the Valentinian Gnostics, of whom Marcus appears to have been one. We cannot with Stölten call it a case of Gnostic parallel. It is a quotation, a Biblical text.

The expression about the singers and seers who are to come before Him and to appear before Him, is obscure as to the seers: but the sentence itself imitates, in a Targumist manner, the language of Psalm xlii. 2:

'When shall I come and appear before God?'

The Peshitta says, 'When shall I come to see thy face?' The Targum has a circumlocution, and talks of 'seeing the Majesty': evidently the Syriac Psalter came too near to saying that God could be seen, and various ways were found of avoiding such an expression. The repetition of 'before Him' and the introduction of the passive 'shall be seen' instead of 'see' is in the manner of the Targums. In order to understand the situation more clearly we need to recall to our minds the offensiveness to the monotheistic thinker of such expressions as imply an actual vision of God. For instance, Philo has to explain away the passage in Exodus (xxiv. 10) where the elders of Israel 'Ate and drank and saw God also.'

His solution is:

'They saw the place of God.'—De Somniis, i. 11.

A severer theology would even have taken exception to such an expression as the 'place of God'.

Another instance, which shows how carefully the thought of an actual vision of God was avoided, will be found in the Ascension of Isaiah, where it is a capital charge against the prophet that he said he had seen the Lord. We remember how this is softened in the Fourth Gospel, after the manner of the Targumist, by saying that 'Isaiah said these things when he saw His glory'. Here the 'Glory' is one of the Divine Attributes substituted for God.

This then is the religious atmosphere in which the Odist finds himself. His answer to the question of the Syriac Psalter,

'When shall I come and see God?'

is that the seers will, indeed, come, they will come before God (as the Targumist speech constantly puts it), and they will not see God, but they will be seen before Him. The Authorized Version has drifted into something of the same circumlocutory speech.

In tracing the Biblical affinities of this Ode, special attention should be paid to the passage (v. 12) that is in dependence upon the rooth Psalm:

'He hath given Him (or Himself) to be seen of them that are His:
In order that they might recognize Him that made them,
And that they might not suppose that they came of themselves.'

It was evident at a glance that the passage was under the influence of the rooth Psalm :

‘It is He that made us,
Not we ourselves.’

The late Professor Menzies remarked acutely on this identification, that the influence of the Psalm went further: for the Revisers of the Old Testament have altered the conventional ‘not we ourselves’ to ‘and we are His’. And this emended reading is reflected in the Ode in the form

‘to be seen of them that are His.’

At the same time, it is clear that the displaced reading is also in the Ode, in the words,

‘that they might not suppose that they came (or were) of themselves.’

What then is the origin of this new rendering which turns up so unexpectedly? It is in the Hebrew Bible itself, which advises us to read for וְלֹא אֲנַחְנוּ (‘and not we’)

וְלוֹ אֲנַחְנוּ (‘and to Him are we’).

The Ḳeri, as it is called, which the reader is advised to substitute for the written text, is also found in the Targum, or popular exposition of the text. The Targum says very clearly :

עֲבַד יְהוָה וּדְלִיָּהּ אֲנַחְנָא

‘He made us, and His we are.’

The Peshiṭta text takes the other reading.

From the fact that the Odist knows and uses both readings, we are again confirmed in our opinion of his close and careful scholarship. Remembering, too, his habit of picking up the sequence of his thoughts from the text on which he is working, we see that we must go back to the words

‘Know that the Lord, He is God,’ for the motive of the Odist’s remark about

‘Recognizing Him that made them,’ and the consequent statement that ‘It is to knowledge that He hath appointed His way.’

The continuity of the Ode is not on the surface, but it is not so far underground that it cannot be traced. The Odist often turns back to strike over again the note of a previous verse: thus in the passage which we have been discussing,

‘He hath given Him to be seen of them that are His,’
he has turned back to the previous verse, ‘I trembled not when I saw Him’, sc. the Christ who has assumed human nature.

We have not yet exhausted the influence of the 100th Psalm; for the Odist has worked in the opening sentence of the Psalm:

‘Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands:
Serve the Lord with gladness,
Come before His presence with singing.’

Here we have the clue to the introduction of ‘Those that have songs of the coming of the Lord;

That they may go forth to meet Him and may sing to Him with joy,’ and to the reference to the question, which we have already discussed, in the 42nd Psalm,

‘When shall I come and appear before God?’

The transition from the Knowledge of God to the Song of God, which at first sight is discontinuous, finds its explanation in the closer study of the 100th Psalm. We shall probably be justified in maintaining that the Odist, whom we know to have been acquainted with the Targum, has taken from thence the reading, which was suggested above by the Ḳeri of the Hebrew text.

Professor Menzies, to whom we have referred, thought that the use of the 100th Psalm with its obvious Gentile leanings was an indication that the Odes were what he calls ‘Psalms of the Proselytes’, viz. of proselytes to Judaism in the first century. We have referred to this theory in our Introduction.

In this Ode and in Ode x there is an expression that occurs twice over, which we have translated by ‘The traces of the Light’.

The expression is a curious one, and by its recurrence suggests that it has been introduced into the Odes ab extra. But where shall we find any such expression? Is it Biblical or Mystical or Gnostic? In Ode vii we are told that 'to Knowledge He has appointed His way . . . and set over it the traces of His light, and I walked (or it proceeded) therein from the beginning to the end'. The language suggests that 'traces' are really 'footprints'. In Ode x, the Odist says of the redeemed Gentiles that 'they confessed me in high places; and the traces of the light were set upon their hearts; and they walked in my life', where again there is a connexion between the 'footprints' and the 'walk'.

The nearest Biblical passage that shows any parallelism with the expression in the Odes is Sirach l. 29:

μακάριος ὃς ἐν τούτοις ἀναστραφῆσεται, καὶ θεὶς αὐτὰ ἐπὶ καρδίαν αὐτοῦ σοφισθήσεται.
ἐὰν γὰρ αὐτὰ ποιήσῃ, πρὸς πάντα ἰσχύσει, ὅτι φῶς Κυρίου τὸ ἵχνος αὐτοῦ.

This is not very easy to translate; the English revisers present us with Blessed is he that shall be exercised in these things;

And he that layeth them up in his heart shall become wise;
For if he do them, he shall be strong for all things,
For the light of the Lord is his guide:
(marg. footstep.)

The connexion in Sirach between the underlined words and the language of the Odes should be noted. Further illumination seems necessary.

ODE VIII

- 1 Open ye, open ye your hearts to the exultation of the Lord:
And let your love abound from the heart, and even to the lips: Cf. Hos. xiv. 2, Heb. xiii. 15.
- 2 To bring forth fruits to the Lord, a holy life,
And to talk watchfully in His light.
- 3 Rise up and stand erect,
Ye who were sometimes brought low;
- 4 Ye who were in silence, speak out,
(Now) that your mouth hath been opened.

- 5 Ye who were despised, be lifted up;
Now that your righteousness has been lifted up;
6 For the right hand of the Lord is with you;
And He will be your helper.
7 And peace hath been prepared for you,
Before ever your war happened.

(Christ speaks.)

- 8 Hear the word of truth,
And receive the knowledge of the Most High 9 Your flesh does not know what I am saying to you;
Nor your raiment¹ what I am showing to you;
10 Keep my secret, ye who are kept by it;
11 Keep my faith, ye who are kept by it.
12 And understand my knowledge,
Ye who know me in truth:
13 Love me with affection,
Ye who love:
14 For I do not turn away my face from them that are mine;
For I know them.
15 Before they came into being,
I took knowledge of them,
And on their faces I set my seal.
16 I fashioned their members;
My own breasts I prepared for them;
That they might drink my holy milk and live thereby.

Cf. Clem. Hom.
xix. 20.

¹ So MS.

- 17 I took pleasure in them,
And I am not ashamed of them.
- 18 For my workmanship are they,
And the strength of my thoughts:
- 19 Who then shall stand up against my handywork?
Or who is there that is not subject to them?
- 20 I willed, and fashioned mind and heart;,
And they are mine.
And by my own right hand I set my elect ones.
- 21 And my righteousness goeth before them;
And they shall not be detached from my name:
For it is with them.

Cf. Ode xlii. fn.

Cf. Isa. lviii. 8.

(The Odist.)

- 22 Pray and abide continually in the love of the Lord;
Ye beloved ones, in the Beloved;
And ye who are kept, in Him that lived (again);
And ye that are saved, in Him that was saved.
- 23 And ye shall be found incorrupt in all ages,
To the name of your Father.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Gressmann suggests the possible  'let it gush forth' instead of  'let it be multiplied'. Cf. Odes xvi. 2, xxxvi. 7, xl. 2 (bis). Although  is generally used transitively, it is sometimes also used intransitively.

v. 2. Schulthess has suggested a dālath before  'of the life'. This, however, is not probable; the 'holy life' is a permutative term ().

to 'fruits'; and Barth's hypothesis that we must read ܣܠ ܫܡܝܥܐ 'the Living and the Holy' is inadmissible in Syriac. Flemming's reading ܕܚܝܬܐ ܕܡܕܐ 'savagery', 'rudeness', instead of 'with watchfulness', 'with diligence', 'with fervency', is not good. Likewise in the case of ܕܡܕܐ 'to speak' which Schulthess proposes to change into ܕܡܕܐ ܕܡܕܐ 'to walk'. In verses 1 and 4 mention is made of speech and not of walk. To change the text so as to give meaning of 'Pour apporter des fruits au Seigneur, vivants, saints, et pour remplir la stupidité de sa lumière' (Bruston) is impossible in Syriac.

v. 9. The MS. has ܕܡܕܐ 'your raiment'. We have suggested in the text ܕܡܕܐ 'your hearts'. This is possibly a daring suggestion in view of the mention of 'your body' in the preceding line, and of the emphasis laid on the 'coats of skin' in Ode xxv. 8.

v. 12. Influenced by verse 14, Gressmann proposes the possible emendation ܕܡܕܐ 'are known to me' to ܕܡܕܐ 'know me' of the MS.

v. 20. Barth's suggestion that for ܕܡܕܐ we should read ܕܡܕܐ is useless; both forms are equally used in Syriac. His hypothesis that we should, perhaps, read ܕܡܕܐ or ܕܡܕܐ (my fashioned ones) in accordance with the verb previously used, is unnecessary.

v. 21. Instead of ܕܡܕܐ it would be better Syriac to read ܕܡܕܐ without the slightest change to the meaning.

v. 22. In the text we have placed the erroneous note 'Cod. ܕܡܕܐ'. The MS. actually bears the reading of the printed text. We translate 'pray and abide continually' rather than 'pray continually and abide'. A parallel for the existence of the ܐ between ܕܡܕܐ and ܕܡܕܐ may be seen in Philoxenus, Discourses, i, p. 215:

ܕܡܕܐ ܕܡܕܐ ܕܡܕܐ

and Aphrahat (vol. ii, p. 140):

ܕܡܕܐ ܕܡܕܐ ܕܡܕܐ

Bruston believes that ܕܡܕܐ is to be regarded as a substantive, quaestio: (écartez l'investigation). This is quite improbable.

Expository Notes.

This is the first of the Odes that is clearly marked with a dual personality, the Odist becoming at a certain point in the song the Lord Himself. A number of Odes show the same peculiarity, which is common in the canonical Psalter : cf. for example, the change in the second Psalm, where the Psalmist makes way for the Father in verse 8 and for the Son in verse 9. The difficulty will lie in the delimitation of the speakers. In the present Ode the change occurs at the eighth verse ; it has been prepared for by an oracular appeal to 'hear the Word of Truth'. Perhaps the poet re-appears in verse 22 : all the intervening verses are ex ore Christi.

This is the Ode in which Dr. Bernard suspected allusion to the disciplina arcani, in the words, 'Keep my secret, ye who are kept by it' ; and we have shown that there is a striking parallel in the baptismal lectures of Cyril of Jerusalem. But here again we have the difficulty to meet that the formula is an ancient one, and is probably taken from a saying of Jesus in an uncanonical Gospel, and goes back ultimately to the prophet Isaiah (see Isa. xxiv. 16 in the Hexapla). The saying of Jesus will be found in Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 10 :

οὐ γὰρ φθονῶν, φησί, παρήγγειλεν ὁ Κύριος ἐν τινι εὐαγγελίῳ, Μυστήριον ἔμοι καὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς τοῦ οἴκου μου.

and in Clem. Hom. xix. 20 :

Μεμνήμεθα τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ διδασκάλου, ὡς ἐντελλόμενος ἡμῖν εἶπεν·
Τὰ μυστήρια ἔμοι καὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς μου φυλάξατε.

Such a saying cannot have had a baptismal reference in the first instance, however much it may have lent itself to such use in later days.

We may also compare Lactantius, Instit. vii. 26, which has much similarity with the language of the Ode :

'Nos defendere hanc (doctrinam) publice atqueasserere non solemus, Deo iubente, ut quieti ac silentes arcanum eius in abdito atque intra nostram conscientiam teneamus, abscondi enim tegique mysterium quam fidelissime oportet, maxime a nobis, qui nomen fidei gerimus.'

Wensinck, in his recent translation of the Dove of Bar Hebraeus, has some excellent remarks upon mystical reticence, but does not see that in the following passage Bar Hebraeus is quoting from Isaiah :

'The Holy Scripture says concerning them ; there is a secrecy between me and my house-mates ; and it warns them not to publish these things, but to conceal them, and it does not allow the house-mates to scrutinize them, save only in oral discussion.’¹

An acquaintance with mystical language and esoteric teaching makes it clear that the injunction in the Odes has nothing to do with baptismal ritual.

It is to be noted, however, that in Pistis Sophia 377 the rule is applied to baptism : e.g.

‘Occulte hoc μυστήριον, ne date id homini cuivis, εἰ μήτι facturo res omnes, quas dixi vobis in meis ἐντολαῖς. Hoc οὖν est μυστήριον ἀληθείας βαπτίσματος horum qui remittent eorum peccata.’

Here the actual reference, and the allusion to Matt. xxviii, show that baptism is the mystery that is to be concealed.

In this Ode and in the next there is an allusion to a state of War from which the saints either have been delivered or may expect to be. We put the two passages side by side for comparison :

Ode viii. 7.

Peace hath been prepared for you,
Before ever your war happened.

Ode ix. 6.

For I announce peace to you His saints ;
That none of those who hear may fall in war.

It is hard to say what the war and the peace are to which the Odist refers. It is very difficult to limit the language to purely spiritual conflicts, or to assume that it only means that the saints shall get the victory : but at the end of the ninth Ode he seems to say that ‘Victory is yours’, and that this victory is due to the inscription of the names of the faithful in a book of life.

In the eighth Ode the saints have gone through a variety of conflicts : they have been brought low, put to silence, despised. Some struggle has evidently gone on, which is not covered by the individual conflict for inward illumination and liberty. But what the battle is we have no means of determining, nor with whom.

As the Odist goes on in verse 9 to describe a crown of precious stones about which wars have arisen, we must probably refer these wars to the one mentioned in verse 7. The crown, however, is the Truth, just as it is in Ode i, where no wars are mentioned. This suggests that after all the reference is to spiritual conflicts. The statement that ‘righteousness has taken it and given it to you', would mean, 'the crown is yours as the Victor's right'. There is, however, still much that is obscure in the Odist's language.

¹ Wensinck, l.c., p. xxviii.

Reviewing the whole Ode we see very definite traces of Syriac influence. The assonances in verse 12 ('understand my knowledge', &c.) should be noted, also the reference in verse 21 to Isa. lviii. 8, which is quoted again in Ode xx, where see the argument that the prophet is being quoted from the Syriac. The sentence

'They shall not be deprived of my Name,
For it is with them,'

is to be understood as a Targum substitution of the Name for the Person, so that it really means,

'They shall not be without me,
For I am with them.'

This is the Odist's way of working over Isa. lviii. 9:

'Thou shalt cry,
And He shall say, Here I am.'

ODE IX

- 1 Open your ears;
And I will speak to you.
- 2 Give me your souls;
That I may also give you my soul.
- 3 The Word of the Lord and His good pleasures,
The holy thought that He has thought concerning His Messiah.
- 4 For in the will of the Lord is your life;
And His intention is (your) everlasting life;
And your end¹ is incorruptible.

¹ Or, your perfection.

5^a Be enriched in God the Father,
And receive the intention of the Most High;

5^b Be strong and be redeemed by His grace.

6 For I announce peace, to you His saints;
That none of those who hear may fall in war.

Cf. John iii. 16.
Cf. Isa. xxviii. 16.

7 And that those who have known Him may not perish,
And that those who receive (Him) may not be ashamed.

Ps. xx. (xxi.) 4.

8 An everlasting crown is Truth;
Blessed are they who set it on their heads:

Ps. xx. (xxi.) 4
(LXX).

9 A stone of great price (it is);
And the wars were on account of the crown.

10 And righteousness hath taken it,
And hath given it to you.

11 Put on the crown in the true covenant of the Lord;
And all those who have conquered shall be inscribed¹ in His book.

12 For their inscription² is the victory, which is yours;
And she (Victory) sees you before her, and wills that you shall be saved.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 7. Gressmann suggests יְהוָה for יְהוָה. The meaning of both is identical and the change is possible but not necessary. The case would be similar if we proposed to substitute for it the verb יָשַׁב as Wellhausen has done. Cf. Ode xix. 5, &c.

¹ Lit. booked.

² Lit. book.

v. 11. Flemming's suggestion of אמת 'truth' for אמת 'true', 'firm', the adjective referring to covenant, is not sound.

v. 12. It is possible to read with Frankenberg אמך 'your' for אמך 'to you'.

The important verses in this Ode from a critical point of view are verses 8-11, in which Truth is spoken of as an everlasting crown and a crown of victory to be placed on the head of the believer. The Odist makes an apparent discontinuity of expression by saying (1) that Truth is a crown; (2) that this crown is a stone of great price. The discontinuity disappears when we observe the source from which the writer is working: it is the LXX rendering of Ps. xx. (xxi.) 4:

ἔθηκεας ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ στέφανον ἐκ λίθου τιμίου.

Here the 'precious stone' is an attempt to translate the perplexing זָהָב of the Hebrew, which in the English Bible appears as 'pure gold'. Our Odist has in his presentation of the Hebrew treated 'the precious stone' as an apposition to the 'crown'. In his translation by 'precious stone' he follows the LXX very closely, and it is to be observed that this is not the reading of the Peshiṭta, which says 'a glorious crown'. This is the more curious, because the Peshiṭta when it translates מִן זָהָב וּמִפְּזָהָב in Psalm xviii. (xix.) 10 renders by מִפְּזָהָב וּמִפְּזָהָב ('of gold and precious stones'). We cannot, therefore, be sure that there is no influence from the Peshiṭta on the Ode.

Expository Notes.

We referred in the previous Ode to the prevalence or possibility of a state of war that may affect the saints, and which occurs in this Ode also. The Ode is spoken by the poet as prophet or orator. The reference to 'those who hear' (i. e. 'you who hear') depends on verse 1, 'open your ears'.

This Ode is one of the group of coronation Odes mentioned under the first Ode. It is a royal crown in one point of view, for the language is borrowed from Ps. xx. (xxi.), in which it is said in the opening verse: 'the King shall joy in thy strength, O God'. The crown is, then, the King's, and apparently the Odist regards the Psalm as Messianic, with Christ for King ; it can thus be described as 'the holy thought which God has thought concerning his Christ'. The Odist also describes the Crown as a Victor's crown, so that this Ode does not come under the description of epithalamium. It certainly is not the baptismal circlet which is described in these terms.

The reference to the 20th Psalm will help us to explain not only the 'crown' and the 'King Messiah', but the apparently irrelevant verse 4 :

'The Lord's intention is everlasting life,
Your end is incorruption.'

For this Psalm was in very early times taken as predictive of immortality, not only of the King, who asks life and gets it, but also of the believer. Irenaeus has a special section, in which he discusses the question how souls, which admittedly have a beginning, can become incorruptible :

quomodo animae cum sint generabiles in futurum incorruptibiles perseverant.

Amongst the considerations which he adduces are the following :

Ps. xx. (xxi.) 4. Et iterum de salvando homine sic ait ; Vitam petit a te et tribuisti ei longitudinem dierum in saeculum saeculi.— Iren. (ed. Mass. 169).

Here then the Psalm in question is applied to man generally ; and to establish the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. But this is not all that we learn from Irenaeus. He not only proves immortality of the soul from the Scripture, but he argues it as follows. Immortality is not natural : it is the gift of the Father and the gift of grace :

'Tanquam Patre omnium donante et in saeculum saeculi perseverantiam his qui salvi fiunt : non enim in nobis, neque ex nostra natura vita est ; sed secundum Dei gratiam datur.'

This is exactly what the Odist has been saying ; the obscurity of whose sentences and sequences disappears when we put the passage of Irenaeus alongside with them. Both of them are trying to say on the basis of the 20th (21st) Psalm that the gift of God is eternal life : the immortality of the soul is in the will of the Father by His grace.

It appears, then, that the ninth Ode of Solomon is based on the 20th Psalm of David. From this Psalm comes the Christ, the gift of immortality, and the crown of precious stones. The discovery is an important one, for we had already shown that the first Ode was a pendant to the first Psaim; now we say that the ninth Ode is a pendant to the 21st Psalm. We shall come across more cases presently of the dependence of the Odists upon the Psalter: the 28th Ode, for example, will require the 22nd Psalm for its key; and so, no doubt, in other cases. We may not be able to generalize the dependence into a formula: but it is at least conceivable that just as Bardaisan made a Psalter of 150 Psalms in imitation of the Davidic collection, so we have a similar practice on the part of the Odists, though we may not know how far the imitation goes.

The identification of the underlying Psalm may help us to a conjectural solution of the wars that issue in peace to which we alluded above. Is it not possible that the writer is simply affirming the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints, who will attain peace after the wars of this life? This would explain the sequence:

‘that none of those who hear may fall in the war;
And that those who have known Him may not perish,
And that those who receive Him may not be ashamed.’

ODE X

- 1 The Lord hath directed my mouth by His Word;
And He hath opened my heart by His Light.
- 2 And He hath caused to dwell in me His deathless life;
And gave me to speak the fruit of His peace:
- 3 To convert the souls of those who are willing to come to Him;
And to lead captive a good captivity for freedom.
(Christ speaks.)
- 4 I was strengthened and made mighty and took the world captive;
And (the captivity) became to me for the praise of the Most High and of God my Father.

Cf. Ps. lxxvii. (lxxviii.)
18.

5 And the Gentiles were gathered together who had been scattered abroad:

And I was unpolluted by my love (for them),
Because they confessed¹ me in high places.

6 And the traces of the light were set upon their hearts;
And they walked in my life and were saved,
And they became my people for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Instead of 'hath directed' we may also translate 'hath rectified'. The verb قَالَ has always more the meaning of 'rectification' than of 'direction'.

v. 5. The MS. has the two dots of the plural on حَسْبِي 'by my love', and this gives 'by my sins', which may be found in harmony with the preceding verb, 'I was un-polluted'. The application of this meaning to Christ does not seem to be very suitable, and consequently we have suggested the elimination of the siamē points, and translated 'by my love'. We might, in accordance with Ode viii. 22, read حَسْبِي 'in my beloved ones', but this is a violent emendation. Barnes suggests حَسْبِي 'by their sins'. In the following line, Gunkel proposes without necessity حَسْبِي for حَسْبِي.

v. 6. The word حَسْبِي might be translated 'my people' from حَسْبِي, and might also be taken as the preposition حَسْبِي and be translated 'with me', 'and they became with me for ever and ever'.

Expository Notes.

In this Ode again the writer, after a short preface in which he declares himself an evangelist of the new faith, begins to speak in the Person of Christ and so continues to the end of the Ode.

The chief point to be noticed in this little Ode is the allusion to the conversion of the Gentiles. The language is apologetic. Their presence in the Church has not polluted the Christ, whose love had won them. The sympathy with the Gentiles is touched with irony of a delicate kind towards those who thought them a pollution. The Gentiles are still somewhat on sufferance, shall we say at Antioch? The language does not seem to belong to a late period of ecclesiastical growth; the Scriptures, too, which underlie the statements of the Odist are either Old Testament passages which are already in use in the New, or, which is much the same thing, extracted from early collections of Testimonia. The 'leading captive captivity' is Ps. lxvii. (lxviii.) 18, and is in use in Eph. iv. 8. The Gentiles who confess Christ should be understood in the sense of ἐξομολογούνται (as in Ode v. 1); and the underlying Scripture is Ps. xvii. (xviii.) 50, where the Psalmist, speaking in his own person at the end of the Psalm says ἐξομολογήσομαί σοι ἐν ἔθνεσιν, Κύριε·

¹ Or, gave thanks to.

The testimony is known to us from Rom. xv. 9, where it is introduced as follows:

'And that the Gentiles should glorify God for His mercy, as it is written, I will give thanks to thee among the Gentiles and will sing Psalms in thy name.'

Here St. Paul treats the ancient Psalmist as a representative Gentile. That the Gentiles should become 'my people' is from Hosea (ii. 23):

καλέσω τὸν οὐ-λαόν-μου λαόν-μου· καὶ τὴν οὐκ-ἡγαπημένην ἡγαπημένην.

a testimony which appears in Rom. ix. 25 and in 1 Pet. ii. 10, and in Testimonies against the Jews (e. g. Cyp. Test. i. 19).

For the 'traces' or 'footprints' of the Light, see Ode vii.

ODE XI

- 1 My heart was cloven and its flower appeared;
And grace sprang up in it;
And it brought forth fruit to the Lord.
- 2 For the Most High clave (my heart) by His Holy Spirit,
And exposed towards Him my affection.¹
And filled me with His love.

¹ Lit. reins.

3 And His cleaving of (my heart) became my salvation,
And I ran in the way, in His peace,
In the way of truth.

4 From the beginning and even to the end
I received His knowledge.

Cf. Aphrahat i. 416. 5 And I was established upon the rock of truth,
Where He had set me up.

6 And speaking waters drew near my lips
From the fountain of the Lord plenteously.

7 And I drank and was inebriated
With the living water that doth not die ;

Cf. E hes. v. 17, 18. 8^a And my inebriation was not one without knowledge,

8^b But I forsook vanity :

9 And I turned to the Most High my God,
And I was enriched by His bounty ;

10 And I forsook the folly cast away over the earth ;
And I stripped it off and cast it from me.

Cf. Ps. civ. (ciii.) 2. 11 And the Lord renewed me in His raiment,
And possessed me by His light ;

12 And from above He gave me rest without corruption ;
And I became like the land which blossoms and rejoices in its fruits :

13 And the Lord (wás) like the sun (shining) upon the face of the land ;

14 My eyes were enlightened,
And my face received the dew :

- 15 And my nostrils had the pleasure
Of the pleasant odour of the Lord.
- 16 And He carried me into His Paradise,
Where is the abundance of the pleasure of the Lord ;
- 17 And I worshipped the Lord on account of His glory ;
- 18 And I said, Blessed, O Lord, are they
That are planted in thy land,
And that have a place in thy Paradise,
- 19 And that grow in the growth of thy trees; Cf. Ps. Sol xiv. 2.
And have changed from darkness to light.
- 20 Behold ! all thy servants are fair,
They who do good works,
And turn away from wickedness to thy pleasantness.
- 21 And they have turned away from themselves the bitterness of Cf. Ephr. (R.E. iii.
the trees, 588).
When they were planted in thy land.
- 22 And everything became like a remembrance of thyself,
And a memorial for ever of thy faithful servants.
- 23 For there is abundant room in thy Paradise ;
And nothing is useless therein : Ephr. (R.E. iii.
584).
But everything is filled with fruit ; Cf. 2 Pet. i. 8.
- 24 Glory be to thee, O Lord, the delight of Paradise for ever.

Hallelujah.

Expository Notes.

This lovely Psalm was known to Ephrem, as we have shown in one of our introductory chapters, and perhaps also to Ignatius and Barnabas. For the inebriation which is caused by the living water we may compare Cyril of Jerusalem :

‘They are drunken, yet sober . . . a drunkenness contrary to that of the body ; for this last even causes forgetfulness of what was known.’—Cyril, Cat. xvii. 19.

Cyril is speaking of the gift of the Spirit, from the day of Pentecost onwards, but he discloses the origin of his own language as to the God-intoxicated folk, and incidentally the origin of the language of the Odist ; for he refers to Psalm xxxv (xxxvi) :

μεθυσθήσονται ἀπὸ πύοτος τοῦ οἴκου σου καὶ τὸν χειμάρρον τῆς τρυφῆς σου ποτιεῖς αὐτούς· οὔτι παρὰ σοὶ πηγὴ ζωῆς. (Targ. ‘drops of living water’.)
Ps. xxxv. (xxxvi.) 9, 10.

Here we have clearly the key to the Odist’s expressions ; here is the fountain of the Lord of which the believer drinks plenteously, and here is the divine intoxication.

We should compare the Odist’s treatment of the Psalm with a similar passage in the 28th Ode. Here we have as follows :

‘I have been set on his immortal pinions ;
And deathless life embraced me
And gave me to drink ;
And from that life is the spirit within me,
And it cannot die, for it lives.’

Here again we are in dependence on the Psalm, and the previous verse has been imitated, οἱ δὲ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐν σκέπῃ τῶν πτερύγων σου ἐλπιούσιν.

We have restored in the comparison the reading of the editio princeps ; ‘gave me to drink’ corresponds to ποτιεῖς αὐτούς of the Psalm. Both of the Odes in question then go back to the same Psalm.

In verses 4, 5 the Odist has been imitating Sap. Sol. vi. 22 :

‘I will trace her [sc. Wisdom] from the beginning of Creation,
And bring the Knowledge of her into clear light ;
And I will not pass by the truth.’

v. 13. The comparison of the Lord to the Sun and its shining, although altogether Biblical, appears to have been resented by Ephrem, who attacked Bardaisan for comparing God the Father to the Sun, e. g.

لله نور
لله نور

(‘He compared the Father to the Sun’).—Eph. R.E. ii. 558.

This eleventh Ode has in it elements that lend some support to Dr. Bernard. Here are traces of the garment of light, of the dew of the Lord, and the delight of Paradise, as well as, perhaps, an allusion to the new circumcision. It is difficult, however, to bring a spiritual Ode like this within the terms of ritual. Even if some of the terms are baptismal, the Odist is not detained by them. The language is ecstatic, and the writer confesses to spiritual intoxication. At the close he finds God everywhere, and exults in the discovery. Here we may add a couple of modern statements that come near to the thought of the Odist: the first is from Charles Kingsley :

‘Everything seems to be full of God’s reflex, if we could but see it. Oh! how I have prayed to have the mystery unfolded at least hereafter: to see, if but for a moment, the whole harmony of the great system.’—Letters, p. 28.

The other is from a little-known Quaker Journal, the writing of Thomas Story :

‘Come sing with me, O ye Valleys, and Flowers of the Plain, let us clap our hands with Joy: for the King of the East hath visited us, and smiled on our Beauty: for He sees His Holy Name on every Flower, and glorious Image on every lovely Plain.’—Story, Journal, p. 18.

It will be convenient to add at this point the references to the ‘talking water’ of Daphne, which Lightfoot depreciated, in his desire to find a quotation from the Fourth Gospel in the Ignatian Epistles. Lightfoot quotes from Jortin (Ecc. Hist. i. 356) the reference to Anacreon 11 (13):

δαφνηφόροιο Φοῖβον λάλλον πίνοντες ἔδωρ for the expression ‘talking water’, and for the prophetic inspiration that was supposed to be produced by drinking it: but objects to Jortin's inference that, as there was one of these 'speaking' fountains at Daphne, the famous suburb of Antioch, Ignatius may have borrowed his image from thence. Lightfoot thinks the reference doubtful, even if the text of Ignatius ad Rom. γ ὕδωρ ζῶν καὶ λαλοῦν were correct. Lightfoot was quoting Jortin by way of Jacobson. A reference to Jortin himself shows that Lightfoot has not done justice to Jortin, whose statement of the case for λαλοῦν and against ἀλλόμενον is admirable.

Jortin says:

'The expression ὕδωρ λαλοῦν resembles the vocales undae which inspired the poets and prophets, e. g.

Et de Pieriis vocalem fontibus undam.—Statius, Silv. i. 2. 6.

An oracle of Apollo Delphicus given to Julian, and preserved in Cedrenus, Εἴπατε τῷ βασιλεῖ, χαμαὶ πέσε δαίδαλος αὐλά· οὐκέτι Φοῖβος ἔχει καλύβαν, οὐ μαντίδα δάφνην, οὐ παγὰν λαλέουσιν, ἀπέσβετο καὶ λάλον ὕδωρ

In these verses, which, to do them justice, are elegant, Apollo, to raise Julian's compassion, deplores the silence of his oracles and speaking streams. In the first line read βασιλῆι.

Anacreon xiii.

Οἱ δὲ Κλάρον παρ' ὄχθαις δαφνηφόροι Φοῖβον λάλον πίνοντες ὕδωρ μεμνηότες βοῶσιν.

Jortin then proceeds to discuss the passage in Ignatius and its variant readings; he shows that the Greek Menaeum had both readings, and goes on to say against Le Clerc that 'the λαλοῦν ὕδωρ must not be altered; it is sufficiently confirmed by the quotations of Cotelier in this very note where he is inclined to reject it, and it is more elegant and proper than Le Clerc imagined'. References to Antioch and Daphne follow.

It is important, both for the criticism of the Ignatian Epistles and of the Odes, that the misleading argument of Lightfoot should be set on one side. When this is done, we have an important clue for locating the Odes as well as the Ignatian Epistles in contact or connexion with Antioch.

ODE XII

- 1 He hath filled me with words of truth,
That I may speak the same.
- 2 And like the flow of waters, flows truth from my mouth,
And my lips showed forth its fruits.

(cf. Sir. xxiv. 3.

- 3 And it has caused its knowledge to abound in me,
Because the mouth of the Lord is the true Word,
And the door of His light ;
- 4 And the Most High hath given Him to His Worlds.
(Worlds) which are the interpreters of His own beauty.
And the repeaters of His praise,
And the confessors of His thought,
And the heralds of His mind,
And the instructors of His works.

Cf. Sap. Sol. vii. 24.

- 5 For the swiftness of the Word is inexpressible (?)
And like His expression (?) is His swiftness and His sharpness :
And His course has no limit.

Cf. Heb. iv. 12.

- 6 Never (doth the Word) fall, but ever it standeth ;
His descent and His way are incomprehensible.

Cf. Isa. liii. 8.

- 7 For as His work is, so is His limit ;
For He is the light and the dawn of thought.

Cf. John i. 9.

- 8 And by Him the worlds spake one to the other :
And those that were silent acquired speech.

Cf. Ps. xviii.(xix) 3,4.

- 9 And from Him came love and concord ;
And they spake one to the other what they had (to tell).

- 10 And they were stimulated by the Word,
And they knew Him that made them,
Because they came into concord.
- 11 For the mouth of the Most High spake to them ;
And the interpretation of Himself had its course by Him. Cf. John i. 18.
- 12 For the dwelling-place of the Word is man,
And His truth is love. Cf. John i. 14.
- 13 Blessed are they who by it have comprehended everything,
And who have known the Lord by His truth.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Newbold suggests the elimination of the siamē points from ܠܡܠܟܐ and that we translate, 'The Word of Truth hath filled me that I may proclaim Him (or it)'. This is grammatically more correct, because it provides a subject for the first sentence, and for the second member of verse 2 (ܠܡܠܟܐ His [or its] fruits). Cf. also v. 3. Further, all the Ode deals with 'the Word'. The copyist was possibly puzzled, as every other Syrian Christian would be, with the fact that λόγος was expressed by the inadequate vocable ܠܡܠܟܐ, and put the plural dots over it, signifying that it meant 'words' in concreto.

v. 2. The MS. has the present tense, 'flows'; instead of ܠܡܠܟܐ of the MS. we have punctuated ܠܡܠܟܐ; both punctuations are used, although that of the MS. is more frequent, in the sense of 'flow', and the other is more generally said of a 'river', 'stream'.

v. 4. We have punctuated the text ܠܡܠܟܐ, 'of His servants'. The MS. by putting three dots over the word instead of two, has ܠܡܠܟܐ, 'of His works', which, joined with the preceding ܠܡܠܟܐ gives a better sense.

Frankenberg unnecessarily suggests to read ܠܡܠܟܐ in singular with reflection from the Wisdom that 'moves more rapidly than any motion, and passes and penetrates through all things' (Sap. Sol. vii. 24), so that an allusion to the ἀτμός in verse 25 would be quite appropriate.

v. 6. We have suggested in a note to read ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ ('His breadth'); but there is no need to make the change: ܐܬܐ is used of the Logos in Incarnation several times in the Odes; so we read 'His descent'.

For similar reasons there is no need to emend ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ ('His length') for ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ ('His way').

v. 7. The MS. seems to have ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ. Possibly the copyist was perplexed between ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ 'His expectation' and ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ 'His limit'; or possibly he was writing ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ and under the influence of the above ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ another yodh slipped in before the waw.

v. 8. Our rendering is the only meaning the Syriac sentence can have.

v. 10. We have suggested in the text ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ for ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ; 'and they were justified' for 'and they were stimulated', 'goaded'; this is possibly a daring emendation in view of the fact that in the previous lines mention is made of the 'sharpness' of the word. Labourt's opinion that ܐܬܬܐܠܥܐ 'est une observation marginale qui se rapportait primitivement à l'état du ms.' is improbable.

v. 11. 'its course (lit. it proceeded) by Him'; perhaps we have here the translation of the Greek ἐν ἐκείνῳ, sc. τῷ λόγῳ.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is a Hymn concerning the Divine Logos, or the Divine Wisdom which becomes the Logos. It is not an easy Ode to translate nor to understand. It comes very close in one sentence to the Gospel of John, 'the dwelling-place of the Word is Man'. This is very near to the statement that the 'Logos dwelt among us', but does not involve the personal incarnation nor the assumption of flesh. It may be related to the doctrine in the Wisdom of Sirach that the Divine Wisdom found her dwelling place in Jacob and at Jerusalem. This same chapter (Sap. Sirach, xxiv) helps to explain the opening sentences about the 'Mouth of the Lord, the true Word', for here Wisdom is made to say that she 'came forth from the mouth of the Most High'.

The writer appears also to be drawing on a number of Sapiential terms which occur in the seventh chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon, where the sharpness, force, and swiftness of the Word are described. Certainly the Ode must be grouped with the rest of the Wisdom Odes; when taken together they will do much to furnish us with the theology of the writer.

In verse 6 there is some obscurity in the statement that 'His descent and His way are incomprehensible'. If the writer means to describe in these words the appearance of the Logos among men, we have probably a reaction from the verse in Isaiah liii, 'Who shall declare His generation?' a passage commonly used by the early Fathers to show that the Birth of Christ is ἀνεκδιήγητος.

In verses 3, 11 we have allusions to Wisdom as being the Mouth of the Lord, or the Mouth of the Most High, which are parallel to the language of Sirach xxiv. 3 sqq. We compare Ode xii. 3:

לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא and Ode xii. 11:

לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא with Sirach xxiv. 3:

ἐγὼ ἀπὸ στόματος Ὑψίστου ἐξηλθον

The Peshitta of Sirach has לִּי אֵל וְיָדָא, where again we see the Odist to be independent of the Peshitta. The whole of Ode XII is a Wisdom composition, showing striking parallelism with the Praises of Wisdom in Sirach xxiv.

ODE XIII

- Cf. Sap. Sol. vii. 26. 1 Behold! the Lord is our mirror:
Cf. Ephr. Hymn. in Fest. Epiph. i. 93. Open your eyes and see them in Him.
also R.E. ii. 511-13. 2 And learn the manner of your face;
And tell forth praises to His Spirit:
3 And wipe off the filth from your face;
Cf. Ephr. Hymn. in Ecclesiam iv. 602. And love His holiness and clothe yourselves therewith:
Cf. Sap. Sol. vii. 26. 4 And you will be without stain at all times with Him.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Frankenberg and Preuschen have made the suggestion that we should translate 'see yourselves in Him', on the supposition that a primitive Greek ἐαυτοῦς or αὐτοῦς has been misunderstood by the translator, who took the word to refer to the 'eyes' and not to the persons who were using the eyes. The point deserves a careful consideration; in Ode xv. 3 special importance is attached to eyes.

v. 2. Gressmann unnecessarily changes אֱלֹהֵי 'to His Spirit' into אֱלֹהֵי 'to His Herrlichkeit'.

v. 3. The MS. seems to have the meaningless לְהַלְלֵךְ. Its correction into לְהַלְלֵךְ is almost certain. The root being לְהַלְלֵךְ with a guttural hamza, phonetically it is more correct to read לְהַלְלֵךְ, but it is a well-known fact that the sound hamza is frequently softened into a weak letter.

Expository Notes.

This little Ode, like the preceding one, is Sapiential in character: the 'mirror' which the Lord is declared to be, is the 'unspotted mirror of the operation of God' in the seventh chapter of the Wisdom of Solomon. We have shown in the introductory chapters how familiar Ephrem was with this Ode, and how he manipulated it into liturgical language. If we keep the Sapiential language before our mind, we shall see the meaning of the close of the Ode as well as its opening: the believer, who clothes himself with the Divine Holiness, becomes also a spotless person (ἀκηλίδωτος), and is enjoined to be 'without stain' at all time before Him.

In the Acts of John there is a curious hymn sung by the Apostle to his disciples before his apprehension; at the close of the hymn, which seems to belong to Christ speaking in him, we read

'I am a Lamp to him that sees me:
I am a Mirror to him that considers me:
I am a Door to him that knocks to me:
I am a Way to thee the passer by.'

Here the 'Mirror' is accepted as one of the titles of Jesus; so it seems that this Ode also passed into Gnostic hands, in the form in which we know it. It would be a great mistake to call the Ode itself Gnostic: it is a clear and beautiful call to a redeemed and Christ-like life.¹

Another parallel to the Lord being our mirror is I. Ep. Clem. c. 36: 'Through Him let us look intently on the Heavenly Heights; through Him we behold as in a mirror that unblemished and most lofty visage of His; through Him the eyes of our heart were opened.' Here the parallelism is very pronounced with Ode xiii; 'the Lord is the mirror; by Him the eyes are opened; an unblemished form is perceived.

ODE XIV

Cf. Ps. cxxiii. 2.

- 1 As the eyes of a son to his father,
So are my eyes at all time towards thee, O Lord.
- 2 For with thee are my consolations² and my delights.
- 3 Turn not away thy mercy from me, O Lord:
And take not thy kindness from me.

Cf. Ps. xlviii. 15.

Cf. Ps. xxx. (xxxi.) 4.

- 4 Stretch out to me, my Lord, at all times, thy right hand;
And be my guide even to the end, according to thy good pleasure.

Matt. vi. 13.

- 5 Let me be well-pleasing before thee, because of thy glory:
And because of thy name let me be saved from the Evil One.
- 6 And let thy gentleness, O Lord, abide with me,
And the fruits of thy love.
- 7 Teach me the Odes of thy truth
That I may bring forth fruit in thee.
- 8 And open to me the harp of thy Holy Spirit,
That with all (its) notes I may praise thee, O Lord.

¹ The passage in the Acts of John will be found in Bonnet's ed., p. 198. We owe the reference to Stölten.

² lit. my breasts.

9 And according to the multitude of thy mercies
 So shalt thou give to me:
 And hasten to grant our petitions.

10 And thou art able for all our needs.

Cf. Phil. iv. 19.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. The Syriac word ܠܥܝܢ (le'ayin) in the text is commonly used in Syriac literature to render 'the Evil One'; 'evil' being, on the other hand, expressed by the neutral (fem.) ܠܥܝܢܐ. See also Ode xxxiii. 4.

v. 6. Frankenberg proposes to eliminate the waw of ܠܥܝܢܐ.

v. 10. Labourt suggests ܠܥܝܢܐ, 'because thou' instead of ܠܥܝܢܐ 'and thou'. It is a possible but quite unnecessary hypothesis.

Expository Notes.

This Ode and the two which follow are grouped together by the similarity of their opening verses, which are in each case of the nature of a similitude. In the Ode before us, the motive is found in an imitation of the 122nd (123rd) Psalm in the canonical Psalter:

'as the eyes of servants . . .
 as the eyes of a maid . . .'

The writer has also borrowed in verse 4 the language of another Psalm, Ps. xlvii. (xlviii.):

'Our God for ever and ever,
 He will be our guide even unto death.'

This is one of the Odes in which the similitude of the harp is introduced: e.g. in Ode vi, the Odist is the harp, and the Spirit of the Lord speaks in his members: in Ode vii the singers go forth to welcome the Lord at His coming with the harp of many tones (κιθάρα πολύφωνος), &c. The figure is one that was used by Syriac writers both orthodox and heretical. Ephrem says of the teaching of Bardaisan and Mani that 'they saw that there is in the heart an instrument for the impulses of the soul, and that there is in the tongue a harp (ܠܥܝܢܐ) of speech' (ed. Mitchell, p. xc).

Cf. also (p. ciii):

‘By the mouth of the body the soul preaches truth in the world ;
and it is a pure harp for it, by means of which it sounds forth truth in creation.’

In verses 4, 5 we have distinct traces of the influence of Ps. xlvii. (xlviii.) 15 and Ps. xxx. (xxxi.) 4. The Odist prays that the Lord may be his guide even to the end ; he has substituted ‘the end’ for ‘death’, but agrees with the Hebrew and its dependent Peshiṭta in the use of the verb נָּדַד (‘to guide’), while the LXX has the more remote ποιμαίνει. After the manner of the Odist, we have in the next verse the influence of Ps. xxx. (xxxi.), ‘For thy name’s sake lead me and guide me’, where the Peshiṭta does not mention the idea of guidance, which is involved in the Hebrew and the LXX. Here again the Odist shows independence of the Peshiṭta tradition.

In verse 10 the Odist concludes with the sentiment that ‘God is able for all our needs’, which is nearly parallel to Phil. iv. 20, ‘My God shall supply every need of yours’. ‘Need’ (χρεία) is in the Ode חֲסֵד, in the Peshiṭta חֲסֵד. Further, the Peshiṭta follows the Greek in rendering πληρώσει (‘shall fulfil’) literally, which the Odist explains in the sense of Divine ability (יָכֹל).

ODE XV

- 1 As the sun is the joy to them that seek for its daybreak
So is my joy the Lord :
- 2 Because He is my Sun, and His rays have lifted me up ;
And His light hath dispelled all darkness from my face.
- 3 In Him I have acquired eyes,
And have seen His holy day :
- 4 Ears I have acquired,
And I have heard His truth.

- 5 The thought of knowledge I have acquired,
And I have been delighted by Him.
- 6 The way of error I have left and I went towards Him,
And I have received Salvation from Him abundantly.
- 7 And according to His bounty He hath given to me :
And according to His excellent beauty He hath made me.
- 8 I have put on incorruption through His name, 1 Cor. xv. 54.
And I have put off corruption by His grace.
- 9 Death hath been destroyed before my face ;
And Sheol hath been abolished by my word. 1 Cor. xv. 55.
- 10 And there hath gone up deathless life in the Lord's land ;
And it hath been made known to His faithful ones ;
And hath been given without stint to all those that trust in Him.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. The MS. has אלהים 'I was delighted'. In view of the next verse where mention is made of salvation we have suggested the probable אלהים 'and I was saved'. The opinion of Labourt who thinks that באמו 'by His hand' is to be attached to the following verse, becomes unnecessary.

v. 10. Schulthess suggests שלום (pl.); this is very good, but not necessary ; we have maintained the reading of the MS. (cf. xxxv. 3).

Expository Notes.

It was suggested in the editio princeps that the Odist in his opening sentences strikes the note of Psalm cxxix. (cxxx.) 6, and this is probably the case : but if so, he is not using the LXX text, which says, 'from the morning watch till night my soul hopes in the Lord'. Moreover, he has given the Psalm quite a different turn, changing the painful and prolonged sense of waiting for the dawn into a song after sunrise, out of which all sadness has disappeared.

Kleinert¹ suggested that the Ode was composed for the Sunday, as being the day of the Sun, and remarked that the Mandaeans reported the Sunday as holier (because older) than the Sabbath. He need not have gone so far as the Mandaeans, for Ignatius advises the Christians of his day not any longer to Sabbatize, but to live according to the Lord's day. Probably Kleinert was trying to explain the term 'His holy day' in verse 3. It may be doubted whether any explanation is really necessary.

It is probable that the acquaintance of Syriac writers with the Odes of Solomon can be traced through many centuries. Here, for example, is a passage which is suggestive of dependence upon the Odes in the Preface to the Marganitha or 'Pearl' of 'Abdisho'. The writer prays 'That we may be lifted up to the Holy of Holies, the dwelling-place of the Divine mysteries, and may be transformed into that likeness which is above all likeness; and that through the rays of thy essential light we may shine forth for ever, and be rejuvenated, and may become the companions of those who are near to thy greatness in theory and in practice; and that we should be seen by the illustrious and blessed here and there, and amongst those who are of the right hand.'

It will be recognized that this passage is in close dependence upon the thoughts and expressions in the Odes. The coincidence is striking with those passages where the Odist speaks of being lifted up into Divine light (Ode xv, and Ode xxi) and becoming one of the neighbours of God (Ode xxi, and Ode xxxvi); and the allusion to believers as those who are on the right hand, is also remarkable. The language does not show the same coincidence as the thought. Instead of ܡܠܝܟܐ we have the equivalent ܐܠܗܐ, and instead of ܡܨܝܚܐ for neighbours we have the equivalent ܡܨܝܚܐ. But these variations do not invalidate the dependence of 'Abdisho' upon the thought of the Odist.

ODE XVI

- 1 As the work of the husbandman is the ploughshare;
And the work of the steersman is the guidance of the ship:
So also my work is the Psalm of the Lord in His praises;

¹ Th. Stud. u. Krit., p. 610.

- 2 My craft and my occupation are in His praises ;
Because His love hath nourished my heart,
And even to my lips His fruits He poured out.
- 3 For my love is the Lord
And therefore I will sing unto Him.
- 4 For I am made strong in His praise,
And I have faith in Him.
- 5 I will open my mouth,
And His spirit will utter in me
The glory of the Lord and His beauty ;
- 6 The work of His hands
And the fabric of His fingers ;
- 7 For the multitude of His mercies,
And the strength of His Word.
- 8 For the Word of the Lord searches out the unseen thing, Cf. 1 Cor. ii. 10.
And scrutinizes His thought.
- 9 For the eye sees His works,
And the ear hears His thought.
- 10 It is He who spread out the earth,
And settled the waters in the sea :
- 11 He expanded the heavens,
And fixed the stars ;
- 12 And He fixed the creation and set it up :
And He rested from His works.
- 13 And created things run in their courses,
And work their works :
And they know not how to stand (still) and to be idle.

14 And the hosts are subject to His Word.

15 The treasury of the light is the sun,
And the treasury of the darkness is the night.

16 And He made the sun for the day that it might be bright ;
But night brings darkness over the face of the earth :

Cf. Ps. xix. 1. 17 And (by) their reception one from the other
They speak the beauty of God.

Cf. Col. i. 17. 18 And there is nothing that is without the Lord ;
For He was before anything came into being.

Cf. Heb. i. 2. 19 And the Worlds were made by His Word,
And by the thought of His heart.

(Doxology.)

20 Glory and Honour to His name.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Schulthess suggests ܚܒܝܢ 'the mast' for ܚܒܝܢ 'the steering'. This, however, is not sound. The verb ܚܒ is very frequently used to express 'the steering' of a ship, e. g.

ܚܒܝܢ ܐܝܠ ܡܥܬܐ (Ephr. R.E. i. 314).

'He steers ships to the harbour.'

Further, ܚܒ is generally used in the plural and refers to tools whose function is to strengthen the construction of a ship.

v. 2. Frankenberg unnecessarily proposes to eliminate the beth of ܚܒܝܢ.

v. 8. The verb ܚܒ is not duly catalogued in the Thesaurus, and this has given rise to many inadmissible theories about this sentence. It is, however, an obvious Syriac triliteral root with the meaning of 'to fathom, to scrutinize'. See Dictionnaire de la langue chaldéenne, and Vocabulaire chaldéen-arabe (sub voce). The following quotation from Gregory of Cyprus, a fourth-century writer, is sufficient :

ܠܡܥܢ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ

ܕܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ

‘And now behold my eyes fly over the countries of the luminaries, and see clearly all that is found in the bottom and in the depths of the abysses.’—MS. of the Rylands Library, p. 117.

The meaning of the word had been divined by Tondelli, who refers to Brun’s Lexicon.

In a recent paper by Dr. P. Haupt in the Journal of Biblical Literature (xxxvii, 1918, pp. 229–232) the Assyrian root Dagālu, ‘to see, to look for’, is discussed, and it is shown that it existed in Hebrew, and that it can be restored in Cant. v. 10 and Ps. xx. 6. It is curious that Dr. Haupt does not seem to have noticed its occurrence in the Odes of Solomon.

v. 9. Barth unnecessarily proposes to read ܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ to make it conform with ܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ.

v. 15. The printed text has ܠܗܘܬܐ ; but the MS. reads ܠܗܘܬܐ, and we should correct accordingly.

v. 17. It is more grammatical to read ܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ.

In the next line we have adopted in the translation ܠܗܘܬܐ for ܠܗܘܬܐ of the MS. The elimination of the letter lāmādh when reduplicated is frequent in the old manuscripts. Those who prefer the reading of the MS. will translate ‘complete’ or ‘fulfil’.

For the understanding of the somewhat mysterious inter-reception of the sun and moon, who borrow light from one another, we must turn to the teaching of the Manichaeans and Bardaisan. In the Bardesanian tradition we certainly have an alternate reception of light between the sun and the moon: it must be admitted, however, that the Ode does not exactly say this. It says that the sun and the night receive from one another. Probably the night has displaced the moon in the sentence, ‘the treasury of the darkness is the night’. If this should be contested we shall have to resort to emendation in another direction, and instead of ‘and their reception’ (ܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ) we would read (ܠܗܘܬܐ ܕܠܗܘܬܐ) ‘and by their succession’, for which we can find abundant illustrations.

Expository Notes.

This Ode again belongs to the group of Wisdom-Odes; it is occupied with the praises of the Logos as the creative and providential instrument of God. All things were made by the Logos, and He was pre-existent before creation. The language is parallel to that of the first chapter of St. John's Gospel, but it also shows coincidence with Colossians, and with Hebrews: thus verse 19 'the worlds were made by His word' is almost exactly Heb. i. 2, 'by whom also He made the worlds'; verse 18, 'He was before anything came into being' is very nearly Col. i. 17, 'He is before everything'; and verse 18, 'There is nothing that is without the Lord' (he clearly means the Logos), has its analogue in John i. 3, 'Without Him was not anything made that was made'. Evidently in this Ode we see the Logos-theology in its making. Some persons will, perhaps, object and say that we see it already made. But that raises the question as to what it was made out of, and takes us back to Prov. viii. 22 ff.

In verse 17 we showed in our Introduction that the language had possibly been borrowed by Bardaisan to illustrate a curious astronomical belief that the sun and moon exchanged illumination, the sun giving light to the moon when the latter is waxing and taking it back again when it is waning. There is a possibility, therefore, of literary dependence of Bardaisan on the Odes at this point. What is curious about the use of the passage is that the Ode does not say that the sun and moon receive one from the other, but something quite different, viz., that the day and night influence one another alternately, like a pair of closely matched powers, of which now one and now the other prevails. But he has the sun to rule the day without introducing the moon to rule the night. This is not in accordance with the book of Genesis. There is, then, room for a suspicion that the moon has been got rid of by the Odist or lost from his text. If we please, we may imagine that the text originally stood:

'The treasury of the Light is the Sun;
And the treasury of the darkness is the Moon;
And He made the Sun for the day that it might be bright,
But the night brings darkness over the face of the earth:
And their reception one from the other,' &c.

Agreeably, that is, at once with the book of Genesis and with Bardaisan.

We have interpreted the expression about 'reception one from the other' in accordance with the sense put upon the words by Ephrem and Bardaisan.

In the editio princeps the translation was offered, that 'their alternations one to the other speak the beauty of God.'

There is evidence for such a statement by way of parallel, if the translation itself could have been justified. For instance, Eusebius, arguing the evidence for design in the universe, and the consequent necessity for a pervading Logos, says that the world cannot be a chance product to the eyes of him who observes the alternate motions of day and night (ἡμέρας τε καὶ νυκτὸς ἀμειβάτας ὁρῶντι κινήσεις). Probably the argument was something of a commonplace. In Victorinus's tract De fabrica mundi the work of the Creator in forming the sun to rule the day, and the moon to rule the night was in order that day might bring on night (superduceret) as a place of rest for the labours of men, and then that day might again prevail, and thus by alternation (alterna vice) labour might be comforted by the rest of night, and rest again regulated by the exercise of the day'. It is natural that there should have been a stress laid upon the alternation of day and night. There is some parallelism between the language of Victorinus (based originally on Papias?) and the language of our Ode with regard to 'night bringing darkness over the face of the earth'.

In verse 17 we have made a slight emendation so as to bring out the dependence of the Odist on Ps. xviii. (xix.). 'The heavens are telling the glory of God'. The Odist is repeating what he said in verse 5 :

'His spirit will utter in me
The glory of the Lord and His beauty.'

Here 'His beauty' is an alternative term for 'His glory'. The Odist was contemplating the 'spacious firmament' on high when he said that; for in the next verse he is imitating Ps. viii. :

'Thou hast set thy glory upon thy heavens,
When I consider thy heavens the work of thy fingers.'

Or as the Odist says (verse 6) :

'The work of His hands
And the fabric of His fingers.'

Thus the Odist is working from these two Psalms and from the first chapter of Genesis. From this quarter also (the book of Genesis) comes the reference to God's resting from His works: the 12th verse is a reflex of Gen. ii. 8: 'He rested from all His work which God had created in the making'; notice the omission of the reference to the seventh day, and what follows as to the activity of the heavenly bodies on that day as well as on other days of the week.

In the editio princeps the case was stated as follows:

'On examining the Ode more closely we detect an unmistakable case of anti-Judaic polemic. The writer, after describing the beauty of creation, and the Lord's rest from His works, goes on to say something which shows that he does not mean to deduce the Jewish Sabbath from the statements in Genesis. "Created things run in their courses and do their works and know not how to stand or to be idle." Suppose we turn to Justin's Dialogue with Trypho, c. 22, where Justin is arguing with Trypho for the non-necessity of circumcision and the Sabbath; "I will declare to you, and to those who wish to become proselytes", says Justin, "a divine word, which I heard from the old man to whom I owe my conversion. He said, 'You observe that the heavenly bodies do not idle nor keep Sabbath. Remain, therefore, as you were born; do not keep Sabbath, nor practice circumcision'".

'It is clear, then, that the 16th Ode means to say that the Sabbath is not kept by the Heavenly bodies; and as it goes on to say, "and the (Heavenly) Hosts are subject to His word" it follows that God is regulating the motions of the world on the Sabbath days as well as on the week-days: a point which Justin expressly makes in c. 29, "God undertakes the regulation of the world on this day exactly as on other days".'

To this reasoning exception was taken by Harnack, on the ground that the Odist does not say with Justin οὐκ ἀργεῖ οὐδὲ σαββαρίζει, consequently we are not to think of anti-Judaic polemic in the Ode, which is like the rest of the collection, Jewish in character.

Suppose we ask the question how an early Christian of the type of Justin Martyr would present his case against the Jew who pointed him to the law, and emphasized its unchangeability. We naturally turn to the early collections of Testimonies against the Jews, to pick up the counter-quotations and the rebutting arguments. Here is an instructive passage from the section which the Testimonies, ascribed to Gregory of Nyssa, devote to the Sabbath.

The writer enumerates a number of cases in which the Sabbath was broken historically, or cannot be literally kept in ordinary life; and then he asks this question: 'How is it that the Sun and Moon and Stars fulfil their appointed course even on the Sabbath?'

πῶς δὲ ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη καὶ ἄστρα τὸν ὀρισμένον δρόμον ἐκτελεῖ καὶ τῷ σαββάτῳ;

One might almost say that the Odist and the Testimony-collector had been in collusion, so close is their agreement; it is, therefore, useless to maintain that the Sabbath was not intended by the idleness or standing still of the creation.

The argument that the Ode is Jewish and therefore could not have been spoken in an anti-Sabbatic manner, or that the Ode, not having an anti-Sabbatic sentence, must be Jewish, hardly needs further consideration.

ODE XVII

- 1 I was crowned by my God;
And my crown is living:
- 2 And I was justified by my Lord;
And my salvation is incorruptible.
- 3 I was loosed from vanities,
And I am not condemned.
The choking bonds were cut off by His hand¹;
- 4 I received the face and the fashion of a new person;
And I walked in Him and was redeemed.
- 5 And the thought of truth led me;
And I walked after it² and did not wander.

¹ Cod.: her hands.

² i. e. the thought.

(Christ speaks.)

6 And all that have seen me were amazed ;
And I was supposed by them to be a strange person.

7^a And He who knew and brought me up,
Is the Most High in all His perfection :

7^b And He glorified me by His kindness,
And raised my thought to the height of Truth.

8 And from thence He gave me the way of His steps ;
And I opened the doors that were closed :

Cf. Ps. cvi. (cvii.) 16 ; 9 And I broke in pieces the bars of iron :
Isa. xlv. 2. But my own iron (bonds) melted and dissolved before me.

10 And nothing appeared closed to me ;
Because I was the opening of everything.

11 And I went towards all the¹ bondsmen to loose them ;
That I might not leave any man bound and² binding ;

12 And I imparted my knowledge without grudging ;
And their request to me³ with my love.

13 And I sowed my fruits in hearts,
And transformed them through myself :

14 And they received my blessing and lived ;
And they were gathered to me and were saved.

Cf. Ephr. Ephph. 15 Because they became to me as my own members ;
Hymn ix. 1. And I was their head.

(Doxology.)

16 Glory to thee our Head, the Lord Messiah.

Hallelujah.

¹ H, my.² H, and.³ litt. my request

Critical Notes.

v. 4. It seems clear that we must alter ܕܠܝܕܝܗ (‘by her hands’) to ܕܠܝܕܝܗ (‘by his hand’). The writer seems to have thought that he was emancipated ‘by the thought of Truth’ (fem.) which follows in the next verse, and so added the feminine suffix.

v. 7. The Syriac sentence ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ܕܠܝܕܝܗ is difficult to understand, and in the text we have suggested that some words might have been lost after ܕܠܝܕܝܗ. In following H and in adding a yodh to ܕܠܝܕܝܗ we shall have the meaning ‘But He who knew and brought me up is the Most High in all His perfection’. We could not safely take ܕܠܝܕܝܗ as an adjective and translate ‘is high’; because, as is demonstrated by ܕܠܝܕܝܗ of the following line, it would have had the contracted form. Instead of ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘and He is glorified’, B has ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘and He glorified me’, forming possibly a parallel with ܕܠܝܕܝܗ above suggested. ‘He brought me up and glorified me’. The parallelism would even be better preserved if, instead of ܕܠܝܕܝܗ we were to read ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘and He exalted me’, with the simple addition of an alaph. The sense of the whole verse would be:

‘But He who knew and exalted me, is the Most High in all His perfection; and He glorified me by His kindness,’ &c.

v. 8. There is no need to change ܕܠܝܕܝܗ into ܕܠܝܕܝܗ as Gunkel has done, and we do not understand the un-Syriac verb ܕܠܝܕܝܗ which Grimme substitutes for the natural ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘He gave me’.

v. 9. Frankenberg proposes to change the particle ܕܠܝܕܝܗ into a form of verb derived from the verb ܕܠܝܕܝܗ, but Grimme substitutes for it the dative ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘to me’, and considers the first ܕܠܝܕܝܗ as a dittographical error on the part of the copyist.

v. 12. The sense is very doubtful. The MS. has ‘and my prayer’, ‘request’, ‘intercession’. In Syriac one may consider this as the beginning of a new sentence, and in adding the attributive verb which can be omitted we would translate ‘And my prayer (for them?) (is or was) in my love’, which is not a good parallelism. We may also consider the word as a complement of ܕܠܝܕܝܗ ‘and I gave’, and translate ‘And I gave them my knowledge without grudging and my prayer (or intercession) (for them?) in my love’. In this last meaning ‘in my love’ liberator, and the opener of closed doors. This takes us back to the beginning of verse 9. After this we are in difficulties over the delimitation of the speakers in verses 6-8. Comparison with similar situations in Ode xxviii. 8 and Ode xli. 8 makes it probable that the person who causes amazement and appears to be of another race is Christ Himself. On this account we have put the change of speakers between verses 5 and 6. The transition, however, is very awkward.

At first sight it might seem as if the reference to the 'breaking of bars of iron' in verse 9 had to do with the descent into Hades, but it is much more probable that the language is taken from the 107th Psalm:

μοχλοὺς σιδηροῦς συνέκλασεν the Peshiṭta version corresponding to which is ܡܚܠܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ

and agrees exactly with the Odes; the use of μοχλοί (ܡܚܠܐ) shows that the Ode and the Peshiṭta transliterate the Greek of the Psalms.

If we have correctly defined the passage of Scripture which was in the Odist's mind, we can now go back to verse 4 with its obscure allusion to the cutting off of choking bonds: this is taken from verse 14 of the same Psalm, which runs in the Greek, καὶ τοὺς δεσμούς αὐτῶν διέρρηξεν·

We may compare the Syriac of the Ode at this point with the Peshiṭta:

Ode xvii. 4: ܣܬܡ ܕܠܥܡܡܐ ܕܠܥܡܡܐ

Ps. cvii. (cvii.) 14: ܕܥܡܡܐ ܕܥܡܡܐ

The coincidence in the rendering of δεσμούς and διέρρηξεν is very striking, and raises once more the question of possible connexion between the Odes and the Syriac Old Testament.

We may, at all events, be sure that the Odist is working from this Psalm as a base, just as we found him doing in the case of the 21st Psalm. We are entitled to explore for further coincidences.

In verse 5 the Odist says that 'the thought of Truth led me,

I walked after it and did not wander.'

Ephrem is imitating the 24th Ode at this point, and may have actually imitated the 17th also. We may also refer for the 'loosing of the bondmen' to Ephrem, R. E. iii. 130.

ODE XVIII

- 1 My heart was lifted up and enriched in the love of the
Most High;
That I might praise Him by my name.
- 2 My members were strengthened
That they might not fall from His power.
- 3 Sickness removed from my body,
And it stood for the Lord by His will;
For His Kingdom is firm.
- 4 O Lord, for the sake of them that are deficient,
Do not deprive me of¹ thy word:
- 5 Nor, for the sake of their works,
Do thou restrain from me thy perfection.
- 6 Let not the luminary be conquered by the darkness;
Nor let truth flee away from falsehood.
- 7 Let thy right hand bring our salvation to victory,
And receive from all quarters,
And preserve whomsoever is affected by ills.
- 8 Falsehood and Death are not in thy mouth, my God;
But thy will is perfection.

Cf. Sap. Sol. vii. 29 and John i. 5.

¹ Lit. Cast off from me.

- 9 And vanity thou knowest not,
For neither doth it know thee.
- 10 And error thou knowest not,
For neither doth it know thee.
- 11 And ignorance appeared like dust,
And like the scum of the sea:
- 12 And vain people supposed that it was (something) great;
And they came to resemble it and became vain:
- 13 And the wise understood and meditated (thereon),
And were unpolluted in their meditations;
For such were in the mind of the Lord.
- 14 And they mocked at those who were walking in error:
- 15 And on their part they spake truth,
From the inspiration which the Most High breathed into them.

(Doxology.)

- 16 Praise and great comeliness to His name.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. The Syriac can also be taken intransitively, 'my heart rose up and abounded in the love of the Most High'. Schulthess has suggested ~~ܡܝܢ~~ 'His name' instead of 'my name'; this is possible but not necessary. Still more unnecessary is its change into ~~ܡܝܢ~~ or ~~ܡܝܢ~~ or ~~ܡܝܢ~~ as Bruston has suggested.

v. 3. Diettrich suggests ~~ܡܝܢ~~ 'His promise is firm'. The Syriac word is, however, very seldom used. Further, the idea of the Kingdom of God being firm is expressed in Ode xxii. 12.

v. 3. B has סמם סמם 'and they stood for', referring to סמם סמם 'sicknesses'. H exhibits סמם 'and it stood for', the subject being 'my body', which seems to be more appropriate.

v. 4. H has 'do not loose (lit. dissolve)'.

v. 7. Both MSS. have סמם סמם which we have changed into סמם סמם. The note to the printed text must be changed accordingly. The meaning of the sentence is not affected by the change. If the manuscripts are right, סמם is to be considered as having been used expletively, as meaning possibly, 'as if'. The reader is asked to remember that the sentence 'all affected by ills' is complement of both סמם סמם and סמם סמם. This disposes of some unnecessary theories about this verse. Literally סמם סמם means 'to cling to evils (or) sufferings, (or) tribulations'.

v. 10. Connolly suggests that סמם ought to be superseded by סמם 'my God'. This is good, but not necessary, inasmuch as the use or this particle here adds energy to the sentence, like the corresponding Arabic إلا 'It is because thou knowest not error, that it does not know thee'. B omits it entirely; and for that reason it is perhaps better not to take any notice of it in the translation.

v. 12. The expression סמם סמם 'they came to its resemblance; they came to resemble it' simply means, 'they resembled it' in Syriac. This peculiarity of style should be noted.

Expository Notes.

This is a very difficult Ode to interpret: we have not succeeded in finding any Scripture coincidences that could be depended upon. There is a quasi-parallel to the passage in the first chapter of John ('the darkness overcame it not'). It is equally difficult to detect the Christian elements in the Ode. Perhaps the writer is speaking as a Christian in the first verse ('that I might praise Him by my name', i. e. by the name of a Christian). In that case he should be a Christian of a universal type, since he says that the Lord will 'receive men from all quarters', verse 7). We repeat what was said of this Ode in the first edition:

'The writer of this Psalm speaks as a prophet, who has known the Divine visitation, and has felt its effect both on mind and body, in the dispelling of error and the healing of disease. He prays for a continuance of the Heavenly gift for the sake of the needy people to whom he gives his message. He has evidently been regarded by them as a light and foolish person, whose talk is like the foam of the sea. But there are others who are inspired like himself, and who mock at the unbelievers for their stupidity and ignorance. We catch the echo of some serious controversy upon religious matters, but the subject of the dispute is unknown.'

In verse 4 there appears to be a reflection of the 119th Psalm; we may compare:

'O Lord, for the sake of the deficient do not remove thy word from me.'

Ode xviii.

'Take not out of my mouth the word of truth utterly.'

Ps. cxix. 43.

Here the Ode says ܠܐ ܡܝܬܐ for 'word', and the Syriac says ܡܝܬܐ; but we notice that the Targum has פתח.

In the same verse there is also a reference to Ps. li:

'Cast me not away from thy presence,
And take not thy Holy Spirit from me.'

The Nitrian MS. reads ܠܐ ܡܝܬܐ for ܡܝܬܐ, and this should be right; for the Syriac of Ps. li. 13 has ܠܐ ܡܝܬܐ ܡܝܬܐ

where the Targum has a different word.

ODE XIX

- 1 A cup of milk was offered to me;
And I drank it in the sweetness of the delight of the Lord.
- 2 The Son is the cup,
And He who was milked is the Father;
And He who milked Him is the Holy Spirit.
- 3 Because His breasts were full;
And it was not desirable that His milk should be spilt to no purpose.

- 4 And the Holy Spirit opened His¹ bosom
And mingled the milk of the two breasts of the Father,
- 5 And gave the mixture to the world without their knowing :
And those who take (it) are in the fulness of the right hand.
- 6 The womb of the Virgin took (it)
And she received conception and brought forth :
- 7 And the Virgin became a mother with great mercy ;
- 8^a And she travailed and brought forth a Son without incurring pain :
- 8^b For it did not happen without purpose ;
- 9 And she had not required a midwife,
For He delivered her.
- 10 And she brought forth, as a man, by (God's)² will :
And she brought (Him) forth with demonstration
And acquired (Him) with great dignity ;
- 11 And loved (Him) in redemption ;
And guarded (Him) kindly ;
And showed (Him) in majesty.
Hallelujah.

Ps. xxii. 9 ; and
Euseb. D.E. x. 8, 10.

Critical Notes.

v. 4. Both MSS. read 'her (i.e. the Holy Spirit's) bosom' وَحْدِ under the influence of the preceding and following feminine verbs. We can easily read the masculine وَحْدِ 'His (i.e. the Father's) bosom'.

v. 5. Grimme and Gressmann want لِلْعَالَمِ 'to the worlds', cf. Odes vii. 11 ; viii. 23 ; xii. 4, 8 ; xvi. 19. The plural form of the following

¹ Lit. Her bosom.

² Or, of her own will.

'The womb carried thee; the manger sufficed thee;
Simeon carried thee, O giant God.'

منها لحس . أهوا هم حو .
معدس لحس . صحا أحو .

Ed. Lamy, ii. 559.

'Like a child hast thou arisen from me :
And like a giant hast thou become strong.'

ہامو مکہ! وا صلیہ وسلم۔
ہامو صلیہ! وا صلیہ وسلم۔

Ed. Lamy, ii. 623.

The ultimate origin of the figure, if the emendation be correct, is Ps. xix. 6: 'as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, exulting like a giant,' &c. (גִּבּוֹר מְחַיֵּי), or more probably Ps. lxxxvii. 5, which reads in the Peshitta Version: 'a giant man (גִּבּוֹר מְחַיֵּי) was born in her, and He established her'.

v. 11. Instead of ܕܚܝܬܐ 'with salvation', Gressmann proposes ܕܚܝܬܐ 'with administration', and (by extension) 'with care'. If an emendation is to be introduced into the text, a choice between ܕܚܝܬܐ or ܕܚܝܬܐ 'by (divine) decree' would be better Syriac.

For 'she guarded Him in kindness', we should by a slight correction, reading ܠܗܦܪܘܬܐ for ܠܗܦܪܘܬܐ, translate 'she crooned over Him affectionately'.

The confirmation comes from Ephrem:

'She loved Him and crooned over Him

When He began to cry, she rose and suckled Him, Loved Him tenderly, crooned over Him.'

مسحدا حه مسحدا حه :

1000; 1000; 1000

अथवा नमो

سبحانك يا ذا الجلال والإكرام

Ed. Lamy, ii. 553.

'She carried Him, she crooned over Him, she embraced Him.'

ਯਹੁਦੀਆਂ ਦੇ ਹੱਕ ਵਿਚ।

Ed. Lamy, ii. 621.

'Since thou art my Son I will croon over thee; since I have become thy mother, I will honour thee.'

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܢܝܢ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܡܠܟܐ ܕܢܝܢ ܕܡܠܟܐ

Ed. Lamy, ii. (ibid.).

If this emendation be accepted, it is likely that Ephrem will take us a step further. For in the first of the passages quoted (and elsewhere), Ephrem refers to the 'swaddling clothes' and the 'manger'.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is, in modern eyes, altogether grotesque, and out of harmony with the generally lofty strain of the rest of the collection. It is not surprising that it was supposed on the first discovery of the Odes to be a later addition. Unfortunately for this hypothesis it happens to be one of the best attested; it was not only quoted by Lactantius through the medium of a primitive collection of Testimonia, but, as we have shown in the Introduction, it was known to Eusebius and elsewhere. So there is no ground, in our present state of knowledge, for detaching it from the rest of the collection. It stood as Ode xix in the early source to which we have traced it.

There is a further reason for not detaching it from the rest of the collection. The first half of the Ode is a parable or allegory of the milk from the breasts of God. We have already had an allusion to the divine breasts in the eighth Ode, where the Lord says 'My own breasts I prepared for them that they might drink my holy milk and live thereby'. Something to the same effect is implied in Ode xxxv:

'He gave me milk, the dew of the Lord.'

So that if the 19th Ode is to be ejected, the eighth and the 35th will have to be expelled at the same time. Moreover, if the figures employed seem harsh and unnatural to us, they do not appear to have been so to the early Christians. Clement of Alexandria, in his Paedagogus (lib. i, c. 8, p. 124) has a long discussion of the milk with which Christ's babes are nourished. Our nourishment, he says, is the Divine Word, it is 'the milk of the Father, by which alone the babes are fed. Through the Word we have believed in God, to whose care-allaying breasts we have fled'. And again (p. 125) 'to the babes, who seek for the Word, the breasts of the Father's kindness supply the milk'. Thus Clement employs the figurative language of the Ode, while avoiding its crudity.

The two parts of the Ode, the milk-section and the section on the Virgin Birth, appear to be two separate compositions on the first examination: closer study shows them to be in sequence; and the mysterious verb with which the second part of the Ode opens, being in the feminine, takes as subject the 'Spirit', the subject of the previous sentence. So the two parts were connected by the author himself.

The second part of the Ode is really more perplexing than the first: the first is grotesque, without an evolution of ideas: it might easily have been produced at a single sitting; but the second part appears to present the doctrine of the Virgin Birth in a highly evolved form; as, for instance, Virgin Birth, plus painlessness, plus non-necessity of a midwife; this is the sort of thing that we come across in the Apocryphal Gospels of the Infancy. Can we really refer this kind of speculation to the borders of the first century?

One thing has emerged clearly from the study of the Odes. We have shown in the Introduction that the Odist was not working without a Scriptural base: he was operating on the text of the 22nd Psalm, when he was talking so fantastically about the non-necessity for a midwife, and about the Father acting as midwife. This use of the 22nd Psalm is very important. In the 28th Ode the very same Psalm is applied as predictive of Christ, so that we have one more link between the 19th Ode and the rest of the collection. And it is not merely Eusebius who discloses to us the meaning of the text 'Thou art He who didst draw me out of my Mother's womb', and who uses obstetric language. The text had a place in controversy; for, as soon as the Virgin Birth was conceded, a dispute arose as to the nature of the flesh of Christ, and Valentinus enunciated the heresy that the Lord passed through the Virgin as water through a tube, without taking substance from the Virgin. So when Tertullian comes to deal with Valentinus in his treatise De carne Christi, he produces this very verse from the 22nd Psalm, and comments upon it with a wealth of anatomical knowledge and obstetrical detail! He uses the strongest translation possible for ἐκσπάω, and says:

'Avulsisti me ex utero. Quid avellitur, nisi quod inhaeret,' &c.—De Carne Christi, c. 20, p. 322, ed. Rigalt.

The text in the Psalm had acquired a polemical value in the Valentinian controversy, but it was a text which Valentinus himself was assumed to accept. So what seems to us to be late may turn out to be very much older than it looks. As to the painless delivery, one can find parallels to that in pagan literature; the idea, at all events, is not a Christian invention. We have discussed this obstetric matter sufficiently in the Introduction; it remains to elucidate one or two remaining points.

In verse 10 we have some obscure and allusive matter in the words:

‘She brought forth, as a man, of the Will.’

We have referred the last words, with some probability, to the Will of God, considering that the thought involved is parallel to that in the Western text of John i. 14; (‘who was born . . . not of the will of man, but of God’).

For the words, ‘as a man’, we must probably go to Dan. vii. 13, where ‘one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven’: for this passage was very early interpreted of the Incarnation. Thus Justin, Dial. 76 says:

τὸ γὰρ ὡς υἱὸν ἀνθρώπου εἰπεῖν, φαινόμενον μὲν καὶ γεγόμενον ἄνθρωπον μιμήει, οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρωπίνου σπέρματος ὑπάρχοντα δηλοῖ.

The language of Justin again recalls the terms of John i. 13.

The concluding sentences of the Ode are almost unintelligible, and without adequate motive. The conjecture in the editio princeps to read was too violent a change to find acceptance; but there is something to be said for it. If we recall the natural hostility of the docetic mind to the Incarnation through a Virgin, and the objections of Marcionites and others to any natural birth at all as unworthy of the Son of God, we may, perhaps, be able to throw a ray of light on these concluding sentences. Thus Tertullian makes Marcion say:

‘She loved him in his swaddling clothes’

‘Indignum hoc Dei Filio.’

and he goes on to say:

‘Dedigneris quod pannis dirigitur, quod unctionibus formatur, quod blanditiis desidetur.’—De carne Christi, c. 4.

Thus the last sentences of the Ode might be paraphrased :

‘ It was a great honour (not a dishonour) to have borne him :
 She loved him in his swaddling clothes,
 And watched over him with fondling,
 And exhibited him proudly.’

But this is not to be taken as criticism of the same order as the first part of this note. We concede the obscurity of the last clauses : but we have cleared up the difficulty of the Divine accoucheur. That is certainly from the 22nd Psalm.¹

The statement that the Virgin brought forth her Son without assistance is an early article of the Testimony Book, where it is deduced from Daniel ii. 45, the stone in the vision of Nebuchadnezzar having been cut out without hands (which is a supplementary inference to the identification of Christ with the Stone of the Scriptures). The term ‘without hands’ (ἀνευ χειρῶν) appears to have been interpreted in two different ways, each of which was meant to emphasize the miracle of the birth : one way was to say that the Virgin had no consort, and so conceived without human co-operation ; the other, that she had no woman’s help at the time of the birth.

Thus in the Dialogue of Athanasius and Zacchaeus, c. 114, we have the matter introduced as follows :

‘Zacchaeus said : From what mountain was the stone cut out?
 Athanasius : The mountain means the Virgin Mary. And that is why it says without hands, because she begat (γεννήσαι) the Stone, i. e. the body (of Jesus), without human χειροπυρία. For the prophet says : “Nebuchadnezzar dreamed a dream,”’ &c.

Mr. Conybeare, writing in 1898, remarked on this passage² that ‘one is tempted to render “without surgical aid of man”’, but finally decides for the alternative meaning, ‘without man’s assistance’ and refers to Justin, Dial. 76. The passage in Athanasius and Zacchaeus is based upon a primitive Testimony ; and as soon as we have found the key-passage in Daniel, the whole matter becomes clearer, and we see the meaning of the language in the Ode and of the parallel passage in Justin.

When the Ode says of a Virgin that ‘She brought forth a Son without ¹ We notice that Bernard had observed the underlying allusion to the Psalm.

² Athanasius and Zacchaeus, 112-14.

incurring pain, for it did not happen without purpose'; we may understand the words 'without purpose' (לְבַלְבָּלָה = κεῖωσις?) to mean, 'not without prediction on the part of the prophets', or 'independently of God's expressed will'. When it says:

'She had not required a midwife,
For He delivered her',

that is in its ultimate origin a comment on ἄνευ χειρῶν. When it says, 'She brought forth, as a man, of (her own) will', we should understand 'as a man' to mean the 'one like a son of man' in Daniel, who comes on the clouds, and is presented to the Ancient of Days: and in that case the 'Will' is not the Virgin's, but the 'Will of God'.

Now turn to Justin, Dial. 76, where we find that the 'Stone cut out without hands' means that He is no work of man, but of the will of the God of the Universe who sends Him forth. The whole passage is interesting:

"Ὅταν γὰρ ὡς υἱὸν ἀνθρώπου λέγῃ Δανιὴλ τὸν παραλαμβάνοντα τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν, οὐκ αὐτὸ τοῦτο αἰνίσσεται; τὸ γὰρ ὡς υἱὸν ἀνθρώπου εἰπεῖν, φαινόμενον μὲν καὶ γενόμενον ἀνθρώπων μηνύει, οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρωπίνου σπέρματος ὑπάρχοντα δηλοῖ. καὶ τὸ λίθον τοῖτον εἰπεῖν ἄνευ χειρῶν τμηθέντα, ἐν μυστηρίῳ τὸ αὐτὸ κέκραγε. τὸ γὰρ ἄνευ χειρῶν εἰπεῖν αὐτὸν ἐκτετμησθαι, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνθρώπινον ἔργον, ἀλλὰ τῆς βουλῆς τοῦ προβάλλοντος αὐτὸν πατρὸς τῶν ὅλων Θεοῦ.

Both the Odist and Justin are operating on primitive Testimonies, which will be found also in the collections of Cyprian, Gregory Nyss., &c. In the case of Gregory Nyss. (c. 8) the explanation given is the same as in Justin:

'The Stone which is cut out without hand (ἄνευ χειρός) is the one who was begotten without human seed'.

In Cyprian, Test. ii. 17, the hands are explained as 'Manus concidentium', i. e. hands of stone-cutters, and there appears to be no immediate reference to the Virgin.

The reference to the Virgin is not, however, excluded; for when Irenaeus discusses the Testimonies which identify Christ with the Stone, he makes the same expansion as Cyprian, and then goes on to explain the ἄνευ χειρῶν, not of the absence of a midwife, but of the non-cooperation of Joseph. The passage is very interesting, for the context shows that Irenaeus also is working from the Testimony Book:

‘Propter hoc autem et Daniel praevidens eius adventum, lapidem sine manibus abscissum advenisse in hunc mundum. Hoc est enim quod sine manibus significabat, quod non operantibus humanis manibus, hoc est virorum illorum qui solent lapides caedere,¹ in hunc mundum eius adventus erat, id est, non operante in eum Ioseph, sed sola Maria co-operante dispositioni. Hic enim lapis a terra et ex virtute et arte constat dei. Propter hoc autem et Esaias ait: sic dicit Dominus: Ecce ergo immitto in fundamenta Zion lapidem pretiosum, electum, summum angularem, honorificum: uti non ex voluntate viri, sed ex voluntate Dei, adventum eius qui secundum hominem est intelligamus.’—Iren. Haer. (iii, p. 217, Mass.).

The whole chapter is headed, Quid est apud Daniele lapidis sine manibus excisus? There can be no doubt of the use of the Testimony Book in this section; the reason for turning to Daniel at this point is clear from the close of the previous chapter, in which it was stated that the Incarnation was not the will of man, but the will and work of God. Compare the following sentences with what has been just quoted:

‘Sed quoniam inopinata salus hominibus inciperet fieri, Deo adiuvante, inopinatus et partus Virginis fiebat, Deo dante signum hoc, sed non homine operante illud.’

Here we take the words ‘Deo adiuvante’ to refer to the ‘birth from the Virgin’, the sense being the same as in the Ode:

‘She did not need a midwife
For He brought her to bear.’

It will not have escaped notice that all these references to a birth, not from man but from the will of God, are strongly supported by the Western text in John i. 13, where the will of man and the will of God are contrasted in the birth of Christ, ‘who was born not of the will of man but (of the will) of God’. The thought of the 19th Ode and the ἀνευ χειρῶν of Daniel are behind the language of the Fourth Gospel.

The fantastic opening of this Ode will, perhaps, appear less fantastic and more in harmony with the rest of the collection if we keep two points before our minds: the first is the proved use of Sapiential matter by the

¹ Cf. Cyp. ut supra: Concidentium.

Odist, for, as we have seen, Ode after Ode becomes intelligible as we examine the parallels in Proverbs and the other Sapiential books, as well as the proofs of the early Fathers that Jesus (or the Holy Spirit) was regarded as the Wisdom of God; the second point is the preference which the Odist shows for the symbol of 'milk' over that of 'wine', a preference so decided that it has sometimes led to the suspicion that the author was patronizing a milk-sacrament, like that of certain early heretics.

Let us then imagine that the Holy Spirit in this Ode is the Divine Wisdom, the Sophia of the Sapiential books. We shall hear her call clearly enough in the 33rd Ode, and find proofs there and elsewhere that the Odist is borrowing from the eighth and ninth chapters of Proverbs.

In this latter chapter, Wisdom sends out an invitation to a feast, and in particular to a cup which she has mingled,

'She hath mingled her wine.

Come and drink of the wine which I have mingled.'

where the LXX has the curious expansion,

'She hath mingled her own wine into a cup,' ἐκέρασεν εἰς κρατῆρα τὸν ἑαυτῆς οἶνον.

and the 'cup' appears again in the following verse,

'She calls with lofty announcement to the cup, saying,' &c.
συγκαλοῦσα μετὰ ὑψηλοῦ κηρύγματος ἐπὶ κρατῆρα λέγουσα.

What the Odist has done is to lay emphasis on this 'cup', and at the same time to explain that it is a 'cup of milk': hence he begins:

'A cup of milk was offered to me.'

Now he is in difficulties; for the Scripture calls it a 'mixed cup'; and how can a cup of milk be a mixed cup? The solution is that the milk has been taken from the two 'care-allaying breasts of the Father', as Clement of Alexandria would say.

If this is the right line on which we are to find the origin of the allegory of the cup of milk, we might be obliged to allow for this Ode a Greek origin, in view of the fact that it is the Septuagint that lays special emphasis on 'the cup'. We should also, in that case, hesitate to change the reading of the MS. from 'The Holy Spirit opened her bosom,' for the LXX has an emphasis on the person of Wisdom who ‘mingled into a cup her own wine’, where, if we read ‘milk’ for ‘wine’, we must also read ‘her bosom’ for ‘his bosom’.

And why is the mixture given to the world without their knowing? We have the same difficulty in Ode xxx, again a Sapiential Ode, where the living water comes invisibly, and ‘until it was set in the midst they did not know it’. The obvious parallel is John i. 10:

‘He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not.’

That is not far from the expression that

‘the Holy Spirit gave the mixed cup to the world without their knowing.’

There seems to be a missing link to connect all these passages together somewhere in the Old Testament. From the fact that the Fourth Gospel interjects the words ‘and the world was made by him’, which is the Sapiential definition of Christ, we should be disposed to look for the missing reference somewhere in the Sapiential books. We have not yet found it.

The emphasis on the cup which Wisdom mixes is due to the fact that the passage in Proverbs was a very early testimony, one of the proof-texts that Christ was the Wisdom of God. Thus in Cyp. Test. ii. 2 the passage is transcribed as in the LXX with ‘miscuit in cratere convocans . . ad craterem.’

The heading of the section, which is evidently a translation from Greek, is:

‘Quod Sapientia Dei Christus, et de sacramento concarnationis eius et passionis et calicis et altaris et apostolorum qui missi prae-dicaverunt:’

(read de calice et de altari et de apostolis: περὶ πάθους καὶ [περὶ] κρατήρος κτέ.).

Thus the ‘cup’ is a part of the primitive proof that Christ is the Wisdom of God.

If we are right in our explanation that the Odist substituted ‘milk’ for ‘wine’ in the sentence

ἐκέρασεν εἰς κρατῆρα τὸν ἑαυτῆς οἶνον

thus giving 'her own milk' for 'her own wine', we must recognize similar expressions in Ode viii:

'my own breasts I prepared for them that they might drink my own holy milk.'

This would bring Ode viii also into still closer connexion with Prov. ix. 2, and, as before, it would be the text of the LXX that furnishes the explanation of the emphatic ἐαυτῆς or ἐμαυτοῦ, or the text of an early Testimony Book.

With regard to the painlessness of the Divine Birth, it may be of interest to observe that in one striking passage at least Ephrem contests the belief, e. g. R. E. iii. 6: 'The First Born entered the womb and the Pure One suffered not: He descended and came forth with pains; and the Fair One was agitated over Him.'

ODE XX

- 1 I am a priest of the Lord;
And to Him I do priestly service;
- 2 And to Him I offer the offering of His thought.
- 3 For His thought is not like (the thought of) the world,
Nor (like the thought of) the flesh;
Nor like them that serve carnally.
- 4 The offering of the Lord is righteousness;
And purity of heart and lips,
- 5 Offer your¹ reins (before Him) blamelessly;
And let not thy heart² do violence to heart;²
Nor thy soul do violence to soul.
- 6 Thou shalt not acquire a stranger . . . ;
Neither shalt thou seek to deal guilefully with thy neighbour;
Neither shalt thou deprive him of the covering of his nakedness.

Cf. Ephr. Epiḡph.
Hymn. iii. 12.

Cf. Exod. xxii. 24-26.

Cf. Isa. lviii. 7.

¹ B, my reins.

² lit. pity.

- 7 But put on the grace of the Lord without stint;
And come into His Paradise¹ and make thee a garland from His tree; Cf. Gen. ii. 9 and Apoc. ii. 7.
- 8 And put it on thy head and be glad;
And recline on His rest;
- 9 And His glory shall go before thee; Cf. Isa. lviii. 8.
And thou shalt receive of His kindness and His grace²:
And thou shalt be fat in truth in the praise of His holiness.
- (Doxology.)
- 10 Praise and honour to His name.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

vv. 1, 2. The Semitisms should be noted.

v. 6. This verse presents peculiar difficulties, and none of the proposals for its identification or interpretation appears to commend itself widely. We cannot, for instance, translate it as it stands:

‘Thou shalt not acquire a stranger by the blood of thy soul.’

for this has no meaning: nor can we say that حبلا وبعير means ‘in that he is what thou art’. We might possibly emend it to the form and translate:

لا اهلنا به حبلا وبعير

‘Thou shalt not hate the stranger who is in thy own likeness.’

The changes required are not violent; and the meaning might be that of Exod. xxiii. 9, ‘Thou knowest the soul of a stranger, for thou wast a stranger.’

If we maintain the reading of the MS. the expression املا suggests acquisition for a price (ومتلا), and the question then is as to the price to be paid for the stranger. The suggestion in the editio princeps to read has been weakened by the discovery that the Nitrian MS. shows the very same text as Cod. H. This criticism applies, however, to most emendations that may be proposed. So we leave the matter with a margin of uncertainty. The verses which follow certainly find their parallel in the 22nd chapter of Exodus, where we meet with the prohibition of keeping a man's pledged garment after sundown.

‘Thou shalt not acquire a stranger by the price of thy silver,’

¹ the Paradise (H).

² Or, goodness (B).

Expository Notes.

This Ode has caused a good deal of difficulty both as to its text and as to its interpretation. In the fifth verse, both the extant MSS. read :

‘Thou shalt not acquire a stranger by the blood of thy soul.’

The editio princeps suggested an emendation to this on the hypothesis that the word ‘soul’ had been accidentally repeated from the previous verse, and that we ought to read ‘silver’ instead of ‘soul’; the sentence then runs with a microscopic change :

‘Thou shalt not acquire a stranger by the price of thy silver.’

This would make excellent sense, and lead to the suggestion that the writer was an Essene, in harmony with the known prohibition of slave-holding amongst this austere sect.

The correction suggested was thought too violent by Flemming, who agreed, however, that ‘by the blood of thy soul’ should be corrected to ‘by the price of thy soul’, reading, that is, وَمِثْلِهِ for وَبَدْنِهِ.

To this Dietrich took further exception. There was, according to him, no need of change at all. It was merely a case of a wrongly divided word. The unintelligible وَمِثْلِهِ was to be resolved into مِثْلِهِ and وَمِثْلِهِ, and translated : ‘So that he is what thou thyself art,’ or ‘in that he is the same as thyself’; and Dietrich also endorsed the suggestion of an Essene prohibition of slavery. That was, we believe, the furthest point the discussion of the verse had reached textually, with any approach to probability.

Now let us see whether we can throw light upon this sentence in the Ode and upon the Ode generally from any other direction.

Recalling our observation of the way the Odist takes up a Scripture passage (say a Psalm), and works his own ideas into it and out of it, let us see if we can find his leading motive in the composition of the Ode.

Two directions suggest themselves to us ; one was that of the first editor, who thought the Ode was inspired by the ethical prohibitions in Exod. xxii. 25, 26 against slavery, usury, and the retention of the pledged garment. The other we have marked on our margin that the inspiration comes from that very noble ethical outburst in the 58th chapter of Isaiah. The ninth verse of our Ode is, in fact, coloured by Isa. lviii. 8 ; we compare :

Ode xx. 9. ‘ His glory shall go before thee
And thou shalt receive of His kindness and His grace.’

Isa. lviii. 8. ‘ Thy righteousness shall go before thee,
The glory of the Lord shall be thy rearward.’

It is easy to see how the Odist has handled the text of the prophet.

The next question is whether he has made any further use of the text of his author, or if the reference is merely a casual reminiscence.

In the sixth verse the Odist says that one is not to deprive one’s neighbour of the covering of his nakedness ; this finds a good parallel in Isa. lviii. 7, as follows :

Ode xx. 6. ‘ Neither shalt thou deprive him of the covering of his nakedness.’

Isa. lviii. 7. ‘ When thou seest the naked that thou cover him.’

The previous sentence in the Ode says that we are not to deal guilefully with our neighbours. Now turn to Isa. lviii. 6, and we find the injunction to ‘ loose the bands of wickedness ’ ; where the Peshitta version has bands of guile.

ܠܬܠܬܬ ܕܠܬܬܬ

the same root that we have in the Ode. This passage, then, is the origin of the sentence we have in the Ode, and the suspicion arises that the Odist has been working from a Syriac text. We can go one step further, for we notice the same word ܠܬܬ in verse 9 of the Prophet, where it apparently answers to the Greek ἀδικία. It is the Peshitta version that invites the parallel. Now turn back again to the Peshitta text in verse 7. We find the injunction ‘ that thou hide not thyself from thy own flesh ’, in the form

ܠܬܬ ܠܬܬ ܕܬܬ ܕܬܬ

i. e. ‘ and do not neglect the son of thy flesh.’

The expression ‘ son of thy own flesh ’ attracts our attention ; if we write

'soul' for flesh, we have an expression which is very nearly the same in sense as the Odist's expression, 'He is what thy soul is'. So we suggest again that the Odist has been imitating the Syriac text of Isaiah; Isaiah has certainly been imitated elsewhere, which makes our conjecture probable. We can now remove the discontinuity in the writer's thought in passing from the sixth verse to the seventh. This discontinuity was recognized in the first edition in the words: 'then he leaves morals and is away in search of the honey-dew and the milk of Paradise. There glory waits the soul that enters into the Divine rest'. Even this discontinuity may have its motive; as we read on in the great chapter of Isaiah, we are told that 'the Lord shall guide thee continually and satisfy thy soul in dry places, and make strong thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden'. For 'garden' the LXX reads κήπος, but the Peshiṭta says Paradise, and gives the clue to the language of the Odist:

'Come into Paradise and make thee a garland from its tree.'

Now we see the reason for the discontinuity of the Ode; or rather, the apparent discontinuity has disappeared. The Odist concludes with the promise:

'Thou shalt be flourishing (lit. fat) in truth in the praise of His holiness.'

The word for 'fat' in the Ode (𐤒𐤓) is taken from the Peshiṭta rendering of Isaiah lviii. 11:

ܕܐܝܬܝܢ ܕܥܡܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ

'and he shall satisfy thy soul with fatness.'

The case is not quite so conclusive as previous cases for the use of the Syriac, for the LXX has in the next sentence καὶ τὰ ὀστᾶ σου πλανθήσεται,

'thy bones shall be made fat.'

On the whole, the argument appears to be decisive in favour of a Syriac original for this Ode. The structure of the Ode appears also to be disclosed.

This particular section of Isaiah was much used by primitive Christians in arguing against the Jews and their ritual: Barnabas, for instance, uses it in c. 3, where he is arguing for a new fast, having previously argued for a new sacrifice and a new law. And it is clear that Barnabas is working from a collection of written Testimonies against the Jews. It is quite likely, since the Odist begins the 20th Ode with a statement of the kind of sacrifice that pleases God, that he also has been using Testimonia: in other words, the passage of Isaiah on which he worked need not have come immediately from the Peshitta. The doctrine of the 'new priesthood' is also in the Ode.

For a Syriac parallel which seems to be based directly upon this Ode we may take Ephrem, Hymni in S. Epiphani. iii. 12:

'The anointed priests used to offer the slaughtered bodies of beasts: you, resplendent anointed ones, your bodies are your offerings; the anointed Levites offered the reins of beasts, you are more resplendent than the Levites, and you have consecrated your hearts.'

We note, in conclusion, that the opening verse of the Ode contains two strong Aramaisms:

'a priest I priest:'

'I sacrifice the sacrifice.'

Such forms of speech are possible in Greek; they are at home in Syriac.

In the foregoing study of the influence upon the Odist of a famous passage in Isaiah, we note that the very same coincidences (or nearly the same) had been detected by Connolly in an article in the Journal of Theological Studies for July, 1913 (pp. 530-8). It is curious that the writer had used the coincidences to establish the exactly opposite conclusion to the one reached by ourselves, viz. that 'Greek is the original language of the Odes', a conclusion which was promptly challenged (though not very convincingly) by Dr. E. A. Abbott.

Connolly evades the force of the Odist's translation of 'garden' by 'Paradise' in harmony with the Peshitta rendering of Isaiah, and says 'that the Odist should put "Paradise" for "garden" is not surprising, for he devotes a whole Ode (xi) to Paradise'. We should have said that it was very striking that he should do so.

In dealing with the words 'thou shalt be fat', he takes the clause in the LXX for reference, καὶ τὰ ὀστέα σου πλανθήσεται, when he should have taken the previous clause: but he omits to notice that the words used for 'fat' in the Odes is certainly the Peshitta word in the passage in question, when it might easily have been any one out of a group of three or four possible words: that is, he ignores linguistic coincidence at the very point where coincidence counts. See also the further points to which we have referred. In passing from this point we may say that, while we quite agree with Connolly's criticism of Dr. Abbott's supposed Hebrew original for the Odes, we cannot agree with him that the Scriptural allusions of the Odes escape capture. He says (p. 535):

'It is unfortunate that—whether of set purpose or not we cannot say—the author has only too successfully disguised his Scriptural allusions. Sometimes the disguise is transparent enough, as when he says "as the eyes of a son to his father" (Ode xiv. 1): but though we can occasionally find the passage he is using, it is as a rule impossible to say whether he is working with any particular form of text.'

Exactly the opposite is the case, as we have shown by recovering a number of references to the Scripture (especially to the Psalms) and by indicating the particular version that is being followed.

The natural explanation of the Ode, as regards the priesthood which the author affirms in his opening sentence, is the spiritual explanation which is suggested in the first epistle of Peter, according to which the new race which follows Christ is also a new and royal priesthood. There is a residual possibility that the writer might have been a person of dignity in the church for which he composes his hymns, affirming his office towards God and against all other priesthoods, Jewish or pagan. As we have said, it may be doubted whether this is the simple and natural explanation; but in a theme so full of obscurities as the exegesis of the Odes one must fish all waters. It is something like the suggestion that the person who has the Lord on his head and has been thus crowned with a crown of truth, is the Apostle John, who, according to tradition, actually wore the high-priestly mitre and head-band with the Incommunicable Name. The question is raised whether such an explanation for St. John or some other one of the early Christian leaders, might not elucidate the interpretation of the Odes. For instance, the parallel with the passage in the Wisdom of Solomon, where Phinehas is said to bear the Divine magnificence 'upon the diadem of his head' (Sap. Sol. xviii. 24) would acquire fresh relevance. The reference for St. John similarly crowned is found in a fragment of Polycrates, Bishop of Ephesus, who, writing in the time of the Antonines, says that John 'became (or was) a priest wearing the πέταλον, and a martyr and a teacher'. It is noteworthy that Polycrates does not call him a high priest, though Jerome, in translating the words of Polycrates, makes him say so. But Jerome may very well be correct in saying 'Pontifex eius', so far as the added pronoun is concerned. According to Eusebius, upon whose extract of Polycrates Jerome is working, the language of Polycrates is ἐτι δὲ καὶ Ἰωάννης ὁ ἐπὶ τὸ στήθος τοῦ Κυρίου ἀναπεσών· ὃς ἐγενήθη ἱερεὺς τὸ πέταλον πεφορηκώς, καὶ μάρτυς καὶ διδάσκαλος.

Is it possible that αὐτοῦ has dropped from the text of Eusebius after ἱερεὺς? It would make an excellent parallel to the opening of this 20th Ode, where the Odist begins by saying 'I am a priest of the Lord'. But Jerome may have added the pronoun on his own account. In the Ode, the priesthood is expressly set in antithesis to the carnal priesthoods of the old law, and the affirmation that one was God's priest would be a negation of 'God's high priest' elsewhere.

The supposition that the early Christian teachers did actually wear visible emblems, comparable to those of the cult from which they had their origin, has been much discussed: see Routh, Reliquiae, ii. 27, for the evidence of Epiphanius that St. James also wore the πέταλον, and an anonymous statement to the same effect for St. Mark. It is within the bounds of credibility that some such custom prevailed. It would not follow, even if we accepted Polycrates and his Ephesian tradition, that St. John is himself the Odist, or the person of whom the Odist is thinking. Polycrates might have applied the language of the Odes about 'priesthood' and πέταλον to his great predecessor.

We are not, however, in a position yet to abandon the ordinary reference of the Odes to the Christian believers generally.

ODE XXI

- 1 My arms¹ I lifted up on high;
Even to the grace of the Lord:
- 2 Because He had cast off my bonds from me;
And my Helper had lifted me up to His grace and His salvation.
- 3 And I put off darkness,
And clothed myself with light:

Cf. Ephr. Ephr.
Hymn. vii. 22.

¹ B, arm.

- 4 And my soul acquired members
Free from sorrow,
Or affliction or pain.
- 5 And increasingly helpful to me was the thought of the Lord ;
And His incorruptible fellowship.
- 6 And I was lifted up in the light,
And I passed before Him ;
- 7 And I became near to Him,
Praising and confessing ¹ Him.
- 8 He made my heart overflow ; and it was found in my mouth ;
And it shone upon my lips.
- 9 And upon my face the exultation of the Lord increased,
And His praise likewise.²
Hallelujah.

Sap. Sol. vi. 19 ; cf.
Ode xxxvi. 6 ; and
Koran iii. 40.

Critical Notes.

v. 8. Three hypotheses are possible in the translation of the sentence وَجَدْتُ فِيَّ. It may either mean 'my heart ran over, or came forth', or 'I will make my heart run over, or come forth', or 'He made my heart run over or come forth'. Against the first translation we have the linguistic fact that when this verb is used in the form Aphel, it has always a transitive meaning and never an intransitive sense of 'he ran over, or came forth, gushed forth'. It is so used in Ode xxvi. 1. Against the second translation militates the fact that the sequence of the verbs would be impaired, for its rendering would then be, 'I will make my heart run over (or gush forth) and it was found in my mouth'. The future tense joined in the same phrase with the past tense is not very alluring linguistically. So far as the linguistic elements of the sentence are concerned, the only alternative left is to adopt the third rendering 'He made my heart run over (or come forth) and it was found in my mouth and it shone upon my lips'. However unnatural the idea of God making a heart come to the mouth and shine upon the lips may seem to be, it is the genuine meaning of the Syriac text. If we were allowed to suppose that a word has disappeared from the text and that 'my heart' is the subject of the verb 'he made to run over' the object would be a dropped word ܡܠܚܬܐ or ܡܠܬܐ as in Psalm xlv. 1. In this hypothesis we should have the following sense, 'my heart eructavit (sc. a word), and it was found in my mouth and it shone upon my lips'.

¹ Or, giving thanks to.

² Cod. B : in His praise.

Expository Notes.

In determining the meaning of this Ode our best plan will be to follow the method which has been so successful in previous Odes. Let us see if we can find the writer's literary model.

In the first place we notice a certain assonance running through the Ode. Compare:

- v. 1. 'My arms I lifted up:'
- v. 2. 'My helper had lifted me up.'
- v. 6. 'I was lifted up in His light.'

The repetition at once betrays the origin of the Psalm; it can be detected even in the English version:

'I will extol thee, O Lord,
For thou hast lifted me up.'

Thus the 30th Psalm should be the key to the 21st Ode. Let us now see whether this assonance in the Ode is derived from the Hebrew, the Greek, the Targum, or the Syriac of the Psalm. In Hebrew the language is:

אֶרְמָקָךְ יְהוָה כִּי דָלִיתִנִּי

i. e. 'I will exalt thee, O Lord, for thou hast drawn me up (out of Sheol).'

In the LXX, too, the words are different:

ὑψώσω σε, Κύριε, ὅτι ἐπέλαβές με.

'I will exalt thee, O Lord, for thou camest to my help.'

The Targum also shows two different words.

Now turn to the Syriac, and we find:

ܐܪܡܬܝܟܐ ܝܗܘܐ ܕܝ ܕܠܝܬܝܢܝ

where we find the very assonance that the Odist has imitated. He was working, then, on the Syriac Psalter.

In verse 3 the Odist says that 'he has put off darkness and clothed himself with light'; this is a paraphrase for verse 11 of the Psalm:

'thou hast loosed my sackcloth and girded me with gladness'; the Odist turns the 'sackcloth' to mean 'darkness'; ('as black as sackcloth of hair'): and 'gladness' naturally to be the 'body of light'. 'My Helper' (ܡܥܝܬܐ) in verse 2 is related to 'more exceedingly helpful' in verse 5 (ܡܥܝܬܐ ܥܕܐ). The motive for it is in verse 10 of the Psalm:

'Hear, O Lord, have mercy upon me.
O Lord, be thou my helper (ܡܥܝܬܐ).

'Praising and confessing Him' (or giving thanks to Him), might be thought a merely conventional expression in verse 7; but we notice that the Psalm in the concluding verse of the Syriac version has:

'For this I will sing (ܐܫܝܪ) praise (ܡܥܬܐ) to Thee and not be silent:
O Lord God forever will I confess (or give thanks ܝܫܝܪ) to thee.'

Thus the condition of dependence of the Ode on the Psalm can be seen in its texture throughout.

There are still some obscure turns in the Ode. What does it mean that 'I passed before Him and became near to Him'? We shall find something like this in the 36th Ode, where Christ is said to be one of the Divine neighbours; but the present Ode can hardly be ex ore Christi? If the Ode expressed a baptismal experience, as Dr. Bernard would urge, we could compare the language of Cyril of Jerusalem:

ἐν τῷ βαπτίσματι λαμβανόμεθα ἑνὸν ἀθάνατον ἀνακαινίζόμεθα πάντος παραπτώματος, καὶ ἐγγὺς τῷ Θεῷ γινώμεθα.—(P. G. 31, 1033).

Perhaps Cyril is quoting from the Ode before us. But perhaps also it is merely a reproduction of the language of Sap. Sol. 6. 19:

ἀφθαρσία δὲ ἐγγὺς εἶναι ποιεῖ Θεοῖ.
'Incorruption [sc. immortality] makes one near to God.'

The reference which precedes in the Ode to 'fellowship in incorruption' (verse 5) or 'fellowship incorruptible' should be noted. We must leave the matter for further investigation.

For an exact baptismal parallel we may take Ephrem, Hymns for Epiphany, vii. 22, 'Cast off the darkness that is upon you. The secret darkness ye have cast off; from the water ye have clothed yourself with light.' But as we have shown, Ephrem uses our Odes, and deliberately re-baptizes them.

The expression 'my heart ran over and was found in my mouth' (verse 8) requires some explanation. It is evidently based on the opening words of the 45th Psalm, either in the Targum or in the related Peshittā Version.

The Targum has the same root which we have translated by 'ran over', and so has the Syriac; we may set the sentence of the Ode side by side with the other two as follows:

Ode xxi. 8: ܕܢ ܠܒܝ ܫܠܡܬܐ ܕܦܥܬܐ

Targum (Ps. xlv. 2): ܒܥܬܐ ܠܒܝ ܡܡܠܐ ܬܒ

Peshittā (Ps. xlv. 2): ܕܢ ܠܒܝ ܦܠܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ

There can be no doubt, then, that the Odist is imitating the 45th Psalm; what has 'run over' is the 'good word', and this is what was 'found in the mouth'. The opening of the 45th Psalm, as is well known, is one of the proof passages for the doctrine of the Logos, and as such acquired great currency. The Odist, working from a Syriac original, indulges his fondness for paronomasia by contrasting the verb which is used in the Psalm (ܕܢ = eructavit) with a similar verb (ܕܠܐ = quaesivit); the word-play cannot be reproduced in any other language. It is clear that the Odist was working from the Syriac or Aramaic Psalter.

Looking more closely at the texts we see that the Targum has done something of the same kind. Instead of a root ܢܒܥ it has substituted ܒܥܬܐ which appears to require translation,

'My heart sought after a good word.'

It is in this direction, then, that we are to find the clue to the meaning of the Odist's words:

'My heart (ran over with) sc. a good word:
(sought after)

And it (the good word) was found in my mouth.'

Now that we have once again found out the canonical Psalm on which the Odist is working, we are in a position which is favourable for further investigation. For example, the 45th Psalm will find us the motive for the next clause :

‘And it dawned upon my lips’ ;

this comes from :

‘grace is poured into thy lips.’

Nor is it to be neglected that this great Psalm, which the Christian tradition has, from the first, interpreted Messianically, is an epithalamium for King Solomon, and therefore peculiarly likely to be the subject of an Ode. When we come to the 26th Ode, the knowledge which we have acquired with regard to the composition of the 21st Ode in its closing verses, will help us to catch the motive of the opening verse in that Ode also. For we may regard the Syriac expression ܕܠܗ ܕܠܗ ‘My heart poured out’ (‘eructavit cor meum’) as a recognizable formula, just as we should recognize ‘eructavit cor’ if we came across it in Latin.

A conjecture may be offered as to the reason why the Targum substituted for ܕܠܗ the form ܕܠܗ with which our Odist seems to have been acquainted. May it not be that ܕܠܗ, in the sense of eructavit was vulgar and unsuited to public reading or recitation, and that for that reason a change was made to a closely related word? One often feels the vulgarity of the language in reading the 45th Psalm in Greek or Latin, or the 78th Psalm, with its similar opening ἐρεύξομαι κεκρυμμένα ἀπὸ καταβολῆς

when quoted by the Gospel of Matthew (Mat. xiii. 35). The Targum does not, however, avoid the word where it occurs in Ps. lxxviii, and is certified by the Hebrew. On the other hand in this Psalm the Peshitta avoids the strong expression and says ‘I will speak parables’. Evidently there was some trouble over ܕܠܗ.

Not only is the Psalm to which we refer a Salomonic Psalm, and on that account one that the Odist might naturally study, but it is also the Psalm from which the Early Church, or the early Messianic preachers, took one of the titles of the Messiah, the title of ‘the Beloved’. And whoever first employed this title, it certainly acquired Christian connotation ; it is employed in the New Testament and it occurs in the Odes. The Psalm is headed in the Septuagint ὥδὴ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ, a very striking headline, which brings 'Ode' and 'Solomon' very near together.

The Hebrew does not bring out 'the Beloved' quite as clearly; it says:

שִׁיר יְדִידָת

which we may render 'a song of loves' or 'epithalamium'; but a very slight change would restore 'Song of the Beloved' as in the LXX.

That the early Christians interpreted 'the Beloved' to be one of the titles of Jesus is certain. For example, Eusebius, c. Marcellum, says:

'This very one (sc. Christ) was the Beloved of God, as the title of the 44th (45th) Psalm discloses by its contents, viz.: An Ode for the Beloved.'

So also Euseb. D. E. iv. 15:

'Consider the matter more closely and see how according to the preface of the Psalm (Ps. xlv (xlv) ut sup.) he makes his discourse to open with the words concerning the Beloved.'

And in the same strain Eusebius speaks elsewhere.

Now this is not fourth-century theology; the Psalm in question is constantly appealed to by early Patristic writers. They could not have ignored its conventional heading.

ODE XXII

(Christ speaks.)

- 1 He who brings me down from on high;
And brings me up from the regions below;
- 2 And who gathers the things that are betwixt,
And throws them to me;
- 3 He who scattered my enemies
And my adversaries;
- 4 He who gave me authority over bonds,
That I might loose them;

- 5 He that overthrew by my hands the dragon with seven heads,
And set me at his roots¹ that I might destroy his seed—
- 6 Thou wast there and didst help me;
And in every place Thy name was round about me.
- 7 Thy right hand destroyed his wicked venom;
And thy hand levelled the way for those who believe in thee;
- 8 And it chose them from the graves,
And separated them from the dead.

Cf. Ezek. xxxvii. 4-6.

- 9 It took dead bones,
And covered them with bodies;
- 10 And they were motionless,
And it gave (them) energy² for life.
- 11 Thy way was without corruption and thy face;
Thou didst bring thy world to corruption;
That everything might be dissolved and renewed,
- 12 And that the foundation for everything might be thy rock;
And on it thou didst build thy Kingdom;
And thou becamest³ the dwelling-place of the saints.

Cf. Matt. xvi. 18.

Cf. Ps. xc. 1.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. The MSS. have ܠܠܡܝܬܐ 'Thou hast set me at his roots', which is possible but not very grammatical. The copyists might have added the taw under the influence of the following verse. We have, therefore, suggested as a probable emendation ܠܠܡܝܬܐ. On the other hand, note that the Coptic text is against the emendation.

v. 10. We do not see why we should eliminate the waw before ܠܠܡܝܬܐ as Grimme has done.

¹ B, root.

² H, Help

And it became.

v. 6. Schulthess suggests, as in the Coptic, the addition of ~~with~~ 'with me'. The text, however, can do without the particle.

v. 7. B, has 'destroyed the poison of evil'.

vv. 8-10. Instead of the third person fem. sing., we can very well use the second person singular in verses 8-10; these two persons are distinguished one from another in the verbs employed in these verses only by a diversity of punctuation. The Coptic has used the second person.

Expository Notes.

We now come to one of the Odes which has become incorporated in the Pistis Sophia. Whatever hesitation we might have had as to the speaker in the previous Ode, we are confident that Christ Himself is the speaker in this Ode, and apparently Christ ascending from Hades. The opening sentence suggests Him that descended and ascended again; and the account of dead men taken from their graves and clothed again with flesh can hardly be anything else than the emancipation of the souls that are imprisoned in Hades. The Odist has no knowledge of a general resurrection (and in this respect, Bardaisan appears to have held the same view); but he has a belief in the immortality of the soul and the gift of God which is eternal life: and he has a strong doctrine of the Descent into Hades (see Ode xlii, for example).

It does not appear as if the Odist is deliberately working over a Psalm, as in previous cases. Where shall we find in a Psalm of the Old Testament a dragon with seven heads? We can, indeed, find a good reference in Psalm lxxiv. 13 'Thou brakest the heads of the dragons in the waters', a passage which with the addition of the seven heads, and the expansion of the waters by the addition of Jordan or some equivalent term, is commonly referred by the Patristic writers to the waters of baptism, and the enemy who is exorcised therein. But can we find an early instance of this exegesis? Here are some late examples that we have noted: the Greek ritual for the Blessing of the Waters at the Festival of the Epiphany says: 'Thou didst sanctify the streams of Jordan by sending from Heaven thy Holy Spirit, and by breaking the heads of the dragons lurking there'.

In a Homily ascribed to Gregory Thaumaturgus (tr. by Conybeare in Expositor for 1896, pp. 161 ff.) we find :

‘Not any more let the race of men fear the craftiness and deceit of the serpent, because the Lord hath bruised the head of the dragon in the water of baptism.’

In the Armenian ritual for baptism (ed. Conybeare, p. 101) some manuscripts have :

‘Thou, Lord, didst bruise the head of the dragon upon the waters. We humbly pray thee, look down upon this water, and send the gift of thy grace, and the benediction of the Jordan,’ &c.

But here is something of an earlier date which bears upon the destruction of the poison of the serpent: Cyprian, in one of his epistles (Ep. 68, ed. Hartel, p. 764):

‘diaboli nequitiam pertinacem ad aquam salutarem valere, in baptismo vero omne nequitiae suae virus amittere; quod exemplum cernimus in rege Pharaone.’

Here Pharaoh and the devil divide the honour of posing as the dragon: it is certainly curious that Cyprian’s language ‘nequitiae virus’ should come so near to the ‘wicked poison’ of the Ode. The reference to Pharaoh is taken from Ezek. xxix. 3, ‘Pharaoh, King of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers’.

So much for the baptismal gnosis of the fathers and the rituals.

Turning to the Ode, we recognize in the story of the raising of the dead from Sheol the influence of Ezekiel, ch. xxxvii. Now we begin to strike linguistic parallels: the Ode says: verse 9 ‘(thy right hand) took dead bones and spread bodies upon them’ (ܡܕܒܗ ܕܚܝܬܐ). The Peshitta says: ‘and I will spread skin upon you’ (ܡܕܒܗ ܕܚܝܬܐ). Here the Odist has used the same root as is employed in the Peshitta and the Hebrew (Gk. ἐκτείνω) to express the spreading of skin over a body, and he has used it for the bringing of flesh upon bones. It was not the right word to use, but he took it from his context, i.e. from the Hebrew or the Syriac. We take it that he was using a Syriac text of Ezekiel. The next sentence, ‘and thou gavest them energy for life’, represents the Syriac ‘and I will give you spirit and you shall live’: but the sentence has a Greek look, for ܡܕܒܗ ܕܚܝܬܐ stands for ἐνέργεια, and the word is actually preserved in the Coptic.

In verse 8 the sentence :

‘Thou didst choose them from the graves,
And separate them from the dead.’

is under the influence of verse 62 :

‘I will open your graves,
And bring you up out of your graves’;

but there is no preference for one version over the other.

The expression ‘they were without motion’ (سلا صلا ارحم) is obtained from the seventh verse of the prophecy, ‘there was a moving’ (سلا). The Greek σεισμός would not furnish the required parallel. On the whole, we suspect Syriac origin for the Ode, but the case is not nearly so strong nor so convincing as some which we had from the Psalms.

If we are right in recognizing the influence of Ezekiel in the middle of the Ode, it would seem to be either on account of the liberation of souls from Hades or of the raising of the dead generally. The Syriac Bible heads the chapter ‘Resurrection of the dead’. Ephrem used it to describe the escape from Hades. In the Nisibene Hymns (37, 5) he speaks as follows :

‘I saw in the valley that Ezekiel who quickened the dead when he was questioned; and I saw the bones that were in heaps, and they moved; There was a tumult of bones in Sheol, bone seeking for his fellow, and joint for her mate; . . . Unquestioned, the voice of Jesus, the Master of all creatures, quickened them.’

The Ode itself suggests the release from Hades in the words :

‘He gave me authority over bonds,
That I might loose them.’

We have not, however, been able to find the thread of the sequence of the Ode, either for the opening verses or its close.

The perplexity concerning the Dragon and his roots and his seed (verse 5) may perhaps be illuminated by a reference to the Greek Acts of John (ch. 98) where the Gnostic writer of the Acts refers to Σατανᾶς καὶ ἡ κατωτικὴ ῥίζα, which root he identifies with the nature of created things. There is no need to accept his Gnostic interpretation of the ‘root’; the point for us is the existence of an expression like the ‘root of Satan’; for Satan as the dragon compare Apocalypse xii. 9 :

ὁ δράκων ὁ μέγας, ὁ ὄφις ὁ ἀρχαῖος, ὁ καλούμενος Διάβολος καὶ ὁ Σατανᾶς.

Suppose we identify the Dragon with Satan and the Serpent in Genesis, as the Apocalypse suggests. We find that the Apocalypse also knows that the Dragon has seven heads. It is natural, then, to infer that we are dealing in some respects with an interpretation of the third chapter of Genesis (Gen. iii. 15). This, then, is the place where the reference to the 'seed' comes from, that is to be destroyed; for,

‘I will put enmity between . . . thy seed and her seed.’

The woman and her seed are to be at war with the devil and his brood.

The word שׁוּב which is used of the ‘overthrow’ of the Dragon answers on the one hand to the repeated ἐβλήθη of the Apocalypse, and to συντρίψει of Romans xvi. 20; (Pesh. ܫܡܫܐ). As to the ‘root’, it is probably a Syriac or Aramaic variation of ܠܡܢ (root) for ܠܡܢܐ ‘heel’ of Genesis iii. 15.

If this is the right direction for the explanation of the Conflict with the Dragon in Ode xxii, we need not refer to the baptismal gnosis on the dragon in the midst of the waters, or the Patristic allusions to a dragon in the Jordan. There are no ‘waters’ in the curse on the serpent in Genesis. The allusions to the dragon in the baptismal rituals will belong to a later date, and to subsequent reflection.

The objection may be made that the dragon with seven heads ought not to be equated with the relatively terrorless snake in Genesis. The answer to this objection is (1) that the two are expressly identified in Apocalypse xii, (2) that the same variation between ‘snake’ and ‘dragon’ is found in Exodus iv, where it is noted by John Lightfoot as follows: ‘Moses’ rod at Sinai is said to be turned into “Nahash”, a common or ordinary snake or serpent; but when he casts it down before Pharaoh, it becometh “Tanin”, a serpent of the greatest dimensions, belike a crocodile.’ So, if more evidence is wanted than that of the Apocalypse, let Exodus be offered.

In the same connexion Lightfoot offered a weighty illustration of the truth that the bruising of the serpent’s head belongs to the Messiah, for, as he says, ‘It is worth the observing, that Moses is commanded to “take it by the tail”, for to meddle with the serpent’s head belonged not to Moses, but to Christ, that spake to him out of the bush”! No doubt Christ, as the seed of the Woman, is peculiarly set apart for the conflict with the head of the dragon. Does not the study of the Ode show that Genesis iii was already interpreted Messianically in the days of the Odist?

To this there can hardly be any other than an affirmative answer, seeing that it is so interpreted in the Apocalypse. In the Odes, we have the seed of the Woman engaged in the destruction of the seed of the serpent; in the Apocalypse, we have the serpent plotting to destroy the residue of the seed of the Woman; the two interpretations are complementary. The seven heads of the dragon which are common to both of the interpretations belong to folklore rather than to Bible story: for this mythical creation ranges from Japan to the Scotch Highlands: its tale is told, as Professor Elliot Smith points out, in the 'Celtic Dragon Myth' of J. F. Campbell, as well as in the story of Herakles and the daughters of Hesperus: and it goes back to an original Octopus or devil-fish, which may well have been a terror to the inhabitants of the Levant or the Persian Gulf. That we have found the right meaning may be seen from Ephrem's Hymns to the Virgin (Lamy, ii. 606), where it is said that 'the boy trod on the cursed one and broke (the head of) the serpent, and cured Eve of the poison cast at her by the murderous dragon, who by his guile had overthrown her (ܡܨܝܢ) in Sheol'.

In reading this Ode we must pay careful attention to the periphrases which the Odist employs to describe the Divine Nature and the Divine Action. In the compass of this single Ode there is a rich harvest of Targumisms; we have the 'hand of God', the 'name of God', the 'right hand of God', the 'face of God'. The Odist will not even say that 'God is round about him'; he says that 'thy name was all round me everywhere'. He will not say that 'God is his rock'; he says 'Thy rock is the foundation of everything'. If we look at Psalm cxxv. 2, ('so the Lord is round about his people'), we shall find the origin of the Odist's language; the coincidence with the Syriac is very close:

ܡܡܢܐ ܕܢܝܢ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܡܡܢܐ ܕܢܝܢ ܕܡܠܟܐ

The Targumic variation on the part of the Odist is very clear. It is not the official Targum that is here drawn on: that interpreter proceeds to get rid of the doubtful 'circumference' of God, by saying that 'the Majesty of the Lord is round about his people'. The same phenomenon appears in the closing verse of the Ode: the Odist will not say 'Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place': he has, indeed, the expression ~~ܐܠܗܐ~~ ~~ܐܠܗܐ~~ as in the Peshitta, but it is equated not with God, but with the Kingdom that is founded. The official Targum alters the language of the Psalm in another direction: 'O Lord' he says, 'thy dwelling is the place of thy Shekinah in the heavens'. The Odist is clearly an independent Targumist in his manner of glossing the text, but as regards the text itself, he appears to depend on the Peshitta.

Here is another curious point with regard to the circumlocution noted above, according to which the Odist does not speak of God as his Rock in the same way as the Psalter so commonly does, and in spite of his proved dependence upon the Psalter. The Peshitta version is in the same case: it never translates 'God my rock', or the 'Rock of my salvation'. It always either omits or paraphrases the reference to God as Rock. The natural explanation is furnished us by the Targum, which does the same thing in its own way, commonly substituting 'fortitude' or some non-material expression. It seems, then, that the Odist and the Peshitta version are both under Targumist influence; the Odist was not independent of the Peshitta, and was working, for the most part at all events, on that text as his base. He was evidently speaking in the name of Christ.

ODE XXIII

1 Joy is of the saints!

And who shall put it on but they alone?

2 Grace is of the elect!

And who shall receive it but they who trust in it from the beginning?

3 Love is of the elect!

And who shall put it on, but those who have possessed it from the beginning?

- 4 Walk ye in the knowledge of the Most High¹;
And ye shall know the grace of the Lord without grudging;
To His exultation and to the perfection of His knowledge.
- 5 And His thought was like a letter,
And His will descended from on high;
- 6 And it was sent like an arrow
Which is violently shot from the bow;
- 7 And many hands rushed to the letter,
To seize it and to take it and to read it.
- 8 And it escaped from their fingers,
And they were affrighted at it and at the seal that was on it.
- 9 For it was not permitted to them to loose the seal;
For the power that was over the seal was greater than they.
- 10 But those who saw it went after the letter,
That they might know where it would alight,
And who should read it,
And who should hear it.
- 11 But a wheel received it,
And (the letter) came over it;
- 12 And there was with it a sign
Of the kingdom and of the government.
- 13 And everything which was moving the wheel
It mowed and cut down;

¹ Or, of the Lord (B).

14 And it destroyed¹ many things that were adverse;
And it spanned² the rivers:

15 And crossed over and rooted up many³ forests,³
And made a broad path.

16 The head went down to the feet;
For down to the feet ran the wheel;
And that which had come upon it.

Cf. 2 Cor. iii. 1.

17 The letter was one of recommendation⁴;
For there were included in it⁵ all districts:

18 And there was seen at its head, a head which was revealed
Even the Son of Truth from the Most High Father;

19 And he inherited and took possession of everything;
And the thought of the many was brought to naught,

20 And all the apostates⁶ became bold and fled away,
And the persecutors became extinct and were blotted out.

21 And the letter became a great tablet,⁷
Which was wholly written by the finger of God;

22 And the name of the Father was upon it;
And of the Son and of the Holy Spirit,
To rule for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

¹ Both MSS. it contained. ² Lit. covered with earth. ³ Or, nations (B).

⁴ Or, command; B, It was a letter and a command.

⁵ Lit. were gathered together. ⁶ Or, seducers, leaders astray. ⁷ Or, volume.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. The idea that the 'will of God' descended from heaven is very common in Syrian Fathers and Syriac breviaries: 'His will descended and inhabited with its servants' (Ephr. iii. 248, R. E.); 'His will descended for men' (Ephr. ibid., 249, &c.).

The expression that 'His Will descended from on High' is to be referred to the Incarnation, and the Lord is frequently referred to in the Nestorian rituals as the 'Invisible or Hidden Will'. Here are some extracts from Mar Abd 'Isho', which will illustrate the point.

'In a befitting way His Will descended towards men: He sent His Beloved, the Begotten of Himself, that is, His Express Image.'

'The Will of the Creator descended and united itself to the will of the creature: the Divine nature clothed itself with the human nature.'

'The Invisible Will came down, took a parsopa, and appeared openly, and thereby renewed that which was broken up.'¹

It is clear, then, that the Descent of the Will is another way of saying Incarnation. Probably the starting point for such a line of thought is Psalm xl. 5: 'Lo, I come: to do thy Will, O God.'

v. 13. The opinion of Bruston who suggests ܡܠܐܝܬܐ for ܡܠܐܝܬܐ is improbable.

v. 14. Both MSS. have ܡܠܐܝܬܐ; and the note to the text must therefore be changed accordingly. As far as the meaning is concerned, the word does not differ from ܡܠܐܝܬܐ, of which it is only the relative adjective.

v. 16. Gressmann's suggestion that the verb ܡܠܐ 'he came down' is the fem. sing. of ܡܠ 'he rested', is not good in the context.

In the next line we remark that H has the singular ܡܠܐ ('foot' not 'feet').

For the belief that the head which went down to the feet represents the descent of the Divinity upon the Humanity of Jesus, we may find some support in the following glosses:

Melito, Clavis, 6. 1 'Caput Domini, ipsa Divinitas, eo quod principium et creator sit omnium rerum.'

In Daniele, ii. 21 'Pedes Domini homo assumptus a verbo vel sancti apostoli.'

¹ The reference is to Badger, Nestorians, pp. 39, 41, 45.

In Deuteronomio: 'Qui appropinquant pedibus eius accipient de doctrina illius.'

Et in Psalmo. 'Adorabimus in loco ubi steterunt pedes eius.'

Eucherius, Liber Formularum (P. L. 50. 733 B): 'Sicut per caput divinitas, ita per pedes humanitas eius exprimitur: de qua humanitate in Exodo scriptum erat.' (Exod. xxiv. 10.)

v. 18. H has ܠܠܝܢܐ, 'his (or its) head' as referring to the other head mentioned in verse 16. According to this MS., therefore, it would seem that another head had sprung forth upon the first head. For the second ܠܠܝܢܐ Barnes suggests ܠܠܝܢܐ, which, however, would render the sentence ungrammatical.

v. 20. The verb ܠܠܝܢܐ 'they dared', 'they became bold' has been changed by Barth into ܠܠܝܢܐ 'they were hurt', 'wounded', 'maimed', or 'they perished', and by Wellhausen into ܠܠܝܢܐ 'sie wurden zerstreut'; which verb is commonly used in Syriac in the sense of 'to squander possessions', 'to dilapidate'.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is the most difficult of all the hymns in the collection. It contains an account of a mysterious letter, shot from heaven like an arrow from a bow, sealed with a terrible seal, written with the finger of God, and inscribed with the name of the Trinity. No one, so far, has succeeded in breaking this seal; it is too strong for the critics.

The opening sentences of the Ode in which the Odist prepares for his special message are quite intelligible. They take us to the Wisdom of Solomon: in the third chapter we read as follows:

οἱ πεποιθότες ἐπ' αὐτῷ συνήσουσιν ἀλήθειαν,
καὶ οἱ πιστοὶ ἐν ἀγάπῃ προσμενοῦσιν αὐτῷ,
ὅτι χάρις καὶ ἔλεος τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς αὐτοῦ.

Sap. Sol. iii. 9.

And again:

ὅτι χάρις καὶ ἔλεος τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς αὐτοῦ.

Sap. Sol. iv 15.

This is the passage which has suggested to the Odist the refrain :

‘Joy is of the saints :
Grace is of the elect :
Love is of the elect.’

and he goes on in the language of Wisdom

‘Walk in the Knowledge of the Most High
. to the perfection of Knowledge.’

So far we might classify the Ode as one of the Wisdom Odes, and as half-Gnostic. Now comes the mystery, for the preface is ended. Various explanations have been offered of the letter, and the wheel that comes over it, or on to which it comes. Some have compared the flying roll in Zechariah, some the mysterious letter in the Hymn of the Soul, or the letter carried by an eagle in the Baruch story: but the obscurity is undisputed, and we can only give the best translation that seems possible and offer a tentative elucidation.

There is an explanation suggested by the Syrian Fathers, and especially by St. Ephrem, that the mysterious letter is the message which Gabriel brought to the Virgin. As we have shown abundantly the acquaintance of Ephrem with the Odes, which he quotes and misquotes, understands and obscures, it will be proper to examine what he has to say on the subject of a letter from Heaven. In the Hymns on the Virgin, Ephrem says expressly that Gabriel brought with him a letter :

‘He brought a letter which was sealed with the mystery hidden from the ages ; and its contents were peace to the maiden and good hope to all the ages.’

ܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܠܝܐ ܕܡܝܠܝܬܐ
ܕܥܠܝܐ ܕܡܝܠܝܬܐ
ܕܥܠܝܐ ܕܡܝܠܝܬܐ
ܕܥܠܝܐ ܕܡܝܠܝܬܐ

(Ed. Lamy, ii. 593.¹)

¹ See also col. 641 of the same volume :

‘The Father had written a letter : by the hand of the Watcher (sc. Angel) He sent it to Nazareth : to the Virgin Mary whom He had chosen and had good pleasure in, that she should be the Mother of the Only-Begotten.’

For further references see Narsai quoted in Brev. Chald. i. 46 ; Jacob of Sarugh, Liber perfectionis (ed. Bedjan), p. 727, &c.

We get the same thought in the Oriental Breviary as follows :

‘[God] sent a letter which He sealed with His essence, which has no beginning.’¹

‘[Gabriel] entrusted to her [Mary] the letter which had been entrusted to him by the Father.’²

‘Gabriel was sent by the Father to Mary, he took a letter and descended. This letter contained a mystery hidden from the Ages.’³

The Letter appears, then, to be something of a documentary character ; for the Odist reminds us in concluding his story that it was written by the finger of God, like the Ten Commandments. Where shall we find a missing document that answers to the conditions ? And what is the meaning of all the strife that is provoked by the Letter and its attendant Wheel ? The only clue that seems worth following, as we have just seen, is the Syriac reference to the Salutation of the Virgin by the angel Gabriel, as being in the form of a letter. In that case, the Ode is a dramatic representation of the Incarnation. Let us see if there is any light thrown upon the Ode in this direction.

According to the Odist, the Letter was a great volume or tablet ; ‘tablet’ is the best explanation for the Syriac word that is employed, in view of the parallel with the tables inscribed by the finger of God. When we write down the word ‘a great tablet’ we are confronted with Isaiah viii. 1, the prologue to the story of the Birth of the Messiah :

‘Take thee a great tablet.’

No doubt, then, we are on the right track. The Hebrew and Peshitta texts use a different word, the former of necessity (for פסל is of Greek origin), the latter because it imitates the Hebrew : the Targum has also a different word, which also means ‘tablet’. The LXX prefers ‘a roll of paper’. The language of the Odist appears to be independent of these possible sources, but his meaning is the same.

Isaiah continues with an injunction of the Lord to write on the tablet ‘with the pen of a man’. This is the starting-point for the next statement of the Odist, that the Letter was altogether written by the finger of God.

¹ Ed. Bedjan, i. 44.

² Ibid., p. 45.

³ Ibid., p. 77.

He often works with antitheses of this kind, and appears to have thought that a human pen was not adequate to the mystery that he was unfolding. So far, we appear to be on the right track; it is the coming of Christ that is being described, and the Scripture is drawn upon that describes that coming.

Now we begin to see daylight in some other directions. The Will of God that descends from Heaven answers to another Scripture:

‘Lo! I come,
In the volume of the book it is written of me . . .
To do thy will, O God.’—Ps. xl. 7, 8.

It may, then, be very properly said that ‘His will descended from on High’.

Then, in the next place, it is probably from the fifth verse of the same Psalm:

‘Thy thoughts which are to us-ward;’

that this Odist derives his expression:

‘His thought was like a letter;’

the same word, , being used here by the Odist and the Peshiṭta version.

The third verse of the Psalm has also been drawn upon somewhat perversely, for the sentence really belongs to the previous verses:

‘Many shall see it and shall fear.’

Accordingly the Odist has a rush of hands to seize the sealed letter, which escapes them, and they are frightened at the Letter and the terrible seal that was on it. (The Peshiṭta says, ‘they shall see it and rejoice’.) The reason for the introduction of the seal takes us back to Isaiah viii. 16:

‘Bind up the testimony,
Seal the law among my disciples.’

The Odist goes on to explain that the reason why the many who saw the letter went after it was in order that they might know where it would alight and who should read it. Here we have probably an echo of a controversy as to the place where the Messiah was to be born.

We know the evangelical solution of the problem: but the Odist has his eye on the time when the problem was still unsolved.¹

The references to the Kingdom and the Government are easily made from the tablet of Isaiah, e. g.

Isa. ix. 7. 'The increase of His government, . . . the throne of David . . . and His Kingdom.'

So also the references to the Trinity, and to 'rule that is for ever and ever', are all deducible from the same section, for 'of the increase of His government there shall be no end . . . from henceforth even for ever'. No reference to the New Testament is necessary.²

There remains the mysterious 'wheel' and the conflicts that are associated with it. All the rest of the Ode appears to be cleared up. How does the Wheel and its warfare come into the story of the Nativity? And who are the persecutors and the apostates?

Is it possible that Wheel stands for Angelic Being? There is some ground for this in Syriac. See the Thesaurus under . Examples might be multiplied.

The expression 'there was seen at its head the head which was revealed', is an attempt to avoid saying something of an anthropomorphic character. Whenever we come across the expression  with or without , we may expect to find traces of Targumism; for this is the way in which one avoids saying that God knows or that God sees. Say rather, it is revealed before Him, or it is seen before Him. The language of the Ode is then a periphrasis: it probably means that 'God was seen at the head of the letter, and the Son of Truth from the Father', but this is what the Odist does not like to say even parabolically; so he produces a sentence in the style of the Targums.

¹ Or it may be that there is a reference to the Cave of the Nativity, which was thought to be foretold in Isa. xxxiii. 16. 'His lodgement  shall be in a lofty cavern'; cf. Justin, Dial. 78, and Luke ii. 7 (καταλύσαι, καταλύματα).

² The Testimony writers prove the endless reign of Christ from the texts which establish the first Advent: e. g. Cyprian, ii. 29 'Quod ipse sit rex in aeternum regnaturus'. Proofs follow from Zach. ix. 9; Isa. xxxiii. 14 sq. (the 'cave'-passage, &c.).

ODE XXIV

- 1 The Dove flew over the head of our Lord the Messiah,¹
Because He was her head ;
- 2 And she sang over Him,
And her voice was heard :
- 3 And the inhabitants were afraid,
And the sojourners trembled ;
- 4 The birds took to flight,
And all creeping things died in their holes.
- 5 And the abysses were opened and closed ;
And they were seeking for the Lord, like (women) in travail :
- 6 And He was not given to them for food
Because He did not belong to them :
- 7 And the abysses were submerged in the submersion of the Lord :
And they perished in the thought which they had existed in from the beginning.
- 8 For they travailed from the beginning,
And the end of their travail was life.
- 9 And every one of them that was defective perished ;
For it was not permitted to them to make a defence for themselves that they might remain :
- 10 And the Lord destroyed the imaginations
Of all them that had not the truth with them ;

Cf. Ephr. Hymn. in Fest. Epiph. i. 89.

¹ H, over the Messiah.

- 11 For they were defective in wisdom,
They who were lifted up in their hearts.
- 12 And they were rejected,
Because the truth was not with them.
- 13 For the Lord disclosed His way,
And spread abroad His grace;
- 14 And those who understood it Know His holiness.
- Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 3. This verse appears to have been derived from the song of Moses at the Red Sea, e. g. Exodus xv. 29 (Syr.):

‘The peoples heard it and trembled. Then the chieftains of Edom (ܐܡܝܢ) were afraid; and the strong men of Moab, shaking took hold of them; and the dwellers (ܚܕܝܬܐ) of Canaan were all defeated.’

If this is a correct identification of the language, the Ode is in part an Ode of deliverance at the Red Sea; and the abysses in verses 5, 7 which are submerged, are to be sought for in the same song. Cf. verse 8:

‘the abysses sunk down in the heart of the sea.’¹

v. 4. The expression ܡܚܡܐ ܕܥܢܐ means literally ‘left its wings’, and therefore can hardly be translated linguistically by ‘dropped its wings’. The verb is used in Ode xxxiii. 3, and frequently by other writers, in the sense of ‘to give freedom to an object in order to accomplish the function assigned to it with all its energy’. It is so used in the vulgar

¹ So we translate ܡܚܡܐ according to the Syriac lexicographers, who explain it by ܪܫܒܐ (fundum petiivit), and this translation is in good agreement with ܡܚܡܐ of the Ode.

Syriac of our days. Following this sense the meaning of the sentence would be, 'Fowl flew swiftly'. This meaning is rendered necessary by B, which instead of ܦܬܠܐ has ܦܬܝܠܐ 'it (the dove) flew'. We could with difficulty evade this sense with the last reading, which seems preferable, corresponding as it does with ܦܬܠܐ of the first verse.

The opinion of Bruston, who regards the verb ܡܬܬܠܐ as a 'substantive': 'Un mal mortel le retenait', is very improbable.

v. 5. We think that the verb ܡܬܬܠܐ 'and they were closed', 'and they hid themselves', or 'they were hidden, covered' is good in the sentence, and we do not see why we should change it to ܡܬܬܠܐ 'and they looked', as Labourt has done.

Gressmann has suggested that instead of ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ we might read ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ 'and they swallowed the Lord like things belonging to them'. Such violent and unnecessary changes cannot commend themselves. The same may be said in the first line for Grimme's emendation of the existing phrase into ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ and Frankenberg's reading ܡܬܬܠܐ ܡܬܬܠܐ. There is also no necessity to change ܡܬܬܠܐ into ܡܬܬܠܐ as Grimme has done in the second line.

v. 6. Cod. H omits ܕ before ܡܬܬܠܐ, which gives the sense, 'and no food was given to them'.

v. 7. This is the only meaning the Syriac sentence can have.

It is clear that the Odist wishes to say that when Christ was baptized something depressing happened in the lower world. The passage and its correct meaning was known to Ephrem Syrus, who in his Carmina Nisibena (35, p. 59) makes the devil say that 'when Christ was submerged in baptism, He broke away and swamped me'.

The Odist has the same thought in his mind in Ode xxxi, 2:

'The abysses were dissolved before the Lord:

.
Folly was submerged by the truth of the Lord.'

v. 9. Bruston erroneously reads ܬܠܐ for ܬܠܐ or ܬܠܐ and believes that the word stands for ܬܠܐ 'tablet'.

v. 12. The suggestion of Grimme, who regards all the second member of this verse as dittographical error, is not necessary.

Expository Notes.

Another Ode thick with obscurity. Its opening describes the descent of the Spirit upon Christ at His baptism, and describes it in unorthodox language, by making the Spirit subordinate to the Son. We have shown how Ephrem corrects the Odist for his lapse from correct theology. It was suggested in the first edition that there was uncanonical matter involved in the account of the fluttering and singing dove. However that may be, the baptismal incident is soon ended, and we are apparently plunged into Hades along with Christ whom the abysses are expecting to devour. As Cyril of Jerusalem says:

‘His body was made to bait death withal, to the end that the dragon, lying in wait to devour Him, might cast forth those whom he had already devoured.’—Catech., xii. 15.

This quaint belief, that Hades desired to devour and was compelled to disgorge, appears to have been a favourite conceit of the ancients. We shall find it again in Ode xlii. 11: ‘Death cast me up and many along with me’; and it is dilated on at length by Ephrem in his Carmina Nisibena, e. g.

‘I, Sheol, was fed upon the dead; yea, I feasted upon corpses: Elijah slew the prophets of Baal and gave them to me’; ‘The righteous constrained me to devour, but Jesus has compelled me to disgorge.’

There seems to be some occult connexion of ideas between the baptism of Christ and the descent into Hades; what else does it mean when it says ‘the abysses were submerged in the submersion of the Lord’?

Almost every sentence in this Ode is obscure, and we have failed to get completely into the Odist’s world of ideas. Kleinert and Harris have suggested that there is some allusion to the Flood, especially in verse 4; but the arguments are not satisfactory nor conclusive.

v. 6. ‘He was not given to them for food, because He did not belong to them.’

The meaning is brought out more clearly by a comment of Victorinus on Apocalypse xii. 4, where the seven-headed dragon tries to devour the seed of the woman. Victorinus (is he here quoting Papias, as in so many other cases?) says that :

‘He who was not born of seed, owed nothing to death, therefore He could not devour Him, that is, detain Him in death,—for on the third day He rose again.’

As this reference of Victorinus, with its possible dependence on Papias, and its certain allusion to the dragon that would devour the seed of the woman in the Apocalypse (xii. 4), is of critical importance, we transcribe the Latin of Victorinus :

‘Sed qui de semine natus non erat, nihil morti debebat, propter quod devorare eum non potuit, id est in morte detinere, nam tertia die resurrexit.’ (P. L. v. 336, D.)

If this is based on Papias, it throws the Odist into the same current of beliefs with the millenarians who first expounded the Apocalypse. We have, however, found nothing eschatological or millenarian in the Odes. This suggests that the Odist is not a commentator on the Apocalypse, but that he shares certain Messianic ideas with the author of that book, as, for example, the fight between the dragon and the woman, and between his seed and her seed.

Is it possible that Victorinus (or Papias) may have drawn on the Odes?

Certainly there is another Ode whose meaning is much clearer after reading Victorinus. In the 31st Ode (v. 8) Christ is made to say :

‘They made me a debtor,
(though I rose up):
Me, who had not been a debtor.’

If we take this to mean that Christ was made to pay the debt to death, which he could not really pay, and that He rose from the dead, we have the very meaning in the passage from Victorinus.

We see a further link between the Odist and the author of the Apocalypse: for Victorinus says that the dragon could not devour the Messiah, i. e. he could not hold Him in death. Thus the devouring of the man-child in the Apocalypse means the death of Christ, and the Odist says the same thing. He also believes that Death could not devour Him; He was no food for that abyss.

ODE XXV

- 1 I was rescued from my bonds ;
And unto thee, my God, I fled.
- 2 For thou wast the right hand of my salvation,
And my helper.
- 3 Thou hast restrained them that rise up against me,
And they were seen no more :
- 4 Because thy face was with me,
Which saved me by thy grace.
- 5 But I was despised and rejected in the eyes of many :
And I was in their eyes like lead ;
- 6 And I acquired strength from thyself,
And help.
- 7 Thou didst set me a lamp at my right hand and at my left,
That in me there may be nothing that is not bright ;
- 8 And I was covered with the covering of thy spirit ;
And I removed from me the raiment of skins.
- 9 For thy right hand lifted me up,
And removed sickness from me.
- 10 And I became mighty in thy truth,
And holy by thy righteousness ;
- 11 And all my adversaries were afraid of me :
And I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord :
- 12 And I was justified by His gentleness,
And His rest is for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Cf. Sap. Sol. iii. 16, and cf. Ode xxviii. 9.

Critical Notes.

v. 2. The opinion of Labourt, who thinks that instead of ܩܕܝܫܐ we should read ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ, is unnecessary.

v. 5. ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܠܐ 'like lead' is not a very happy image. Would it not be possible to suppose that it was the Biblical word ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܠܐ 'like a lost, damned (man)' as in Ode xxviii. 9? Or does the Odist mean that Christ's enemies thought he had sunk like lead into the great abyss? Cf. Exodus xv. 10 'they sank like lead in the mighty waters'.

v. 8. The verb ܩܕܝܫܐ may very well be understood in the second person, 'Thou hast taken off'; the Coptic has the first person. So is the case with ܩܕܝܫܐ of the next verse, which may be taken as the third person feminine referring to 'thy right hand', or as the second person singular referring to God.

v. 10. Frankenberg proposes to read ܩܕܝܫܐ 'and strong' for ܩܕܝܫܐ, which is possible.

v. 11. The second line is wanting in the Coptic.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is of a much more intelligible structure than those which immediately precede. It appears to be a song of personal redemption and illumination. One or two verses have an appearance of being ex ore Christi. For example, in verse 5 one recognizes the refrain of 'despised and rejected'; and if we may make a slight correction in the Syriac and read ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܠܐ instead of ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܠܐ, we should have a parallel to 'I was in their eyes like a lost man', in the 28th Ode (verse 9), where Christ says

'I seemed to them as one of the lost.'

The objection would be that the Coptic, as well as the Syriac, has 'lead'. But this objection is not final, as the texts in question are closely related. Moreover, we get the same refrain again in the 42nd Ode (verse 10), where Christ is certainly the speaker:

'I was not rejected, though I was reckoned to be so:

I did not perish, though they thought it of me.'

Evidently these Odes are by the same author, and they must be early, for they convey an impression of surprise at the recovery and resurrection of Jesus, which would not have been natural in times very long after the foundation of the Christian Church. It is not, however, easy to see how to refer this Ode generally to the mouth of Christ.

For the enemies who have been turned back, and who are seen no more, 'we have also parallels in the rest of the Odes. For instance, in Ode xlii. 5 :

'all my persecutors are dead.'

Again in Ode xxiii. 20 :

'The persecutors became extinct and were blotted out.'

Again in Ode xxii. 3 :

'He scattered my enemies and my adversaries,' followed as in Ode xlii by a descent into Hades.

If these sentences refer to Christ and his enemies and persecutors we may, perhaps, regard them as written during an interim peace of the early Church ; but we are still in difficulty as to the division of the 25th Ode between the prophet and Christ.

In another direction, we are encompassed with interpreters' difficulties. The Ode appears to come from a Semitic hand ; the writer is 'covered with the covering of thy Spirit' ; and there is a Semitic play on words in verses 8, 9 :

'I removed (سلبت) from me the raiment of skins :

Thy right hand lifted me up (سلبت).'

But, on the other hand, as we have shown in the Introduction, the writer concludes with a statement that he is a Christian justified by the kindness (χρηστότης) of God. This seems to require a Greek authorship.

The closing verse of the Ode has, in fact, been interpreted in the Introduction as covering a Greek play on the words χριστός and χρηστός, which is taken up in the reference to justification by the gentleness (χρηστότης) of the Lord. The argument is a very strong one, and thoroughly harmonious with an Antiochian origin for the Odes.

But there stands against it the strikingly Semitic language of the previous verses, such as 'covered with the covering of thy Spirit,' and especially the play on words involved in ‘Thou didst remove (ܐܡܥܬ) from me.’

‘Thy right hand lifted me up (ܐܡܥܬ).’

It is not easy to reconcile the two points of view. If the Syriacisms are not to be got rid of, we must find some other method of dealing with the closing verse, or say that the writer was bilingual and thought in two languages. Perhaps there may be in the closing sentences a reference to Isaiah xlv. 5 :

‘One shall say, I am the Lord’s,

And another shall call himself by the name of Jacob,’ &c.

This would make a very good starting-point for the verse :

‘I became the Lord’s

By the Name of the Lord.’

v. 7. The key to this passage was suggested in the editio princeps, which adds a foot-note referring to Psalm cxxxii. 17. Apparently it was regarded as a case of the use of biblical language by an author who was familiar with the Psalms.

Now that we know more about the Odist’s methods, we inquire whether he has the actual Psalm before him, and is making use of it.

The Odist goes on from the mention of the lamps to the right and to the left and discourses about the covering or enduement of the Spirit which he has received ; when we turn to the Psalm we find two references to clothing adjacent to the verse which we are discussing : the previous verse says :

‘I will clothe her priests with salvation ;’

the following verse says :

‘His enemies will I clothe with shame.’

Thus the Psalm furnished the suggestion for the ‘covering’ in the Ode.

In the ninth verse of the same Psalm we find again an allusion to the clothing of God’s priests with righteousness. Suppose we now look for closer coincidences in language or ideas. Our guides are the Peshiṭta version and the related Targum.

The first thing we notice is that the Targum regards the Psalm as a prayer made by David over Solomon as the anointed or Messiah: thus in verse 10:

‘Turn not away the face of Solomon thy Anointed.’

The Peshîṭta has a trace of the same identification, for it ends the seventeenth verse of the Psalm with

‘I will make bright a lamp for his (sc. David’s) anointed.’

This is very remarkable; it seems that Solomon has been interpreted as the Messiah of the Psalm, and equated with the Christ of the New Testament. Then we notice that the allusion to the Odist’s adversaries,

‘All my adversaries were afraid of me,’ is derived from the closing verse of the Psalm,

‘His enemies will I clothe with shame.’

So much for the transference of ideas: we now look for linguistic imitations and parallelisms. The Odist speaks of being covered with the covering of the Spirit: three times over the Targumist changes the word ‘clothe’ of the Hebrew into clothe with the clothings, verses 9, 17, 18: and note that the Odist has the same duplication and has also imitated the plural לְבָשִׁין in the ‘clothings of skin’ לְבָשִׁין מִחֶמֶד which follow.

About the ‘coats of skin’ we may compare the Manichæan tenets as exposed by Ephrem (Mitchell, p. xxx). According to them the ‘sons of Darkness’ had skins; the father ‘Darkness’ became intoxicated and perverted the pure souls (cf. Odes xxxviii. 9–15 and xxxiii. 5–13, and xxi. 3). The work of God consisted in taking off the garments of ‘skin-darkness’ and replacing them with ‘soul-light’. From p. lxviii (ibid.) we learn that the Manichæans and Bardesanites believed that ‘This body with which we are clothed is of the same nature as the Darkness, and this soul which is in us is of the same nature as the Light’.

The Odist has the lamp of the Anointed set; but uses a different word from the Hebrew or Targum: the word which occurs in the Peshîṭta (שָׁאֵל) = I will make to shine, I will kindle), is responsible for the clause:

‘That in me there may be nothing that is not shining.’

(שָׁאֵל שָׁאֵל)

For the lamp that shines, both the Targum and the Peshîṭta coincide in the form לְנֵר with the Odist. It seems, then, that there is some interdependence between the Odist and the Targum and the Peshîṭta Version. We need not be surprised at the prominence which this Psalm acquires in the Christian tradition. As a matter of fact, it is one of the first Messianic Psalms in the New Testament usage, and is quoted by St. Peter in the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles: it contained the promise to David that from his seed one should sit on his throne. This Salomonic prediction is repeated by the earliest Christian fathers, and is a part of the public preaching of the Church. It is easy to see how Odes which affect to relate to Solomon, but which really refer to Christ, should have incorporated matter from the Psalm in question.

If we are correct in this interpretation, we may have to abandon the idea of a Greek play upon the name of Christ in the closing verse of the Ode. We will not do so too hastily, for there is some suspicion that the Odist, though writing in Aramaic, was also acquainted with Greek, and if so, the popular play upon χριστός and χρηστός may very well have occurred to him in discussing a Psalm whose theme was recognized to be the Messiah of the house of David.

It may be asked why the Odist in borrowing the lamp of the anointed has duplicated it, 'a lamp at my right hand, and a lamp at my left'. Possibly he remembered that the Law was spoken of as a lamp, e.g. Proverbs vi. 23:

'The commandment is a lamp and the law a light;'

and it may have occurred to him that there were two laws, the Old and the New, the Law and the Gospel. Thus he makes a duplication something like that in the nineteenth Ode, where milk is taken from the two breasts of the Father. This is a speculation, it is true, but not altogether a wild surmise. In any case, we appear to have found the Biblical origin of the lamp in the twenty-fifth Ode; and we may be satisfied that it has nothing to do with the late baptismal ritual, which Dr. Bernard assigns as its origin.

That the lamp at the right hand is the Law may be seen from the Targum on Psalm xlv. 10; for

'At thy right hand stands the queen in gold of Ophir,' we have

'The book of the law is ready at thy right hand and is written in the gold of Ophir.'

There seems to be a survival of this belief that the law stands at the right hand and the gospel at the left, in the custom which prevails in the Roman Catholic Mass of placing the book of the Gospels successively at the right and left hand of the officiating priest. It may also be said that the language is mystical, and is parallel to a prayer for illumination in Abū Tālib. I. 6.¹

‘O God, give me light in my heart, . . . light in my flesh, light in my bones, light before me and light behind me, light at my right hand, light at my left hand, light above me, light beneath me. O God, augment my light and give me light and procure me light.’

It is permissible to punctuate the text so as to read ‘I set to myself a lamp’.

ODE XXVI

- Ps. xliv. (xlv.) 1. 1 I poured out praise to the Lord;
For I am His:
- 2 And I will speak His holy song,²
For my heart is with Him.
- 3 For His Harp is in my hands,
And the Odes of His Rest shall not be silent.
- Cf. Ps. cxviii. (cxix.) 4 I will cry unto Him from my whole heart;
145. I will praise and exalt Him with³ all my members.
- Ps. cvi. (cvii.) 3. 5 For from the East and even to the West
Is His praise:⁴
- 6 And from the South and even to the North
Is His confession:⁵
- Cf. Gen. xlix. 26. 7 And from the top of the hills to their utmost bound Is His perfection.⁶
- Ps. cvi. (cvii.) 8, &c. 8 Who can write the Odes of the Lord,
Or who read them!

¹ Quoted by Wensinck, The Dove of Bar Hebraeus, p. lxxxvii. ² Lit. Ode.
³ Lit. from. ⁴ Lit. Praise is His. ⁵ Lit. Confession is His. We may also translate: Thanks are to Him. ⁶ Or, The perfectionment (the finish) is His.

- 9 Or who can train his soul for life,
That his soul may be saved?
- 10 Or who can rest on the Most High,
That from His mouth he may speak?
- 11 Who is able to interpret the wonders of the Lord?
For he who interprets would be dissolved,
And that which was interpreted will remain.
- 12 For it suffices to know and to rest;
For in the rest the singers stand;
- 13 Like a river which has an abundant fountain,
And flows to the help of them that seek it.

Cf. Ps. cv. (cvi.) 2.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. The opening reflects Psalm xlv. (xlv.) 1 in the Syriac, not only in the use of the verb ܐܬܝܬܝܬ, but in the sequence of a future tense to a past; 'I poured out', 'I will speak'. There is therefore no need to change the tense of the opening verse as Charles suggests.

v. 7. Frankenberg unnecessarily proposes to eliminate the corroborative Hē of ܠܗܝܠܝܬܐ.

vv. 8-10. We may translate this construction as optative:

'Oh! that one could write the Odes!

Or read them!

Oh! that,' &c.

v. 11. If ܕܝܢܐ meaning 'because' is separated by a particle from the noun, verb, or pronoun, the letter ܝ can be omitted, although its retention is preferable. In the present verse H has no ܝ before ܕܝܢܐ but B has it. In the text the note 'B ܕܝܢܐ?' must be changed accordingly to 'H ܕܝܢܐ'.

v. 13. The Ode here returns to its keynote ܐܬܝܬܝܬ ('I poured out'), with the reference to the 'abundant fountain' (ܡܥܝܢܐ).

Expository Notes.

This beautiful song of praise is founded on various passages in the canonical Psalter and elsewhere; in particular, the Odist has in his mind the 107th Psalm in which the writer calls upon men to praise (ἐξομολογεῖσθαι, give thanks to) the Lord for his goodness; especially the redeemed are exhorted who have been gathered from the East and West and North and South. Accordingly the Odist says:

‘From the East and even to the West
Is His praise:
From the South even to the North
Is His thanksgiving’ (לְמִזְמֵר = ἐξομολόγησις).

The refrain of the 107th Psalm is in the words,

‘Oh! that men would praise the Lord for His goodness:
And for His wonderful works to the children of men.’

This provokes the question on the part of the Odist:

‘Who is able to write the Odes of the Lord?’¹

Who is able to interpret the wonders of the Lord?’

Gressmann has suggested that for לְמִזְמֵר (‘Psalms of the Lord’) we should read לְמִזְמֵר (‘mirabilia domini’); we should thus have two slightly different translations of the ‘wonderful works’ of the Psalmist: so the Odist may have been working from the LXX (θαυμάσια) or translating the Hebrew text or its Targum. (The Peshitta appears to have omitted the word altogether.) In verse 24, however, where the word occurs again (‘his wonders in the deep’), the Peshitta renders it by לְמִזְמֵר exactly as in verse 11 of the Ode.

In the concluding verses the Odist equates or couples together Knowledge and Rest; something of the same kind occurs in Clement of Alexandria (Paedagogus, i. 6, p. 115):

ἡ μὲν γνῶσις ἐν τῷ φωτίσματι· τὸ δὲ πέρας τῆς γνώσεως, ἡ ἀνάπαυσις.

¹ Or better still, in agreement with the grammatical suggestion of an optative, ‘Oh! that one could write the Odes [? wonders] of the Lord!

Or [that one could] read [proclaim] them!’

This divine Rest is here described as a river with an abundant fountain by which the singers stand. It is the same as the plenteous fountain of the Lord in Ode xi, and we shall find it again in Ode xxx, where there is an invitation to 'rest by the fountain of the Lord', and those who drink therefrom find rest thereby. Thus these Odes are internally connected and have the same author.

Eusebius in his Theophania (Bk. i, c. 23) uses the same figure of the Word of God, the Logos, which is

'as a river flowing from an unlimited fountain . . . to those who were perishing.'

This is taken from his de laudibus Constantini (c. xii, p. 462, ed. Heinechen):

Ὡς ἐξ ἀενάου καὶ ἀπείρου πηγῆς ἀνομβρῶν λόγοις ἀρρήτοις, ποταμοῦ δίκην πρόεισιν, ὅλος πλημμυρῶν ἐς τὸ κοινὸν τῆς τοῦ παντὸς σωτηρίας.

If we assume as suggested in the critical note that the passage in verses 8-10 is to be translated by a series of optatives, we must find a more harmonious translation of the words, 'He that could interpret would be dissolved'. Now there is no doubt that the refrain of the 107th Psalm which the Odist is imitating is optative: all the great English interpreters, except the Geneva translators, render it, 'Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, &c.'¹ and so did the Coptic translators of the LXX. Amongst modern translators Wellhausen (in the Polychrome Bible) renders it:

'May they give thanks to J H V H for His goodness and for the wonders which he does for men.'

No doubt this is the right line for the translator; and the coincidence with the Odes in optative expression is very clear. To be consistent with the thought of the Odist we should then translate the concluding part of the optation as follows:

'O that one were able to interpret the wonders of the Lord!

For though he who could interpret were to be dissolved, yet that which is interpreted would remain.'

We have seen that this Ode is, to a large extent, based on the Syriac of Psalm cvii; but the opening clauses which constitute the Odist's own prelude, are an imitation of the opening of the 45th Psalm, similar to what we came across in the 21st Ode.

¹ See Aldis Wright, Hexaplar Psalter.

The very first word וּ betrays its origin: it is the equivalent of the Greek ἐξεπύξατο and its companion Latin eructavit. Only there is this variation from Ode xxi; the 'heart' is left to the next verse:

‘I will speak His holy song,
For my heart is with Him.’

Here we have two verses in the Ode made out of a single clause in the Psalter. The link between the two is the Peshîṭta version.

The expression

‘I will speak His holy song’, probably goes back to the Targum, where we find

‘my heart pours out a good speech (ממלל)’, where the Peshîṭta has וַיְדַבֵּר, which does not as readily give the meaning of ‘discourse’ though it is in the Odes one of the equivalents of the Greek ‘Logos’.

ODE XXVII

- 1 I expanded my hands: and I sanctified (them) to my Lord¹:
For the expansion of my hands is His sign.
- 2 And my expansion
Is the upright wood.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. Linguistically it is possible to translate ‘and I sanctified (them) to the Lord’, i.e. my hands; the pronoun in the case, אֵם, being frequently omitted by the writers of such sentences.

v. 3. In view of the unwarranted assertions of some scholars it is useful to remark (a) that the word עֵץ ‘wood’ refers frequently in ¹ Or, I sanctified my Lord.

Syriac literature to the Cross, and (b) that this wood-cross is commonly compared with the wood-tree of Paradise, the one as being the source of death, and the other of life (see Ephrem, R. E. ii 13, &c.; Breviarium Chaldaicum, ii, p. ١٣, &c.).

Expository Notes.

There can be no doubt that this Psalm is based upon the early Christian attitude in prayer, which was cruciform, and upon the habit of the early Christians of finding the Cross everywhere in the outward world; e.g. in the handle of the labourer's plough and in the mast and yards of the seaman's ship. The figurative language employed is characteristic of the second century and not unknown in the first. Justin Martyr, for instance, and Barnabas, see the Cross in the outspread arms of Moses in the battle against Amalek; and it is possible that our Nitrian MS. had this in mind in reading

'the extension of my hands is weary;'

the reading of the other MS. would require correction to ܩܐ ܐܠܝ, for ܬܬܝܢ (extension) is masculine. We find the same figure in the Teaching of the Apostles as the sign of the Advent, perhaps the same as the sign of the Son of Man in Matthew.

Very nearly the same language as that of our little Ode is used to introduce the closing Ode of the collection, where it is not a mere repetition, but an integral part of the Ode, as we shall see. So we note again the interdependence and unity of the separate elements of the collection.

ODE XXVIII

- 1 As the wings of doves over their nestlings,
And the mouths of their nestlings towards their mouths;
So also are the wings of the Spirit over my heart.
- 2 My heart is delighted and leaps up,
Like the babe who leaps up in the womb of his mother: Cf. Luke i. 44.

Cf. Ps. cxv. (cxvi.)
10, and 2 Cor. iv. 13,
Heb. iv. 3.

3 I believed; therefore I was at rest:
For faithful is He in whom I have believed.

Cf. Gen. xxii. 16.

4^a He has richly blessed me;¹
And my head is with Him.

Cf. Rom. viii. 35.

4^b And the sword shall not divide me from Him,
Nor the scimitar.

5 For I was ready before destruction came;
And I have been set on His immortal² pinions;

6 And deathless life embraced me
And kissed me.

7 And from that (life) is the Spirit within me;
And it cannot die, for it lives.

(Christ speaks.)

8 They who saw me marvelled at me,
Because I was persecuted;

9 And they supposed that I was swallowed up;
For I seemed to them as one of the lost.

10 But my oppression
Became my salvation.

11 And I was their scorn,
Because there was no wrath³ in me.

12 Because I did good to every man
I was hated;

¹ Lit. Blessing He has blessed me.

^b Or, zeal, envy.

² Or, incorruptible.

- 13 And they ^{came} round me like mad dogs ;
Who ignorantly attack their masters. Cf. Ps. xxi. (xxii.) 16.
Euseb. D. E. x.
(p. 505).
- 14 For their thought is corrupt
And their understanding perverted.
- 15 But I was carrying water in my right hand,
And their bitterness I endured¹ by my sweetness.
- 16 And I did not perish, for I was not their brother, Nor was my birth like theirs.²
- 17 And they sought for my death and could not (accomplish it) ;
For I was older than the memorial of them ;
And vainly did they cast lots against³ me. Cf. Ps. xxi. (xxii.) 18.
- 18 And those who came after me Sought without cause to destroy the memorial of him who Cf. Ps. cxviii. (cxix.) was before them. 161.
- 19 For the thought of the Most High cannot be anticipated ;
And His heart is superior to all wisdom.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. H has the singular  ('and the mouth').

v. 15. Perhaps a half-verse has dropped and we should restore,

'I carried water in my right hand,
That I might put out their flame ;

 (?)

And their bitterness I endured
By my sweetness.'

For the antithesis in the last lines, cf. Aphrahat, i. 423, 'Sweetness overcomes bitterness.'

¹ Or, I forgot (B).

² Or, Nor did they acknowledge my birth (B).

³ Or, threaten me (H).

The text of the MS. is much better than the unnecessary emendations by Frankenberg of ﻣﺘﺎ (which he considers meaningless) into ﻣﺪﺍ, and of ﻣﺪﺍ into ﻣﺪﺍ.

v. 17. If we follow the reading of B and the margin of H, there is perhaps a parallel to the casting of lots over the Saviour's raiment, but the contexts are not similar. In verse 18 we are near to the language of the 119th Psalm [Ps. cxviii. (cxix.) 161], but there is no special coincidence with the Peshitta.

v. 19. The contracted form ﻣﺪﺍ of the manuscripts is much more forceful in the sentence than the absolute proposed by Diettrich and Grimme.

Expository Notes.

This Ode, opening with a similitude, belongs in that regard with Odes xiv-xvi: but it may also be grouped with those Odes in which Christ becomes the chief speaker, for here the change of personality can clearly be made out. At the eighth verse, and until the end of the Ode, we are listening to the poet-prophet who speaks for Christ and as Christ. Perhaps the last verse of all may be detached for a choral refrain. The parallel between the 'wings of doves' and the 'wings of the Spirit' arises from the symbolism of the Spirit as a dove. We may compare Bar Hebraeus, The Dove (introd.): 'The Dove abides in the East but the West is full of her. Her food is fire, and he who is crowned by her with wings will breathe forth flames from his mouth.'

There may be a cross-reference here to Ps. liv. (lv.). 7: 'O that I had wings like a dove, then would I fly away and be at rest'; for the Odist goes on, 'I believed, therefore I was at rest'.

It is comparatively easy to detect the Old Testament passages which are in the mind of the Odist: we have shown in the Introduction the use that is made of the verse

'They came round me like mad dogs
Who ignorantly attack their Master:'

and how it is quoted, from the Ode, by Eusebius and others; but it was also clear that the origin of the passage was to be sought in the 22nd Psalm:

ἐκύκλωσάν με κύνες πολλοί.—Ps. xxi. (xxii.) 17.

We may correct the reading of the manuscripts from 'their masters' to 'their Master', in accordance with the Patristic evidence; but the meaning can be deduced without any alteration of the text. The change had already been divined by Flemming and Labourt.

This recognition of the use of the 22nd Psalm carried with it the justification of the reading of the Nitrian MS. and the margin of the Rylands MS. :

'they cast lots against me.'

We can also see now the reason why in verse 15 the Odist says:

'Their bitterness I endured by my sweetness.'

The 'bitterness' comes from the companion Psalm (lxi. 22) where

'They gave me gall for my meat

And for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.'

The Peshitta actually has ‘bitterness’ (ܡܚܝܪܐ) in this passage.

The statement that 'those who saw me marvelled at me' (verse 8) with which Christ's address begins, occurs again in Ode xvii (again as the opening words of Christ); and in Ode xli (a similar opening); it is derived from the 71st Psalm:

ὥσεί τέρας ἐγενήθην τοῖς πολλοῖς.—Ps. lxx. (lxxi.) 7.

Let us compare the language of the Ode with the Peshitta :

Ode xxviii. 8. لَا وَهَيْهَاتَ أَهْلَكُمُ؟ سَامِعِ ٥٥٥١ حـ

Ps. lxx. (lxxi.) 7. ٥٥٥ / ٥٥٥ / ٥٥٥

The agreement in the use of ܡܕܝܢܐ shows the dependence of the Odist upon the Peshitta.

In Ode xli. 8 the coincidence is equally exact, for here we have:

بہارِ حنفیہ، جلد ۵، اہم حکم و مسائل حد

In Ode xvii another word is used.

The reference to the carrying of the water in one's right hand in verse 15 is explained above by the insertion of a conjectural clause,

‘that I might put out their flame’;

perhaps no explanation is necessary; the thing explains itself; the dogs were mad and would run away at the sight of water. Hydrophoria, if we may say so, was the natural cure for hydrophobia.

v. 4. This verse has been quoted to show the manner in which the Odist makes use of passages from the Scripture, notably from the Psalms: he takes what he wants and changes what he wishes. Thus the quotations are disguised, and are only recognized in the unaltered portions. Connolly uses this passage to prove a Greek original for the Odes; for in the LXX as well as in the quotation of the LXX in 2 Cor. iv. 13, we have ἐπίστευσα, διὸ ἐλάλησα.

Now this διὸ is wanting in the Peshitta of the Psalm that is being imitated: so it is suggested that the Odist depends directly on the Septuagint and not on the Syriac version. There is, however, another possibility: the connecting particle may come from the Targum. A reference shows as follows:

Ps. cxvi. 10.

חִמְנִית אֶרֶם אִמְלֵל

so it seems that we are not obliged to relate the Odist to the Septuagint.

This does not mean that the Odist was unacquainted with the Septuagint; that is another matter.

In verses 16, 17, we have strong theological statements that the Christ is the Only-begotten (Monogenēs) and that he was miraculously born. Illustrations of these points will be found in our Introduction.

ODE XXIX

Ps. xxx. (xxxix.) 1.

- 1 The Lord is my hope:
In Him I shall not be confounded.
- 2 For according to His praise He made me,
And according to His goodness¹ even so He gave unto me.
- 3 And according to His mercies He exalted me;
And according to His excellent beauty He set me on high.
- 4 And He brought me up out of the depths of Sheol;
And from the mouth of death He drew me.

¹ Or, grace (B).

- 5 And I laid my enemies low;
And He justified me by His grace.
- 6 For I believed in the Lord's Messiah;
And He appeared to me that He is the Lord.
- 7 And He showed me His sign,
And led me by His light;
- 8 And He gave me the rod of His power;
That I might subdue the imaginations of the people:
And to bring down the power of the men of might.
- 9 To make war by His Word;
And to take victory by His power.
- 10 And the Lord overthrew my enemy by His Word;
And he became like the stubble which the wind carries away. Ps. i. 4.
- 11 And I gave praise to the Most High; Because He exalted His servant and the Son of His handmaid. Ps. cxv. (cxvi.) 16.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. Instead of ܐܢܝ ܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐܝܠܐܝܢ 'and I have laid low', or 'Thou hast laid low', to put the verb in harmony with the context one might suggest ܐܢܝ ܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐܝܠܐܝܢ 'And He laid low'.

v. 6. In the Syriac versions of the New Testament, and in Syriac literature in general, ܐܢܝ ܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐܝܠܐܝܢ has been sometimes used in the sense of 'I saw', 'I noticed', instead of 'He was seen by me', 'He appeared to me' (John ix. 11). This applies also to Ode xvii. 10. We could therefore translate here, 'And I saw that He was the Lord'.

vv. 8, 10. In these two verses the language is certainly borrowed from the Psalter; but, strange to say, in neither case is the phraseology that of the Peshitta: one would have supposed that at least the first Psalm would have had its language imitated. It is to be noted, however, that Aphrahat quotes Psalm i. 4 with ܡܠܐ as in our Ode (ii. 117).

v. 10. Grimme believes that the word ܐܠܠܗܐ is a dittographical error of the copyist.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is more like a cento from the Psalter than an interpretation of a single Psalm, such as we have had several cases of.

The first verse is imitated from the opening verse of the 31st Psalm:

Ἐπὶ σοί, Κύριε, ἠλπισα, μὴ κατασχυνθείην εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

Ps. xxx. (xxxii.) 1.

The closeness of the agreement with the Peshitta may be noted:

Ode xxx. ܐܠܠܗܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ

Ps. xxx. (xxxii.). ܡܠܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܠܐ ܡܠܐ

In verses 3, 4, we may, perhaps, see the influence of the 85th Psalm:

ὅτι τὸ ἔλεός σου μέγα ἐπ' ἐμέ, καὶ ἐρρύσω τὴν ψυχὴν μου
ἐξ ἄδου κατωπιάτου.

Ps. lxxxv. (lxxxvi.) 13.

In that case we may take verse 7:

‘He led me by His light.’

as dependent upon the 11th verse of the Psalm, ὁδηγήσόν με, Κύριε, τῇ ὁδῷ σου

The eighth verse of the Ode is composite. The first clause:

‘He gave me the rod of His power,’ is certainly based on Psalm cix. (cx.) 2, and Christ should be the speaker. For ‘rod of power’ the Ode has ܐܠܠܗܐ ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ

while the Peshitta has:

ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ

The next clause is from the 33rd Psalm. We may compare the Ode and the Peshitta:

Ode xxix. 8: ܐܠܠܗܐ ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ

Ps. xxxii. (xxxiii.) 10. ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ ܡܠܐ

We cannot be quite sure about the dependence of the Ode on the Syriac Psalm from the coincidences, which appear to be natural.

The closing verse of the Ode may be due to the 116th Psalm (v. 7), or perhaps to the 85th Psalm:

δὸς τὸ κράτος σου τῷ παιδί σου, καὶ σῶσον τὸν υἱὸν τῆς παιδείκης σου.
Ps. lxxxv (lxxxvi). 16.

The discrimination of the parts of the Ode in which Christ speaks is difficult. In some ways it looks more like a dialogue. Verses 6, 7 might be the poet's experience, verses 8-10 the Lord's, and the closing verse again the poet.

v. 7. The recognition of the fact that in this verse the Odist is under the influence of the 110th Psalm will help us to clear up some of the sentences which follow; twice we have a reference to the Word of God:

'To make war by His Word;'
'The Lord cast down my enemies by His Word.'

From these two clauses it is clear that the war at the instance of the Word has the consequence of victory by the one who orders the war to commence. But this is the opening verse of the Psalm, 'The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit at my right hand until I make thy enemies the footstool of thy feet'.

Now turn to the Targum, and observe that in the opening verse the explanation is made, that the Lord said 'by His Word'. This is very interesting and important; it shows that the Word in our Ode is to have a capital letter: in the Syriac it is Melletha, and not in this case Pethgama; that is the word which finally takes its place in Syriac to express the Logos.

This appears finally to rule out the idea that Christ is the speaker in this part of the Ode: for the speaker who gets the rod of power and takes the victory, gets it from the Word and therefore is not himself the Word. It appears, then, that the 110th Psalm could be used to express the experience of a believer in Christ as well as of Christ Himself.

In the Targum the Word is represented by Memra; this is the first instance we have found of the appearance of the Memra in the history of the doctrine of the Logos.

ODE XXX

1 Fill ye water for yourselves from the living fountain of the Lord:

For it has been opened to you:

2 And come all ye thirsty and take a draught;
And rest by the fountain of the Lord.

3 For fair it is and pure;
And it gives rest to the soul.

4 Much sweeter is its water than honey;
And the honeycomb of bees is not to be compared with it.

5 For it flows from the lips of the Lord,
And from the heart of the Lord is its name.

6 And it came unlimited and invisible;
And until it was set in the midst they did not know it.

7 Blessed are they who have drunk therefrom;
And rested thereby.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. The language of this verse, 'Fill yourselves water', for 'draw water' or 'get water' is decidedly Aramaic; we may compare Isa. xii. 3, 'ye shall draw water out of the wells of salvation'; here the Hebrew and the Greek suggest 'draw' but the Peshiṭta agrees with the language of the Ode: 'ye shall fill water'; thus the Aramaism is indisputable. The parallel adduced shows, however, that it would arise in translation. The same thing occurs in John iv. 7, where ἀντλήσαι is rendered by 'fill,' in the Syriac versions.

v. 4. Note that the writer, while using Biblical terms (Ps. xix. 11), does not follow the Peshitta, but may very well be interpreting the Hebrew מְחִיטָה (pleasant or sweet).

v. 5. 'Its name' does not seem to offer a satisfactory meaning; it may perhaps be עפד 'its overflow'.

Frankenberg has suggested that 'name' (ὄνομα) is a misunderstanding of vāma, 'flow', 'stream': an excellent case for the defenders of the hypothesis of a Greek original.

v. 6. Connolly suggests that the Syriac word ܡܚܕܐ means simply 'the middle' without any meaning of 'in medio ponere', which is attached to τιθέναι, 'to publish, to bring forward openly'. If the phrase of the Odes seems to some critics to require such an interpretation, it is useful to remark that Syriac literature abounds in expressions such as ܡܡ ܡܚܕܐ or ܡܡ ܡܚܕܐ precisely in the sense of 'in medio ponere'; e.g. in Ephrem, ܡܡ ܡܚܕܐ (R. E. ii. 388, iii. 179, 192, &c.).

Expository Notes.

We have already alluded to this Ode as containing the same doctrine of the abundant fountain of the Lord as is found in other Odes (and, we may add, in the Epistle of Barnabas, v. supra). We also referred to the Ode as containing in itself a strong suggestion of a Greek original, if we were to accept Frankenberg's suggestion that in verse 5 ὄνομα has been misread for vāma. We might illustrate the language from Theodoret (P. G. 80, 869).

Μιμῆται γὰρ ὑδάτων ἀρδεῖαν τὰ τοῦ θείου πνεύματοςνάματα . . . οὐδὲν χάριν καὶ ὁ Δεσπότης Χριστὸς ὑδωρ τὴν οἰκείαν διδασκαλίαν ὀνομάζει.

The reference to the honey and the honeycomb in verse 3 takes us naturally to the 19th Psalm; there is, however, another possible source: in the Wisdom of Sirach, we have in the chapter on the Praise of Wisdom as follows:

τὸ γὰρ μνημόσυνόν μου ὑπὲρ μέλι γλυκύ, καὶ ἡ κληρονομία μου ὑπὲρ μέλιτος κηροῦ.
Sirach, xxiv. 20.

And since the speech of Wisdom begins with the words:

'I came forth from the mouth of the Most High,'

we have a good parallel to :

‘It comes forth from the lips of the Lord.’

This would mean that the water is the knowledge of the Lord, as it is in the sixth Ode, and that the Odist has been studying this chapter of Sirach.

We have noticed above the Syriacism which is involved in the words with which the Ode opens, ‘Fill ye water’; e.g. Isaiah xii. 3, ‘and ye shall fill water with joy from the fountains of salvation’.

If the language of the Ode is that of a translator, it is good idiomatic translation.

It will be noticed that the coincidence between Ode xxx and Sirach xxiv is more clear when we translate literally, and instead of saying, as in the first rendering, ‘It flows forth from the lips of the Lord’, we say ‘It comes forth’ or ‘it came forth’. This brings us very close to the language of Sirach. It may be noted in passing that the statement in Sirach, as in so many other cases, is an adaptation of the Hebrew in Prov. ii. 6 :

‘The Lord giveth Wisdom :

Out of His mouth (LXX ἐκ τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ) cometh knowledge and understanding.’

This is what the Wisdom of Sirach meant by ‘I came forth from the mouth of the Most High’; and this is what the Odist took from Sirach. It is abundantly clear that the flowing stream of which the Ode speaks is the Knowledge of the Lord, as it has been equally recognized in Ode vi.

We give special attention to Frankenberg’s emendation (vāma for ōvoma) in verse 5, because the parallelism of the verses seems to require a correction; moreover, since we have no evidence for an early Syriac text of Sirach, the claim is very strong for a Greek original and a Greek emendation. On the other hand, a Syriac emendation might be ventured, as above, and one which would have support in the existing Peshitta text of Sirach which Frankenberg’s emendation does not. Suppose that instead of ܐܡܡܐ (‘His name’) we read ܡܥܬܐ (‘its outflow’) this would answer to the Syriac

ܡܥܬܐ ܕܡܝܐ ܕܝܐܪܕܢ ܕܡܥܬܐ

‘I pour out like the river (Jordan) my teaching.’

The corresponding Greek word is not νᾶμα but διῶρνξ. Evidently we must be on our guard against too rapid conclusions or generalizations. What we are certain of is the use by the Odist of the Sapiential books. We may, for instance, be as sure that he uses Sirach as we are certain that Sirach imitates Proverbs.

ODE XXXI

1 The abysses were dissolved before the Lord;
And darkness was destroyed by His appearance.

2^a Error went astray
And disappeared from Him,

2^b And (as for) Falsehood, I gave it no path,
And it was submerged by the truth of the Lord.

3 He opened His mouth and spake grace and joy;
And He spake a new (song of) praise to His name.

4 And He lifted up His voice to the Most High,
And offered to Him the sons that were in His hands.¹

Cf. Isa. viii. 18;
Heb. ii. 13.

5 And His face was justified;
For thus His Holy Father had given² to Him.

(Christ speaks.)

6 Come forth, ye that have been afflicted,
And receive joy.

7 And possess³ your souls by grace;
And take to you immortal life,

¹ Or, those that had become children by His means (John i. 12); or, the sons given Him by God.

² Or, done.

³ Lit. inherit.

8 And they condemned me when I rose up;¹
Me who had not been condemned.²

9 And they divided my spoil,
Though nothing was due to them.

10 But I endured and held my peace and was silent,
That I might not be moved by them.

Cf. Aphr. i. 7.

11 But I stood unshaken like a firm rock,
That is beaten by the waves and endures.

12 And I bore their bitterness for humility's sake;
That I might redeem my people and inherit it.

Cf. Rom. xv. 8 and Barnab. 5.

13 And that I might not make void the promises to the patriarchs

To whom I was promised for the salvation of their seed.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 2. The second member of this verse is very difficult owing to a possible corruption of the text. As it stands in B it runs: 'Wickedness received immobility, and was submerged by the truth of the Lord'. The suffix ܐ, however, makes the Syriac wording very harsh and ungrammatical. For ܐܠܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐ we have suggested ܐܠܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐܝܬܐ, and to make the metaphor more in harmony with the first member of the verse we have suggested ܐܠܠܐܝܬܐ ܠܐܝܬܐ. 'Wickedness took for herself the power of motion and erred from the truth of the Lord.' This is grammatically correct and in accordance with the first part of the parallelism.

For ܠܐܝܬܐ which more generally means 'meanness', 'lowliness', we should, perhaps read ܠܐܝܬܐ as in Ode xi. 10. The 'run of error', 'evil', 'truth', &c., is a favourite metaphor of the Odist, see Odes xxxviii. 6, xviii. 6; but the change is, perhaps, somewhat violent.

¹ Or, I stood up.

² Or, culprit.

However this may be, a good meaning is given in H if we translate: 'And wickedness gave to it (to error) no path, and it was submerged by the truth of the Lord,' or 'And vanity (or falsehood), I gave to it immobility, and it was submerged by the truth of the Lord.' This meaning is grammatically good, and we can adopt it in the absence of a better one. In our note to the text: 'H ܐܝܬܐ (sic!)' is erroneous. The reading of H is contained in the text itself.

v. 6. Labourt suggests that instead of ܐܝܬܐ 'joy' we might read ܐܝܬܐ 'liberty'; this, however, is not necessary; the beginning of the verse is speaking of people in pain.

v. 8. More generally the verb ܐܝܬܐ means 'to condemn' (as culprit); the sense of making somebody debtor to a creditor is usually expressed in Syriac by means of a periphrase. That in this sentence the meaning of the verb refers probably to 'a condemnation' is borne out by the participle ܐܝܬܐ which is seldom found in the sense of a debtor in money; ܐܝܬܐ is used in this last sense, and is also commonly used in both senses of 'debtor' and 'culprit'. Notice in the text of the next line the Syriacism ܐܝܬܐ instead of ܐܝܬܐ ('they condemned me, him who . . .').

v. 9. The verb ܐܝܬܐ with a ܐ is always used in the sense of something being due to somebody; about this there is no doubt. It seems, therefore, as if there was a play on the different meanings of the verb as used in the preceding verse. If there is no such paronomasia, we maintain parallelism by translating 'debt' and 'debtor' throughout.

v. 12. There is no need to read with Grimme ܐܝܬܐ for ܐܝܬܐ.

v. 13. The rules laid down by the grammarians from the 11th century onwards to the effect that in the passive form we should redouble the ܐ of the Hamzed or assimilated verbs in the form ܐܝܬܐ is not much followed in the manuscripts. It is possible, therefore, that ܐܝܬܐ is used here by the scribe for ܐܝܬܐ. This is even the case in the old manuscripts for any other verb; e.g. the Lewis text has in Luke i. 4 ܐܝܬܐ for ܐܝܬܐ; ibid., 16, 25, ܐܝܬܐ for ܐܝܬܐ, &c.

Expository Notes.

This Ode is somewhat like the 28th Ode in that it contains a selection of statements from the 22nd Psalm, for the most part expounded by Christ in His own person. The writer opens with a couple of introductory verses on Truth and Error; then he approaches the 22nd Psalm in the verse:

‘I will declare thy name unto my brethren;
In the midst of the Church I will sing praise unto thee;’
Ps. xxi. (xxii.) 22.

This he reproduces as:

‘He spake a new song of praise to His name.’—Ode xxxi. 4.

He follows this with a reference to the ‘children that God had given Him’; this is exactly the sequence which we find (awkwardly introduced) in Hebrews ii. 13, where it comes as a quotation from Isaiah viii. 17, 18. The Odist is not quoting Hebrews, but the sources of Hebrews in a collection of Testimonia. The reference to God’s gift of children is in the next verse:

‘Thus His Holy Father had given Him.’

Very likely this is implied in the previous verse, if we follow the Nitrian MS., for here we have:

‘The children who were by His hand,’ i. e. the children given by God.

There is no doubt, then, that the Odist is working on the 22nd Psalm.

Christ now becomes the speaker, and his address is marked by further reference to the same Psalm; for instance, the words ‘they divided my spoil’, i. e. ‘they despoiled me and divided the plunder’, is an adaptation of the 18th verse of the Psalm:

‘They divide my garments among them, they cast lots upon my vesture.’

In verse 12 the Odist repeats very nearly what he had said in Ode xxviii about ‘bearing their bitterness’, but the word for ‘bearing’ is now  instead of . Apparently the Odist has changed the word; the origin of the ‘bitterness’ is, as we have shown, to be sought in the Psalm. The word endure should be noticed, because the writer emphasizes it, and because it occurs in the quotation which Barnabas makes of the last verse of the Ode.

Probably there are more loans from the Canonical Psalter to be traced.

ODE XXXII

- 1 To the blessed the joy is from their hearts,
And light from Him that dwells in them;
- 2 And the Word from the Truth who is self-originate.
- 3 For He hath been strengthened by the Holy Power of the Most High,
And He is unperturbed for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 3. It is difficult to ascertain who is the 'unshakable' or 'unperturbed'. The pronoun هو can refer to القول 'the Word', or to سده وقدره 'the strength of the Most High', or to the 'Most High' Himself. The first meaning is, however, the more tempting. There is no necessity to read with Grimme القول in plural.

Expository Notes.

We have edited in the second verse القول in the singular, as expressing the Logos, for, as we have seen, the Odes use this term as well as القول to express it. The 'Word from the Truth' is possibly the equivalent for the 'True Word', and finds its parallel in Ode xii:

'The Mouth of the Lord is the True Word,
And the door of His light.'

For, as the Odist explains, the saints have 'light from Him that dwells within'. This Ode belongs to the group of Wisdom-Odes or Logos-Odes, and so does the one that immediately follows.

ODE XXXIII

- 1 Grace again¹ ran and left the Corruptor
And came down upon him to bring him to naught :
- 2 And he² made utter destruction³ from before him
And devastated all his array :
- 3 And he stood on a lofty summit and cried aloud
From one end of the earth to the other ;
- 4 And drew to him all those who obeyed him :
And he did not appear as an evil person ;⁴
- 5 But a perfect virgin stood
Who was proclaiming and crying and saying :

(Wisdom speaks.)

- 6 O ye sons of men, return ye ;
And ye their daughters, come ye ;
- 7 And leave the ways of that Corruptor,
And draw near unto me ;
- 8 And I will enter into you
And bring you forth from destruction ;
And I will make you wise in the ways of truth.
- 9 Be not destroyed ;
Nor perish.
- 10 Hear ye me and be saved ;
For the grace of God I am telling among you :

¹ Lit. but again.

² i. e. the Corruptor.

³ Lit. And He destroyed the destruction.

⁴ Or, as the Evil One.

11 And by my means you shall be redeemed and become blessed :

I am your judge ;¹

12 And they who have put me on shall not be injured : Cf. Eph. iv. 24.
But they shall possess incorruption in the new world.

13 My chosen ones have walked in me, Cf. Col. ii. 6.
And my ways I will make known to them that seek me ;
And I will make them to trust in my name.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. The verb حَسَدَ is difficult to understand if we read the word حَسَدًا 'corruption' as we have punctuated it, and as it is in the manuscript. If we punctuate it حَسَدًا we should have 'the corruptor' (cf. Ode xxxviii. 9) with a sense appropriate to the context. This disposes of many theories involving the change of the verb into حَدَدَ, حَصَدَ, and حَمَدَ, &c.

v. 2. The Semitism of 'he made utter destruction' should be noted.

The expression سَدَّ أَوَّلَهُ 'to devastate one's array, preparations, or possessions' is frequent in Ephrem, see Mitchell's edition, p. 5.

v. 4. Labourt's suggestion that the text should be وَلَا أَسَدَ دَوْمَ 'and he did not appear to them as the head', is not necessary.

v. 5. It is unnecessary to change حَسَدًا 'virgin' into حَسَدًا 'in the generation', as Grimme has suggested.

That the perfect Virgin is Wisdom (or Christ speaking as Sophia) may be seen by comparing the language with Proverbs i. 20, 21, or Proverbs viii. 1 sqq.

v. 8. 'I will make you wise in the ways of truth'. That Wisdom is here considered as Light may be inferred from the expression 'those who put me on shall not be injured', where the language should be compared with Ode xxi. 3, 'I put off Darkness and clothed myself with Light'. We may also compare the 'Light of Truth' in Ode xxxviii. 1.

¹ Or, judgement.

Bardaisan is credited with a belief in a similar Virgin of Light, or Light-Virgin (see Mitchell, Discourses of Ephrem, p. 67).

v. 11. We have punctuated the word ܩܕܝܫܐ 'your judgement'; the manuscript has ܩܕܝܫܐ 'your judge', which suits better the context. Connolly suggests ܩܕܝܫܐ 'your armour', which is appropriate. Less probable is the hypothesis of Barth, who reads ܩܕܝܫܐ (yours).

v. 12. Grimme unnecessarily suggests the change of the text of the manuscript into ܕܕܠܗ and ܕܠܗ.

Expository Notes.

This Ode seems to begin abruptly and unintelligibly; we suggest that something has been lost at the opening. Apparently it is Christ who appears as Grace, and then as Divine Wisdom, in whose person He speaks from the sixth verse onwards, confuting the Corruptor mentioned in the preceding verses.

The key to the Ode lies in the Proverbs of Solomon, and especially in the eighth chapter. We may compare:

Ode xxxiii. 3. 'He stood on a lofty summit and cried aloud:'

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

Ode xxxiii. 5. 'A perfect Virgin stood proclaiming, and crying, and saying':

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

Prov. viii. 1-4. 'On this account Wisdom proclaimeth(?);

For on the lofty summits is Wisdom:

She standeth . . .

She saith . . .

Unto you, O men, I cry.'

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

ܡܡ ܕܠܗ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ ܩܕܝܫܐ

Ode xxxiii. 6. 'O ye sons of men, return ye,
And ye, their daughters, come ye.'

חבב אלהים אלהים
והבנות אלהים

Prov. viii. 4. 'My voice is to the Sons of Man':

והבנות אלהים

Ode xxxiii. 8. 'I will make you wise in the ways of truth.'

והבנות אלהים

v. 11. 'By my means you shall be redeemed and become blessed':

והבנות אלהים

Prov. viii. 32, 33. 'Blessed are they that keep my ways;
Hear instruction and be wise.'

והבנות אלהים
והבנות אלהים

Thus one principal motive of the Ode is the invitation of Wisdom in the Book of Proverbs, and with that Wisdom Christ is identified.

There are some unexplained allusions and unrecognized references, e. g. there is the 'Corruptor' who is twice referred to, who will turn up again in Ode xxxviii in just as perplexing a form.

Some further light on the obscurities that remain may probably be obtained by picking up the Sapiential clue. For example, in verse 7:

'Leave the ways of that corruptor and draw near unto me,' we are very close to the language of Proverbs ix. 4: .

'Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither,' where the LXX says 'let him turn aside to me', but the Syriac has 'let him come unto me'.

Again, in the sixth verse of the same chapter of Proverbs we have:

'Leave off, ye foolish (or leave off foolishness) and live,
And walk in the way of understanding;

where the LXX has for the first line ἀπολείπετε ἀφροσύνην, ἵνα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα βασιλεύσητε.

(‘Leave off Folly, that ye may reign for ever’),

and the Syriac has

‘Cause to rest from your folly, and live.’

Evidently the Odist has personified Folly as the Corruptor; clearly also he has found Everlasting Life in Proverbs.

ODE XXXIV

Ephr. R.E. ii. 486.

- 1 There is no hard way where there is a simple heart;
Nor is there any barrier where the thoughts are upright;
- 2 Nor is there any storm in the depth of the illuminated thought
- 3 The one who is surrounded on every side by open country,¹
Is freed from doubts.²
- 4 The likeness of that which is below
Is that which is above;
- 5 For everything is above;
And below there is nothing, but it is believed to be by the ignorant.³
- 6 Grace has been revealed for your salvation:
Believe and live and be saved.

Hallelujah.

¹ Lit. by every beautiful place.

² Lit. there is nothing divided in him.

³ Lit. those in whom there is no knowledge.

Moses Bar-Kepha
(B.M. Add. 2121^a,
f. 51 b).

ODE XXXV

- 1 The dew of the Lord distilled rest upon me,¹
And a cloud of peace it caused to rise over my head;
- 2 That it might guard me continually;
And it became salvation² to me:
- 3 Everybody was shaken and affrighted;
And there came forth from them a smoke and a judgement:
- 4 But I was keeping quiet in the ranks³ of the Lord;
More than shadow⁴ was He to me, and more than support:⁵
- 5 And I was carried like a child by its mother;
And He gave me milk, the dew of the Lord.
- 6 And I grew great by His bounty:
And I rested in His perfection:
- 7 And I spread out my hands in the lifting up of my soul;
And I directed myself towards the Most High,
And I was redeemed with Him:

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. The verb  is commonly derived from 'shadow' and means 'to overshadow'. The natural meaning of the sentence is therefore 'the dew of the Lord overshadowed me in quietness'. Here the Odist seems to derive it from  'dew', except if we suppose that he is purposely

¹ Or, overshadowed me in quietness.

³ Perhaps by the Word.

⁴ dew (B).

² H, in salvation.

⁵ Lit. foundation.

indulging in the uncommon theme of a dew giving shadow. On the one hand the word דֶּשֶׁל 'dew', of the first line requires a verb implying the sense of rain, on the other the word חֶלֶל 'cloud' of the second line may combine both meanings of shadow and rain, unless in verse 2 we should understand the sentence 'that it might guard me' in the sense of warding off the heat of the sun from the Odist. The sense of 'dew' appears also in verse 5, 'And he gave me milk, the dew of the Lord': but verse 6, 'And I rested in his perfection' might possibly imply the sense of 'shadow'. In verse 4 the manuscripts are at variance, for whereas H gives 'More than shadow was He to me', B exhibits 'More than dew was He to me'. The Odist is possibly playing in all these verses on the two words לֵל and לֵלָה derived from a common root לָל, perhaps related both to 'shadow' and to 'dew'. This assonance seems to have pleased him so much that he thought it expedient to enhance it by the use of לֵלָה 'child' in verse 5. On the whole, the natural sense of overshadowing is preferable in the first line.

v. 2. The expression 'it was to me for salvation' is good idiomatic Syriac, but the rendering 'It became my salvation' is preferable, for the expression is taken from Isaiah xii. 2, exactly as in the Targum, וְהָיָה לִי לְפָרִיק. Note that the twelfth chapter of Isaiah is familiar to our Odist (how could it fail to be, since it is so entirely in his manner?), and the opening sentence in the 30th Ode is imitated from it ('Fill ye water for yourselves from the living fountain of the Lord').

v. 3. Both manuscripts have לֵשֶׁת סִימָה 'smoke and judgement'. The meaning is very doubtful, and without violent change we are unable to find a better translation. Gunkel changes לֵשֶׁת סִימָה to סִימָה 'and smell'.

v. 4. We might probably read בְּחַדְלֵי מִלְּכָא 'with the Word of the Lord', instead of בְּחַדְלֵי 'in the rank of the Lord'. The elimination of the letter א is possibly due to a slip of the copyist.

Expository Notes.

This Ode appears to express in poetical language some peculiar spiritual experience. Some of the figures of previous Odes recur; there is the milk of God, and twice, if not three times, there is the dew of the Lord. No adequate explanation has yet been found of the Divine dew. It is a Biblical expression used in the prophet Isaiah to represent the grace that raises the dead; but this is the text of the LXX:

ἡ δρόσος ἡ παρὰ σοῦ ἱάμα αὐτοῖς ἐστίν.—Isaiah xxvi. 19, and this does not seem to apply to the present situation.

The solution of this Ode cannot be detached from that of the Ode which follows; for here also there is a 'cloud of dew'; here, too, some one speaks of becoming great according to the greatness of the Lord, and being anointed from His perfection. We shall see that the 36th Ode is probably spoken in the name of Christ; and if so, that should carry the 35th Ode to the same conclusion. But this does not seem to be likely, nor a very defensible position. Evidently there is something missing in the explanation.

We have seen that the Odist has been making word-play out of the assonance of  'to overshadow',  'shadow',  'dew', and  'child'. We can probably find a motive for his word-play; 'the cloud of peace' in verse 2 is parallel to the 'cloud of dew' in the next Ode; and the 'dew' is, in fact, alluded to in verse 1 of this Ode. But this 'cloud of dew' is taken from Isaiah xviii. 4:

'As a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest,' where the Peshitta and the Targum supply us with the very expression which is in the Odes to which we refer. Thus the 'cloud of dew' is a shelter: now we understand why the Odist says, 'More than shelter he was to me'. But this is not all: there is a parallel passage of Isaiah which has been employed by the Odist. At the end of the fourth chapter of Isaiah we have the following statement:

'The Lord will create over the whole habitation of Mount Zion and over her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for over all the glory shall be spread as a canopy. And there shall be a pavilion for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain.'—Isaiah iv. 5, 6, R. V.

Here we pick up fresh references to the covering from the heat, and we also see the reason for the allusion to the 'smoke' that came forth in verse 3. Suppose, then, we look at this passage of Isaiah in the Syriac version and in the Targum. We shall find the same assonance between the 'dew' and the 'shelter' which the Odist has been developing; and we shall also find the motive for the verse:

'More than shelter he was to me,
And more than foundations.'

גבא מן גבלא וסא ב

סגא: מן גבא/גבא

For the Targum reads:

'The Lord shall create over every sanctuary of Mount Zion, and over every place of the House of His Shekinah, a cloud of glory (ענן יקר); and it shall be shadowing (מטיל) over him by day and thick darkness and glory as of a flame of fire by night; because more than the glory which (יתיר מן יקרא) He said He would bring upon Him, the Shekinah shall be protecting Him with (its) protection: and upon Jerusalem there shall be the shelter of clouds to shelter over her by day,' &c.

מטלת ענני לאטללא עלה בימם

It will be seen that the Odist has closely followed the language of Isaiah, imitating even such an expression as 'more than the glory', which is peculiar to the Targum. Here, then, we have a further key to the meaning of the Ode, and a further proof of the dependence of the Odist on the Targum.

ODE XXXVI

- 1 I rested on the Spirit of the Lord;
And (the Spirit) raised me on high;
- 2 And made me to stand on my feet in the high place of the Lord;
Before His perfection and His glory;
While I was praising (Him)¹ by the composition of His odes.

¹ Or, I was praised in the composition.

(Christ speaks)

Cf. John i. 9.

3 (The Spirit) brought me forth before the face of the Lord.
And although a Son of Man,
I was named the Luminary, the Son of God:

Cf. Prov. viii. 31
(Syriac).

4 While I was the most glorified among the glorious ones;¹
And the greatest among the great ones.
5 For according to the greatness of the Most High, so she² made me;
And like His own newness He renewed me:

Koran iii. 40.
Cf. Ode xxi. 7.

6 And He anointed me from His own perfection;
And I became one of those that are near to Him;
7 And my mouth was opened like a cloud of dew;
And my heart gushed out, as it were,³ a gush of righteousness;
8 And my access (to Him) was in peace:
And I was established in the Spirit of Providence.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 3. In view of uncertainties it is safer to follow the reading of the manuscripts.

v. 5. It would be somewhat more grammatical to read with Grimme وَحَبَّ and refer the verb to the 'Lord' or 'God'. The manuscripts, however, in using the feminine form have referred it to the 'Spirit' of the Lord in verses 1, 2.

Expository Notes.

In this Ode we have assumed that after the usual preface of the poet who composes the Ode, the speaker is the Lord Christ. In that case, the Holy Spirit is the Mother of Jesus, and we actually find a suggestion to that effect in an early heretical gospel attributed to the Ebionites. Equally doubtful, from an orthodox point of view, is the statement in verse 6 that Christ is one of the Divine neighbours; we have indicated on the margin the reference to the same title which has been preserved in the Ḳurʾān (وَمِنَ الْمُقَرَّبِينَ), i. e. one of those who are near (to God).

¹ H, glorifiers.² Sc. the Spirit.³ B, om.

A very slight change in verse 5 will rid us of the obscurity of such a phrase as the Divine newness; read:

‘He (or she) made me glad with His own gladness’;

סאָו סאָו סאָו

this not only relieves the obscure sentence, but makes sequence with the following line,

‘He anointed me,’ &c.;

for this is the famous early Christian testimony, ‘God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness’, which is quoted in the Epistle to the Hebrews (i. 8) from Psalm xlv. 6, 7. Now this Psalm is an epithalamium composed for King Solomon; so that we have again in the Odes either Solomon himself or Christ as Solomon.

Justin Martyr, discussing this very Psalm, points out to Trypho that the Holy Spirit here calls Christ God as well as Christ, which agrees with what the Odist says in verse 3:

‘Though a Son of Man, I was named Son of God.’

The proof was made (1) from the unction, (2) from the address to the anointed one as God. It is one of the oldest arguments from Scripture in the Christian theology.

If this should turn out to be a correct interpretation of the Ode, we shall have to admit that the name of Solomon attached to the Odes is something more than an outside, bookmaker’s or bookseller’s, label; it must be used in the internal interpretation of the Odes as Odes of Rest, for that is one of the root-meanings of Solomon’s name, and he is supposed to have this name as being historically the man of peace. See what is said on this point in the following Ode.

v. 4. Special attention should be paid to this term נִסְחָל (in vulgar Syriac ܢܫܚܠܐ), for it answers to the Targumic רַבְרַבִּין, which is the translation of Elohim when that word is taken in the plural and does not mean God.

For instance, in Genesis iii. 5, the serpent assures the woman that, if they eat of the forbidden fruit, they will be like the Great Ones who know good and evil. Such a writer, for instance, as our Odist would never interpret this passage of God Himself, whom he affirms not to know evil; probably this explanation was widely current; and it underlies the substitution of 'the Great Ones' for Elohim. As we have said, the point is an important one, for if it carries the sense of Elohim, for the expression in the Ode it shows that the person who is speaking in the Ode is not an ordinary human being.

v. 6. It would be interesting to determine more exactly the origin of the peculiar expression, 'One of those that are near to Him'. Is it possible that it is the Odist's adaptation of the phrase in Daniel?

'One like unto the Son of Man came to the Ancient of Days and they brought him near before Him.'—Dan. vii. 13.

Here we may compare the language of the Ode:

סוֹסֵם בְּחַם מִתְחַבֵּס

with

וְקִדְמוֹתֵי הַקִּרְבִּינִי of the prophet, the Syriac version being almost identical with the Hebrew [Chaldee]. There is no reason why we should not recognize the Apocalyptic passage in Daniel as the origin of the language in the Ode; in each case it is the Son of Man who is referred to, for we have identified Christ as the Speaker in this Ode, and it is the Messiah that is the person who is brought near to the Highest in Daniel. Moreover, in this very Ode, the speaker has already denoted himself as

'The Son of Man, the Luminary, the Son of God.'

In this point of view, any suspicion of unorthodox leanings in the expression 'one of those that are near' disappears; the Odist is no more unorthodox than the Book of Daniel which he borrows.

This suggestion throws further light on the language of the Ode as well as on the Book of Daniel and its text. To begin with, we recognize in the Aramaic text of Daniel, which is the only text we possess for the major part of the book, the traces of a true Targum. Here, again, we have the expression 'before God' used as a substitute for 'God'. Instead of 'they brought him near to the Most High', the text says, 'they brought him near before the Most High'. This is genuine Targum which has been substituted for a missing Hebrew text of Daniel in the major part of the book. We may recognize the same tendency in the Ode in verse 3, where the Christ is brought forth ܡܫܝܚܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ ܕܥܡܪܐ, which is a kind of double Targumism and may be itself an imitation of Daniel.

Again we have to recall that it is to this very language of Daniel that we had already referred the expression in Ode xix, where the Virgin 'brought forth, as it were a man', which we interpreted as the equivalent of 'one like to a son of man'.

We have, then, two distinct cases of Apocalyptic in the Odes. It was one of the things we should naturally have expected to find, if the Odes had been rightly assigned to the Eastern Church and to the first century (or even to the beginning of the second century). Here is the elusive factor, almost as clearly recognized as if it had been the Apocalypse of John that we were studying. The Odist tells us plainly that 'Jesus is the Son of Man in the visions of Daniel'. His sources of information are clearly Aramaic or Syriac, and not Greek. There is no possibility of dependence upon a Greek text.

Incidentally we shall raise again the question as to the speaker in Ode xxi. 6, 7, who says:

'I passed before Him and became near unto Him.'

The expression has a Targumist evasion in the words 'before Him' ('from before His face'); but the expression 'became near unto him' may here be called non-Targumic. 'Passed before Him' may be the Odist's imitation of the passage in Daniel which says that the Son of Man 'came (ܡܫܝܚܐ) to the Ancient of Days.'

It may be admitted that the suggestion that Ode xxi as well as Ode xxxvi has traces of Daniel is not so convincing as in the case of the latter Ode. So we will leave the matter uncertain in the hope of further and future illumination.

The prophecy of the dominion given to the Son of Man in Daniel, ch. vii, was certainly in the original Book of Testimonies: Cyprian has it, and Gregory of Nyssa; and Justin quotes it frequently.

It may perhaps be asked what is the meaning of the title 'the Luminary', interjected between the terms 'Son of Man' and 'Son of God'. We are far away by this time from Dr. Bernard's explanation that it is the baptized person's description of himself: but this does not relieve us of the duty to find a better solution.

We suggest that this also comes from Daniel. In chap. ii. 23 Daniel praises God because He is the revealer of secrets, and because 'He knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with Him'. A reference to the text shows that the rendering 'the light' (נהורא) has been derived from a reader's correction. No doubt it was a sound correction, but the text says 'the luminary' (נהירא). So does the Syriac version presenting the very same peculiar form that has turned up in our Ode. It is, then, not an unnatural inference that the Odist worked on an uncorrected text of Daniel, and interpreted the 'Luminary' to be the Christ.

ODE XXXVII

- 1 I stretched out my hands to the Lord;¹
And to the Most High I lifted my voice;
- 2 And I spake with the lips of my heart;
And He heard me when my voice reached Him.²
- 3 His Word came to me,
And³ gave me the fruits of my labours:
- 4 And gave me rest by the grace of the Lord.

Hallelujah.

Critical Note.

v. 2. The verb  of the manuscripts is much better than  proposed by Bruston (see Luke i. 44).

¹ my Lord (H).

² Lit. fell with him.

³ Lit. who.

Expository Notes.

At first sight this appears to be a Psalm of the simplest possible character, a brief story of prayer and of the answer to prayer. But there is more in it than appears on the first reading. The stretching out of the hands occurs in the 35th Ode, where we have

‘I spread out my hands in the lifting up of my soul,’ and this must be connected in some way with

‘I stretched out my hands to the Lord,
And to the Lord I lifted up my voice.’

The variation is in the manner of the Odist, when dealing with a Biblical theme, and may equally happen when he is repeating his own formulae. Then we notice that this Ode is also one of the Odes of Rest, and in the 35th Ode, the sentence before the one just quoted is ‘I rested in His perfection’. Thus there must be some connexion between the 35th Ode and the 37th. Let us see whether this reference to a ‘rest in God’ may not give us a clue to the meaning. Imagine that the reference is to Solomon as a man of rest. Then this 37th Ode will refer to Solomon’s prayer at the dedication of the Temple. ‘The King stood before the altar of God and spread forth his hands towards heaven and said’ (2 Chron. vi. 12, 14). God’s answer to Solomon is in the words, ‘the Lord appeared to Solomon by night and said to him, I have heard thy prayer’. The Ode expresses this in the manner of a Targum :

‘He heard me when my voice reached Him;
His word came to me.’

and the statement, ‘I have chosen this place to myself for an house of sacrifice’ would answer to the Odist’s ‘He gave me the fruit of my labours’.

Thus this Ode might be labelled an Ode of Solomon in a historical sense, without any need to introduce Christ as Solomon.

Supposing we accept this solution for Ode xxxvii, where it will apply very well, can we carry back a Solomonic interpretation into Ode xxxv or xxxvi? We will take the case of Ode xxxvi. Notice that there is a play on Solomon’s name in the last verse :

‘My access to Him was in peace;’

and the last half of the verse :

‘I was established by the spirit of Providence.’

will correspond to 2 Chron. vii. 18 :

‘I will establish the throne of thy Kingdom as I covenanted with David thy father.’

There is another great Solomonic Psalm in the Psalter, the 72nd (‘Give the king thy judgements, O God’). In this Psalm we are told that ‘he shall come down like rain upon the mown grass, as showers that water the earth’. Perhaps it is these showers (‘drops of dew’ ~~ܕܡܝܬܐ~~ in the Syriac Bible) that are responsible for the frequent reference to the ‘dew of the Lord’ in the Odes.

That the origin of the description of Christ as ‘the dew’ may, perhaps, be in the Psalm which we have referred to, can be seen from Eusebius, Theophania, Bk. I, c. 25 :

‘This is the common Saviour of all (sc. the Logos), on whose account this universal essence is productive and rejoices that it ever drinks from his dewdrops.’

(ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ).

ODE XXXVIII

Cf. Ps. xlii. (xliii.) 3. 1 I went up into the Light of Truth as into a chariot :
And the Truth led me and brought me :

2 And carried me across hollows and gulfs,
And from the cliffs and reefs it preserved me ;

Cf. Ps. cvii. 30. 3 And became to me a Haven of Salvation ;
And set me on the arms¹ of immortal life.

4 And it went with me and made me rest and suffered me not to err ;

Because it was and is the Truth ;

¹ B, step.

- 5 And I ran no risk because I walked with Him;¹
And I made no error in anything, because I obeyed Him.
- 6 For Error fled away from Him:
And would not meet Him:
- 7 But Truth was proceeding in the right way;
And whatever I did not know He made clear to me:
- 8 All the drugs of Error and the plagues of death which are considered to be sweet (beverage).
- 9 And I saw the Destroyer of the Corruptor² when the Bride who was being corrupted was adorned,
Along with the Bridegroom who corrupts and is corrupted.
- 10 And I asked the Truth, Who are these? and He said to me:
This is the Deceiver and the Error:
- 11 And they imitate the Beloved and His Bride:
And they lead astray and corrupt the world.
- 12 And they invite many to the Banquet,
And give them to drink of the wine of their intoxication;
- 13 And they make them vomit up their wisdom and intelligence;
And they deprive them of understanding;
- 14^a And then they leave them;
And so these go about like madmen and corrupt;
- 14^b Since they are without heart;
And do not seek after it.

¹ Sc. the truth.² Or, Corruption.

15 And I was made wise so as not to fall into the hands of the Deceiver;¹

And I congratulated myself that the Truth had gone with me;

16 And I was established and lived and was redeemed;

Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 10.

And my foundations were laid by the Lord;²

Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 6.

For He planted me.

17 For He set the root:

Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 6.

And watered it and fixed it and blessed it:

And its fruits will be for ever.

18 It struck deep and sprang up and spread wide,

And it was full and was enlarged.

19 And the Lord alone was glorified,

Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 10.

In His planting and His husbandry:³

20 In His care and in the blessing of His lips;

In the beautiful planting of His right hand.

21 And in the splendour⁴ of His planting,

And in the thought of His mind.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. In the text we have punctuated the word  'waves', but it might be read as  'valleys', 'ridges', 'reefs', 'ledges', 'cliffs', which gives a sense more in harmony with the rest of the Ode in which land is intended.

As for the word , erroneously translated in the editio princeps, it is certain that it must be pointed and translated 'Haven'.

¹ B, Deceivers.

² Lit. On the hand of the Lord.

³ Or, work.

⁴ B and H discovery (ex errore).

v. 6. There is no need to change with Grimme ܕܠܝܢܐ into ܕܠܝܢܐ.

v. 8. Both manuscripts have ܫܠܝܬܐ, 'sweetness'. Not seeing how torments might be considered as sweetness of death we have changed in the text the word into ܫܠܝܬܐ, 'terror' and we have omitted to place in the foot-note the reading of the manuscripts. The former translations in following the order of words as found in the text were somewhat unintelligible: e.g.

'All the poisons of error and the plagues which are thought to be the sweetness of death.'

The translation which we have adopted above cannot do the slightest violence to the Syriac grammar, in which we are informed that the two terms of annexion are often separated (Mingana's Gram., No. 420).

In view of the difficulty arising out of the former translations Barth suggested the change of ܫܠܝܬܐ into ܫܠܝܬܐ. The change, apart from being too violent, cannot solve the problem of 'the torments of the sweetness of death'.

If we take ܫܠܝܬܐ in the sense of 'juice of fruits, liquor', we may see in it an underlying Greek οἰνόμελι like the corresponding ܫܠܝܬܐ. This sense would be in harmony with the rest of the Ode which deals with intoxication.

'Plagues of death' may be considered as a Semitism for 'deadly plagues'.

v. 9. The first member of this verse ܫܠܝܬܐ ܫܠܝܬܐ offers some difficulty; it means evidently 'the destroyer of the corruption', because 'the corruptor of the corruption' has no meaning in itself. The author is, therefore, playing on the two different meanings of the verb 'to destroy' and 'to corrupt'. The idea of destroying corruption is expressed again in Ode xxxiii. 1.

Here also it would perhaps be better to punctuate ܫܠܝܬܐ, 'of the corruptor' to make it conform with ܫܠܝܬܐ of the end of the verse, and with what we have suggested in our note to Ode xxxiii. 1. Consequently there is no need to change with Grimme the sentence of the manuscripts into ܫܠܝܬܐ ܫܠܝܬܐ.

v. 17. ܫܠܝܬܐ with wasw of the manuscripts is better Syriac than ܫܠܝܬܐ suggested by Grimme.

Expository Notes.

This Ode from its first verse is full of difficulties and obscurities. The Odist ascends a chariot, called the Light of Truth, and the Truth guides him through various dangers, by land and by sea, to a haven of salvation. This Psalm of Truth now becomes a Psalm of Truth and Error; the contrary natures of the two are exhibited, and then, by a sudden personification, Truth and Error acquire human forms, and we have before us what looks like a pair of heretical teachers, whose wiles the Odist considers himself lucky to have escaped. Then the Ode ends with praise for the skilful culture of the great husbandman, whose plant the Odist confesses himself to be.

All of this is very difficult to explain; are we dealing with real experience, or is it allegory? Are they real heretics that are being denounced? One reason for thinking so lies in the fact that Ignatius of Antioch, in dealing with Antiochene and other contemporary heresy, uses language which is similar to that of the Odist: he says that these heretical teachers mingle error with truth, as poisoners or druggists put medicaments into honey-wine. See what has been said on this in the Introduction. Ignatius also calls these heretical teachers mad dogs who bite one unawares; and the Odist also says that they make men mad, and then the victims go about like mad 'men' to hurt other people. Possibly the word 'dogs' has dropped from the text of the Ode at this point.

We have discussed elsewhere (see p. 148) the possibility that the chariot in verse 1 may really be a ship, perhaps a misunderstood ὄχημα of a Greek text. This would argue a Greek original for the Ode; but this evidence for Greek originals has been steadily growing less in the course of our study of the collection, and even ὄχημα might require an explanatory word. This particular Ode has a Greek word κίνδυνος transliterated in it, but the word occurs not uncommonly in Syriac writers. It is certainly curious that the word turns up again in the very next Ode!

The only clear references to the Scripture are the allusion to the 43rd Psalm in verse 1:

‘Send out thy light and thy truth.
Let them lead me and let them bring me;’

and the reference to the 107th Psalm:

‘So he bringeth them to the haven where they would be.’

The suggestion was made by Professor Torrey of Yale that the words in the Ode

‘It became to me a Haven of Salvation,’ were an Aramaic misunderstanding of ‘brought me to the Haven’. If this could be established it would make the Scriptural parallel much closer.

If it were not for the fact that antiquity has been established for the Odes, both as regards individual compositions, and as a collection, we should have been tempted to regard this attack on the heretical teachers who make men mad, as a conventional Patristic attack on Mani and his followers the Manichaeans. Thus Eusebius (Theophania, Bk. IV, chap. 30) speaks of ‘that madman of yesterday and of our own times, whose name became the titular badge of the Manichaean heresy’. And Cyril of Jerusalem (Cat. vi. 19): ‘Thou must hate all heretics, but especially him who even in name is a maniac, who arose lately under the emperor Probus.’ Eusebius plays on the same note in his History.

However, it is clear from Ignatius that heretics had been classed with mad dogs from a very early time. Mani is only a belated illustration.

ODE XXXIX

- 1 Mighty rivers are¹ the power of the Lord;
Which carry headlong
Those that despise Him:

Cf. Amos v. 24
(Pesh.).

- 2 And entangle their paths,
And sweep away their fords:²
- 3 And carry off their bodies
And destroy their souls.

¹ Or, (As) mighty rivers is.

² Or, ferries.

- 4 For they are more swift than lightning,¹
And more rapid :
- 5 But those who cross them in faith
Shall not be moved ;
- 6 And those who walk on them without blemish
Shall not be afraid.
- 7 For the sign in them is the Lord ;
And the sign becomes the way of those who cross in the name of the Lord.
- 8 Put on, therefore, the name of the Most High and know Him :
And you shall cross without danger,
While the rivers shall be subject to you.
- 9 The Lord has bridged them by His word ;
And He walked and crossed them on foot ;
- 10 And His footsteps stand (firm) on the waters, and were not erased ;
They are as a beam that is firmly fixed.²
- 11 And the waves were lifted up on this side and on that ;
And the footsteps of our Lord Messiah stand (firm),
- 12 And are not obliterated,
And are not defaced.
- 13 And a way has been appointed for those who cross after Him,
And for those who agree to the course of His faith ;
And who adore His name,
Hallelujah.

¹ B, lightnings.² Or, fixed by Truth.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. By an oversight the text has been pointed فُضِلَ ('They die headlong' or 'upside down'): but H has certainly pointed it فُضِلَ 'they bring headlong'. We may compare the description of the torrent in Ode vi. 8 which 'carries away' the temple'. So the meaning of the verse is according to the manuscript, as we have put in the translation 'they carry them (the despisers) headlong'.

Newbold reads سلا for سد and translates 'mighty rivers are the powers of the Lord', which is possible.

Expository Notes.

In this Ode the writer speaks the experience of a traveller who is stopped on his way by the sudden rise of a rapid river, which becomes unfordable and is actually unbridged. The Lord, however, is as good as a ford or a bridge: his footprints are as secure to tread in, as if one had a firm beam on which to cross. The Ode is like a little sermon on the text, 'When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee' (Isa. xliii. 2). Or perhaps it is Psalm lxxvii. 19, 'thy way is in the sea and thy paths in deep waters and thy footprints are not known'.

The description of the Lord's walking on the waves reminds one of Galilee, but there are parallel expressions in the Old Testament.

We have suggested on the margin that the text of the Ode is under the influence of Amos v. 24 in the Syriac, the 'mighty rivers' being parallel to the 'mighty torrent of righteousness'.

ODE XL

- 1 As the honey distils from the comb of the bees,
And the milk flows from the woman that loves her children,
So also is my hope on thee, my God.
- 2 As the fountain gushes out its water,
So my heart gushes out the praise of the Lord,
And my lips utter praises to Him.

- 3 And my tongue is sweet in His intimate converse
And my limbs are made fat by the sweetness of His Odes.
- 4 And my face is glad with His exultation;
And my spirit exults in His love;
And my soul shines in Him;
- 5 And the fearful one shall confide in Him;
And redemption shall in Him stand assured;
- 6 And his gain is immortal life;
And those who participate in it are incorruptible.

Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 5. We have pointed فُسلّا ('fear confides in Him'), but the facsimile shows the vocalization فُسلّا 'the fearer', which gives the sense, 'the fearful one confides in Him', as we have translated. Bruston proposes to derive the verb فُسلّا from فُسلّا; this, however, is not very probable.

v. 6. وَمِنْ حَيْثُ 'and his gain' refers to فُسلّا of the preceding note. We may possibly read وَمِنْ حَيْثُ 'his inheritance'.

Expository Notes.

This beautiful Ode is altogether experimental: it is made up of milk and honey, of joy and gladness, of thanksgiving and the voice of melody. The writer admits that he is a shining soul; 'my soul shines in Him'.

It is not easy to find an underlying Biblical theme, if indeed one exists. In verse 3 (a missing verse recovered from the Nitrian Codex) is a sentence in which the Odist repeats, with variation, something he had said in the 20th Ode;

'Thou shalt be fat in the praise of His holiness.'

Here it is :

‘My limbs are fat in the sweetness of His Odes.’

We showed above that in Ode xx there was a Biblical base in the 58th chapter of Isaiah. The same word for ‘fat’ is again used in the present Ode.

The Ode is also parallel in many of its expressions to the 21st Ode ; here also we have the overflowing heart, the praising lips and heart, and the exultant face. The 21st and the 40th Odes might be hung up side by side.

ODE XLI

- 1 Let all¹ the Lord's bairns praise Him,
And let us² appropriate the truth of His faith.
- 2^a And His children shall be acknowledged by Him ;
- 2^b Therefore let us sing in His love :
- 3 We live in the Lord by His grace ;
And life we receive in His Messiah.
- 4 For a great day has shined upon us ;
And marvellous is He who hath given us of His glory.
- 5 Let us, therefore, all of us unite together in the name of the Lord :
And let us honour Him in His goodness :
- 6 And let our faces shine in His light ;
And let our hearts meditate in His love,³
By night and by day.
- 7 Let us exult with the joy of the Lord.

¹ Let us (B).

² Let them (H).

(Christ speaks.)

8 All those that see me will be astonished;
For from another race am I.

Prov. viii. 22 (Heb.). 9 For the Father of Truth remembered me;
He who possessed me from the beginning.

Cf. Prov. viii. 25 (LXX). 10 For his riches begat me,
And the thought of His heart:

(The Odist speaks.)

11 And His Word is with us in all our way,
The Saviour who makes alive and does not reject our souls:

Cf. Philip. ii. 8, 9. 12 The man who was humbled,
And was exalted by His own righteousness;

13 The Son of the Most High appeared
In the perfection of His Father;

Cf. John i. 1. 14 And light dawned from the Word
That was beforetime in Him;

15 The Messiah is truly one;
And He was known before the foundations of the world,
That He might save souls for ever by the truth of His name:

(Doxology.)

16 Let a new song arise to the Lord from them that love Him.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. We do not feel justified in adopting the readings ܐܘܕܝܢܐ or ܐܘܕܝܢܐ ('let them announce' or 'let them thank') suggested by Schulthess, for ܐܘܕܝܢܐ 'And let them receive'. In the following verse it is intimated that by receiving the truth of His faith the sons of God will be recognized by Him.

v. 4. Strictly speaking the verb ܐܘܕܝܢܐ means 'it shone' or '(He) made to shine'. In the first sense the subject would be 'a great day', and in the second 'the Lord'. Cf. xi. 14.

v. 15. Connolly has pointed out that the phrase ܐܘܕܝܢܐ ܕܡܡܐ ܕܡܡܐ is used in the New Testament Peshiṭta as a rendering of πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. In the present state of our knowledge it is impossible to know the precise epoch of the appearance of the Syriac word ܐܘܕܝܢܐ. Can we assert that the author of the Peshiṭta, an Edessenian, was the first writer who used it? From the fifth century onwards, possibly under the influence of the Peshiṭta, it is constantly found in genuine Syriac writings. We are also unable to say why it is used in the plural and why it is derived from the form Afel of the verb. On the other hand, the expression ܐܘܕܝܢܐ ܕܡܡܐ 'he laid the foundations' of something, is of frequent use among Syrians, and appears to be original, although these same Syrians prefer the use of the verb ܡܡܐ to ܐܘܕܝܢܐ. The lexicographers explain the word as meaning the 'first stages', or 'strata' of the world; hence, they say, is the reason it is used in the plural. In the West Syrian breviary, and in some writers of lower date, ܐܘܕܝܢܐ is simply used to mean 'creation' and is almost synonymous with ܕܡܡܐ; the word has even given birth to the expression ܐܘܕܝܢܐ ܕܡܡܐ 'the beginning of the creation'. Whether it was the author of the Peshiṭta who derived this word from the author of the Odes, or the Odist from the Peshiṭta, it is difficult to decide, until the history of both is, through other channels, more fully established. It might even be a fortuitous encounter in a commonplace expression employed in Edessa from the first to the fifth century. (Cf. above, pp. 95 and 122.)

Expository Notes.

In this Ode, Christ is the speaker alternately with the poet. At the eighth verse we recognize the familiar strain, 'all that see me will be astonished'. We must compare the words of Christ in Ode xvii and in Ode xxviii. The origin of the repeated expression is probably Psalm lxx. (lxxi.) 7 :

ὥσεὶ τέρας ἐγενήθην τοῖς πολλοῖς.

Ode xvii helps us to understand the next clause ; the sentences are parallel.

Ode xvii. 6.

Ode xli. 8.

'All that saw me were amazed :
And I was regarded by them as a strange person.'

'All those that see me will be astonished ;
For from another race am I.'

Thus the stranger (ܐܝܢܐ) is the same as the person from another race (ܡܢ ܥܡ ܐܬܪ ܐܝܬܪܐ). It refers to Christ, and not to the Odist, conceived of as a proselyte of the gate who has joined the Jewish or Judaeo-Christian community. It is the same statement which Christ makes in Ode xxviii that 'I was not their brother, nor my birth like theirs'. It is an intimation of the Miraculous Birth and Origin.

That is the reason why the Odist (verses 9, 15) now reverts to the eighth chapter of Proverbs, and to the Birth of the Divine Wisdom, for Christ is the Wisdom of God.

At the eleventh verse the Odist takes up the reference to the Word of God, and explains that He was truly of one nature with the Father, unique in Himself and one with God, and that he pre-existed before the foundation of the world. The statement that 'the Christ is truly one', is quoted and dilated on by Ignatius in his epistle to the Magnesians, as we have shown in the Introduction.

In the same verse we have a Targumism for 'God is with us in all our way'. Cf. the Targum on Gen. xxxv. 3, where Jacob says : 'His Word . . . was with me for my help in the way that I went.'

There is a Semitic turn of speech in verse 6, 'Let our faces shine by His shining'. In the same verse there is an adaptation of a verse in the first Psalm :

'And in His law he will meditate day and night ;'

for which the Odist suggests

'Let our hearts meditate in His love by night and by day.'

Cf. the Syriac of the two sentences :

- 4 But I will be with those Who love me.
- 5 All my persecutors have died;
And they sought after me who proclaimed about me¹;
Because I am alive.
- 6 And I rose up and am with them;
And I will speak by their mouths.
- 7^a For they have despised those who persecute them.
- 7^b And I threw over them the yoke of my love:
- 8 Like the arm of the bridegroom over the bride,
So is my yoke over those that know me.
- 9 And as the couch that is spread in the chambers of the bridegroom and the bride,
So is my love over those that believe in me.
- 10 I was not rejected, though I was reckoned to be so;
And I did not perish though they thought it of me.
- 11 Sheol saw me and was in distress;
Death cast me up and many along with me:
- 12 I have been gall and bitterness to it,
And I went down with it to the extreme of its depth.
- 13 And the feet and the head it let go,
For it was² not able to endure my face:

Isa. xiv. 9, and
Euseb. 11. E. (x. 8).

¹ Or, set their hope on me.

² they were (H).

- 14 And I made a congregation of living men amongst his dead men ;
And I spake with them by living lips :
In order that my word may not be void.
- 15 And those who had died ran towards me ;
And they cried and said, Son of God, have pity on us ;
- 16 And do with us according to thy kindness ;
And bring us out from the bonds of darkness :
- 17 And open to us the door
By which we shall come out to thee ;
For we perceive that our death does not touch thee.
- 18 Let us also be saved with thee ;
For thou art our Saviour.
- 19 And I heard their voice,
And I laid up their faith in my heart ;
- 20 And I set my name upon their heads :
For they are free men and they are mine.
Hallelujah.

Critical Notes.

v. 1. For ܐܢܝܢܐ Gunkel proposes ܐܢܝܢܐ 'I was sanctified'. This change would not be in harmony with the particle ܠܐ which follows the verb: it is also a violent change which does not commend itself, although corroborated by a reference to Ode xxvii. 1. Labourt's opinion that ܐܢܝܢܐ means in Syriac 'j'ai sacrifié' is not probable.

v. 2. Gunkel proposes ܐܢܝܢܐ 'and the expansion of' instead of ܐܢܝܢܐ 'my expansion' of the manuscripts, and translates 'und das Ausstrecken des ausgestreckten Holzes, an dem der Aufgerichtete am

Wege hing'. Labourt accepts Gunkel's theory and would have us, therefore, change the text of the second line into what he calls 'corrections excellentes'. These corrections would give us a text

ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ

'l'extension du bois étendu, où (sic) a été pendu, sur la route, le Juste'. The Syriac so constituted is exceedingly weak, and even faulty. In the parallel Ode xxvii, the word occurs as 'my expansion', and we do not see any obvious reason to depart from the reading of the manuscripts. It is said in the first verse, 'I expanded my hands' (ܡܥܬܝܬܐ) and ܡܥܬܝܬܐ of the second verse is, therefore, a continuation of the same idea. This is common to both Odes. Both Odes also agree to the fact that this 'expansion of hands is the sign' (of the Lord); but instead of ܡܥܬܝܬܐ both use ܡܥܬܝܬܐ, which is almost synonymous with it. Both Odes harmonize in their statement that this 'expansion of hands' is a 'straight' or 'extended' wood; but the word used to express 'straight' or 'extended' is ܡܥܬܝܬܐ in Ode xlii, and ܡܥܬܝܬܐ in Ode xxvii. That in Ode xxvii we cannot take ܡܥܬܝܬܐ as a substantive and translate 'of the Just' is shown by its contracted masculine form, which cannot suffer a modification in its adjectival sense; there is little doubt, therefore, that ܡܥܬܝܬܐ of Ode xlii refers also to 'wood'. The utmost we could linguistically say is that 'my expansion' is a sign of the 'straight' or 'extended' wood; supposing that the word ܡܥܬܝܬܐ has been omitted, as its repetition may have been considered useless; the text then would have been:

ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ

ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ ܕܠܐ ܡܥܬܝܬܐ

'Because the expansion of my hands is His sign, and my outstretching is (the sign of) the extended wood.'

Ode xxvii ends here; Ode xlii tells that this 'straight' or 'extended' wood has been 'erected', or 'hung up' in the way of the 'Righteous One'. Here the word is used in its emphatic and not contracted form.

We could, however, take ܡܥܬܝܬܐ as a contracted feminine adjective, referring to ܡܥܬܝܬܐ 'His way', i. e. the way of the Lord. On this hypothesis the sense would be: 'And my expansion is the extended (or straight) wood, which has been hung up on His straight way'. This is the utmost meaning that the Syriac wording can give.

The reading adopted by Grimme ܐܘܕܢܐ for ܐܘܕܢܐ is improbable.

v. 9. Labourt's suggestion that ܐܘܕܢܐ 'sleeping-room of a newly married couple' should be read ܐܘܕܢܐ 'the house of the bridegroom' is not necessary.

v. 12. Grimme proposes the plausible emendation of ܐܘܕ into ܐܘܕܐ, thus referring the pronoun to Sheol of verse 11.

Expository Notes.

This closing Ode of the collection describes the Descent of Christ into Hades, and the release of souls there bound and imprisoned. Prefixed to this is a short introduction coinciding closely with the 27th Ode, and this is followed by a meditation of the Risen Christ over His own triumph and a declaration of His love as the Bridegroom towards His bride. We need not suppose that the earlier sentences are an addition, nor remove them as a repetition. The Odist habitually repeats himself; and in the present case we can find the motive for the repetition. The writer is working on the 88th Psalm as a description of the descent into Hades, and in this very Psalm stand the sentences:

'I cried unto thee, O Lord, all day long,
I spread out my hands.'

We compare:

Ode xlii. 1. ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ

Psalm lxxvii. (lxxxviii.) 10. ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ

After this preliminary explanation of his outspread hands, the Odist plunges at once into the Hades theme, in the words

'I became of no use to my acquaintance.'

He is working on the sixth verse of the Psalm, which appears in the LXX as:

ἐγενήθην ὡς ἄνθρωπος ἀβοήθητος,

with a side-light from verse 9:

ἐμάκρυνες γνωστούς μου ἀπ' ἐμοῦ.

The Syriac of the Psalm which answers to ἀβοήθητος is ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ, and the Syriac of the Ode is ܐܘܕܢܐ ܐܘܕܢܐ. The Syriac of the Psalm is nearly a transliteration of the Hebrew: the sentiment is the same. Now we have the key in the lock. The previous clause in the Psalm declares that 'I am reckoned with them that go down into the pit'; this is a theme that frequently recurs in the Odes, where Christ is speaking: it is in the tenth verse of this Ode in the form:

'I was not rejected though I was reckoned to be so;
I did not perish though they thought it of me.'

The verse in the Psalm (verse 6), which says:

'Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit,
In darkness, in the deep,'

is responsible for verse 12 of the Ode:

'I went down with him (Sheol) into the extreme of its depth.'

With this Psalm the Odist has also used a sentence from Isaiah, describing the descent of the Morning Star into Hades, which says in the English Version:

'Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming, but which appears in the LXX and in the Syriac as:

'Hades is embittered at thy descent,' (πικραίνεται);

which leads the Odist to say:

'I have been gall and bitterness to him.'

In the Psalm again the Odist found the words 'Free among the dead', perplexing words which the Early Church interpreted of Christ, and these words are at the back of the Odist's statements:

'A congregation of living men amongst his dead men:
They are free men, they are mine.'

We have shown in the Introduction that this Ode is quoted by Eusebius and by Cyril of Jerusalem, and it is also responsible for some sentences in the Acts of Thomas. We translate the passage from the Greek and the Syriac for purposes of comparison. One sentence of the Greek Acts of Thomas was quoted in the second edition as a possible parallel, viz. the words οὗ τὴν θέαν οὐκ ἤνεγκαν οἱ τοῦ θανάτου ἄρχοντες, but the passage is of wider interest:

(Syr.) 'Thou didst descend into Sheol with mighty power, and the dead saw thee and became alive, and the lord of death was not able to bear it; and thou didst ascend with great glory, and didst take up with thee all who sought refuge with Thee.' (ܡܬܥܠܝܢ.)

(Greek) 'Thou didst descend into Hades with mighty power, thou whose sight the lords of death could not bear, and gathering together (συναγαγών) all that fled to thee for refuge (τοὺς εἰς σὲ καταφυγόντας) thou didst prepare the way.'

The Syriac depends altogether on the Ode, and the Greek depends on the Syriac; there is one word in the Greek (συναγαγών) which may, perhaps, be claimed as an independent loan from the Odes, for in verse 15 Christ speaks of making a 'congregation of living men among the dead'. Otherwise the Greek is a working over of the Syriac, as the Syriac Acts are of the Odes. 'Those who sought refuge with Thee' is derived from 'Those who had died ran to me'. Perhaps the Syriac Acts have dropped the word 'gather', and we should read 'Thou didst gather and take up', &c. Evidently the Acts of Thomas have used the 42nd Ode.

Ephrem also has used it freely in his descriptions of the Descent into Hades in the Carmina Nisibena. See especially for 'Sheol made sad':

'The Virgin in her bringing forth He made glad; but Sheol he grieved and made sad (ܡܬܥܠܝܢ ܡܬܥܠܝܢ) in His resurrection.

Sheol was made sorrowful (ܡܬܥܠܝܢ) when she saw them, even the sorrowful dead, made to rejoice'.—Carm. Nisib. 27. 4, 6.

In the Breviarium Chaldaicum (ii. p. ٥٥) we find a similar strain to the language of the Odes:

'O Living One, who wentest down to the abode of the dead, and didst announce a good message to the souls who were bound (ܡܬܥܠܝܢ) in Sheol.'

Similar sentences are found in the Missale Syr. Orient. (Mosul, 1901), p. ٤٠, &c.

THE PSALMS OF SOLOMON

PSALM XLIII

Psalms of Solomon I.

(1) I cried unto the Lord when I was in affliction at my end ; and to God when sinners set upon me : (2) for suddenly there was heard before me the sound of war : for He will hear me because I am filled with righteousness. (3) And I reckoned in my heart that I was filled with righteousness ; in the day that I became rich and was with the multitude of (my) children. (4) Their wealth, however, has been given to the whole earth : and their glory as far as the ends of the earth. (5) And they were lifted high as the stars : and they said (6) that they will not fall, and they were insolent in their good things, and they spake without knowledge. (7) For their sins were in secret and I knew them not : (8) and their wickedness had exceeded that of the nations that had been before them : and they defiled the sanctuary of the Lord with pollution.

PSALM XLIV

Psalms of Solomon II.

(1) In the insolence of the sinful man, he cast down with battering rams¹ the strong walls, and thou didst not restrain him. (2) And the Gentile foreigners went up on thy altar, and were trampling on it with their shoes in their insolence. (3) For the children of Jerusalem had polluted the Holy House of the Lord: and they were profaning the offerings to God¹ with wickedness.

¹ Lit. great beams.

(4) Wherefore He said, Remove them, cast them away from me. And He did not establish with them the beauty of His glory; (5) it was rejected before the Lord: and it was utterly torn in pieces. (6) Her sons and her daughters were in bitter captivity, and on their neck was put the sealed yoke of the Gentiles: (7) According to their sins so He dealt with them: for He suffered them to pass into the hand of him that was stronger than they. (8) For He turned away His face from His mercy: young men and old men and their children together; (9) because they also had worked evil together, that they might not hearken unto me. (10) And the heaven was mightily angered, and the earth rejected them: (11) because none in (the earth) had done therein like their doings; (12) and that the earth may know all thy righteous judgements, O God. (13) They set up the sons of Jerusalem for mockery within her, in the place of harlots; and every one that transgressed² was transgressing as if before the sun: while they made sport in their villainies as they were used to do. (14) In the face of the sun they made show of their villainies. And the daughters of Jerusalem were polluted according to thy judgements; (15) for they had polluted themselves in lustful intercourse. My belly and my bowels are in pain over these things. (16) But I will justify thee, O Lord, in the uprightness of my heart; because in thy judgements is thy righteousness, O God. (17) For thou dost reward sinful men according to their deeds: and according to their wicked and bitter sins. (18) Thou didst disclose

¹ Lit. of God.

² Or, passed by.

their sins, in order that thy judgement might be known. (19) And Thou didst not blot out their remembrance from the earth. God is a judge and righteous, and accepteth no man's person. (20) For the Gentiles reproached Jerusalem in their wickedness, and her beauty was cut off from the throne of His¹ glory. (21) And she was covered with sackcloth instead of beauteous raiment: and there was a rope on her head instead of a crown. (22) She cast off from her the dazzling² glory which God had put upon her; (23) and in contempt her beauty was cast away on the ground. (24) And I beheld and I besought the face of the Lord, and I said, Enough! Thou hast made Thy hand heavy, O Lord, upon Israel, by the bringing in of the Gentiles; (25) for they have mocked and not pitied, in anger; (26) and in reproach they are consumed, unless thou, O Lord, shalt restrain them in thy wrath. (27) For it is not in zeal that they did (this), but in the lust of the soul: (28) That they might pour out their wrath upon us in plundering us. But thou, O Lord, delay not to recompense them upon their own heads; (29) to cast³ down the pride of the dragon to contempt. (30) And I delayed not until the Lord showed me his insolence smitten on the mountains of Egypt: and despised more than him that is least (honoured) on land and sea: (31) and his body coming on the waves in much contempt, and none to bury (him). (32) Because he had rejected Him with scorn, for he did not consider that he is a man. And the end he did not regard. (33) For he said, I will be the Lord of land and sea: and he knew not that the Lord is God, great, mighty, and powerful, (34) and He is King over Heaven and over Earth: and He judges

¹ Greek, her.

² Greek, 'her diadem of glory'.

³ Cod. B, 'to speak', in agreement with the corrupt Greek.

kingdoms and princes, (35) He who raiseth me up in glory and layeth low¹ the proud for destruction, not for a time but for ever, in contempt; because they knew Him not.

(36) And now behold, ye great ones of the earth, the judgement of the Lord, for He is a righteous King, and judges what is under the whole Heaven. (37) Bless ye the Lord, ye who fear the Lord reverently; for the mercies of the Lord are on them that fear Him with judgement, (38) to separate between the righteous and the sinful, and to reward the sinful for ever according to their deeds—(39) and to be gracious to the righteous after their oppression by sinners: and to reward the sinful for what he has done to the righteous: (40) because the Lord is kind to those that call upon Him in patience, to do according to His mercy to His saints: so as to stand before Him at all times in strength. (41) Blessed is the Lord for ever by His servants.

PSALM XLV

Psalms of Solomon III.

(1) Why sleepest thou, my soul, and dost not bless the Lord?
(2) Sing a new song to God and keep vigil in His watch. For a Psalm is good (to sing) to God out of a good heart. (3) The righteous will ever make mention of the Lord: in confession and in righteousness are the judgements of the Lord. (4) The righteous will never neglect² when he is chastened by the Lord: because his will is always before the Lord. (5) The righteous stumbles and justifies God: he falls and I wait³ what the Lord will do to him.

¹ Greek κοιμίζων and so Syriac.

² Greek ἀλιγορήσει: cf. Prov. iii. 11, Heb. xii. 5.

³ Read, 'and he waits'.

(6) And he looks to see from whence his salvation comes. (7) The stability of the righteous is from God their Saviour: for in the house of the righteous there does not lodge sin upon sin; (8) because he always visits the house of the righteous to remove the sins of his transgressions. (9) And he delivers his soul, in whatever he has sinned without knowledge, by fasting and humiliation; (10) and the Lord purifies every holy man and his house. (11) But the sinner stumbleth and curseth his own life, and the day in which he was born: and the birth-pangs of his mother; (12) and he adds sin upon sin to his life: (13) he falls, and because his fall is grievous, he rises not again: for the destruction of the sinner is for ever. (14) And he will not remember Him when He visits the righteous. (15) This is the portion of sinners for ever. (16) But those who fear the Lord shall rise to eternal life: and their life shall be in the light of the Lord, and (their life) shall not fail any more. (Hallelujah).¹

PSALM XLVI (XLVII)

Psalms of Solomon IV.

(1) Why sittest thou, O wicked man, in the congregation of the righteous, and thy heart is far removed from God; and by thy wickedness thou provokest to anger the God of Israel. (2) exceedingly by thy words and exceedingly by thy outward signs more than all men? He who is severe in his words in his condemnation of sinners in judgement, (3) and his hand is the first to be on him. as though (he acted) in zeal: and he is guilty himself of all kinds of sinful crimes. (4) His eyes are on every woman immodestly and his tongue lies when he answers with oaths. (5) In the night and in the darkness as if he were not seen; by his eyes he talketh with every woman in the cunning of wickedness: (6) and he is quick to go into every house with joy as if he had no wickedness. (7) God shall move those who judge with respect of persons: but He lives with the upright, in the corruption of his body and in the poverty of his life. (8) God will disclose the deeds of those who are men-pleasers: in scorn and derision are his works. (9) And let the saints justify the judgement of their God, when the wicked shall be removed from before the righteous. (10) The acceptor of persons who talks law with guile, (11) and his eyes are on a house, quietly like a serpent, to dispel the wisdom of each one by words of villainy: (12) his words are with an evil intent, with a view to the working of the lust of wickedness: (13) and he does not remove until he has scattered in bereavement, and has desolated the house because of his sinful lust: (14) and he supposes in his words that there is none that sees and judges: (15) and he is filled with this sinfulness; and his eyes are on another house to devastate it with words of prodigality; and his soul is, like Sheol, never satisfied. (16) For all these things, let[†] his portion ' O Lord, be before thee in dishonour; let his going out be with groans and his coming in with curses: (17) in pains, and in poverty, and in destitution, O Lord, let his life be: let his sleep be in anguish, and his waking in vexation: (18) let sleep be removed from his eyelids by night: let him fall from^{*} every work of his hands in dishonour, (19) and let him enter his house empty-handed, and let his house be destitute of everything that can satisfy his soul: (20) and from his offspring let not one draw near unto him : (21) let the flesh of the hypocrites be scattered by wild beasts : and the bones of the wicked (lie) before the sun in dishonour : (22) let the raven pick out the eyes of those who are men-pleasers. (23) Because they have laid waste many houses of men in dishonour : and have scattered them in lust : (24) and they remembered not God ; nor feared God in all these things ; (25) and they provoked God, and He was angered to destroy them from the earth : because with crafty intent they had played the hypocrite with innocent souls. (26) Blessed are they that fear the Lord in their innocency : (27) and the Lord will save them from all the cunning and wicked men ; and he will redeem us from every stumbling-block of the wicked. (28) God has destroyed all them that work fraud with pride,¹ for a strong judge is the Lord our God in righteousness. (29) Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon all them that love thee.

¹ This is an addition by the scribe under the influence of the Odes of Solomon which he has been copying.

PSALM XLVII (XLVIII)

Psalms of Solomon V.

(1) O Lord my God, I will praise thy name with exultation, amongst those that know thy righteous judgements. (2) For thou art gracious and merciful, and the place of refuge of the poor. (3) When I cry unto thee, be not thou silent unto me. (4) For one does not take spoil from the strong man. (5) Or who will take aught from what thou hast made unless thou give it to him ? (6) Because he is man, and his portion is before thee in the balance : and he shall not add aught to better it apart from thy judgement, O God. (7) In our afflictions, we call thee to our help : and thou hast not turned away our petition : for thou art our

¹ Lit. excess.

God. (8) Delay not thou thy hand from us lest we be strengthened to sin: (9) and turn not away thy face from us, lest we remove away from thee: and to thee we will come: (10) for if I should be hungry, O Lord, unto thee will I cry, O God: and thou wilt bestow. (11) For the fowl and the fish thou dost feed. When thou givest rain in the desert to cause the grass to spring up, (12) to prepare food in the wilderness for every living thing, and if they shall be hungry, unto thee will they lift up their faces: (13) kings and rulers and peoples thou dost provide for, O God: and the hope of the poor and the miserable, who is it except thyself, O Lord? (14) And thou wilt answer him because thou art kind and gentle: and his soul shall be satisfied when thou openest thy hand in mercy: (15) for the kindness of a man is with parsimony, to-day and to-morrow: and if it should be that he repeats his gift and does not grumble, he is wonderful. (16) But thy bounty is plenteous in kindness and in wealth; and there is no expectation towards thee that He will be sparing in gifts.¹ (17) For over all the earth is thy mercy, O Lord, in kindness. (18) Blessed is the man whom the Lord shall remember in poverty: for that a man should exceed his measure (means that) he will sin. (19) Sufficient is a low estate with righteousness² (20) For those that fear the Lord are pleased with good things: and thy grace is on Israel in thy kingdom. (21) Blessed be the glory of the Lord, for He is our King.

¹ The Greek has been misread.

² The Syriac has omitted a sentence of the Greek by a common transcriptional error. Add: 'And herein is the blessing of the Lord, that a man be satisfied in righteousness'.

PSALM XLVIII (XLIX)

Psalms of Solomon VI.

(1) Blessed is the man whose heart is prepared to call upon the name of the Lord: (2) and when he shall remember the name of the Lord, he will be saved. (3) His ways are directed from before the Lord: and the works of his hands are preserved by his God. (4) And 'in' the evil vision of the night his soul shall not be moved: because he is His: (5) and his soul shall not be affrighted in the passing through the rivers and in the tumult of the seas. (6) For he rose from his sleep and praised the name of the Lord: (7) and in the quietness of his heart he praised the name of the Lord and he made request from the face of the Lord concerning all his house. (8) And the Lord hears the prayer of every one that is in His fear, and every petition of the soul that trusts in Him; and the Lord fulfils it. (9) Blessed is He who doeth mercy upon them that love Him in truth.

PSALM XLIX (L)

Psalms of Solomon VII.

(1) Remove not thy tabernacle from us, O God, lest those rise up against us who hated us without a cause: (2) for thou hast put them away, O God, that their foot may not tread the inheritance of thy sanctuary. (3) Thou in thy good pleasure chasten me, and deliver us not over to the Gentiles. (4) For if thou shouldest send death, it is thou who givest it command against us: (5) for thou art the merciful one, and wilt not be angry so as to consume us utterly. (6) For because of thy name that encamps amongst us, mercies shall be upon us: and the Gentiles shall not be able to prevail against us. (7) For thou art our strength: we will call upon thee and thou wilt answer us: (8) for thou wilt be gracious to the seed of Israel for ever, and thou wilt not forget him.¹

 (9) Establish us in the time of thy help to show favour to the house of Jacob in the day that is prepared for them.

PSALM L (LI)

Psalms of Solomon VIII.

(1) Distress and the sound of war mine ears have heard, the sound of the trumpet and the noise of slaughter and destruction: (2) the sound of much people like a mighty and frequent wind: like the tempest of fire which comes² over the wilderness. (3) And I said to my heart: Where will [God] judge him? (4) And I heard a sound in Jerusalem the Holy City. (5) The bonds of my loins were loosed at the report³ (6) and my knees trembled and my bones were moved like flax. (7) And I said, they will make straight paths in righteousness, and I remembered the judgements of the Lord, from the creation of the heaven and the earth: and I justified God in all his judgements from the beginning.⁴ (8) But God lay bare their sins before the sun: and to all the earth were known the righteous judgements of the Lord. (9) For in the secret places of the earth were they doing evil; (10) the son had connexion with the mother and the father with the daughters: (11) and all of them committed adultery with their neighbours' wives: and they made them solemn covenants among themselves concerning these things: (12) they were plundering the Holy House of God, as if there were none to inherit and to deliver. (13) And they were treading His sanctuary in all their pollutions,

¹ The Syriac has dropped the sentence: 'And we are under thy yoke for ever, and under the scourge of thy chastening'.

² The second Alaph in the text should be Taw.

³ Greek adds: 'and my heart was afraid'.

⁴ Lit. from eternity.

and in the time¹ of their separation they polluted the sacrifices, as common meat: (14) and they left no sins which they did not commit, and even worse than the Gentiles. (15) For this cause God mingled for them a spirit of error, and caused them to drink an unmixed cup² of drunkenness: (16) He brought him from the other side of the world, the one that afflicts grievously: (17) and he decrees war against Jerusalem and against her land: (18) and the judges of the land met him with joy: and they said to him: Thy path shall be ordered, come, enter in peace. (19) They levelled the rough paths³ for his entering: they opened the doors against Jerusalem: and they crowned her walls. (20) And he entered like a father into the house of his children in peace: and he set his feet 'there' in great firmness: (21) and they took possession of the towers and walls of Jerusalem. (22) For God brought him in assurance against their error. (23) And they destroyed their princes, because he was cunning in counsel: and they poured out the blood of the dwellers in Jerusalem like the water of uncleanness: (24) and he carried off their sons and their daughters, who had been (born) in pollution, (25) and had wrought their pollution even as also their fathers had done. (26) And Jerusalem defiled even those things that were consecrated to the name of God: (27) and God was justified in his judgements upon the nations of the earth, (28) and the saints of God were as innocent lambs in their midst. (29) God is to be praised who judges all the earth in His righteousness. (30) Behold, O God, thou hast shown us 'thy judgement'⁴ in thy righteousness, (31) and our eyes have seen thy judgements, O God; and we have justified thy name that is honoured for ever.⁵

¹ Lit. blood.

² Lit. a living cup (i. e. a cup of strong wine).

³ Lit. paths of salvation.

⁴ Cod. om.

⁵ Correct the punctuation of the first word.

(32) For thou art a God of righteousness: who judgest Israel with chastening. (33) Turn thy mercy towards us and be gracious to us: (34) and gather the dispersion of Israel, in mercy and in kindness: (35) for thy faithfulness is with us: and we are stiff-necked and thou art our chastener: (36) do not desert us, O our God! lest the Gentiles should swallow us up, as though there were none to deliver: (37) and thou art our God from the beginning, and upon thee is our hope, O Lord: (38) and we will not depart from thee, for thy judgements are good; (39) and upon us and upon our children is thy good will for ever, O Lord God, Our Saviour, and we will not be shaken again for ever. (40) The Lord is to be praised for His judgements by the mouth of His saints: (41) and blessed is Israel from the Lord for evermore.

PSALM LI (LII)

Psalms of Solomon IX.

(1) When Israel went forth into captivity to a strange land, because they departed from the Lord their Saviour: (2) then were they cast out from the inheritance that God gave them: amongst all the Gentiles was the dispersion of Israel according to the word of God, (3) that thou mightest be justified, O God, in thy righteousness over our wickedness: (4) for thou art a just judge over all the peoples of the earth. (5) For there will not be hidden from thy knowledge any one who doeth wickedness: (6) and the righteousness of thy upright ones, O Lord, is before thee. And where shall a man be hidden from thy knowledge, O God? (7) For we work by freewill and the choice of our own souls to do either good or evil by the work of our hands: (8) and in thy righteousness thou dost visit the children of men. (9) For he who does righteousness lays up a treasure of life with the Lord: and he who does wickedness incurs judgement upon his soul in perdition.

(10) For His judgements are in righteousness upon every man and his house. (11) For with whom will the Lord deal graciously unless with them that call upon the Lord? (12) For he purifies the sins of the soul by confession, (13) because shame is on us and our faces because of all these things. (14) For to whom will He remit sins except to those that have sinned? (15) For the righteous thou dost bless, and dost not reprove them for any of their sins; for thy grace is on those that have sinned when they have repented. (16) And now, thou art our God, and we are thy people whom thou hast loved: behold, and have mercy, O God of Israel; for thine we are: remove not thy compassions from us, lest the Gentiles should set upon us; (17) for thou hast chosen the seed of Abraham rather than all the Gentiles, (18) and thou hast put on us thy Name, O Lord: and thou wilt not remove for ever. (19) Thou didst surely covenant with our Fathers concerning us; and we hope in thee in the repentance of our souls. (20) The mercies over the house of Israel are of the Lord now and evermore.

PSALM LII (LIII)

Psalms of Solomon X.

(1) Blessed is the man whom God remembered with reproof: and He has restrained from him the way of evil by stripes: so as to be purified from his sin, that it may not abound. (2) For he who prepares his loins for beating shall also be purified:

for He is good to those that receive chastening. (3) For the way of the righteous is straight, and chastisement does not turn it aside. (4) For the face¹ of the Lord is upon them that love Him in truth, and the Lord will remember His servants in mercy. (5) For the testimony is in the law of the everlasting covenant; the testimony of the Lord is in the ways of the children of men, by 'His' visitations. (6) Righteous and upright is our God in all His judgements, and Israel will praise the Name of the Lord with joy. (7) And the saints shall give thanks in the congregation of the People: and on the poor the Lord will have mercy in the gladness of Israel. (8) For the Lord is kind and merciful for ever: and the congregations of Israel shall praise the Name of the Lord. (9) For of the Lord is the salvation upon the house of Israel, unto the everlasting kingdom.²

PSALM LIII (LIV)

Psalms of Solomon XI.

(1) Blow ye 'the trumpet' in Zion, the well-known trumpet of the saints: (2) proclaim in Jerusalem the voice of the heralds, because God is merciful to Israel in His visitation. (3) Stand up on high³ Jerusalem, and behold thy children, who are all being gathered from the east and the west by the Lord: (4) and from the north they come to the joy of their God: and from the far-away islands God gathered them. (5) Lofty mountains has He humbled and made plain before them: and the hills fled away before their entrance: (6) the cedars⁴ He caused to shelter them as they passed by: and every tree of sweet odour God made to breathe¹ upon them: (7) in order that Israel might pass by in the visitation of the glory of their God. (8) O Jerusalem, put on the garments of thy glory; and make ready thy robe of holiness. For God has spoken good things to Israel now and ever. (9) May the Lord do what He hath spoken concerning Israel: and concerning Jerusalem: may the Lord raise up Israel in the name of His glory. May the mercies of the Lord be upon Israel now and evermore.

¹ Greek, mercy.² Greek, everlasting gladness (εὐφροσύνη).³ Baruch v. 5-8.⁴ Greek, the groves.

PSALM LIV (LV)

Psalms of Solomon XII.

(1) O Lord, save my soul from the perverse and wicked man, and from the whispering and transgressing tongue, that spake lies and deceit. (2) For in the (cunning) response of his words is the tongue of the transgressor² of the law: for he shows like one whose deeds are fair, and kindles fire among the people. (3) For his sojourning is to fill³ (set fire to) houses by his lying talk: cutting down the trees of his delight with the flame of his tongue⁴ that does lawlessly. (4) He has destroyed the houses of the transgressors by war: and the slandering⁵ lips God has removed from the innocent, the lips of the transgressors: and the bones of the slanderer shall be scattered far from those who fear the Lord. (5) By flaming fire will be destroyed the slanderous tongue from

¹ Greek 'caused to rise'. Corr. the Yodh of the Syriac note to Nun.

² The Greek of this passage is obscure.

³ The translator reads ἐμπλήσαι for ἐμπρησαι.

⁴ Cod. om.

⁵ Lit. whispering.

among the upright, and their houses. (6) And the Lord shall preserve¹ the soul of the righteous which hateth them that are evil; and the Lord shall establish the man that makes peace in the house of the Lord. (7) Of the Lord is salvation upon Israel his servant for ever: (8) and the sinners shall perish together from before the face of the Lord: and the saints of the Lord shall inherit the promises of the Lord.

PSALM LV (LVI)

Psalms of Solomon XIII.

(1) The right hand of the Lord has covered us: the right hand of the Lord has spared us: (2) and the arm of the Lord has saved me from the spear that goes through and through, and from famine, and the pestilence of sinners. (3) Evil beasts ran upon them: and with their teeth were tearing their flesh; and with their jaw-teeth² were breaking their bones. But us the Lord has delivered from all these things. (4) But the wicked man was troubled on account of his transgressions: lest he should be broken along with the evil men. (5) Because dread is the fall of the wicked: but the righteous not one of these things shall touch. (6) For one cannot compare the chastening of the righteous who have (sinned) ignorantly with the overthrow of evil men who (sin) knowingly. (7) For the righteous is chastened³ so that the sinner will not exult over him. (8) For the Righteous One will admonish him as His beloved son; and his chastening is like that of the first-born: (9) for the Righteous One will spare His saints, and their transgressions He will blot out by (His) chastisements. For the life of the righteous is for ever. (10) But sinners shall be cast into perdition: and their memorial shall no more be found. (11) But upon the saints shall be the mercy of the Lord. He will cherish all them that fear Him.

¹ Better 'and may the Lord preserve', as in Greek, and so in the following verses.

² Or, molars: rendering the Greek μύλαις literally.

³ Or perhaps: 'for the righteous is chastened secretly' (see Ryle and James, ad loc.).

PSALM LVI (LVII)

Psalms of Solomon XIV.

(1) The Lord is faithful to them that love Him in truth: even to them that abide His chastening: to them who walk in righteousness in His commandments: He has given us the law for our life: (2) and the saints of the Lord shall live thereby for ever. The Paradise of the Lord are the trees of life which are His saints: (3) and the planting of them is sure for ever; nor shall they be rooted up all the days of the heaven. For the portion of the Lord and His inheritance is Israel. (4) Not so are the sinners and evil men, those who have loved a day in the participation of sin: for in the brevity of wickedness is their lust; (5) and they did not remember God; that the ways of the children of men are open before Him continually: and the secrets¹ of the heart He knoweth before they come to pass: (6) therefore their inheritance is Sheol and Perdition and Darkness: and in the day of mercy upon the righteous they shall not be found. (7) For the saints of the Lord shall inherit life in delight.

¹ Lit. secret places.

PSALM LVII (LVIII)

Psalms of Solomon XV.

(1) In my affliction I called on the name of the Lord, and for my help I called on the God of Jacob: and I was delivered. (2) Because thou, O God, art the hope and refuge of the poor. (3) For who that is strong will praise thee in truth? (4) And what is the strength of a man except that he should praise thy name? (5) A new song with the voice in the delight of the heart: the fruit of the lips with the instrument attuned to the tongue: the firstfruits of the lips from a heart that is holy and just. (6) No one that doeth these things shall ever be moved by evil: the flame of fire and the anger of sinners shall not touch them, (7) when it goeth forth against the sinners from before the Most High to root up all the roots of sinners: (8) because the sign of the Lord is upon the righteous for their salvation: death and the spear and famine shall remove from the righteous; (9) for they shall flee from them as death flees from life: but they shall pursue after the wicked and catch them: and those who do evil shall not escape from the judgement of the Lord: for they will get before them like skilled warriors: (10) for the sign of destruction is upon their faces, (11) and the inheritance of sinners is Perdition and Darkness: and their iniquity shall pursue them down to the lower hell. (12) And their inheritance shall not be found by their children: (13) for their sins shall lay waste the houses of sinners: and sinners shall perish for ever in the day of the Lord's judgement, (14) When God shall visit the earth in His judgement. (15) And upon those who fear the Lord there shall be mercy therein; and they shall live in the compassion of our God: and sinners shall perish unto eternity.¹

¹ Lit. the time of eternity.

PSALM LVIII (LIX)

Psalms of Solomon XVI.

(1) When my soul declined a little from the Lord, I had almost been in the lapses of the sleep of destruction; and when I was far away from the Lord, (2) my soul had almost been poured out to death, hard by the gates of Sheol along with the sinners: (3) and when my soul separated from the God of Israel, unless the Lord had helped me by His mercy which is for ever! (4) He pricked me, like the spur of the horse, according to His watchfulness: my Saviour and Helper at all times is He: He saved me. (5) I will praise thee, O God, because thou hast helped me with thy salvation: and hast not reckoned me with sinners for destruction. (6) Withdraw not thy mercy from me, O God: and let not the remembrance of thee remove from my heart until I die: (7) save me, O God, from the wicked and sinful woman¹ and from every wicked woman who sets traps for the simple: (8) and let not the beauty of a wicked woman cause me to slip, nor any sin that is, (9) and establish the work of my hands before thee: and preserve my walk in the remembrance of thee. (10) My tongue and my lips in words of truth do thou establish; anger and unreasonable passion, (11) grumbling and little-mindedness in affliction do thou remove from me: for if I shall sin when thou hast chastened me, it is for repentance: (12) but by the good will of joy establish my soul: and when thou shalt strengthen my soul whatever has been given shall be sufficient for me: (13) for if thou strengthenest me not, who can endure thy chastening in poverty? (14) For a soul shall be reprov¹ed in his flesh and by the affliction of his poverty: (15) and when a righteous man shall endure these things, mercy shall be upon him from the Lord.

¹ Cod. from wicked sin (as in Greek).

PSALM LIX (LX)

Psalms of Solomon XVII.

(1) O Lord, thou art our King, now and for ever: for in thee, O God, our soul shall glory. (2) And what is the life of man upon earth? For according to his time, so also is his hope. (3) But we hope on God our Saviour: for the empire of our God is for ever according to mercy: (4) and the kingdom of our God is over the Gentiles for ever with judgement. (5) Thou, O Lord, didst choose David for king over Israel: and thou didst swear to him concerning his seed, that their kingdom should not be removed from before thee. (6) But for our sins sinners rose up against us: and they set upon us and removed me far away: those to whom thou gavest no command have taken by violence, (7) and have not glorified thy honourable Name with praises: and they have set up a kingdom instead of that which was their pride. (8) They laid waste the throne of David in the exultation of their change.² But thou wilt overthrow them and wilt remove their seed from the earth: (9) even when there shall rise up against them a man that was a stranger to our race. (10) According to their sins thou wilt reward them, O God: and it shall befall them according to their works. (11) And thou wilt not have mercy upon them, O God. Uproot their seed, and do not leave a single one of them. (12) The Lord is faithful in all His judgements which He has done upon the earth. (13) The wicked man has devastated our land, so that there is none to dwell therein. They have destroyed both young and old and their children together. (14) In the splendour of his wrath he sent them away to the West, and the princes of the land to mockery without sparing. (15) In his foreign way the enemy exults, and his heart is alien from our God. (16) And Jerusalem did all things according as the Gentiles did in their cities to their gods. (17) And the children of the Covenant took hold of them in the midst of the mingled Gentiles: and there was none amongst them that did mercy and truth in Jerusalem. (18) They that love the assemblies of the saints fled away from them: and they fled like sparrows who fly from their nests: (19) and they were wandering in the wilderness, in order to save their souls from evil: and precious in their eyes was the sojourning with them of any soul that was saved from them. (20) Over all the earth they were scattered by the wicked. Therefore were the heavens restrained that they should not send down rain upon the earth, (21) and the everlasting fountains were restrained, both (from) the abysses, and from the lofty mountains: because there was none among them who did righteousness and judgement: from their ruler to the lowest of them they were in every sin. (22) The king was in transgression and the judge in provocation of wrath, and the people in sin. (23) Behold, O Lord, and raise up to them their King, the Son of David, according to the time which thou seest. O God: and let Him reign over Israel thy servant, (24) and strengthen him with power that He may humble the sinful rulers: (25) and may purify Jerusalem from the Gentiles who trample her down to destruction, (26) so as to destroy the wicked from thy inheritance: and to break their pride like the potter's vessel: to break with a rod of iron all their firmness: (27) to destroy the sinful Gentiles with the word of His mouth: at His rebuke the Gentiles shall flee from before His face: and to reprimand sinners by the word of their heart: (28) that He may gather together a holy people who shall exult in righteousness: and may judge the tribes of the people whom the Lord His God sanctifies: (29) and He shall not any more suffer sin to lodge among them; and no more shall dwell amongst them the man that knoweth evil. (30) For He knoweth them that they are all the children of God, and He shall divide them according to their tribes upon the earth: (31) and the sojourner and the foreigner shall not dwell with them: for He will judge the Gentiles and the peoples in the wisdom of His righteousness: (32) and He shall possess a people from among the Gentiles: that it may serve Him under His yoke: and may praise the Lord openly over all the earth: (33) and He shall purify Jerusalem in holiness, as it was of old time: (34) that the Gentiles may come from the ends of the earth to behold His glory: bringing gifts to her sons who were scattered from her, (35) and to see the glory of the Lord, wherewith He hath glorified her: and He, the righteous King, taught of God, is over them: (36) and there is no wicked person in His days amongst them, because they are all righteous and their King is the Lord Messiah: (37) for He will not trust on horse nor on his rider; nor on the bow: nor shall He multiply to himself gold and silver for war: nor shall He rely on a multitude in the day of war: (38) for the Lord is His King: His hope and His strength are in the hope of God, and He will have compassion (over all . . .) (39) for He will smite the earth with the word of His mouth for ever: (40) and He will bless the people of the Lord in . . . and delight (41) and

¹ Or (see note to text), thou wilt reprove.

² Reading ἀλλάγματος.

He is pure . . . the head of a great people, to (confute) the rulers and to destroy sinners by His word: (42) and He shall not be weakened in His days from His God: because (God hath made Him powerful by His Holy Spirit) and wise in the counsel of the prudent with strength and righteousness. (43) and with the blessing of the Lord in Him, and (He shall not be weak). (His hope) is on his Lord and who shall stand against Him? (44) For He is strengthened in His deeds, and is mighty in the fear of His God: (45) feeding the flock of the Lord in righteousness and in faith; and He will not suffer that any one . . . in His pasturage: (46) He will gather them with equality: and pride shall not be found in them that it should rule over them. (47) This is the beauty of the King of Israel . . . to raise him up over the house of Israel, to chasten him. (48) His words are more choice than gold, and they are precious in the synagogues to distinguish . . . from a holy people. (49) His words are like the words of the saints among a holy people: (50) blessed are they who are in those days to see the good men of Israel in the congregation of the people (which God will make), (51) to hasten His mercies upon Israel, and to redeem us from the pollutions of the filthy Gentiles: for the Lord is our King for ever.

חַסְדָּא בְּיָמֵי. אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל. יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל וְיִשְׂרָאֵל בְּיָמֵי יְהוָה. אֱלֹהֵינוּ.

Here then we have, as the variations from our text show, either a revision of that text, or, more probably, as Prof. Nau suggests, an independent rendering of the Greek. As the next quotation is from the Wisdom of Solomon, and is introduced by the formula 'Again from the same' (fem.), it is probable that the extract from the Psalms of Solomon was incorrectly referred to the Wisdom of Solomon.

CONCORDANCE TO THE ODES OF SOLOMON¹

אֵל 5, 5.

אֶחָד 7, 7, 11; 8, 23; 9, 5; 10, 4;
14, 1; 19, 2, 4; 23, 18, 22;
31, 5; 41, 9, 13.

אֶחָדָם (אֶחָדָם) 31, 13.

אֶחָדָם 5, 14; 9, 7; 24, 7, 9; 28, 16;
31, 2; 33, 9; 42, 10.

אֶחָדָם 6, 3; 22, 5; 24, 10; 28, 18;
33, 2.

אֶחָדָם 28, 9.

אֶחָדָם 28, 5; 33, 2, 8.

אֶחָדָם 25, 5.

אֶחָדָם 23, 5, 7, 10, 17, 21.

אֶחָדָם 16, 9.

אֶחָדָם 9, 1; 15, 4.

אֶחָדָם 8, 19; 26, 8, 9, 10.

אֶחָדָם 7, 18; 8, 21; 15, 6; 17, 5, 11;
23, 10; 28, 13; 38, 4, 7, 15.

אֶחָדָם 28, 16.

אֶחָדָם 4, 8; 5, 6; 6, 15; 7, 16; 17,
8, 10; 18, 7; 28, 15; 42, 3.

אֶחָדָם 8, 21.

אֶחָדָם 17, 11.

אֶחָדָם 6, 4; 11, 4.

אֶחָדָם 4, 1; 41, 8.

אֶחָדָם 4, 14; 5, 12; 6, 1; 7, 1, 6 (bis),
23 (bis); 11, 12, 13, 22; 12,
2, 5, 7; 14, 1, 9; 15, 7 (bis);
17, 6; 18, 11 (bis), 12; 19, 10;
20, 3 (thrice); 23, 5, 6; 24, 5;
25, 5; 26, 13; 28, 1, 9, 13;
29, 2 (bis), 3 (bis), 10; 31, 11;
33, 4; 35, 5; 36, 5 (bis), 7 (bis in H); 38, 1; 39, 10; 40, 1, 2; 42, 8, 9, 16.

אֶחָדָם (causative) 18, 2; 22, 4; 24, 9;
31, 10; 33, 1.

אֶחָדָם 23, 10.

אֶחָדָם 3, 5; 11, 5, 16; 34, 1, 3.

אֶחָדָם 13, 2.

אֶחָדָם 20, 7.

אֶחָדָם 11, 19, 21.

אֶחָדָם (34 times).

אֶחָדָם 7, 3, 11, 17; 8, 18, 20; 9, 4
(bis), 8; 11, 18; 12, 5, 7, 9;
13, 2; 14, 1; 16, 4; 17, 10;
18, 8; 19, 2; 20, 1; 21, 4
(H); 26, 13; 28, 7; 33, 11;
36, 3; 39, 10; 40, 6; 42,
6, 20.

¹ We have taken no account of suffixes with substantives and transitive verbs, but the plural form of substantives and the primitive and derived forms of verbs have been noted. The pronouns אֵל, אַתָּה, אֵל, אַתָּה, in their singular form, the relative הוּא, and the auxiliary verb הוּא have been omitted. Present and past participles when declined are frequently included in the root of the verb when that root is expressed.

אֶל or חֶל 3, 6; 4, 2, 11; 11,
 23; 16, 18; 17, 3; 18, 8;
 21, 4 (B); 24, 9; 34, 1, 3,
 5 (bis); 38, 14^b.
 אֶלֶּ 12, 9; 16, 18; 17, 10;
 23, 9, 12; 24, 7, 8; 31, 8;
 38, 4; 42, 12.
 אֶלֶּ 7, 4 (bis); 28, 16 (H).
 אֶלֶּ 15, 1; 16, 1.
 אֶלֶּ 10, 5; 23, 17; 41, 5.
 אֶלֶּ 24, 6.
 אֶלֶּ 17, 6.
 אֶלֶּ 16, 1.
 אֶלֶּ 3, 4; 4, 9; 11, 8; 12, 6; 18, 8,
 10 (H); 31, 11; 33, 5, 12;
 34, 5; 39, 10.
 אֶלֶּ 23, 1, 2, 3.
 אֶלֶּ 3, 3.
 אֶלֶּ 4, 14; 9, 5; 10, 4; 11, 24;
 16, 17; 23, 21; 33, 10; 36, 3;
 42, 15.
 אֶלֶּ 4, 1; 11, 9; 17, 1; 18, 8;
 25, 1; 40, 1.
 אֶלֶּ 16, 1.
 אֶלֶּ 20, 5 (bis).
 אֶלֶּ 31, 6.
 אֶלֶּ 21, 4.
 אֶלֶּ 19, 7; 28, 2; 35, 5.
 אֶלֶּ 29, 11.
 אֶלֶּ 16, 2.
 אֶלֶּ 6, 9.
 אֶלֶּ 8, 9; 11, 18; 33, 5; 38, 10;
 42, 15.
 אֶלֶּ 5, 13, 14; 23, 1, 2, 3.
 אֶלֶּ (43 times).

אֶלֶּ 3, 2; 5, 5; 6, 18; 7, 12 (bis);
 8, 15 (bis); 12, 10; 14, 1;
 17, 11, 13; 19, 5; 22, 4, 8 (bis);
 33, 13; 38, 10; 39, 4, 9 (bis);
 42, 20.
 אֶלֶּ 4, 13; 6, 15; 13, 1; 16, 2;
 39, 11.
 אֶלֶּ 4, 1; 17, 11.
 אֶלֶּ (9 times).
 אֶלֶּ 40, 1.
 אֶלֶּ 17, 11 (bis).
 אֶלֶּ 17, 11 (H).
 אֶלֶּ 21, 2; 22, 4; 25, 1; 42, 16.
 אֶלֶּ 3, 5, 8; 9, 2; 12, 5; 16, 1;
 18, 12; 28, 3 (B); 29, 2; 40, 1,
 4 (B); 42, 15.
 אֶלֶּ 6, 9; 8, 9; 12, 6; 18, 5, 6, 9,
 10; 20, 3 (bis), 6 (bis); 21, 4
 (bis); 28, 4^b, 16; 33, 9; 34,
 1, 2; 38, 14; 39, 12.
 אֶלֶּ 42, 10 (bis).
 אֶלֶּ 6, 10; 8, 14; 11, 13; 13, 2, 3;
 15, 2; 16, 16; 17, 4; 21, 6, 9;
 36, 3; 40, 4 (H); 41, 6.
 אֶלֶּ 8, 10.
 אֶלֶּ 7, 2, 13; 11, 3 (bis); 12, 6;
 17, 8; 22, 7, 11; 23, 15; 24,
 13; 34, 1; 38, 7; 39, 7, 13;
 41, 11; 42, 2.
 אֶלֶּ 3, 10; 33, 7, 8, 13.
 אֶלֶּ 7, 13.
 אֶלֶּ 6, 10, 11; 7, 20; 11, 12, 13,
 18, 21; 15, 10; 16, 10, 16;
 33, 3.
 אֶלֶּ 38, 6.

لاؤحلا 7, 17.

لاؤ 23, 12; 27, 2 (H); 29, 7; 39, 7 (bis); 42, 1.

لاؤ 5, 4; 6, 10; 7, 21; 10, 3; 18, 12; 20, 7; 23, 11, 16; 30, 2, 6; 33, 6; 37, 3.

لاؤ 6, 8; 7, 13; 8, 2; 16, 16; 22, 11; 38, 1; 39, 1.

لاؤ 6, 17; 7, 17.

لاؤ 4, 1 (bis); 11, 18, 23; 18, 7; 22, 6; 34, 2.

لاؤ 4, 2; 23, 17.

دو (20 times).

دو 8, 11.

دو 8, 22 (bis).

دو 24, 7.

دو (9 times).

دو (9 times).

دو 14, 7; 22, 7.

دو 33, 8, 10.

دو 14, 5; 22, 7; 33, 4.

دو 5, 9.

دو 11, 21.

دو 18, 7.

دو 12, 10.

دو 10, 5; 22, 3.

دو 8, 17; 9, 7; 29, 1.

دو 31, 9.

دو 4, 4; 16, 13; 23, 19 (B); 42, 14.

دو 15, 9; 23, 19 (H).

دو 11, 23.

دو 19, 6.

دو 22, 12; 42, 8.

دو 28, 9.

حلا 22, 12.

حلا 11, 14; 20, 8; 28, 2.

حلا 11, 15; 30, 4.

حلا 7, 3; 11, 21; 14, 3; 17, 7; 19, 1, 11; 20, 9; 25, 12; 42, 16.

حلا 11, 16, 24.

حلا 39, 1.

حلا 8, 9; 20, 3.

حلا 20, 3.

حلا 7, 10; 8, 22; 15, 1; 19, 9; 20, 6; 24, 5; 26, 13; 28, 17; 18; 33, 13; 38, 14; 42, 5.

حلا 19, 3.

حلا 17, 12.

حلا 29, 10.

حلا 22, 3; 29, 5.

حلا (B) 22, 3.

حلا 16, 8.

حلا 4, 3.

حلا 16, 18.

حلا (s.) 3, 7 (bis); 7, 15; 14, 1; 19, 2, 7; 23, 18, 22; 29, 11; 36, 3; 41, 13; 42, 15.

حلا 31, 4; 40, 1; 41, 2; 42, 20.

حلا 12, 12; 36, 3.

حلا 3, 10; 6, 9; 33, 6.

حلا 33, 6.

حلا (v.) 7, 8, 9.

حلا 7, 24; 16, 12.

حلا 4, 7; 16, 13.

حلا 22, 6 (H); 28, 4 (bis); 38, 17.

حلا 17, 14; 38, 20.

حلا 39, 4.

حلا 19, 6, 7; 33, 5.

חַלָּה 17, 5; 23, 10; 28, 18; 39, 13.
חַלָּה וְחַלָּה 39, 1.

חַלָּה 22, 8.

חַלָּה 4, 8; 8, 20; 23, 2, 3;
33, 13.

חַלָּה 8, 20.

חַלָּה 19, 10; 41, 12.

חַלָּה 29, 8.

חַלָּה 23, 11, 13, 16.

חַלָּה 17, 9.

חַלָּה 19, 6.

חַלָּה 28, 17 (H).

חַלָּה 11, 2.

חַלָּה 11, 1.

חַלָּה 11, 3.

חַלָּה 18, 14.

חַלָּה (64 times).

חַלָּה 31, 11; 39, 11.

חַלָּה 38, 2.

חַלָּה 4, 12, 14; 11, 2.

חַלָּה 23, 17; 34, 6.

חַלָּה 33, 5.

חַלָּה 42, 9.

חַלָּה 41, 8.

חַלָּה 16, 2; 36, 7; 40, 2 (bis).

חַלָּה 36, 7.

חַלָּה 26, 4.

חַלָּה 24, 4; 28, 1 (bis).

חַלָּה 16, 1.

חַלָּה 23, 6.

חַלָּה 26, 6.

חַלָּה 22, 9.

חַלָּה 6, 8.

חַלָּה 39, 9.

חַלָּה 7, 10.

חַלָּה 17, 5; 29, 7; 38, 1.

חַלָּה 14, 4.

חַלָּה 23, 12; 36, 8.

חַלָּה 30, 4; 40, 1.

חַלָּה 4, 10; 30, 4; 40, 1.

חַלָּה 16, 18.

חַלָּה 3, 10; 18, 6, 8.

חַלָּה 20, 9; 40, 30 (B).

חַלָּה 42, 11.

חַלָּה or חַלָּה 33, 11; 35, 3.

חַלָּה 28, 2 (bis); 40, 4; 41, 7.

חַלָּה 8, 1; 21, 9; 23, 4; 40, 4;
41, 7.

חַלָּה 5, 10, 11; 23, 8; 24, 3; 25, 11.

חַלָּה 40, 5.

חַלָּה 7, 12; 12, 4; 26, 1, 2, 5, 6, 7.

חַלָּה 24, 6.

חַלָּה 8, 14, 16 (bis), 18, 20 (bis);

17, 9, 12, 14; 25, 2; 28, 10;

42, 20.

חַלָּה 11, 21 (bis), 22.

חַלָּה (23 times).

חַלָּה 20, 4.

חַלָּה 41, 9.

חַלָּה 11, 22; 28, 17, 18.

חַלָּה 39, 6.

חַלָּה (s.) 20, 6.

חַלָּה 9, 9.

חַלָּה 38, 11.

חַלָּה 7, 4; 17, 4; 18, 12; 34, 4.

חַלָּה 28, 8; 41, 8.

חַלָּה 26, 11.

חַלָּה 21, 8; 41, 14.

חַלָּה 12, 7.

حسب 26, 5.

حو 6, 11; 23, 20.

فك 38, 3 (B).

وفا 42, 8.

وفا 21, 1; 38, 3 (H)

وا 11, 20; 13, 1.

وا 41, 6.

وا 3, 10; 7, 2.

وا 3, 2; 6, 2, 16; 8, 16; 17, 15;
18, 2; 21, 4; 26, 4; 40,
3 (B).

وا 38, 14.

وا 6, 8.

وا 22, 7; 28, 3; 29, 6; 34, 6;
42, 9.

وا 6, 13.

وا 28, 3.

وا 4, 3; 11, 22; 15, 10.

وا 4, 5; 8, 11; 16, 4; 39,
5, 13; 41, 1; 42, 19 (B).

وا 6, 13; 8, 19; 39, 8; 41, 5.

وا 6, 2, 4; 7, 1; 12, 5, 7; 14,
1, 9; 16, 1; 28, 1; 29, 2; 31, 5;
36, 5; 40, 1, 2; 42, 8, 9.

وا at the end of every Ode.

وا 6, 6; 38, 10.

وا 6, 1; 7, 14; 10, 6; 17, 4;
18, 14; 20, 9; 23, 4; 33, 13;
38, 5; 39, 6, 9.

وا 12, 5; 31, 2.

وا 17, 8; 39, 2.

وا 7, 10; 12, 13; 16, 3; 28, 3;
33, 7; 41, 2.

وا 38, 10.

وا 4, 3; 6, 9, 13; 8, 3, 4, 5, 10,
11, 12, 22; 9, 7; 11, 18; 12, 8;
19, 5; 20, 3; 23, 10; 24, 11;
14; 28, 13; 31, 4, 6, 13; 33,
12, 13; 38, 8; 39, 5, 6, 7, 13;
42, 3 (bis; B thrice), 5, 15.

وا 18, 12, 15; 23, 1, 2, 3; 38, 14.

وا 24, 5.

وا 5, 7; 7, 6; 11, 21.

وا 8, 14; 11, 21.

وا 8, 3; see وا.

وا 29, 5.

وا 17, 2; 25, 12; 31, 5.

وا 8, 5, 21; 9, 10; 20, 4; 25,
10; 36, 7; 41, 12.

وا 7, 5.

وا 23, 13.

وا 5, 12; 22, 10; 24, 3; 31,
10; 35, 3; 39, 5.

وا 31, 11.

وا 32, 3.

وا 9, 11.

وا 18, 6.

وا 9, 12; 18, 7; 29, 9.

وا 15, 2.

وا 7, 17; 16, 3; 24, 1; 41, 2.

وا 7, 22 (bis).

وا 26, 2.

وا 14, 7; 26, 3, 8; 36, 2; 40, 3.

وا 16, 1.

وا 7, 17, 22.

وا 26, 12.

وا 7, 3.

وا 12, 10.

17, 13.

22, 5; 31, 13.

3, 2, 5; 19, 11; 41, 16; 42, 4.

8, 22; 31, 11.

8, 22.

6, 2; 7, 19; 8, 1, 13; 11, 2;

12, 12; 14, 6; 16, 2, 3; 17,

12; 18, 1; 23, 3; 40, 4; 41,

2, 6; 42, 7, 9.

19, 7; 22, 7; 24, 8; 28, 14;

33, 2; 38, 9 (B bis), 11, 14;

39, 3.

7, 21; 15, 9; 31, 1; 33, 9;

38, 9 (H bis); 39, 10, 12.

15, 8; 22, 11; 33, 1, 7; 38, 9.

Cf. 33, 1, 7; 38, 9.

or 7, 11; 8, 23; 9, 4; 11,

12; 15, 8; 17, 2; 21, 5; 22,

11; 28, 5; 33, 12; 40, 6.

38, 9.

24, 8.

12, 8 (bis), 9 (bis); 16, 17;

28, 9; 36, 6; 41, 14.

4, 5.

23, 1; 38, 19.

41, 3 (B).

38, 15.

7, 1, 2, 17; 15, 1 (bis); 23, 1;

31, 3, 6; 32, 1.

28, 13.

11, 11; 36, 5.

22, 11.

17, 4; 33, 12.

31, 3; 41, 16.

36, 5.

7, 25; 8, 9; 12, 2; 19, 11;

24, 13; 29, 7; 38, 7.

19, 10.

5, 4, 6; 7, 5, 19; 9, 12; 13, 1;

15, 3; 16, 9; 17, 6; 23, 10;

25, 3 (H); 28, 8; 38, 9; 41, 8;

42, 11, 17.

5, 14; 7, 12, 18; 11, 1; 16,

8; 17, 10; 18, 11; 23, 18;

25, 3 (B); 28, 9; 29, 6; 30, 6;

33, 4; 41, 13.

31, 1.

7, 18.

13, 1.

23, 7; 39, 3.

29, 8.

(v.) 5, 3; 6, 18; 8, 16, 22; 17,

14; 34, 6; 38, 16; cf. 41,

3 (H).

(a.) 3, 9; 11, 7; 17, 1; 28, 7

(H); 30, 1; 41, 3 (H); 42, 5, 14.

(s.) 3, 9; 6, 18; 8, 2; 9, 4 (bis);

10, 2, 6; 15, 10; 22, 10; 24,

8; 26, 9; 28, 6, 7 (B); 31, 7;

38, 3; 40, 6; 41, 3; 42, 14.

31, 8.

31, 9.

7, 3; 31, 8.

16, 4.

9, 5; 10, 4.

6, 17; 8, 18; 18, 2; 23, 9;

29, 9; 32, 3; 39, 1.

4, 8; 16, 14.

25, 10.

سككلا 7, 25; 29, 8.

سك 33, 8.

سك 3, 11; 5, 7; 38, 15.

سك 7, 8.

سك 7, 8; 24, 11; 28, 19.

سك 38, 13.

سك 42, 13.

سك 19, 2.

سك 19, 2.

سك 4, 10; 8, 16; 19, 1, 3, 4;

35, 5; 40, 1.

سك 19, 5.

سك 40, 3 (B).

سك 19, 1; 28, 15; 38, 8. (Cf. translation.)

سك 24, 4.

سك 4, 1 (bis); 17, 13; 28, 14.

سك 4, 3.

سك 7, 1.

سك 23, 14.

سك 38, 12.

سك 7, 5, 10; 42, 15.

سك 7, 10; 21, 1, 2.

سك (pr.) 4, 9; 24, 18.

سك 17, 4.

سك 25, 10.

سك 9, 6.

سك 20, 9; 24, 14.

سك 3, 6; 7, 3; 11, 6; 15, 6;

17, 12; 20, 7; 23, 4.

سك 24, 11.

سك 20, 6.

سك 4, 9 (bis); 18, 4; 24, 9.

سك 15, 10.

سك 23, 13.

سك 42, 20.

سك 10, 3.

سك 4, 12; 7, 14; 14, 4; 26, 7.

سك 28, 4^b.

سك 39, 4.

سك 12, 5.

سك 7, 23.

سك 21, 4.

سك 5, 8; 9, 3; 18, 13.

سك 9, 3; 12, 4; 7; 15, 5; 16,

8, 9, 19; 17, 5; 20, 2, 3; 21, 5;

23, 5, 19; 24, 7; 34, 2; 41, 10.

سك 8, 18; 18, 13; 24, 10;

29, 8; 34, 1.

سك 42, 3.

سك 14, 10.

سك 5, 5.

سك 11, 19; 15, 2; 16, 15, 16;

18, 6; 21, 3; 31, 1; 42, 16.

سك 4, 7; 23, 8, 9.

سك 38, 9; 42, 8.

سك 42, 9.

سك 8, 15; 24, 7; 31, 2.

سك 7, 20.

سك 24, 7.

سك 8, 16.

سك 8, 7.

سك 10, 3; 11, 20.

سك 28, 12.

سك 20, 9 (B); 25, 4 (B); 29,

2 (H); 41, 5.

سك 4, 6; 5, 3; 6, 6; 7, 22, 25;

9, 5; 11, 1; 15, 8; 20, 7,

9 (H); 23, 2, 4; 24, 13; 25,

4 (H); 29, 2 (B), 5; 31, 3, 7;
 33, 1, 10; 34, 6; 37, 4; 41, 3.
 6, 13; 9, 8; 11, 18; 12,
 13; 30, 7.
 32, 1; 33, 11.
 11, 14; 35, 4 (H?), 5; 36, 7.
 35, 4 (H?).
 35, 5.
 4, 6; 33, 12.
 28, 10.
 10, 5.
 23, 14.
 6, 6.
 7, 20; 28, 11.
 18, 13.
 17, 5; 28, 15 (B); 31, 2; 38,
 4, 5.
 38, 11.
 38, 10, 15.
 15, 6; 18, 10, 14; 31, 2;
 38, 6, 8, 10.
 28, 15 (H).
 35, 5.
 42, 3 (B).
 38, 20.
 7, 23; 12, 4; 15, 7; 16, 5,
 17; 18, 16; 29, 3.
 11, 16.
 6, 14.
 6, 1 (?); 22, 7; 38, 16.
 16, 6; 23, 7; 27, 1, 2; 35, 7;
 37, 1; 42, 1 (bis).
 12, 11; 15, 5.
 17, 4; 22, 5; 26, 3; 31, 4;
 33, 11; 38, 15.

12, 13; 15, 8; 18, 1; 31, 7.
 5, 1; 7, 25; 10, 5; 21, 7.
 4, 11; 31, 13.
 12, 4.
 26, 6.
 31, 13.
 3, 3, 10, 11; 4, 7 (bis); 7, 9;
 8, 9, 12 (bis), 14; 9, 7; 12, 6,
 10, 13; 16, 13; 17, 7; 18,
 9 (bis), 10 (bis), 13 (bis); 19, 5;
 23, 4 (B), 10; 24, 14; 26, 12;
 30, 6; 38, 7; 39, 8; 42,
 3 (B), 8.
 7, 3; 33, 13.
 6, 6; 7, 16; 15, 10; 41, 2, 15.
 6, 18; 7, 12; 12, 13;
 24, 14; 28, 16 (B).
 6, 6; 7, 7 (bis), 13, 21; 8,
 8, 12; 11, 4; 12, 3; 15, 5;
 17, 12; 23, 4 (bis); 34, 5.
 or 7, 21, 23; 11, 8; 18,
 11; 28, 13.
 8, 20; 17, 7; 38, 21.
 38, 13.
 4, 3, 9, 13 (bis); 6, 7, 17;
 7, 10, 12, 24; 9, 2, 10; 10, 2;
 15, 7; 17, 8, 12; 19, 5; 22, 4,
 10; 29, 2, 8; 31, 2 (H), 5; 35,
 5; 37, 3, 4; 38, 12; 41, 4.
 9, 2; 14, 9.
 14, 9; 24, 9.
 6, 6, 12; 15, 10; 24, 6;
 30, 6.
 11, 9; 15, 7; 35, 6.

معدا 7, 23; 15, 1, 3; 16, 16;
41, 4.

معدا 4, 5.

معدا 24, 1.

معدا 28, 1.

معدا 19, 6, 7, 10 (bis); 24, 5; 36,
3; 41, 10.

معدا 28, 16.

معدا 41, 1.

معدا 7, 6; 13, 2.

معدا 3, 10; 14, 7.

معدا 16, 10; 18, 11.

معدا 41, 6^b.

معدا 8, 6, 20; 14, 4; 18, 7; 19, 5;
22, 7; 25, 2, 7, 9; 28, 15;
38, 20.

معدا 26, 6.

معدا 11, 1, 19.

معدا 11, 19.

معدا 38, 20.

معدا 41, 5.

معدا 16, 20; 20, 10.

معدا 9, 9.

معدا 21, 9.

معدا 29, 11.

معدا 23, 19; 31, 7, 12.

معدا 14, 4.

معدا 16, 10.

معدا 24, 3.

معدا 18, 1.

معدا 40, 6.

معدا 35, 4 (bis).

معدا 21, 5.

معدا 4, 5; 23, 9; 28, 19.

معدا 19, 7.

معدا 21, 4.

معدا 9, 9; 22, 12; 31, 11.

معدا 5, 9; 7, 5, 9; 17, 10, 11; 19, 5;
21, 4, 7; 30, 6; 31, 8, 9; 36,
2, 3, 4; 37, 2; 38, 9, 14 (bis);
39, 8.

معدا 20, 1.

معدا 20, 1.

معدا 16, 11.

معدا 7, 6.

معدا 30, 4; 40, 1.

معدا 4, 5, 15; 6, 10, 11; 7, 13; 11,
20; 14, 8, 10; 15, 2, 10; 16,
18; 17, 6, 7, 11; 18, 7 (bis);
22, 6; 23, 13, 17; 24, 4; 26,
4 (bis); 28, 19; 30, 2; 33, 2,
4; 34, 3; 35, 3; 38, 8; 41, 1,
5, 11.

معدا 6, 18; 28, 12.

معدا 13, 4; 14, 1, 4; 35, 2.

معدا 4, 14; 5, 13; 6, 3, 8, 10;
7, 16; 11, 22, 23; 12, 13; 17,
10; 22, 11, 12; 23, 13, 19;
34, 5; 38, 7.

معدا 38, 9, 11; 42, 8.

معدا 17, 1.

معدا 5, 12; 9, 8, 9, 11; 17, 1;
20, 7.

معدا (v.) 6, 9 (bis); 18, 5; 25, 3.

معدا 7, 1.

معدا 6, 9.

معدا 28, 13.

معدا 11, 2; 20, 5.

معدا 42, 12.

قَتَعَا 28, 5.

قَبِعَ 22, 2.

لَا صَبَ 10, 5; 17, 14; 23, 17.

لَا صَبَا 42, 14.

قُصَا 19, 1, 2.

لَا صَبَ 24, 5; 25, 8.

لَا صَبَا 20, 6; 25, 8.

صَدَقْنَا 25, 9.

صَدَقْنَا 18, 3.

لَا صَبَ 33, 5.

لَا صَبَ 38, 14.

حَسَبَ 22, 6 (B); 34, 3.

حَسَبَا 19, 6; 28, 2.

صَدَقَ 23, 21; 26, 8.

لَا صَبَا 9, 11.

صَدَقَا 9, 11, 12.

حَمَ (31 times).

حَمَمَ (20 times).

حَمَ (6 times).

حَمَمَ (once in H, thrice in B).

حَمَمَ (5 times).

حَمَ (55 times in H and 57 in B).

حَمَ (7 times).

حَمَ (10 times).

حَمَمَ (14 times).

لَا (118 times).

لَا (with a substantive, i. e. 'without')

4, 4; 7, 1, 23; 8, 23; 9, 4;

10, 2; 11, 12; 12, 5 (bis);

13, 4; 15, 6, 10 (bis); 17, 2,

12; 20, 5, 7; 21, 5; 22, 11;

23, 4; 25, 7; 28, 5, 6; 31, 7;

38, 3, 13; 39, 6, 8; 40, 6 (bis).

حَمَلَا (وَحَدَ) 4, 8.

حَلَا 4, 3; 7, 23; 8, 1, 20; 10, 1, 6;

11, 1; 16, 2, 13; 18, 1; 20, 4;

21, 8; 24, 11, 26, 2, 4; 28, 1,

2, 19; 30, 5; 32, 1; 34, 1;

36, 7; 37, 2; 38, 14; 41, 10;

42, 19.

حَقَمَا 8, 1; 17, 13; 41, 6.

حَجَمَ 4, 6, 8; 7, 4; 13, 3; 15, 8;

20, 7; 21, 3; 23, 1, 3; 33, 12;

39, 8.

لَا حَجَمَ 3, 1.

لَا حَجَمَا 8, 9; 11, 11,

لَا حَقَمَا 25, 8.

لَا حَمَا 3, 2, 6; 4, 11; 7, 2, 24; 10, 3;

11, 2, 9; 12, 9; 13, 4; 14, 1,

2, 6; 15, 6; 17, 14; 21, 4;

23, 16; 25, 1, 6; 26, 2, 4;

28, 1, 4; 31, 4, 13; 33, 4; 35,

7 (bis); 37, 1 (bis), 2, 3; 41, 2;

42, 1, 4, 14 (B), 15, 17.

لَا حَلَا 16, 15, 16; 41, 7.

لَا حَلَا see لَا لَصَ.

لَا حَلَا قَدَا 24, 9, 12; 28, 11.

لَا حَلَمَا 40, 3 (B).

لَا حَلَمَا 38, 3.

وَا 11, 21.

وَا حَلَا 18, 4.

وَا حَلَمَ 4, 13; 5, 3; 28, 18.

وَا حَلَمَ 4, 11, 13; 5, 7, 14; 6, 3, 5,

(bis); 7, 9, 23; 8, 9 (bis); 11,

23; 12, 9; 16, 8, 18; 17, 10;

23, 16; 25, 7; 31, 9; 34, 3, 5;

38, 5. See also وَا حَلَمَ.

وَا حَلَمَمَا (وَلَا) 13, 4; 20, 5; 39, 6.

حدا 3, 8; 5, 14; 11, 7; 24, 4;
28, 7; 42, 5, 15.

حتدا 22, 8 (bis); 42, 14.

حدا 6, 15; 15, 9; 18, 8; 28, 17;
29, 4; 38, 8; 42, 11, 17.

ولا حدا 3, 8; 10, 2; 15, 10; 28, 6;
31, 7; 38, 3; 40, 6.

حدا 19, 4.

لا حدا 3, 7.

حدا 34, 1.

حدا 7, 16; 9, 9; 11, 17; 14,
5 (bis); 18, 4, 5; 26, 11 (H);
31, 12.

حدا 3, 6, 7 (bis); 4, 2, 7; 5, 1,
2, 11, 15; 6, 18; 7, 4 (bis),
5, 6 (bis), 11, 12, 19, 21; 8, 14,
21; 10, 5; 12, 1, 3, 11; 14, 2;
15, 2; 16, 2, 18; 17, 10, 15;
18, 3, 9, 10, 14; 19, 3, 8, 9;
21, 2; 23, 9, 16, 17; 24, 1, 6,
9, 12, 13; 25, 2, 4, 9; 26, 1, 2,
11 (B); 27, 2; 28, 3, 5, 7, 8,
9, 11, 12, 14, 17, 19; 29, 11;
30, 1, 3, 5; 31, 5, 12; 32, 3;
38, 4, 5, 15, 16; 39, 7; 41, 8;
42, 1, 3 (B), 5, 13, 14, 18, 20.

حدا 7, 10; 16, 3; 28, 3;
41, 2.

حدا 6, 9, 13, 18; 11, 6, 7; 12, 2;
16, 10; 28, 15; 30, 1, 4; 40, 2.

حدا 29, 5, 8.

لا حدا 8, 3; 41, 12.

حدا 31, 12.

حدا 39, 11 (bis).

حدا 4, 13; 8, 5.

حدا 17, 9.

حدا 6, 1, 2 (bis); 8, 2, 4; 9, 1;
10, 2; 12, 1, 8, 9, 11; 16, 5;
18, 15; 26, 2, 10; 31, 3 (bis);
33, 10; 37, 2; 42, 6, 14.

حدا 11, 6.

حدا 10, 1; 12, 8; 15, 9; 16, 7,
8, 14, 19; 29, 9, 10; 39, 9;
41, 11, 14.

حدا 6, 10; 11, 2, 23; 12, 1; 30, 1;
38, 18.

حدا 16, 17.

لا حدا 19, 3.

حدا 36, 6.

حدا 23, 21.

حدا 7, 11, 13; 9, 4; 17, 7;
18, 5, 8; 19, 5; 23, 4; 26, 7;
35, 6; 36, 2; 41, 13.

حدا 23, 22.

حدا 18, 3; 22, 12; 23, 12.

حدا (140 times).

حدا 38, 10; (cf. 18, 7).

حدا cf. 18, 7.

حدا 3, 4; 4, 6; 8, 19; 23, 1,
2, 3, 10 (bis); 26, 8, 9, 10, 11.

حدا 6, 1.

حدا 14, 10.

حدا 22, 2.

حدا 30, 6.

حدا 22, 7.

حدا 11, 21; 42, 12 (H).

حدا 42, 12 (B).

حدا 28, 15; 31, 12.

3, 3, 6, 10; 4, 3, 15; 5, 1, 10,
 11, 15; 6, 2, 3, 6, 18; 7, 2, 3,
 17, 19, 21, 22, 23; 8, 1, 2, 6,
 22; 9, 3, 4, 11; 10, 1; 11, 1,
 6, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18; 12, 3,
 13; 13, 1; 14, 1, 3, 6, 8; 15,
 1, 10; 16, 1, 3, 5, 8, 18; 17,
 16; 18, 3, 4; 19, 1; 20, 1, 4,
 7; 21, 1, 5, 9; 23, 4 (B bis);
 24, 5, 7, 10, 13; 25, 11 (bis);
 26, 1, 8, 11; 29, 1, 6 (bis), 10;
 30, 1, 2, 5 (bis); 31, 1, 2; 35,
 1, 4, 5; 36, 1, 2, 3; 37, 1 (B),
 4; 38, 16, 19; 39, 1, 7 (bis), 9;
 40, 2; 41, 1, 3, 5, 7, 16.

14, 4; 17, 2; 27, 1; 37, 1
 (H); 42, 1.

24, 1 (B); 39, 11.

28, 13.

23, 20.

36, 6.

9, 3; 17, 16; 24, 1; 29, 6;
 39, 11; 41, 3, 15.

25, 8 (B).

4, 4; 12, 6.

16, 11; 42, 9.

27, 2; 42, 1.

21, 8; 26, 1.

11, 6; 26, 13; 30, 1, 2;
 40, 2.

4, 10.

33, 4.

31, 11.

38, 8.

6, 8; 26, 13.

23, 14; 39, 1, 8.

40, 4; 41, 6.

11, 14; 41, 4.

16, 16; 18, 6; 34, 2; 36, 3.

5, 6; 6, 17; 7, 14; 8, 2;

10, 1, 6; 11, 11, 19; 12, 3, 7;

15, 2; 16, 15; 21, 3, 6; 25, 7;

29, 7; 32, 1; 38, 1; 41, 6, 14.

6, 14; 7, 15; 11, 12; 30, 3; 38, 4.

16, 12; 26, 10, 12; 28, 3;
 30, 2, 7; 35, 6; 36, 1.

3, 5; 25, 12; 26, 3; 37, 4.

14, 6; 20, 8; 26, 12; 35,
 1 (B).

35, 1 (H).

12, 6.

40, 1.

8, 10, 11, 22.

18, 7; 19, 11; 35, 2.

8, 10, 11.

42, 7, 8.

20, 6.

12, 4.

3, 6; 6, 3; 20, 6.

4, 13; 5, 3; 7, 4; 9, 7, 10;

11, 4; 14, 3; 15, 6; 17, 4;

19, 5, 6; 22, 9; 23, 2, 7, 19;

29, 9; 30, 2; 31, 2 (B), 7;

41, 1.

7, 23.

18, 15.

18, 15.

5, 5; 6, 16; 9, 6; 12, 6;
 18, 2; 37, 2; 38, 15.

بعم 28, 17 (B and H on margin).
 بعم 6, 8, 15; 7, 17; 28, 6 (H);
 30, 5; 31, 6; 35, 3; 42, 17.
 بعم 33, 8; 40, 2; 42, 16.
 بعم 3, 5; 7, 3, 12, 23; 9, 2 (bis);
 20, 5 (bis), 6; 21, 4; 26, 9 (bis);
 30, 3; 31, 7; 32, 2; 35, 7;
 38, 15; 40, 4.
 بعم 6, 15; 10, 3; 39, 3; 41,
 11, 16.
 بعم 11, 18; 38, 16.
 بعم 11, 21.
 بعم 38, 19, 20, 21.
 بعم 30, 3.
 بعم 3, 8.
 بعم 11, 15.
 بعم 28, 6.

 بعم 31, 12.
 بعم 7, 12; 18, 12; 28, 9; 38, 8;
 cf. 42, 5.
 بعم 7, 4; 17, 6; 34, 5; 42, 10.
 بعم 7, 17; 9, 6; 13, 2; 42, 5.
 بعم 5, 2, 10; 29, 1; 40, 1.
 بعم 12, 4.
 بعم 31, 10, 11; 42, 13.
 بعم (v.) 8, 1.
 بعم 6, 6; cf. 8, 22; 12, 3.
 بعم 11, 23; 30, 4.
 بعم (s. and pl.) 7, 10, 17; 19, 7;
 10; 23, 7, 15, 19; 25, 5; 38,
 12; 42, 11.
 بعم 14, 9; 16, 7; 23, 14.
 بعم 11, 17; 39, 13.
 بعم 38, 2.

بعم 22, 5.
 بعم 14, 3.
 بعم 23, 20.
 بعم (sic) 8, 22.
 بعم 30, 6.
 بعم 12, 5.
 بعم 4, 1; 7, 13, 14; 8, 20; 9, 8,
 10, 11; 18, 7; 20, 8; 25, 7;
 38, 3, 17; 42, 19, 20 (B).
 بعم 10, 6; 28, 5; 38, 16; 39,
 13.
 بعم 16, 15 (bis).
 بعم 33, 3 (bis).
 بعم (?) 12, 7.
 بعم 8, 15.
 بعم 41, 11; 42, 7.
 بعم 24, 11; 25, 5; 42, 10.
 بعم 28, 11.
 بعم 15, 10; 38, 1, 18 (B).
 بعم 22, 1; 29, 4; 38, 18 (H).
 بعم 35, 7.
 بعم 38, 8.
 بعم 20, 8.
 بعم 25, 7.
 بعم 28, 12.
 بعم 7, 20.
 بعم 6, 14; 8, 1; 11, 6; 12, 2;
 16, 2; 20, 4; 21, 8; 30, 5;
 37, 2; 38, 20; 40, 2; 42, 14.
 بعم 28, 4.
 بعم 26, 12.
 بعم 19, 3, 8.
 بعم 18, 11.
 بعم 39, 2.
 بعم 31, 13; 33, 1.

חַדָּוִם 18, 12.

חַדָּמָא (s. and pl.) 5, 9; 18, 12;
38, 2 (B).

חַדָּמָא 11, 8; 17, 3.

חַדָּמָא 28, 17.

חַדָּמָא 18, 9.

חַדָּא 19, 4.

חַדָּ 4, 2, 15; 7, 9, 12; 11, 1, 20;
12, 10; 14, 7; 15, 7; 16, 13,
16; 20, 7; 23, 15; 28, 12;
29, 2, 9; 36, 5; 38, 13; 42,
14, 16.

חַדָּב 29, 8.

חַדָּבָא 16, 14.

חַדָּב 29, 11.

חַדָּב 11, 22; 12, 4.

חַדָּב 8, 18, 19; 12, 7; 16, 1
(thrice), 6.

חַדָּב 7, 8; 11, 20; 16, 12, 13;
18, 5.

חַדָּבָא 22, 10 (B).

חַדָּבָא 5, 7.

חַדָּב 23, 15; 39, 5, 7, 8, 9, 13.

חַדָּב 25, 9; 38, 2.

חַדָּבָא 39, 2.

חַבָּא 7, 9.

חַבָּא 6, 4; 7, 14; 8, 1; 11, 4;
14, 4; 16, 2; 23, 16; 26, 5, 6, 7; 30, 6; 33, 3.

חַבָּו 22, 6.

חַבָּוִבָא 25, 6; 26, 13.

חַבָּוִבָא 7, 3; 8, 6; 21, 2; 25, 2.

חַבָּוִבָא 21, 5.

חַבָּוִבָא 22, 10 (H).

חַבָּא 23, 15 (H).

חַבָּא 28, 2.

חַבָּבָא 7, 1.

חַבָּו 18, 11; 29, 10.

חַבָּבָא 23, 20 (B); 39, 12.

חַבָּבָא 23, 20 (H).

חַבָּא 16, 9.

חַבָּא 5, 5; 6, 17; 11, 14; 13, 1;
14, 1 (bis); 15, 3; 25, 5 (bis).

חַבָּבָא 3, 11.

חַבָּבָא 8, 2.

חַבָּ (v.) 33, 8.

חַבָּ 7, 1.

חַבָּ (prep.) (63 times).

חַבָּ 34, 4, 5; 35, 1.

חַבָּ 11, 12.

חַבָּא 10, 4; 19, 5; 20, 3; 22, 11;
33, 12; 38, 11; 41, 15.

חַבָּא 7, 11; 12, 4, 8; 16, 19.

חַבָּא 6, 18; 9, 4, 8; 11, 22, 24;
38, 17 (H); 41, 16.

חַבָּא 38, 17 (B).

חַבָּא 10, 6; 23, 22; 25,
12; 32, 3.

חַבָּ 5, 15 (bis); 7, 20; 8, 6, 21;
10, 6; 23, 12; 25, 4; 38, 4, 5,

15; 41, 11; 42, 6, 11, 12, 14
(H), 16, 18.

חַבָּא 31, 12; cf. 10, 6.

חַבָּא 10, 5; 23, 15 (B); 29, 8.

חַבָּא 5, 5.

חַבָּא 37, 3.

חַבָּא 38, 18 (H).

חַבָּא 38, 18 (B).

חַבָּא 34, 2; 42, 12.

חַבָּא 29, 4.

חַבָּא 32, 1.

أَخْبَدَ 10, 2.

أَخْبَدُوا 22, 12.

أَخْبَدُوا 24, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 5, 5; 35, 1; 36, 7.

أَخْبَدَ 11, 1.

أَخْبَدَ 28, 6 (B).

أَخْبَدُوا 7, 14; 10, 6; 39, 10, 11.

أَخْبَدَ 23, 15.

أَخْبَدَ 22, 5 (B); 38, 17.

أَخْبَدَ 22, 5 (H).

أَخْبَدَ 26, 5.

أَخْبَدَ 5, 5.

أَخْبَدَ 18, 6; 23, 8, 20; 25, 1; 38, 6.

أَخْبَدَ 39, 2.

أَخْبَدَ 10, 4; 18, 2; 32, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 39, 1.

أَخْبَدَ 16, 7; 25, 6; 29, 8.

أَخْبَدَ 28, 5 (H).

أَخْبَدَ 5, 9; 28, 5 (B).

أَخْبَدَ 9, 5; 11, 9.

أَخْبَدَ (s. and pl.) 4, 10; 26, 13.

أَخْبَدَ 11, 16; 41, 10.

أَخْبَدَ 10, 2.

أَخْبَدَ 4, 4; 7, 1; 8, 2; 11, 1, 12,

23; 12, 2; 14, 6, 7; 16, 2;

17, 13; 37, 3; 38, 17.

أَخْبَدَ 18, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 22, 9; 39, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 7, 24 (bis); 8, 4; 10, 1; 12,

2, 3, 11; 16, 5; 18, 8; 21, 8;

26, 10; 29, 4; 31, 3; 36, 7.

أَخْبَدَ 28, 1 (bis); 42, 6.

أَخْبَدَ 30, 4.

أَخْبَدَ 38, 2.

أَخْبَدَ 8, 19; 39, 8.

أَخْبَدَ 28, 4^b; 34, 4.

أَخْبَدَ 31, 9.

أَخْبَدَ 7, 15; 20, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 16, 2, 6; 38, 19.

أَخْبَدَ 25, 1.

أَخْبَدَ 10, 3.

أَخْبَدَ 11, 9; 33, 6.

أَخْبَدَ 15, 5.

أَخْبَدَ 14, 2.

أَخْبَدَ 23, 21.

أَخْبَدَ 23, 13.

أَخْبَدَ 17, 4.

أَخْبَدَ 38, 14 (H).

أَخْبَدَ 23, 17.

أَخْبَدَ 38, 14 (B).

أَخْبَدَ 28, 13.

أَخْبَدَ 28, 1 (bis).

أَخْبَدَ 11, 16, 18, 23, 24; 20, 7.

أَخْبَدَ 17, 9 (bis).

أَخْبَدَ 24, 1, 4 (B).

أَخْبَدَ 24, 4 (H).

أَخْبَدَ 20, 6.

أَخْبَدَ 11, 14; 15, 9; 17, 4; 22,

11; 25, 4; 31, 5; 42, 13.

أَخْبَدَ 8, 15.

أَخْبَدَ 8, 22; 25, 4; 31, 12; 38, 2.

أَخْبَدَ 8, 22; 9, 5, 12; 14, 5; 17,

4, 14; 26, 9; 33, 10, 11; 34, 6;

35, 7; 38, 16; 42, 18.

أَخْبَدَ 41, 11; 42, 18.

أَخْبَدَ 5, 11; 7, 16; 11, 3; 15, 6;

17, 2; 18, 7; 19, 11; 21, 2;

25, 2; 28, 10; 31, 13; 34, 4;

35, 2; 38, 3; 40, 5.

أَخْبَدَ 3, 4; 22, 8.

أَخْبَدَ 27, 1; 35, 7; 37, 1; 42, 1.

فصحا 34, 1; 42, 2.

فصحا 7, 3; 27, 3; 42, 2.

فصحا 12, 11.

فصحا 17, 9; 31, 1.

فصحا 38, 18 (H).

فصحا 7, 13; 16, 10; 24, 13; 38, 18 (B).

فصحا 6, 8; 23, 15.

فصحا 7, 7; 8, 8; 9, 3; 12, 3, 5; 10, 12; 18, 4; 24, 9; 32, 2; 37, 3; 42, 14.

فصحا 12, 1.

فصحا 4, 10; 7, 24; 8, 1 (bis); 9, 1; 10, 1; 13, 1; 14, 8; 16, 5; 17, 8; 19, 4; 31, 3; 42, 17.

فصحا 8, 4; 24, 5; 30, 1; 36, 7.

فصحا 17, 10.

فصحا 13, 3.

فصحا 8, 20; 9, 12; 10, 3.

فصحا 3, 9; 8, 17.

فصحا 6, 14; 9, 4; 14, 4; 18, 3, 8; 19, 10; 23, 5.

فصحا 9, 3.

فصحا 23, 21.

فصحا 16, 6; 23, 8.

فصحا 38, 9.

فصحا (s. and pl.) 6, 11 (bis); 30, 2.

فصحا 7, 6.

فصحا 7, 10; 8, 8; 9, 5; 11, 14; 17, 14; 18, 7; 20, 9; 23, 11; 31, 6; 41, 3.

فصحا 40, 6.

فصحا 16, 17.

فصحا 6, 5; 8, 19; 25, 3, 11.

فصحا 6, 5.

فصحا 23, 14.

فصحا 22, 8.

فصحا 16, 1.

فصحا 28, 19.

فصحا 4, 14; 7, 18 (bis); 8, 21; 9, 12; 14, 5; 17, 9; 20, 9; 21, 6; 28, 18; 36, 2.

فصحا 4, 2; 8, 7, 15; 15, 9; 16, 18; 28, 5; 31, 1; 33, 2; 36, 3; 41, 15.

فصحا 41, 14.

فصحا 24, 7.

فصحا 27, 1.

فصحا 4, 2; 19, 2, 4; 23, 22 (H).

فصحا 4, 1; 6, 7; 7, 16 (pl.); 8, 2 (pl.); 16; 9, 3; 11, 2; 14, 8; 15, 3; 22, 12 (pl.); 23, 1 (pl.); 22 (B); 26, 2; 31, 5; 32, 3.

فصحا 13, 3.

فصحا 8, 22; 14, 6; 24, 9; 26, 11.

فصحا 7, 24; 24, 2; 31, 4; 33, 3; 37, 1, 2; 42, 19.

فصحا 7, 17.

فصحا 6, 5; 8, 3, 19; 12, 6 (bis); 16, 13; 18, 3; 25, 3; 26, 12; 31, 8, 11; 33, 3, 5; 42, 6.

فصحا 5, 13; 39, 10, 11.

فصحا 6, 14, 16; 15, 2; 16, 12; 22, 5; 35, 1; 36, 2.

فصحا 8, 3.

فصحا 9, 11.

فصحا 23, 6.

فصحا 14, 8.

مَعْلَا 27, 3; 39, 10; 42, 2.

مَعْلَا 39, 4.

مَعْلَا 12, 5 (bis).

مَعْلَا 11, 11; 15, 3; 19, 10; 20, 6;
23, 3; 33, 12; 41, 9.

مَعْلَا 38, 5; 39, 8.

مَعْلَا 33, 5 (B); 42, 15.

مَعْلَا 16, 1.

مَعْلَا 23, 7, 10; 26, 8; 33, 5 (H);
38, 12.

مَعْلَا 11, 6.

مَعْلَا 7, 22; 20, 2, 5; 31, 4.

مَعْلَا 19, 1; 33, 7; 42, 1, 17.

مَعْلَا 8, 7; 9, 6; 29, 9.

مَعْلَا 9, 9.

مَعْلَا 36, 8.

مَعْلَا 20, 2, 4.

مَعْلَا (s. and pl.) 6, 15; 7, 19;
20, 6; 21, 7; 36, 6.

مَعْلَا 22, 9.

مَعْلَا 4, 3; 28, 17.

مَعْلَا 34, 1.

مَعْلَا 23, 6.

مَعْلَا 6, 1; 7, 17; 14, 8; 26, 3.

مَعْلَا 6, 8; 18, 12; 23, 21; 36, 4;
41, 4.

مَعْلَا 36, 4.

مَعْلَا 38, 18.

مَعْلَا 4, 8.

مَعْلَا 7, 3, 23; 15, 7; 18, 16; 19,
11; 29, 3; 36, 5.

مَعْلَا 17, 7 (?).

مَعْلَا 35, 6.

مَعْلَا 39, 9.

مَعْلَا 23, 16 (bis); 36, 2; 42, 13.

مَعْلَا 12, 2; 26, 9; 40, 1.

مَعْلَا 4, 10.

مَعْلَا 12, 2.

مَعْلَا 23, 20; 42, 7.

مَعْلَا 28, 8.

مَعْلَا 5, 4; 42, 5.

مَعْلَا 35, 3.

مَعْلَا 14, 9.

مَعْلَا 11, 3; 12, 11; 16, 13; 23, 7, 16; 33, 1; 42, 15.

مَعْلَا 7, 1 (bis); 16, 13.

مَعْلَا 11, 7.

مَعْلَا 11, 8; 38, 12.

مَعْلَا 11, 12; 40, 4.

مَعْلَا 3, 10; 6, 2, 7; 11, 2; 13, 2;
14, 8; 16, 5; 19, 2, 4; 23, 22;
25, 8; 28, 1, 7; 29, 10; 36,
1, 8; 40, 4.

مَعْلَا 6, 7.

مَعْلَا 33, 3.

مَعْلَا 36, 1 (B), 2.

مَعْلَا 26, 7.

مَعْلَا 17, 7; 21, 1; 22, 1; 23, 5;
36, 1 (H).

مَعْلَا 10, 5.

مَعْلَا 3, 6; 5, 2; 6, 12; 7, 16,
22; 8, 8; 9, 5; 10, 4; 11, 2,
9; 12, 4, 11; 17, 7; 18, 1, 14,
15; 23, 4 (H), 18; 26, 10;
28, 19; 29, 11; 31, 4; 32, 3;
35, 7; 36, 5; 37, 1; 39, 8;
41, 13.

مَعْلَا 17, 7; 21, 1, 2; 25, 8, 9;
29, 3; 31, 4; 36, 1; 37, 1.

לְאִוִּם 7, 20; 8, 5 (bis); 18, 1;
21, 6; 24, 11; 39, 11; 41, 12.

וְעִנִּים 26, 4; 29, 3.

וְסִם 3, 3 (bis); 5, 7 (bis); 5, 1; 8,
13 (bis); 13, 3; 40, 1.

לְאִוִּם 3, 4.

וְסִמָּה 14, 3, 9; 16, 7; 19, 7; 20,
5 (bis); 29, 3.

וְסִמָּה 3, 4; 8, 22.

וְסִמָּה 12, 9.

וְסִמָּה 3, 5, 7; 7, 1.

וְסִמָּה 3, 6.

וְסִם 18, 3 (H).

וְאִוִּם 18, 3 (B).

וְסִמָּה 24, 4.

וְסִמָּה 11, 15.

וְסִמָּה 5, 12; 9, 8; 17, 15, 16; 20, 8;
23, 16, 18 (bis); 24, 1 (B bis);
26, 7; 28, 4; 33, 3; 35, 1;
39, 1; 42, 13, 20.

וְסִמָּה 5, 7; 22, 5; 31, 13.

וְסִמָּה 11, 4.

וְסִמָּה 4, 14; 6, 4; 7, 14;
23, 2, 3; 24, 8; 41, 9.

וְסִמָּה 38, 1.

וְסִמָּה (v.) 22, 2.

וְסִמָּה 29, 10; 42, 7.

וְסִמָּה 41, 15.

וְסִמָּה 42, 10.

וְסִמָּה 4, 10.

וְסִמָּה 35, 1.

וְסִמָּה 4, 10.

וְסִמָּה 4, 2.

וְסִמָּה 28, 14; 38, 13.

וְסִמָּה 5, 7, 8; 9, 4, 5; 12, 4; 18,
14; 28, 14, 19; 38, 21.

וְסִמָּה 42, 13.

וְסִמָּה 17, 9.

וְסִמָּה 38, 10.

וְסִמָּה 14, 9.

וְסִמָּה 10, 3, 4.

וְסִמָּה 10, 3.

וְסִמָּה 6, 7; 7, 19, 24; 14, 8; 17,
7 (H); 18, 1; 21, 7; 26, 4;
36, 2, 4; 41, 1.

וְסִמָּה 38, 19.

וְסִמָּה 17, 7 (B).

וְסִמָּה 11, 24.

וְסִמָּה 6, 7; 10, 4; 11, 17; 12, 4;
14, 5; 16, 5, 20; 17, 16; 18,
16; 20, 9 (bis), 10; 21, 9; 26,
1, 5; 29, 2, 11; 31, 3; 36, 2;
40, 2 (bis); 41, 16.

וְסִמָּה 13, 2; 16, 1, 2; 41, 4.

וְסִמָּה 22, 5.

וְסִמָּה 5, 2; 11, 8, 10; 15, 6; 17,
11; 24, 4; 33, 1, 3, 7; 38, 4, 14.

וְסִמָּה 11, 10 (bis); 18, 4 (B); 21, 2.

וְסִמָּה 19, 3; 23, 6.

וְסִמָּה 23, 6.

וְסִמָּה 13, 3.

וְסִמָּה 22, 7.

וְסִמָּה 41, 5.

וְסִמָּה 12, 9, 10.

וְסִמָּה 11, 12.

וְסִמָּה 8, 5; 25, 5.

וְסִמָּה 31, 2.

וְסִמָּה 11, 5.

וְסִמָּה 4, 9; 21, 5

וְסִמָּה 11, 10.

عصف 6, 8.
 عصف 15, 9; 29, 4; 42, 11.
 عصف 3, 4, 7; 6, 9; 26, 11; 28, 7,
 17; 42, 13.
 عصف 38, 21 (sic).
 عصف 12, 12.
 علا 26, 3; 31, 10; 35, 4.
 علا 8, 4.
 علا 11, 10; 15, 8; 21, 3.
 علا 23, 9.
 علا 4, 2; 22, 4.
 علم 39, 13.
 علم 8, 7; 9, 6; 10, 2; 11, 3;
 35, 1; 36, 8.
 علم 24, 8.
 علم 6, 7; 8, 21, 23; 14, 5; 15, 8;
 16, 20; 18, 1, 16; 20, 10;
 22, 6; 23, 22; 25, 11; 30, 5;
 31, 3; 33, 13; 39, 7, 8, 13;
 41, 5, 16; 42, 20.
 علم 36, 3.
 علم 16, 11.
 علم 8, 8; 9, 6; 15, 4; 16, 9;
 23, 10; 33, 10; 37, 2; 42, 19.
 علم 24, 2; 33, 4; 38, 5.
 علم 11, 13; 15, 1, 2; 16, 15, 16.
 علم 6, 13.
 علم 4, 5.
 علم 11, 19.
 علم 14, 5.
 علم (s. and pl.) 7, 2; 11, 20; 30,
 3; 34, 3.
 علم 38, 17.
 علم 29, 10.
 علم 38, 2.
 علم 11, 5; 36, 8; 38, 16; 40, 5.

علم 8, 8, 12; 9, 8; 11, 3, 5; 12,
 1, 2, 12, 13; 14, 7; 15, 4; 17,
 5, 7; 18, 6, 15; 20, 9; 23, 18;
 24, 10, 12; 25, 10; 31, 2;
 32, 2; 33, 8; 38, 1 (bis), 4, 7,
 10, 15; 39, 10; 41, 1, 9, 15,
 16.
 علم 9, 11; 12, 3; 18, 3; 31, 11.
 علم 15, 2; 17, 11; 18, 4 (H); 22,
 4; 23, 9, 10.
 علم 6, 14.
 علم 6, 11; 17, 3; 22, 11; 26,
 11.
 علم 25, 7.
 علم 11, 22.
 علم 22, 12; 35, 4.
 علم 38, 16.
 علم 6, 11; 8, 16; 11, 7; 19, 1;
 30, 7; 38, 12.
 علم 6, 12, 13; 30, 2.
 علم 38, 12.
 علم 31, 10.
 علم 12, 8.
 علم 35, 4.
 علم 8, 16; 14, 2; 19, 3, 4.
 علم 27, 2 (B).
 علم 24, 5, 7; 31, 1.
 علم 4, 11.
 علم 4, 11.
 علم 4, 13.
 علم 38, 13; 42, 11.
 علم 9, 7; 25, 3; 33, 1.
 علم 34, 4, 5.
 علم 22, 1.
 علم 33, 13.

לללל' 40, 5.

ללל (s. and pl.) 15, 10; 23, 2.

לללל' 42, 2.

ללל 3, 2.

ללל 17, 6.

לללל 41, 4.

ללל' 17, 8; 22, 6.

ללל 35, 3.

ללל 22, 5.

ללללל 12, 4.

ללל 12, 5 (bis).

ללל 6, 8.

ללל' 4, 14; 8, 16; 11, 5; 16, 11,
12; 38, 17; 39, 10.

לללל 33, 2; 36, 2.

ללל' 26, 11 (bis).

ללל' 26, 11.

ללללל 12, 4.

ללל' 19, 4.

לללל 16, 2.

לללל 12, 3; 42, 17.

לללל 17, 8.

ללל' 6, 16; 10, 1.

ללל' 35, 7.

ללל' (s. and pl.) 27, 3; 34, 1; 38, 7;
42, 2.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL INDEX

THE order of authors is alphabetical. No notice has been taken of the casual references to the Odes in books and articles which do not treat ex professo of the subject.

Abbott (E. A.). Light on the Gospel from an ancient poet. (Diatessarica, IX), Cambridge, 1912.

The Original language of the Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1913, 44-45.

The interpretation of early Christian poetry. (Diatessarica, X, sect. 11). Cambridge, 1914, 372-456.

Alès (A. d'). Les Odes de Salomon. Études, 1911 (CXXIX.), 753-770.

Aytoun (R. A.). The Mysteries of Baptism by Moses bar Kepha compared with the Odes of Solomon. Expositor, 1911, 338-358.

Bacon (B. W.). The Odes of the Lord's rest. Expositor, 1911, 193-209.
Songs of the Lord's beloved. Expositor, 1911, 319-337.

The Odes of Solomon: Christian elements. Expositor, 1911, 243-256.

Further light on the Odes of Solomon. Expositor, 1912, 459-462.

Barnes (W. E.). The text of the Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1910, 573-575; ibid., p. 615-618; ibid., 1912, 465.

An ancient Christian hymn-book. Expositor, 1910, 52-63.

Barth (J.). Zur Textkritik der syrischen Oden Salomos. Revue Sémit., 1911, 261-265.

Batiffol (P.). See under Labourt.

Beer, Realencyklopädie f. protest. Theologie (Ergänzungen u. Nachträge, XXIV), 1913, pp. 375-378.

Bernard (J. H.). The Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1910-11, 1-31.

The Odes of Solomon. (Texts and Studies, VIII, 3), Cambridge, 1912.

The Odes of Solomon (two Cambridge lectures), London, 1913.

In Spectator, October 22, 1910.

- Böhmer (H.). Die Oden Salomos. Kirchl. Rundschau für die evangelischen Gemeinden Rheinlands und Westfalens, 1910, 215-219, 238-243, 266-270, 297-302.
- Boysson (A. de). Les Odes de Salomon. Revue prat. d'Apologétique, 1911, 497-503.
- Brockelmann (C.). In Literarisches Zentralblatt, 1912, 313-315.
- Bruston (Ch.). Les plus anciens cantiques chrétiens: les Odes de Salomon. Revue de Théologie et de Philos., 1911, 465-497.
- La seconde édition du texte des Odes de Salomon. Revue de Théologie et des Quest. relig., 1912, 74-88, 138-151.
- Les plus anciens cantiques chrétiens. Traduits sur la seconde édition du texte syriaque avec une introduction et des notes, Genève-Paris, 1912.
- Rectifications à la traduction des plus anciens cantiques chrétiens. Revue de Théol. et des Quest. relig., 1912, 440-442, 536-537; and 1913, 85-91.
- Quelques observations sur les Odes de Salomon. Zeitsch. für neutest. Wiss., 1912, 111-116.
- Büchler (A.). A study of Ode XI, in Abst. Jour. Society of Hist. Theol. for 1911-1912, 20-32.
- Buhl (F.). Salomos Ode, in Teolog. Tidskrift (Copenhagen), 1911, iii, 2, 1.
- Bultmann (R.). Ein jüdisch-christliches Psalmbuch aus dem ersten Jahrhundert, M. für Pastoraltheologie, Berlin, 1910-11, 23 ff.
- Buonaiuti (E.). Il più antico Innario cristiano (in Rivista storico-critica delle Scienze teologiche), 1910, pp. 188-200.
- Burkitt (F. C.). A new MS. of the Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1912, 372-385; also in Athenaeum, 1912, 12.
- Capelle (P.). Le odi ed i salmi di Salomone (in Scuola Cattolica), 1910, 443-447.
- Chajes (H. P.). שירי שלמה. Magyar Zsidó Szemle (Budapest), 1911, 113-117; and Hagoren (Berditschew), 1911 (VIII), 24-34.
- Charles (R. H.). A Church Hymnal of the first century, in 'Times Literary Supplement, April 7, 1910; also in Review of theology and philosophy, 1911, 220-223.
- Cheyne (T. K.). In Hibbert Journal, 1910, 206-212.
- Clemen (C.). Die neuentdeckten Oden Salomos. Theologische Rundschau, 1911, 1-19.

- Colombo (S.). In Didascaleion, 1912, 250-262.
- Connolly (R. H.). The Odes of Solomon: Jewish or Christian? Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1912, 298-309.
- Greek the original language of the Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1913, 530-538; ibid., 44-47; ibid., 311-316; ibid., 1914, 464-468.
- Conybeare (F. C.). The Odes of Solomon Montanist. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1911, 70-75.
- Note on the Odes of Solomon. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1913, 95.
- Diettrich (G.). Eine jüdisch-christliche Liedersammlung. Reformation, 1910, 306 ff., 370 ff., 513 ff., 533 ff.
- Die Oden Salomos, unter Berücksichtigung der überlieferten Stichengliederung aus dem Syrischen ins Deutsche übersetzt und mit einem Kommentar versehen. (Neue Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 9.) Berlin, 1911.
- Düsing (H.). In Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1911, 86-87.
- In Theolog. Literaturzeit., 1911, 731.
- Flemming (J.). See under Harnack.
- Frankenberg (W.). Das Verständnis der Oden Salomos. Giessen, 1911.
- Friedländer (M.). Die neuentdeckten Oden Salomos. Neue Nationalzeitung, Wien, 1911, Nr. X, 1 f.; XI, 2-4; XII, 2-4; XIII, 6 f.
- Fries (S. A.). Die Oden Salomos, montanistische Lieder aus dem zweiten Jahrhundert. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1911, 108-125.
- Gibson (M. D.). In Athenæum, 1914, 530, 559.
- Goguel (M.). Les Odes de Salomon. R. Chrétienne, 1911, 152-161, 330-340.
- Gregg (J. A. F.). The Odes of Solomon. The Irish Church Quarterly, January, 1913.
- Gressmann (H.). Die Oden Salomos. Christliche Welt, 1911, 633-635, 650-652, 674-677, 703-705.
- Die Oden Salomos. Internat. Wochenschrift, 1911, 897-908, 949-958.
- In Deutsch. Literaturzeit., 1911, 1349-1356, 2896-2902.
- In ZDMG., 1911, 850-852. See also under Gunkel.
- Grimme (H.). Die neunzehnte Ode Salomos, eine Rekonstruktion. Theologie und Glaube, 1911, 11-18.
- Die Oden Salomos, syrisch, hebräisch, deutsch. Ein kritischer Versuch. Heidelberg, 1911.

- Zur Handschrift N der Oden Salomos. Orient. Literaturzeit., 1912, 492-496.
- In Theologische Revue, 1910, 545-547; 1911, 601-605.
- Grosheide (F. W.). De Oden van Salomo, in Geref. Theol. Tijdschrift, 1916, 69-78 and 119-132.
- Grützmacher (G.). In Theologie der Gegenwart (Leipzig), 1911, 133-136.
- Guidi (J.). In Rivista degli Studi Orientali, 1911, 456-459.
- Gunkel (H.). Die Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für neu. Wiss., 1910, 291-328 (with H. Gressmann).
- Die Oden Salomos. Deutsche Rundschau, 1913, 25-47.
- In Theolog. Literaturzeit., 1913, 10-13.
- Hamilton (G. F.). Confirmation and the Eucharist in the Odes of Solomon, in Irish Church Quarterly, Oct., 1915; Jan., 1916.
- The Odes of Solomon and the Pseudepigrapha, in Internat. Journ. of Apocrypha, 1916, 12-14.
- Hansen (H.). Die Oden Salomos. Der alte Glaube, Hamburg, 1910, 680 f.
- Die Oden Salomos, in deutschen Nachdichtungen, Gütersloh, 1911.
- See also under Wohlenberg.
- Harnack (A.). Ein jüdisch-christliches Psalmbuch aus dem ersten Jahrhundert . . . aus dem Syrischen übersetzt von J. Flemming. Bearbeitet und herausgegeben von A. Harnack. In Texte u. Untersuch., XXXV, 4, 1910.
- In Theol. Lit.-Zeit., 1912, 529.
- Harris (J. R.). The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, now first published from the Syriac Version, Cambridge, 1909.
- An early Christian hymn-book. Contemp. Review, 1909, 414-428.
- An early Christian psalter, London, 1909.
- An early Judæo-Christian Hymn-book, in The Quest, 1910, 288-305.
- Doctrine of immortality in the Odes. Cf. Theol. Lit.-Blatt, for Oct. 24, 1913.
- The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, published from the Syriac Version; second edit. revised and enlarged, with a facsimile, Cambridge, 1911.
- The thirty-eighth Ode of Solomon. Expositor, 1911, 8 ser., 29-37.
- Two flood-hymns of the early Church. Expositor, 1911, 405-417.
- Ephrem's use of the Odes of Solomon. Expositor, 1912, 113-119.

- Hastings (J.). In Expository Times, Feb., 1910 (editorial notice).
- Hausleiter (J.). Der judenchristliche Character der Oden Salomos. Theolog. Literaturblatt, 1910, 265-276.
- Headlam (A. C.). The Odes of Solomon. Church Quart. Review, 1911, 272-297.
- Hönnicke (G.). Die neuentdeckten Oden Salomos in der bisherigen kritischen Beurteilung. Studierstube, Langensalza, 1911, 297-309.
- Hora (E.). Die Oden Salomos. Theologie und Glaube, 1913, 128-140.
- Jordan, Geschichte der altchr. Literatur. (Leipzig), 1911, p. 457.
- Kennedy (H. A.). Harnack on the recently discovered Odes of Solomon. Expository Times, 1910, 444-446.
- Kittel (G.). Eine zweite Handschrift der Oden Salomos. Zeitsch. für neut. Wiss., 1913, 79-93.
- Die Oden Salomos: überarbeitet oder einheitlich? Mit 2 Beilagen:
I. Bibliographie der Oden Salomos, II. Syrische Konkordanz. Leipzig, 1914; also in Theolog. Literaturblatt, 1913, 510-515.
- Kleinert (P.). Zur religionsgeschichtlichen Stellung der Oden Salomos. Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 1911, 569-611.
- Knietschke. Die neuentdeckten Oden Salomos, in Evang. Kirchenzeitung (Berlin), 1911, 324-327.
- Krebs (E.). Die Oden Salomos. Ein umstrittener Fund aus urchristlicher Zeit. (Kempten), 1910, 374 ff.
- Spätjüdische Mystik? (Der Logos als Heiland im ersten Jahrhundert). Freiburg im B., 1910, 59-68.
- Labourt (J.) and Batiffol (P.). Les Odes de Salomon. Une œuvre chrétienne des environs de l'an 100-120. Traduction française (p. 1-38) et introduction historique (p. 39-121). Paris, 1911. Reprint from Revue Biblique, 1910, 483-500; 1911, 5-59, 161-197.
- Lagrange (M. J.). In Revue Biblique, 1910, 593-596; and 1912, 464-469.
- Leendertz (J. M.). De Oden van Salomo. Amsterdam, 1910.
- In Theol. Lit.-Blatt for Oct. 24, 1913.
- Leipoldt (J.). Die Lieder Salomos. Allgem. evang. luth. Kirchenzeit., 1910, 626-630.
- Lejay (P.). In Bulletin d'ancienne littérature et d'archéologie chrétiennes, 1911, 56-60.
- Lindblom (J.). Om lifvets idé hos Paulus och Iohannes samt i de s. k. Salomos Oden. Upsala, 1911.

- Loisy (A.). La mention du Temple dans les Odes de Salomon. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1911, 126-130.
 Idem in Revue critique, 1911, 101-105; 1912, 343-345.
 In Revue d'histoire et de littérature, 1911, 493-501; 1912, 524-576.
- Ludwig. Ein altchristliches Gesang- und Gebetbuch aus dem ersten Jahrhundert. Theologisches Prakt. (Passau), 1911, 288-294.
- Mariés (L.). La découverte des Odes de Salomon. Études, 1909, 807-812.
- Marmorstein (A.). Kranz und Krone in den Oden Salomos. Orient. Literaturzeit., 1912, 306 ff.
- Marshall (J. T.). The Odes and Philo. Expositor, 1911, 385-398, 519-536.
- Mead (G. R. S.). In The Quest, 1910, 561-570; ibid., 11, 166-169.
- Menzies (W. A.). The Odes of Solomon. The Interpreter, 1910-1911, 7-22.
- Mingana (A.). Quelques mots sur les Odes de Salomon. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1914, 234-253; and ibid., 1915, 167-190.
 The Odes of Solomon. Dictionary of the Apostolic Church, ii, 1918 (s. v.).
- Montgomery (J. A.). The recently discovered Odes of Solomon. Biblical World, 1910, 93-100.
- Nau (F.). In Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 1910, 448; 1911, 220; and in Journ. Asiatique, 1913, 228.
- Nestle (E.). In Theologisches Literaturblatt, 1910, 1-4; 1911, 394 and 534 f.; 1912, 202 f.; also in Theolog. Literaturzeitung, 1910, 6 sq. 1912, 28 f., 492, and 586-588.
- Newbold (W. R.). Bardaisan and the Odes of Solomon. Journal of Bibl. Literature, 1911, 161-204.
 The Descent of Christ in the Odes of Solomon. Journ. of Bibl. Liter., 1912, 168-209.
- Perles (F.). In Orientalist. Literaturzeit., 1912, 26 ff.
- Plooij (D.). In Theol. Tijdschrift, 1911-1912, De Boom der Bitterheid, 294-303; ibid., pp. 449-462: De 'Oranten'.
 In Museum (Leiden), 1912, 148-150.
 In Expository Times, 1912, 199-203.

- In Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1913, pp. 222-231: 'Der descensus ad inferos in Aphrahat und den Oden Salomos.'
- Preuschen (E.). Ein Übersetzungsfehler in den Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1915, 233-235; ibid., 1910, 328.
- In Theolog. Jahresbericht (Leipzig), 1911, XXIX, 4, p. 317; ibid., 1912, XXX, 4, p. 366.
- Reinach (S.). Les Odes de Salomon. Revue de l'hist. des religions, 1910, 1-16, 279-294.
- A propos des Odes de Salomon. Revue moderniste internationale, 1910, 457-458.
- Sacchi (E.). Le Odi di Salomone. Nuova Antologia, 1911, 84-91.
- Schenke (W.). De nylig fundne saakalde Solomos oder. In Norsk Teologisk Tidsskrift (Christiania), 1911, No. 2.
- Schoen (H.). Un Psautier judéo-chrétien du premier siècle. Mercur de France, 1911, 774-786.
- Schulthess (F.). Textkritische Bemerkungen zu den syrischen Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1910, 249-258.
- Schmitt (Ch.). Die 42 Oden Salomos (Trier), 1910-11, 417-422.
- Smith (P.). Disciples of John and the Odes of Solomon. Monist, 1915, 161-199.
- Spitta (F.). Zum Verständnis der Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1910, 193-203, 259-290.
- Die Oden Salomos. M. für Gottesdienst und kirchl. Kunst (Göttingen), 1910, 245-249, 273-278.
- Die Oden Salomos und das Neue Testament. M. für Pastoraltheologie, 1910-1911, 91-101.
- Sprengling (M.). Bardesanes and the Odes of Solomon. Amer. Journal of Theology, 1911, 459-461. Ibid., 1910, 632-637.
- Staerk (W.). Kritische Bemerkungen zu den Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für wiss. Theologie, 1910, 289-306. See also under Ungnad.
- Stölten (W.). Gnostische Parallelen zu den Oden Salomos. Zeitschr. für neut. Wiss., 1912, 29-58.
- Strachan (R. H.). The newly discovered Odes of Solomon and their bearing on the problem of the Fourth Gospel. Expository Times, 1910-11, 7-14.

- Tondelli (L.). Le Odi di Salomone. Rome, 1914.
- Torm (E.). Nye Fund og deres Betydning for den nytestamentlige forskning. In Teologisk Tidskrift (Copenhagen), 1911, (III 2 1).
- Ungnad (A.) and Staerk (W.). Die Oden Salomos aus dem Syrischen übersetzt, mit Anmerkungen. In Kleine Texte, 64. Bonn, 1910.
- Vaccari (A.). Le Odi di Salomone. Civiltà Cattolica, 1911, 513-528; 1912, 22-36.
- Wabnitz (A.). Un Psautier judéo-chrétien du premier siècle. Revue de théolog. et des quest. relig., 1910, 351-367.
- Wellhausen (J.). Göttingische Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1910, 629-641; 641 f.
- Wensinck (A. J.). De Oden van Salomo, een oudchristelijk Psalmboek. Theologische Studien (Utrecht), 1911, 1-60.
- Ephrem's hymns of Epiphany and the Odes of Solomon. Expositor, 1912, 108-112.
- Willey (R. H. D.). The Odes and Psalms of Solomon. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1913, 293-298.
- Wohlenberg (G.) and Hansen (H.) In Schleswig-Holstein-Lauenburgisches Kirchen- und Schulblatt, 1910, 45, 47, 69, 81, 93, 105, 113, 125, 477, 489.
- Worrell (W. H.). The Odes of Solomon and the Pistis Sophia. Journ. of Theol. Stud., 1911, 29-45.
- Zahn (T.). Die Oden Salomos. Neue Kirchliche Zeitschr., 1910, 667-701, 747-777.
- Zarin (S. M.). The newly discovered apocryphal writings: The Odes of Solomon (Russian title) in Христианское Чтение (Petrograd), 1912, 601-626.
- Zwaan (J. de). Een dichter uit den tijd der Apostolische vaders. Onze eeuw (Haarlem), 1911, 223-246.
- Ignatius and the Odists. Amer. Journ. of Theology, 1911, 617-625.
- In Museum, July, 1916, 311-315.

To the above list must be added the following Reviews, Notices, and Announcements of discovery of the Odes:

- Ἐλθέτω ἡ βασιλεία σου, 6 May, 1909 (J. M. Leendertz).
- Kirchlicher Anzeiger für Württemberg*, No. 49, 1909 (E. Nestle).

- Sitzungsberichte d. könig. preuss. Akademie*, No. 51, 1909 (A. Harnack).
Times Literary Supplement, 2 Dec. 1909.
The Record, 17 Dec. 1909.
Rivista storico-critica delle scienze teol., Nr. 7 and 8, 1910 (U. Manucci).
The Christian World, 13 Jan. 1910.
The Methodist Times, 13 Jan. 1910 (W. B. Brash).
The Athenaeum, 1910, 62-63; 1912, 517.
The British Friend, Jan. 1910 (R. S. Franks).
The British Weekly, 24 Feb. 1910 (J. Moffatt), and 27 April.
The Outlook, 2 April, 1910.
The Evening Bulletin, 13 April, 1910.
The Guardian, 14, 29 April, 3 June, 1910 (Nairne).
Great Thoughts, 7 May, 1910.
The Churchman, Oct. 1910.
The Amer. Methodist Quart. Review, Oct. 1910, and Jan. 1911.
The Biblical World, 1910, 142 (Goodspeed), and 432.
Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique, 1910, 623.
Revue moderniste, 1910, 418.
Revue de l'histoire des religions, 1910, 109.
Revue des questions historiques, 1911.
The Evening Bulletin, 13 April, 1910.
The Daily News, 11 March, 1910.
Presbyterian Banner, 2 June, 1910 (D. S. Schaff).
Theolog. Rundschau, Nov. 1910 (W. Bousset).
Theolog. Literaturz., 1910, 6 f. (E. Schürer).
Theolog. Literaturbericht, 1910, 304-306 (Riggenbach).
Literarisches Zentralblatt, 1910, 777-781 (G. Kr.).
Literarische Rundschau, 1911, 153 f. (B. Hake).
Theolog. Tijdschrift, 1911, 89-92 (K. Lake).
Revue of Theology and Phil., 1911, 334 (V. Bartlet), and July, 1912 (T. H. Weir).
Studierstube (Langensalza), 1911, No. 10 (J. Böhrer).
Revue historique, 1911, 101; 1912, 338 (C. Guignebert).
Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique, 1911, 185 and 603; 1912 (L. Gougaud), and p. 386 (C. Mohlberg).
The American Journal of Theology, 1911, 322.

Bulletin d'ancienne littérat. et d'arch. chrétienne, 1911, 152 (J. Labourt).

Le Lien (Marseilles), Nov.—Dec. 1911 (Bruston).

Theologie und Glaube, 1911, 858 (B. Bartmann), and 592 (Peters).

The Irish Theolog. Quart., 1911, 498 f. (J. MacCaffrey).

Revue Bénédictine, 1911, 449 f. (J. de Puniet).

Écho d'Orient, 1911, 370 (S. Salaville).

Zeitschr. für wissenschaftl. Theologie, 1912, 263 (Windisch).

Historisches Jahrbuch (Munich), 1912, 157 (A. G.).

Revue critique d'histoire et de littérature, 1913, 263 (J. B. Chabot).

Nederlandsche Kerkbode, 1911, July 29 and Aug. 5 (P.).

Analecta Bollandiana, 1911, tom. xxx, fasc. 11–111, p. 332 (H. Delahaye).

The Expository Times, 1912, 75.

The Westminster Review for Jan. 25, 1913.

Abst. Journ. Society of Hist. Theol. for 1911–1912. (A. Büchler on Ode xi, and V. Bartlet on E. A. Abbott and the Odes.)

Journal of Theol. Studies, 1914, 454 (H. M. Slee).

JAN 5 1984

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

Revelation OF THE Magi

The Lost Tale of the Wise Men's Journey to Bethlehem

First English Translation of a FORGOTTEN ANCIENT MANUSCRIPT

BRENT LANDAU

Revelation
of the Magi

THE LOST TALE OF
THE WISE MEN'S JOURNEY TO BETHLEHEM

Brent Landau

 HarperCollins e-books

Co three wise women ...
my grandmother,
Helen Mason,
who inspired me to study religion;
my mother,
Deborah Landau,
who inspired my love of reading;
and my wife,
Elizabeth Bangs,
who inspires me every day.

CONTENTS

Cover

Title Page

INTRODUCTION: *The Sages and the Star-Child

The English Translation of the “Revelation of the Magi”²⁶

SELECT ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

CONCLUSION: *The Meanings of the “Revelation of the Magi”

APPENDIX: *The Magi Legend from the “Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum”

ART CREDITS

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

About the Author

ILLUSTRATIONS

Copyright

About the Publisher

NOTES

INTRODUCTION

The Sages and the Star-Child

The Magi—usually known as the “Three Wise Men” or “Three Kings”—are easily the most famous of the visitors who appear at Jesus’s birth in the Gospel accounts of the Christmas story. Whether or not one is a churchgoer, practically everyone has heard of them. Their bringing of gifts to the Christ child began a tradition that has linked them forever with the rite of holiday gift giving. Despite their great fame, however, there is only one short passage in the New Testament that tells of the Magi, and this account is remarkably vague about these figures. Found in the Gospel of Matthew, chapter 2, verses 1 through 12, it says this:

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, wise men from the East came to Jerusalem, saying, “Where is he who has been born king of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the East, and have come to worship him.” When Herod the king heard this, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him; and assembling all the chief priests and scribes of the people, he inquired of them where the Christ was to be born. They told him, “In Bethlehem of Judea; for so it is written by the prophet:

‘And you, O Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, are by no means least among the rulers of Judah; for from you shall come a ruler who will govern my people Israel.”’

Then Herod summoned the wise men secretly and ascertained from them what time the star appeared; and he sent them to Bethlehem, saying, “Go and search diligently for the child, and when you have found him bring me word, that I too may come and worship him.” When they had heard the king they went their way; and lo, the star which they had seen in the East went before them, till it came to rest over the place where the child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced exceedingly with great joy; and going into the house they saw the child with Mary his mother, and they fell down and worshiped him. Then, opening their treasures, they offered him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh. And being warned in a dream not to return to Herod, they departed to their own country by another way.

Notice the enormous gaps in this story, gaps that a thoughtful reader must attempt to fill in. The wise men have no specific country of origin. No number or names are given for the wise men, though three was destined to become the most common number because of the three gifts (See The Three Kings [Wise Men] on pages 4 and 5).^{1}

In fact, “wise men” itself is a rather poor translation of the Greek word magoi,^{2} which elsewhere in the New Testament means “magicians” in a clearly negative sense.^{3} Equally problematic—if not altogether disturbing—is the puzzling nature of this “star” that the Magi have followed to Judea. The Gospel of Matthew never explains how the Magi came to know that this star revealed the birth of the King of the Jews. Moreover, the star itself behaves very strangely, reappearing to the Magi on their way to Bethlehem^{4} and then coming to rest directly over the place where the child Jesus was. All in all, the story of the Magi from Matthew’s Gospel is a very bizarre one, and many early Christians struggled to make sense of it.

The Three Kings (Wise Men). Early Christian mosaic. 6th century C.E. S. Apollinare Nuovo, Ravenna, Italy. Photo Credit : Scala/Art Resource, NY

Sixth-century mosaic of the Magi from Sant'Apollinare Nuovo, Ravenna, Italy. This mosaic demonstrates some of the key features of the early Christian interpretation of the Magi story: the number of the Magi as three, their names, and even their range of ages.

Amid a wide range of early Christian speculation on the Magi—apocryphal Gospels, hymns, sermons, mosaics, wood carvings, and sculptures on sarcophagi—one composition is particularly impressive and yet surprisingly unknown. Called the Revelation of the Magi, it is a lengthy narrative that claims to be the personal testimony of the Magi themselves on the events of Christ's coming. Though versions of this legend were well known in Christian Europe throughout the Middle Ages, this book presents the first-ever complete English translation of the Revelation of the Magi.

I confess that I have had a lifelong fascination with the Christmas holiday, with the traditions of Jesus's birth and childhood, and with the story of the Magi and their star in particular. As a young child, I was captivated when my church in Flagstaff, Arizona, brought in an astronomer from the nearby Lowell Observatory one Advent season to discuss the range of possible scientific explanations for the Star of Bethlehem. Then, during my high school education at a Jesuit school in Phoenix, I first learned about the existence of writings outside the New Testament that purported to fill in gaps in the Gospel accounts of Jesus's upbringing. Finally, as a doctoral student studying early Christianity at Harvard University, I was deeply impressed during a study trip to Italy when I saw how popular a subject the Magi were in paintings, altarpieces, and sculptures. Upon my return to Cambridge, I resolved to learn as much as I could about early Christian legends of the Magi. In this search, I happened upon an article that mentioned the Revelation of the Magi. I asked around and was surprised to find that none of my colleagues had even heard of it. Did such a document really exist? It sounded like such a remarkable text that almost immediately I decided to investigate further.

Later in this introduction, I will discuss where this text came from, why it is so little known today, and why it may be a writing of great importance. But I'll start with the contents of the story itself, which I eventually discovered hidden away in the Vatican Library.

THE STORY

The Revelation of the Magi, mostly narrated by the Magi in the first person, is a sweeping and imaginative work that begins in the Garden of Eden and ends with the Magi being baptized at the hands of the Apostle Thomas. These Magi are members of an ancient mystical order and reside in a semimythical land called Shir, located in the extreme east of the world, at the shore of the Great Ocean. The Revelation of the Magi says these individuals are called “Magi” in the language of their country because they pray in silence. The story implies that the name “Magi” is thus a play on the words silence and/or prayer, but that implication does not make sense in any of the most common languages spoken by early Christians. Despite this unsolved mystery, however, this description sharply distinguishes the Magi of this story from any of the most common ancient usages of the term magoi: these Magi are not magicians, astrologers, or even priests of the Iranian religion of Zoroastrianism.⁵

These mystics, who live in a mysterious, far-off land, as the Revelation of the Magi depicts its Magi, are the descendants of Seth, the third son of Adam and Eve. Seth was believed by many early Jews and Christians to be extremely pious and virtuous, so it is very fitting for the Revelation of the Magi to trace the ancestry of the Magi back to such an illustrious founder. The Magi inherited from Seth a prophecy of supreme importance for the world: a star of indescribable brightness will someday appear, heralding the birth of God in human form. Seth himself had learned about this prophecy from his father, Adam, since the star originally had hovered over the Tree of Life, illumining all of Eden, before Adam's sin caused the star to vanish.

Every month of every year, for thousands of years, the order of the Magi has carried out its ancient rituals in expectation of this star's arrival. They ascend their country's most sacred mountain, the Mountain of Victories, and pray in silence at the mouth of the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, where Seth's own prophetic books are housed and read by the Magi. Whenever one of the Magi dies, his son or one of his close relatives takes his place, and their order continues through the ages.

All of this lore about the origins of the Magi and their prophecy has been narrated, we are told, by the generation of the Magi that was alive to witness the coming of the star. They have gathered together to ascend the Mountain of Victories, as was their ancient custom, but suddenly the foretold star appears in the heavens. As promised, the star is indescribably bright, so bright that the sun becomes as faint as the daytime moon; yet because the Magi alone are worthy of guarding this prophecy, the star can be seen by no one but them. The star descends to the peak of the mountain and enters the Cave of Treasures, bidding the Magi to come inside. The Magi enter the cave and bow before the star, whose incredible light gradually dissipates to reveal a small, luminous human! This "star-child" reveals to the Magi that he is the Son of God, but—and this is of crucial importance—never calls himself by the familiar names Jesus or Christ. Nor do the Magi themselves ever call him by these names, and the absence of these designations will provide us with a critical clue about the central message of the Revelation of the Magi.

The star-child instructs the Magi to follow it to Jerusalem so that they may witness its birth and participate in the salvation God has planned for the entire world.

The Magi descend from the mountain, discussing excitedly what they have just seen. In the course of their conversation, however, they learn that each of them saw the star-child in a different form, with each vision representing a different time in the life of Christ! They prepare a caravan and supplies for the lengthy trek, but thanks to the overwhelming power of the star, their journey proves to be truly extraordinary. The star removes any and all obstacles from their path, leveling valleys and mountains, making rivers passable on foot, and protecting the Magi from wild animals. The star's light also relieves the Magi of their fatigue and continuously refills their food supplies. For the Magi, this vast journey from the eastern edge of the world to the land of Judea seems to have transpired in the mere blink of an eye.

The star leads the Magi into Jerusalem, where the city's inhabitants puzzle at these exotic foreigners. Because the star is invisible to the inhabitants, they presume these visitors to be astrologers of some kind, since the Magi keep looking up at the heavens. The Magi's encounter with Herod and the Jewish religious leaders in Jerusalem unfolds almost identically to the narrative of Matthew's Gospel—one of the rare times that the Revelation of the Magi closely follows the story line of Matthew.

Immediately after the Magi hear the Jewish prophecy about the birth of the Messiah at Bethlehem, the star reappears to the them⁶ and leads them to a cave in the environs of the village. Just as upon the Mountain of Victories, the star enters the cave and beckons the Magi inside. Here the star transforms into a luminous, talking infant, whose "birth" is accompanied by unseen angels singing his praises. In a lengthy speech, the infant tells the Magi that their ancient mysteries have at last been fulfilled and commissions them to become witnesses to him and his Gospel for the people of their homeland.

As the Magi exit the Bethlehem cave, rejoicing at the fulfillment of their ancient prophecy, they are met by Mary and Joseph, who have suddenly appeared on the scene. In a very odd exchange, Mary accuses them of trying to steal her newborn infant, but the Magi assuage her concern by explaining that the child is actually the savior of the world and can be in many places simultaneously.

The Magi then begin their journey back to Shir, a trip that, through the awesome power of the star, transpires for them as quickly as did their travel to Bethlehem. The star's light refills their food supplies even more abundantly than before, and when the Magi eat of these provisions, they again see their guide in a multitude of different forms. When they reach the borders of their homeland, crowds of their family members and kinspeople come out to meet them, marveling at the appearance and health of the travelers. The Magi relate the story of their miraculous encounter with the star and subsequent journey to the people of Shir. They conclude their story by revealing to the people that they, too, can come to experience the presence of the star-child, whom the Magi claim is still with them—since he is, in fact, present throughout the entire world. The Magi present the people with the overflowing bags of food that the star has produced for them and invite them to partake. Those people who eat immediately see visions of the heavenly and earthly Christ, and thus many in the land of Shir accept the faith proclaimed by the Magi.

Thus far, the Magi's age-old prophecy has been fulfilled: they have journeyed with the star, witnessed the birth of Christ, preached his Gospel to their kinspeople, and now remain in the light of Christ's eternal presence. This would seem like a most fitting and fulfilling way for this story to conclude, yet the only copy of the Revelation of the Magi that we possess does not end here. In a concluding episode that may not have been part of the original story (more on the reasons for this later), the Apostle Thomas comes to the homeland of the Magi on a missionary journey—presumably after many years have passed. The Magi hear of his arrival and come to meet him, telling him of their experience of Christ's coming. Thomas recognizes that they have indeed had contact with Christ, and he relates to them his own memories of the ministry of Jesus. The Magi rejoice at what Thomas has said, and they ask him to initiate them into the Christian fellowship. When Thomas baptizes them early on Sunday morning, the heavenly Christ descends and administers the Eucharist, first to the apostle and then to the Magi. Thomas then commissions the Magi to proclaim the Gospel throughout the world, and the Revelation of the Magi ends with the Magi performing miracles and preaching.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS

Not only does the Revelation of the Magi have the distinction of being the most substantial early Christian composition about the Magi; its narrative complexity matches almost any early Christian writing. Thus, the first thing that one notices about the Revelation of the Magi is that whoever wrote it devoted a great deal of time and thought to crafting a rich and intricate story line. As a scholar of early Christian writings, I noticed several other surprising features immediately. Its location of the Magi in the far-eastern land of Shir was highly unusual, since most early Christians thought that the Magi came from Persia, Babylon, or Arabia (see Adoration of the Magi on page 14).

Also surprising was its identification of the Star of Bethlehem with Christ himself, an interpretation found nowhere else in the diverse array of early Christian speculation about this mysterious celestial portent. The late entry of the Apostle Thomas into the action of narrative was quite unexpected, and raised a new series of questions for me about the relationship between the Revelation of the Magi and other texts that discuss the Apostle Thomas. I was also captivated by the very strange incident of the food that produced visions of Christ for the Magi and the people of Shir, given its parallels to the use of hallucinogenic substances in other religious traditions.

Adoration of the Magi. 5th century C.E. Early Christian. Cypress wood carving from the door. S. Sabina, Rome, Italy. Photo Credit : Alinari /Art Resource, NY

A wooden door carving of the adoration of the Magi from the Basilica of Santa Sabina in Rome. Like the mosaic from Ravenna, this carving portrays the Magi wearing distinctive “Phrygian caps,” reflecting a belief that the Magi are Zoroastrians from the land of Persia.

But finally and most importantly, I was surprised that neither I nor any of my colleagues knew of this impressive text’s existence before I stumbled across a mention of it in an article. There are certainly a significant number of early Christian apocryphal writings that are familiar only to scholars specializing in apocryphal literature, but the Revelation of the Magi was completely unknown to me and to other specialists in this field that I consulted. For me as a doctoral student, such a poorly known text represented a wonderful opportunity to bring an important document into the mainstream of early Christian scholarship. Yet it would also prove to be a serious challenge to my skills as a researcher, since even basic questions about when and under what circumstances it was written were unresolved.

WHERE DID THE “REVELATION OF THE MAGI” COME FROM?

As I mentioned earlier, the Revelation of the Magi has never before been translated into English, and very few specialists in early Christian apocryphal literature even know of its existence. How did this remarkable text come to be so neglected? Part of the problem is that the only known copy of the text is preserved in Syriac, a language used by ancient Christians throughout the Middle East and Asia, but one in which only a relatively small number of early Christian scholars are fluent. By comparison, many more scholars know Coptic, an Egyptian language in which such important texts as the Gospel of Thomas, the Gospel of Mary, and the Gospel of Judas have been preserved.

Another important reason for this text’s neglect, however, is that it belongs to two categories of material that historically have been scorned in the study of early Christianity. First, it is an apocryphal writing, and scholars have long privileged the canonical writings of the New Testament to the exclusion of writings outside of the canon. There are, of course, a few exceptions, such as the writings just mentioned, but beyond these, most apocryphal writings remain sorely neglected.

Second, the Revelation of the Magi is one of a handful of canonical and apocryphal texts that focus on events surrounding the birth of Jesus. Although the Christmas story has fascinated believers throughout the centuries, there are only two accounts of Jesus’s birth among the four canonical Gospels, suggesting that the birth of Jesus was not nearly as important for the first Christians as the death, Resurrection, and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth. Furthermore, Matthew and Luke tell markedly different stories about Jesus’s birth, and the differences cannot be easily harmonized.⁷ As a result, the great majority of scholars today believe that this material has very little claim to historicity and have therefore ignored it. The study of the historical Jesus has mostly focused on his sayings and his final days in Jerusalem; only a few recent scholars have found any reliable historical details in the infancy narratives—and the story of the Magi is not one of them.⁸

Even if it is poorly known today, the manuscript that contains the Revelation of the Magi was never truly lost—certainly not in the way that, say, the Dead Sea Scrolls were. After the existing manuscript was copied down at the Zuqnin monastery in southeastern Turkey by an anonymous monk at the end of the eighth century, it changed hands at some point and was kept in a monastery in the Egyptian desert. There it stayed until the eighteenth century, when G. S. Assemani, collecting manuscripts on behalf of the Vatican Library, brought it to Rome, where it resides today.

Though this manuscript had been known by European scholars for several hundred years, it was not until rather recently that scholars first began to look closely at the legend of the Magi that it contained. An Italian translation of the Revelation of the Magi was made in the 1950s, and a few scholars in the decades since have discussed the text in journal articles, often peripherally. Quite serendipitously, when I first learned of the existence of the Revelation of the Magi, I had just finished my first year of studying the Syriac language. I was therefore well prepared to begin translating the text with the help of J. F. Coakley, Professor of Syriac at Harvard.

After nearly a year of biweekly meetings with Professor Coakley to check my work, I had managed to produce a rough but complete translation of the Revelation of the Magi. Despite the many hours of work that this had required, my task as a scholar of early Christian writings was only beginning. Unlike a scholar working on a New Testament text or even a well-known apocryphal writing, there was virtually no preexisting “conversation” about the Revelation of the Magi into which I was entering. Very few scholars knew that the text existed at all, so there were only some tentative suggestions about how old the Revelation of the Magi might be, who might have written it, and where it was composed.⁹

To figure out the most likely date of composition, my first step was to start with the latest possible time the text could have been written and then work backward as far as possible. As mentioned earlier, there is only one copy of the Revelation of the Magi in existence, and that manuscript is securely dated to the late eighth century. Is it possible that the anonymous scribe who wrote this manuscript was actually the author of the Revelation of the Magi? Not likely, for several reasons. First, as a general matter, scholars of early Christianity know that the date of a manuscript is very rarely the date of the text it contains.¹⁰ Second, the manuscript itself—known as the Chronicle of Zuqnin, for the monastery in which it was written—contains a number of writings that are known to have existed much earlier than the eighth century. Third, a Christian writer named Theodore bar Konai, who lived on the Arabian Peninsula at almost the same time that the chronicle was written, seems to have known about the Revelation of the Magi.¹¹ There is no reason to suspect that the Chronicle of Zuqnin would have traveled from southeastern Turkey to the Arabian Desert in the span of only a few years. It seems far more likely that the Revelation of the Magi was written—and circulated rather widely—earlier than the eighth century.

But how much earlier? Fortunately, even though we possess only one full copy of the Revelation of the Magi, there is another very important witness to this text. This other witness is a Latin commentary on the Gospel of Matthew, usually thought to have been written in the fifth century and known by scholars as the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum. The anonymous writer of this commentary, when he comes to Matthew's story of the Magi, relates a legend about these mysterious figures. Even though he summarizes this legend in only a few short paragraphs, it is clearly the same story as that found in the Revelation of the Magi.¹² Moreover, it is very likely that he had actually seen a written copy of the Revelation of the Magi, since there are several parts of his summary that agree, practically verbatim, with the copy of the Revelation of the Magi that has survived for us.¹³

So it seems certain that a version of the Revelation of the Magi existed when the Opus Imperfectum was written in the fifth century. But how do we know that the Syriac text of the Revelation of the Magi that we have was written earlier than the fifth century? After all, it could be a later form of the legend that had been expanded significantly. There is one small, seemingly insignificant detail in the Syriac text that tells us when it was written. In the Syriac language, nouns can be either masculine or feminine, and in the Revelation of the Magi, “the Holy Spirit” is a feminine noun. Although it might surprise us today to think of the Holy Spirit as a female entity, this is exactly what Syriac writers of the second, third, and fourth centuries considered it/her. Starting in the fifth century, however, Syriac writers began to treat “the Holy Spirit” as a masculine noun, under influence from Greek Christian thought. What this means, therefore, is that the Syriac language itself confirms that the form of the Revelation of the Magi that we possess must have been written earlier than the fifth century.

But this quirk of the Syriac language tells us only that the text must have been written earlier than the fifth century. To determine how much earlier it was written, we need to look for other clues in the Syriac form of the Revelation of the Magi. Recall that in the summary of the Revelation of the Magi presented earlier, I suggested that the story of the Apostle Thomas’s conversion of the Magi was probably not originally part of the Revelation of the Magi. Not only does it seem superfluous from a narrative point of view, but it also has a number of literary features that do not fit very well with what has come before. First, the Thomas episode is narrated in the third person, whereas the rest of the Revelation of the Magi is narrated by the Magi themselves, in the first person. Although such shifts in the perspective of the narrator are not unheard of in ancient Christian writings, this shift is especially abrupt and unexplained within the narrative. Second, the Thomas episode contains a striking change in terminology as compared with the first-person section of the Revelation of the Magi. One of the most distinctive features of the first-person section is its complete avoidance of the proper name “Jesus Christ” to refer to the divine being whom the Magi encounter. Yet as careful as the author is to forgo this name and other obviously Christian terminology, the Thomas section is not at all concerned to avoid the name “Jesus Christ,” using it almost twenty times!

Because of these reasons, I believe that the Thomas episode was a later addition to the Revelation of the Magi. I will say more shortly about the reasons that someone might have wanted to tamper with a text that purported to be the authentic testimony of the Magi about the coming of Christ. But for now, let us use the Thomas episode to help find out more about when the Revelation of the Magi was written—or at least when it was tampered with. As it happens, stories about the Apostle Thomas were especially popular among ancient Christians living in Syria. The most famous collection of these stories is known as the Apocryphal Acts of the Apostle Thomas, and it includes accounts of his miracles, his preaching, and his eventual martyrdom in India. Even though the Acts of Thomas and the Thomas episode from the Revelation of the Magi do not tell the same story, they share numerous connections in their language and theology.¹⁴ These similarities suggest that the Thomas episode was probably composed and added to the Revelation of the Magi around the same time and place as other Thomas legends were being written down—that is, around the late third or early fourth century in Syria. Therefore, the first-person form of the Revelation of the Magi must have been composed by this time at the latest,¹⁵ and perhaps earlier if it came from someplace outside of Syria.

But how much earlier might the original form of the Revelation of the Magi have been written? Might it be, as it claims, the authentic testimony of the Magi themselves? As tantalizing a possibility as this might be, it is highly unlikely. First of all, there is the basic problem of historicity with the whole Magi story found in Matthew's Gospel. As mentioned earlier, scholars have by and large concluded that there is virtually nothing of historical value in the infancy narratives of the New Testament. This judgment has been applied with particular vigor to the Magi story.¹⁶ Even the Star of Bethlehem, the most impressive feature of the story, has never been incontrovertibly identified, arguments to the contrary notwithstanding.¹⁷ And the fact that no trace of the Magi story is found in Luke's infancy narrative, which has the humble shepherds as the first outside witnesses to the child Jesus, or in any other of the earliest Christian writings does not enhance its credibility.

But even if we were to grant that Matthew's story of the Magi was based on an actual historical event, the Revelation of the Magi would not be a very strong candidate to have been written by the Magi themselves. True, the author of the Revelation of the Magi has carefully crafted this story and added levels of detail such that one might believe it to be the work of the Magi themselves. Once we closely inspect the story, however, it becomes clear that the author has used written sources—such as the letters of the Apostle Paul, the Gospel of John, and the Book of Revelation, to name a few—that were written years after the “historical Magi” almost certainly would have died.¹⁸

In fact, the author not only used many of the earliest Christian writings in the New Testament. He seems to have used a rather obscure apocryphal Infancy Gospel that was likely written in the mid- to late-second century, a Gospel so obscure that it lacks an agreed-upon name!¹⁹ For the sake of (some) clarity, let us call it Infancy Gospel X.²⁰ In Infancy Gospel X, the Magi come to visit the child Jesus at a small house outside the village of Bethlehem. Joseph—the main actor in Infancy Gospel X, as opposed to the narratives in Matthew and Luke, where he never says a word—proceeds to question these strange visitors about how they knew of the child’s birth.

During the ensuing dialogue with Joseph, the Magi mention a number of details corroborated by the Revelation of the Magi. These include learning of the star’s coming through their own very ancient writings, the Magi’s lack of fatigue after a lengthy journey, and the indescribably bright star being visible to the Magi alone. Joseph even presumes the Magi to be astrologers because they keep looking up at the sky, apparently watching their invisible celestial guide. A very similar scene takes place in the Revelation of the Magi, but there it is the leaders in Jerusalem, not Joseph, who cannot see the star. Finally, Infancy Gospel X envisions the Magi not as three in number, but as a much larger group—an interpretation hinted at in the Revelation of the Magi (see The Adoration of the Magi on page 27).^{21}

These parallels are very striking, but in Infancy Gospel X all these details are tightly concentrated in the Magi’s brief appearance at the Bethlehem cave, not spread throughout the narrative as in the Revelation of the Magi. It seems quite probable that there is some sort of literary relationship between these two works, but who has borrowed from whom? It is very difficult to tell, and it is even possible that the authors of these two works used a third source (whether oral or written) independently of each other. I myself have gone back and forth many times about which writing was older. More research on Infancy Gospel X would be necessary before a decisive judgment could be made.

Even so, if we assume that the Revelation of the Magi came into being sometime after Infancy Gospel X, then it was probably written in the late second or early third century. It was then “corrected” in the late third or early fourth century by adding the concluding narrative about the Apostle Thomas’s visit to the Magi.

If the Revelation of the Magi was not, as it claims, written by the Magi themselves, then who might have written this strange story? Although it is possible to give, with a reasonable degree of confidence, a window of time during which it was composed, we have almost nothing to go on regarding the author’s identity or location. Only a small number of early Christian writings are written by the person put forth as the author anyway, so the Revelation of the Magi is not much different from them in this respect.^{22}

The place of authorship is similarly unknowable: presumably the author's sophisticated theology—which we will address momentarily—suggests an urban location, perhaps Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, Ephesus, or another major urban center of the Roman world. All we know is that the Revelation of the Magi was known in Constantinople (where the author of the Opus Imperfectum found it) in the fifth century, and in southeastern Turkey (where an anonymous monk at the Zuqnin monastery copied it) and the Arabian Peninsula (where Theodore bar Konai lived) by the end of the eighth century.

Yet even if we cannot say much of anything substantial about the identity of the author or his whereabouts, we can actually say quite a bit about his understanding of the Christian message, and about why his understanding might have been viewed as theologically dangerous enough to warrant a new ending for the Revelation of the Magi.²³

Benozzo Gozzoli (1420–1497) The Adoration of the Magi (with Gozzoli's self-portrait—with red cap). Lorenzo il Magnifico as the youngest of the three Magi. Fresco, 1459. Palazzo Medici Riccardi, Florence, Italy. Photo Credit : Erich Lessing/Art Resource, NY

The Adoration of the Magi, by Benozzo Gozzoli, 1459, Florence, Italy. Gozzoli has not depicted the familiar three Magi traveling alone, but instead accompanied by a great cavalcade. Both Infancy

Gospel X and an early form of the Revelation of the Magi likewise believed that the Magi constituted a large group.

WHY WAS THE “REVELATION OF THE MAGI” WRITTEN?

As mentioned earlier, one of the most noticeable features of the Revelation of the Magi is its careful avoidance of the name “Jesus Christ” to designate the Magi’s celestial guide. This consistent omission is one of the reasons that the Apostle Thomas episode’s free use of the name seems so jarring. Why has the author refused to use the name “Jesus Christ?” If the Magi in the first-person narrative come to the end of the story without ever using the name, this implies that they have had an experience of Christ without ever knowing this savior figure as Christ. The case of the Magi, then, raises the possibility that Christ has appeared to many people and yet not revealed himself as Jesus Christ.

The idea of Christ remaining unidentified in manifestations to the peoples of the world is, in fact, affirmed by statements that the celestial Christ makes to the Magi. He tells them that he has appeared not only to them in a manner congruent with their religion. Indeed, this is only one of many instances of Christ’s revelation to humanity, since he has been sent “to fulfill everything that was spoken about me in the entire world and in every land” (13:10). Having heard this revelation from Christ, the Magi themselves then affirm it before others. To the inhabitants of Jerusalem, they explain that they have come to worship Christ “because he has worshipers in every land” (17:5). Even to the child’s mother, Mary, they insist on the universality and omnipresence of the Christ event: “[T]he forms with him are seen in every land, because he has been sent by his majesty for the salvation and redemption of every human being” (23:4).

According to the author of the Revelation of the Magi, the fundamental Christian message is not simply that Christ has been sent in order to save all humanity. That is a common enough belief among early Christians that its presence in this text would be unremarkable. The Revelation of the Magi goes much further than this, claiming that the revelation of Christ is actually the foundation of all humanity's religious beliefs and practices. What the Magi have experienced in the fulfillment of their age-old prophecy, while obviously of great significance for them, is but “one drop of salvation from the house of majesty” (15:1)—one limited instance of Christ's salvific activity in the world.

What are the practical consequences of this belief that all forms of religious experience are revelations of Christ? Two especially come to mind. First, this belief means that the Revelation of the Magi has a far more positive view of non-Christian religious traditions than any other early Christian writing. There were a handful of early Christian thinkers who held that glimpses of Christ were had in the past by the greatest of the pagan philosophers—Socrates, to name one example. But these thinkers also maintained that such glimpses were woefully incomplete when compared with the definitive revelation of Christ in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. And such an opinion, it must be remembered, is quite charitable when compared with most early Christian beliefs about non-Christian religions. The vast majority of early Christians, like their Israelite forebears, tended to regard the gods of other peoples as illusory at best, demonic at worst.

A second consequence of the Revelation of the Magi's opinion about Christ's all-encompassing revelation is that it renders the traditional model of Christian expansion completely pointless. Throughout much of Christian history, and particularly since the beginning of the Age of Exploration in the fifteenth century, one dominant means by which Christianity has spread among non-Christian populations is through the work of dedicated missionaries. The general assumption is that the work of missionaries has been absolutely necessary because Jesus Christ delegated this task to the most devoted of his followers.^{24}

But why could not Christ himself have been the principal agent of Christian expansion? If Christ existed before Jesus of Nazareth did (as the first verses of the Gospel of John claim) and could even visit people after his ascension (as Acts of the Apostles claims that he did to the Apostle Paul), then what would prevent Christ from appearing to anyone, in any place, at any time? This appears to have been a question asked by the author of the Revelation of the Magi, and his answer was, “Nothing.” Christ appeared to the Magi before he assumed human flesh, and what is more, he apparently felt no need to identify himself to the Magi as Christ. The author, to be sure, is very concerned that the Christian revelation be spread to all the people of the world, but in his estimation, human missionaries are in no way essential for this task.

If we see this view of Christ as central to the author of the Revelation of the Magi, then it becomes much clearer why someone else would have felt compelled to change the original ending of the story. As the Revelation of the Magi originally ended, the Magi and the people of Shir have all come to experience the presence of Christ, though they have done so completely without any of the trappings that we might associate with institutional Christianity. They are, in the words of the great twentieth-century Catholic theologian Karl Rahner, “anonymous Christians.” The Apostle Thomas episode solves this “problem” by having the Magi baptized and commissioned by an apostolic emissary to go preach the Gospel throughout the entire world.

A helpful analogy for what has happened to the Revelation of the Magi would be the difference between the “abrupt ending” and the “longer ending” of the Gospel of Mark, most likely the first of the canonical Gospels to be written. The vast majority of scholars today believe that the original ending of Mark’s Gospel was at 16:8. This would mean that Mark ended with the women running terrified from the angel’s appearance at the empty tomb of Jesus—that is, without any appearances of the resurrected Jesus. Mark would therefore have ended with the words “they said nothing to anyone, for they were afraid.” Although the precise reasons for the “abrupt ending” will likely never be completely clear, some scholars believe that by it Mark intended to convey a powerful theological message to his audience—possibly that Christian faith grows and perseveres in spite of the frailty and often failure of its would-be messengers.

A powerful theological message, and arguably a brilliant ending to this Gospel. But also one that could be misunderstood or seem rather inadequate, particularly given the presence of Resurrection appearances in later Gospels. So someone, probably in the second century, attached a “longer ending” to Mark’s Gospel (16:9–20) that contained several appearances of the risen Jesus, along with Jesus’s missionary charge to his disciples. In other words, this individual changed the ending of Mark’s Gospel to reflect much more clearly and explicitly how Christians in his time and place expected a Gospel to end. Something much like that seems to have happened to the Revelation of the Magi. It was simply not good enough for the Magi to have had a revelation of Christ that did not “make them Christians” in a straightforward and unambiguous way,²⁵ just as it was not good enough for the women of Mark’s Gospel to hear that Jesus had been raised without seeing any definitive evidence of it or telling anyone about what they saw at the tomb. Hence, the endings of both Mark’s Gospel and the Revelation of the Magi were rewritten and expanded to make them more palatable to the typical expectations of later Christians.

So, the Revelation of the Magi has a view of other religious traditions that is highly unusual among early Christian writings. That feature, along with its status as the longest and most developed apocryphal narrative about the Magi, should make it of considerable interest for scholars of Christian origins. But the present book would not have been written were Revelation of the Magi of interest for only a limited number of academic specialists. Over the past several years I have shared my work on this writing, with members of several church communities and with a number of friends and relatives, some of whom do not consider themselves especially religious. Their enthusiastic response, I believe, has much to do with the way in which the Magi have embedded themselves in popular culture to a degree surpassing many other figures from the Bible. Fewer and fewer people may have much understanding of such a monumental personality as, say, the Apostle Paul, but it seems as if everyone knows the wise men!

The Revelation of the Magi is indeed a fascinating and imaginative story about some of the Bible’s most intriguing figures. But the emphasis of the Revelation of the Magi on the universality of Christ’s revelation may also captivate many readers. The questions this writing poses are of potential importance for anyone who considers herself or himself religious, spiritual, or simply interested in theological questions. Could Christ actually be the source of multiple revelations throughout human history? Would there be any way of knowing this? What would the implications of this be for Christian attitudes toward non-Christian religions? What would this mean for the practice of evangelism? Would it even be correct to regard such a divine being as “Christ” if the Christian revelation is but a single isolated example of this being’s salvific activity? Does any revelation take precedence over others? The answers to these questions will probably differ depending on one’s basic religious convictions. But whether one is a born-again Christian, a Latter-day Saint, a “religious seeker,” or a Buddhist, the Revelation of the Magi raises challenging questions about divine revelation, religious pluralism, and the uniqueness of religions—questions that merit deep, sustained reflection.

The English Translation of the “Revelation of the Magi”²⁶

1. INTRODUCTION ²⁷

^{1:1}About the revelation of the Magi, and about their coming to Jerusalem, and about the gifts that they brought to Christ.²⁸ ^{1:2}An account of the revelations and the visions, which the kings,²⁹ [sons of kings,³⁰] of the great East³¹ spoke,³² who were called Magi in the language of that land because in silence, without a sound, they glorified and they prayed.³³ ^{1:3}And in silence and in the mind they glorified and prayed to the exalted and holy majesty of the Lord of life,³⁴ to the holy and glorious Father, who is hidden by the great brightness of himself and is more lofty and holy than all reasoning. ^{1:4}And the language of human beings is not able to speak about him as he is, except as he has wished, and when he has wished, and by means of whom he wishes. ^{1:5}And neither his heavenly worlds nor the lower ones are able to speak about his majesty, except as it is fitting for the will of his majesty to reveal to the worlds so that they are able to partake from the gift³⁵ of his majesty, because (his majesty) is great and they are not able to speak of it.

2. THE MAGI—THEIR NAMES AND LINEAGE

^{2:1}And so, there were those wise men,³⁶ who were called Magi in the language of the land because in silence, without a sound, they praised the God of all, that one who, by his word and will, has come to be all that is, all that exists and arises, and all that is going to be. ^{2:2}And there is nothing that exists outside of his will,³⁷ and furthermore, there is no one who will stand against the will of the Father of all. ^{2:3}The names of the wise men and kings were called as follows:³⁸ Zaharwandad son of Artaban; Hôrmizd son of Sanatruq; Auštazp son of Gudaphar;³⁹ Aršak son of Mihruq; Zarwand son of Wadwad; Arîhō son of Kosrau; Artahšišat son of Hawîlat; Aštanbôzan son of Šîšrawan; Mihruq son of Humam; Ahširaš son of Sahban; Nasardîh son of Baladan; Merôdak son of Bîl. ^{2:4} These are kings, sons of Eastern kings, in the land of Shir,⁴⁰ which is the outer part of the entire East of the world inhabited by human beings, at the Ocean,⁴¹ the great sea beyond the world, east⁴² of the land of Nod,⁴³ that place in which dwelt Adam, head and chief of all the families of the world. ^{2:5}And these sons of kings received commandments, laws, and even books from their fathers.

The English Translation

^{2:6}And generation from generation, one by one, they received (them,) from the time of Seth, the son of our father Adam, because Adam revealed (them) to his son Seth when he had him.⁴⁴ ^{2:7}And Adam taught Seth about his prior greatness, before he transgressed against the commandment, and about his expulsion from Paradise.⁴⁵ And he warned his son Seth not to transgress also against the (divine) justice as Adam (did).

3. THE TRANSMISSION OF THE MYSTERIES

^{3:1}And Seth received the commandment of his father with a pure heart,^{46} and he took care of the agreement and the gift of the exalted Lord of majesty. ^{3:2}And it was given to Seth to set down in a book and to make known the wisdom, and to call upon the name of the LORD,^{47} the Lord of every soul who seeks after life. ^{3:3}And from him a book appeared in the world for the first time,^{48} which was set down in the name of the Exalted One. ^{3:4}And Seth entrusted to his descendants the book that was set down, and it was transmitted up to Noah, that one who was found just and was delivered from the waters.^{49} ^{3:5}And [in the time of the Deluge,] Noah [took] the books of commandments with him [in the Ark. And when] he came out of the Ark, Noah also commanded the generations after him, who recounted his great deeds and the hidden mysteries^{50} that are written in the books of Seth about the majesty of the Father and all the mysteries. ^{3:6}And the [books,] and the mysteries, and the speech were handed down in succession by tradition even until our ^{51} fathers. ^{3:7}And they learned and received with joy, and handed them down to us ourselves, and we also kept with love and fear their mysteries of the books and the secrets and the words. ^{3:8}And we prayed in silence and gave thanks and glorified, bowing our knees and lifting our hands to the height of heaven,^{52} to the Lord of that majesty that is hidden from the eyes of everything that lives.

4. THE PROPHECY OF THE STAR

^{4:1}And those books of hidden mysteries were placed on the Mountain of Victories⁵³ in the east of Shir, our country, in a cave, the Cave of Treasures of the Mysteries of the Life of Silence.⁵⁴ ^{4:2}And our fathers commanded us as they also received from their fathers, and they said to us:⁵⁵ “Wait for the light that shines forth to you from the exalted East⁵⁶ of the majesty of the Father, the light that shines forth from on high in the form of a star⁵⁷ over the Mountain of Victories and comes to rest upon a pillar of light⁵⁸ within the Cave of Treasures [of] Hidden Mysteries. ^{4:3}And also command your sons, and your sons their sons, until the mystery of the star that shines forth from the exalted majesty appears to your generations, a light like a star, and giving light to the entire creation and obscuring the light of the sun, moon, and stars, and not one of them is seen or is able to stand in the presence of its light.⁵⁹ ^{4:4}For it is the great mystery of the Son of the exalted majesty, who is the voice of the Father; the offspring of his hidden thought; the light of the ray of his glory; the will and image of his hiddenness;⁶⁰ ^{4:5}the allengendering word of his thought; source of life never-failing from his spring;⁶¹ the all-governing word according to the will of the one who sent it;⁶² an image that has no form or likeness among any things that exist. ^{4:6}This one, by whose power and word all the worlds were set in order and established, is the Son of perfect mercy, is the ray of light of the glory of the Father of ineffable majesty. ^{4:7}Therefore, know that when this light from that majesty that has no end shines forth for you and will appear like a star to you so that you are able to see him: eagerly, with joy and love, and completely, with care, taking with you his own pure gifts,⁶³ which were put in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries on the Mountain of Victories by your fathers, go to where his light, the star, leads you. ^{4:8}And you will see a great and amazing sign, God appearing in the bodily form of a human being, unsightly,⁶⁴ poor, imperfect, frail, lowly, even the sign of the cross appearing upon him [see Speculum Humanae Salvationis on pages 40 and 41]. And you will go before him with love and joy, taking with you your gifts, and you will worship in the presence of the child, despised, poor, and killed.⁶⁵ 4:9 And you will offer him your gifts, and you shall receive from him the blessing of salvation and shall partake with him in the joy, which, when he comes with his hidden glory, with his perfect divinity, with his perfect riches that do not pass away, with his new world, with his light that [text missing], with perfect salvation, which he will give to all [text missing]. 4:10 Also, take care and command your sons. And if the coming of the light of the star does not happen in your days, also have your sons tell it to their sons, until the mysteries and revelations shall come to pass that are written about his coming.”

The Three Magi. Speculum Humanae Salvationis, by Ludolfus de Saxonia. Ms.15, f.10r. Vellum. Germany, ca. 1410. Spencer Collection. Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Photo Credit : New York Public Library/Art Resource, NY

An illuminated manuscript of the Speculum Humanae Salvationis, Germany, ca. 1410. The illustrator demonstrates an awareness of the Revelation of the Magi, depicting Christ in the form of a star hovering over the Magi. Notice especially the detail of Christ carrying the cross (cf. Revelation of the Magi 4:8).

5. THE RITUAL OF THE MAGI

^{5:1}And we received the laws and commandments from our fathers, and we taught all the mysteries, and we reminded our sons: “Perhaps in your days the coming of the light of this star will happen, as we received and learned from our fathers.” ^{5:2}And we went up to the Mountain of Victories, and when we were all assembled at the foothills of the mountain from each one’s dwelling place, we remained in one place for purification on the twenty-fifth day⁶⁶ of every month. ^{5:3}And we bathed in a certain spring that was on the foothills of the mountain, and it is called “The Spring of Purification.” ^{5:4}And seven trees stood over it: an olive, a vine, a myrtle, [a cypress,] an orange, a cedar, and a juniper.⁶⁷ ^{5:5}And that mountain was altogether incomparably more beautiful and desirable than all the mountains in our land, and the smell of all sweet spices effused from it, and the dew that was sprinkled was a sweet smell.⁶⁸ ^{5:6}And when it became the first of the month,⁶⁹ we ascended and went to the top of the mountain and stood before the mouth of the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries. ^{5:7}And we knelt on our knees and stretched forth our hands to heaven, and we prayed and worshiped in silence, without a sound, to the Father of that heavenly majesty that is ineffable and infinite forever.⁷⁰ ^{5:8}On the third of the month we entered the cave up to the treasures, the treasures that were prepared as the star’s own [gifts] and for the adoration of that light that we awaited. ^{5:9}And what we read and heard from the revelation, when we returned, descending in joy, we said to and instructed our sons, our families, and everyone who gave themselves with love to learn. ^{5:10}And if it should chance that one of us should pass away, we would raise up his son or one of the sons of his family [in his place,] as when we succeeded our fathers, until the time of the coming of the star has been fulfilled. ^{5:11}We also taught the people of that country, those who gave themselves to the love of revelation to learn with joy. And those who did not wish to learn and distanced themselves from help because they saw our quiet way of life, that we prayed in silence, [we] said our mysteries to them with honor.^{71}

6. AN EXCERPT FROM SETH'S BOOKS OF REVELATION

^{6:1}Again,⁷² from the books that were in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries: every word that our father Adam, the beginning of our great lineage, spoke with his son Seth, whom he had after the death of Abel, whom his brother Cain killed⁷³ and over whom his father Adam mourned. ^{6:2}And Adam instructed Seth his son about [text missing], [and about the revelation] of the light of the star and about its glory, because he [saw] it in the Garden of Eden when it descended and came to rest over the Tree of Life; and it illuminated the entire (garden) before Adam transgressed against the commandment of the Father of heavenly majesty. ^{6:3}And when he transgressed against the commandment that (the Father) ordained for him, the sight⁷⁴ of the star was taken away from him, and (it was also taken away from him) because of his expulsion from Paradise. And Adam our father mourned over (his) foolishness, that he was humbled from his greatness. ^{6:4}And he strongly warned his son Seth, and he taught him to walk in righteousness so that he might find mercy before the Father of majesty.

7. THE FALL OF ADAM

^{7:1}And he said to him: “My son, there will be generations and ages from me and from my offspring, and they will be recounting my foolishness and speaking figuratively with figures of speech to one another. ^{7:2}They are fulfilled about me, and they will say: ‘Every kingdom that will be divided against itself shall not stand.’⁷⁵ This is fulfilled about me, because I doubted about my kingdom in which I stood, and I, by my hands, destroyed it myself. ^{7:3}My son, the rib that was removed from me⁷⁶ became a thorn, and it blinded my eye. ^{7:4}I even prophesied when I saw her, and I said: ‘This time is bone and flesh from me.’⁷⁷ And rightly did I call her ‘time,’ because she became a stumbling block for me.⁷⁸ ^{7:5}My son, guard from her the words of your mouth and do not reveal to her all the mysteries of your heart.⁷⁹ ^{7:6}For my compassionate master made her a helper for me,⁸⁰ for honor and glory, because he loved me like a beloved son.⁸¹ ^{7:7}And I made her an injury for me and a destroyer of my footprints so that she cast me out of Paradise, my kingdom. ^{7:8}And I did not understand my honor, but I was puffed up in my heart by the advice of treachery that she gave to me, a cup of sound filled with poison by the lie of the serpent.

8. ADAM'S IGNORANCE OF GOD'S MERCY

8:1“And I did not understand my priority when I did not (yet) exist, and when I did exist, in what sort of honor I was, nor my authority over the entire world, nor my love among the holy watchers,⁸² nor my entire life inside Paradise, nor, more than everything, the mercy and kindness of my holy master who loved me and was merciful to me like a kind father. 8:2And when I transgressed against his commandment in my boldness, he did not judge me as a Lord who holds a grudge, but as a kind father whose mercy is mixed with discipline. 8:3For if he had judged me according to my foolishness, he would have destroyed me as vanity and made me as if I never existed. And who would stand up against him and say: ‘What are you doing?’⁸³ 8:4But he disciplined me with mercy and did not judge me according to my foolishness, since, behold, my son, I saw the entire creation, which is under my authority as before. 8:5And my deceiver, the Evil One, wanted to humiliate me with his fraud and be liberated from under my authority. On the contrary, my kind master, in his mercy, put him under my feet that I would trample him,⁸⁴ having put fear upon me so that I would not obey his advice again. 8:6And like a judge (in) his justice, he shut his lying mouth and filled it with dust, and he tore off his feet so that he could not walk upon them, (and) he separated him from every animal created like him.⁸⁵ 8:7And all these things happened to me, my son, and I was brought low from my majesty. The cause of all these evil things, Eve your mother, was a stumbling block for me. 8:8But you, my son, guard yourself from her advice and do not obey her as I (did,) but love and honor the Lord of life, my kind master, and he will save you and have mercy upon you.

9. 'ADAM'S PREDICTION OF THE END TIMES

^{9:1}“For there will be from my family and my children glorious and honorable people, (the reciters) of the mysteries of the majesty. And they will find great mercy and will pray, ask, and be heard. ^{9:2}And [text missing] of the majesty, but at the end times of that generation they will again be [rebellious,] and they will not be afraid of my foolishness and of the judgment that I have.⁸⁶ Instead, they shall be headstrong and shall speak blasphemy unto the heavenly majesty. ^{9:3}And they will say many things,⁸⁷ and shall also make painted idols and graven images, and shall even serve the sun and the moon,⁸⁸ and they shall speak words of blasphemy. ^{9:4}And all these things that are among them from the deceits of my treacherous deceiver, because he will offer the love of his fraud and his deceit filled with poison to each of the generations that will be after me. ^{9:5}And he will [show] and make them desire the empty praise of great riches, pride, clothes, property, fornication, boastfulness, injustice, greed, and various possessions. ^{9:6}And he will appear to them like a lover or a friend and entice them. And again, with reveling, drunkenness, impure and defiled feasts, which are an illusion [of his] empty [apparitions,] and again, with possessions of assorted excesses, he will take hold of them with fraudulent affection, which is not virtuous,⁸⁹ just as also to me through Eve.

10. ADAM'S FINAL EXHORTATION TO SETH

^{10:1}“He led me astray by his fraudulent word like an innocent person concerned for my welfare: ‘See, I promise you something right and suitable for you, (namely) that, when you have eaten from the tree, from which you were commanded not to eat, you will become like your God,’⁹⁰ my merciful master. ^{10:2}I, wretch (that I was), did not understand my honor, that his fraudulent promise could not come true, nor could the clay be like its potter,⁹¹ nor the servant like his master.⁹² But I know the great mercy of the majesty of my kind master, which is to be revealed for me at the end of days. ^{10:3}And at the end he will save me from destruction and raise me from the dust as he raised me up when I did not exist.⁹³ And my enemy rejoiced and exulted over me since I had fallen by his deceit. ^{10:4}My kind savior and merciful master is going to sustain me and have pity upon me with his mercy, and [descending] to the darkness,⁹⁴ he will strengthen me by his light and illuminate my eyes as he did before, (when) he breathed the spirit into my nostrils and I lived.⁹⁵ ^{10:5}But you, my son, and your generations after you, it has pleased my maker and my savior that you should find mercy before him; for he does not reckon against you my own sins because of his kindness. ^{10:6}For if he had requited me according to my foolishness, I would not have begotten forth fruits,⁹⁶ nor would he have accepted the offering from your brother Abel,⁹⁷ nor would he have exacted retribution for his blood from the hands of his brother who killed him.⁹⁸ ^{10:7}For he does not neglect in his great mercy anyone who loves him and walks in justice before him. Even to those who offend him, he gives opportunity for repentance, and is gracious to them if they repent and seek (it) from him, because his mercy upon his world is great.” ^{10:8}And Seth heard everything that his father Adam commanded him, commandments more numerous than these, and wrote them down with diligence, and we found them in the books that were placed in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries. ^{10:9}He also commanded and added to them. And Seth purified his heart so that he would not obey the deceitful Evil One, and he praised and called upon the name of the Father of heavenly majesty.^{99 10:10} And Seth also commanded these mysteries to his sons. And we were reading (them) every month that we went up the mountain, and with love we entered the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries. And we also learned them and taught our sons and families.

11. THE APPEARANCE OF THE STAR TO THE MAGI

^{11:1}Then, when the time and fulfillment of what was written in the books happened, concerning the revelation of the light of the hidden star, we were indeed thought worthy for it to come in our days and to receive it with joy, as we were commanded by our fathers and as we ourselves read in the books. ^{11:2}And each of us saw wondrous and diverse visions that were never before seen by us, but their mysteries were in these books that we were reading.¹⁰⁰ ^{11:3}And each one came from his dwelling place according to our ancient custom to ascend the Mountain of Victories [text missing] to wash in the Spring of Purification, as we were accustomed. ^{11:4}And we saw [text missing] in the form of an ineffable pillar of light descending, and it came to rest above the water. ^{11:5}And we were afraid and shook when we saw it. And we cannot speak about the brilliance of the star of light, since its radiance was many times greater than the sun, and the sun could not stand out before the light of its rays.¹⁰¹ ^{11:6}And just like the moon looks in the daytime in the days of Nisan,¹⁰² when the sun rises and it is absorbed in its light,¹⁰³ so also did the sun seem to us when the star rose over us. ^{11:7}And the light of the star, which surpassed the sun, appeared to us ourselves and the sons of our mysteries,¹⁰⁴ but it did not appear to anyone else,¹⁰⁵ because they were removed from its mysteries and its coming. And we rejoiced, and glorified, and gave unmeasured thanks to the Father of heavenly majesty that it appeared in our days and we were thought worthy to see it.

Rogier van der Weyden, Follower of. Polyptych. Mid-15th century. Tempera and oil. Main Panel: 33 3/16 x 55 1/8 in. (84.3 x 140 cm); Upper Wings: 17 15/16 x 7 7/8 in. (45.6 x 20 cm); Lower Wings: 33 5/8 x 16 5/8 in. (85.4 x 42.2 cm). South Lowlands, Brabant, Brussels. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Cloisters Collection, 1949 (49.109). Photo credit: Image copyright © The Metropolitan Museum of Art/Art Resource, NY Panel of polyptych from the workshop of Rogier van der Weyden, mid-fifteenth century, the Cloisters Collection, New York. A similar work to the frontispiece of this book, this painting depicts several details from the Revelation of the Magi. Note the infant Christ in the form of a star, the holy mountain of the Magi, and the Magi bathing in their sacred spring.

12. THE STAR DESCENDS TO THE MOUNTAIN OF VICTORIES

^{12:1}And when we bathed in the Spring of Purification with joy, and we ascended the Mountain of Victories as we were accustomed, and we went up and found that pillar of light in front of the cave, again a great fear came upon us [see detail of polyptych by Rogier van der Weyden on page 51].
^{12:2}And [we knelt] upon our knees, and we stretched out our hands according to our ancient custom, and we praised in silence the vision of its wonders. ^{12:3}And again, we saw that heaven had been opened¹⁰⁶ like a great gate and men of glory carrying the star of light upon their hands. And they descended and stood upon the pillar of light,¹⁰⁷ and the entire mountain was filled by its light, which cannot be uttered by the mouth of humanity.
^{12:4}And (something) like the hand of a smallperson drew near in our eyes from the pillar and the star, at which we could not look, and it comforted us. And we saw the star enter the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, and the cave shone beyond measure.¹⁰⁸ ^{12:5}And a humble and kind voice made itself heard by us, which called out and said to us: “Enter inside without doubt, in love, and see a great and amazing vision.” And we were encouraged and comforted by the message of the voice. ^{12:6}And we entered, being afraid, and we bowed our knees at the mouth of the cave because of the very abundance of the light. ^{12:7}And when we rose at its command, we lifted our eyes and saw that light, which is unspeakable by the mouth of human beings.

13. EPIPHANY IN THE CAVE OF TREASURES

^{13:1}And when it had concentrated itself, it appeared to us in the bodily form of a small and humble human,¹⁰⁹ and he said to us: “Peace to you,¹¹⁰ sons of my hidden mysteries.”¹¹¹ And again, we were astonished by the vision, and he said to us: “Do not doubt the vision that you have seen, that there has appeared to you that ineffable light of the voice of the hidden Father of heavenly majesty. ^{13:2}And again, (do not doubt that) it appeared to you to concentrate its light in its rays, or that it appeared to you in the form of a small, humble, and unworthy human, because indeed, the inhabitants of the world cannot bear to see the glory of the only Son of the Father of majesty,¹¹² unless it appeared for them in the form of their world. ^{13:3}And again, other signs shall appear in it, which are hidden and (would be) shameful for the heavenly majesty, for the sake of the redemption of the lives of human beings, because my Father has loved them that they should not perish¹¹³ by the error in which they have persisted. ^{13:4}And again, I will perfect¹¹⁴ the love of the Father, even unto the death of a cross.¹¹⁵ For the sake of their salvation I will descend to raise them up with me in love and indivisible peace if they shall believe in me without doubt, and give thanks, and glorify through me the Father of that glorious majesty who sent me for their salvation. ^{13:5}And I have loved them that they may not perish by the error in which they have persisted. And therefore, since I have appeared to them in the fullness of all the times,¹¹⁶ they have no excuse¹¹⁷ for their offenses unless they repent and believe in me. ^{13:6}And also you, everything that you were commanded by your fathers, and everything that you learned from the mysteries of the books that you have read, do, since behold, the hidden mysteries of the light of the star that you have been waiting to see, behold, he himself has (now) told you about himself as you are able to hear. ^{13:7}And you will believe without doubt, seeing in me signs of many forms. ^{13:8}And again, take with you the treasure that was deposited in this cave by your fathers and [continue in joy] and worship the [text missing] I will be born like a human being. ^{13:9}And again, worship me there [text missing]: even now, as I am speaking with you I am also there. Because my Gospel has been proclaimed by angels, I am both there and with the majesty of my Father.¹¹⁸ ^{13:10}And I am everywhere,¹¹⁹ because I am a ray of light whose light has shone in this world from the majesty of my Father, who has sent me to fulfill everything that was spoken about me in the entire world and in every land by unspeakable mysteries,¹²⁰ and to accomplish the commandment of my glorious Father, who by the prophets preached about me to the contentious house,¹²¹ in the same way as for you, as befits your faith, it was revealed to you about me.¹²² ^{13:11}And I am going up with you and am a guide for you on the entire journey that you are traveling, seeing signs, glorious wonders, and great victories upon the entire earth. And you will see the completion of all the mysteries in Jerusalem, and everything that was spoken with you will come true for you. ^{13:12}And again, you will see signs of humility, even a lowly and weak form, such that people will act boldly against me, and they will desire to do that which they plotted in deceit against me, and they will not be able to have [their goal] take place. ^{13:13}But all that they do will be for their killing and their destruction,¹²³ and the will of the Father shall be fulfilled for the sake of the salvation of the life of the whole world.”

14. THE MAGI REALIZE CHRIST'S POLYMORPHISM

^{14:1}And when he spoke all these things with us, along with a great many that we cannot say because of the great riches of their majesty, all of us went out of the cave, exulting and rejoicing that we were thought worthy for all these mysteries of that unspeakable majesty to be revealed around us and spoken with us. ^{14:2}And we took that entire treasure that was deposited in the cave, letters having been sealed in which it was placed.¹²⁴ And we descended from the mountain, glorifying the mysteries of the revelations of the light of the star that appeared to us. ^{14:3}And each of us was speaking about the revelations and visions that had appeared to him in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, but our visions did not resemble each other, and all the wonders of many forms that appeared to us.¹²⁵ ^{14:4}There is one of us saying, "I saw a light in which there were many images that were amazing." And there is one saying, "I saw an infant who had unspeakable forms." ^{14:5}And there is one saying, "I saw a youth who did not have a form in this world." And there is one saying, "I saw a human being who was humble, unsightly in appearance,¹²⁶ and poor." ^{14:6}And there is one saying, "I saw a cross and a person of light who hung upon it, taking away the sins of the entire world."¹²⁷ And there is one saying, "I saw that he went down to Sheol with force and all the dead rose and worshiped him."¹²⁸ ^{14:7}And there is one saying, "I saw that he ascended in glory, and he opened the graves, and he raised up the dead, while they are crying out and saying: 'Holy is our king and holy is his descent to us! Because of our sins he humbled himself to save us.'" ^{14:8}And there is one saying, "I saw him ascending to the heavenly height, and angels opening the gates¹²⁹ of heaven before him. And clouds of seraphs and angels are taking him upon the palms of their hands,¹³⁰ and the Paraclete Spirit¹³¹ taking a diadem and a crown and making victory shine before him, and all the hosts praising and singing the honor of his humility, which prevailed in the whole struggle of error and death." ^{14:9}And when all these things and others like them, of which there were many, (happened,) while descending the Mountain of Victories, we gave praise and repeated to each other everything that we saw and heard there. ^{14:10}And we were in great rejoicing and great exultation that we were thought worthy to see this complete gift of salvation for which all the kings, and righteous ones, and prophets, and powerful ones prayed, and hoped, and waited, that they might see this sight. But they did not see it^{132} because it was not then the time of the coming of the star of light, giving perfect salvation to its believers.

15. THE FATHER SPEAKS To THE MAGI

^{15:1}And while we were praising these things, suddenly a voice with much light¹³³ and with unspeakable kindness came to our ears from the heavenly height of majesty, saying to us: “Everything that you have seen, and heard, and discussed, and had spoken to you, and (at which) behold, you are amazed, is (only) one drop of salvation from the house of [majesty.]
^{15:2}For there is no one who can know all the mysteries of singleness except the one who is issued from the thought of the hiddenness of the Father. And no one knows the Father except¹³⁴ the voice bringing forth the word of salvation, revealing the depth of hiddenness of the thought of the Father, in whom he is forever.¹³⁵ ^{15:3}And by the (same) voice and word the heavenly worlds and the lower ones of the Father of majesty came into being and were ordered:¹³⁶ the angels, and powers, and princes, and authorities, even this world in which you exist, and the height, and depth, and length, and width.¹³⁷ ^{15:4}And there is otherwise nothing that exists outside the will of the Father of majesty¹³⁸ or that has come to be without the voice of life. For this is my beloved Son,¹³⁹ being sent of perfect love. This is the revealer of the secrets of the Father for his beloved ones, as it is fitting for them and as they can receive by his gift¹⁴⁰ of the Son. ^{15:5}This is he who has told of new and perfect worlds forthose who are persuaded and believe in him. This is the interpreter of wisdom and hidden mysteries. This is he who is the image and form of the Father of majesty,¹⁴¹ by whom he is always heard. ^{15:6}This is the only begotten Son,¹⁴² perfecting all the will of his Father. This is the one who is not loved and honored as he deserves, because that world loves the darkness and its desires more than him.¹⁴³ ^{15:7}This is the one who was humbled and became a human being for the salvation of human beings so that they would not perish. He put on, by his will, a body,¹⁴⁴ a humble form, that with it he might slay death and take away the dominion of death, to give eternal life to those who love him and believe in him. ^{15:8}This is the one in whose name signs and portents take place through his believers.¹⁴⁵ This is the perfect Son, doing the will of he who sent him. This one is the way¹⁴⁶ and the gate¹⁴⁷ of light for those who enter by it. ^{15:9}This is the one who is in everything and is named and spoken of above all.¹⁴⁸ This is the bread of life that comes down from me¹⁴⁹ for believers; he is the sower of the word of life,¹⁵⁰ and he is the shepherd of truth who gives himself as ransom for his flock.¹⁵¹ He is the great priest¹⁵² who by his blood absolves the worlds; he is a drink¹⁵³ of the vine¹⁵⁴ of life. ^{15:10}This is the one that you saw who is in many forms that appeared to you, but is not deprived of either my love or the person of his glory. And no one exists over him or over his majesty to speak of how he is, except me, and I and he, we are one in unspeakable glory.”

16. THE MIRACULOUS JOURNEY

^{16:1}And when all these things and many others were spoken about the revelation that appeared to us, the star was with us in all (its) excellent forms so we could see it. And we spoke about it like frail human beings, not being able to say anything that we saw. ^{16:2}And we got ready with our whole encampment,¹⁵⁵ and with our provisions, and with the pure and holy gifts, those that we brought out of the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, in which they were [deposited] previously by our fathers, and we went forth in great joy, our hearts exulting to come to the place that was commanded to us, to worship the vision of the star of infinite light. ^{16:3}And the star, our guide, our good messenger, our perfect light, our glorious leader, again appeared for us, going before us and upholding¹⁵⁶ our whole caravan from all sides, and enlightening us by its hidden light. [see The Journey of the Magi on pages 62 and 63]. ^{16:4}And we had no need of the light of the sun or of the moon,¹⁵⁷ because their light became diminished in its sight, and by night and by day we walked in its light, exulting and rejoicing without distress or weariness.¹⁵⁸ ^{16:5}And it prepared before us a blessed dwelling place in which to reside while we rested and exulted. Even our provisions were abundant in our eyes and did not decrease, but rather from one day to another they increased when it¹⁵⁹ came to rest over us with its light.¹⁶⁰ ^{16:6}And it gave rest to us from all our fatigue as if we were not journeying on the road, and it made mountains, and hills, and rugged places level before us.¹⁶¹ Even the rivers before us we crossed by foot without fear, because of the light of our good guide that went along with us for our encampment. And again, when we crossed into the places [of beasts and vicious snakes,] we trampled them with our feet.¹⁶² ^{16:7}And our leader and our guide, in his glory, appeared to each one of us in all forms and appearances in every (stage). And he filled our hearts with great joy, and all the (stages) in which we journeyed were short and swift in our eyes, because our victorious sign and our powerful light, which is beyond every human mouth to speak, guided us with its victorious strength.

17. THE MAGI IN JERUSALEM

^{17:1}And when we arrived in the region of Jerusalem, in the month of flowers,¹⁶³ our good emissary led and brought us inside Jerusalem. ^{17:2}And its nobles and rulers were disturbed and troubled,¹⁶⁴ and they asked us: “On account of what cause have you come here? Perhaps because of the mysteries of your Magianism?” because they saw us looking up at heaven, and worshiping our sign, and praying to our guide, because they did not understand our mysteries, and they reckoned us as Magi.¹⁶⁵

Sassetta (Stefano di Giovanni) (ca. 1400–1450) The Journey of the Magi. Ca. 1435. Tempera and gold on wood, 8 1/2 x 11 3/4 in. (21.6 x 29.8 cm). Maitland F. Griggs Collection, Bequest of Maitland F. Griggs, 1943 (43.98.1). The Metropolitan Museum of Art, NY. Photo Credit: Image copyright © The Metropolitan Museum of Art/Art Resource, NY

The Journey of the Magi by Sassetta, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, ca. 1435. Similar to the description found in chapter 16 of the Revelation of the Magi, this painting depicts the Star of Bethlehem as being in close proximity to the traveling Magi.

^{17:3}And we said to them: “We saw a sign of heavenly majesty in our land, as we were instructed by our fathers, that a king, and a messiah, and a life giver, and a savior who gives himself to death for the sake of the entire world has been born here. ^{17:4}And we have come because we saw all his signs and the forms of his hidden divinity in the appearance of a human clothed with a body.¹⁶⁶ And we came, rejoicing with our pure gifts, which were deposited by our fathers in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries on the Mountain of Victories. ^{17:5}And he commanded us in a great vision to come to this land to worship him in reverence, because he has worshipers in every country.¹⁶⁷ He becomes for them a life giver, and a savior, and a forgiver of sins, and through him the Lord of all is pleased with his creation and makes atonement with his people.” ^{17:6}And Herod, the governor of the region, called and sent for the honorable elders of the city, and asked them: “Where is it written that the king messiah, and savior, and life giver of the worlds is to be born?”¹⁶⁸ And all of them said to him (as) from one mouth: “The village Bethlehem, as was said by the heavenly majesty to our father David, the ancient prophet who lived a long time ago.” ^{17:7}And when we heard from them what they said, again we rejoiced greatly. And while we were exulting, we saw our leader and our guide; again we abounded in joy all the more.¹⁶⁹ ^{17:8}And while we spoke mysteries, and all manner of revelations, and praises, we went in joy to Bethlehem as the blind scribes had read, not believing what they read from their books,¹⁷⁰ nor Herod, the blind governor, [unseeing] of the love of the light that was born in their land, which (was) the light before (all) worlds.¹⁷¹ And they are dwelling in darkness in the world in their days.¹⁷² ^{17:9}But Herod said to us in his deceit: “When you have seen the messiah, come and tell me, that I also may go to worship him.”¹⁷³ And because he was not worthy for the worship of the light that was born, because he was a dwelling of error, it was said to us by our guide and our light that we should not return to him,¹⁷⁴ because he was not [worthy] to see the great light of the world,¹⁷⁵ because he was totally deaf and blind to its worship.

18. ARRIVAL IN BETHLEHEM

^{18:1}And we went and entered Bethlehem in joy, which was worthy to be called the village for the holy birth and for the great light that appeared in it (to kill) and destroy all error and to bring death to an end. ^{18:2}And all of us went to the homestead¹⁷⁶ in which our guide was born, and we saw a cave¹⁷⁷ like the form and appearance of the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries,¹⁷⁸ which is in our country, from which we had learned the hidden mysteries that were preached about him, which were deposited in it by our ancient fathers, and they were all accomplished today in our coming here.¹⁷⁹ ^{18:3}And we saw the pillar of light, which descended as we had seen it before,¹⁸⁰ and it stood in front of the cave, and that star of light descended and stood above the pillar, angels on its right side and on its left side.¹⁸¹ ^{18:4}And when we saw it, again we rejoiced, though being afraid. And the pillar, and the star, and the angels entered and went before us into that cave,¹⁸² in which the mystery and light of salvation was born. ^{18:5}And a compassionate voice instructed us, “Enter inside,”¹⁸³ and we went in after it, and we took our crowns,¹⁸⁴ and we put them under his feet, because the everlasting kingdom is his.¹⁸⁵ ^{18:6}And we knelt and worshiped before him upon the earth, because every knee that is in heaven and on earth bows to him and worships him.¹⁸⁶ ^{18:7}And we opened our hidden treasures, and they being sealed, we took them and came near the treasure of salvation, who is sealed with heavenly majesty. ^{18:8}And we brought forth our treasures before him, who is the treasure of salvation, that we might receive them from him in the kingdom by many-fold before his own judgment seat of salvation.¹⁸⁷

19. Epiphany in the bethlehem cave

^{19:1}And the glorious infant and the ancient light perfecting the will of the Father of majesty opened his mouth, and he said to us with a love of abundant and sweetmercy: “Peace to you, sons of my hidden mysteries,^{188} sons of the East, of the heavenly light, because you have been found worthy to see the ancient everlasting light, you and also your fathers.^{189} ^{19:2}And as you were worthy, behold, you have received him in perfect love without doubt. And again, you will be worthy to see him in his great light before which there will no longer be any mysteries, because they all are fulfilled in him. ^{19:3}And he alone from this time onward rules over all, and all are subject to him. ^{19:4}For it was I who was revealed to you in your land, and I spoke with you by mysteries. And again, I became for you a guide and leader to this place until you came in peace before me. ^{19:5}And again, I shall be with you even until the end,^{190} and I am not separated from you nor from all those who believe in me with perfect love. ^{19:6}And again, you will be witnesses for me in the land of the East together with my disciples,^{191} those who are chosen by me to preach my Gospel. ^{19:7}And when I have completed the will of my Father regarding everything that he commanded me, (I will go up) in the glory in which I was with him.^{192} Yet even now, while I am speaking with you, I am with him and have not become separated from the majesty of the Father.^{193} ^{19:8}Now I shall give to you another sign at which you will be astonished: in the hour that you see the sun darkened in the daytime like the night,^{194} and there is a great earthquake upon the earth, and the voice of the dead is heard from their graves giving praise,^{195} then at that time know that all the times and seasons have come to an end in my coming to you. ^{19:9}And lift your eyes to the (heavens), and see them opened in glory before me, and I am ascending in praise fitting for me and sitting at the right hand of the Father of majesty,^{196} from whom I have been sent to save the world.”

20. ANGELS PRAISE CHRIST

^{20:1}And while the savior was speaking all these things with us, that entire cave shone,^{197} and it became in our eyes like another world, since [in this world] there was no light like it. ^{20:2}And many voices of [seraphs] were speaking and [text missing] which are innumerable: “Yea and Amen!”^{198}
^{20:3}O first-born opener of the secret womb, O holy infant, O completer of the will of the heavenly majesty who is the perfect ‘Yes,’ and through whom everything came into being,^{199} and ‘Amen,’^{200} by your light and by your word they were made perfect, and all the worlds seen and unseen were brought to completion.^{201} ^{20:4}And all the angels and the powers worship you. And yours is the place of salvation, which you will give to your chosen ones. And yours is the ancient light, because you are the beloved fruit of the thought of the Father. ^{20:5}And you are the image and will of the one who upholds all, the revealer of hidden things, because by the word that is spoken all that is in the thought is made known. And you are all, and all is in you, and there is nothing outside of your will.”^{202}

21. THE COMMISSIONING OF THE MAGI

^{21:1}And when all these praises were spoken and we heard, we were afraid and trembled, and we fell upon the ground like dead men. ^{21:2}And the child, the offspring of light, stretched out his right hand mightily and put it upon us.²⁰³ And he comforted us and said to us: “Sons of my mysteries,²⁰⁴ do not be afraid. For all these things that you have seen and heard from the first day until today, and at which you are amazed: even those ones that [you hear] are not greater than I am, but for you they are mighty because you are clothed in weak flesh, yet for me they are very small things. ^{21:3}For because of your frailty, you are not able to see or hear a single one of the wonderful things that belong to me with the Father who sent me. But since you have been found worthy to see and hear these things at this time—and behold, you are amazed as wonderful things are in your sight!—again you shall be deemed worthy by my love, which is with you forever, to see and hear these great things that cannot be spoken now. And neither watchers nor angels are able to speak of them, because these things are very great even for them.²⁰⁵ ^{21:4}Therefore, rise and go in peace to your light-receiving land,²⁰⁶ because you have been deemed worthy to receive the perfect light of the heavenly majesty, and to come and worship it with your gifts in joy. Behold, you have completed everything that you were commanded by your fathers, and you have also been deemed worthy to know and learn the ancient hidden mysteries, which were written for you from the first generations. Now, behold, you have seen the completion of your mysteries, and you have completed everything that you have been commanded for my love and for my witness. ^{21:5}And again, you have been deemed worthy to be witnesses for me in the East with my disciples, who were chosen by me before the world came to be. And when I have completed the will of my Father regarding everything that he commanded me and have ascended to him in glory, I shall send to you some of my chosen ones who have been chosen by me for your land. And they shall speak and witness the truth with you that it may be your seal²⁰⁷ with one accord. ^{21:6}Therefore, rise and go in peace. Again, I am with you in all visions and signs,²⁰⁸ just as I am with you from the first day. For just as I am in sight and in all forms here—and behold, you are amazed by all the visions and forms in which you see me—I am also with the Father of majesty whose will I am since the world began, and I am never separated from you, nor from the presence of the Father, because I am a ray of his light, and I was sent to you to enlighten you. ^{21:7}And behold, you are amazed as frail human beings—how much more when I have come to you in the majesty of my Father. As for you not being able to stand before me, neither (could) the angels and powers that are above you when I descended upon them, and they saw a vision of wonders and stood in fear and trembling. Even as it was fitting for them I appeared to them, and for you I appeared as you were able to see. ^{21:8}For the Father of majesty does not have an image and form in this world,²⁰⁹ except I who am an epiphany from him, since I am his will, and his power, and his wisdom,²¹⁰ since I am in my Father and my Father is in me.²¹¹ And I am—as it is fitting for God to be seen and for the world to know him, and again, as the sons of wisdom can receive and hear with love—the majesty of the Father who sent me. And now I have appeared to you in the form of humanity to fulfill everything that is written about me.²¹² ^{21:9}Because of the reason and the foolishness of your ancient father Adam’s sin, which became your downfall to Sheol, death has had authority over you, and error has reigned in deceit over your generations and has supposed in its rashness that it was lord over you and that you had become its property forever. And again, I have made known to you, your fathers, and even to that ancient race of yours, your freedom, because you are from the race of light.²¹³ And it was not in vain that you were created in the world, and heaven, and earth, and all the worlds came into being for your sake.²¹⁴ ^{21:10}And also, the Father of majesty, because of this love, sent me, and I clothed myself in your form, that by it I might bring to an end and destroy all those who afflict you and your captors. And I shall offer you to the Father, before him as a pure and perfect offering, since there are no blemishes of error on you. And I shall set you free with love, and with truth, with pure water, and the birth of the Holy Spirit,²¹⁵ and you shall be for me by love brothers and believers, like infants in whom there are no blemishes of evil,²¹⁶ from now until forever. ^{21:11}Therefore, joy, and praise, and thanksgiving he²¹⁷ will cause to go up from you in the heavenly heights from you through me, since I am his will. And joy, and redemption, and the fellowship of the Spirit, and eternal life shall be given to you through me, since everything is in agreement without division. As from the beginning under the wings²¹⁸ of the Father will it be, his power, and his wisdom, and his righteous will sanctifying and having mercy upon you forever and ever.”^{21:12} And again, a voice from on high, and from every direction, and from inside the earth was heard, which answered and said, “Amen! The will of complete salvation, joy and peace to all the worlds!”²¹⁹

22. THE MAGI MEET MARY AND JOSEPH

^{22:1}And when we received from him the commandments of salvation, we went forth from his presence in great joy, and much exultation, and with praise, our hearts being filled with great hope, to come to our land. ^{22:2}And Joseph and Mary, honored and blessed people, went out with us, ²²⁰ they who were deemed worthy and entrusted to be called by the name parents and to be upbringers for the offspring of the voice of virgin hearing ²²¹ and upbringers for the perfect will of complete mercy. Mary became the gate for the great light that entered the world in grace to banish the darkness. ^{22:3}And she became the way of salvation for God giving birth to himself, ²²² who appeared in the bodily form of a human being. ²²³ And there will be for her a name, and a memory, and a blessing forever and ever. ²²⁴ ^{22:4}And they lifted up their eyes and they saw the light that was born by his mercy in their house, ²²⁵ which is with us and accompanies us. ^{22:5}And they said to us: “We were not pleased by your coming to us. You have led away the light and the great hope of the whole world, and you have gone away [with him] and [have deprived us] of him. We were deemed worthy by great grace to be trusted to be attendants for it, for the upbringing of the body that appeared in our house, ²²⁶ and now, behold, we have seen him going away with you.”

23. THE MAGI'S REVELATION TO MARY

^{23:1}We said to her: “O woman blessed among women,^{227} O blessed Mary, who was deemed worthy by mercy to receive the conception of the Spirit by your pure obedience and to bring forth the child of salvation of the eternal word, you were trusted and deemed worthy to be called mother for him. ^{23:2}And now, behold, your glorious child is inside of you,^{228} and behold, he awaits you in the house, even while he is not separated from us, as he said to us, because he is the great gift of salvation that by your child was given to all the worlds. ^{23:3}And the mystery that was hidden from the beginning in the Father of all has been revealed to us in your child. And the treasure of salvation has appeared which had been kept for all generations. This great gift and light of salvation is not yours alone, but is (for) all the heavenly and lower worlds. ^{23:4}And lift up your eyes and see that he is in the entire creation and enlightens it all, and it is full of his glorious mysteries. And now he has appeared in the world in a body, and the forms with him are seen in every land, because he has been sent by his^{229} majesty for the salvation and redemption of every human being.”^{230}

24. MARY SPEAKS TO CHRIST

^{24:1}And when Joseph and Mary turned back, rejoicing about all these things that they had heard about the holy child, they went away to their house.^{231} ^{24:2}And Mary entered and found the child of light laughing^{232} about and glorifying all his great and amazing mysteries, proclaimed in the entire world from [ancient times,] and behold, all of them are fulfilled in his appearance today. And he glorified and gave thanks to his Father who sent him for the redemption of his worlds. ^{24:3}And Mary and Joseph worshiped him, and she said to him: “I have rejoiced that I have seen the treasury of salvation, and my light, and the holy child, who is the obedience of my ears.”^{233} ^{24:4}And O opener of my womb by [your] holy mercy, O Lord of my holy virginity, I have greatly rejoiced that I have found my great treasure in my house where I gave birth and my great light, which exists forever. I had thought, O my beloved, that the Easterners were taking you, with your great love for them, in exchange for the gifts they offered to you from your own, since I saw your holy form going along with them.”^{234}

25. CHRIST BLESSES MARY

^{25:1}And he answered in a sweet and humble voice and said to Mary: “Peace to you,²³⁵ my mother and upbringer, since you were deemed worthy to be blessed among women,²³⁶ since you were deemed worthy for the fruit of the voice of salvation. Since you accepted and conceived with love in your mind and with faith without doubt, you shall receive the reward of your service and shall have blessing and remembrance in all (the) generations,²³⁷ and in the new world you shall receive a good reward.
^{25:2}And because of you, Eve and her offspring will have hope and salvation, since by your person you have made her pass beyond the spear that fenced in the Tree of Life.²³⁸ ^{25:3}And by your person tranquillity and peace have happened for all the worlds from now on and forever, Amen! For I, who appeared in your house, have come to fulfill the will of the Father who sent me, and everyone who hears me and believes shall live. For behold, you have perfectly accomplished your own service without a flaw, for which you shall receive a good recompense. ^{25:4}Therefore, I am turning to all my brethren who are in the entire world, that I may perfectly fulfill everything that the Father commanded me for my believers, so that they may bring forth the fruits of eternal salvation. And I shall also give to them all the promises of my Father, which through me are fulfilled, and are given, and are accomplished for my believers and everyone who believes in me.”

26. THE RETURN JOURNEY HOME

^{26:1}And when we came to the first (stage), again the sign of light appeared to us in front of us, and we rejoiced and exulted greatly, and we knelt and worshiped upon the ground before it. ^{26:2}And we glorified the vision, and we answered in our voice as one and said to it: “We worship and give thanks for your kindness and your light, which accompanies [our] encampment everywhere.” ^{26:3}And he answered and said to us: “I am everywhere,^{239} and there is no land in which I am not. I am also where you departed from me, for I am greater than the sun, and there is no place in the world that is deprived of it, even though it^{240} is a single entity; yet if it departs from the world, all its inhabitants sit in darkness. How much more I, who am the Lord of the sun, and my light and word are more abundant [by many times] than the sun.” ^{26:4}And we answered and said before him: “O our light and our savior, we know all these things, and they are true for us. And we believe that all these wonders that we saw with all your believers^{241} are, for your majesty, small things. But for us they are powerful, and no mouth can speak of them or acknowledge any of them.” ^{26:5}And when the time of supper came, we brought out some of our provisions to refresh ourselves, and we saw that our provisions were replenished beyond those provisions that came out of our country with us when we came.^{242} And then, again, we were all the more afraid, glorifying the majesty that was with us, which did not hold back from our weakness. ^{26:6}And when we ate our supper from the food in passing the night, each of us spoke joy and praise. As with a fountain that spouts forth much water, so the visions and wonders did not resemble each other.^{243} ^{26:7}And we spoke to and glorified our guide, and our leader, and the light of our encampment, and the manyforms, and his glorious vestments, and his beautiful images, and his perfect likenesses, which were with us.

27. THE MAGI ADDRESS THE PEOPLE OF SHIR

^{27:1}And we journeyed on all (our stages) with his glorious signs until we came to our borders, and all our families, children, and a multitude of the people of our land came out to meet us. ^{27:2}And when they heard that we had come, they met us with great joy and received us, rejoicing, and exulting, and glorifying. And they marveled at our appearance and the health of our entire encampment.²⁴⁴ ^{27:3}And when we went to them, they assembled and came before us. And we began to speak and narrate for them about²⁴⁵ how our ascent took place, and about the astounding visions that accompanied us, and about our entrance into Jerusalem, and about everything that was spoken with us, and about our journeying to Bethlehem, and about the glorious visions and revelations of the Father of heavenly majesty, which appeared to us in the cave: a great light and wondrous appearances in the bodily form of a humble human being, and about his light of the star, which went before us as a glorious guide. ^{27:4}And when, again, we entered and saw before us the unspeakable glory, and we fell and worshiped the divine child of great light, two angels were standing by and a pillar of cloud²⁴⁶ was standing by, like all the visions that we saw previously on the Mountain of Victories in the Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries, which is in our land. Also, in that cave everything was accomplished in truth, even about the forms and vestments of the glorious and divine child who appeared to us in the cave of Bethlehem.²⁴⁷ ^{27:5}And he spoke to us and taught us, “Behold, all the mysteries, and parables, and forms, and revelations are fulfilled, and everything that has been spoken about me by the prophets and in the whole world from the first day until today.²⁴⁸ From now on let the will of he who sent me be accomplished in me regarding everything that he sent me to fulfill.” ^{27:6}And we offered him gifts that we took from the Cave of Treasures, which were deposited by our fathers from his own.²⁴⁹ And we worshiped him, the Lord of worship, and he opened his splendid and glorious mouth and spoke [salvation] with us as we were able and sufficient to hear it,²⁵⁰ and in this way he planted the word of salvation in us. ^{27:7}And he spoke and revealed to us concerning the place of salvation and concerning the heavenly kingdom of the Father of majesty, the Lord of all, who sent him for the healing of the worlds, to cure their sickness, because they could not be healed by one of the ancient prophets,²⁵¹ but only through the will of the Son of perfect mercy. ^{27:8}And he dismissed us to come to our land in peace, and when we came to the first stage, rejoicing and exulting the entire way, again we found our guide and our light with all the forms that we saw before us.²⁵² And we trembled and were greatly afraid, worshiping and glorifying his majesty, which accompanied our encampment. ^{27:9}And also, our provisions were filling our vessels, overflowing from his blessings, and were even more than the provisions that we had taken with us when we set out to go.²⁵³ And behold, they are sitting filled before your²⁵⁴ eyes, our vessels overflowing from them, because of the power of his blessings, which settled upon us, and so that they might be proved true for you and you might believe everything—the visions and wonders that we saw—and that you also might be deemed worthy to become believers and chosen ones for him. ^{27:10}And his great power and his revelations will indeed stay with you, because he is also here [with us] in truth, as he spoke to us,²⁵⁵ and we believe that his light is not removed from our encampment. Indeed, again, he is in the entire world, for he is the light that is all-sufficient and all-enlightening²⁵⁶ by his perfect love.²⁵⁷ ^{27:11}Everyone who wishes, receive without doubt, with a whole heart and true faith, and eat from these provisions, which have come with us. And be deemed worthy, and you, too, join in his blessing, which accompanies us and is with us forever.

28. THE PEOPLE EAT THE MAGI'S FOOD

^{28:1}And some of the people,²⁵⁸ rejoicing in love, took of those provisions and ate. And they began rejoicing and leaping for joy, while glorifying and saying to each other everything that appeared to them.²⁵⁹ There was one of them saying, "At the moment I ate of these provisions, I saw a great light that has no likeness in the world." ^{28:2}And there is one saying, "I saw God bearing himself²⁶⁰ in the world as he wished." And there is one saying, "I saw a star of light that darkened the sun by its light."²⁶¹ And there is one saying, "I saw a human being whose appearance is more unsightly than a man,²⁶² and he is saving and purifying the world by his blood and by his humble appearance." ^{28:3}And there is one saying, "I saw something like a lamb²⁶³ hanging upon a tree of life,²⁶⁴ and by him and his blood redemption takes place for all the creatures of the world." And there is one saying, "I saw a pillar of light diving down inside the bowels of the earth, and the dead rise to meet it, and they worship and glorify it with great joy." ^{28:4}And those who ate from those provisions were speaking to each other many other things beyond these, and their minds brought forth much glory day by day. And there was great joy in the entire land of the East, and the nobles, and the poor, and women, and children from the entire land were gathered together²⁶⁵ in the love of our Lord²⁶⁶ before those nobles who were called Magi.²⁶⁷ ^{28:5}And they²⁶⁸ came and heard from them²⁶⁹ the new and glorious teaching,²⁷⁰ and the mysteries, and the revelations, and everything that was spoken with them from that first day that they went out from their land until they came back in joy. And again, day by day, revelations, and visions, and all kinds of powerful manifestations were increased for them. ^{28:6}And the faith increased with the love of the testimony of our Lord Jesus Christ,²⁷¹ by the mighty works which he did through them, that offspring of light who appeared to them until he accomplished the will of the one who sent him in everything and was taken up with glory to that heavenly height, his first abode. And the faith of salvation increased in the land of the East in those who heard.272

29. JUDAS THOMAS ARRIVES IN SHIR

^{29:1}When, again, Judas Thomas^{273} went down there by the will of our Lord when he sent him, again the faith increased all the more in those who heard, through the many mighty works and signs that Judas Thomas, the apostle of our Lord, was doing there. ^{29:2}And when the nobles had heard that Judas had gone there, as the light that appeared to them had said,^{274} they gathered together and went to him to meet with him in prayer and faith. And they saluted Judas with complete love, rejoicing in our Lord. ^{29:3}And Judas also greatly rejoiced with them, and while they were with him for (several) days,^{275} they related to Judas how they were deemed worthy to receive from the first day this gift of the light of the world, and about^{276} their ascent to him at Bethlehem and everything that was spoken with them, and about the revelations and visions that they saw there in the cave, and about their descent, how he, in his light, accompanied their entire encampment with many visions and revelations. ^{29:4}And when Judas the Apostle recognized that the gift of our Lord had overflowed upon them, he also related to them about our savior while all the brethren were gathered together as one, and about the mighty works, and healings, and wonders, which he did in the very sight of his apostles, and about the forms of his images, and about his astounding appearances, about which we are not able to narrate, since he was always appearing to us so that we were amazed^{277} by him, and we stood in the outpouring and in the doubt of mind,^{278} since no one had ever appeared in such a way in the days of the world. ^{29:5}And when all the brethren heard what Judas related to them, they all glorified with one voice the Lord of heavenly majesty through his Son, the will of perfect salvation. And they sought from Judas, the apostle of our Lord, to make them partakers with him in the seal^{279} of our Lord. ^{29:6}And Judas said: “My brothers, I also rejoice, because it is for this gift that I was sent in salvation, since everyone who believes in salvation and with love receives the seal of my Lord Jesus Christ in truth, the Enemy does not rule over.”

30. THE HYMN OF JUDAS THOMAS

^{30:1}Then at night, before Sunday, Judas also led those brethren who, rejoicing, had asked him to receive the seal of our Lord also. And he went out to a spring of water, and he took oil^{280} and gave praise over it, and he said:^{281}

^{30:2}“We praise you, O mystery of salvation, which was given to us in oil by grace for anointing.

^{30:3}Glory to you, O hidden mystery, which was given to us in oil by grace for salvation, for anointing.

Glory to you, O hidden mystery, which was given to us in oil for salvation and absolution.

^{30:4}And by it^{282} (you) enlighten us and drive away darkness and error from us.

And again, by its mystery the athletes of the contest defeat their enemies.

^{30:5} Glory to you, O mystery of the oil, since you became worthy to be in fellowship with Christ.

With you the victorious are crowned in the contest, and you are twinned with the Spirit.

^{30:6} And you fly over the water like your (twin,) the Holy Spirit, you mix the soul with mind, and you renew the body with the birth of salvation.

^{30:7} Come, O partner of the firstborn;

Come, O renewer of humanity by the birth to eternal life;

^{30:8} and rest upon these believers, the beloved ones of our Lord Jesus Christ, and purify them and sanctify them from all the stains of their bodies,

^{30:9} and may they become for you temples for your dwelling and rest for the Son of perfect mercy.

And may you perfectly sanctify them with the birth of salvation.”

31. THE MAGI RECEIVE THE EUCHARIST AND COMMISSION TO PREACH

^{31:1}And he baptized them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit,²⁸³ and when they all came up from the water, a certain child of heavenly light appeared to them, who descended from heaven and said to them: “Peace be with you, sons of all my mysteries.²⁸⁴ And behold, now all the visions and revelations that you saw from the first day have been accomplished in your birth.” ^{31:2}And they were afraid and fell upon the ground,²⁸⁵ and when they stood up he appeared to them in the form of a glorious and divine young man. And taking a whole loaf of bread, he gave praise, broke, and gave first to the Apostle Judas, and also to each one of them, and he said to them, “Behold the consummation and sealing of your birth of salvation. From now and forever, be confirmed in my promise.” ^{31:3}And when he was separated from their sight, again they saw him going up to heaven in glory that has no end. ^{31:4}And Judas said: “We glorify your sweet majesty, your singularity in many personifications, your glorious images that you have shown us, and the clothes that you have put on for our sake, that we may be clothed in your powerful majesty. ^{31:5}And by as many names as you have been called, you are not in any one of them, for you alone have known your great name²⁸⁶ and your majesty, and your exalted Father, and no one else. ^{31:6}And all these forms in which you were clothed and appeared for our sake, that we might know you, were because you loved us with your great mercy that was for us, and everything that the crucifiers brought upon you, you endured for our sake, being exalted above all sufferings and being a kinsperson of that one who does not suffer,²⁸⁷ in order that we should have redemption by your grace. ^{31:7}And on our behalf you endured everything and you suffered everything, for you are our advocate, and our guide, and our light, and our savior, and because we have believed in you, we have everything in you. And you have completely given it to us by the trust of your love toward us, you who endured everything for our sake.” ^{31:8}And all the new disciples of the word of salvation answered and said with great joy: “We glorify, and we worship, and we give thanks for your majesty, which is unspeakable by the mouth of human beings because we are too weak for it, and for your great light, you caused to shine upon our weakness, by which you made us worthy in your mercy for your fellowship of everlasting life.” ^{31:9}And while they were delighting greatly in thanksgiving, and prayer, and visions of our Lord, a multitude of brethren were added to the faith day by day.²⁸⁸ ^{31:10}And Judas said to them: “Therefore, my brethren, let us fulfill the commandment of our Lord, who said to us: ‘Go out into the entire world and preach my Gospel.’²⁸⁹ So, my brethren, be you also preachers of the Word like us, because you have also received the gift of our Lord. Also go out to every place and preach the gift of our light and of our savior generously to everyone.”

32. THE preaching of the magi

^{32:1}And they²⁹⁰ went forth from there to every place and preached in perfect love about the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Lord of all, even doing mighty works and healings in the name of our Lord, which are unspeakable by the mouth of human beings, through the Holy Spirit that was poured out upon them by the gift of our Lord. ^{32:2}And they preached the faith of truth, saying and teaching to everyone: “Flee from the darkness and come to the light that does not pass away, so that you may live and have refuge under the wings²⁹¹ of our Lord Jesus, our savior and our great refuge on the last day, from the fearsome judgment of fire that will come suddenly to purify the entire earth from error,²⁹² which has ruled over it in its deceit. ^{32:3}And you shall be delivered by faith from the heat of the fire and shall enter that rest that is prepared for all the chosen and the believers who have believed in the child of perfect light, and in eternal life, in the kingdom of my²⁹³ Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Lord of all, in his heavenly majesty, in his new world, and in his heavenly and great and never-passing-away light, and in his glorious rest. And you shall rest forever and ever, amen and amen.” ^{32:4}The story about the Magi and their gifts has finished.²⁹⁴

SELECT ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

ANCIENT SOURCES

Budge, E. A. W. The Book of the Cave of Treasures. London: Religious Tract Society, 1927. A Syriac retelling of biblical history from Adam to Christ. It has its own “Cave of Treasures” but otherwise shows no obvious links to the Revelation of the Magi.

Chabot, J.-B. Chronicon anonymum Pseudo-Dionysianum vulgo dictum, I. Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium, Scriptores Syri, 3:1. Paris: E Typographeo Reipublicae, 1927. The most recent critical edition of the Chronicle of Zuqnin. It includes the Syriac text and a Latin translation of the Revelation of the Magi.

James, M. R. Latin Infancy Gospels. Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1927. Latin texts of two major witnesses to Infancy Gospel X. It includes an English translation of the Magi episode.

McNamara, M., et al. Apocrypha Hiberniae I: Evangelia Infantiae. Corpus Christianorum Series Apocryphorum 13–14. 2 vols. Turnhout: Brepols, 2001. Old Irish text and English translation of another major witness to Infancy Gospel X.

Migne, J.-P. “Liber apocryphus nomine Seth.” Columns 637–638 in volume 56 of Patrologia Graeca. 162 volumes. Bibliography Paris: Imprimerie Catholique, 1857–86. A very important secondary witness to the Revelation of the Magi; a summary of the narrative from the fifth-century Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum.

Roberts, A., and J. Donaldson. “The Arabic Gospel of the Infancy of Our Savior.” In The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 8: 405–15. 10 vols. 1885–87. Reprint, Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994. Apocryphal Infancy Gospel in which the Magi learn about Christ’s birth through a prophecy of Zoroaster.

_____. “Narrative of Events Happening in Persia on the Birth of Christ.” In The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 6:128–30. 10 vols. 1885–87. Reprint, Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994. An apocryphal writing in which the Magi figure heavily; also known as the Legend of Aphroditianus.

Ryan, W. G. Jacobus de Voragine, The Golden Legend: Readings on the Saints. 2 vols. Princeton, NJ: Princeton Univ. Press, 1993. An English translation of a medieval collection of Christian legends. It utilizes the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum for its information on the Magi.

Tullberg, O. F. Dionysii Telmahharensis Chronici liber primus. Textum e codice ms. Syriaco Bibliothecae Vaticanae. Uppsala: Regiae Academiae Typographi, 1850. First critical edition of the Syriac text of the Chronicle of Zuqnin.

Wright, W. "Eusebius of Caesarea on the Star." Journal of Sacred Literature and Biblical Record 9 (1866): 117–136; 10 (1867): 150–164. Another Syriac legend of the Magi in which they expect the coming of the star, though here it is Balaam and not Seth who is the originator of the prophecy.

Bibliography

MODERN SOURCES

Allison, D. C. “The Magi’s Angel (2:2, 9–10).” In Studies in Matthew: Interpretation Past and Present, 17–41. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker, 2005. Overview of ancient Christian understandings of the Star of Bethlehem.

Boyce, M., and F. Grenet. Zoroastrianism Under Macedonian and Roman Rule. Vol. 3 of A History of Zoroastrianism. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1991. Discusses the Revelation of the Magi and other early Christian interpretations of the Magi story.

Brock, S. P. “An Archaic Syriac Prayer over Baptismal Oil.” In Studia Patristica: Papers Presented at the Fourteenth International Congress on Patristic Studies Held in Oxford 2003, edited by F. Young, M. Edwards, and P. Parvis, 3–12. Leuven: Peeters, 2006. Examines the Apostle Thomas’s baptismal prayer in the Revelation of the Magi, and concludes (independently of my own research) that it dates to the time of the Acts of Thomas.

Brown, R. E. The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke. 2nd ed. New York: Doubleday, 1993. The premier scholarly commentary on the canonical infancy narratives.

Denzey, N. F. "A New Star on the Horizon: Astral Christologies and Stellar Debates in Early Christian Discourse." In Prayer, Magic, and the Stars in the Ancient and Late Antique World, edited by S. Noegel, J. Walker, and B. Wheeler, 207–21. University Park: Pennsylvania State Univ. Press, 2003. Examines the function of the Star of Bethlehem in early Christian debates about astrology.

Duchesne-Guillemin, J. "The Wise Men from the East in the Western Tradition." In Papers in Honour of Professor Mary Boyce, edited by J. Duchesne-Guillemin and P. Lecoq, 1:149–57. 2 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1985. Interprets the Adoration of the Magi from the Cloisters Museum (see page 51).

Foster, P. "Polymorphic Christology: Its Origins and Development in Early Christianity." Journal of Theological Studies 58 (2007): 66–99. An overview of early Christian texts that present Christ as capable of appearing in multiple forms.

Hultgard, A. "The Magi and the Star: The Persian Background in Texts and Iconography." In "Being Religious and Living Through the Eyes": Studies in Religious Iconography and Iconology, edited by P. Schalk and M. Stausberg, 215–25. Uppsala: Uppsala Univ. Library, 1998. Summarizes scholarly research on the Revelation of the Magi that argues for or against an Iranian origin of the text.

Kaestli, J.-D. "Recherches nouvelles sur les 'Évangiles latins de l'enfance' de M. R. James et sur un récit apocryphe mal connu de la naissance de Jésus.” Études Théologiques et Religieuses 72 (1997): 219–233. Argues that Infancy Gospel X is possibly the oldest apocryphal Infancy Gospel, even older than the Protevangelium of James.

Kehl, A. “Der Stern der Magier: Zu §94 des lateinischen Kindheitsevangeliums der Arundel-Handschrift.” Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum 18 (1975): 69–80. Compares the Revelation of the Magi to the Magi episode from a Latin witness to Infancy Gospel X.

Kehrer, H. Die Heiligen Drei Könige in Literatur und Kunst. 2 vols. Leipzig: E. A. Seemann, 1908. Foundational study of the iconography of the Magi, from early through medieval Christianity.

Landau, B. C. “‘One Drop of Salvation from the House of Majesty’: Universal Revelation, Human Mission, and Mythical Geography in the Syriac Revelation of the Magi.” In Proceedings of Late Antique Crossroads in the Levant Research Colloquium, edited by E. B. Aitken and J. M. Fossey. Leiden: E. J. Brill, forthcoming. Examines the unusual beliefs of the Revelation of the Magi concerning Christology, revelation, and mission.

_____. “The Revelation of the Magi in the Chronicle of Zuqnin.” Apocrypha 19 (2008): 182–201. Introduces the major scholarly issues regarding the Revelation of the Magi.

_____. The Sages and the Star-Child: An Introduction to the Revelation of the Magi, An Ancient Christian Apocryphon. Th.D diss., Harvard Divinity School, 2008. First translation and major scholarly study of the Revelation of the Magi in English. Accessible online at <http://ou.academia.edu/BrentLandau/Papers>.

. “The Unknown Apostle: A Pauline Agraphon in Clement of Alexandria’s Stromateis.” Annali di Storia dell’Esegesi 25 (2008): 117–27. Interpretation of a “quotation” of the Apostle Paul asserting pagan foreknowledge of Christ’s coming.

Luz, U. Matthew 1–7. Hermeneia: A Critical and Historical Commentary on the Bible. Edited by H. Koester. Translated by J. E. Crouch. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2007. The most recent major commentary on Matthew, emphasizing the history of interpretation of the Magi story.

Monneret de Villard, U. Le leggende orientali sui Magi evangelici. Studi e Testi 163. Vatican City: Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, 1952. A thorough overview of eastern Christian legends about the Magi. It includes an Italian translation and analysis of the Revelation of the Magi.

Reed, A. Y. “Beyond the Land of Nod: Syriac Images of Asia and the Historiography of the West.” History of Religions 49 (2009): 48–87. Discusses the Revelation of the Magi as one of several examples of Syriac Christian imaginings of China.

Reinick, G. J. “Das Land ‘Seiris’ (Šir) und das Volk der Serer in jüdischen und christlichen Traditionen.” Journal for the Study of Judaism 6 (1975): 72–85. Studies ancient Greek, Roman, Jewish, and Christian beliefs about the land of Shir and its inhabitants.

Screech, M. A. “The Magi and the Star (Matthew, 2).” In Histoire de l’exégèse au XVI^e siècle, edited by O. Fatio and P. Fraenkel, 385–409. Geneva: Droz, 1978. Examines the influence of the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum on medieval and Renaissance views of the Magi.

Trexler, R. C. The Journey of the Magi: Meanings in History of a Christian Story. Princeton, NJ: Princeton Univ. Press, 1997. An overview of the history of interpretation of Magi story, emphasizing its political dimensions.

Tubach, J. “Der Apostel Thomas in China: Die Herkunft einer Tradition.” Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 108 (1997): 58–74. Examines traditions that the Apostle Thomas visited China as a missionary.

Widengren, G. Iranisch-semitische Kulturbegegnung in parthischer Zeit. Cologne and Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1960. First in this author’s series of publications that claim an Iranian origin for the Revelation of the Magi.

_____. Die Religionen Irans. Stuttgart: W. Kohlhammer, 1965.

_____. Les religions de l'Iran. Paris: Payot, 1968.

Witakowski, W. "The Magi in Syriac Tradition." In Malphono w-Rabo d-Malphone: Studies in Honor of Sebastian P. Brock, edited by G. A. Kiraz, 809–43. Piscataway, NJ: Gorgias Press, 2008. Examines Syriac interpretations of the Magi story, with special emphasis on the Revelation of the Magi.

_____. The Syriac Chronicle of Pseudo-Dionysius of Tel-Mahre: A Study in the History of Historiography. Uppsala: Uppsala Univ. Press, 1987. Studies the historiographical methods used by the author of the Chronicle of Zuqnin.

CONCLUSION

The Meanings of the “Revelation of the Magi”

What are the most important things we learn from the Revelation of the Magi? Is it merely a colorful and captivating piece of fiction? Or does it tell us anything about the Magi and the Christmas story that we wouldn't otherwise know? What might be the broader significance of this ancient tale—not just for scholars who specialize in early Christianity, but for a wide range of lay readers as well?

Two points especially come to mind. First, the Revelation of the Magi is an outstanding example of how much influence writings outside of the Bible can have on our conceptions of biblical texts, people, and events. Of course, some readers may deny that their understandings of the Bible are determined by anything other than the Bible itself. But to illustrate how apocryphal writings can shape our views of biblical stories, I'd like you to ask yourself this question: in the Christmas story, how do Mary and Joseph get to Bethlehem?

I would imagine that many of you said that they used a donkey. Indeed, some of you may have been more specific: that Mary rode the donkey while Joseph walked. But take a look at Luke 2:1–7, the most famous account of the Christmas story and of the census that brought Mary and Joseph to Bethlehem.

In those days a decree went out from Emperor Augustus that all the world should be registered. This was the first registration and was taken while Quirinius was governor of Syria. All went to their own towns to be registered. Joseph also went from the town of Nazareth in Galilee to Judea, to the city of David called Bethlehem, because he was descended from the house and family of David. He went to be registered with Mary, to whom he was engaged and who was expecting a child. While they were there, the time came for her to deliver her child. And she gave birth to her firstborn son and wrapped him in bands of cloth, and laid him in a manger, because there was no place for them in the inn.

Do you see the familiar donkey mentioned anywhere? Why isn't it mentioned? The reality is that although it has become common knowledge that Mary and Joseph used a donkey to get to Bethlehem, this information isn't found anywhere in Luke or, in fact, in the rest of the Bible.

The famous donkey first appears in the Protevangelium of James, a second-century apocryphal Infancy Gospel. Here is what that writing says:

He [i.e., Joseph] saddled the donkey and seated her [i.e., Mary] on it; and his son led it along, while Joseph followed behind.
(Protevangelium of James 17:2)

From its debut in the Protevangelium, the donkey appeared in other ancient retellings of the Christmas story, and from there to Christmas pageants, greeting cards, carols, and so forth—despite its never being mentioned at all in the Bible! Might the Revelation of the Magi, like the Protevangelium, also have elements that have influenced our understanding of the Christmas story?

To my knowledge, there is nothing in the Revelation of the Magi that has filtered into the version of the Christmas story that we know today, certainly not like the donkey has. Yet the Revelation of the Magi has not always been as invisible as it is now. In fact, for European Christians in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, this story had an immense influence.

How did the Revelation of the Magi, an ancient Syriac writing, become such a powerful influence in medieval and Renaissance Europe? Recall that in the introduction, I mentioned a summary of the Revelation of the Magi found in the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum, a fifth-century Latin commentary on the Gospel of Matthew. When I discussed it before, its significance was as a key witness to the Revelation of the Magi, helping us to learn how old the text actually might be. But my very brief mention of the Opus Imperfectum does not do justice to how influential this text became in the centuries after which it was composed.

We don't know who wrote the Opus Imperfectum; all we can infer is that it was written in the fifth century and that the author lived somewhere close to the great city of Constantinople. But for reasons unknown, it became incorrectly attributed to Saint John Chrysostom, a major Christian thinker and bishop in fourth-century Antioch. Because it was believed to have been penned by Chrysostom, the Opus Imperfectum continued to be copied and read throughout medieval Europe.

And this meant that its legend about the Magi also entered the world of medieval Christianity. Several pieces of artwork are reproduced in this book that show unquestionable influence from the Revelation of the Magi. Consider the two paintings associated with Rogier van der Weyden and his school, which today reside in the Gemäldegalerie in Berlin and the Cloisters Museum in New York, respectively (see frontispiece and page 51). In each of these, the three Magi stand in awe of the Christ child, who prominently hovers above them in the form of a star! As I said in the introduction, the Revelation of the Magi is the only ancient Christian text to identify the Star of Bethlehem with the celestial Christ himself, which makes it virtually certain that this legend is the source of these paintings. Further details confirm this. Behind the Magi stands their sacred mountain, the Mountain of Victories. And in the Cloisters painting, the Magi again appear in the background, immersing themselves in their Spring of Purification. The influence of the Revelation of the Magi is also evident in the depictions of the Magi found in manuscripts and printed books of the Speculum Humanae Salvationis (Mirror of Human Salvation), an immensely popular devotional writing of the fourteenth century (see Speculum Humanae Salvationis on pages 40 and 41).

Apart from inspiring artistic representations of the Magi, this legend also captivated Christian thinkers as distinguished as Saint Thomas Aquinas. In the Summa Theologica, his greatest work, Aquinas uses the Revelation of the Magi as evidence that the Star of Bethlehem was a clear and unmistakable way for God to tell human beings about the birth of Christ. Even if the meaning of the star wasn't obvious to everyone, it certainly was to the Magi, who knew about its coming through Seth's books of revelation and were waiting attentively for it.^{295}

The Revelation of the Magi even influenced the way explorers of the New World understood the indigenous cultures they encountered (see Adoration of the Magi on page 95). Two examples will suffice. First, there is the seventeenth-century Augustinian monk Antonio de la Calancha, who studied the Incan culture of Peru. He was impressed by the similarities between Andean traditional religion and Christianity, and he believed that the Apostle Thomas and the Magi must have missionized the region together, just as the Opus Imperfectum indicated.^{296} Second, the Franciscan missionary and historian Juan de Torquemada described the belief among some of the Aztecs that the conquistador Cortés was the god Quetzalcoatl with recourse to this legend. Just as the Magi had stood atop the Mountain of Victories awaiting the fulfillment of their prophecy, Torquemada notes, so, too, did the Aztecs anxiously await the foretold return of Quetzalcoatl, and were all too willing to accept Cortés as the returned Quetzalcoatl when Spanish ships appeared off the Mexican coast.

Vasco Fernandes (ca. 1480–ca. 1543) Adoration of the Magi. Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga, Lisbon, Portugal. Photo Credit : Scala/White Images/Art Resource, NYT8829

Adoration of the Magi, attributed to Vasco Fernandes, Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga, Lisbon, Portugal. This early-sixteenth-century painting represents one of the three Magi as a Native American. Both the biblical story of the Magi and the Revelation of the Magi influenced the ways in which explorers of the New World interpreted indigenous cultures of the Americas.

So the legend found in the Revelation of the Magi was demonstrably important for Christians in Europe half a millennium ago. And it is a powerful example of the way that an apocryphal writing can strongly influence understandings of biblical events, even if it does not figure into the portrayal of the “Wise Men” in the Christmas story as we know it today.

But as my second and final remark, I want to suggest a different reason that the Revelation of the Magi may be especially relevant for today’s world. Speaking for a moment as a theologian rather than a historian, I think that the most important thing about the Revelation of the Magi may not be what it says about the Magi, but what it says about Christ.

Recall that in the introduction I asked the question of why the Revelation of the Magi has been so neglected by modern scholars of early Christianity that it has only now been translated into English. The answer I gave there was that it had the misfortune of being preserved in a language few scholars knew, and of being part of not one but two neglected spheres of early Christian literature— stories about Jesus’s birth, and writings that were not included in the New Testament.

But one might as willingly believe, if so inclined, that the introduction of the Revelation of the Magi to a wide audience at this precise moment in time is hardly a matter of chance. As already discussed, the Revelation of the Magi has a very unusual understanding of the origins of the world’s religious traditions. Instead of seeing non-Christian religions as products of human vanity or demonic inspiration, as most ancient Christians did, the Revelation of the Magi sees potentially all revelation as coming from Christ himself. Moreover, because the star-child never reveals himself to the Magi as Christ, the Revelation of the Magi apparently believes that having an experience of Christ’s presence is much more important than being a Christian.

Taking this radical viewpoint, the Revelation of the Magi practically stands alone among early Christian writings in its positive appraisal of religious pluralism. So, another way of answering the question of why the Revelation of the Magi is now beginning to be studied more closely is that such a text could be fully appreciated only in a moment such as today. Now more than ever before, religious diversity is a fact of life in many parts of the world. And this religious diversity has given birth, in recent decades, to a great deal of theological reflection on the place of Christianity among the world’s religious traditions. It has become more intellectually challenging to insist on the obvious and exclusive truth of one’s religion when one lives and works in close proximity to other people who cherish their own religious tradition just as much. Are those who do not share our religious beliefs foolishly misguided? According to the Revelation of the Magi, the answer of Christ to the Magi appears to be no:

And I am everywhere, because I am a ray of light whose light has shone in this world from the majesty of my Father, who has sent me to fulfill everything that was spoken about me in the entire world and in every land by unspeakable mysteries, and to accomplish the commandment of my glorious Father, who by the prophets preached about me to the contentious house,^{297} in the same way as for you, as befits your faith, it was revealed to you about me. (13:10)

APPENDIX

The Magi Legend from the “Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum”

[The Latin text of the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum is taken from Migne’s Patrologia Graeca, volume 56, columns 637–638. It can also be found, with translation and commentary, in chapter 2 of my dissertation, available online at <http://ou.academia.edu/BrentLandau/Papers>.]

Apocryphal Book Under the Name of Seth. Victorious Mountain.—I have heard some referring to such a writing, even if it is not beyond dispute, nevertheless not ruining the faith, but charming (it), seeing that there was a certain race situated at the very beginning of the East near the Ocean, who had possession of a certain writing having been inscribed with the name of Seth, concerning this star which was going to appear, and (concerning) what sort of gifts to offer it, which was carried out through generations of studious people, with the fathers handing down to their sons. And so they selected from themselves twelve more learned ones and lovers of the celestial mysteries, and they set before them the expectation of that star. And if someone from them died, his son or one of his relatives who was found of the same inclination was set up in place of the dead one. And they were called Magi in their language, because in silence and with a silent voice they glorified God. Therefore, during every year, after the threshing harvest, they went up a certain mountain placed there, which was called in their language the Victorious Mountain, having in it a certain cave in the rock, most pleasant, with fountains and choice trees, going up into which, and washing themselves, they were praying and glorifying God in silence for three days. And they did thus for each generation, always waiting, that by chance in their generation that star of blessing might appear, until it appeared to them coming down above that Victorious Mountain, having in itself a form like a little boy and above it (or him?) the likeness of a cross. And it was speaking to them, and it taught them and instructed them to set out for Judaea. And while they journeyed for two years, the star went ahead, and neither food nor drink ran out from their pouches. And otherwise the deeds that were rendered by them were expressed in the compendious Gospel. However, when they had returned, they continued worshiping and glorifying God even more attentively than before, and they preached to all in their race, and they instructed many. Finally, after the Resurrection of the Lord, when the Apostle Thomas went into that province, they joined him, and having been baptized by him, they were made assistants of his preaching.

ART CREDITS

Frontispiece: Rogier (Roger) van der Weyden (ca. 1399–1464) (workshop of): The star in the form of a Child appears to the three Magi. Right wing of the Middleburg (Bladelin) Altarpiece. Ca. 1445. Berlin, Gemäldegalerie. Oil on oak panel. Detail. 91 x 40 cm. Inv.: 535. Photo: Joerg P. Anders. Photo Credit : Bildarchiv Preussischer Kulturbesitz / Art Resource, NY

(Pages 4 and 5) The Three Kings (Wise Men). Early Christian mosaic. 6th century C.E. S. Apollinare Nuovo, Ravenna, Italy. Photo Credit : Scala/Art Resource, NY

(Page 14) Adoration of the Magi. 5th century c.e. Early Christian. Cypress wood carving from the door. S. Sabina, Rome, Italy. Photo Credit : Alinari /Art Resource, NY

(Page 27) Benozzo Gozzoli (1420–1497) The Adoration of the Magi (with Gozzoli's self-portrait—with red cap). Lorenzo il Magnifico as the youngest of the three Magi. Fresco, 1459. Palazzo Medici Riccardi, Florence, Italy. Photo Credit : Erich Lessing/Art Resource, NY

(Pages 40 and 41) The Three Magi. Speculum Humanae Salvationis, by Ludolfus de Saxonia. Ms.15, f.10r. Vellum. Germany, ca. 1410. Spencer Collection. Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Photo Credit : New York Public Library/Art Resource, NY

(Page 51) Rogier van der Weyden, Follower of. Polyptych. Mid-15th century. Tempera and oil. Main Panel: 33 3/16 x 55 1/8 in. (84.3 x 140 cm); Upper Wings: 17 15/16 x 7 7/8 in. (45.6 x 20 cm); Lower Wings: 33 5/8 x 16 5/8 in. (85.4 x 42.2 cm). South Lowlands, Brabant, Brussels. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Cloisters Collection, 1949 (49.109). Photo credit: Image copyright © The Metropolitan Museum of Art/Art Resource, NY

(Pages 62 and 63) Sassetta (Stefano di Giovanni) (ca. 1400–1450) The Journey of the Magi. Ca. 1435. Tempera and gold on wood, 8 1/2 x 11 3/4 in. (21.6 x 29.8 cm). Maitland F. Griggs Collection, Bequest of Maitland F. Griggs, 1943 (43.98.1). The Metropolitan Museum of Art, NY. Photo Credit: Image copyright © The Metropolitan Museum of Art/Art Resource, NY

(Page 95) Vasco Fernandes (ca. 1480–ca. 1543) Adoration of the Magi. Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga, Lisbon, Portugal. Photo Credit : Scala/White Images/Art Resource, NYT8829

(Endpapers) MS Vaticanus Syriacus 162 ©2010, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, all rights reserved

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many people have helped me to bring the Revelation of the Magi to a wider audience. My work on this text started during my doctoral program at Harvard Divinity School. I am grateful to my thesis adviser, Professor François Bovon, for his careful shepherding of this project from its inception, and his kindness in introducing me to the scholarly community in Europe that is devoted to the study of early Christian apocryphal literature. Professor J. F. Coakley, now of the University of Cambridge, spent countless hours supervising my translation of the Revelation of the Magi from the Syriac. His very patient editing of my work has saved me from embarrassment time and again, and any errors remaining in the translation are entirely my own. Professor Karen King consistently pushed me toward further analytical rigor during the dissertation-writing process. Other colleagues from Harvard who have provided helpful advice on innumerable occasions include Ellen Aitken, Carly Daniel-Hughes, Ben Dunning, Ken Fisher, Anne-Marie Luijendijk, and Laura Nasrallah, as well as innumerable other faculty members and graduate students who offered constructive feedback during seminars and workshops. I am very grateful to the following faculty members for being extremely supportive of my professional development: Susan Abraham, Nicola Denzey, Eldon Epp, Helmut Koester, Anne Monius, and Stephanie Paulsell. I would also like to single out for special thanks Margaret Studier, managing editor of Harvard Theological Review, who urged me to submit my dissertation to Harper Collins to be considered for the Huston Smith Prize.

My new colleagues at the University of Oklahoma have also provided invaluable support, particularly as I worked toward adapting the work of my dissertation for a more general audience. I am especially grateful to Erik Braun, Rangar Cline, Marie Dallam, Kyle Harper, Rachel Knudsen, Rienk Vermij, David Vishanoff, and Jane Wickersham for their feedback. I am especially grateful to my program director, Dr. Charles Kimball, for his strong support of this project in my first year of teaching. I am indebted to the senior members of the Religious Studies Program, Tom and Barbara Boyd, for their kind encouragement and support of me as a newcomer to Oklahoma.

I am exceedingly grateful to Eric Brandt at Harper Collins for his resolute support of my work. His enthusiasm for the Revelation of the Magi has buoyed the project through the planning and editing stages. Thanks to him, the final form of this book is far better than I could have ever imagined. I am very thankful to his assistant, Kathryn Renz, for her kindness and accessibility in explaining various aspects of the publishing process to me, as a first-time author. I am also indebted to the careful editing of Carolyn Holland and Carl Walesa, and to the design talents of Janet Evans.

My family has been my deepest source of inspiration and support. My father, Greg; my mother, Debby; my sister, Elizabeth; and my brother, Brian, and his wife, Leslie, have all encouraged me with their enthusiasm for this project, as have my father-in-law, Bill Bangs, and brother-in-law, Jonathan Bangs. I would especially like to thank my mother-in-law, Margie Bangs, who constituted a crucial focus group of one for my translation and introduction. My grandmother, Helen Mason, and my uncle, H. D. Mitchell, were both eager to read whatever I sent them and put their theological training to good use. Finally, my deepest love, admiration, and gratitude are for my wife, Elizabeth, who is both my toughest critic and biggest fan.

About the Author

BRENT LANDAU received his Th.D. from Harvard University and is an expert in ancient biblical languages and literature. He currently teaches in the Religious Studies Program at the University of Oklahoma and lives with his wife in Norman, Oklahoma.

Visit www.AuthorTracker.com for exclusive information on your favorite HarperCollins author.

ILLUSTRATIONS

Frontispiece. Middleburg (Bladelin) Altarpiece. Right wing, showing the star in the form of a Child appearing to the three Magi. Rogier van der Weyden, ca. 1445. Berlin, Gemäldegalerie.

page 4–5. The Three Kings (Wise Men). Mosaic, 6th century. Ravenna (Italy), Sant’Apollinare Nuovo.

page 14. Adoration of the Magi. Wooden door carving, 5th century. Rome, Santa Sabina.

page 27. The Adoration of the Magi. Fresco, Benozzo Gozzoli, 1459. Florence, Palazzo Medici Riccardi.

page 40–41. The Three Magi. Speculum Humanae Salvationis, Ludolfus de Saxonia, Germany, ca. 1410. New York, New York Public Library, Spencer Collection, Ms. 15, fol. 10r.

page 51. Polyptych. Right wing, detail showing the star in the form of a Child appearing to the three Magi. Circle of Rogier van der Weyden, ca. 1450. New York, the Cloisters Collection, Metropolitan Museum of Art.

page 62–63. The Journey of the Magi. Sassetta (Stefano di Giovanni), ca. 1435. New York, Metropolitan Museum of Art.

page 95. Adoration of the Magi. Vasco Fernandes, ca. 1500. Lisbon, Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga.

Copyright

REVELATION OF THE MAGI: The Lost Tale of the Wise Men's Journey to Bethlehem. Copyright © 2010 by Brent Christopher Landau.

All rights reserved under International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. By payment of the required fees, you have been granted the non-exclusive, non-transferable right to access and read the text of this e-book on-screen. No part of this text may be reproduced, transmitted, downloaded, decompiled, reverse engineered, or stored in or introduced into any information storage and retrieval system, in any form or by any means, whether electronic or mechanical, now known or hereinafter invented, without the express written permission of HarperCollins e-books.

EPub Edition © SEPTEMBER 2010 ISBN: 978-0-062-02023-9

FIRST EDITION

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data Revelation of the Magi. English.

Revelation of the Magi: the lost tale of the Wise Men's journey to Bethlehem/[translated by] Brent Landau.—1st ed. p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references. ISBN 978-0-06-194703-2

1. Magi. I. Landau, Brent. II. Title. BT315.3R4813 2010 232.92'3—dc22

2010004099

10 11 12 13 RRD(H) 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

About the Publisher

Australia

HarperCollins Publishers (Australia) Pty. Ltd.
25 Ryde Road (PO Box 321)
Pymble, NSW 2073, Australia
<http://www.harpercollinsebooks.com.au>

Canada

HarperCollins Canada
2 Bloor Street East - 20th Floor
Toronto, ON, M4W 1A8, Canada
<http://www.harpercollinsebooks.ca>

New Zealand

HarperCollinsPublishers (New Zealand) Limited
P.O. Box 1 Auckland,
New Zealand
<http://www.harpercollinsebooks.co.nz>

United Kingdom

HarperCollins Publishers Ltd.
77-85 Fulham Palace Road
London, W6 8JB, UK

<http://www.harpercollinsebooks.co.uk>

United States

HarperCollins Publishers Inc.

10 East 53rd Street

New York, NY 10022

<http://www.harpercollinsebooks.com>

NOTES

1. The names Balthazar, Caspar, and Melchior are most familiar to Westerners, but these names appear in written sources from only the sixth century onward. Several other lists of names survive from ancient Christian writings.

2. Going forward, I will prefer the term Magi to wise men. First of all, it respects what Matthew calls them, since it is simply a transliteration of the Greek magoi. Second, it leaves unresolved the question of precisely who these individuals are, since it is not at all clear who Matthew believed them to be. Leaving the question of their identity open-ended is important, since early Christians had a range of theories about their identity; the story addressed in this book has its own very distinct understanding of who the Magi were.

3. For other uses of the noun and its cognate verb, see Acts 8:9, 13:6, 8.

4. Matthew's Gospel never specifies whether the star had led them to Jerusalem and then disappeared when they entered the city, or whether the Magi had seen it only initially in "the East." In either case, Mt 2:9–10 seems to imply that the star had disappeared from the Magi for some period of time.

5. All three of these beliefs appear in early Christian literature. One story relates that the Magi were in the midst of their magical spells at the time of the star's appearance; when the spells ceased to work, they consulted their ancient prophecies and learned about the star (see Origen Against Celsus 1.60). Some members of John Chrysostom's congregation in fourth-century Antioch regarded the Magi as astrologers and believed (to his great frustration) that the Magi story showed that astrology really worked (Homilies on Matthew 6.1). Lastly, an ancient Infancy Gospel preserved in Arabic says that the Magi came to Jerusalem because of a prophecy of Zoroaster, the founder of their religion (Arabic Infancy Gospel 7).

6. Precisely when the star disappeared is unclear, just as in Matthew's Gospel.

7. In their book on the infancy narratives, Marcus Borg and John Dominic Crossan demonstrate these differences quite well by showing what a Christmas pageant based on only Matthew or only Luke would look like. See Borg and Crossan, The First Christmas: What the Gospels Really Teach About Jesus's Birth (San Francisco: HarperOne, 2007), 3–24.

8. Two recent scholars have argued for the historicity of some aspects of the infancy narratives. Jane Schaberg, in her Illegitimacy of Jesus: A Feminist Theological Interpretation of the Infancy Narratives (Revised edition, Sheffield, UK: Sheffield Phoenix, 2006), asserts that the detail that Jesus was conceived outside of wedlock is historical, though she does not specify who she believes his father was. Not surprisingly, Schaberg's claim is quite controversial and has not been accepted by many scholars. Andries van Aarde, in his Fatherless in Galilee: Jesus as Child of God (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity, 2001), suggests that the presence of Joseph in the infancy narratives and his corresponding absence during Jesus's adulthood indicates that Joseph died when Jesus was quite young, leaving Jesus to grow up without a father figure.

9. The small number of scholars who investigated the Revelation of the Magi in the twentieth century mainly regarded the text as the product of Zoroastrian converts to Christianity in Iran, written with the goal of reconciling their ancestral religious tradition with their new Christian identity. Although this theory is quite intriguing, I have not found it to be at all persuasive. It is not possible to treat this issue in the very limited space of an introduction; however, the basic fact that these Magi live in the mythical land of Shir—not Persia—is one powerful indication that the Revelation of the Magi has nothing to do with Zoroastrianism.

10. For example, no original copies of any of the writings of the New Testament exist. The earliest copy of a New Testament writing is a tiny papyrus fragment of the Gospel of John, usually dated to 125–150 c.e. (The Gospel itself was most likely written in 90–100 c.e.) Apart from this fragment, the earliest copies of New Testament writings are from the late second and early third centuries or later.

11. Theodore bar Konai tells us that the Magi arrived in Jerusalem during the month of April—a rather odd claim, given that practically all ancient Christians celebrated the arrival of the Magi (Epiphany) in early January. The only other ancient Christian writing that claims that the Magi came to Jerusalem in April is none other than the Revelation of the Magi.

12. A translation of the Opus Imperfectum's summary of the Revelation of the Magi is found in the appendix.

13. The author knows that the Magi's name in their language refers to their practice of silent prayer, that the sacred mountain of the Magi is called the "Victorious Mountain" (as opposed to "Mountain of Victories" in the Syriac text), and that this mountain has a cave, a fountain, and trees (though the placement of these features differs slightly in the two witnesses).

14. Most notably, the Apostle Thomas section of the Revelation of the Magi contains a baptismal hymn sung by Thomas that invokes the Holy Spirit; several similar hymns exist in the Acts of Thomas. The account of the Magi's baptism also shares a number of parallels with baptismal scenes in the Acts of Thomas. But it is important to emphasize that these are parallels of form, not content: the Revelation of the Magi and the Acts of Thomas do not share any narrative elements.

15. This is because the Apostle Thomas section of the Revelation of the Magi appears to have been written in direct response to what is said in the first-person section of the Revelation of the Magi and would not have circulated separately.

16. In fact, as Raymond E. Brown has noted in The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke (2nd ed.; New York: Doubleday, 1993), belief in the historicity of the Magi story has, in the recent past, been used as an indicator of whether a scholar was inside or outside of the mainstream of biblical studies.

17. Of course, there have been numerous attempts to link the Star of Bethlehem to a supernova, comet, or other celestial phenomenon. But these attempts almost always fail to recognize that the behavior that Matthew attributes to the star—especially its ability to mark the direct spot of the child Jesus in Mt 2:9—cannot occur in any natural fashion.

18. If we assume that that Jesus was born in approximately 4 B.C.E. (the most common date estimated by scholars) and that the Magi visited Jesus shortly thereafter, more than fifty years would pass before Paul wrote his earliest letters, which are the earliest Christian writings we possess.

19. The most famous of the apocryphal Infancy Gospels are the Protevangelium of James, which focuses more on the upbringing of Mary than Jesus, and the Infancy Gospel of Thomas, famous for its depiction of Jesus as a vindictive child possessing frequently deadly miraculous powers. The Infancy Gospel that the Revelation of the Magi has used is preserved in medieval Latin and Irish manuscripts and is a lengthy expansion and harmonization of the materials found in the canonical infancy narratives, plus a number of traditions not found elsewhere.

20. This name is on the analogy of “Planet X,” a designation coined by the astronomer Percival Lowell (the namesake of Flagstaff’s Lowell Observatory) for an unknown planet beyond the orbit of Neptune—a hypothesis that, although flawed in some respects, ultimately led to the discovery of the planet Pluto. Although the name “Infancy Gospel X” is by no means ideal, unfortunately so little work has been done on this text that no more descriptive name presents itself.

21. For more discussion of the number of the Magi, see the note at 16:2 in the translation.

22. Pseudonymity, or the practice of writing under a false name, is acknowledged by most scholars to describe the authorship of many New Testament writings. This includes all four canonical Gospels (even if some scholars believe that the nucleus of one or more of the Gospels ultimately goes back to the name associated with the text) and roughly half of the letters attributed to Paul (even if some of the spurious letters perhaps contain authentic Pauline fragments).

23. I assume here that the author was male simply because of the much higher literacy rate of men as compared with women in the ancient world. But none of my arguments about the purpose of the Revelation of the Magi necessarily demand male authorship.

24. The most famous sending forth of the disciples to worldwide evangelism is the so-called Great Commission of Mt 28:18–20: “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything that I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age.”

25. In fact, a number of early Christian writers were uncomfortable with Matthew's Magi story precisely because it did not indicate that their visit to Christ had altered their lives in any fashion. One commentator, Tertullian (On Idolatry 9), solved this problem by understanding Matthew's phrase "they departed to their own country by another way" (Mt 2:12) to mean that they had converted to faith in Christ.

26. These accompanying notes are intended to aid readers in understanding the basic meaning and significance of important passages in the Revelation of the Magi. For greater detail and analysis, please consult my dissertation (available online at <http://ou.academia.edu/BrentLandau/Papers>) and my forthcoming critical edition of the Revelation of the Magi for the Corpus Christianorum Series Apocryphorum, published by Brepols.

27. The titles of the individual chapters are my own, and do not appear in the manuscript of the Chronicle of Zuqnin (the Syriac world chronicle in which the Revelation of the Magi is preserved). Only two symbols in the text require comment. In places where the manuscript has suffered damage, square brackets [] contain what I consider to be the most likely original reading. In places where it is impossible to determine the original reading, square brackets simply contain the words text missing. In contrast, parentheses () indicate places where a word or words have been added to clarify the meaning of the text beyond a literal translation of the Syriac.

28. The short descriptive statement contained in 1:1 is the work of the compiler of the Chronicle of Zuqnin, not the author of the Revelation of the Magi. This is certain not only from the appearance of such statements elsewhere in the Chronicle, but also because this statement misrepresents the Revelation of the Magi in two important ways. First, the statement emphasizes the gifts that the Magi bring, but the Revelation of the Magi cares much less about these gifts than the canonical account of Mt 2:1–12 does. Second, the statement uses the proper name Christ, but this name is used only during the Apostle Thomas's appearance at the end of the Revelation of the Magi, an incident that is most likely a secondary addition to the Revelation of the Magi.

29. The association of the Magi with royalty began quite early in Christian exegesis, perhaps thanks to such suggestive passages as Ps 72:10–11 and Is 60. Tertullian (Against Marcion 3.13) remarks that in the East, the Magi are treated practically as kings. For Augustine in the fourth century, they are definitely kings, and their piety is contrasted against King Herod's impiousness (Sermon 200). However, in the first-person-plural section of the Revelation of the Magi, there is almost no mention of their royal status. The term king never appears in reference to the Magi; the only indication that the Magi are kings occurs at 18:5, where they remove their crowns and lay them at Christ's feet in recognition of his kingdom.

30. The phrase “kings, sons of kings” is how Syriac writers describe hereditary kingship, as compared with the inconsistent manner of succession found in the Roman Empire.

31. The residence of the Magi here derives, unsurprisingly, from Mt 2:1. Throughout the Revelation of the Magi, however, it appears that “East” is not simply directional, but has the status of a specific nation with a corresponding ethnic group (cf. “Easterners” in 24:4). There are nine such usages of “East” in the Revelation of the Magi (in addition to three directional instances), though the name “Shir” (2:4 and corresponding note; 4:1) also appears in the Revelation of the Magi as the land of the Magi. It may be that the “great East” is understood in the Revelation of the Magi as a quite large country or region, of which Shir is the outermost district, as 2:4 seems to imply.

32. This statement reveals the Revelation of the Magi as a pseudepigraphon (i.e., a writing that makes false claims about the identity of its author), stating as it does that it was produced by the Magi themselves. No other Magi pseudepigrapha are known to exist from antiquity, and this is one of only a handful of cases where Christians produced writings purported to have been authored by non-Christians.

33. According to the Revelation of the Magi, the word Magi is related etymologically to their practice of praying in silence, which the text mentions on several other occasions (cf. 1:3, 2:1, 3:8, 5:7, 5:11, 12:2). Yet, a verbal similarity between the words Magi and silence is not easy to find in any of the obvious languages of transmission (Syriac, Greek, or Latin). It may simply be an exoticizing device and not an actual word derivation. Strikingly, the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum (the fifth-century Latin commentary on the Gospel of Matthew that contains a brief version of this same legend about the Magi) agrees with the Revelation of the Magi in almost verbatim fashion on this point: “And they were called Magi in their language, because in silence and with a silent voice they glorified God.” This close agreement suggests that the author of the Opus Imperfectum had not simply heard of this legend, but also had access to a written version of the Revelation of the Magi. In a number of Syriac monastic writings, silence is a means for inducing ecstasy. Unlike these monastic traditions, though, the Revelation of the Magi nowhere suggests that the silent praying of the Magi facilitates ecstatic experience. It has sometimes been thought that Zoroastrian priests prayed in silence, but other scholars have rejected this view. A hagiographic Syriac text, the Life of John of Tella, relates that the Magi frequently convey information to one another in silence by using hand gestures. However, this is not in the context of prayer, but rather the interrogation of a prisoner.

34. This title for God is used infrequently in Jewish and Christian literature (cf. 2 Mc 14:46). However, it does appear in Babylonian, Zoroastrian, and Hindu materials from antiquity. Though it is very difficult to prove that the author of Revelation of the Magi knew of its use in any of these written materials, the fact that it had a reasonably wide currency in non-Christian religious traditions may explain its use here. One of the major agendas of the author is the depiction of the Magi as a kind of quasi-pagan group that nevertheless distantly echoes Christian terminology and practice.

35. The “gift” is an important theological concept in the Revelation of the Magi, mentioned on multiple occasions throughout the text. In the abstract, it is the mechanism by which an unknowable God communicates with the inhabitants of the upper and lower worlds. In a concrete sense, it refers specifically to the revelatory activity of Christ. The Syriac term underlying this concept must be distinguished from the other term used for “gift” in the Revelation of the Magi, which refers to the offerings brought to Christ by the Magi (Mt 2:11; see note at 4:7). The New Testament, like the Revelation of the Magi, generally uses the abstract sense of the term, describing the “gift” of the Holy Spirit, Christ, or God (cf. Jn 4:10; Acts 2:38, 8:20, 10:45, 11:17; Rom 5:15–17; 2 Cor 9:15; Eph 3:7, 4:7; Heb 6:4; Jas 1:17).

36. The Revelation of the Magi is one of only a handful of ancient texts to refer to the Magi as “wise.” For the most part, the familiar description of the Magi as “wise men” appears only from the Renaissance onward.

37. Cf. Jn 1:3.

38. In the development of traditions about the Magi, the attribution of names to them is a relatively late exegetical development. The most familiar names in the West for the (three) Magi are Caspar, Melchior, and Balthazar, but these names appear only in the sixth century in the Excerpta Latina Barbari, a Latin translation of a Greek chronicle. As for the names found in the Revelation of the Magi, I have incorporated without changes the spelling of the names as found in the Latin translation accompanying the most recent critical edition of the Chronicle of Zuqnin. The names play no further role in the Revelation of the Magi's narrative beyond this single mention, and their presence in other Syriac sources strongly suggests that 2:3 is a later accretion to the Revelation of the Magi. In a peculiar case of interrelation, the Revelation of the Magi has a list of the Magi numbering twelve, but nowhere explicitly does it say that there are twelve Magi, whereas the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum does state that there were twelve Magi, without giving a list of names. The information of the Opus Imperfectum is perhaps more archaic, and specific names may have been given to the twelve Magi only at a later time (but cf. 16:2 and accompanying note for a possibly even earlier tradition of a larger, numerically unspecified membership for the ranks of the Magi).

39. The name “Gudaphar” is almost identical to “Gûdnaphar” (Gundaphorus), an Indian king baptized by the Apostle Thomas in the Acts of Thomas. The Acts of Thomas is the earliest written source that narrates Thomas’s missionary activities in India. Although King Gûdnaphar appears to have been a historical figure, it is unclear whether he was indeed ruling at the time that the Apostle Thomas is supposed to have been in India—a very contentious debate in and of itself.

40. In contrast to the “land of the East,” the name “Shir” is less common in the Revelation of the Magi, used only twice. However, it appears in a number of other ancient texts as a mysterious and faraway land, sometimes identified with China. In one of the Gnostic Christian texts discovered at Nag Hammadi, “Mount Shir” is the place where Noah’s ark comes to rest; more remotely, “Mount Nisir” is where the ark of Utnapishtim lands in the Epic of Gilgamesh. The Revelation of the Magi is the only ancient Christian text that identifies the homeland of the Magi as Shir. The majority opinion of ancient commentators was that the Magi came from Persia, understanding the term Magus in its technical sense of a Zoroastrian priest; cf. Clement of Alexandria (Miscellanies 1.15); Origen (Against Celsus 1.58–60); John Chrysostom (Homilies on Matthew 6.2). Most early Christian artistic representations of the Magi also imply this, depicting them in the typical Persian dress of a pointed “Phrygian cap,” belted tunic, and leggings; cf. especially the mosaic of Sant’Apollinare Nuovo in Ravenna (pages 4 and 5) and the wooden door detail of Santa Sabina in Rome (page 14). A notable and early minority opinion regarding the homeland of the Magi is Arabia; cf. Justin Martyr (Dialogue with Trypho 78, 106); Tertullian (Against Marcion 3.13, Against the Jews 9).

41. The concept of a great world ocean outside of the inhabited world had existed in antiquity at least as early as Homer. The location of the Magi's homeland in the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum is described in almost identical language: "situated at the very beginning of the East near the Ocean."

42. The precise geographical layout envisioned here is ambiguous; it is unclear whether the Ocean or Shir is east of the land of Nod. The most logical solution seems to be that the Ocean is directly east of Shir, which is east of Nod.

43. Cf. Gn 4:16, though there it is the place of Cain's exile. Nod is mentioned very little in extrabiblical literature, and in no other cases does it appear to be the dwelling place of Adam.

44. I.e., “when Adam had Seth.” The idea that Adam had received foreknowledge of the future and transmitted it to later generations through Seth or some other means occurs in numerous Jewish and Christian noncanonical writings. This understanding most likely derives from the incident of Adam eating from the Tree of Knowledge, which would have provided him with some sort of predictive ability.

45. Cf. Gn 3:23–24.

46. Mention of Seth's purity also appears in several other Jewish and Christian sources, and has implications for the character of his progeny. See Josephus Antiquities 1.68–69.

47. Cf. Gn 4:26 for the tradition that during the time of Seth and his son Enosh “people began to invoke the name of the LORD.”

48. In claiming that Seth produced a written revelation, the Revelation of the Magi also has some general similarities with writings preserved in the Nag Hammadi corpus.

49. Cf. Gn 7:1.

50. This is the first instance of a phrase, “hidden mysteries,” that occurs on twenty-one separate occasions in the Revelation of the Magi. Roughly half of these times it appears in the title “Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries” (4:1); in this title and elsewhere it generally functions as the primary designation for the knowledge handed from Seth through the generations of Magi (but cf. 30:3, where it apparently refers to Christ).

51. Here it becomes clear that the narrators of the story are the Magi themselves (or more precisely, the generation of Magi living at the time of Christ's coming). This first-person narration continues uninterrupted until 28:4, just prior to the arrival of the Apostle Thomas, where the text abruptly switches into third-person narration.

52. The praying posture of the Magi has analogues in ancient Jewish and Christian literature, even if it is not as well known as the orans position or other postures. It is most commonly mentioned in the Hebrew Bible; cf. 1 Kgs 8:54; 2 Chr 6:13; Ezr 9:5; Ps 68:31; Lam 3:41; 1 Tm 2:8.

53. The “Mountain of Victories” is paralleled in the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum, where it goes by a very similar name, “Victorious Mountain.” The meaning of the name “Mountain of Victories/Victorious Mountain” is difficult to interpret, and several scholars have sought to connect it with one of several mountains associated with Zoroaster. However, these theories have little to commend to them. Holy mountains where theophanies take place are hardly a phenomenon exclusive to Zoroastrianism, and parallels to Jewish and Christian texts, such as Ex 24 and Mk 9:1–8, are perhaps more appropriate.

54. The “Cave of Treasures” also appears in a Syriac writing of the same name. The Cave of Treasures is a retelling of biblical history from the creation of the world through the coming of Christ, usually thought to have been written sometime between the fourth and sixth century C.E. In this work, the “Cave of Treasures” appears as the place of Adam’s burial and as the repository of gifts that are brought by the Magi to Christ (Cave of Treasures 5.17, 6.22, 45.12). In the Revelation of the Magi, however, the primary importance of this cave is its housing of Seth’s books of revelation, though the gifts are also mentioned, albeit briefly. Its usual title in the Revelation of the Magi is the “Cave of Treasures of Hidden Mysteries,” but variants occur both here and in 4:2. The meaning of the phrase “the Mysteries of the Life of Silence” is not at all clear. It would seem to relate to the Magi’s practice of silent prayer, yet the term “life of silence” is not found elsewhere in the Revelation of the Magi.

55. What follows is the prophecy of central importance for the descendants of Seth: the appearance of a star, and thus the manifestation of the Father's Son. The prophecy, like the rest of the Revelation of the Magi prior to 28:6, never mentions the name "Jesus" or "Christ," though allusions to Christian texts are frequent. This feature is part of the author's agenda to refer to Christian names and terminology only in an opaque manner. The idea that the Magi expect the star because of a prophecy going back to Seth is unparalleled in ancient Christian literature. According to Origen (Against Celsus 1.60; cf. also Homilies on Numbers 13.7, 18.4), the Magi were in the midst of magical practice when a luminous new star appeared and caused their spells to lose their efficacy, prompting them to consult the prophecy of their forefather Balaam from Nm 24:17. In On the Star, a composition falsely attributed to Eusebius of Caesarea, the Magi have been closely following the prophecies of Balaam, since they have proven true in the past, and hence they immediately recognize the appearance of the star as the fulfillment of another of Balaam's prophecies. Another pagan prophet who was thought to have predicted the events surrounding the star was Zoroaster. The Arabic Infancy Gospel 7:1 states that the Magi arrived in Jerusalem, "just as Zeradusht had predicted." Zoroaster also predicts the birth of Christ in a narrative preserved by the Syriac writer Theodore bar Konai.

56. Cf. Mt 2:2.

57. The information that the Magi are to expect a “light ... in the form of a star,” rather than simply a star, is significant, since the star is actually the preexistent Christ.

58. The precise role and symbolism of this “pillar of light” in the narrative is unclear. Although the Revelation of the Magi mentions the pillar upon which the star sits ten times, these mentions are always during the sequence when the star appears, descends from heaven, and stands before the mouth of a cave (either in Shir or in Bethlehem). Thus, the pillar has no explicit role as a guide for the Magi during their journey; only the star is named at this point in the story. But it is difficult to understand the significance of this pillar without recourse to the Exodus narrative; indeed, the scribe responsible for the text wrote “pillar of cloud” instead of “pillar of light” at a point late in the narrative (27:4). This is the only time this phrase appears in the Revelation of the Magi (elsewhere it is “pillar of light”), so it may be no more than a transmission error, but at the very least, it demonstrates a possible (if unintentional) reference to Exodus.

59. Cf. 11:5–7 (and accompanying note at 11:5), 16:4.

60. Cf. Col 1:15.

61. Cf. Jn 4:14.

62. The phrase “who sent” (usually followed by “me”) appears twelve times in the Revelation of the Magi. This terminology is strongly connected with the language and theology of John’s Gospel, where it appears more than twenty times.

63. Cf. Mt 2:11. This is the first of several instances where “his” accompanies the gifts that the Magi are to bring to Christ. The translation “his own” presupposes that the gifts in some way have always belonged to Christ, but why this should be so is not made explicit in the text. It is remarkable that the Revelation of the Magi nowhere clarifies precisely what these gifts are, even if it might be expected that they are none other than the familiar gold, frankincense, and myrrh. This lack of interest in the gifts is rather odd and represents one of several departures of the Revelation of the Magi from common trends in ancient Christian exegesis of the Magi story. Other non-canonical traditions have the Magi giving the child a wide array of gifts; cf. the Irish Leabhar Breac infancy narrative 92.3 (an important witness to Infancy Gospel X), where they give a purple stone, a pearl, a garland, a linen sheet, a royal staff, and “other gifts, the like or equal of which has not been found on earth.” In some traditions the Magi even receive a gift from Christ in turn: in the Arabic Infancy Gospel 8:1–6, Christ gives them a band of cloth that does not burn in fire; in the Legend of Aphroditianus, the Magi take back to Persia a picture of the child and mother painted by a servant; in a tale narrated to Marco Polo in Iran, a stone that produces holy fire.

64. The Revelation of the Magi also mentions the unsightliness of Christ's physical appearance at 14:5 and 28:2. Cf. the Apocryphal Acts of the Apostle Peter 20, which describes Christ as "beautiful and ugly, young and old." The Revelation of the Magi and the Acts of Peter share an emphasis on the ability of Christ to shift his form between that of luminous divine being and an unsightly and humble human being. It is possible that these passages refer back to Is 53:2.

65. Sic. It is unclear whether the passive participle of the verb “to kill” by itself is intended to have the valence of “mortal,” if it foreshadows Christ’s later death (cf. the “sign of the cross” in 4:8), or if some other meaning is intended for this difficult reading.

66. The commencing of the ritual on this date could suggest an allusion to the celebration of Christmas on December 25, the date established by the Roman church in 337. Some Eastern Christian communities—in particular, the Jerusalem church—were resistant to this date until the fifth and sixth centuries, preferring the date of January 6. Yet the ritual's occurrence every month complicates this supposition, even if it is difficult to understand the significance of the twenty-fifth apart from the date of Christmas. Furthermore, the Revelation of the Magi has the Magi arrive in Jerusalem during the month of April, “the month of flowers” (17:1), and since they go to Bethlehem very soon after and witness the birth of Jesus in a cave, this would suggest the date of his birth sometime in April (though birth is not necessarily the best terminology for a transformation from star into a luminous child). In any case, the mention of the twenty-fifth of the month cannot be reliably used to argue for a post-Constantinian dating of the first-person section of the Revelation of the Magi.

67. This combination of trees occurring naturally within a single habitat is, from an ecological perspective, impossible, and thus is part of an idealized cultic landscape. The combination of a mountain, cave, spring, and sacred grove brings together some of the most characteristic features of sacred geography.

68. In ancient Jewish and Christian writings, especially pleasing smells often signify divinity and/or moral goodness. Syriac Christian writings are particularly noteworthy for their emphasis on this sometimes overlooked sense.

69. The Revelation of the Magi does not specify how much time has elapsed between the Magi's purification on the twenty-fifth of the month and their ascent of the mountain on the first day of the next month. If it follows a Roman calendar, the number of days in a given month would vary. Since this narrative is set in a semimythical country, however, it is very difficult to give precise durations for the different stages of the ritual.

70. Cf. 3:8.

71. This passage, which seems to indicate that some people rejected the teaching of the Magi, is very difficult to understand. The Revelation of the Magi never again discusses these dissenters (but cf. 28:1) and here indicates only that their rejection has to do with the practice of silent prayer espoused by the Magi (cf. note at 1:2). Silent prayer was rather uncommon in ancient religions and often viewed with some suspicion, but this is the only mention of it in the Revelation of the Magi that has a negative connotation.

72. The next four chapters are presented as an excerpt from the books of revelation produced by Seth and entrusted to the Magi. Though this extended flashback might appear to derail the progression of the plot by breaking away from the Magi, it explains the ultimate origins of the Magi's knowledge and details the first appearance of the star. In addition, since it occurs immediately after the description of the Magi's monthly ritual and immediately prior to the appearance of the star during their ritual, it provides the impression of the passage of some time between the initiation of the present generation of Magi by their fathers and the fulfillment of the ancient prophecy.

73. Cf. Gn 4:25.

74. Cf. 11:7 and 17:2, which indicate that the star was visible only to those who were deemed worthy to see it.

75. Cf. Mk 3:24.

76. Cf. Gn 2:21–22.

77. Cf. Gn 2:23.

78. Similar to 1:2 and 2:1 above, the phrasing of this sentence seems to imply a play on words between time and stumbling block. However, as with the apparent connection between Magi and silence, it is not at all clear what similarity exists between these two words.

79. Though the term mysteries is frequently used with reference to the central ritual of the Magi, it is not clear whether this statement is a directive only to Seth and only with reference to Eve, or whether it is understood to prohibit more broadly women's participation in the Magi's activities. While those who constitute the Magi's ranks are almost always gendered with masculine terms like father and son, the Magi also instruct their "families," of which women are certainly a part. Still, the handing down of tradition through the lineage of the Magi is predicated on transmission from father to son, with the son taking the father's place at his death, so the role of women is rather limited.

80. Cf. Gn 2:18.

81. Cf. Mk 1:11.

82. It is not clear precisely from where the ideas about Adam having priority before he was created and about the watchers loving him derive. This may be a distant echo of the tradition, found in the Life of Adam and Eve 14:1–3, that God instructed the angels to worship Adam.

83. Cf. Gn 4:10; Dn 4:35; Rom 9:20.

84. Cf. Gn 3:15.

85. Cf. Gn 3:14; Is 65:25; Mi 7:17; Rom 16:20.

86. It is not clear whether these individuals whose decline in the last days Adam predicts in 9:2–6 are the human race generally, the lineage of the Magi specifically, or perhaps some other group. But if the text means to imply that the Magi have fallen into apostasy, this is not suggested anywhere other than here.

87. The mention of blaspheming and “saying many things” stands in sharp contrast to the emphasis placed by the Revelation of the Magi on both the silent prayer of the Magi and the ineffability of the Father.

88. These criticisms of the veneration of heavenly bodies are especially interesting to find in a text so devoted to the Magi, since a chief concern of a number of ancient Christian exegetes regarding Mt 2:1–12 was the potential of this text to be read as demonstrating the efficacy of astrology. Beyond this passing comment, the overall depiction of the Magi in the Revelation of the Magi as less like a band of astrologers and more like a doomsday cult (i.e., waiting for one pivotal otherworldly event, not continually interpreting the sky to discern the present and foretell the future) may very well address from a different angle some of these same concerns. For examples of this uneasiness, see: Tertullian (On Idolatry 9), in which he asserts that the Magi left behind the magical practice of astrology after their visit to Bethlehem, deducing this from the information that they returned to their homeland “by another way”; John Chrysostom, (Homilies on Matthew 6.1), where he laments that some Christians infer the acceptability of astrological practices from Matthew’s story.

89. Criticism of these sorts of acts of profligate living is quite widespread in ancient texts, so it is impossible to know whether these are directed at specific problems in a community or are simply stock phrases of moral exhortation. However, it is noteworthy that the Revelation of the Magi, unlike much early Syriac literature, does not have a strong ascetical agenda. The Magi do not engage in celibacy or other world-denying practices, nor is such a lifestyle advocated by Judas Thomas at the end of the Revelation of the Magi, unlike his counterpart in Acts of Thomas.

90. Cf. Gn 3:5. The speaker of these words is, of course, the serpent.

91. Cf. Is 29:16, 45:9, 64:8; Jer 18:4–6.

92. Cf. Jn 13:16.

93. Cf. Gn 2:7.

94. This statement refers to the tradition of Christ descending into Hell in the time between his death and Resurrection, often called the “harrowing of Hell.” The specific intention in the Revelation of the Magi, to redeem Adam, is also referenced in a number of ancient Christian texts, but other incidents (such as the binding of the devil) find mention as well. The tradition has its canonical origins in Eph 4:9 and 1 Pt 3:19–20, 4:6.

95. Cf. Gn 2:7.

96. Cf. Gn 4:1–2.

97. Cf. Gn 4:4.

98. Cf. Gn 4:10–12.

99. Cf. Gn 4:26; also 3:2 above.

100. It seems that 11:1–2 should not be read as a “real-time” description of the star’s appearance, the account of which begins in 11:3. Instead, these two verses likely function as summary statements to indicate that the star appeared during this generation of Magi’s time, and that the visions that they saw at the time of the star’s coming were predicted by the books of revelation.

101. Several other early Christian texts describe the Magi's star as inordinately bright. The earliest such description is Ignatius of Antioch's Epistle to the Ephesians 19:2, where the star is brighter than all other stars, which form a circle around it. Somewhat later in the second century, in the Protevangelium of James 21:8, the Magi describe the star as being so bright that it makes all other stars disappear. There is no indication, however, in either of these texts that this celestial phenomenon is invisible to everyone except the Magi.

102. The month of Nisan is equivalent to April, though it is strange to have such a culturally specific reference in a text situated, for the most part, in a locale that is almost otherworldly. However, the phrase “in the days of Nisan” can also be translated idiomatically as “in springtime.” In either case, see the note directly below.

103. I.e., “the moon is absorbed in the light of the sun.” This statement is odd because it places the phenomenon of a faint daytime moon at a specific time of the year—namely, Nisan/April (or possibly springtime). However, as is well known, the daytime moon is visible throughout the entire year, and not simply in April. The analogy itself—that the star is so bright that it makes the sun appear as faint as the daytime moon normally does—is quite clear, creative, and vivid, even if the reference to April is difficult to understand.

104. The phrase “the sons of our mysteries” (as opposed to “our sons” at 5:1) seems to indicate, along with 5:9 and 5:11, that the order of the Magi does not perpetuate strictly through biological succession (as 5:10 might imply) but is open to “converts.”

105. The tradition that the star of the Magi was visible only to them is a definite minority position in ancient Christian exegesis. It is, however, one of several striking agreements between the Revelation of the Magi and Infancy Gospel X. Because these two texts agree on what is such an unusual interpretation of the Star of Bethlehem, it is very likely that there is some sort of literary relationship between them.

106. Cf. Jn 1:51; Gn 28:12.

107. Cf. 4:2 and corresponding note.

108. Cf. 20:1.

109. Cf. 4:8. Latin and Irish witnesses to Infancy Gospel X also describe the birth of Christ as a mass of light that gradually dissipates until it assumes the form of an infant.

110. Cf. Lk 24:36; Jn 20:19, 21, 26.

111. Cf. 19:1, 21:2, 25:1, 31:1.

112. Cf. Jn 1:14.

113. Cf. Jn 3:16.

114. Cf. Jn 19:30.

115. Cf. Phil 2:8.

116. Cf. Gal 4:4.

117. Cf. Rom 1:20, 2:1.

118. This idea that Christ can be both in the presence of the Father and on earth at the same time may be related to a variant reading in Jn 3:13, which states that the Son of Man, who has ascended into and descended from heaven, is (currently) in heaven. Regardless of the origin of the idea, however, the Revelation of the Magi is evidently very invested in the ability of Christ to appear in multiple locations and forms simultaneously.

119. Cf. Col 3:11; Gospel of Thomas 77.

120. This sentence contains an intriguing theological concept: that Christ is the underlying reality of all systems of religious belief in the world. Although other early Christian writings admit the possibility of revelation through non-Christian channels (e.g., Acts 14:15–17, 17:22–31), the Revelation of the Magi demonstrates a novel “theology of world religions,” the precise form of which is found nowhere else, to my knowledge, in ancient Christian sources.

121. Cf. Ez 3:9.

122. Cf. Gospel of Philip 57:28–58:10.

123. The idea that those involved in the killing of Christ have come to an evil end appears in numerous early Christian writings (e.g., 1 Thes 2:15; Mt 27:25).

124. The final phrase of this sentence is rather difficult to understand. It may mean that there were letters that the Magi were to open only at the time of the star's coming, giving specific instructions for the gifts to be brought. However, the more likely sense is that the gifts, whatever they were, were housed in some kind of sealed container(s), here called "letters." This is the probable meaning, based upon the statement in 18:7 that the Magi had brought their treasures to Bethlehem "sealed."

125. The series of statements that follow demonstrate Christ's polymorphous ability, a tradition that appears in a number of other ancient Christian texts. This concept seems to derive from the account of Jesus's transfiguration (Mk 9:2–8) and from the Resurrection appearance stories, but it undergoes considerable development in the second and third centuries, where it appears in the Acts of John 88–94, the Acts of Thomas 143, and the Acts of Peter 20–21. In some traditions about the Magi, including the Armenian Infancy Gospel and a legend told to Marco Polo in Iran in the twelfth century, Jesus appeared to each of the three Magi in correspondence to their ages: as young, middle-aged, and old. In another impressive parallel to the Revelation of the Magi, the best Latin witness of Infancy Gospel X has the infant Jesus change his form as the shepherds are viewing. A unique aspect of the polymorphic vision in the Revelation of the Magi, not seen in other texts, is that its individual pieces in sequence tell the story of Christ's birth, growth, and death, culminating with his descent into Sheol and his heavenly ascent. A polymorphic appearance of Christ also occurs later in the Revelation of the Magi, this time for the inhabitants of Shir after they have eaten of the food brought back by the Magi (28:1–3).

126. Regarding Christ's ugliness, see note at 4:8.

127. Cf. Jn 1:29.

128. Cf. 10:4 and corresponding note.

129. Cf. 12:3; Ps 24:7.

130. Cf. Ps 91:12.

131. Cf. Jn 14:16, 14:26, 15:26, 16:7; 1 Jn 2:1.

132. Cf. Mt 13:17; Lk 10:24.

133. Cf. Acts 9:3, 22:6, 26:13.

134. Cf. Mt 11:27; Lk 10:22.

135. Cf. Jn 1:18, 10:38. This verse of the Revelation of the Magi uses several terms—singleness, thought, voice—that are relatively rare in early Christian literature and have their closest parallels in the Gnostic Christian writings from Nag Hammadi (see also the frequent references to “error” at 13:3, 13:5, 14:8, 17:9, 18:1, 21:9, 21:10, 30:4, 32:2). Some scholars have considered the Revelation of the Magi to be a “Gnostic” text; however, despite this strange terminology, the Revelation of the Magi lacks any traces of the most common doctrines found in the Nag Hammadi literature, such as a negative evaluation of the material world or an evil creator (cf. 21:9).

136. Cf. Jn 1:3.

137. Cf. Rom 8:38–39; Col 1:16.

138. Cf. 2:2.

139. Cf. Mk 1:11, 9:7.

140. Cf. 1:5.

141. Cf. Col 1:15.

142. Cf. Jn 1:14, 1:18, 3:16, 3:18; 1 Jn 4:9.

143. Cf. Jn 3:19.

144. In the Syriac tradition, the terminology of “putting on a body” is a very typical description of the Incarnation.

145. Cf. Mk 16:17.

146. Cf. Jn 14:6.

147. Cf. Jn 10:9.

148. Cf. Phil 2:9.

149. Cf. Jn 6:35, 48, 51. Also note that the pronoun me provides the first indication of who is speaking this discourse: the Father himself, as will become completely clear with the final words of the passage in 15:10.

150. Cf. Mk 4:14.

151. Cf. Jn 10:11.

152. Cf. Heb 4:14.

153. Cf. Jn 6:55.

154. Cf. Jn 15:1, 5.

155. The use of encampment here and at several places in the rest of the narrative is peculiar, since it does not suggest a relatively small group of travelers. It is a word used in the New Testament almost exclusively for large assemblies of people (e.g., Acts 21:34; Heb 11:34, 13:11). Because of this typical usage, this terminology in the Revelation of the Magi may reflect a more archaic belief that the group of the Magi numbered more than twelve (cf. the list of names in 2:3, which is possibly an independent accretion grafted onto the Revelation of the Magi). If this is indeed the case, then this would be another similarity between the Revelation of the Magi and Infancy Gospel X, whose witnesses all portray the Magi as a large group of people.

156. The ambiguity of this verb does not specify whether the group of the Magi is being upheld in the sense of “being sustained” or actually “carried” off the ground. Evidence for both interpretations appears in 16:6, as the Magi are relieved of their fatigue and cross rivers by foot.

157. Cf. Is 60:19; Rv 21:23, 22:5.

158. A reference to the lack of fatigue experienced by the Magi also occurs in an Irish witness to Infancy Gospel X. It is also possible that this passage from the Revelation of the Magi alludes to Is 40:31.

159. I.e., the star.

160. Cf. 26:5, 27:9. This food that is generated by the star will later figure prominently in the conversion of the people of Shir, since it produces visions of Christ for those who eat it (28:1–4). While the multiplication of food has some parallels in early Christian literature (cf. Mk 6:32–44, 8:10; Jn 6:5–13; Infancy Gospel of Thomas 12), the ability of food to facilitate visionary experience is far more unusual. Several similar concepts are the eating of a scroll as a sign of prophetic commission in Ez 2:8–3:3 and Rv 10:8–10 and the eating of a heavenly honeycomb by Aseneth as a kind of proto-Eucharist in Joseph and Aseneth 16; but even in these cases, there is no indication that what is ingested produces a visionary experience.

161. Cf. Is 40:4.

162. Cf. Gn 3:15; Ps 91:13; Lk 10:19; Rom 16:20.

163. I.e., in April (Nisan; cf. 11:6). Clement of Alexandria also knows of Christians who state that Jesus was born in April (24–25 Pharmuti, equivalent to April 20–21); see Miscellanies 1.21. The information that the Magi arrived in “the month of flowers” also appears in Theodore bar Konai (Mimra 7.17). Because of such similar language, it is very likely that Theodore was acquainted with the Revelation of the Magi. Moreover, Theodore was writing in central Arabia at roughly the same time that the Chronicle of Zuqnin was produced, which indicates that the Revelation of the Magi was in fairly wide circulation at the end of the eighth century.

164. Cf. Mt 2:3.

165. This statement by the inhabitants of Jerusalem and the explanatory comments of the Magi that follow are noteworthy on several levels. First of all, there is again a remarkable parallel with Infancy Gospel X, where Joseph (not the inhabitants of Jerusalem) regards the Magi as astrologers because they are constantly looking up at the sky. More precisely, in both texts the Magi are watching their guiding star, which neither the inhabitants of Jerusalem nor Joseph is able to see (cf. 11:7). Beyond this, however, there is a more problematic issue. The use of the term Magianism occurs only here in the Revelation of the Magi; their religious system is elsewhere called mysteries, custom, or faith. Moreover, this is also the only instance of the word Magi within the first-person-plural narration that makes up the bulk of the document, and its connotation is apparently negative. Because the inhabitants of Jerusalem refer to the actions of the visitors as “Magianism,” do not understand the mysteries of these visitors, and reckon these visitors to be “Magi,” the entire implication of this passage is that these visitors are not who the inhabitants of Jerusalem think they are, and are not Magi—a difficult conclusion given that the central figures of the narrative are obviously the Magi. Perhaps a solution lies in the earlier statements that the Magi are called by this name because of their silent prayer (1:2, 2:1), which may be intended in part to differentiate these figures from the more common connotation of Magi as astrologers.

166. Cf. 15:7 and accompanying note.

167. Cf. 13:10 and corresponding note.

168. Cf. Mt 2:4.

169. Cf. Mt 2:10.

170. The statement that the scribes did not believe that which was written in their sacred writings, when coupled with the Magi's reliance on their own books of prophecy, sharply contrasts the two groups and goes beyond the implicit critique already present in Matthew.

171. Perhaps this is an allusion to Gn 1:3.

172. It is possible to understand this sentence as an indictment of the Jewish people since the time of Herod: “They are (still) dwelling in darkness (as they have done) from the days of Herod. ...”

173. Cf. Mt 2:8.

174. Cf. Mt 2:12.

175. Cf. Jn 8:12, 9:5.

176. The Syriac term used here can also mean a court, a space enclosed by a fence, or a sheepfold. I have chosen the translation “homestead” because of the immediate appearance of Mary and Joseph as the Magi are leaving the cave (22:2), an indication that they do not live far away from the cave.

177. Although in Mt 2:11 the Magi visit the infant Jesus in his parents' house, here the Revelation of the Magi places the birth in a cave, a locale mentioned in several other ancient sources. While Lk 2:7 has Jesus laid in a "manger" because there was no room in the "inn," many scholars believe that this verse is describing a very rudimentary shelter for travelers, not the sort of inn found, for example, in Luke's parable of the Good Samaritan (cf. Lk 10:34, which uses a different Greek word for "inn"). It is therefore possible that the primitive structure that Luke describes evolved into the belief that Jesus was born in a cave. The cave tradition also appears in the Protevangelium of James 18.1; the Syriac Testament of Adam 3:6; Justin Martyr Dialogue with Trypho 78; and a number of other early Christian writers.

178. The sequence of events in 18:3–5 is practically identical to the initial manifestation of the star to the Magi atop the Mountain of Victories.

179. This is the first of several statements, which occur at various places in the narrative, indicating that the mysteries of the Magi have been accomplished or fulfilled (cf. 19:2, 21:4, 24:2, 31:1).

180. Cf. 11:4.

181. Cf. 12:3.

182. Cf. 12:4.

183. Cf. 12:5.

184. This is the only reference in the first-person-plural section of the Revelation of the Magi that implies that the Magi are kings. Cf. 1:2, 2:3–5.

185. Cf. Mt 6:13, though this part of the Lord's Prayer does not appear in the earliest Greek manuscripts.

186. Cf. Rom 14:11; Phil 2:10.

187. Cf. Mt 19:28–29; Mk 10:30; Lk 18:29–30.

188. Cf. 13:1, 21:1, 25:1, 31:1.

189. How the fathers of the Magi are able to see the light of the star is not clear, since 5:10 implies that their sons would be initiated into the Magi's mysteries only when their fathers had died; perhaps the text means only that they were worthy to see it, even if it did not appear in their lifetimes.

190. Cf. Mt 28:20.

191. Cf. the appearance of Judas Thomas in 29:1, but there is never any indication in the final portion of the Revelation of the Magi that more than one disciple preaches in the homeland of the Magi.

192. Cf. Jn 17:5.

193. Cf. 13:9.

194. Cf. Mk 15:33.

195. Cf. Mt 27:51–52. This prediction of events, which in the New Testament occurs in conjunction with the death of Jesus, is problematic in that it is never again mentioned in the Revelation of the Magi. If the Judas Thomas episode is judged to be an interpolation, then it is possible that its insertion may have obliterated the fulfillment of this prophecy.

196. Cf. Mk 14:62, 16:19; Acts 7:55–56.

197. Cf. 12:4.

198. The Latin and Irish witnesses to Infancy Gospel X also state that the Christ child received praise from invisible heavenly beings at the moment of his birth.

199. Cf. Jn 1:3.

200. Cf. 2 Cor 1:20.

201. Cf. Col 1:16.

202. Cf. 2:2.

203. The Magi falling on the ground like dead men in 21:1 and the child putting his right hand on them in 21:2 very strongly resemble Rv 1:17.

204. Cf. 13:1, 19:1, 25:1, 31:1.

205. It is not clear what these “great things” to come are. It is possible that this refers back to the prophecy spoken by the child in 19:7–9 regarding the events at his death and his ascension to heaven.

206. I.e., Shir, where the light of the star first appeared.

207. Cf. 29:5.

208. Cf. 27:10.

209. Cf. Col 1:15.

210. Cf. 1 Cor 1:24.

211. Cf. Jn 10:38; 14:11.

212. Cf. 13:10; Jn 5:46.

213. Cf. Gospel of Thomas 50.

214. Cf. Gospel of Thomas 12.

215. Cf. 30:5–6, 31:1. It is important to note that the Holy Spirit is feminine in gender here, as evidenced by the feminine form of the adjective holy. This usage, found in the second-century Odes of Solomon and the fourth-century writings of Ephrem and Aphrahat, indicates a probable date earlier than the fifth century for the Revelation of the Magi, since Syriac writers after this time generally understand the Holy Spirit as a masculine entity.

216. This statement about infants lacking any blemishes of sin is intriguing, since it disagrees markedly with the Augustinian conception of original sin, wherein infants, like all of humanity, share Adam's guilt (On Merit and the Forgiveness of Sin, and the Baptism of Infants 1.9.24). The assertion that infants lack sin occurs in a number of Greek Christian writers (cf. Aristides Apology 15, Syriac recension; Clement of Alexandria Miscellanies 4.25.160; Gregory of Nyssa On Infants' Early Deaths, passim).

217. I.e., the Father of majesty.

218. Cf. 32:2.

219. Cf. Rv 5:13.

220. The appearance of Mary and Joseph at this point in the narrative is quite abrupt, as the Revelation of the Magi does not mention them earlier. It is not clear whether they “went out” of the cave or the village of Bethlehem with the Magi. This episode is also remarkable for the way in which it uses the misunderstanding of Mary and Joseph as the first occasion for the Magi to act as witnesses for Christ by proclaiming his true omnipresent nature. In Infancy Gospel X, it is also the Magi who convey to Joseph and his son Simeon the significance of Christ’s birth.

221. The statement “the offspring of the voice of virgin hearing” (cf. also 24:3) seems to demonstrate a familiarity with the ancient Christian doctrine that Mary’s conception happened through auditory channels—i.e., through her ear. Although the doctrine becomes especially popular in the mid-fifth century and beyond, traces of it appear as early as the second-century Protevangelium of James. In its annunciation narrative, Gabriel tells Mary that she will conceive from God’s word (Protevangelium of James 11:5).

222. Cf. 28:2.

223. Cf. 4:8, 13:1.

224. Cf. Mk 14:9.

225. Cf. Mt 2:11.

226. Cf. Ascension of Isaiah 11:8–9.

227. Cf. Lk 1:42.

228. The beginning section of this sentence is problematic, since it would be expected that the child is no longer in Mary's womb. This statement may suggest that Christ is always with Mary, as he is always with the Magi—an indication of Christ's omnipresence.

229. I.e., “by the majesty of the Father of all.”

230. This statement of the Magi to Mary strongly reflects the interest in universal salvation through the polymorphismand omnipresence of Christ (cf. 13:10 and corresponding note).

231. It is unclear whether the Magi have accompanied Mary and Joseph to their house, since they are not mentioned again until 26:1. If they have not, then chapters 24 and 25 would be a rather jarring departure from the first-person narration that pervades the majority of the Revelation of the Magi. Since the location of the Bethlehem cave is described as a “homestead” (cf. 18:2 and corresponding note), this may indicate that there is very little space between the cave and the house of Mary and Joseph.

232. Instances of Jesus laughing in ancient Christian texts are quite rare; however, the recently published Gospel of Judas has Jesus laugh on several occasions at the misunderstandings of his disciples. Infancy Gospel X also depicts the newborn Jesus as laughing.

233. Cf. 22:2 and corresponding note.

234. Mary's misunderstanding here is intriguing: she apparently thought that the gifts brought by the Magi were a sort of bribe that they offered to the divine child so that he would accompany them.

235. Cf. 13:1, 19:1, 21:2, 31:1.

236. Cf. 23:1; Lk 1:42.

237. Cf. Lk 1:48

238. Cf. Gn 3:24; Lk 2:35. In linking the instrument that guarded the Garden of Eden with that which is said to pierce Mary's heart, the Revelation of the Magi resembles to a certain degree an interpretation found in several Syriac texts, wherein the spear that pierces Christ's side in Jn 19:34 reverses the sword in Genesis.

239. Cf. Col 3:11; Gospel of Thomas 77.

240. I.e., the sun.

241. It is not clear who “all your believers” are, with whom the Magi have been witnesses to the star. The only other people who have seen the star are Mary and Joseph; however, it may refer to the statements made by Christ and the Magi that he has adherents in every land (13:10; 17:5).

242. Cf. 16:5, 27:9.

243. Cf. 14:3.

244. Cf. 16:4 and accompanying note.

245. This is the first instance in the Revelation of the Magi of indirect discourse being used to summarize a speech, as opposed to the regular pattern of directly quoting lengthy speeches. The only other such occurrences of this are in 29:3–4, where the Magi tell the Apostle Thomas about their journey and Thomas in turn relates to them his experiences with the earthly Jesus. Note also that by 27:9, the indirect discourse has evidently switched to direct speech, as indicated by the presence of “you.” Because of this shift back and forth between indirect and direct speech and also the parallels of this section with the Thomas material, it is likely that this section reveals editorial tampering designed to integrate the first-person testimony of the Magi with the new third-person ending featuring the Apostle Thomas.

246. Sic. Cf. note at 12:3.

247. It is unclear precisely what the meaning of this sentence is.

248. Cf. 13:10.

249. Cf. note at 4:7.

250. Cf. 13:10.

251. This phrase may be meant as a critique of Judaism, since “the prophets” are also mentioned in 13:10.

252. Cf. 26:1.

253. Cf. 16:5, 26:5.

254. Cf. note at 27:3.

255. Cf. 21:6.

256. Cf. Jn 1:9.

257. Cf. 23:4.

258. Cf. 5:11 for the only other indication that not all the people of Shir choose to participate in the mysteries of the Magi.

259. The visions of the people of Shir in 28:1–3 are related in the same basic form as those experienced by the Magi in 14:4–8. However, two features distinguish these visions from those of the Magi. First, these visions are facilitated simply by the eating of food, while those of the Magi resulted from the epiphany of Christ in the Cave of Treasures. Second, the visions of the Magi followed in sequence the order of events in Christ's life, whereas here the order is less secure and the account of Christ's life less complete.

260. Cf. 22:3.

261. Cf. 11:6.

262. Cf. 4:8 and accompanying note.

263. Cf. Jn 1:29, 36; Rv 5:6.

264. Although the phrase “tree of life” appears in 6:2, here another Syriac word is used for “tree” instead. While this Syriac word can also designate Eden’s Tree of Life (as in Rv 22:2), in a number of New Testament texts it refers to the cross (cf. Acts 5:30; Gal 3:13).

265. Cf. Acts 2:1.

266. Cf. note at 28:6.

267. Cf. 1:2. It is at this point that, for the first time since 2:6 or 3:6 (unless chapters 24 and 25 are an exception; see the note at 24:1), the narration is no longer in the first-person plural, but in the third person. This transition may have happened earlier, at 28:1, but the description of the Magi in the third person demonstrates unambiguously that they are no longer the narrators of the Revelation of the Magi.

268. I.e., the nobles, the poor, the women, and the children of Shir.

269. I.e., the Magi.

270. Cf. Acts 17:19.

271. This is the first use in the Revelation of the Magi of the title “Our Lord Jesus Christ,” a very widespread designation in Christian piety; its presence strongly suggests that a later Syriac writer tampered with the text. The portion of the text narrated by the Magi themselves (the overwhelming bulk of the Revelation of the Magi) never uses the name “Jesus” or “Christ” to describe the being whom the Magi encounter. In contrast, this terminology is used very frequently in the short Apostle Thomas section, where some combination of these designations occurs eighteen times. The sudden preference for this familiar Christian terminology is one of the strongest arguments (cf. also the switch from first-person to third-person narration in 28:4) in favor of the theory that the Apostle Thomas section is a later addition to the Revelation of the Magi. It is possible that whoever added the Apostle Thomas material was troubled by the fact that the first-person Magi narrative never explicitly integrates the Magi into the wider Christian Church.

272. Cf. Acts 2:47.

273. Judas Thomas is the same as the apostle known simply as “Thomas” in the Synoptic Gospels (cf. Mk 3:18; Mt 10:3; Lk6:15; also Acts 1:13) and as “Thomas who was called Didymus” in John’s Gospel (11:16, 20:24, 21:2). The Greek nickname “Didymus” means “twin,” and the Syriac name “Thomas” is also related to the Aramaic word for “twin.” The name “Judas Thomas” is found in two texts from Nag Hammadi (the Gospel of Thomas and the Book of Thomas the Contender), as well as in the Acts of Thomas. It appears that Judas Thomas was the chief apostolic figure in ancient Syriac-speaking Christianity, particularly in the environs of Edessa. In the Acts of Thomas, Judas Thomas is commissioned to preach the gospel in India, where he is eventually martyred, but the Revelation of the Magi either ignores or is not aware of this tradition in favor of placing him in the farthest reaches of the East. There are some later references to a mission of the Apostle Thomas in China, and it is possible that these traditions ultimately go back to the Revelation of the Magi.

274. Cf. 21:5.

275. Cf. Acts 9:19.

276. Cf. 27:3 and accompanying note.

277. Though the text changed to narration in the third person at 28:4, here it curiously breaks into the first-person plural yet again with “we are not able to narrate,” “appearing to us,” and “we were amazed.” However, the “we” in this case is certainly not the Magi, but instead the disciples of Christ, whose experience with the polymorphic Christ the Apostle Thomas is describing.

278. The mention of doubt in connection with Thomas may allude to Jn 20:24–29.

279. Cf. 21:5. Although in the earlier passage it was unclear precisely what the “seal” was, here it is obviously Christian baptism—terminology perhaps derived from Eph 1:13, 4:30.

280. The order represented here of anointing with oil first, baptism second (cf. 31:1), is a practice particular to Syriac Christianity and is attested in other ancient sources.

281. The prayer/hymn spoken here by the Apostle Thomas is unattested in any other ancient sources, but it appears to be quite archaic because of vocabulary not seen elsewhere in the Revelation of the Magi (“athletes,” “contest,” “partner of the firstborn,” etc.). These elements suggest that the prayer had an origin separate from the other sections of the Revelation of the Magi, most likely in a liturgical context. This hymn, particularly its invocations to “come” (cf. 30:7), finds its closest parallel in the prayers scattered throughout the Acts of Thomas. The similarity of this prayer to those of the Acts of Thomas and the failure to mention the Apostle Thomas’s well-known journey to India suggest that the Apostle Thomas section originated quite early in Syriac Christianity, even if it is only a secondary addition to the original Revelation of the Magi.

282. I.e., the oil.

283. Cf. Mt 28:19.

284. Cf. 13:1,19:1, 21:2, 25:1.

285. Cf. 21:1.

286. Cf. Phil 2:19.

287. I.e., God the Father. This speech of the Apostle Thomas is ambiguous in whether or not it believes that Christ suffered. 31:6 states that Christ “endured” everything that the crucifiers did to him, but also that he was “exalted above all sufferings” and “a kinsperson of that one who does not suffer.” However, 31:7 again states that Christ “endured everything and ... suffered everything,” which seems, on its face, to be a clear belief in the suffering of Christ.

288. Cf. Acts 2:47.

289. Cf. Mt 28:19.

290. It is unclear whether the Apostle Thomas joins the Magi in their preaching, since 32:1–2 never states specifically who “they” are. For the Opus Imperfectum in Matthaeum, it seems that the Magi follow Thomas in a subservient role. The reference to the Holy Spirit being poured out could suggest that it is the Magi alone who preach, since they have just received it in their baptism, but this statement in no way definitively excludes Thomas.

291. Cf. 21:11.

292. This is the first and only reference to a final judgment of fire that appears in the Revelation of the Magi, and it is not clear from whom the Magi received this information. The concept of a fiery end of the world exists in a number of ancient sources (cf. 2 Pt 3:7, 10). One related text is the reference of Josephus (Antiquities 1.68–69) to the descendants of Seth who live in the land of Seiris and transmitted a revelation from Adam that two catastrophes, one of water and one of fire, would overtake the earth.

293. The use of my here is strange, if it is assumed that the Magi (and the Apostle Thomas?) are preaching together. It may indicate that the preachers are working separately in different parts of the land of Shir, but this is never stated explicitly.

294. Cf. 1:1 and corresponding note. This final verse almost certainly derives from the eighth-century composer of the Chronicle of Zuqnin and not from the copy of the Revelation of the Magi that he used.

295. Thomas Aquinas's remarks on the Magi legend of the Opus Imperfectum appear in the third part of his Summa, question 36, article 5.

296. It is not clear to me whether Calancha supposed, like Columbus, that the American continent was part of Asia, or whether he correctly recognized that it was a separate landmass. Explorers of the New World were remarkably adept at making their discoveries “fit” the biblical descriptions of the world.

297. The “contentious house” is the house of Israel, as described in Ez 3:9.

SCHÄFER'S *GENIZA-FRAGMENTE ZUR HEKHALOT-LITERATUR

Modern research of the hekhalot literature has tended to focus upon the hekhalot traditions which were preserved in medieval manuscripts, especially those copied and edited in twelfth- and thirteenth-century Germany, within the circles of Ḥaside Ashkenaz.¹ These manuscripts comprise the major hekhalot and merkavah traditions as based upon the principal textual rendition available in twelfth-century Europe. This rendition, which reflects the nondefinitive and flexible form of the hekhalot tradition, was transcribed, with slight variations and small changes in order, through the course of the centuries.²

The textual tradition of the medieval manuscripts was the foundation for most of the later publications of the different parts of the hekhalot literature, even until modern times.³ While the medieval manuscripts include the essential hekhalot traditions, it has been argued that they do not comprise all the once extant merkavah texts. The existence of different compositions and other traditions is suggested in two groups of sources which retain fragments of this anonymous literature: 1) bits and fragments scattered in the extensive tenth-century gaonic responsa, in the Karaite polemic literature of the same period, in the later compilations of twelfth-century Ḥaside Ashkenaz, and in specific insinuations in the Kabbalistic literature; and 2) the Cairo genizah fragments, some dated as early as the ninth century, although most are from the eleventh.

* Peter Schäfer. Geniza-Fragmente zur Hekhalot-Literatur. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984. Pp. 191.

¹ For hekhalot literature, merkavah mysticism, and information on the pertinent manuscripts see G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (New York, 1954), pp. 40-79, 355-369; idem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkavah Mysticism, and Talmudic Tradition (New York, 1965); I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism (Leiden and Köln, 1980), pp. 98-234; P. Schäfer, "Handschriften zur Hekhalot Literatur," Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge 11 (1983): 113-193.

² On the problem of the redaction of hekhalot tradition see P. Schäfer, "Tradition and Redaction in Hekhalot Literature," Journal for the Study of Judaism 14 (1983): 172-181.

³ Hekhalot rabbati, edited by A. Jellinek, was based upon a fourteenth-century German manuscript, Oxford 1531 (cf. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash [Wien, 1855], 3:83-108). Scholem's "Ma'aseh Merkavah" (appendix to Jewish Gnosticism [note 1 above]) pp. 101-117 is based upon mss Oxford 1531 and JTS (New York) 828. Both manuscripts came from the circles of Ḥaside Ashkenaz. R. Elior, Hekhalot zuṭarti (Jerusalem, 1982 [Jerusalem Studies in Jewish Thought, Supplement 1]) is based upon MS JTS 8128.

While the major hekhalot manuscripts are known and have been studied, the other two sources have not yet been subjected to systematic scholarly investigation. The bits and fragments within the more extensive writings are not easily accessible, since they are concealed within many manuscripts and books integrating various traditions from several periods. This material still awaits methodological scrutiny and investigation. The merkavah traditions found in the genizah had to be gathered out of thousands of fragments now located in the several genizah collections in Cambridge, Oxford, and Leningrad.

Peter Schäfer's book presents 23 texts from these collections, the great majority of them published here for the first time.⁴ These texts are accurately reproduced in photographs and are faced by a full transcription, enabling the reader to compare both the original text and its transcription. The separate verses are compared for similarities and repetitions within the larger hekhalot manuscripts as found in Schäfer's previous volume, Synopsis zur Hekhalot-Literatur (Tübingen, 1981).

In his previous book Schäfer had assembled a synoptic edition of the seven major hekhalot manuscripts, presented concurrently in their entirety, while disregarding earlier textual divisions and nomenclature.⁵ The transcribed manuscript texts were divided into 985 numbered units. The present genizah fragments are compared with the relevant numbered sections in the synoptic edition.⁶

The texts offered are introduced with detailed information about the place and origin of the particular fragment, its material, and the paleographic background, including suggestions of the dates as offered by M. Beit-Arieh. The reader is provided with a short description of the fragments and their relation to other known and relevant hekhalot texts. An annotated bibliography is offered for texts previously published. One third of the texts are supplied with a commentary by the author, since they have not been published before and some of them have no known parallels in the other hekhalot traditions. This suggests that not all once extant merkavah texts have been preserved, and that some have been lost and remain only in fragments.

Geniza-Fragmente amplifies and corroborates the textual evidence previously available and discussed in the modern research of hekhalot literature. The fragments offer previously known traditions in slightly different versions as well as new narratives and accounts reflecting traditions as yet undiscovered.

⁴ Fragments number 8 and 22 were published by I. Gruenwald, "New Fragments from Hekhalot Literature," Tarbiz 38 (1968/69): 354-372; some parts of Shi'ur qomah have been published by M. S. Cohen, The Shi'ur Qomah, Texts and Recensions (Tübingen, 1985); M. Margoliot, Sefer ha-razim (Tel Aviv, 1966), includes important hekhalot material from the genizah.

⁵ See my review of Schäfer's Synopsis zur Hekhalot-Literatur, JQR 77 (1986/87): 213-217.

⁶ Two comparable recensions, MS Florence 44/13 and MS Leiden 4730, appearing in the present volume, were added to the seven published in Schäfer's Synopsis.

The fragments include six texts from Greater Hekhalot (frag. 1–6); five from Shi'ur qomah (frag. 4, 8–11); two from Lesser Hekhalot (frag. 7, 18); two concerning Metatron (frag. 9, 19); one from the Book of Hekhalot (3 Enoch) (frag. 12); seven are magical adjurations and incantations (frag. 13–17, 20, 21); one refers to the Ascension of Moses (frag. 21), and another to Pereq shirah (frag. 23); and two include unique merkavah texts (frag. 8, 22), probably the most important texts offered in this collection.

Parallels with the synoptic manuscripts can be found in fragments 1–7, part of 8–10, 12, 18. Fragments 11, 13–17, 19–23 and the remainder of 8 have no parallels.

A perusal of the texts which have parallels will reveal interesting changes in the hitherto accepted structure and order of their composition. These differences between similar hekhalot manuscripts and genizah fragments suggest that this literature was not assembled in one consecutive order or in an accepted codex, and never had one definitive literary form or permanent redaction. Rather, the hekhalot tradition was largely an unredacted assemblage of fragmented pieces, collected into a random order.

The medieval manuscripts have indicated a relatively structured and consistent basic order for the separate verses, while freely intermixing the order of chapters and units. However, the genizah fragments present an alternative perception, in which verses seem to have been less structured; indeed their order may even have been quite incidental. In a number of instances the traditional hekhalot narratives have been integrated with incantations and adjurations in the genizah fragments.

Another point deserving attention is that the genizah recension often retains a more intriguing version than the one in the medieval texts. Medieval redactors seem to have modified the more sensitive or controversial expressions concerning the mystical ascent, theurgy, and angelology. Examples of this, involving descriptions of the heavenly chariot, may be found in the following verses:

Syn. 213—ועומדים כל הגיבורים, while we find in gnz. f.6–2a/6 מלאכים גיבורים.

An obvious difference in version may be found in this change of verbs:

Syn. 337—זה השם שנגלה לר' עקיבא שהיה מסתכל במעשה מרכבה, while gnz. f.7–2a/3 has שנישחמם במעשה המרכבה; Syn. 344—ואני נכנסתי לשלום ויצאתי, while gnz. f.7–2a/9 has עליתי בשלום וירדתי בשלום.

A different change may be seen in the shift from first person to third:

Syn. 348—בשעה שעליתי למרכבה יצתה בת קול מתחת כסא הכבוד, gnz. f.7–2a 15/16 has שעמתי למרום שמצתה בת קול שיצתה מתחת כסא הכבוד.

Another type of modification concerns a description of the mystical ascent: Syn. 673—וכשהגעתי לפרגוד, gnz. f.7–2a/13 has וכשהגעתי לפרגוד.

A more detailed account has been modified: Syn. 673—יצאו מלאכי חבלה לחבלני, gnz. 7–2a/13 באו מלאכי חבלה וביקשו עלי לדוחפני.

A remarkable part of the new material is directly concerned with angels: genizah fragment 8 has preserved an angelic revelation concerning the mystical yeridah la-merkavah that has no similar account in other hekhalot texts. Genizah fragment 12 presents a slightly altered version from the Book of Hekhalot (3 Enoch) and offers a different account of the angelic revelation: Syn. 62—ותפשני בידו והראני—gnz. f.12-2b/11-12, ותפשני בידו והעליני בכנפיו. Genizah fragments 8, 9, 11, and 19 are concerned with the angel Metatron, some in an unprecedented manner; fragment 22 offers a detailed angelology.

Schäfer's reading of the genizah fragments is generally accurate, although a few mistakes have occurred and some alternative readings can be suggested. One obvious misreading occurs in fragment 7, line 8 (p. 89): the manuscript clearly reads ובגפיהן, while Schäfer's transcription has ובקפיהן. In fragment 19 (p. 166) the manuscript reads אין אמרין אתו אלא מעומד, while the transcription has אין אמרין אתו אלא משמר. In fragment 8 (p. 101), line 14/15 the manuscript reads אמר לו מטטרון, while the transcription has מטטרון. In fragment 20 (p. 170), line 12, the manuscript reads חק שתי חטיים מן הפח ותן אחת בפין, while Schäfer's transcription has חק שתי חטיים מן הפ ??? נ אחת בפין. In Fragment 20, line 14 the manuscript reads clearly קח זנב של שרץ, while the transcription has קח זנב של שרץ. These are minor errors considering the number of lines transcribed and the condition of the texts.

The present edition is arranged in an exemplary manner, offering the texts in their original form, without imposing a final or binding recension, while supplying the relevant context and comparable material presently available. The reader is provided with a new textual perspective by which he can place, study, and compare the hekhalot corpus in a richer context. The convergence of the genizah material with the wider merkavah traditions make this volume a valuable contribution to the study of hekhalot literature and to the better understanding of the early stages of Jewish mysticism.

School of Theology at Claremont

1001 1324048

SEPHER HA-RAZIM

THE BOOK OF THE MYSTERIES

BM

525

A3712

M67

1983

TRANSLATED BY

M. A. MORGAN

The Library
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
AT CLAREMONT

WEST FOOTHILL AT COLLEGE AVENUE
CLAREMONT, CALIFORNIA

SEPHER HA-RAZIM

Society of Biblical Literature

TEXTS AND TRANSLATIONS
PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA SERIES

Harold W. Attridge, Editor

Texts and Translations 25
Pseudepigrapha Series 11

SEIPHER HA-RAZIM
The Book of the Mysteries

Translated by Michael A. Morgan

M
25
3712
17
83

SEPHER HA-RAZIM

The Book of the Mysteries

Translated by
Michael A. Morgan

Scholars Press
Chico, California

Theology Library
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
AT CLAREMONT
California

SEPHER HA-RAZIM
The Book of the Mysteries

Translated by Michael A. Morgan

© 1983
Society of Biblical Literature

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data
Sepher ha-razim. English.

Sepher ha-razim: The book of the mysteries.

(Pseudepigrapha series ; 11) (Texts and translations ; 25)

Translation of: Sefer ha-razim.

1. Cabala. I. Morgan, Michael A. II. Title. III. Title: Book of the mysteries. IV. Series. V. Series: Texts and translations ; 25.

BM525.A3712M67 1983 296.1'6 82-25181

ISBN 0-89130-615-3

PREFACE TO THE SERIES

TEXTS AND TRANSLATIONS is a project of the Committee on Research and Publications of the Society of Biblical Literature and is under the general direction of Kent H. Richards (Iliff School of Theology), Executive Secretary, and Leander Keck (Yale Divinity School), Chairman of the Committee. The purpose of the project is to make available in convenient and inexpensive format ancient texts which are not easily accessible but are of importance to scholars and students of "biblical literature" as broadly defined by the Society. Reliable modern English translations will accompany the texts. The following subseries have been established thus far:

PSEUDEPIGRAPHA, edited by

Harold W. Attridge (Southern Methodist University)

GRECO-ROMAN RELIGION, edited by

Hans Dieter Betz (University of Chicago)

Edward N. O'Neil (University of Southern California)

EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE, edited by

Robert L. Wilken (University of Notre Dame)

William R. Schoedel (University of Illinois)

For the PSEUDEPIGRAPHA SERIES the choice of texts is governed in part by the research interests of the SBL Pseudepigrapha Group, of which John J. Collins (De Paul University) is currently Chairman, and James H. Charlesworth (Duke University) is Secretary. This series will focus on Jewish materials from the Hellenistic and Greco-Roman periods and will regularly include the fragmentary evidence of works attributed to biblical personalities, culled from a wide range of Jewish and Christian sources. The volumes are selected, prepared, and edited in consultation with the following editorial committee of the Pseudepigrapha Group: Sebastian P. Brock (Cambridge University, England), Robert A. Kraft (University of Pennsylvania), George W. MacRae (Harvard Divinity School), George W. E. Nickelsburg, Jr. (University of Iowa), Michael E. Stone (Hebrew University, Israel), and John Strugnell (Harvard Divinity School).

In the current volume the series presents only an English translation of an ancient text. This divergence from the usual practice is due to the fact that the Hebrew text of the Sepher Ha-Razim is readily available in a recent edition, while no English translation exists. It is hoped that the current volume will make more widely known this important work of Jewish magical literature.

Harold W. Attridge, Editor

FOREWORD

I wish to express my appreciation to the University of Alberta for the research grant which made the work on this text possible and to Joan Paton, Rhoda Zuk, and Gerane West who assisted in the preparation of the manuscript. Helpful suggestions concerning translation and understanding were received from Harold W. Attridge, Theodore H. Gaster and Roy David Kotansky. Their ideas and suggestions have been incorporated into the text. Most of all I would like to thank Morton Smith, who undertook a detailed review of the translation and whose knowledge and insight made it possible.

Michael A. Morgan

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Series Preface	v
Foreword	vii
Introduction	1
Sigla	14
Sepher Ha-Razim, Translation	15
First Firmament	21
Second Firmament	43
Third Firmament	61
Fourth Firmament	67
Fifth Firmament	73
Sixth Firmament	77
Seventh Firmament	81
Appendix: Angelic Lists	87
Indices	91

INTRODUCTION

In 1963, while studying Kabbalistic texts at Oxford, Mordecai Margalioth happened upon a Genizah fragment which gave a magical praxis to assist one in winning at the racetrack. Recalling similar formulas from the Genizah collection and elsewhere, he began a detailed study of the preserved fragments of magical literature. He postulated that these fragments may have all come from a common source which could be reconstructed. His research led to the publication of Sepher Ha-Razim in 1966.

The published text is eclectic. No single document available to Margalioth contained all of the material which was to appear in the final text. Enough was available, however, that he felt confident that he had successfully reconstructed a magical handbook from the early Talmudic period. Since its publication, SHR has proven a valuable source of information for studies pertaining to magic in antiquity and for studies relating to Jewish life in the first centuries CE.

Margalioth was an excellent textual scholar. Even though additional texts have come to light since the publication of SHR, his original work is an exceptional piece of scholarship which demands wider circulation and use among scholars interested in the Judaisms of the Hellenistic age. No doubt a re-editing of SHR is needed in the future. For the present, I hope the scholarly community will find this annotated translation of the Margalioth text a valuable tool for further study.

A. THE MANUSCRIPTS

Codices

There were seven major codices available to Margalioth for the preparation of his text. Each of them contained significant portions of what was to become SHR.

1. פ - The Kaufman manuscript in the Oriental Library of the Hungarian Academy in Budapest. No. 224, pp. 41-63.
2. מ - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. 163, p. 15A to p. 48B.
3. נ - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. N.014, p. 8B to p. 28B.
4. ד - The Florence Manuscript in the Library Medicea Laurenziana, no. Plut. 44.13, p. 107B to p. 118A.
5. A manuscript in the National Library, Jerusalem, Heb. 8° 476, p. 69B to p. 81B.
6. Schocken Manuscript, Schocken Library, Jerusalem, Kabbalah Manuscript 3. This is a copy of the Florence manuscript.
7. ב - Jewish Theological Seminary Manuscript Library, JTSL no. N.012, pp. 1-24.

Of these seven manuscripts Margalioth used only the five marked with Hebrew letter designations. All of the first six are arranged similarly and are bound together with Maseket Hekhaloth, Maaseh Bereshit, and Shiur Komah. They all contain similar omissions, both accidental and deliberate, by the scribes. Ms. 1 (פ) seems to be the superior version, often completing words and sentences which are omitted in the other versions. It is the most precise and appears to contain the fewest distortions. Mss. 5 and 6 contained no material of special significance and were not used. Ms. 7 (ב) is an expanded and elaborated version. Its editor states that it was produced from two documents, a shorter Hebrew text and an expanded Latin translation. The lists of angelic names in this version are more extensive than in the others. The text alternates languages and gives both versions in places. In addition, Margalioth (Sepher, 50-51) lists four manuscripts which were not available to him.

Hebrew Genizah Fragments

The following fragments are designated 1.

1. Oxford MS. Heb. C. 18/30:

One parchment page containing nineteen lines on each side. The beginning letters of each line on side one and the concluding letters of each line on side two--from the middle of the page to the bottom--are mutilated.

Content: The beginning of SHR to 1:6.

4. Cambridge T-S K 1/97:

One small paper page containing twenty lines on both sides. Content: 1:13-54.

10. Cambridge T-S K 1/145:

Two large paper pages which are mutilated on all four sides, partially illegible, and torn. The remainder has thirty-six/thirty-seven lines per side.

Content: 2:100-4:47.

14. Cambridge T-S K 21/95, fragment 2:

One small paper page containing twenty lines on side one only. Content: 7:1-9.

The following fragments are designated 1a.

2. Adler JTSL ENA 2750, pp. 4-5.

Two small pages containing seventeen lines on each side--torn and often illegible. Content: P:1-1:1.

6. Cambridge T-S N.S. 135:

One page containing twenty-one lines on each side--torn and often illegible. Content: 1:47-71.

11. Cambridge T-S K 1/102:

One page containing twenty-one lines on each side. Content: 3:15-46.

12. Cambridge T-S K 1/13:

One page containing twenty lines on side one and seventeen lines on side two. Content: 4:8-30.

The following fragments are designated 2λ.

3. Cambridge T-S K 21/95:

One parchment page containing twenty-two lines on side one and twenty-four lines on side two. Content: P:10-1:18. Similar to 1λ #1.

13. Cambridge T-S N.S. 246/26:

One page containing sixteen-seventeen lines per side but some lines are missing from the top of the page. Content: 4:29-52.

The following fragments are designated λ.

5. Cambridge T-S K 1/98:

One parchment page containing twenty-six lines on each side. The beginning lines on side one and the concluding lines on side two are mutilated. Content: 1:17/65.

7. Oxford MS. Heb. D. 62/50:

One page mutilated diagonally from the top of the page through line 5. Side two is illegible. Content: 2:30-76.

9. Leningrad Antonine Collection No. 238:

One parchment page. Content: 2:30-76.

The following fragment received no designation:

8. Adler JTSL ENA 2673/23.

One paper page, badly mutilated. Content: 1:237-2:25.

The Arabic Fragments

There are ten arabic fragments which were found by Margalioth in the Genizah material. They are designated γ or λγ where they are duplicates.

1. Oxford MS. Heb. f.45:

Eighteen parchment pages and by far the most important of the Arabic Fragments. Content: 1:6-2:8.

2. Oxford MS. Heb. e. 67/32-33:

Two pages. Content: 1:1-18.

3. Cambridge T-S Arabic 31/183:

One page. Content: 1:1-100.

4. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/260.

5. Cambridge T-S N.S. 298/72:
Two pages torn at the top and missing some sections in the middle. Begins with 2:204.
6. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/84:
Two pages. Page one begins with 2:130 and page two begins with 4:10.
7. Dropsie College, Philadelphia, Genizah Collection no. 437.
One very torn parchment page. Begins with 4:10.
8. Cambridge T-S Arabic 45/12:
One page beginning at 3:51, and then omitting the fourth firmament and continuing with the fifth firmament.
9. Cambridge T-S Arabic 33/9:
One parchment page beginning with the last line of the third firmament (3:58) and continuing with the fifth firmament.
10. Cambridge T-S Arabic 43/223:
One page beginning with 4:38.

Latin Translation

The Latin translation is titled Liber Razielis Angeli and is found in the Senate Library in Leipzig, Codex Latinus No. 745. Margalioth did not receive a copy of this manuscript until after the type had been set for the Hebrew edition. Consequently he refers to only a few places in it. Unlike the Arabic, the Latin is a free translation and adaptation which has been greatly expanded. Of the Hebrew codices, it is closest to D, whose editor claims to have used a Latin version.

Other Sources

Margalioth drew heavily upon many medieval collections of magical spells and formulas which he felt were descended from his postulated original. The most important of these are:

1. Sepher Raziël, Amsterdam 1701. Siglum: 7.
2. Sepher Raziël, manuscripts and fragments. cf. Margalioth, Sepher, 44f.

3. Sepher Kamay ^Cot, JTSL 2272. Siglum: n.
4. Sepher Kamay ^Cot, fragments. cf. Margalioth, Sepher, 51.
5. Mafteach Shlomo, Facsimile Oxford 1914. Siglum: n.
6. Sepher Ha-Malbush, Kaufman 245. Siglum: b.

A visual representation of the eclectic nature of the text can be found on the chart produced by Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln, between pages 18 and 19.

B. STRUCTURE

The text of SHR is divided into seven unequal sections preceeded by a preface which contains a description of the book's transmission and functions. Before the flood, it was presented by the angel Razel to Noah who used it as a guide. After the flood it was passed down through the Biblical generations to Solomon.

The structure of the seven heavens reflects the fairly common cosmology known from Jewish circles during the Hellenistic age. It has close parallels to Talmudic passages, the Enoch literature, and the Hekhaloth literature. The heavens are divided as follows:

1. The first firmament has seven separate encampments. Each encampment is ruled by an angelic overseer who has numerous angels listed as serving him.
2. The second firmament is divided into twelve steps or levels. Each has between nine and twenty angels who can be called upon.
3. The third firmament is ruled by three angels. Each has a troop of angels which serve him.
4. The fourth firmament is divided between thirty-one angelic princes and their encampments who lead the sun during the day and thirty-one angelic princes and their encampments who lead the sun during the night.

5. The fifth firmament is ruled by twelve princes of glory who represent the twelve months of the year.
6. The sixth firmament is divided between an eastern overlord who rules twenty-eight angelic leaders and their encampments and a western overlord who rules thirty-one angelic leaders and their encampments.
7. The seventh firmament is a description of the divine throne followed by a long doxology.

Each firmament, except the seventh, and each subdivision is described as to its nature and function. For each subdivision there is a magical praxis described which can be initiated by calling upon the angels listed in that subdivision and by following the prescribed rites. With few exceptions, the magical praxis will reflect the descriptions of either the angels or the heaven itself. The rules of sympathy and contagion are clearly in evidence.

With minor exceptions, this is an outline of the over all structure of any given subdivision.

I. A description of the firmament followed by

A. A description of the subdivision and its usage organized thus:

1. Names of the angels of the subdivision
2. Description of the angels and their function
3. The purpose these angels can be made to serve
4. The procedures to be followed in preparation
5. The invocation to be spoken to initiate the praxis (in some cases this has been lost)
6. In some cases, additional actions and/or invocations to assist, alter, or reverse the magical praxis

A fine analysis of the form and style of these incantations and invocations has been done by Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln, 63-118.

C. DATE

Dating an eclectic text is difficult at best. The consensus of those scholars who have worked with the text is to support Margalioth's dating of SHR to the early fourth or late third century CE.¹

The reasons generally listed for this are:

1. The reference to the Roman indictions in 1:27-28 (cf. Margalioth, Sepper, 24) gives a clear terminus a quo of 297 CE.
2. The majority of the text is written in a pure midrashic Hebrew which reflects the period.
3. Many of the Greek words found in the text are technical terms used in the magical praxeis of that period.
4. The spells and incantations of SHR closely parallel the magical material preserved in the Greek magical papyri and in the Aramaic incantation bowls.
5. The forms of the adjurations are similar to material we know from the early Rabbinic literature.
- ✓ 6. The cosmological framework of the text reflects the Enoch and Hekhaloth literature of that period.

Although Margalioth's basic assumptions have gained the support of the majority of scholars, we must understand exactly what it is we are dating.

There are two different types of document here. The first is a cosmological framework which shows a marked similarity with the hekhaloth literature. The second is a collection of unrelated magical praxeis which show a marked similarity to the materials preserved in PGM. Chen Merchavya (JE 13, 1594-95) implies that the praxeis were woven into the descriptions of the angels and the heavens. This would make the cosmological framework the primary document. Surely the reverse is true. Gruenwald points out the SHR should not be classed as hekhalot literature despite its similarity. The magical praxeis are the primary source.

¹ A notable exception to the consensus is Ithamar Gruenwald, (Apocalypitic, 226), who dates the work to sixth or seventh century.

It seems to me more likely that the magical praxeis have been provided with a cosmological framework intended to make them appear as legitimate Jewish practices. Thus the formulas, spells, and incantations presumably existed prior to their present form. The use of Greek and Aramaic words is limited to the actual praxeis. The language of those sections is simple and straightforward. It lacks the flowery descriptive wording and the Biblical quotations of the cosmological framework. The only exception to this lies in the long adjurations of the latter firmaments and these hardly seem part of the original praxeis themselves. SHR has a cosmology which concerns itself in great detail with Jewish ritual purity, but praxeis which demand we eat cakes made from blood and flour. We have a framework which speaks of the glory of YHWH, but praxeis which offer prayers to Helios, and invoke Hermes and Aphrodite. We should indeed date SHR to the early fourth century CE but it is crucial to recognize that what fascinates us most about this text, the magic, is part of a folk tradition which dates from an earlier time. For example, the idol used to quell a rising river in 2:115ff. is clearly one which the Rabbis in Avodah Zarah 3:1 forbid Jews to make or possess. Since the Rabbis found it necessary to ban the image, one must assume that it was in popular use prior to the Mishnah's compilation. In dating SHR we are not dating the antiquity of the praxeis themselves.

Just as we cannot date an eclectic text by reference to any one section, so we cannot determine its origin by any one section. Even a number of references will afford no more than a list of possibilities. It is far too easy to be led to a conclusion, for example, that SHR is of Egyptian-Jewish origin. The oldest fragments were preserved there. The passage of the sun to the East via the North reflects Egyptian mythology. The use of hieratic papyrus was a sign of the Egyptian priesthood's magical rites. The listing of the descent through the mother was a common Egyptian practice and of course the Roman indictions point to a possible Alexandrian origin. Most compelling, however, is the close similarity between the material preserved in SHR and that of PGM.

Such a listing is persuasive until objectively analyzed. That an Egyptian Jewish scribal community preserved the text is no argument for its authorship. The sun's passage is part of other folklores and was surely a common theme in the ancient world. Hieratic papyrus was known as a magical tool outside of Egypt. Descent through the mother was a popular aphorism of the Greco-Roman world as well as a basis for Jewish legal definitions and serves in SHR to insure the effectiveness of the praxis. The indictions were used throughout the Roman world and could easily have been part of a document written in Constantinople. That there are close similarities between SHR and PGM is surely of interest but close similarities also exist between SHR and the incantation bowls of Syria. Furthermore, that PGM was found only in Egypt merely points out how fortunate we are that Egypt's climate is so well suited for preserving such material.

Magic was the common property of the people of the Greco-Roman world. The praxeis could have arisen in any part of that world and have been initially preserved in any part of that world. To attempt to locate a single place of origin would be futile.

Furthermore, we should not attempt to place the magical praxeis of SHR within any specific group. The praxeis are part of the popular religion of the age. Jews who could place a mosaic of Helios on their synagogue floors certainly could not have found it strange to offer invocations to that same god. On the other hand, SHR has clearly undergone editing at the hands of more "traditionally" or rabbinically oriented scribes. We can sense the tensions between a developing orthodoxy and a popular religion here. SHR is a fine example of the syncretistic nature of the Hellenistic world. ✓

D. THE TRANSLATION

A translation either can be literal, to render the exact words of the Hebrew, or can be paraphrastic to catch the meaning. This translation contains elements of both sorts. Its purpose is to convey the meaning in each case as clearly as possible. Parentheses have been used to set off words and phrases which are not found in the Hebrew text, but are either implied, understood, or needed to create a readable translation.

I have attempted to follow the Margalioth text as closely as possible. When a different reading is offered it is so footnoted. The technical Greek terms and prayers have been translated in the text and footnoted.

The angelic lists presented a special problem. There was so much conjecture involved in creating these lists in transliterated form that I opted, for the sake of consistency and accuracy, to produce the lists without the speculative vocalization. For those who find this an unsatisfactory solution, I have provided the Hebrew lists in Appendix I.

Hebrew/English equivalents for the text are as follows:

' = א	L = ל
B = ב	M = מ
G = ג	N = נ
D = ד	S = ס
H = ה	C = כ
W = ו	P = פ
Z = ז	Ş = ש
Ḥ = ח	Q = ק
Ṭ = ט	R = ר
Y = י	Ş̣ = שׂ
K = כ	T = ת

E. ABBREVIATIONS AND SHORT TITLES

DMP	Francis L. Griffith, The Demotic Magical Papyrus , London: H. Grevel & Co., 1904.
Ginzberg, Legends	Louis Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews , Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1937.
Goodenough, Symbols	Erwin R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period , New York: Pantheon Books, 1953-1968.
Gruenwald, Apocalyptic	Ithamar Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism , Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1980.
Jastrow, Dictionary	Marcus Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim The Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi and the Midrashic Literature , New York: The Judaica Press, 1971.
JE	Jewish Encyclopaedia , Jerusalem: Keter Publishing Ltd., 1972.
Margalioth, Sepher	Mordecai Margalioth, Sepher Ha-Razim , Jerusalem: Yediot Achronot, 1966.
Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln	J. H. Niggemeyer, Beschwörungsformeln aus dem Buch der Geheimnisse , Hildersheim: Georg Olms Verlag, 1975.
PGM	Karl Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae , Leipzig: B. G. Teubner, vol. I 1928, vol. II 1931. Quoted by papyrus and line number.
SHR	Sepher Ha-Razim

SIGLA

- Ⓚ JTSL no. 163. See p. 2.
- Ⓛ JTSL no. N. 014. See p. 2.
- Ⓛ Geniza fragments. See pp. 3-4.
- Ⓜ Sepher Raziel. See p. 5.
- Ⓝ Sepher KamayCot. See p. 6.
- Ⓞ Mafteach Shlomo. See p. 6.
- Ⓟ Sepher Ha-Malbush. See p. 6.
- Ⓠ Geniza fragments. See p. 4.
- Ⓡ JTSL no. N. 012. See p. 2.
- Ⓢ Arabic fragments. See p. 4.
- Ⓣ Florence MS Laurenziana, no Plut. 44.13. See p. 2.
- Ⓡ Kaufman. MS. See p.2.

SEPHER HA-RAZIM

TRANSLATION

(PREFACE)

This is a book, from the Books of the Mysteries, which was given to Noah, the son of Lamech, the son of Methuselah, the son of Enoch, the son of Jared, the son of Mehallalel, the son of Kenan, the son of Enosh, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, by Raziel the angel in the year¹ when he came into the ark (but) before his entrance.

And (Noah) inscribed it upon a sapphire stone² very distinctly.³ And he learned from it how to do wondrous deeds, and (he learned) secrets of knowledge, and categories of understanding and thoughts of humility and concepts of counsel, (how) to master the investigation of the strata of the heavens, to go about in all that is in their seven abodes, to observe all the astrological signs, to examine the course of the sun, to explain the observations of the moon, and to know the paths of the Great Bear, Orion, and the Pleiades,⁴ to declare the names of the overseers of each and every firmament and the realms of their authority, and by what means they (can be made to) cause success in each thing (asked of them), and what are the names of their attendants and what (oblations) are to be

¹Ms. א reads בשעה but "hour" is probably incorrect, as "hour" could be taken to imply the exact moment and to contradict the sense of לפני .

²Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, 1.157, 5.179.

³Cf. Deut 27:8

⁴Cf. Job 9:9; Amos 5:8.

10 poured out to them, and what is the proper time' (at which they will hear prayer,⁵ so as) to perform every wish of anyone (who comes) near them in purity. (Noah learned) from it rituals (that cause) death and rituals (that preserve) life, to understand the evil and the good, to search out (the right) seasons and moments (for magical rites), to know the time to give birth and the time to die, the time to strike and the time to heal,⁶ to interpret dreams and visions, to arouse combat, and to quiet wars, and to rule over spirits and over demons, to send them (wherever you wish) so they will go out like slaves,⁷ 15 to watch the four winds of the earth, to be learned in the speech of thunderclaps, to tell the significance of lightning flashes, to foretell what will happen in each and every month, and to know the affairs of each and every year, whether for plenty or for hunger, whether for harvest or for draught, whether for peace or for war, to be as one of the awesome ones and to comprehend the songs of heaven.

And from the wisdom of the secrets of this book, Noah learned and understood how to make gopher wood (into) an ark 20 and to hide from the torrent of the flood waters, to bring (the animals) with him two by two and seven by seven, to take in some of every kind of food and every kind of provender. And he placed (the book) in a golden cabinet and brought it first into ⁵Literally "it (prayer) will be heard by them."

⁶Cf. Eccl 3:2,3.

⁷Cf. Job 38:35.

the ark, to learn from it the times of the day and to investigate from it the times of the night, and in which period he should arise to pour out entreaties. And when he came forth from the ark, he used (the book) all the days of his life, and at the time of his death he handed it down to Abraham,⁸ and Abraham to Isaac, and Isaac to Jacob, and Jacob to Levi, and 25 Levi to Kohath, and Kohath to Amram, and Amram to Moses, and Moses to Joshua, and Joshua to the elders, and the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the sages,⁹ and thus generation by generation until Solomon the King arose. And the Books of the Mysteries were disclosed to him and he became very learned in books of understanding, and (so) ruled over everything he desired, over all the spirits and the demons that wander in the world, and from the wisdom of this book he imprisoned and released, and sent out and brought in, and built and prospered.¹⁰ For many books were handed down to him, but this one was found more precious and more honorable and more 30 difficult than any of them. Happy the eye that will behold

⁸Mss. D and 7 insert Shem into the chronology.

⁹Cf. Pirke Avoth 1:1. This genealogy is similar to the Avot tradition but it puts Solomon the King after the prophets and the sages. Since they should follow Solomon, it seems that an original genealogy ending with Solomon (probably after "elders") has been interpolated by an editor who wanted to claim knowledge of these secrets for the rabbis. Evidence for such an insertion is important because it casts some doubt on other Rabbinic elements in the text, and because of the fact that a Rabbinic editor left the pagan elements stand, illustrates an unfamiliar side of Rabbinic Judaism.

¹⁰Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, 4.149-154, 165-169; Josephus, Antiquities, 8.2.5, #45-49.

it. Happy the ear that listens attentively to its wisdom.

✓ For in it are the seven firmaments and all that is in them.

From their encampments we shall learn to comprehend all things, and to have success in every deed, to think and to act from the wisdom of this book.

(THE FIRST FIRMAMENT)

The name of the first firmament is called Shamayim.¹

Within it are encampments filled with wrath. And seven thrones are prepared there and upon them are seated overseers, and around them on all sides encampments (of angels) are stationed and are obedient to men at the time when they practice (magic), to everyone who has learned to stand and pour (libations) to their names and cite them by their signs² at the period when 5 (prayer) is heard (so as) to make a magical rite succeed.

(Over) all these encampments of angels these seven overseers rule, to dispatch (them) for every (sort of) business so that they will hasten and bring success.

These are the names of the seven overseers who sit upon (the) seven thrones: the name of the first is 'WRPNY'L, and the name of the second is TYGRH, and the name of the third is DNHL, and the name of the fourth is KLMYY', the name of the fifth is 'SYMWR, the name of the sixth is PSKR, the name of the seventh is BW'L. And all of them were created from fire and their 10 appearance is like fire, and their fire is blazing, for from fire they emerged.

And without permission, (the angels who serve them)³ do not go out to engage in magical actions. (They wait) until a command comes to them from (one of) the seven overseers, the ¹*Shamayim* is the common Hebrew word for heaven or sky.

²Or perhaps "by their letters (of their names)."

³Inserted by Ms. 7 (Sefer Razi'el) and aids the translation.

occupants of the thrones, who rule over them. 'For they are subject to the will (of the overseers) and go about (only) with their permission. And each and every one of them goes to his work determined to act quickly in any affair on which he may be sent, whether for good or for evil, whether for superfluity or for shortage, whether for war or for peace. And all of them 15 are to be called by the names (given them) from the day they were created.

And these are the names of the seven encampments which serve the seven overseers (for each encampment serves one of the overseers).

And these are the names of the angels of the first encampment who serve 'WRPNY'L:

	BWMDY	DMN'	'NWK'	'LPY
	'MWK	QTYBY'	PTRWPY	GMTY
20	P'WR	NRNTQ	RQHTY	'WRNH
	M'WT	PRWKH	'QYL'H	TRQWYH
	BRWQ	SHRWR'	'TNNY	GYL'N
	TKT	'RNWB	'ŠMY	YWSŠ
	KPWN	KRBY	GYRŠWM	PRY'N
	ŠŠM ^C	'BB'	NTN'L	'R'L
	'NYP	TRW'WR	^C BDY'L	YWWN
	'LWN	MW'L	LLP	YHSPT
	RHGL	RWM'PY	YKTY	'RNY'L
	PWBWN	KDY'L	ZKRY'L	'GDLN
	MYG'L	G'WPR	KRTH	KYLDH
	DYGL	'LNW	TYRLY	SBLH
	'BY'L	'L	KSYL	SYQMH
25	'ŠBH	YWTNH	R'LKH	HLY'N
	'PTY'L	TY'MY'L	'L'L	NTY'L
	'PYKH	TLGY'L	N ^C NH	'STY'L

These are the angels who are obedient in every matter during the first and second year of the fifteen year cycle of the reckoning of the Greek kings.⁴ If you wish to perform an ⁴Probably a reference to the Roman indictions. See Margalioth, Sepher 24. If we suppose that this reference to the use of indictions is by the government in Constantinople, then the terminus a quo for the cosmological framework is 312 C.E. The Egyptian dating would give us a terminus a quo of 297 C.E.

act of healing, arise in the first or second hour of the night 30 and take with you⁵ myrrh and frankincense. This (is to be) put⁶ on burning coals (while saying) the name of the angel who rules over the first encampment, who is called 'WRPNY'L, and say there, seven times, (the names of the) seventy-two⁷ angels who serve before him, and say as follows:

I, N the son of N beseech you that you will give me success in healing N the son of N.

And anyone for whom you ask, whether in writing or verbally, will be healed. Purify yourself from all impurity ✓ and cleanse your flesh from all carnality and then you will succeed.

⁵Literally, "in your hand."

⁶Margalioth suggests reading והוא נתון for והוא בנותן. Possibly והוא ניתן.

⁷Ms. A refers to a list of only seventy names.

35 These are the names of the angels of the second encampment who serve TYGRH:

	'KSTR	MRSWM	BRKYB	KMSW
	'STYB	KRYT'L	'DYR	GB'
	'QRB'	'NBWR	KBYR	TYLH
	BRYTWR	TRTM	NTPY'L	PRY'L
	TRWHWN	SLHBYN	'SLB'	MSTWB
	GRHT'	HGR'	'YTMYL	HGL
	LGH	MNYTY'L	TNYMY'L	'YKRYT
	'BRYT'	RKYL'L	HSTK	PPTS
40	'STYRWP	'WDY'L	'SBYR	MLKY'L
	'RWS	DŠWW'	HMK	TRGH
	ZMBWT	HSNYPLPT	ŠWW'	'SPWR
	'RQ	QNWMY'L	NHY'L	GDY'L
	'DQ	YMWMY'L	PRWG	DHGY'L
	DGRY'L	'GRY'L	'RWNWR	DWNRNY'
	DLKT	TBL	TLY'L	'LY'L
	MWT'R	'LPY'L	PYTPR'	LPWM
	'WR	TMR	'DLY'L	'STWRYN
	'ZWTY	'YSTWRTY	D'WBYT	BRGMY
	DMWMY'L	DYGR'	'BYB'L	PRWTY'L
45	QWMY'L	DGWGR'	DLGY'L	PDWTY'L

These are the angels who are full of anger and wrath⁸ and who have been put in charge of every matter of combat and war and are prepared to torment and torture a man to death. There ⁸Reading חמה instead of ח'ימה.

is no mercy in them but they (wish) only to take revenge and to punish him who is delivered into their hands. And if you wish to send them against your enemy, or against your creditor, or to capsize a ship, or to fell a fortified wall,⁹ or against any business of your enemies, to damage and destroy, whether you desire to exile him, or to make him bedridden, or to blind him or to lame him,¹⁰ or to grieve him in any thing (do as follows): Take¹¹ water from seven springs on the seventh day of the month, in the seventh hour of the day, in seven unfired pottery vessels,¹² and do not mix them¹³ with one another. Expose them beneath the stars for seven nights; and on the seventh night take a glass vial,¹⁴ (and say over it) the name of your adversary, and pour the water (from the seven unfired pottery vessels) into it, then break the pottery vessels and throw (the pieces) to the east, north, west, and south,¹⁵ and say thus to the four directions:¹⁶

⁹Probably a walled house as found in the later Roman empire. That it is the wall of a house which is meant is clear from 1:77.

¹⁰Literally, "to smite the light of his eyes...to bind his feet."

¹¹Literally, "take in your hand."

¹²Cf. PGM IV:3210f.

¹³I.e., the waters from the different springs.

¹⁴Cf. PGM IV:222; IV:3210 φιάλη.

¹⁵Literally, "to the four winds of the heavens."

¹⁶Literally, "winds."

60 HHGRYT who dwell in the east,¹⁷ SRWKYT who dwell in the north, ^CWLPH who dwell in the west, KRDY who dwell in the south, accept from my hand at this time that which I throw to you, to affect¹⁸ N son of N, to break his bones, to crush all his limbs, and to shatter his conceited power, as these pottery vessels are broken. And may there be no recovery for him¹⁹ just as there is no repair for these pottery vessels.

Then take the vial of water²⁰ and repeat over it the names of these angels and the name of the overseer, who is TYGRH and say thus:

65 I deliver to you, angels of anger and wrath, N son of N, that you will strangle him and destroy him and his appearance,²¹ make him bedridden, diminish his wealth, annul the intentions of his heart, blow away his thought and his knowledge and cause him to waste away continually until he approaches death. ✓

If you wish to exile him conclude the formula thus:

That you will exile him and banish him from his children and his home and he will have nothing left.

If he is one to whom you are in debt, conclude (the formula) thus:

That you will plug his mouth and make his planning vain and he will not think of me, nor speak of me; and when I pass in front of him, he will not see me.

70 If (the rite is) for a ship²² say thus:

¹⁷Literally, "in the east wind," et. al.

¹⁸Literally, "for the name of."

¹⁹Margalioth has "for them" and records no variant but the context requires "for him."

²⁰Reading שלמים instead of מים .

²¹I. e., so that the body will no longer be recognizable.

²²Either your enemy's ship or one on which he is.

I adjure you angels of wrath and destruction, that you will rise up against the ship of N son of N and that you not permit it to sail from any place. But if²³ wind (sufficient) for sailing²⁴ come to it, then let (the wind) carry it out to sea and shake it (so it sinks) in the midst of the sea and let neither man nor cargo be saved from it.

If you wish to fell a fortified wall say thus:

75 I adjure you, angels of fury, wrath, and anger, that you will go with the force of your power and fell the wall of N son of N. Smite it to dust and let it be overturned like the ruins of Sodom and Gemorah, and let no man place stone upon stone on the place²⁵ (where the wall was); if it be built during the day, let it be overturned at night.

Then pour out (the water) upon the four corners of the house. (In a like manner) if you wish to make your enemy bedridden, or to destroy his appearance, or to (do) any grievous thing, pour the water upon his doorstep. If (you wish) to exile him, pour out the water to the four directions.

80 If (you wish) to bind your creditor, throw the water on his garments. And if (you wish) to sink a ship, cast the vial and its water in the midst of the ship (while saying) the name of the ship and its master. And if you wish to overturn a wall, dig at the four corners of the wall and divide the water among (the four corners). (Use the water) thus in each ✓ case. Do it in (a state of) purity and then you will succeed.

²³Reading ואלו for ולא.

²⁴Possibly read מנהיג with Ms. ק, a leading wind."

²⁵Reading במקומה with Ms. ■ for בקומה. Possibly בחומה, "on the wall."

These are the names of the angels who serve DNHL²⁶ in the third encampment:

85	'WGRBBW	'WBS'L	BRTWBY'L	KLWBY'L
	RHBY'L	'WHY'L	KRBTWN	KRB'
	D'YNWT	'YNYK	'BYRM	'TGL'
	'WTWT	'STNW'L	'SPR	TGRY'L
	'MYK'L	'TDŠW	'WRY'L	'RMWD
	'STWN	'K'L	'N'WR	'SKYR'
	LBV'L	'LCŠH	HSNY'L	LMWSY
	'DWT	TYRWM	'LPY	'YMYK
	'RGL'	MYG'L	'LY'L	MDNY'L

90 These angels tell everyone who, in purity, gains power over them, what will happen on the earth in each and every year, whether for plenty or for famine, whether rains will be abundant or sparse, and whether there will be a dearth and whether there will be produce, and whether locusts will come and whether there will be strife among kings, and whether a sword will come among the great men of the kingdom,²⁷ and whether death or suffering will befall mankind.

If you wish to know and understand what will be in each 95 and every year, take a hieratic papyrus²⁸ and cut it into ²⁶Probably a variant of Daniel or Danel, both of which are found as divine angelic names.

²⁷This seems to imply either strife or execution.

²⁸יִרְטִיקוֹן, i.e., ἱερατικόν - a hieretic sheet of papyrus. "Hieratic" (priestly) here refers especially to the Egyptian priests who were famed for their magic and from whence came the types of writing and paper that they used and were thought suitable for magical operations.

slips) and write in hieratic with a mixture of ink and myrrh²⁹ each and every possibility separately.³⁰ Then take a new flask and put in it spikenard oil³¹ and throw in the written slips³² (as well); then stand facing the sun³³ when he comes forth from his bridal chamber³⁴ and say:

100 I adjure you O sun that shines on the earth, in the name of the angels who make men of knowledge understand and comprehend wisdom and secrets, that you will do what I ask and make known to me what will be in this year--do not conceal a thing from me.

And you will adjure (the sun with) this adjuration for three days, three times³⁵ and the third time you will scrutinize the oil. Notice everything brought up upon the face of the oil, that is what will happen in that year. If two ²⁹ מלנון בזמירנה for σμορνό-μέλαν(ον) - a special ink used for magical purposes.

³⁰ I.e., one possibility on each slip.

³¹ Cf. PGM I:278.

³² Literally, "things."

³³ Cf. PGM II:87; III:325; IV:260; V:237.

³⁴ Here the text has צאתה מחופתה . If the final ה's were taken as feminine terminations (which they usually are) this would mean "when she comes forth from her bridal chamber." However, the sun is most often masculine. The verb forms and pronouns referring to the sun in this context are all masculine. Therefore, it is more plausible to explain these endings as Aramaizing spellings for the masculine termination ך.

³⁵ Literally, "3 days 3 times." Possibly once a day or three times each day.

possibilities come up, then there will be (these) two and if three come up, there will be three. Afterwards, take 105 the oil and burn it while saying the names of the angels that serve in this encampment. And (as for) the rest of all the written (slips), hide them³⁶ in a wall or in a window. And so, (as in) every operation, act in purity, and you will succeed.

³⁶Reading גניזתם for יגביזתם, implying a ritual burial or storage both here and elsewhere in the text.

These are the names of the angels who serve KLMYYH³⁷ in the fourth encampment:

	'BRYH	'YMRHY	DMN'Y	'MNHR
	Y'MNWK	PTKY'	TWBY'L	GWLY'L
	'WPRY	GMTY	'WRNY'L	PRYKYHW
	Y'RN	LTMY'L	'WRYT	TYMWGW
110	'NMRY	'LMYNY'L	YKMTW	STRTW
	SB ^C QNY	BWRTY'S	RSPWT	KRSWN
	'M'P	WP'TN'	'H'L	S'BY'L
	BLQYR	PKHWR	HSTR	STRY'L
	'LYSS	HLSY'L	TRSPW	QRSTWS
	MLKY'L	'RDQ	HSDY'L	'HSP
	'MY'L	PRNWS	GDY'L	SBYB'L

These are the angels³⁸ who bring around³⁹ the opinion 115 of the king and the good will of the nobles, chiefs, and leaders of the kingdom, directing and bestowing favor and mercy upon all who arise in purity to request anything from them. Perform this rite zealously and you will succeed.

If you wish to turn the king's opinion to your favor, or (that of) the chief of the army, or a rich man, or a ruler, or a judge of a city, or all the citizens of the state, or ³⁷ Here spelled with a η instead of a κ as in 1:8. The manuscripts show other variations, BLMY', GDYMY'.

³⁸ Perhaps the 36th angel comes from $\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\acute{o}\varsigma$. Cf. 1:130.

³⁹ משובבים is possibly from שכב . Margalioth suggests amending זו משרתים to שחטוננו or משרתים . Possibly amend to מסבבים . Cf. 1:127 שחטובו .

(if you wish to change) the heart of a great or wealthy woman, or the heart of a beautiful⁴⁰ woman, (do this). Take a lion cub and slaughter it with a bronze knife and catch its 120 blood and tear out its heart⁴¹ and put its blood in the midst (of the heart) and write the names of these (above mentioned) angels in blood upon the skin between its eyes; then wash it out with wine three years old and mix (the wine) with the blood.

Then take three of the chief spices, istorgon⁴² and myrrh and musk,⁴³ and stand clean and pure, facing the brilliant star⁴⁴ and put the spices on the fire; then take in your hand the cup in which are the wine and the blood and say (this spell over it while burning the incense) and call 125 on the name of the overseer and the names of the angels of this encampment. (Do this) twenty-one times over the blood and over the wine and say to the brilliant star, the name (of the star) which is that of Aphrodite, three hundred (times)⁴⁵ and (the name of the) angel ḤSDY'L (and then say):

⁴⁰Reading ביופיה for יופיה.

⁴¹Cf. PGM III:425 and DMP 25:27, p. 155.

⁴²איסטרוקון is probably στύραξ (styrax), a fragrant gum.

⁴³מושך. If Margalioth is correct in assuming that מושך is a transliteration of the Persian musk and the Greek moschos, then the ך implies an Aramaic form making שורה the Aramaic "chain" or "chord." Margalioth points out the similarity between the Arabic targum of SHR which reads WSWRT 'LMSK and the Arabic targum of the Song of Songs 1:13 which reads SRH 'LMSK. Thus the targum renders "bag of myrrh" as "bag of musk."

⁴⁴I.e., Aphrodite-Venus. Cf. 1:126.

⁴⁵ש. Cf. PGM IV:2891. Margalioth suggests deletion of the ש.

I adjure you in the name of the angels of the fourth encampment who serve KLMY' that you bring around for me King N so that the heart of his army and the heart of his ministers (will be) in my hand, I, N son of N, and I will find favor and mercy before him and he will do what I want and ask, whenever I ask (anything) from him.

130 When you finish repeating the adjuration twenty-one times, look up and you will see (something) like a coal of fire descending into the blood and wine.⁴⁶

If you wish to enter the presence of the king or any (great) man, or a judge, wash yourself with "living" water⁴⁷ and take some of the blood and some of the wine and anoint your body, and place the lion's heart over your heart. If (you wish) to 135 bring around the citizens of the city⁴⁸ take the lion's heart and hide it in the midst of the city, and write on a (piece of) gold foil⁴⁹ the (name of) the overseer and (the names of the angels of) his encampment and say thus:

You angels who go around and circulate in the world, bring around (to me) all the citizens of this city, great and small, old and young, lowly and distinguished. Let the fear and terror of me be over them as the terror of the lion is over all the animals. And as this heart is mute while I am speaking, so let 140 all of them listen to me, and let none of the children of Adam and Eve be able to speak against me.

⁴⁶ Cf. the notion of the descent of the holy spirit, body and blood of Christ into the bread and wine of the Eucharist. Note the use of QRSTWS in the angelic list of this encampment. Cf. 4 Ezra 14:39.

⁴⁷ מֵיִם חַיִּים, "living water," i.e., water from a stream or spring, not from a cistern.

⁴⁸ מְדִינָה is here translated as "city" as it fits the sense better than "state" which was used in 1:118.

⁴⁹ צִיָּץ, gold plate, metal disc, or lamella, often used for making amulets.

Hide the heart in the middle of the city and go into seclusion⁵⁰ for three days and after three days appear in the city. (For this occasion) put some of the lion's blood under the soles of your feet.

If you wish to bind yourself to the heart of a great or wealthy woman⁵¹ take some perspiration from your face (and put it) in a new glass vessel; then write on it, (i.e.) on a tin lamella,⁵² the name of the overseer and the names of the angels, and throw (the tin lamella) in the midst (of the flask) and say thus over the perspiration of your face:

I adjure you angels of favor and knowledge, that you will turn (to me) the heart of N daughter of N and let her do nothing without me, and let her heart be (joined) with my heart in love.

Take the new flask and bury it under her doorstep⁵³ and say:

Just as a woman will return to the infant of her womb, so this N will return to me to love me from this day and forever.

This should be written⁵⁴ at the full moon.

⁵⁰Literally "hide your face."

⁵¹This love potion is independent of the previous use of the lion's blood.

⁵²Either the phrase "on it" or "on a tin lamella" seems to be a repetitive addition.

⁵³Literally "the place of her coming in and going out."

⁵⁴Reading יכתוב for יכתב .

These are the angels who serve 'SYMWR in the fifth encampment:

	BTW'R	ŠKYNTTK	'DWM'	TQW
	MQP'	LHB'	^C LY	^C ZY
	ŠKNY'L	KNWR	BNŠ	QRB'
	SRK	HLŠY'L	HRMN ^C	^C BR
	HWD	MLKYH	PR ^C TWP	'D ^C T
	QWP	MNMLK	DYNMWR	'LPNT ^T WS
	DYDRYWK	KLNH	NYNH ^Y '	DŠNH ^Y '
155	MLGDM	DYMHN	LYBRNK	TTQHH
	'PNY'L	ZBYTWR	DKNSWR	RMGDL
	LHTQWP	^C LY	GDGDL	PRWŠ
	MSRWŠ	KDYR	MWS	DYQN'
	NŠR	TWB	DRWMY'L	DYR'Z
	DMWL'	DYDY'L	T ^C Y	KRM
	'TR	^C QB	HWNMWR'	'NQYW
	GZRY'L	ŠBY'L	ŠBYWD ^C	YYQR
	'DWT	RGBY'L

These are the angels who obey (you) during the night (if 160 you wish) to speak with the moon or the stars or to question a ghost or to speak with the spirits.

If you wish to speak with the moon or with the stars about any matter, take a white cock and fine flour, then slaughter the cock⁵⁵ (so that its blood is caught) in "living water."⁵⁶
Knead the flour with the water and blood and make three cakes

⁵⁵Reading 150 for 100.

⁵⁶Cf. above, note 47.

and place them in the sun, and write on them with the blood the name(s) of (the angels of) the fifth encampment and the name of its overseer and put the three of them on a table of 165 myrtle wood, stand⁵⁷ facing the moon or facing the stars and say:

*I adjure you to bring the planet of N and his star near to the star and planet of N, so his love will be tied with the heart of N son of N.*⁵⁸

Or say:

*Place fire from your fire in the heart of this N (masc.) or that N (fem.) so she will abandon her father's and mother's house⁵⁹ because of love for this N (masc.) son of N (fem.).*⁶⁰

Then take two of the cakes and place them with the cock in a new flask; then seal its mouth with wax and hide the flask in a place not exposed to the sun.⁶¹

170 If you wish acts of kindness (to be done to you); take the ⁵⁷Reading אִמֶּר for עוֹמֵר.

⁵⁸The grammar here is most confusing. It would seem that the first clause (1:165,166) is a homosexual love formula and that the second (1:166,167) is bi-sexual. Another possibility is that the first clause uses a common masculine to imply that the formula could be used by any party. The fact that the second clause specifically provides for attraction of either a male or a female to a man seems, however, to imply that the first clause is indeed homosexual. The question is influenced by our rendering of נִאֲמָר . Does it imply a new formula or a continuation of the former? Cf. its usage in the first firmament, second encampment (p.27). Also compare DMP 22:40 p.143; and PGM IV:345f. and 1480f.

⁵⁹Literally "her father's house and her mother." This is probably a colloquial construction.

⁶⁰Note the definition of an individual by specification of his mother. This is common in Egyptian magic texts and used often in SHR. A common saying was, "the mother is certainly known, the father uncertain."

⁶¹See also 2:173. Cf. PGM VII:915. καὶ ἅλῳ μὴ δειξῆς remaining cake, crumble it, and place it in aged wine in a glass cup, and say the name(s) of the angels in the presence of the moon and the stars and continue thus:

I adjure you that you will give favor, kindness, and affection, to N, from the favor, kindness, and affection that radiate from your countenance. (Give them to) me, N son of N, so that I will find favor, kindness, affection, and honor in the eyes of every man.

Then blow into the wind and wash your face each dawn, 175 for nine days, with the wine and the cake crumbled in it.

If you wish to question a ghost; stand facing a tomb and repeat the names of the angels of the fifth encampment (while holding) in your hand a new flask (containing) oil and honey mixed together and say thus:

180 I adjure you O spirit of the ram bearer⁶² who dwell among the graves upon the bones of the dead, that you will accept from my hand this offering and do my will and bring me (the spirit of) N son of N who is dead. Raise him up so that he will speak to me without fear and tell me true things without concealment.⁶³ Let me not be afraid of him and let him tell me (for) my question, (the answer) I need from him.

He should appear immediately. But if he does not, repeat the adjuration a second time (and) up to three times. When he appears set the flask before him and after this speak your words while holding a twig of myrtle in your hand.⁶⁴ If you 185 wish to release him, strike him three times with the myrtle and pour out the oil and honey, and break the cup, and throw the myrtle from your hand, and return home by a different route.

⁶²קרפוריא , i.e., Κρησφόρος or Hermes.

⁶³Cf. PGM IV:1034. Spirits do not always tell the truth.

⁶⁴The flask and myrtle are to protect the person reciting the incantation. Cf. Goodenough, Symbols 2.174.

If you wish to speak with the spirits, go out to "the place of the killed"⁶⁵ and call out there in a singsong, whimpering way:

190

I adjure you in the name of the angels who serve in the fifth encampment, and in the name of the overseer who is over them, who is 'SYMWR, that you will hear me at this time and send me the spirit of HGRGYRWT.⁶⁶ She shall go according to my will for whatever I send her and shall obey me in everything until such and such a time.

If you see opposite you a column of smoke, speak your words and send (her) for whatever purpose you wish.

These are the names of the angels who serve PSKR in the sixth encampment:

'ZY'L	'RBY'L	TRYPWN	PWKBWS
PSTMR	LYNNY'L	QRWNYDN	ŠWKDWN
195 SLBYDM	CMY'L	CWZY'L	PNY'L
TRMY'L	HMMY'L	SRMY'L	NYMMWS
NWDNY'Y'	B'RYB'	ZWNNWM	HŠTW'L
SDRY'L	HWPNY'WN	QDMY'L	KPNYY'
'RMY'L	CDMWN	HRMWR	ŠPLY'L
SPRY'L	QHNY'L	ŠBKRYR'	'RMWNYS
TWPWMWS	PŠSY'L	HTPY'L	PRSWMWN
NHLY'L

200 These are the angels of might who gird on power and strength to run from place to place and to fly in all corners

⁶⁵ Possibly the place of public executions or the place where executed criminals were buried, or a place where multiple murders had been committed.

⁶⁶ חגרגירות. The reference is unknown. Possibly from "Hagar the Proselyte," הגר גירות.

of the earth to return a man, a fugitive, either a slave who fled or a thief who fled. (If you wish to catch a fugitive) take four copper lamellae and write upon each and every one of them the name of the man and the name of his mother,⁶⁷ the name of the overseer, PSKR, and the names of the angels who serve him, and say:

205 I charge you, angels of might, to seize N son of N, wherever he goes and wherever he dwells, whether in a city or in a country, whether at sea or on land, whether eating or drinking. You shall make him fly like a flying bird and bring him against his will, and not let him linger one moment, whether by day or by night.

Then take (the) four copper lamellae and hide them in the four directions⁶⁸ whether in the city or in the country.

These are the names of the angels who serve BW'L in the seventh encampment:

210	NWHRY'L	DBB'L	DYMTMR	DB'L
	MḤṢYN	'WR	DY'M	BBYT'L
	SRWR'	'HGYH	PRWPY'L	MKSY'L
	CLZY'L	TKWRKS	QRWMY'L	RMV'L
	LḤSWN	SLHY'L	'HY'L	'KR
	'WBR	SRWGY'L	YDW'L	ṢMṢY'L
	ṢPTȳ'L	RḤBY'	'HMWD'	MRMRYN
	'NWK	'LPRT	'WMYGR'	QRWKNS
	SRPY'L	GDRY'L	'RDWD'	PWRTNY'L
	'GMY'L	RHTY'L	DYTRWN	ḤZ'L
215	PTW'L	GLGL'	DMNṢR	ZZY'L

⁶⁷On descent through the mother, cf. First Firmament, note 60 (p. 37).

⁶⁸I.e., towards the north, south, east, and west.

These are the names of the angels in charge of dreaming, to make anyone who approaches them in purity know what the dream (was) and what its interpretation is.

If the king, or the head of the city, or governor, or your friend summons you and you want to give him an answer from your wisdom, say to him, "I will make known to you what is in your heart concerning me." (or "what you thought about me," or 220 "what you want to do," or "what is the interpretation of your dream.")⁶⁹ "Give me a period of three days and I will make known to you all that is in your heart." Then go out on Sunday to the sea shore or to a river bank during the third hour of the night. Wear a new cloak⁷⁰ and do not eat (the meat of) any animal,⁷¹ nor anything which yields blood (when slaughtered), and do not drink wine. Take myrrh and pure frankincense and place them on burning coals in a new earthen vessel, and turn your face toward the water and repeat three 225 times the name of the overseer with the name(s) of the angels of the encampment. When you see a pillar of fire between heaven and earth say thus:

⁶⁹The magician is to choose the appropriate phrase.
 Cf. PGM I:175.

⁷⁰ ἵνυδα i.e., στολή. Semetic pronunciation often avoids double consonants by the introduction of vowels.

⁷¹ Hebrew דג. Margalioth reads גד, fish, which might be possible in sympathy with "the river." But see 2:8 and notes. Furthermore the next phrase, "anything which issues blood" would not classically apply to "fish." In 5:35 we read "both small animals and all that yields blood even fish." Thus it seems that SHR would go out of its way to make the distinction if it was appropriate.

230

I adjure you by the One who measured the waters in the palm of His hand and rebuked the waters so that they fled from Him, and made winds flying in the air his personal servants, as a fiery flame, who rebuked the sea and dried it up, and made rivers a desert,⁷² by His name and by its letters, I adjure you, and by the names of the angels⁷³ of the seventh encampment who serve BW'L, that you make known to me what is in the heart of N son of N and what is his desire, and what is the interpretation of his dream and what is his thought.

Do likewise on the second and third nights and you will see that a pillar of fire will appear to you with a cloud on it like the image of a man.⁷⁴ Question him and he will tell you whatever you ask. And if you wish to release him throw some of the water, from the sea or the river by which you are standing, toward heaven three times and say under your breath:⁷⁵

235

Invisible Lord BW'L, sufficient to our need, the perfect shield bearen,⁷⁶ I free you, I free you, subside and return to your (heavenly) course.

Say this seven times. Perform the entire rite in purity and you will succeed.

These are the names of the seven spirits who serve in the firmament called Shamayim.

PEACE.

⁷²The adjuration is a combination of Isa 40:12; Ps 104:4; 107:33; and Nah 1:4.

⁷³Reading שמות for בשם ז, i.e., "the names of" for "the name of seven" angels, since there are 44 angels in this encampment.

⁷⁴Cf. Ezek 1:4.

⁷⁵Cf. PGM III:108.

⁷⁶With Margalioth, Sepher 80, following the transcription of Morton Smith. אוורודי גרי/באל פוט/מוס טריגרי טליגוס אפדיפורוס. ἀόρατε κύριε Βουήλ, ποτ' ἡμᾶς ἄρκει, τελικὸς ἀσπιδηφόρος.

(THE SECOND FIRMAMENT)

The second firmament is called "heaven of heavens."¹ In it are frost and fog² and treasuries of snow and treasuries of hail, angels of fire and angels of moisture³ and spirits of terror and spirits of dread. The firmament is full of fear, for within it are innumerable angels constituting armies upon armies and over them are officers and overseers. Within the 5 firmament are twelve steps⁴ and on each and every step stand angels in their splendor, and over them is one high official over another. Nevertheless, for human affairs, they are obedient to everyone who approaches them in purity.

If you wish to ask something of any who stand on the steps of the second firmament, cleanse yourself for three weeks from all fruit of the palm,⁵ from all kinds of animals, small and large,⁶ from wine, from (all) types of fish and from all (animals) that yield blood (when slaughtered); and do not approach a woman in her impurity,⁷ and do not touch anything ¹שמי שמים, a common designation in mystical literature for the second heaven.

²קטור וקטור "smoke." Here it seems to imply mist or fog in parallel to frost, snow, hail, etc.

³Reading זיעה, i.e., "moisture" with Mss. ה and נ instead of זיע, i.e., "trembling."

⁴מעלות, i.e., steps, levels, divisions.

⁵Reading דקל for דקה with Margalioth.

⁶דקה וגסה, i.e., small and large animals. This is a common distinction found in Rabbinic literature between sheep and goats as opposed to cattle.

⁷Cf. Ezek 18:6.

which has died,⁸ and do not come near a leper or one afflicted 10 by venereal discharge, even accidental, and guard your mouth from every evil word and from every sin; and sanctify yourself from every sin.

Upon the first step stand these:

'HMṚY'L	HDRY'L	ṚSY'L	HṢCY'L
DMYMY'L	ZBDY'L	RNZY'L	C̣NS'L
KTBR'L

These, their station is on the first step. They stand in terror, cloaked in wrath, girded with dread, surrounded by 15 trembling, their raiment like an image of fire, their faces like the appearance of lightning, and their mouths never cease (to utter) mighty words. Nevertheless, their voice is not heard, for their task is to silence, to frighten, and to terrify anyone who opposes the man who calls on them in purity.

If you wish to silence a great and powerful people, or a governor, or a judge, or the citizens of a city, or of a state, take a handful of ashes from beneath the bread offering⁹ of an 20 idol and say over it backwards¹⁰ seven times the names of the angels written above (as standing) on the first step, and say:

I ask from you, angels of silence, that in this place, you silence every mouth and every heart of the children of Adam and Eve who arise against me to (say) anything evil. Let their mouths utter good things about ⁸Cf. Lev 21:11.

⁹Cf. Testament of Job 7. Here reading פת for פאת

¹⁰מפריע, possibly "out of order" or "irregularly," but most likely "backwards" the normal meaning. Saying things backwards is a well-known magical practice.

*me and let me be exonerated in my lawsuit; do not permit any mouth to speak evil about me.*¹¹

Then sprinkle the ashes, either in the city or in the 25 state, either before the governor or before the judge, and you will be exonerated.

Upon the second step stand these:

CZZY'L	HNN'L	PSSY'L	YŠCY'L
DLQY'L	'RPD'	MR'WT	RYPYPYS
'MNY'L	NHMY'L	PRZYRWM	CNB'L

These, their station is on the second step. They stand with strength, filled with might, surrounded with love, and in their presence fire burns, and they hasten to bring the 30 (ruling) planets of the sons of man into conjunction for love.

If you wish to put the love of a man into the heart of a woman, or to arrange for a poor man to wed a rich woman, take two copper lamellae and write upon them, on both sides, the names of these angels, and the name of the man and the name of the woman and say thus:

I ask of you, angels who rule the fates of the children of Adam and Eve, that you do my will and bring in conjunction the planet of N son of N into conjunction with (the planet of) the woman N daughter of N. Let him find favor and affection in her eyes and do not let her belong to any man except him.

35

Place one (lamella) in a fiery furnace and the other in her ritual bath.¹² Do this on the twenty-ninth of the month

¹¹In this formula note that two angelic names, הסעיאל and דמימאל which are derived from verbs meaning "to silence" (הס, דממת).

¹²By Rabbinic law, if the woman uses a ritual bath, mikvah, she is either about to be married or married, thus limiting the formula's usefulness to bridegrooms, husbands and when the moon has waned completely. Take care to keep yourself from intercourse, from wine, and from all (kinds of) meat for three days.¹³

Upon the third step stand these:

YHW'L	D ^C YHW	'LY'L	BRKY'L
^C LY	SPWM	PNYMWR	'L ^C ZR
GBLY'L	KMS ^Y 'L	'WDH'L	Y ^C S'L
40 RPPY'L	PPSY'L

14

adulterers. Since we do not know in what circles this document circulated, it is of course impossible to draw a definite conclusion about its intended use.

¹³Since the introduction to the Second Firmament gives general rules of abstinence to follow before using the formulas of the Second Firmament, we must assume that these rules are to be followed after the spell has been cast in order to insure effectiveness.

¹⁴These characters appear here in Ms. N. Such symbols, which were used to enhance the power of amulets and spells, were common both in the Greek and Jewish worlds. Cf. Margalioth, Sepher 4; PGM IV:2706; VII:810, 816, 860, 922. These characters are also reproduced in the sixth step of the Second Firmament and in the Third Firmament. Full magical alphabets coalesce at a later date. Cf. Robert Ambelain, La Kabbale Pratique (Paris: Edition Niclaus, 1951), or the chart reproduced in Gustav Davidson, A Dictionary of Angels (London: Macmillan, 1967) 335. The use of ringed symbols may derive from the punch writing on Greek allotment plates which were worn in a similar fashion to amulets. Cf. John H. Kroll, Athenian Bronze Allotment Plates (Cambridge, Mass: Harvard University Press, 1972).

These, their station is on the third step, for their function is to shake and agitate the hearts of men and to make void their intentions and nullify their thoughts. Dread is theirs and fear where they walk, and their appearance is (full) of wrath, and they are exceedingly harsh and mighty men of war, and fear goes before them and trembling after them,¹⁵ and they roar and cause trembling as they go shaking¹⁶ (the world), and their voice is like the voice of thunder and in their hands are rods of fire and their faces are like sparks of fire and 45 fire comes forth from their eyes, and all of them are ready to nullify and make void (whatever they are asked to).

If you wish to nullify a great man's intentions towards you, or the thoughts of an army officer, or the intentions of military men, or any other evil intentions or thoughts (directed against you); go out at midnight when the moon is full, barefoot,¹⁷ and pure, and wrapped in a new cloak.¹⁸ Stand under the moon and say twenty-one times the names of the angels written above, (those) who stand on the third step of 50 the "heaven of heavens," and say:

Moon, Moon, O Moon, bring my words before the angels who stand upon the third step: nullify the thought concerning me of N son of N and the intention of his heart and his plot. Let his mouth be unable to speak ¹⁵This calls to mind the figure of Ares and his attendants.

¹⁶^{רעש}, commonly associated with earthquakes.

¹⁷The text reads ^{יחיד}, i.e., "alone." Margalioth reads ^{קדוש} "barefoot." This is justified by other magical texts of a similar nature.

¹⁸^{ἡλιουδης}, i.e., ^{στολή}. Cf. First Firmament, note 70 (p.41).

against me, destroy his knowledge, and thwart his intentions, and let his purpose¹⁹ be devastated, so that every time he sees me he will be filled with love for me, and let him be changed so that he becomes my friend, and let him not remember any hatred of me, and let me find favor and affection in his eyes.

55 Then write (the names of) the angels and these (following) characters²⁰ upon a silver lamella; put them on a tablet over your heart,²¹ and during all the days you wear it²² you shall succeed.

Upon the fourth step stand these:

SGRY'L	MLKY'L	'WNBYB	PGRY'L
˙
CNNY'L	KLNMY'	'WMY'L	MPNWR
KWZZYB'	'LPY'L	PRYBY'L	S˙CQMYH
KDWMY'L	'SMD ^C	HWDYH	YHZY'L
			˙

60 These, their station is on the fourth step.²³ They are girded with storm and the sound of their steps is like the sound of bronze. They fly from the east and turn from the west towards the gate.²⁴ They are swift as lightning and fire is around ¹⁹Literally "heart."

²⁰והכרטיים for χαρακτῆρες. Cf. note 14 (p.46).

²¹Reading על לוח על לבנה. This is a recipe for an amulet. The idea is that you put the silver foil on a stronger tablet and wear it suspended over your heart (chest).

²²Literally, "it is upon you."

²³Note the ninth angel, KWZZYB', and the thirteenth, 'SMD^C. KWZZYB' is most probably Bar Kochba. This would clearly date the angelology as post 135 CE. 'SMD^C is most probably Asmodeus. Cf. Tob 3:7,17.

²⁴פילן for πυλῶν.

them. They withhold²⁵ sleep from men, and they can do good or do evil.

If you wish to give your enemy trouble in sleeping,²⁶ take the head of a black dog that never saw light during its days and take a lamella from a strip of (lead) pipe from an aqueduct,²⁷ and write upon it (the names of) these angels and say thus:

65 I hand over to you, angels of disquiet who stand upon the fourth step, the life and the soul and the spirit of N son of N so that you may tie him in chains of iron and bind him to a bronze yoke. Do not give sleep, nor slumber, nor drowsiness to his eyelids; let him weep and cry like a woman at childbirth, and do not permit any (other) man to release him (from this spell).

Write thus (as above) and put (the inscribed lead lamella) in the mouth of the dog's head²⁸ and put wax on its mouth, and seal (it) with a ring which has a lion (engraved) upon it. Then go and conceal it behind his house or in a place he frequents.²⁹

If you wish to release him (take the dog's head) away from where it is concealed and remove its seal and withdraw the text and throw it into a fire, and he will fall asleep at once. Do this with humility and you will succeed.

²⁵Literally "separate."

²⁶Cf. PGM IV:2943.

²⁷פסוקרופורון for ψυχροφόρον . Cf. PGM VII:397.

²⁸Cf. PGM XXXVI:232,370.

²⁹Literally "a place in which he goes and comes." His doorstep is most likely, as this was a popular and effective place for magic deposits. Cf. First Firmament, note 53 (p.35).

Upon the fifth step stand these:

	QWN'QRY'L	PTWNY'L	NQRY'L	'Y'L
	Y'BWTY'W	BBSB'W	BKPY	MBWM
75	SKTB'Q	'MRY'L	Y'L'L	MKS'BW

These are they who stand on the fifth step. They grasp shield and spear, and brass helmets are on their heads, and their garments are coats of mail. To their right and left are (storms) as of hailstones. Trembling (accompanies) their running and they stride upon rivers of fire, grasping torches, and hurrying to return an answer, and their mouths never silent from roaring, and their breath³⁰ is like flaming fire, and their fire is blazing (so that) the breath of their mouths 80 kindles fire, for all their actions concern the treasures of fire, for from fire they emerged and they are stationed in fire.

If you wish to light an oven in the cold, take a lump of sulphur (that weighs) about seven shekels³¹ and divide it into the number of compartments in the oven. Then upon each and every (lump of sulphur) write with a bronze stylus³² the names of the angels who stand upon the fifth step and say:

85 I adjure you, angels of fire and angels of flame, by the King who is a consuming fire, that you shall stand with me and kindle the oven which is in such a place, and it shall be that anyone who approaches it will be amazed at its heat.

³⁰Perhaps "their spirit," but "breath" is more likely here.

³¹Or possibly 27 shekels exactly. Reading כ"יז.

³²Reading בעשש נחושט של בעת with Mss. ס and ח instead of בעשש נחושט.

Do this in the proven manner³³ and you will succeed.

Then take the sulphur and cast it into each and every burner of it (the oven) and it (the sulphur) will blaze up strongly. Every day that you wish to light (the oven) write (as directed) and cast (the sulphur) into the midst (of the oven).

Upon the sixth step stand these:

	'BYHWD	QYTR	ZLQY'L	STRY'L
90	'DRK	GHLY'L	TMKY'L	SMKYH
	RB ^c Y'L	YWQMY'L	SMYHWD	MHRY'L
	DWMY'L	KRKWS	QNZ	QNY'L
	KNTWN

These are they who stand on the sixth step. They behave with humility, but their faces are full of glory. Their garments are garments white as light. They stand like giants, awesome as the scholars of a court,³⁴ seated in thrones of glory, trusted to give true (judgments), and in charge of healing.

95 If you wish to heal a man who has had a stroke and half of him is dried up, either by an (evil) spirit or by witchcraft, take spikenard oil and three measures of honey and stand facing the sun as it rises, repeating three times each day for seven days the name of the man and the name of his mother and the names of the angels who stand upon the sixth step. And on the seventh day take him and stand him naked before the sun, and smear oil all over his flesh, while burning myrrh, frankincense, and chosen spices in the sunlight. Then again write upon a ³³ $\kappa\alpha\rho\iota\tau$ for $\delta\omicron\kappa\iota\mu\eta$, or possibly $\delta\acute{o}\lambda\mu\alpha$.

³⁴ Literally, "of a yeshivah" or academy.

silver lamella (the names of) these angels of glory with these characters:³⁵

(Write these on the lamella) as an amulet and put it on his neck with a (cord of) asbestos³⁶ and incense of spices. Write it thus on the twentieth of the month and you will succeed.

Upon the seventh step stand these:

PTHYH	RZY'L	'GRY'L	HGDY'B
'DRWN	KRQT'	Q'TYPWR	'BRY'L
ŠTQY'L	°MY'L	SYKBRDWM

105 These are they who stand on the seventh step, girt with strength, their might like a lion. Half of them are like fire and half of them cold as water. They stand in their place (and are weakened from their fear).³⁷ They are wondrous because of their deeds and no one can comprehend their image, ³⁵ See note 14 above (p.46). The characters given in the text are from Ms. η . Ms. δ reads:

³⁶ אַמִּינִטוֹן for ἀμιάντος i.e. "asbestos." Properly an adjective meaning "undefiled." Asbestos was used to fashion magical chains. Cf. PGM XIII:300; and the Fifth Firmament, line 40 and note 11 (p.76).

³⁷ The text appears to be corrupt. Compare with lines 157-160 below.

for they come great in stature with sparks of light upon their eyelids. Those who stand below are unable to look at their appearance and those, too, who stand above are frightened by 110 their appearance; for they turn to every side and above, and they move in all four directions.³⁸

If you wish to expel from the city every dangerous wild animal, whether lion, or wolf, or bear, or leopard, or (if you wish to quell) a river or sea which is rising and washing against buildings, (do the following). (For the wild animals) make a bronze image in the likeness of the one (which you desire to expel) and then make an iron lamella and write upon it, on the obverse and reverse, the names of the angels (of the seventh step) and bind it upon (the image) and bury it at the 115 entrance of the city and let its face be facing north. If it is a river or a sea you wish to bind so that it will not come and flood (the city), make a stone image (of a man), write (the names of) these angels on two copper lamellae and place them beneath his heels, and make a marble staff and place it on his shoulder, his right hand grasping the staff and his left hand open and his face towards the water.³⁹

³⁸This implies that the angels can look in all directions at once.

³⁹This image seems to be forbidden by Rabbinic texts. Cf. Mishnah Avodah Zarah 3:1; Maimonides, Mishnah Torah on A.Z. 7:6. Note that there are no spells, rituals, or sacrifices mentioned to be used when employing this figure. Perhaps a later hand has deleted them.

Upon the eighth step stand these:

	'BRH	BRQY'L	'DWN'Y'L	CZRY'L
	BRKY'L	CMY'L	QDŠY'L	MRGY'L
	PRW'L	PNY'L	MRBNY'L	MRNYS'L
120	ŠMY'L	C'MNY'L	MTN'L	HWD HWD

These are they who stand upon the eighth step.⁴⁰

Their appearance is as shining amber, they speak by their deeds, trembling and fire are in their dwelling place, (their presence) is filled with fear.⁴¹ They rule the spirits that wander in the earth, and in a place where their name is invoked an evil spirit cannot appear.

If you wish to drive off an evil spirit so it will not come to a woman when she is in childbirth and so it will not kill 125 her child, before the woman's pregnancy write (the names of) these angels on a golden lamella and place it in a silver tubular case and let her wear it, and at the time of childbirth take four silver lamellae and write upon them (the names of) the angels and place them in the four sides of the house⁴² and no (evil) spirit will come in.⁴³

⁴⁰The sixteenth, הוּר הוּר, is not an angelic name. It is rather a description of their magnificence. Possibly amend to read הוּר וְהוּר both here and in 2:121.

⁴¹The text says, "they are filled with fear," but the meaning is clearly that they frighten those they encounter.

⁴²Probably the center of the four walls and not the corners.

⁴³Literally "come up," but the meaning is come up into (the house)."

Upon the ninth step stand these:

	GDWDY'L	SKSY'L	TRSWNY'L	NSHY'L
	'SDD'	RBNY'	HLYL'L	TWQPY'L
130	SMKY'L	PDH'L	QRB'	SY'L
	PR'L	PTHY'L

These are they who stand on the ninth step. Quick and mighty, flying through the air, their strength is a breastplate and they appear to have swords in their hands; prepared for war, grasping bows and holding javelins, they leap forth from the fire. And they have horses of fire, and the harness of their chariots is of fire, and terror goes with them wherever they turn.

If you wish that a man going forth to war be protected from 135 arrow, sword, or any blow, take seven leaves of a bay tree⁴⁴ and write these names on them, two on each and every one of them, and put them in spikenard oil, and on the day he goes forth to war, let him smear (the oil) upon his flesh and upon his sword and his bow and arrows. Again write (the names of the angels) on a silver lamella, put them in a bronze tubular case, and let him tie it over his heart, then no blow will touch him.

⁴⁴Reading ערָא for ער. Cf. Jastrow, Dictionary 1109;
 PGM XXIV:15; I:264.

Upon the tenth step stand these:

140	DKRY'L	HRY'L	ŠBQY'L	'TKY'L
	SMYK'L	MRMW'L	QN'L	SPTP
	YH'L	'LSDQ	'KPP	cZM'L
	MKMYK'L	TRKY'L	TBGY'L

These are they who stand on the tenth step.⁴⁵ They have been commanded (to reward) truth. Before them are myriads upon myriads (of angels) holding reed (pens) for fire and writing scrolls uninterruptedly, and recording acquittal for all those who call upon their names, (so that they) will be rescued and saved from forced tribute, the law of the land, and from every death penalty.

145 If you wish to rescue your friend from a bad judgment, or from any difficulty, purify yourself from all impurity, and do not cohabit with a woman for three days; then stand before the sun at the dawn and repeat these names (of these angels) and say:

150 I beseech thee O great angel who art called "sun," who ascend the steps of the firmament, who watch the children of men, that you will perform my request and will bring my words before the King of Kings of Kings, the (Holy One) Blessed be He, to whom I pray concerning the case of N son of N, who is in trouble and has a bad case; and that you will bring over for him, from (God's) presence, something good and a time of relief. Let those who sought to do him evil be ashamed and let him be rescued without injury.

In addition, write (the names of) these angels on a copper lamella and conceal it in the east, so it will be exposed to the sun at sunrise.⁴⁶ Do everything in purity and you will succeed.

⁴⁵For the tenth angel read אֵל צֶדֶק as one word with Ms. ה.

⁴⁶Literally, "at its arising."

Upon the eleventh step stand these:

155	RPDY'L	DMW'L	M'RYNWS	'MYN'L
	SHY'L	CQRY'L	'DNY'L	RDQY'L
	SLMY'L	'STTY'L	ST'L	'GLGLTWN
	'RMWT	PRHG'L	NPPMYWT

These, their position is upon the eleventh step. There is fear where they stand, a great multitude stationing (themselves) and establishing camps of ministering (angels) in the heaven, for on their command angels of fire run and return, causing (men) to descend from greatness and rise to splendor.

160 They fly to and fro, resuming their places, glorifying their creator and extolling their maker.

If you wish to restore to office one who has fallen from his place, a king, or minister, or governor, or judge, take oil and honey and fine flour and place them in a new glass vial,⁴⁷ and purify yourself from all impurity, and do not eat *nevelah*⁴⁸ and do not touch a woman's bed,⁴⁹ for seven days. Then on the seventh day stand beneath the moon, in its fourteenth, fif-

165 teenth, or sixteenth day,⁵⁰ and take the vial in your hand, and write on it (the names of the angels of) this encampment of the ⁴⁷ פִּיזָהִי for φιάλη.

⁴⁸ That is meat from an animal which has died from natural causes.

⁴⁹ This expression should probably be understood as a metaphoric prohibition of cohabitation, though the literal meaning may be understood as a Rabbinic precaution against impurity.

⁵⁰ That is, "on the full moon." It seems to be implied by 2:163 that one may begin preparations on either the seventh, eighth, or ninth, but since 2:172 implies that the adjuration is to be recited on all three days of the full moon, one must begin preparations on the seventh.

(eleventh) step and recite over it seven times, while facing the moon, the names of the angels and say:

170 I bring my petition before you, O Moon, who travel by day and by night with chariots of light and angels of mercy before and behind you. I adjure you by the King who causes you to rise and set, as you are thin and become full and return to your place, so restore N son of N to his place and let him be (again) honored in the eyes of all who see him, and as you have glory in the world, so bestow glory upon him in the eyes of all the children of Adam and Eve, and restore him to his office, and let him rule as at the beginning and let him not move from his position (again).

Do this for him for three days, and afterwards make them⁵¹ into a cake and dry it at night so that the sun does not shine on it, and have him eat it for three days, before sunrise, and bury (the) vial, with the writing still on it,⁵² in his house.

175 Upon the twelfth step stand these:

'STRYMY	BR'WT	BMR'WT	DRWDY'L
SDRLY'L	TLHBM	BRG'L	PY'L
PP'L	YKPTYNY	KLPTWN	BWBWKWK
'WMTWN	'RTMYKTWN	'SMYGDWN	SPNYG
PRNYG'L	PSYKSWK	T'GYSWN	'RTLYDY

180 These, their position is on the twelfth step. Surrounded by righteousness, rays of majesty on their heads, full of understanding, they understand how to praise (the Lord). They stand in two equal companies, half of them singing and the other half answering after them. Their language heals, their speech binds up (wounds), and anything they mention will be successful.

⁵¹ I.e., the oil, honey, and flour.

⁵² Literally, "and vial bury written." One expects "and bury the inscribed vial" in order to parallel 2:165.

If you wish to cure a headache (affecting) half the head⁵³ or to bind or rebuke the spirit causing blindness, take fat that covers the brain of a black ox, and while in (a state of) purity, write on it the names of these angels and place it in a silver tubular case, then bind the tube with seven colors⁵⁴ and place it beside the pain. (In order to succeed) abstain 185 from meat, from wine, from (contact with) the dead, from menstruating women, and from every unclean thing.

⁵³Cf. PGM VII:199.

⁵⁴Cf. PGM VII:271.

(THE THIRD FIRMAMENT)

The third firmament is filled with storerooms of mist from which the winds go forth, and inside it are encampments of thunder from which lightning emanates. Within, three princes sit on their thrones; they and their raiment have an appearance like fire and the appearance of their thrones is like fire, fire that gleams like gold, for they rule over all the angels of fire. They are like fire in their strength and their voices 5 are like the roar of a peal of thunder. And their eyes are like sunbeams, and they rule over the wheels of flame and fire. Moreover, they have wings to fly. The whinnying of their mouths is as horses,¹ their appearance like torches; when they speak they cause trembling, when they shout they cause weakness. They soar in every direction and fly to every corner (of the world).

These are the names of the princes who rule in the habitation² which is the third firmament. The name of the first is YBNY'L, the name of the second is RHTY'L, and the 10 name of the third is DLQY'L. YBNY'L is in charge of all things concerning the igniting and extinguishing of fire. RHTY'L is in charge of every chariot of fire³ causing it to ¹Cf. Nah 2:5.

²מִעֲוֵן, i.e., habitation, temple, place.

³The chariots of fire are the heavenly fires over which these princes rule. The circling celestial bodies are viewed as the circling chariots of the hippodrome. Thus RHTY'L appears as the ruler of chariot races and his name (RHT = run) indicates that he was created for this function. The association of RHTY'L with the other angels of fire comes through Helios who drove a fiery chariot and team and was therefore the most conspicuous of charioteers and thus became the patron of their profession.

run (successfully) or to fail.⁴ DLQY'L is in charge of flames of fire, to kindle or quench (them).

These are the names of the angels who serve YBNY'L:

	ŠCYPY'L	'DRY'L	TDHDY'L	BČŠY'L
	THPY'L	RLBY'L	BLNY'L	THZRY'L
15	'CZY'L	'MNHY'L	MLTHY'L	DYBQY'L
	BRŠS'L	SH'L	TTB'L	QSMY'L
	TSY'L	QSTSDY'L	NMDY'L

If you wish to extinguish (the fire which heats) a bath-house so it will neither flare up nor burn, bring a salamander⁵ and place it in a glass vessel with oil aged for three years. Do not set it upon the ground, but repeat backwards over it seven times during the third hour of the night the name of 20 the overseer and the names of the angels who serve before him, and say:

I adjure you, O salamander, in the name of YBNY'L and in the name of the angels of fire who serve him, just as you were driven from fire, so drive away and extinguish the fire from the bathhouse⁶ of N son of N. And you, angels of fire, all of whose deeds pertain to fire, do not permit fire to enter or warm this bathhouse, but stand on the gates of his (the owner's) house and enter it, and make it like cold snow⁷ or cold water.
25

⁴Literally, "stumble." The author is writing of chariots but thinking of horses.

⁵אֱלִיָּהוּ for σαλαμάνδρα. The salamander is well known in the ancient world as being associated with fire. Cf. Ginzberg, Legends 5.52, n. 157f.

⁶Deleting טִלְחָה, i.e., "blazing" since the purpose was to prevent ignition and the adjective implies the bathhouse is already ablaze.

⁷Cf. Prov 25:13.

Then take the flask of oil and put some of it on the four corners of each and every room. If you wish to undo the spell, take some of the remaining oil and stand facing the sun and repeat the name of YBNY'L and the names of the angels who serve him and say:

30 I adjure you, angel of fire and angel of conflagration, that you will undo what I have bound and will permit the angels standing at the gates of the bathhouse of N son of N to ignite and kindle its fire as before.

Then take the flask of oil and pour (some of it) in the four corners of each room and the fire will ignite and burn.

These are the names of the angels who serve RHTY'L:

'GR'	ZRGRY	GNTS	T ^C ZM'
LTSRP'L	GDY'L	TMNY'L	^C QHY'L
GWHPNY'L	'RQNY	SPYQW'L	MWŠY'L
SWSY'L	HTNY'L	ZKRY'L	'KNSP
35 SDQY	'HSP	NKMR'	PRDY'L
QLYLY'L	DRWMY'L

8

⁸These characters are from Ms. n . Cf. Second Firmament, note 14 (p.46).

If you wish to race horses, (even) when they are exhausted, so that they will not stumble in their running, that they will be swift as the wind, and the foot of no living thing will pass them, and they will win popularity in their running, take a silver lamella and write upon it the names of the horses and the names of the angels and the name of the prince⁹ who is over them and say:

40 I adjure you angels of running, who run amid the stars, that you will gird with strength and courage the horses that N is racing and his charioteer¹⁰ who is racing them. Let them run and not become weary nor stumble. Let them run and be swift as an eagle. Let no animals stand before them,¹¹ and let no other magic or witchcraft affect them.

Take the lamella and conceal it in the racing lane (of the one) you wish to win.

These are the names of the angels who serve DLQY'L:

45	NWRY'L	'ZLYBN	'YLY'L	MLKYH
	HYLY'L	HRH'L	SLQY'L	SGRY'L
	PSKY'L	CQRY'L	SMNY'L	SBBY'L
	NHLY'L	TGMLY'L	'MYNW'L	TLB ^C P
	QTHNY'L	'PRY'L	'NGY'L	MŠRY'L
	'MNGN'N

If you wish to give proof¹² (of your powers) to your ⁹The texts read "princes," but the singular is necessary. Cf. Ms. n ¹⁰סוֹכֵי הַכֶּרֶס for ἡνιόχος.

¹¹Cf. Dan 8:4.

¹²דַּוָּקָמִי probably for דִּוְקָמִי - "proof" or "demonstration," but possibly דִּוְקָמִי - i.e. "example." Cf. Second Firmament, note 33 (p.51).

beloved or to your friend, for example, to fill a house with fire which will not burn, take a root¹³ of a wild plant¹⁴ and put it on burning coals and as the smoke rises in the house, 50 recite the names of the angels and the name of their overseer, who is DLQY'L. When the smoke rises seven times, and when the smoke will be....¹⁵ all those who see it will see it as fire. When you recite the names of the angels say:

55 I adjure you, O angels cloaked in fire, by Him who is all fire, who sits upon a throne of fire, and whose ministers are a flaming fire,¹⁶ and encampments of fire serve before Him. By His great name I adjure you, that you show me this great miracle and fill this house with your fire. Let me and all with me see this great miracle and not be afraid.

When you finish your words, you will see the house filled with fire. If you wish to cause (the fire) to subside speak the adjuration backwards and say:

Angels of fire, extinguish, extinguish at once, hurry, make haste.¹⁷

How great are your works O Lord, you have made all of them in wisdom.¹⁸

¹³Reading עקר for עגר.

¹⁴אגריאנופוריס for άγρυλοφορος.

¹⁵The text seems corrupt. We seem led to understand, "and when the smoke will be (all that can be seen) all those who see it will see it as fire."

¹⁶Cf. Ps 104:4

¹⁷Cf. 1 Sam 20:38

¹⁸Cf. Ps 104:24. This is the end of the Third Firmament and not part of the adjuration.

(THE FOURTH FIRMAMENT)

The fourth firmament is pitched¹ upon a storm wind, and stands on pillars of fire, and is held up by crowns of flame,² and full of treasuries of strength, also storehouses of dew. As each of its corners are swift angels running with each other, prancing, prancing.³

Within are seven rivers of fire and water, and along them, on both sides, stand innumerable angels. On one side stand 5 angels of fire that burn with an incandescent flame and on the other side angels of cold wrapped in hailstones. Neither do the (angels of cold) quench (the angels of fire) nor do (the angels of fire) ignite the (angels of cold). These immerse themselves in the rivers of fire and those immerse themselves in the rivers of water,⁴ and they all recite and chant⁵ songs and praises to the Life of the World for He created them to glorify His power.

Within the (fourth) firmament is the lovely bridal chamber of the sun, filled with light and all aflame. The angels of fire, girded with strength, surround him (the sun) and lead him 10 during the day. Then the angels of water, their bodies like ¹That is, it is pitched like a tent upon its posts.

²Greek capitals on columns seem implied.

³Cf. Judg 5:22.

⁴The immersion is for ritual purification. Presumably they immerse themselves in the river of their own substance, rather than the opposite, but the text leaves the question open.

⁵They thus alternate like a choir. The singing thus seems to be antiphonal.

the sea and their voices like the voice of waters⁶ strengthen themselves with an adornment of might and lead him at night.

These are the names of the angels that lead him during the day:

	'BR'SKS	MRMR'WT	MWKTY'L	M'RYT
	SDQY'L	YHSY	HSY'L	RB'L
	Y'BWK	MY'L	KRYMK'	MRM'N
	PW'L	GBRY'L	'ŠTWN	TWQPY'L
15	'LY'L	NPLY	'W'L	QWDŠY'L
	HWDY'L	NRWMY'L	YRŠY'L	MLKY'L
	'GRYT'L	LHGY'L	MNWRY'L	PL'W'L
	NWRY'L	HRM'Y'L	NSBRY'L

These are the princes of the encampments who lead the sun during the day.⁷

And these are the names of the angels who lead him at night:

	PRSY'L	ŠRSY'L	CGY'L	NBYM'L
20	CMY'L	YSRY'L	'SMCW'L	ŠPTY'L
	S'W'L	RDRY'L	ŠCSY'L	LYBB'L
	BNRY'L	SGRY'L	MNH'L	LMY'L
	PRY'L	PDH'L	LYBR'L	RBS'L
	HMQY'L	BGHY'L	NBRY'L	QSPY'L
	RCDNY'L	HTNY'L	'SPPY'L	HLW'L
	ŠM'Y'L	ZHZH'L	NKBRY'L	PS'L
	QMNY'L	ZH'L	HDY'L

⁶Perhaps read כקול מים רבים, "like the voice of many waters." Cf. Ps 93:4.

⁷Apparently each of the thirty-one named here and below is a leader of others. Note the first angel, ἄβρασαξ, is a transliteration of the correct spelling.

These are the princes of the encampments who lead him at night.

25 If you wish to view the sun during the day, seated in his chariot and ascending; guard yourself, take care, and keep pure for seven days from all (impure) food, from all (impure) drink, and from every unclean thing.⁸ Then on the seventh day stand facing (the sun) when he rises and burn incense of spices weighing three shekels before him, and invoke seven times the names of the angels that lead him during the day. Then if you 30 are not answered after these seven times, go and invoke them in reverse order seven times, and say:

I adjure you, angels that lead the sun in the power of your strength on the heavenly paths to illuminate the world, by the One whose voice shakes the earth, who moves mountains in His anger, who calms the sea with His power, who shakes the pillars of the world with His glance, who sustains everything with His arm, who is hidden from the eyes of all the living, who sits upon the throne of greatness of the kingdom of the glory of His holiness, and who moves through the entire world; I repeat (your names) and adjure you by His great, fearful, powerful, majestic, forceful, mighty, holy, strong, wondrous, secret, exalted, and glorious name;⁹ that you will do my will and desire at this time and season, and will remove the radiance of the sun¹⁰ so I may see him face to face as he is in his bridal chamber. Let me not catch fire from your fire and give me¹¹ permission to do my will.

35

⁸Abstinence from impure food and drink seems implied rather than a fast. This creates a parallel to "unclean things" and follows the same pattern as previous commands of abstinence found in SHR.

⁹For an example of this type of listing see BT Berakhot 33b.

¹⁰The rays of the sun obscure the sun angel.

¹¹Reading וְלִי for וְלִי with Ms. 7.

At the completion of your adjuration, you will see him in his bridal chamber and you can ask him (to foretell questions) of death or life, good or evil. And if you wish to release him, repeat the adjuration and say:

I adjure you that you return the radiance of the sun to its place as in the beginning.

Then the sun will go on his way.

If you wish to see the sun during the night, proceeding (on his course) in the north,¹² purify (yourself) for three weeks of days from all (impure) food and drink, and from every unclean thing. Then stand during the third hour¹³ in the night watches, wrapped in white garments, and say twenty-one times¹⁴ the name of the sun and the names of the angels that lead him at night, and then say:

I adjure you, angels that fly through the air of the firmament, by the One who sees but is not seen, by the King who uncovers all hidden things and sees all secret things, by the God who knows what is in darkness, and who transforms the shadows into morning,¹⁵ and who illumines the night as the day, before whom all secrets are as clear as the sun, for whom there is nothing too difficult.¹⁶ In the name of the Holy King who walks upon the wings of the wind,¹⁷ by the letters of the complete name that was revealed to Adam in the Garden of Eden, (by)¹⁸ the Ruler of the planets,¹⁹ and the ¹²Cf. 1 Enoch 72:5.

¹³Cf. PGM XXXVI:136.

¹⁴This adjuration is triple the previous one in both number of days and times the adjuration is spoken.

¹⁵Cf. Amos 5:8.

¹⁶Cf. Jer 32:17.

¹⁷Cf. Ps 104:3.

¹⁸Reading המושל for במושל .

¹⁹"By the ruler of the planets," stars or fate.

55 sun, and the moon, who²⁰ bow down before Him as slaves before their masters, by the name of the wondrous God, I adjure you, that you will make known to me this great miracle that I desire, and that I may see the sun in his power in the (celestial) circle (traversed by) his chariot, and let no hidden thing be too difficult for me. Let me see him perfectly today, and let me ask him what I wish, and let him speak with me as a man speaks with his friend and tell me the secret of the depths, and make known to me hidden things, and let no evil thing happen to me.

When you finish speaking, you will hear a peal of thunder from the north and you will see something like lightning come forth and light up the earth before you. And after you see him, you will assuredly bow down to the ground and fall upon your face to the earth and pray this prayer:

65 Holy Helios who rises in the east, good mariner, trustworthy leader of the sun's rays, reliable (witness), who of old didst establish the mighty wheel (of the heavens), holy orderer, ruler of the axis (of the heaven), Lord, Brilliant Leader, King, Soldier.²¹ I, N son of N, present my supplication before you, that you will appear to me without (causing me) fear, and you will be revealed to me without causing me terror, and you will conceal nothing from me and will tell me truthfully all that I desire.

²⁰Reading $\text{οἱ ἡλιος καὶ ὁ μῆσας}$ for οἱ ἡλιος .

²¹The prayer to Helios here is transliterated into Hebrew from Greek. Cf. Margalioth, Sepher 12 and 99f. The following transcription differs from Margalioth in the underlined words: εὐσεβῆς ἀνατολικὸν ἥλιος, ναύτης, ἀγαθός, πιστός ἀκτῶν κορυφαίος, εὐπιστός, ὃς πάλαι τροχὸν ὀβριμον καθίστης, κοσμητὴς ἅγιος.

πολοκράτωρ, κύριε, πομπὸς εὐφωτος, τύραννος, στρατιώτης.

Then stand up and you will see (the sun) in the north proceeding to the east.²² After this, put your hands behind you, and bow your head low, and ask whatever you desire. And after you have questioned him, lift your eyes toward heaven and say:

70 'WRPLY'L, 'WRPLY'L,²³ I adjure you by the One who formed you, for His splendor and His glory, to illuminate His world, and who gave you rulership of the day, that you will not harm me,²⁴ and will not terrify me. I shall neither fear nor tremble, and you will return to your course in peace when I release you²⁵ and you will not pause in your course from now on forever.²⁶

AMEN SELAH.²⁷

²²Cf. 1 Enoch 72:5.

²³אורפליאל, this is apparently a name for the sun. Possibly אור פלי אל. The "marvelous" or "hidden" "light of God." פלאיה פלאו = פלו Where ²⁴Cf. PGM I:346; IV:3122; V:41.

²⁵Reading ואתירך for וחתירך.

²⁶Cf. Ps 115:18.

²⁷This is the conclusion of the Fourth Firmament and not part of the preceeding adjuration.

(THE FIFTH FIRMAMENT)

The fifth firmament is exceedingly exalted. It is magnificent in appearance, for within it are clouds of splendor. It is filled with angels of majesty, and within it (their knees) knock with fear. They are stationed in troop after troop, glorifying (the One) who carved them into flame. The sound of their running is like the crashing of the sea, and their walk is like wheels of thunder. Therein, moreover, are twelve princes of glory seated upon magnificent thrones, the appearance of their 5 thrones is like that of fire. They quarter the heavens at the middle by facing the four directions of the world, three by three toward each direction.¹ And (the) angels run when they send them, and their roaring shakes the world. Lightnings issue from their breath and they have wings of fire and are wreathed with crowns of fire, and the (fifth) firmament shines from the lustre of their faces. They are in charge of the twelve months of the year and understand what will be in each and every month, and without them nothing can happen, for they were created for 10 this. Each is stationed over his month² since they make known month by month that which will be in each and every year.

These are the names of the twelve princes of glory of the fifth firmament:

Š ^c PY'L	DGHY'L	DYDN'WR	T ^C NBWN
TRWRGR	MWR'L	PHDRWN	YLDNG
'NDGNWR	MPNY'L	HŠ ^c NDNRWS	'BRKY'L

¹This seems slightly redundant. Perhaps one λ should be deleted, thus reading "three toward each direction."

²Cf. Isa 47:13.

These are they who are in charge of the twelve months of the year, from the month of Nisan to the month of Adar, each in his month, as they are written.³

15 If you wish to know in which month you will be taken from the world, or what will occur in each and every month, or in which month there will be rain, whether the grain will be plentiful, whether the olive tree will drop its fruit, or in which month kings will set forth for war, or in which month there will be pestilence among men and cattle, or in which month an epidemic will fall among men, or whatever you wish (to know); ask them and you will know.

If you wish to know in which month you will be taken from 20 the world;⁴ take refined gold lamellae and make from them twelve pieces of foil,⁵ then write on each of them the name of an angel and the name of his month. Then take good oil that has aged for seven years and throw all the pieces of foil into it and recite this adjuration seven times over the oil, and say:

25 I adjure you, O angels of wisdom and understanding, by the One who spoke and the world came into being, by the name of the God of Truth, the majestic and glorious, The King high and exalted, strong and powerful, mighty and wondrous, God of all creatures, Refuge of Hosts, righteous, pure and upright and trustworthy, and by the name (of Him) who established you over all the months of the year, He who sits in hidden heights,⁶ who ³This probably means "as they are written above," i.e., the preceeding list gives them in the order of their months from Nisan to Adar.

⁴Cf. PGM I:188; XIII:711.

⁵Literally, "hammered out pieces."

⁶Cf. Ps 91:1.

30 reveals secret mysteries, who rules over death and life, who is King forever and ever and ever, who is established for all eternity. By this adjuration, the great, powerful, strong, fearful, terrible, wondrous, pure, and holy, I adjure you that you will truthfully make known to me the month in which I will be taken, and tell me my fate,⁷ in accordance to my request.

Then put the oil in a new glass vessel (and place it) under the stars for seven nights without exposing it to the sun. And on the seventh night, get up in the middle of the night, and look at the oil and see which month is written upon whichever piece of foil floats on the surface of the oil. In that month it is your fate to be taken. But before you perform this rite, 35 purify yourself from all impurity for three weeks of days, and guard yourself from all (meat of) small animals⁸ and from all that yields blood (when slaughtered) even fish, and do not drink wine, and do not come near a woman, and do not touch a grave, be wary of nocturnal pollution, and walk in humility and prayer, and make your prayers and supplications long, and devote your heart to the fear of heaven, and you will succeed.

After the rite, take the oil and be careful of it for it has great healing power. Make a ring of purified silver, with a large hollow space within.⁹ Take all the pieces of foil and

⁷ Literally, "cast my lot for me."

⁸ See 1:223; 2:8; and note 71, First Firmament (p.41); note 6, Second Firmament (p.43).

⁹ σφαιροειδής perhaps for μεγαλοκοιλός i.e. "pot bellied." The equivalent is dubious, but the sense is clear: a ring with a large top containing a compartment for storage.

40 and put them in the ring with a white flower¹⁰, and with asbestos,¹¹ and seal (it) and place it on your finger; then no evil eye and no evil spirit will come near you, and no evil thing will have dominion in (your) house. In the oil is a great (power of) healing to the sick.

¹⁰ פרח לבן is literally "white flower," and is possibly Greek in origin. Cf. PGM XII:356. Possibly an extract or wine made from the flower.

¹¹ אמיינטון for ἀμύαντος . Cf. 2:101 and note 36, Second Firmament (p.52).

(THE SIXTH FIRMAMENT)

As for the sixth firmament, its storehouses are full of honey.¹ Within is the place prepared for the spirits of the righteous. Light and fire encompass it and within are myriads, thousands upon thousands,² and armies and encampments (of angels) standing in awe and trembling. And on the head of each of them is (what) appears as a crown of fire, and their fire has the appearance of gold. The regiments of the army march within (the sixth firmament), and their strength is like an 5 inextinguishable fire and they are in fear from dread of their rulers. For two officers rule over them, one in the west of the (sixth) firmament and one in the east. And before the armies of spirits are myriads of angels created from flame and burning like fire. Their bodies are like fiery coals and upon coals of fire is their station. And they tremble and shake to sing forth³ songs and praises to the Exalted One of the Universe, who has prepared them to praise His honor and honor His praise.

10 These are the holy angels who rule over all the encampments of the sixth firmament. The name of the first is 'PRKSY⁴ and the name of the second is TWQPYRS. And all the princes of the encampments serve before them.

¹ חֲמֵשׁ, or possibly "fine flour."

² Cf. Ps 68:18.

³ Deleting עִמָּם, "with them," following Ms. 7.

⁴ ἄβραξας ? The common ancient spelling was ἄβρασαξ. Cf. 4:14 and Fourth Firmament, note 7 (p.68).

These are the heads of the encampments which are in the west of the firmament:

	WYWTN	DWKMS'L	KRH'L	'ŠRY'L
	BYW'L	NRH'L	GŠQY'L	GR ^C YH
15	ŠRY'L	MSGY'L	HNY'L	'WRPNY'L
	'QWDW	MWK'L	'LNYTK'L	DM'L
	'KZ'N	ŠYR'YWM	NHRY'L	BHDRK
	ŠWPRY'L	SDRKYN	DBWB'WR	'MLY'L
	TMPNYH	BHHML	PRNYN	'MŠTY'L
	TYMNHRQ

Over these 'PRKSY, who has his camp in the west, is ruler.

These are the heads of the encampments which are in the east of the firmament:

20	GWRY'L	SNY'L	ČZRY'L	ŠRY'L
	'LY'L	MLKY'L	MLMY'L	ŠMY'L
	RNHY'L	'QRY'L	QŠTY'L	'BRKY'L
	ŠDRY'L	SPYPY'L	'RM'T	DMW'L
	MRY'L	ČNNY'L	NYPLY'L	DRMY'L
	GČŠY'L	MNHR'L	BHNYRY'L	'PŠRY'L
	QLČY'L	HDRNY'L	DLRY'L	ŠČPY'L
	DLGLY'L	ČDNNY'L	THRY'L	DBRY'L
	HMNKY'L	HNY'L	TWBY'L

Over these TWQPYRS, who has his camp in the east of the firmament is ruler.

25 If you wish to go on a journey (or) to war⁵ and if you wish to return (safely) from the war or from the journey, or

⁵Reading למלחמה או למלחמה for למלחמה, to correspond to the clear separation following "to return from the war or from the journey."

(if you wish) to flee from the city and you want it to appear that a large and powerful company is with you, so that all who see you will be afraid of you, as of one who has with him a military escort armed⁶ with swords and spears and all of the implements of battle, (then) before you depart from the city or from the place where you dwell, purify yourself from all impurity and cleanse your flesh from all sin and transgression, and make yourself an iron ring and a pure lamella of gold and write (on the lamella) during the third day of the month,⁷ the names of the overseers and the names of the heads of the encampments (both east and west), and put (the lamella) in the ring, and engrave upon the ring, outside of the lamella the image of a man and a lion.⁸ Then at the time you set out to go on your way⁹ and you see that men are coming to seize you, take the ring and put it in your mouth, and lift your eyes to heaven with a pure and cleansed heart and repeat the names of the overseers¹⁰ and the names of the heads of the sixth heaven who serve before them and say:

⁶Reading והם חגורים for ויהיו חגורי with Ms. ל .

⁷Reading בשלושה בחודש with Mss. ח and ל, thus deleting ימים. Cf. PGM IV:170.

⁸The lamella is placed on the top of the ring and the engraving is done around it.

⁹Reading מן במקום שתעא למלחמה בדרך instead of with Mss. ח, ח, ח.

¹⁰PRKSY and TWQPYRS.

I adjure you, O angels of strength and might,¹¹ by the strong and the mighty right hand (of the Lord), by the force of His might and by the power of His rule, by the God revealed at Mt. Sinai, by the myriads of His chariots,¹² by the God whose ministers are a thousand thousands of ten thousands, by the Lord who saved Israel, all six hundred thousand, from Egypt, by the life of the worlds, who spoke to Moses face to face, by the Lord who brings 40 princes to naught,¹³ by the Rock whose hand is sufficient to save and to rescue, by the One who commanded and ignited the camp of Sennacharib,¹⁴ by His name and by its letters; I repeat (your names)¹⁵ and adjure you that you come and stand with me, to aid at this time in every place that I will go. Be seen with me as a great army, in all your might and with the strength of your spears, and let all who see me, from near or far, and all who come to fight 45 me or to seize me, be shattered before me by their great fear of your terrible appearance.¹⁶ And let them not be able to harm me or approach me, let fear and terror fall upon them¹⁷ and let fear of me fall upon them and all the children of Adam and Eve and upon every dangerous animal, and let them (all) tremble and recoil from before me.

When you finish speaking the adjuration, you will see something like fog and smoke before you. Then take the ring from your mouth and put it on your finger. And when you come to your house and wish to release (the angels), return the ring to your 50 mouth and stand facing the sun and repeat (the names of the) angels in reverse order and thereafter say:

I release you, go on your way.

Then put the ring on your finger.

¹¹Cf. Ps 24:8.

¹²Ps 68:18.

¹³Cf. Isa 40:23.

¹⁴Cf. 2 Kgs 19:35; and Isa 37:36. Neither source mentions any fire.

¹⁵I.e., those of the ministering angels and their overseers.

¹⁶Cf. Matt 26:53.

¹⁷Cf. Exod 15:16.

(THE SEVENTH FIRMAMENT)

The seventh firmament, all of it is sevenfold light, and from its light all the (seven) heavens shine. Within it is the throne of glory, set on the four glorious ḥayot.¹ Also within it are the storehouses of lives,² and the storehouses of souls. There is no calculation or limit to the great light within it, and the fullness of the light illumines all the earth. The angels are fixed in pillars of light, and their light is as the light of the brilliant star³ and cannot be extinguished, for 5 their eyes are like flashes of lightning, and they stand upon the margins of (the divine) light, and glorify in fear the One who sits upon the throne of glory. For He alone sits in the heaven of His holiness, seeking out judgment, evening the scales of justice; judging in truth and speaking in righteousness.

And before Him the books of fire are open

And from before Him flow rivers of fire.⁴

When He rises⁵ the gods are afraid,

And when He roars the pillars shake,

¹The "living creatures" of Ezekiel's vision. Cf. Ezek 1:5ff. The ḥayot and opanīm are part of or equivalent to the class of heavenly beings, like the cherubim in Ezek 10, who are the supports of the heavenly throne of the deity.

²"Lives" are here thought of as entities placed by the deity in all living things, and causing them to live. They are distinguished from "souls." Cf. Gen 2:7, "the breath of lives."

³This is certainly a reference to Aphrodite-Venus, who has been referred to previously. Cf. First Firmament, note 44 (p.33).

⁴Cf. Dan 7:10.

⁵Possibly "When He lifts (His voice)."

And from His voice the doorposts tremble.⁶

His soldiers stand before Him,

But they do not gaze upon His likeness.

10 For He is hidden from every eye,

And none can see Him and live.

His appearance is hidden from all,

But no appearance is hidden from Him.

He uncovers deep things from the darkness,⁷

And He knows the secrets of obscurity.

For light dwells with Him,⁸

And He puts on light as a garment.⁹

He sits on light as a throne,

And light is a wall around Him.¹⁰

The Hayot and Opanim bear Him up,

As they fly with their wings.

They have six wings each

And they cover their faces with their wings,

And they turn their faces downward.

15 Their faces are turned toward their fellows,¹¹

And they do not lift their faces upwards,

Because of their fear and their terror.

⁶Cf. Isa 6:4.

⁷Cf. Job 12:22.

⁸Cf. Dan 2:22.

⁹Cf. Ps 102:4.

¹⁰Literally, "closes off what surrounds Him."

¹¹Literally, "to the four of them."

Troops upon troops stand one above another before Him,

And immerse themselves in rivers of purity.

And wrap themselves in garments of white fire,

And sing with humility in a strong voice:

"Holy Holy Holy is the Lord of Hosts,

The whole world is full of His glory,¹²

He is prior to all creatures;

He was when earth and heaven were not yet.

He is alone;

There is no stranger with Him.

By His strength He upholds the heaven(s),

And in all the heavens He is feared,

20 And by all the angels He is revered,

For by the breath of His mouth they were formed

And to glorify His power they were established.

He (acts) alone and who can turn Him back?¹³

And if He commands none can annul.

For He is the King of Kings of Kings,

Ruling over all of the kings of the earth,

And exalted among the angels of heaven.

He searches hearts before they are formed,

And He knows thoughts before they occur.

Blessed be His name

And blessed the greatness of His glory.

¹²Cf. Isa 6:3.

¹³Cf. Job 23:13.

For ages and ages,

And for an eternity of eternities.

For there is no God apart from Him,¹⁴

5 And there is no God beside Him.

Blessed is His name in each generation

And blessed in the heavens on high.

Blessed is His name with its might,

And blessed its mention with the beauty of His power.

For as His name so is His praise as it has been said (in scripture): As is your name, O God, so is your praise to the ends of the earth; your right hand is full of righteousness.¹⁵

He brings the pure to reverence Him,¹⁶

And in His wrath drives away the impure.

He moves mountains by His might and strength,

They did not know when He overturned them in His wrath.¹⁷

He holds the world as a cluster of grapes,

30 Bearing all that was, is, and will be.¹⁸

He is the Ancient of Days,¹⁹

¹⁴Cf. 2 Sam 22:32.

¹⁵This is a prose gloss which breaks the continuity of the hymn.

¹⁶Literally, "to His fear," i.e., to worship and magical practices.

¹⁷Cf. Job 9:5.

¹⁸Cf. Heb 1:3.

¹⁹Cf. Dan 7:9.

And with Him are enduring riches and righteousness.²⁰

Blessed be His glory from His habitation,

And blessed (be He) in the beauty of His dignity.

The hearts of those who fear Him He fills with knowledge,

To search and to know the power of the fear of His name.

Blessed be His name in the dwelling place of His splendor,

And blessed in the beauty of His strength.

Blessed be His name in the storehouses of snow,

And blessed in the rivers of flames.

Blessed be His name in the mists of brilliance,

And blessed in the clouds of glory.

35 Blessed be His name in the myriads of chariots,²¹

And blessed in the thousands upon thousands (of His warriors).

Blessed be His name in the chains of fire,

And blessed in the ropes of flame.

Blessed be His name in the peals of thunder,

And blessed in the bolts of lightning.

Blessed be His name in the mouths of all on earth,

And blessed in the depths of the earth.

Blessed be His name amid all the deserts,

And blessed amid the waves of the sea.

Blessed be His name alone on His throne,

²⁰Cf. Prov 8:18.

²¹Cf. Ps 68:18.

And blessed in dwelling places of His majesty,
Blessed be His name in the mouth of all living,

And blessed in the song of every creature.

40 Blessed be the Lord forever,

AMEN, AMEN, HALLELUJAH.

APPENDIX: ANGELIC LISTS

THE FIRST FIRMAMENT

And these are the names of the angels of the first encampment who serve אורפניאל:

בומדי דמנא אנוך אלפי אמוך קטיביא פטרופי גמתי פאאור נרנתק רקהני אורנה מאות פרוכה אקילאה תרקויה ברוק סחרורא אתנני גילאן תכת ארנוב אשמי יוצש כפון כרבי גירשום פריאן ששמע אבבא נתנאל אראל אניף תרואור עבדיאל יוום אלון מואל ללף יחספת רחגל רומאפי יכתי ארניאל פובון כדיאל זכריאל אגדלן מיגאל גאופר כרתה כילדה דיגל אלנו תירלי סבלה אביאל אל כסיל סיקמה אשבה יותנה ראלכה חליאן אפתיאל תיאמיאל אלאל נויאל אפיכה תלגיאל נענה אסתיאל.

These are the names of the angels of the second encampment who serve תיגרה:

אכסתר מרסום ברכיב כמשו אשטיב כריתאל אדיר גבא אקרבא אנבור כביר תילה בריתור תרטס נטפאל פריאל תרוחון שלהבין אשלבא משתוב גרחתא חגרא איטמיאל חגל לגח מנתיאל תנימיאל איכרית אבריתא רכילאל חשתן פפתש אסתירוף אודיאל אשכיר מלכילאל ארוש דשווא המך תרגח זמבות הצניפלפת שווא אשפור ארק קנומיאל נהיאל גדיאל אדק ימומיאל פרוג דחגיאל דגריאל אגריאל ארונור דונרניא דלכת תבל תליאל אליאל מותאר אלפילאל פיתפרא לפום אור טמר אדליאל אסטורין אזותי איסטורטי דאובית ברגמי דמומיאל דיגרא אביבאל פרוטיאל קומיאל דוגורא דלגיאל פדוטיאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve דנהל in the third encampment:

אוגרבבו אובשאל ברתוביאל כלוביאל רחביאל אוהיאל כרבתון כרבא דאינוט איניך אבירם אתגלא אותות אשתנואל אשפר תגריאל אמכאל אתדשו אוריאל ארמוד אסתון אכאל אנאור אסקירא לביאל אלעשה חסניאל למושי אדות תירום אלפי אימין ארגלא מיגאל אליאל מדניאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve כלמיה in the fourth encampment:

אבריה אימרהי דמנאי אמנהר יאמנוך פטכיא טוביאל גולילא אופרי גמתי אורניאל פריכיהו יארן לטמיאל אוריט תימוגו אנמרי אלמניאל יכמטו סטרטו צבעקני בורתיאס רספות כרסון אמאף ופאטנא אחאל סאביאל בלקיר פכהור הסתר סתריאל אליסס חלסיאל טרספו קרסטוס מלכילאל ארדק חסדיאל אחסף אמיאל פרוס גדיאל סביבאל.

These are the angels who serve אסימור in the fifth encampment:

בתואר שכינתתך אדומא תקו מקפא להבא עלי עזי שכניאל כנור בנש קרבא סרך חלשיאל הרמנע עבר הוד מלכיה פרעתוף אדעת קוף מנמלך דינמור אלפנטוס דידריון כלנה נינחיא דצנחיא מלגדם דיממן ליברנך תתקה אפניאל זביטור דכנסור רמגדל להתקוף

עלי גדגדל פרוץ מסרוץ כדיר מוס דיקנא נשר תוב דרומיאל
דיראז דמולא דידיאל טעי כרם אתר עקב הונמורא אנקיו גזריאל
צביאל צביודע ייקר אדות רגביאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve פסכר in the sixth encampment:

אזיאל ארביאל טריפון פוכבוס פסתמר לינניאל קרונידן שוכדון
סלבידם עמיאל עוזיאל פניאל תרמיאל חממיאל צרמיאל ניממוס
נודניא באריבא זוננוס חטואל סדריאל הופניאון קדמיאל כפניא
ארמיאל עדמון הרמור צפליאל ספריאל קחניאל שבכיריא ארמוניס
טופומוס פצציאל חטפאל פרסומון נחליאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve בואל in the seventh encampment:

בוהריאל דבבאל דימתמר דבאל מחשיו אאור דיאם בביתאל סרורא
אהגייה פרופיאל מכסיאל עלזיאל תכורכס קרומיאל רמיאל לחסון
סלחאל אחיאל אכר אובר סרוגיאל ידואל שמשאל שפטיאל
רחביא אחמודא מרמיון אנוך אלפרט אומיגרא קרוכנס סרפיאל
גדריאל ארדודא פורטניאל אגמיאל רהטיאל דיתרון חזאל פתואל
גלגלא דמנצר זזיאל.

THE SECOND FIRMAMENT

Upon the first step stand these:

אחמריאל הדריאל רציאל הסעאל דמימיאל זבריאל רנזיאל
ענשאל כטבראל.

Upon the second step stand these:

עזזיאל חננאל פצציאל ישעאל דלקיאל ארפא מראות ריפיפיס
אמניאל נחמיאל פזירום ענבאל.

Upon the third step stand these:

יהואל דעיהו אליאל ברכיאל עלי ספוס פנימור אלעזר גבליאל
כמשיאל אודהאל יעצאל רפפיאל פספיאל.

Upon the fourth step stand these:

צגריאל מלכיאל אונביב פגריאל ענניאל כלנמיא אומיאל מפנור
כוזזיבא אלפיאל פריביאל צעקמיה כדומיאל אשמדע הודיה יחזיאל.

Upon the fifth step stand these:

קונאקריאל פתוניאל נקריאל איאל יאבותיאו בבסבאו בכפי מבום
סכתבאו אמריאל יאלאל מכסאבו.

Upon the sixth step stand these:

אביהוד קיטר זלקיאל סתריאל אדרך גחליאל תמכיאל סמכיה רבעיאל
ינקמיאל שמהוד מהריאל גומיאל כרכוס קנז קניאל כנטון.

Upon the seventh step stand these:

פתחיה רזיאל אגריאל הגדיאב אדרון כרטא קטיפור אבריאל
שתקיאל עמיאל סיכברדום.

Upon the eighth step stand these:

אברה ברקיאל אדוניאל עזריאל ברכיאל עמיאל קדשיאל מרגיאל
פרואל פניאל מרבניאל מרניסאל שמיאל עמניאל מתנאל הוד הוד.

Upon the ninth step stand these:

גדודיאל סכסיאל תרסוניאל נצחיאל אצא רבניא חלילאל תוקפיאל
סמכיאל פדהאל קרבא ציאל פראל פתחיאל.

Upon the tenth step stand these:

דכריאל חריאל שבקיאל אתכיאל סמיכאל מרמואל קנאל צפתא יהאך
אל צדק אכפא עזמאל מכמיכאל תרכיאל תבגיאל.

Upon the eleventh step stand these:

רפדיאל דמואל מארינוס אמינאל צחיאל עקריאל אדניאל רדקיאל
שלמיאל אסתטיאל סטאל אגלגלתון ארמות פרחגאל נפפמיות.

Upon the twelfth step stand these:

אסטרימי בראות במראות דרודיאל שרליאל תלהם ברגאל פאל
פפאל יכפתיני כלפתון בובוכוך אומטון ארטמיכטון אשמיגדון
ספניג פרניגאל פסיכסוך תאגישון ארטלידי.

THE THIRD FIRMAMENT

These are the names of the angels who serve יבניאל:

שעיפיאל אדריאל תדהדיאל בעשיאל טהפאל רלביאל בלניאל
תהזריאל אעזיאל אמנחאל מלתיחאל דיבקיאל ברשסאל סחאל
תתבאל קסמיאל טסיאל קסטסדיאל נמדיאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve רהטיאל:

אגרא זרגרי גנטס תעזמא לתסרפאל גדיאל תמניאל עקיאל
גוחפניאל ארקני צפיקואל מושיאל סוסיאל התניאל זכריאל
אכנסא צדקי אחסא נכמרא פרדיאל קליליאל דרומיאל.

These are the names of the angels who serve דלקיאל:

נוריאל אזליבן איליאל מלכיה חיליאל חרהאל שלקיאל צגריאל
פסכיאל עקריאל סמניאל צבכיאל נחליאל תגמליאל אמינואל תלבעא
קטחניאל אפריאל אנגיאל משריאל אמנגנאן.

THE FOURTH FIRMAMENT

These are the names of the angels that lead (the sun) during the day:

אבראסכס מרמראות מוכתיאל מארית צדקיהל יחסי חסיהל רבאל
יאבון מיהל כרימכא מרמאן פואל גבריהל אשתון תוקפיהל אליאל
נפלי אואל קודשיאל הודיהל נרומיהל ירשיאל מלכיהל אגריתאל
להגיהל מנוריהל פלאואל נוריהל הרמיהל נסבריהל.

And these are the names of the angels that lead (the sun) during the night:

פרסיהל צרציהל עגיהל נבימאל עמיהל ישריהל אשמעואל
שפטיאל שאואל רדריאל שעסיהל ליבבאל בנריאל צגריאל מנהאל
למיהל פריאל פדהאל ליבראל רבצאל חמקיהל בגיהאל נבריהל
קצפיהל רעדניהל חתניהל אספפיהל חלואל שמיהל זחזחאל
נכבריהל פצאל קמניהל זהאל חדיאל.

THE FIFTH FIRMAMENT

These are the names of the twelve princes of glory of the fifth firmament:

שעפיהל דגהיהל דידנאור תענבון תרורגר מוראל
פחדרון ילדנג אנדגמור מפניהל חשנדרנוס אברכיהל.

THE SIXTH FIRMAMENT

These are the heads of the encampments which are in the west of the firmament:

ויותן דוכמסאל כרהאל אשריהל ביואל נרהאל גצקיהל גרעיה
שריהל מסגיהל חניהל אורפניהל אקודו מוכאל אלניתכאל דמאל
אכזאן שיראיוס נהריאל בהדרן שופריאל סדרכין דכובאור אמליאל
תמפניה בהחמל פרנין אמצתיהל תימנהרק.

Over these אפרכסי, who has his camp in the west, is ruler.

These are the heads of the encampments which are in the east of the firmament:

גוריהל סניהל עזריאל שריאל אליאל מלכיהל מלמיהל צמיהל
רנחיהל אקריאל קשתיהל אברכיהל שריאל ספיפיהל ארמאת דמואל
מריאל ענניהל ניפליאל דרמיהל געשיאל מנהראל בהניריאל אפשריהל
קלעיהל הדניהל דלריאל שעפיהל דלגליאל עדניהל טהריאל
דבריהל המנכיהל הניהל טוביהל.

Over these תוקפירס, who has his camp in the east of the firmament, is ruler.

INDICES

1. Ancient Sources

A. Scripture

	page no.		page no.
Gen 2:7	81	Ps 24:8	80
Exod 15:16	80	68:18	77,80,85
Lev 21:11	44
Deut 27:8	17	91:1	74
Judg 5:22	67	93:4	68
1 Sam 20:38	65	102:4	82
2 Sam 22:32	84	104:3	70
2 Kgs 19:35	80	104:4	42,65
Isa 6:3	83	104:24	65
6:4	82	107:33	42
37:36	80	115:18	72
40:12	42	Prov 8:18	85
40:23	80	25:13	62
47:13	73	Job 9:9	17
Jer 32:17	70	9:5	84
Ezek 1:4	42	12:22	82
1:5	81	23:13	83
10	81	38:35	18
18:6	43	Ecc1 3:2-3	18
Amos 5:8	17, 70	Dan 2:22	82
Nah 1:4	42	7:9	84
2:5	61	7:10	81
		8:4	64
		Tob 3:7,17	48
		Matt 26:53	80
		Heb 1:3	84

B. Magical Literature

PGM

I:175	41	IV:345	34,37
I:188	74	IV:1034	38
I:264	55	IV:1480	34,37
I:278	30	IV:2706	46
I:346	72	IV:2891	33
		IV:2943	49
II:87	30	IV:3122	72
		IV:3210	26
III:108	42
III:325	30	V:41	72
III:425	33	V:237	30
IV:170	79	VII:199	59
IV:222	26	VII:271	59
IV:260	30	VII:397	49

B. Magical Literature

PGM (continued)	page no.		page no.
VII:810	46	XIII:300	52
VII:816	46	XIII:711	74
VII:860	46
VII:915	37	XXIV:15	55
VII:922	46
		XXXVI:136	70
XII:356	76	XXXVI:232	49
		XXXVI:370	49
DMP
22:40	37
25:27	33

C. Other Ancient Sources

	page no.
Avodah Zarah 3:1	9,53
BT Berakhot 33b	69
1 Enoch 72:5	70,72
4 Ezra 14:39	34
Josephus' Antiquities
8.2.5, #45-49	19
Liber Razielis Angeli	5
Maimonides' Mishnah Torah	53
Maseket Hekhaloth	2
Maaseh Bereshit	2
Pirke Avoth 1:1	19
Sefer Razel	21
Shiur Komah	2
Song of Songs 1:13,
Arabic tg.	33
Testament of Job 7	44

2. Non-Angelic Proper Names

	page no.		page no.
Abraham	19	Great Bear	17
Adam	17,70	Greek kings,
Adam and Eve	34,44,45,	reckoning of	23
	58,80	Hagar	39
Amram	19	Hayot	81,82
Aphrodite-Venus	33,81	Helios	71
Ares	47	Hermes	38
Bar Cochba	48	Isaac	19
Cherubim	81	Istorgon	33
Enoch	17	Jacob	19
Enosh	17	Jared	17
Garden of Eden	70	Joshua	19

2. Non-Angelic Proper Names (continued)

	page no.		page no.
Kenan	17	Pleiades	17
Kohath	19	the Prophets	19
Lamech	17	Ram Bearer-Hermes	38
Levi	19	Sages	19
Mehallalel	17	Sennacharib	80
Methusaleh	17	Seth	17
Moses	19,80	Shamayim	21,42
Mt. Sinai	80	Shem	19
Noah	17-19	Sodom and Gomorah	28
Opanim	81,82	Solomon	19
Orion	17

3. Names of Principal Angels

'BRKY'L	73	KWZZYB'	48
'WRPNY'L	21-24	KLMYY' (KLMY',
'NDGNWR	73	KLMYYH)	21,32,34
'SYMWR	21,36	KRDY	27
'SMD	48	MWR'L	73
'PRKSY	77-79	MPNY'L	73
BW'L	21,40	SRWKYT	27
DGHY'L	73	CWLPH	27
DYDN'WR	73	PHDRWN	73
DLQY'L	61-62,	PŠKR	21,39
	64-65	QRSTWS	32,34
DNHL	21,29	RHTY'L	61,63
HHGRYT	27	RZY'L	6,17
WRPLY'L	21,23-24	ŠCPY'L	73
HŠNDRNWS	73	TWQPYRS	77-79
YBNY'L	61-62	TYGRH	21,25
YLDNG	73	TČNBWN	73
		TRWRGR	73

4. Properties of Angels

amber	54	eyes like sunbeams	61
Ancient of Days	84	fire	21,43,45, breath, like flaming fire	50		47,52,54,
lightning issues from	73		55,61,62,
Bridal chariot of the Sun	30,67-70		63,77
Brilliant Star, like the	81	angels of	57,65,67
bronze, helmets	50	appearance like	21
sound of	48	books of	81
chariot	55,61,69,	chains of	85
	71,80,85	cloaked in	65
charioteer	61,64	crowns of	73,77
coals, bodies like fiery	77	harnesses of	55
cold	52,67	horses of	55
dew, storehouses of	67	image of	55
directions, facing in four	73	pillars of	41,42,67

4. Properties of Angels (continued)

	page no.		page no.
fire (continued)		reed pens	56
reed pens of	56	sea, bodies like the	68
river of	50,67,81	crashing of the	73
rods of	47	sevenfold light	81
sparks of	47	snow	43
throne of	65,73	storehouses of	85
wheels of	61	spear	50,79
wings of	73	spirits, rule over	54
flame	61,67	of terror and dread	43
aflame	67	storm	48,50
created from	77	sun	30,67,69, crowns of	67		70,72
rivers of	85	sword	55,79
ropes of	85	thrones of glory	51
fly through the air	70	thunder	47,61,85
fog	43	encampments of	61
four directions	53,73	wheels of	73
frost	43	torches	50
garments, coats of mail	50	appearance like	61
of light	82	water, angels of	67
white	70,51	voice of	68
white fire	83	weapons
gold	61,77	bow	55
hail	43,50	brass helmet	50
hailstones	67,50	breastplate	55
wrapped in	67	coats of mail	50
honey, storehouses of	77	javelin	55
horses	55,61	shield	42,50
light	82	wheels
pillars of	81	of flame	61
sparks of	53,67	of the heavens	71
lightning	61,85	of thunder	73
appearance of	44	winds	61, 67
swift as	48	wings of	70, 82
eyes like	81	wings	61, 82
mist	61,85	of fire	73
moisture	43

5. Purposes Which Angels Can Be Made To Serve to perform an act of healing	24

to afflict an enemy	26-28
to predict the future	29-31
to influence opinions in one's favor	32-35 to bind oneself to the heart of a great or wealthy woman	35
to speak with the moon or stars, question a ghost or spirit, or to make a love potion	36-39
to catch and return a fugitive	39-40 to interpret dreams	41-42
to silence enemies	44-45
to put the love of a man into the heart of a woman or arrange for a poor man to marry a rich woman	45-46

5. Purposes Which Angels Can Be Made To Serve (continued)

	page no.
to nullify evil intentions	47-48
to give an enemy insomnia	49
to light an oven in the cold	50-51
to heal a man who has had a stroke	51-52
to expel a dangerous animal or quell a rising river or sea	53
to drive away an evil spirit from a woman in childbirth	54
to protect a man going forth to battle	55
to reverse a bad court decision	56
to restore to office one who has fallen from favor	57-58
to cure a headache	58-59
to extinguish a fire in a bathhouse	62-63
to win at horse racing	64
to give proof of power by filling a house with flame which does not burn	64-65
to view the sun during the day and ask it to foretell the future	69-70 to view the sun at night and ask it questions	70-72
to know in which month one will die or what will be in each and every month	74-76
to return safely from a war or journey, to create the appearance that a mighty company is with one	78-80

6. Magical Materials

	page no.		page no.
aqueduct	49	foil (lamella)	34,74
asbestos	52,76	frankincense	24,41,51
ashes	44,45	glass cup	38
bay leaves	55	vessel	35,62,75
blood	33,34,36, 37,41,43	vial	26-28
bronze		gold	34,54,74, 77,79
image	53	heart	33
knife	33	hieratic papyrus	29
stylus	50	honey	38,50,77
tubular case	55	image
cake	36-38,58	of lion	79
cloak	41,47	of a man	42,53,79
coals, burning	24,41,65	ink	30
cock, white	36,37	iron colors, seven	59	chain	49
copper	40,45, 53,56	lamella	53
cup	33,38	ring	79
dog, head of a black	49	lamella earthen vessel	41	copper	40,45,53, 56
fat	59	gold	54,75,79
flask	30,35,37, 38,63	iron	53
flour	36,57,77	lead	49
flower, white	76	tin	35
		silver	48,52,54, 5,64

6. Magical Materials (continued)

	page no.		page no.
lead	49	sapphire stone	17
lion		silver
blood	35	lamella	48,52,54,
cub	33		55,64
engraved	49	ring	75
heart	34	tubular case	54,59
image	79	spices	33
living water	34,36	chosen	51
musk	33	incense of	33,52,69
myrrh	24,30,33,	spikenard oil	30,31,
	41,51		50,55
myrtle, table	37	staff, marble	53
twig	38	styrax	33
oil	31,38,51,	sulphur	50,51
	55,57,62,	tin	35
	63,74,75,	tubular case
	76	bronze	55
ox, brain of a black	59	silver	54,59
perspiration	35	water	26,28,
pottery vessels	26-27		41,42
ring	49,80	living	34,36
iron	79	wax	37,49
silver	75	wild plant, root of	65
root	65	wine	33,34,38,
salamander	62		41,43,46,
			59,75

7. Incantation Formulae

alphabets, special	46,48,	fire	65
	52,63	pillar of	41-42
animal	41,43	first hour of night	24
astrological signs	17,37,45	first year	23
backwards recitation	44,62,65,	fish	41,43,75
	69,80	food, impure	69,70
barefoot	47	fog	80
blood, guard oneself from	75	four brilliant star	33	corners	28,63
bread offering	44	directions	26,28,40 breath, speak under your	42	sides	54
bronze, yoke of	49	winds	18,26
city, in the midst of a	34-35	garments	28
at the entrance of	53	white	70
coal of fire	34	graves	38,75
dead, contact with	59	hands, position of	53,72
doorstep	28,35,49	head, bow the	72
drink, impure	69,70	heart	48,55 evil eye	76	house, behind a	49 face	35,38,	in a	58
	41,53	idol	44
feet, soles of	35	intercourse-heels of	53	cohabitation	46,56,
			57,75

7. Incantation Formulae (continued)

	page no.		page no.
iron, chains of	49	sun	30,38,51,
killed, place of the	39		56,58,80
leper	44	sunrise	58
lightning	71	Sunday	41
love potion	35	three meat	41,46,59,	cakes	36
	75	days	30,35,41,
nevelah	57		58
menstruating woman	43,59	hundred times	33
midnight	47	shekels	69
moon	35,36,38,	times	30,38,41,
	46,47,58		42,50
full moon	57	weeks	70,75
mouth, putting ring in	79-80	years	62
nevelah	57	years old	33
night	36,58,	tomb	38
	70,75	twenty-one times	33,34,47,70
nine days	38	twentieth of month	52
nocturnal pollution	75	twenty-ninth of month	45
north, facing	53	venereal discharge	44
palm tree, fruit of	43	wall	31
prayers	18,21,75	water	53
ritual bath	45	wind	26,38
ritual burial	31	wine, abstinence from	75
ritual purification	67	window	31
river bank	41	witchcraft	51
sea shore	41
second hour of the night	24
second year	23
seven colors	59
days	51,57,69
leaves of bay tree	55 nights	75
pottery vessels	26
shekels	50
smoke rising	65
spirits	42
springs	26
times	42,44,62,
	65,69,74
years	74
seventh day	51,69
seventh day of month	26
seventh hour of day	26
singsong whimper	39
smoke, column of	39
rising	65,80
spirits	18,19,38,
	39,42,43,
	54,76
stars	26,37,38

BM
525
.A3712
M67
1983

Sefer ha-razim. English.

Sepher ha-razim = The book of the mysteries / translated by Michael A.
Morgan. -- Chico, Ca. : Scholars Press, 1983.

p. cm. -- (Pseudepigrapha series ;
11) (Texts and translations ; 25)

Translation of: Sefer ha-razim.
ISBN 0-89130-615-3

1. Cabala. I. Morgan, Michael A.
II. Title III. Title: Book of the mysteries. IV. Series V. Series:
Texts and translations ; 25.

A042465

TEXTS & TRANSLATIONS 25

PSEUDEPIGRAPHA SERIES 11

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE 1983

The Apocryphon of James

Translated by Ron Cameron

The Apocryphon of James, also known by the translation of its title - the Secret Book of James, is a pseudonymous text amongst the New Testament apocrypha. It describes the secret teachings of Jesus to Peter and James, given after the Resurrection but before the Ascension.

A major theme is that one must accept suffering as inevitable. The prominence of James and Peter suggest that the work originated in the Jewish Christian community. It shows no dependence on canonical texts, and was probably written in the mid-to-late 2nd century. It has Gnostic affinities but can't be attributed to any Gnostic sect, and some scholars rule that it's not Gnostic at all.

www.Scriptural-Truth.com

James writes to you. Peace be with you from Peace, love from Love, grace from Grace, faith from Faith, life from Holy Life!

Since you asked me to send you a secret book which was revealed to me and Peter by the Lord, I could neither refuse you nor speak directly to you, but I have written it in Hebrew letters and have sent it to you - and to you alone. But inasmuch as you are a minister of the salvation of the saints, endeavor earnestly and take care not to recount this book to many - this which the Savior did not desire to recount to all of us, his twelve disciples. But blessed are those who will be saved through faith in this discourse.

Now I sent you ten months ago another secret book with the Savior revealed to me. But that one you are to regard in this manner, as revealed to me, James.

Now the twelve disciples were sitting all together at the same time, and, remembering what the Savior had said to each one of them, whether secretly or openly, they were setting it down in books. And I was writing what was in my book - lo, the Savior appeared, after he had departed from us while we gazed at him. And five hundred and fifty days after he arose from the dead, we said to him: "Have you gone and departed from us?"

And Jesus said: "No, but I shall go to the place from which I have come. If you desire to come with me, come."

They all answered and said: "If you bid us, we'll come."

He said: "Truly I say to you, no one ever will enter the Kingdom of Heaven if I bid him, but rather because you yourselves are full. Let me have James and Peter, in order that I may fill them." And when he called these two, he took them aside, and commanded the rest to busy themselves with that with which they had been busy.

The Savior said; "You have received mercy.... (7 lines missing) Do you not desire, then, to be filled? And is your heart drunk? Do you not desire, then, to be sober? Therefore, be ashamed! And now, waking or sleeping, remember that you have seen the Son of Man, and with him you have spoken, and to him you have listened. Woe to those who have seen the Son of Man! Blessed are those who have not seen the Man, and who have not consorted with him, and who have not spoken with him, and who have not listened to anything from him. Yours is life! Know, therefore, that he healed you when you were ill, in order that you might reign. Woe to those who have rested from their illness, because they will relapse again into illness! Blessed are those who have not been ill, and have known rest before they became ill. Yours is the Kingdom of God! Therefore I say to you, become full and leave no place within you empty, since the Coming One is able to mock you."Then Peter answered: "Lord, three times you have said to us 'Become full', but we are full."

The Lord answered and said: "Therefore I say unto you, become full, in order that you may not be diminished. Those who are diminished, however, will not be saved. For fullness is good and diminution is bad. Therefore, just as it is good for you to be diminished and, on the other hand, bad for you to be filled, so also the one who is full is diminished; and the one who is diminished is not filled as the one who is diminished is filled, and the one who is full, for his part, brings his sufficiency to completion. Therefore, it is fitting to be diminished while you can still be filled, and to be filled while it is still possible to be diminished, in order that you can fill yourselves the more. Therefore become full of the spirit but be diminished of reason. For reason is of the soul; and it is soul."

And I answered, and said to him: "Lord, we can obey you if you wish. For we have forsaken our forefathers and our mothers and our villages and have followed you. Grant us, therefore, not to be tempted by the wicked Devil."

The Lord answered and said: "What is your merit when you do the will of the Father if it is not given to you by him as a gift, while you are tempted by Satan? But if you are oppressed by Satan and are persecuted and you do the Father's will, I say that he will love you and will make you equal with me and will consider that you have become beloved through his providence according to your free choice. Will you not cease, then, being lovers of the flesh and being afraid of sufferings? Or do you not know that you have not yet been mistreated and have not yet been accused unjustly, nor have you yet been shut up in prison, nor have you yet been condemned lawlessly, nor have you yet been crucified without reason, nor have you yet been buried shamefully, as was I myself, by the evil one? Do you dare to spare the flesh, you for whom the spirit is an encircling wall? If you contemplate the world, how long it is before you and also how long it is after you, you will find that your life is one single day and your sufferings, one single hour. For the good will not enter the world. Scorn death, therefore, and take concern for life. Remember my cross and my death and you will live."

And I answered and said to him: "Lord, do not mention to us the cross and the death, for they are far from you."

The Lord answered and said: "Truly I say to you, none will be saved unless they believe in my cross. But those who have believed in my cross, theirs is the Kingdom of God. Therefore, become seekers for death, just as the dead who seek for life, for that which they seek is revealed to them. And what is there to concern them? When you turn yourselves towards death, it will make known to you election. In truth I say to you, none of those who are afraid of death will be saved. For the Kingdom of God belongs to those who have put themselves to death. Become better than I; make yourselves like the son of the Holy Spirit."

Then I questioned him: "Lord how may we prophesy to those who ask us to prophesy to them? For there are many who ask us and who look to us to hear an oracle from us."

The Lord answered and said: "Do you not know that the head of prophecy was cut off with John?"

And I said: "Lord, it is not possible to remove the head of prophecy, is it?"

The Lord said to me: "When you come to know what 'head' is, and that prophecy issues from the head, then understand what is the meaning of 'Its head was removed'. I first spoke with you in parables, and you did not understand. Now, in turn, I speak with you openly, and you do not perceive. But it is you who were to me a parable in parables and what is apparent in what are open.

"Be zealous to be saved without being urged. Rather, be ready on your own and, if possible, go before me. For thus the Father will love you.

"Become haters of hypocrisy and evil thought. For it is thought which gives birth to hypocrisy, but hypocrisy is far from the truth.

"Let not the Kingdom of Heaven wither away. For it is like a date palm shoot whose fruits poured down around it. It put forth leaves and, when they budded, they caused the productivity of the date palm to dry up. Thus it is also with the fruit which came from this single root; when the fruit was picked, fruits were collected by many harvesters. It would indeed be good if it were possible to produce these new plants now; for then you would find the Kingdom.

"Since I have been glorified in this manner before this time, why do you all restrain me when I am eager to go? You have constrained me to remain with you eighteen more days for the sake of the parables. It sufficed for some persons to pay attention to the teaching and understand 'The Shepherds' and 'The Seed' and 'The Building' and 'The Lamps of the Virgins' and 'The Wage of the Workers' and 'The Double Drachma' and 'The Woman'.

"Become zealous about the Word. For the Word's first condition is faith; the second is love; the third is works. Now from these comes life. For the Word is like a grain of wheat. When someone sowed it, he believed in it; and when it sprouted, he loved it, because he looked forward to many grains in the place of one; and when he worked it, he was saved, because he prepared it for food. Again he left some grains to sow. Thus it is also possible for you all to receive the Kingdom of Heaven: unless you receive it through knowledge, you will not be able to find it. "Therefore I say to you, be sober. Do not go astray. And many times I have said to you all together - and also to you alone, James, I have said - 'Be saved!' And I have commanded you to follow me, and I have taught you the response in the presence of the rulers. Observe that I have descended, and I have spoken, and I have troubled myself, and I have received my crown, when I saved you. For I have descended to dwell with you in order that you also may dwell with me. And when I found that your houses had no ceilings over them, I dwelt in houses which would be able to receive me when I descended.

"Therefore, obey me, my brothers. Understand what the great light is. The Father does not need me. For a father does not need a son, but it is the son who needs the father. To him I am going, for the Father of the Son is not in need of you.

"Pay attention to the Word. Understand Knowledge. Love Life. And no one will persecute you, nor will any one oppress you, other than you yourselves.

"O you wretched! O you unfortunates! O you dissemblers of the truth! O you falsifiers of knowledge! O you sinners against the spirit! Do you even now dare to listen, when it behooved you to speak from the beginning? Do you even now dare to sleep, when it behooved you to be awake from the beginning, in order that the Kingdom of Heaven might receive you? In truth I say to you, it is easier for a holy one to sink into defilement, and for a man of light to sink into darkness, than for you to reign - or even not to reign!

"I have remembered your tears and your grief and your sorrow. They are far from us. Now, then, you who are outside the inheritance of the Father, weep where it behooves you and grieve and proclaim that which is good, since the Son is ascending appropriately. In truth I say to you, had it been to those who would listen to me that I was sent, and had it been with them that I was to speak, I would have never descended upon the earth. And now, then, be ashamed on account of them.

"Behold, I shall depart from you. I am going and I do not desire to remain with you any longer - just as you yourselves have not desired. Now, then, follow me quickly.

Therefore I say to you, for your sake I have descended. You are the beloved; you are those who will become a cause of life for many. Beseech the Father. Implore God often, and he will give to you. Blessed is the one who has seen you with him when he is proclaimed among the angels and glorified among the saints. Yours is life! Rejoice and be glad as children of God. Keep his will in order that you may be saved. Take reproof from me and save yourselves. I intercede on your behalf with the Father, and he will forgive you much."

And when we heard these things, we became elated, for we had been depressed on account of what we had said earlier. Now when he saw our rejoicing, he said: "Woe to you who are in want of an advocate! Woe to you who are in need of grace! Blessed are those who have spoken freely and have produced grace for themselves. Make yourselves like strangers; of what sort are they in the estimation of your city? Why are you troubled when you oust yourselves of your own accord and depart from your city? Why do you abandon your dwelling place of your own accord, readying it for those who desire to dwell in it? O you exiles and fugitives! Woe to you, because you will be caught! Or perhaps you imagine that the Father is a lover of humanity? Or that he is persuaded by prayers? Or that he is gracious to one on behalf of another? Or that he bears with one who seeks? For he knows the desire and also that which the flesh needs. Because it is not the flesh which yearns for the soul. For without the soul the body does not sin, just as the soul is not saved without the Spirit. But if the soul is saved when it is without evil, and if the spirit also is saved, then the body becomes sinless. For it is the spirit which animates the soul, but it is the body which kills it - that is, it is the soul which kills itself. Truly I say to you, the Father will not forgive the sin of the soul at all, nor the guilt of the flesh. For none of those who have worn the flesh will be saved. For do you imagine that many have found the Kingdom of Heaven? Blessed is the one who has seen himself as a fourth one in Heaven."

When we heard these things, we became distressed. Now when he saw that we were distressed, he said: "This is why I say this to you, that you may know yourselves. For the Kingdom of Heaven is like an ear of grain which sprouted in a field. And when it ripened, it scattered its fruit and, in turn, filled the field with ears of grain for another year. You also: be zealous to reap for yourselves an ear of life, in order that you may be filled with the Kingdom.

"As long as I am with you, give heed to me and obey me. But when I am to depart from you, remember me. And remember me because I was with you without your knowing me. Blessed are those who have known me. Woe to those who have heard and have not believed! Blessed are those who have not seen but have had faith!

"And once again I persuade you. For I am revealed to you building a house which is very valuable to you, since you take shelter under it; in the same way it will be able to support the house of your neighbors when theirs is in danger of falling. In truth I say to you, woe to those on behalf of whom I was sent down to this place! Blessed are those who are to ascend to the Father. Again I reprove you. You who are, make yourselves like those who are not, in order that you may come to be with those who are not.

"Let not the Kingdom of Heaven become desolate among you. Do not become arrogant on account of the light which illumines. Rather, become to yourselves in this manner, as I am to you. For I have placed myself under the curse, in order that you may be saved"

And Peter answered to this and said: "Sometimes you urge us on to the Kingdom of Heaven, and other times you turn us away, Lord. Sometimes you persuade us and impel us to faith and promise us life, and other times you expel us from the Kingdom of Heaven."

And the Lord answered and said to us: "I have given you faith many times. Moreover, I have revealed myself to you, James, and you have not known me. Again, now I see you rejoicing many times. And when you are elated over the promise of life, are you nevertheless glum? And are you distressed when you are taught about the Kingdom? But you through faith and knowledge have received life. Therefore, scorn rejection when you hear it, but, when you hear the promise, be the more glad. In truth I say to you, the one who will receive life and believe in the Kingdom will never leave it - not even if the Father desires to banish him!

"These things I shall say to you for the present. But now I shall ascend to the place from which I have come. But you, when I was eager to go, have driven me out, and, instead of your accompanying me, you have pursued me. But give heed to the glory which awaits me, and, having opened your hearts, listen to the hymns which await me up in heaven. For today I am obliged to take (my place) at the right hand of my Father. Now I have said my last word to you. I shall part from you. For a chariot of wind has taken me up, and from now on I shall strip myself in order that I may clothe myself. But give heed: blessed are those who have preached the Son before he descended, in order that, when I have come, I may ascend. Thrice-blessed are those who were proclaimed by the Son before they came into being, in order that you may have a portion with them."

When he said these things, he went away. And we knelt down, I and Peter, and gave thanks, and sent our hearts up to heaven. We heard with our ears and saw with our eyes the sound of wars and a trumpet call and a great commotion.

And when we passed beyond that place, we sent out minds up further. And we saw with our eyes and heard with our ears hymns and angelic praises and angelic jubilation. And heavenly majesties were hymning, and we ourselves were jubilant.

After this, we also desired to send our spirits above to the Majesty. And when we ascended, we were permitted neither to see nor to hear anything. For the rest of the disciples called to us and questioned us: "What is it that you have heard from the Master?" And, "What has he said to you?" And, "Where has he gone?"

And we answered them: "He has ascended." And, "He has given us a pledge and has promised us all life and disclosed to us children who are to come after us, since he has bid us to love them, inasmuch as we will be saved for their sake."

And when they heard, they believed the revelation, but were angry about those who would be born. Then I, not desiring to entice them to scandal, sent each one to another place. But I myself went up to Jerusalem, praying that I may obtain a portion with the beloved who are to be revealed.

And I pray that the beginning may come from you, for thus I can be saved. Because they will be enlightened through me, through my faith and through another's which is better than mine, for I desire that mine become the lesser. Endeavor earnestly, therefore, to make yourself like them, and pray that you may obtain a portion with them. For apart from what I have recounted, the Savior did not disclose revelation to us. For their sake we proclaim, indeed, a portion with those for whom it was proclaimed, those whom the Lord has made his children.

END

The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch

A book that corresponds with the book of Ezekiel and the book of Enoch. Apparently modified slightly by Christians.

Prologue

3RD BARUCH 1-3

1.

[1 A narrative and revelation of Baruch, concerning those ineffable things which he saw by command of God.

Bless Thou, O Lord.

2.

2 A revelation of Baruch, who stood upon the river Gel weeping over the captivity of 3 Jerusalem, when also Abimelech was preserved by the hand of God, at the farm of Agrippa.

And he was sitting thus at the beautiful gates, where the Holy of holies lay.]

3RD BARUCH 1

3.

1 Verily I Baruch was weeping in my mind and sorrowing on account of the people, and that 2 Nebuchadnezzar the king was permitted by God to destroy His city, saying,

4.

'Lord, why didst Thou set on fire Thy vineyard, and lay it waste?

Why didst Thou do this?

5.

And why, Lord, didst Thou not requite us with another chastisement, but didst deliver us to nations such as these, so that they 3 reproach us and say, 'Where is their God?'

6.

And behold as I was weeping and saying such things, I saw an angel of the Lord coming and saying to me, 7.

'Understand, O man, greatly beloved, and trouble not thyself so greatly concerning the salvation of Jerusalem, for thus saith the Lord God, 4 the Almighty, 8.

[For] He sent me before thee, to make known and to show to thee all the things 5, 6 of God.

9.

For thy prayer was heard before Him, and entered into the ears of the Lord God.'

10.

And when he had said these things to me, I was silent.

11.

And the angel said to me:
'Cease to provoke 7 God, and I will show thee other mysteries, greater than these.'

12.

And I Baruch said,
'[I swear that] As the Lord God liveth,
if thou wilt show me, and I hear a word of thine,
I will not continue to speak any longer.

13.

8 God shall add to my judgement in the day of judgement, if I speak hereafter.'

14.

And the angel of the powers said to me,
'Come, and I will show thee the mysteries of God.'

3RD BARUCH 2

The First Heaven

15.

1 And he took me and led me where the firmament has been set fast, and where there was a river which no one can cross, nor any strange breeze- of all those which God created.

16.

And he took me and led me to the first heaven, and showed me a door of great size.

17.

And he said to me,
'Let us enter 3 through it'.
And we entered as though borne on wings, a distance of about thirty days' journey.

18.

And he showed me within the heaven a plain ;
and there were men dwelling thereon, with the faces of 4 oxen, and the horns of stags and the feet of goats, and the haunches of lambs.

19.

And I Baruch asked the angel,
'Make known to me, I pray thee, what is the thickness of the heaven in which we journeyed, 20.

5 or what is its extent, or what is the plain, in order that I may also tell the sons of men?'

21.

And the angel whose name is Phamael said to me: [Phanuel?]

'This door which thou seest is the door of heaven, and as great as is the distance from earth to heaven, so great also is its thickness;

22.

and again as great as is the distance from North to South, so great is the length of the plain which thou didst see.'

23.

And again the angel of the powers said to me,
'Come, and I will show thee greater mysteries.'

24.

But 6, 7 I said,
'I pray thee show me what are these men.'

25.

And he said to me,
'These are they who built the tower of strife against God, and the Lord banished them.'

The Second Heaven

26.

1 And the angel of the Lord took me and led me to a second heaven.

27.

And he showed me there 2 also a door like the first and said,
'Let us enter through it.'

28.

And we entered, being borne on wings 3 a distance of about sixty days' journey.

29.

And he showed me there also a plain, and it was full of 4 men, whose appearance was like that of dogs, and whose feet were like those of stags.

30.

And I asked 5 the angel:
'I pray thee, Lord, say to me who are these.'

31.

And he said,
'These are they who gave counsel to build the tower, for they whom thou seest drove forth multitudes of both men and women, to make bricks;

32.

among whom, a woman making bricks was not allowed to be released in the hour of child-birth, but brought forth while she was making bricks, and carried her child in her apron, and 6 continued to make bricks.

33.

And the Lord appeared to them and confused their speech, when they 7 had built the tower to the height of 463 cubits.

34.

And they took a gimlet [drill], and sought to pierce the heaven, saying,
Let us see whether the heaven is made of clay, or of 8 brass, or of iron.

35.

When God saw this He did not permit them, but smote them with blindness and confusion of speech, and rendered them as thou seest.'

3RD BARUCH 4

The Third Heaven

36.

1 And I Baruch said,
'Behold, lord, Thou didst show me great and wonderful things;

and now 2 show me all things for the sake of the Lord.'

38.

And the angel said to me,
'Come, let us proceed.'

39.

And I proceeded with the angel from that place about 185 days' 3 journey [6 months].

40.

And he showed me a plain and a serpent, which appeared to be 200 plethra in length.

41.

4 And he showed me Hades, and its appearance was dark and abominable.

42.

And I said,
5 'Who is this dragon, and who is this monster around him?'

43.

And the angel said,
'The dragon is he 6 who eats the bodies of those who spend their life wickedly, and he is nourished by them.

44.

And this is Hades, which itself also closely resembles him, in that it also drinks about a cubit from 7 the sea, which does not sink at all.'

45.

[And, I] Baruch said,
'And how does this happen?'

46.

And the angel said,
'Hearken, the Lord God made 360 rivers, of which the chief of 8 all are Alphias, Abyrus, and the Gericus;
and because of these the sea does not sink.'

47.

And I said,
'I pray thee show me which is the tree which led Adam astray.'

48.

And the angel said to me,
'It is the vine, which the angel Sammael planted, whereat the Lord God was angry, and He cursed him and his plant, 49.

while also on this account He did not permit Adam to touch it, and therefore 9 the devil being envious deceived him through his vine.'

50.

And I Baruch said,
'Since also the vine has been the cause of such great evil, and is under judgment of the curse of God, and was the 10 destruction of the first created, how is it now so useful?

51.

And the angel said, 'Thou askest aright.

52.

When God caused the deluge upon earth, and destroyed all flesh, and 409,000 giants, and the water rose fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, 53.

then the water entered into paradise and destroyed every flower;

but it removed wholly without the bounds the shoot 11 of the vine and cast it outside.

54.

And when the earth appeared out of the water, and Noah came out 12 of the ark, he began to plant of the plants which he found.

55.

But he found also the shoot of the vine;
and he took it, and was reasoning in himself,
'What then is it?'

56.

And I came and spake to 13 him the things concerning it.

57.

And he said, 'Shall I plant it, or what shall I do?'

58.

Since Adam was destroyed because of it, let me not also meet with the anger of God because of it.

59.

And saying 14 these things he prayed that God would reveal to him what he should do concerning it.

60.

And when [Noah] had completed the prayer which lasted forty days, and having besought many things and wept, 15 he said:

61.

'Lord, I entreat thee to reveal to me what I shall do concerning this plant.'

62.

But God sent his angel Sarasaël, and said to him,
'Arise, Noah, and plant the shoot of the vine, for thus saith the Lord, 63.

'Its bitterness shall be changed into sweetness, and its curse shall become a blessing, and that which is produced from it shall become the blood of God;

64.

and as through it the human race obtained condemnation, so again through Jesus Christ the Immanuel will they receive in Him the 16 upward calling, and the entry into paradise].'

65.

Know therefore, O Baruch, that as Adam through this very tree obtained condemnation, and was divested of the glory of God, 66.

so also the men who now drink insatiably the wine which is begotten of it, transgress worse than Adam, and are far from the 17 glory of God, and are surrendering themselves to the eternal fire.

67.

For (no) good comes through it.

68.

For those who drink it to surfeit do these things:
neither does a brother pity his brother, nor a father his son, nor children their parents, 69.

but from the drinking of wine come all evils, such as murders, adulteries, fornications, perjuries, thefts, and such like.

70.

And nothing good is established by it.'

The Third Book of Baruch

CHAPTER THREE
Divisions 71-100

3RD BARUCH 5-6

71.

1 And I Baruch said to the angel,
2 'Let me ask thee one thing, Lord.

72.

Since thou didst say to me 3 that the dragon drinks one cubit out of the sea, say to me also, how great is his belly?"

73.

And the angel said,
His belly is Hades;

74.

and as far as a plummet is thrown by 300 men, so great is his belly.

75.

Come, then, that I may show thee also greater works than these.'

3RD BARUCH 6

76.

1 And he took me and led me where the sun goes forth;

77.

2 and he showed me a chariot and four, under which burnt a fire, and in the chariot was sitting a man, wearing a crown of fire, and the chariot was drawn by forty angels.

78.

And behold a bird circling before the sun, about nine 3 cubits away.

79.

And I said to the angel, 'What is this bird?'

80.

And he said to me,
'This is the 4, 5 guardian of the earth.'

81.

And I said, 'Lord, how is he the guardian of the earth?

Teach me.'

82.

And the angel said to me,
'This bird flies alongside of the sun, and expanding his wings receives its fiery 6 rays.

83.

For if he were not receiving them,
the human race would not be preserved, nor any other 7 living creature.

But God appointed this bird thereto.

84.

And he expanded his wings, and I saw on his right wing very large letters, as large as the space of a threshing-floor, the size of about four 8 thousand modii;
and the letters were of gold.'

85.

And the angel said to me,
'Read them.'

86.

And I read 9 and they ran thus:

Neither earth nor heaven bring me forth, yet wings of fire bring me forth.

87.

And I said,
'Lord, what is this bird, and what is his name?'

88.

And the angel said to me,
'His name is called 11 Phoenix.'

89.

And I said,
'And what does he eat?'

90.

And he said to me,
'The manna of heaven and 12 the dew of earth.'

91.

And I said,
'Does the bird excrete?'

92.

And he said to me,
'He excretes a worm,
and the excrement of the worm is cinnamon, which kings and princes use.

93.

Yet wait and thou shalt 13 see the glory of God.'

And while he was conversing with me, there was as a thunder-clap, and the place was shaken on which we were standing.

94.

And I asked the angel,
'My Lord, what is this sound?'

95.

And the angel said to me,
'Even now the angels are opening the 365 gates 14 of heaven, and the light is being separated from the darkness.'

96.

And a voice came which said,
'Light 15 giver, give to the world radiance.'

97.

And when I heard the noise of the bird, I said,
'Lord, what is this 16 noise?'

98.

And he said,
'This is the bird who awakens from slumber the roosters upon earth.

99.

For as men do through the [human speech], so also does the rooster signify to those in the world, in his own speech.

100.

For the sun is made ready by the angels, and [then] the rooster crows.'

The Third Book of Baruch

CHAPTER FOUR
Divisions 101-135

3RD BARUCH 7-9

101.

1 And I said,
'And where does the sun begin its labors, after the cock crows?'

102.

2 And the angel said to me,
'Listen, Baruch:

103.

All things whatsoever I showed thee are in the first and second heaven, 104.

and in the third heaven the sun passes through and gives light to the world.

105.

But wait, and thou 3 shalt see the glory of God.'

106.

And while I was conversing with him, I saw the bird, and he appeared 4 in front, and grew less and less, and at length returned to his full size.

107.

And behind him I saw the shining sun, and the angels which draw it, and a crown upon its head, the sight of which we were 5 not able to gaze upon, and behold.

108.

And as soon as the sun shone, the Phoenix also stretched out his wings.

109.

But I, when I beheld such great glory, was brought low with great fear, and I fled and 6 hid in the wings of the angel.

110.

And the angel said to me,
'Fear not, Baruch, but wait and thou shalt also see their setting.'

3RD BARUCH 8

111.

1 And he took me and led me towards the west;
and when the time of the setting came, I saw again the bird coming before it, and as soon as he came I saw the angels, and they lifted the crown 2, 3 from its head.

112.

But the bird stood exhausted and with wings contracted.

113.

And beholding these things, I said,
'Lord, wherefore did they lift the crown from the head of the sun, and wherefore is 4 the bird so exhausted?'

114.

And the angel said to me,
'The crown of the sun, when it has run through the day, four angels take it, and bear it up to heaven, and renew it, because it and its rays have been defiled upon earth;

moreover it is so renewed each day.'

115.

And I Baruch said,
'Lord, and wherefore 5 are its beams defiled upon earth?'

116.

And the angel said to me,
'Because it beholds the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men, namely fornications, adulteries, thefts, extortions, idolatries, drunkenness, murders, strife, jealousies, evil-speakings, murmurings, whisperings, divinations, and such like, which are not well-pleasing to God.

117.

On account of these things is it defiled, and therefore is it renewed.

118.

6 But thou askest concerning the bird, how it is exhausted.

119.

Because by restraining the rays of the sun through the fire and burning heat of the whole day, it is exhausted thereby.

120.

For, as we said before, unless his wings were screening the rays of the sun, no living creature would be preserved.

3RD BARUCH 9

121.

1 And they having retired, the night also fell, and at the same time came the chariot of the moon, along with the stars.

122.

2 And I Baruch said,
'Lord, show me it also, I beseech of thee, how 3 it goes forth, where it departs, and in what form it moves along.'

123.

And the angel said,
'Wait and thou shalt see it also shortly.'

124.

And on the morrow I also saw it in the form of a woman, and sitting on a wheeled chariot.

125.

And there were before it oxen and lambs in the chariot, and a multitude of 4 angels in like manner.

126.

And I said,
'Lord, what are the oxen and the lambs?'

127.

And he said to me,
5 'They also are angels.'

128.

And again I asked,
'Why is it that it at one time increases, but at another 6 time decreases?'

129.

And he said to me, 'Listen, O Baruch:

130.

This which thou seest had been written 7 by God beautiful as no other.

131.

And at the transgression of the first Adam, it was near to Sammael when he took the serpent as a garment.

132.

And it did not hide itself but increased, and God was 8 angry with it, and afflicted it, and shortened its days.'

133.

And I said,
'And how does it not also shine always, but only in the night?'

134.

And the angel said, 'Listen:
as in the presence of a king, the courtiers cannot speak freely, so the moon and the stars cannot shine in the presence of the sun;

135.

for the stars are always suspended,
but they are screened by the sun, and the moon, although it is uninjured, is consumed by the heat of the sun.'

The Third Book of Baruch

CHAPTER FIVE Divisions 136-175

3RD BARUCH 10-12

The Fourth Heaven

136.

1 And when I had learnt all these things from the archangel, he took and led me into a fourth 2 3 heaven.

137.

And I saw a monotonous [flat] plain, and in the middle of it a pool of water.

138.

And there were in it multitudes of birds of all kinds,
but not like those here on earth.

139.

But I saw a crane as great as 4 great oxen;

140.

and all the birds were great beyond those in the world.

141.

And I asked the angel,
What 5 is the plain, and what [is] the pool, and what [are] the multitudes of birds around it?

142.

And the angel said, Listen, Baruch.

143.

The plain which contains in it the pool and other wonders is the place where the 6 souls of the righteous come, when they hold converse, living together in choirs.

144.

But the water is 7 that which the clouds receive, and rain upon the earth, and the fruits increase.

145.

And I said again to the angel of the Lord,
But what are these birds?

146.

And he said to me,
They are those which 8 continually sing praise to the Lord.

147.

And I said,
[Praise the] Lord, and how do men say that the water which 9 descends in rain is from the sea?

148.

And the angel said,
The water which descends in rain
- this also is from the sea, and from the waters upon earth;

149.

but that which stimulates the fruits is only from 10 the latter source. [fresh water]

150.

Know therefore henceforth that from this source is what is called the dew of heaven.

3RD BARUCH 11

The Fifth Heaven

151.

1 And the angel took me and led me thence to a fifth heaven.

And the gate was closed.

152.

And I said,
Lord, is not this gateway open that we may enter?

153.

And the angel said to me,
We cannot enter until Michael comes, who holds the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven;

154.

but wait and thou shalt see 3 the glory of God.

155.

And there was a great sound, as thunder.

156.

And I said, Lord,
what is this sound?

157.

4 And he said to me,
Even now Michael, the commander of the angels, comes down to receive the 5 prayers of men.

158.

And behold a voice came,
Let the gates be opened.

159.

And they opened them, and 6 there was a roar as of thunder.

160.

And Michael came, and the angel who was with me came face to 7 face with him and said,
Hail, my commander, and that of all our order.

161.

And the commander Michael said,
Hail thou also, our brother,
and the interpreter of the revelations to those who pass through life 8 virtuously.

And having saluted one another thus, they stood still.

162.

And I saw the commander Michael said,
Hail thou also, our brother,
and the interpreter of the revelations to those who pass through life 8 virtuously.

And having saluted one another thus, they stood still.

163.

And I saw the commander Michael, holding an exceedingly great vessel;
its depth was as great as the distance from Heaven to 9 Earth, and its breadth as great as the distance from North to South.

164.

And I said,
Lord, what is that which Michael the archangel is holding?

165.

And he said to me,
This is where the merits of the righteous enter, and such good works as they do, which are escorted before the heavenly God.

3RD BARUCH 12

166.

1, And as I was conversing with them, behold angels came bearing baskets full of flowers.

167.

And 2 they gave them to Michael.

168.

And I asked the angel,
Lord, who are these, and what are the things 3 brought hither from beside them?

169.

And he said to me,
These are angels who are over the 4, 5 righteous.

170.

And the archangel took the baskets, and cast them into the vessel.

171.

And the angel 6 said to me,
These flowers are the merits of the righteous.

172.

And I saw other angels bearing baskets which were neither empty, nor full.

173.

And they began to lament, and did not venture to draw near,
7 because they had not the prizes complete.

174.

And Michael cried and said,
Come hither, also, ye 8 angels, bring what ye have brought.

175.

And Michael was exceedingly grieved, and the angel who was with me, because they did not fill the vessel.

3RD BARUCH 13-17

176.

1 And then came in like manner other angels weeping and bewailing, and saying with fear,

Behold how we are overclouded, O Lord, for we were delivered to evil men, and we wish to depart from 2 them.

177.

And Michael said,
Ye cannot depart from them, in order that the enemy may not prevail to 3 the end;
but say to me what ye ask.

178.

And they said,
We pray thee, Michael our commander, transfer us from them,
for we cannot abide with wicked and foolish men, for there is nothing good 4 in them, but every kind of unrighteousness and greed.

179.

For we do not behold them entering [into Church at all, nor among spiritual fathers, nor into any good work.

But where there is murder, there also are they in the midst, 180.

and where are fornications, adulteries, thefts, slanders, perjuries, jealousies, drunkenness, strife, envy, murmurings, whispering, idolatry, divination, and such like,

5 then are they workers of such works, and of others worse.

Wherefore we entreat that we may depart from them.

181.

And Michael said to the angels,
Wait till I learn from the Lord what shall come to pass.

3RD BARUCH 14

182.

1 And in that very hour Michael departed, and the doors were closed.

183.

And [then after the doors were closed] there was a sound as 2 thunder.

184.

And I asked the angel,
What is the sound?

185.

And he said to me,
Michael is even now presenting the merits of men to God.

3RD BARUCH 15

186.

1 And in that very hour Michael descended, and the gate was opened; and he brought oil.

187.

2 And as for the angels which brought the baskets which were full, he filled them with oil, saying,

188.

Take it away,
reward our friends an hundredfold,
and those who have laboriously wrought good works.

189.

3 For those who sowed virtuously, also reap virtuously.

190.

And he said also to those bringing the half-empty baskets,

Come hither ye also; take away the reward according as ye brought, and 4 deliver it to the sons of men.

191.

[Then he said also to those who brought the full and to those who brought the half-empty baskets:

191.

Go and bless our friends, and say to them that thus saith the Lord, 193.

*Ye are faithful over a few things, I will set you over many things;
enter into the joy of your Lord.]*

3RD BARUCH 16

194.

1 And turning he said also to those who brought nothing:
Thus saith the Lord,

Be not sad of 2 countenance, and weep not, nor let the sons of men alone.

195.

But since they angered me in their works, go and make them envious and angry and provoked against a people that is no people, a 3 people that has no understanding.

196.

Further, besides these, send forth the caterpillar and the unwinged locust, and the mildew, and the common locust, and hail with lightnings and anger, and 4 punish them severely with the sword and with death, and their children with demons.

197.

For they did not hearken to my voice, nor did they observe my commandments, nor do them,

198.

but were despisers of my commandments, and insolent towards the priests who proclaimed my words to them.

3RD BARUCH 17

197.

1 And while he yet spake, the door was closed, and we withdrew.

198.

2 And the angel took me and 3 restored me to the place where I was at the beginning.

199.

And having come to myself,
I gave glory 4 to God, who counted me worthy of such honor.

200.

Wherefore do ye also, brethren, who obtained such a revelation, yourselves also glorify God, so that He also may glorify you, now and ever, and to all eternity.

Amen.

The First Apocalypse of James: A Public Domain Synoptic Translation

by Mark M. Mattison

This translation has been committed to the public domain. It may be freely copied and used, in whole or in part, changed or unchanged, for any purpose.

This ancient Apocalypse is currently known from three manuscripts. The first, titled “The Apocalypse of James,” is commonly referred to as “The First Apocalypse of James” because it is the first of two fragmented tractates with the same name in Nag Hammadi Codex V, a fourth-century codex discovered in 1945. The second, titled simply “James,” is the second tractate in the Codex Tchacos, a fourth-century codex discovered sometime in the 1970s and first published in 2006. The third is known from Greek fragments dating to the fourth or fifth century, discovered more recently and first published in 2021. Scholars generally agree that the Apocalypse was first written in Greek in the second century.

This synoptic translation would not have been possible without the prior work of many gifted scholars whose works are listed in the Bibliography. I’m particularly grateful for the help of two outstanding scholars: Lance Jenott, Director of Religious Studies at the Washington University in St. Louis, and Samuel Zinner, a scholar of ancient and modern history, literatures, and linguistics. Both have generously provided not only additional resources, but hours of personal conversation and insights on the more difficult passages. Though this translation has benefitted significantly from these conversations, nevertheless any flaws or mistakes are obviously my own.

This document was first published on-line on July 24, 2023 and most recently corrected on May 16, 2025. Please forward notices of errors or suggested corrections to:

mark.m.mattison@gmail.com

Sigla

- . Uncertain letter
- [] Gap in the text or reconstructed text
- () Editorial insertion to clarify the text
- < > Editorial correction of a scribal error
- { } Text erroneously added by the scribe

Bold numerals in the body of the text denote page numbers of the Coptic codices.

The First Apocalypse of James

Introduction: Jesus and James

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

24 It was the Lord who said to me, “See now the fulfillment of my liberation. I’ve explained these things to you, my brother James. I haven’t called you ‘my brother’ for nothing, even though you’re not my brother physically; it’s not like I don’t know you, so when I explain it you, pay attention and listen.

10 “Since I see (the fulfillment) of my liberation, I’ll tell you, my brother James. You’re not called ‘brother’ for nothing, even though [you’re] not a brother physically; but you don’t know yourself, so I’ll tell you who I am. Listen.

The One Who Exists

Nothing existed except the One Who Exists, who can’t be named or described. I, who can’t be named either, am from the One Who Exists, though [a] number of names have been [given] to me. <You and I> both come from the One Who Exists, but [I] am before you.

Nothing existed except the One Who Exists, who [can’t be] named or described [among those who] exist or will exist. But as for me, I’m from the One Who Exists, who can’t be named. And while I’ve been called [by a number of] names, they’re not mine; they’re [foreign] to me. But I’m [not first]. I’m second from the One Who Exists.

Achamoth (the “Lower Wisdom”) Creates Powers and Gods

Since you’ve asked about the feminine, she existed, but she wasn’t [first]. [She] prepared powers and gods for herself. But [she] didn’t exist [when] I came out, 25 because I’m an image of the One Who Exists. But I’ve brought out the image of [the One Who Exists] so that the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of the One Who [Exists] may know what belongs to them and what’s foreign. Look, I’ll reveal (ὁμᾶν) every part of this mystery to you, because they’ll arrest (ἀμαρτε) me (the day) after tomorrow, but my liberation will be near.”

James said, “Rabbi, you’ve said ‘They’ll arrest (ἀμαρτε) me.’ But I, what can I do?”

Since you’ve asked about the feminine, listen. The feminine existed, but she didn’t exist first. She created [powers] and gods for herself. So the One Who Exists, exists from the beginning. The feminine (creator) also exists, but not from the beginning. 11 But I’m the one who came from the image of the One Who Exists to tell you about the One Who Exists. But I also came to tell you about the image of the powers so that the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of the One Who Exists will know what belongs to them and what doesn’t belong to them. Look, I’ve revealed (ὁμᾶν) the mystery to you. They’ll [arrest (ἀμαρτε)] me after 3 days and [will judge] me. [A crowd of elders will condemn] me and [curse] me, but my [liberation] is near.”

[But] in response [James] said, “Rabbi, what are you saying? If they arrest (ἀμαρτε) you, then what will I do?”

The Twelve Rulers

He said to me, “Don’t be afraid, James. They’ll arrest (ἀμαρτε) you too. But leave Jerusalem, because it always gives the cup of bitterness to the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of light. A number of rulers live there. But your liberation will be liberated from them. (And) so that you know may know (both) who they are [and] what kinds of things they are, you’ll [leave]. And listen, not (about) [all of them], but [...].

In response he said to him, “When they arrest (ἀμαρτε) you and stone you, you’ll be liberated. But don’t return to Jerusalem, because it always gives the cup of bitterness 12 to the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of light. A number of rulers live there. So your liberation [is] that you liberate yourself from them, and it’s for you to know what they’re like and how many of them there are – not all of them, but the first ones. Listen!

NHC V, 3, 24 // CT 2, 10: ... my liberation, i.e., Jesus’ liberation from his physical body. Cf. CT 2, 11, where Jesus tells James that “When they arrest you and stone you, you’ll be liberated.”

NHC V, 3, 25 // CT 2, 12: A number of rulers live there. Though the lines between “spiritual rulers” and “earthly rulers” is often blurred (cf. note below on NHC V, 3, 33 // CT 2, 20), these (twelve) rulers were created by the feminine ... for herself (cf. NHC V, 3, 24 // CT 2, 10, above; later in the text, it is revealed that this feminine creator is Achamoth, also known as the “lower wisdom.”) According to NHC V, 3, 36 // CT 2, 23, the twelve rulers are “prototypes” of the twelve disciples and their seventy-two companions (for seventy or seventy-two disciples after the twelve, cf. Luke 10:1,17). Just prior to his false arrest and martyrdom, James disabuses the twelve disciples of their misconceptions in NHC V, 3, 42.

“The twelve [...] rulers [...], each [one of them ...] 26 over his own group of Seven.”

James said, “Are there then, Rabbi, twelve groups of Seven and not seven, as there are in the Scriptures?”

The Lord said, “James, the one who spoke through this Scripture understood only up to a point. But I’ll reveal (ϩωλπ) to you what has come from the One who can’t be numbered. I’ll show you concerning their number. As for what has come from the One who can’t be measured, I’ll show you concerning their measure.”

“Those I’ve brought with me from [...] down [...] rulers, each one on his [group of Seven].”

In response [James] said, “Are there then, Rabbi, [12] groups of Seven and not seven, [as] we have it in the Scripture?”

Jesus said, “The one who spoke through this very Scripture reported only up to the point that he was able to understand. But I’ll reveal (ϩωλπ) to you what has come from the One who can’t be numbered and has made known his number, what has come from the One who can’t be measured and has made known their 13 measure.”

The Seventy-Two Companions

James said, “So then, Rabbi, look, I’ve received their number. There are seventy-two <companions. Who> are they?”

The Lord said, “These are the seventy-two lesser heavens that belong to them. These are the powers of all their might, and they were set up by them; and they’re the ones that have been assigned over every place under the [authority] of the twelve rulers. The lesser power that’s in them [brought forth] for herself angels [and] hosts that can’t be numbered. But [the One Who Exists] was given [...] because of [...] the One Who Exists [...] that can’t be numbered. 27 If you want to number them now, you won’t be able to (do it) until you cast out from yourself blind thought, this bond of flesh that surrounds you. And then you’ll reach up to the One Who Exists, and you won’t be James anymore, but you’re the One Who Exists. And all those who aren’t numbered will all have been named.”

“If then, Rabbi, I’ll withdraw from the number of the rulers, who are these seventy-two companions?”

He said, “<These> are the 72 lesser heavens which are among them. [But] those that are greater than they are the powers that are above, those through which the entire axis (of the universe) stands and [...] can’t be numbered [...] but [...] because of the [...] that’s in you. They’re innumerable. But if you [want], you’ll count them, but you can’t do it now unless you cast out the blindness that’s in your heart [and] this very bond that’s in the flesh. Then you’ll reach up to the One Who Exists, and you won’t be James anymore, 14 but one who in every way is in the One Who Exists. Those who aren’t numbered will be [counted] before you, and all that can’t be measured [will be] measured for you.”

The Opposition of the Powers

“Rabbi, how will I reach up to the One Who Exists, since all these powers and these hosts are armed against me?”

He said to me, “These powers aren’t armed against just you, but they’re armed against others. These powers are armed against me, and they’re armed with other [powers]. But they’re armed against me [in] judgment. [But] they don’t [judge] me [...] to me in it [...] through them [...] in this place [...] sufferings (ἡκουσ). I’ll [...] he’ll [...] 28 and I won’t rebuke them, but there’ll be a silence and a hidden mystery in me. But I’m afraid in the face of their wrath.”

James said, “Rabbi, if they arm themselves against you, then there’s no blame.

You’ve come with knowledge to rebuke their forgetfulness;
you’ve come with memory
to rebuke their ignorance.

In response he said, “Rabbi, how will I reach up to the One Who Exists, since so many powers fight [against me?]”

“[...] but [a silence and a] hidden mystery is in me. But I’m afraid in the face of [their wrath].”

“If they’ve armed themselves against you like this, how much more (will they arm themselves against) me? Because, Rabbi,

You’ve come [with] knowledge
to rebuke their ignorance, and you’ve come with memory
to rebuke their forgetfulness.

NHC V, 3, 26: ... seventy-two <companions. Who> are they? Following Wolf-Peter Funk, “The Significance of the Tchacos Codex for Understanding the First Apocalypse of James” in April DeConick, ed., The Codex Judas papers: proceedings of the International Congress on the Tchacos Codex held at Rice University, Houston, Texas, March 13-16, 2008 [Brill], 2009, 518-519. For similar cosmogonies featuring the numbers “12” and “72,” see On the Origin of the World (NHC II, 5, 105), Eugnostos the Blessed (NHC III, 3, 83), and The Gospel of Judas (CT 4, 49).

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

But I'm <not> worried about you:
Because (although) you've come down into a great ignorance, but you weren't corrupted by anything in it.
Because you've come down into thoughtlessness, and your memory stayed with you.

You walked in mud,
and your clothes weren't corrupted,
nor were you buried in their filth,
nor did they lay hold of you (ΟΥΤΕ ΝΕΥΤΑΖΟ ΗΜΟΚ ΑΝ).

And I wasn't like them, but I clothed myself with everything that's theirs.
There's forgetfulness in me,
and I remember things that aren't theirs.
[...] in [...] and I in their [...] I found knowledge.

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

15 But I'm not worried about you, because (although) you've come to ignorance, and you weren't corrupted by anything in it.
You came to forgetfulness, and memory was within you.

You walked in the mud,
and you weren't corrupted.
They didn't receive your vengeance (ΗΠΟΥΤΑΖΟ ΗΠΕΚΚΒΑ).

Now, I'm not like this, but all the forgetfulness with which I've clothed [myself] is [from them, and] I don't remember.
Those who are mine don't know me, [but] I'm fully in the know.

James' Liberation

"I'm not [concerned] for their sufferings (ΗΚΟΟΖ) [...] but I've become afraid [of them because] they (have power to) conquer (ΑΜ[ΑΖ]ΤΕ). Because what 29 will they do? What will I be able to say? What statement will I be able to make (ΝΩΛΧΕ ΠΕΤΝΑΧΟΟQ) to escape them?"

The Lord said, "James, I praise your understanding (ΔΙΑΝΟΙΑ) and your fear. If you continue devoting yourself (ΦΙΛΟΠΟΝΙ), don't be concerned about anything except your liberation. Because look, I'll complete this destiny on the earth as I have said from the heavens, and I'll reveal (ΩΛΠ) your liberation to you."

"And I'm not concerned for the torments that are in this place, [but] about their (power to) conquer (ΕΤΒΕ[Π]ΕΥΑΜΑΖ[ΤΕ]). What [will you do? What] will you say? By what statement (ΝΩΛΧΕ) [will I] be saved?"

"James, I praise your understanding (ΖΗΤ), and fear is making you so devoted (ΘΟΤΕ ΕΙΡΕ ΗΜΟΚ ΗΜΑΙΖΙΣΕ). Don't be concerned about anything except your liberation. Look, I'll go and prepare this very destiny on the earth as it has been prepared in the heavens, 16 and after this I'll reveal (ΩΛΠ) your liberation to you."

Overcoming the Rulers

James said, "Rabbi, how? Will you appear (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to us again after these things – after they arrest (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) you, and you complete this destiny, and you go up to the One Who Exists?"

The Lord said, "James, after these things, I'll reveal (ΟΥΩΝΖ) everything to you – not just for you, but for the unbelief of people – so that [faith will] be among them. For many will [reach] faith [and] will increase [in it], until [they come]

"Rabbi, how? Will you appear (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to me after these things – after you're judged, and the destiny is prepared, and you've reached the One Who Exists?"

"James, after these things, I'll appear (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to you in this place not just <for you>, [but] for the [unbelief] of people, because how else would [faith] be among them?
[But many] will turn to faith and grow in it, until they come

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

[to] knowledge. 30 And after this,
I'll appear (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to refute
(CΟΖΕ) the rulers, and I'll reveal (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to them that this one can't be overcome (ΑΤΕΜΑΖΤΕ). If they overcome (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) him, then he'll overcome (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) them all.
But now, I'll go. Remember what I've said, and let it sink in."

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

to knowledge. And for this, I'll [appear] ([ΟΥΩΝΖ ΕΒΟΛ]) to rebuke (ΧΠΙΟ) the rulers, [and I'll] reveal ([ΟΥ]ΩΝΖ) to them that there's one who can't be overcome (ΑΤΑΜΑΖΤΕ). When they overcome (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) him, then he overcomes (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ). So now, I'll go.
Remember what I've said, and let it grow within you."

P.Oxy. LXXXVI 5533

"[...] to knowledge. Because of this, I'll appear (φανήσομαι) to refute (ἀπέλεγξιν) the rulers, to show (φ[α]νερώσαι) them this: the one who can't be overcome (ἀκράτητος).

When he's overcome (κρατηθῇ), then he'll overcome (κεκράτηκεν) all. Now, I'm going.
Remember what's been said and let [it] grow in you."

James said, “Lord, I’ll hurry to do what you’ve said.”

“I’ll hurry, Rabbi, to do what you’ve said.”

“I’ll hurry [...]”

The Passion

The Lord <left> and fulfilled what was fitting.

When James heard of his sufferings (ἸΚΟΟ2) and he was deeply distressed (ΑΓΓΙΚΑ2 Ν2ΗΤ ΕΜΑΤΕ), they were waiting for the sign (ΤΥΠΟC) of his coming.

And Jesus went and prepared what was fitting for him.

But James heard about his sufferings (2ΙCΕ) and 17 was deeply grieved (ΑΓΛΥΠΕΙ ΜΠΩΑ), and he awaited his coming. The only thing he had to console himself with was waiting for his coming.

[But] James heard of his [sufferings] (τ[ὰ] π[ά]θ[η] αὐτοῦ) and was grieved (Ιλυπ[ή]θ[η]), and he awaited his coming.

Jesus Appears to James

But he came after some days. And James was walking on the mountain called “Gaugelan” with his disciples, who listened to him [since they] were distressed ([2]ΩΦ Ν2ΗΤ). And they had him as a comforter. They said, “This is the second [teacher ([ΡΕΓΓCΒ]Ω).” Then the crowd dispersed, but James stayed [by himself] praying [fervently] ([ΕΜΑΤΕ]), as 31 he was accustomed to doing (ΝΘΕ ΕΤΕΟΥΝΤΑ2 ΝΟΥΤΩΠ ΜΜΑΥ).

And the Lord appeared to him. Then he stopped praying, hugged him (ΜΑΛ2<Κ> Ν2ΗΤ4), and kissed him. He said, “Rabbi, I’ve found you! I heard about the sufferings (ἸΚΟΟ2) you endured, and my emotional suffering was great (ΑΙΜΙΚΑ2 Ν2ΗΤ ΕΜΑΤΕ). You know how much I care about you. That’s why, I think, I didn’t want to see this (group of) people (ΕΠΕΙΛΑΟC) (anymore). They must be judged for the things they’ve done, because what they’ve done isn’t right.”

And it was two days, and look! James was ministering on the [mountain] called “Galgelam” [...] there [...] with his disciples [who] listened to him willingly (CΩΤΗ ΕΡΟ2 Ε2ΝΑΥ). And they had him as a comforter. They said, “This is the second teacher (CΑ2).” And look! They dispersed, and James stayed by himself and prayed fervently (ΜΠΩΑ), as he was accustomed to doing (ΚΑΤΑ ΤΕΟΥ2Ε).

But suddenly Jesus appeared to him, and he stopped praying and started to hug him (ΧΙΤ4 ΕΡΟ2). This is what he said: “Rabbi, I left you! I heard what you endured, and I was very grieved (ΑΙΛΥΠΙ ΜΠΩΑ). You know how much I care about you. That’s why I didn’t want to be with you, 18 so that I wouldn’t see this very (group of) people (ΕΠΕΙΛΑΟC ΕΤΕ ΠΛΕΙ ΠΕ). It will be condemned, because what they’ve done is horrible to see.”

[But] he was beside him (again) after [2] days, [and look! James] was going to the mountain called “Golgoul” with [his own] disciples who gladly (ήδέως) heard him. [And] they had him for encouragement. They said, “[This] is the second teacher (Ιδιδάσκαλως).” And look! The people (ό λ<α>ός) were scattered [...] was left [by himself ...] pray [...]

[...] to him the [Lord ... stopping] the prayer, he started to hug him ([λα]βε[iv] αὐτόν). He said, [“Rabbi], I have you! I heard what you [suffered (ἐπ[α]θες)] and] I was grieved (ἐλυπήθην) [...]

Jesus Encourages James

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

The Lord said, “James, don’t be concerned about me or about this people (ΠΕΙΛΑΟC). I’m the One who’s within me. At no time did I suffer (ἸΚΑ2)

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

“James, don’t be concerned about the people (ΠΛ[Α]Ο[C]) or about me, because I’m the One who’s within myself from the beginning. For I didn’t suffer (2ΙCΕ)

NHC V, 3, 30: ... the Lord <left> ... Ibid., 519-520. ... fulfilled what was fitting // CT 2, 16: ... prepared what was fitting for him, i.e., Jesus left James in order to be crucified so that his physical body would die.

NHC V, 3, 30 // CT 2, 17 // P.Oxy. LXXXVI 5533: ... the second teacher, i.e., second after Jesus, or Jesus’ successor.

NHC V, 3, 31: ΜΑΛ2<Κ>. Lance Jenott proposed this reconstruction based on ΜΟΛ2Κ on page 32 in a conversation on June 28, 2023.

anything, nor was I harmed (ϩΙϢϢ), and this (group of) people (ΠΕΙΛΛΟϢ) didn't do me any harm (ϩΟΟΥ). But it was inflicted on an image (ΟΥΤΥΠΟϢ) of the rulers, and it was right that it should be [destroyed] by them. [...] But the rulers [...] he [came to his end]. But [you're concerned, because the] just [God] is angry with [you, since you've been] 32 a servant to him. That's why your name is 'James the Just.' You see how you'll sober up when you've seen me. And you stopped this prayer since you're a just man of God, and then you hugged (ΜΟΛϩΚ) and kissed me.

"Truly, I tell you that you've stirred up great anger and wrath against yourself, but (that's) so that these other things might happen."

But James was fainthearted. He wept, and his emotional suffering was great (ΑϢΗΚΑϩ ΝϩΗΤ ΕΜΑΤΕ). And they both sat down on a rock.

The Lord said to him, "James, that's how you'll come by your sufferings (ΗΚΟΟϩ), but don't be sad, because the flesh is weak. It'll receive what's appointed for it. But you, don't be [faint]hearted or afraid." The Lord [stopped].

[But] when James heard these things, he wiped away his tears in [his eyes and] was greatly relieved (ΑϢΕϢΙ ΕΜΑΤΕ) [...] that was [in him].

in any way, nor did I die; and this very (group of) people (ΠΕΙΛΛΟϢ ΕΤΕ ΠΑΙ ΠΕ) didn't do any harm (ΠΕΘΟΟΥ). But it was inflicted on the image (ΠΤΥΠΟϢ) of the rulers, for whom <it was right> to be prepared. It was the rulers who prepared him, then he came to his end. But watch out, because the just God is angry, for you've been a servant to him. That's why you received the name 'James the Just.' See, already you've been released, since you'll know me and you'll know yourself. And you yourself will stop the prayer that the just God prayed."

19 And as for me, he hugged (ΧΙ) me and kissed me.

"Truly, I tell you that he's stirred up his anger and wrath against you, but that it's right that these things also happen."

But James was fainthearted. [He wept], and he was very grieved (ΑϢΑΥΠΗ ΠΠΩΑ). [And] they both sat down on the rock.

[Jesus] said to James, "James, it's right that these things will happen to you, but don't be grieved. The flesh is weak. It'll receive what's assigned to it. But you, don't be fainthearted, and don't fear anything."

When James heard these things, he wiped away his tears and was greatly relieved from the grief (ΑϢΕϢΕ ΠΠΩΑ ΕΒΟΑ ϩΝΤΑΥΠΗ) that was in him.

Jesus Tells James How to Escape the "Toll Collectors"

The Lord [said] to [him, "James], look, I'll 33 reveal your liberation to you. When they'll arrest (ΑΜΑϩΤΕ) [you] and you come by these sufferings (ΗΚΟΟϩ), a crowd will arm themselves against you so that <they> may arrest (<Α>ΜΑϩΤΕ) you. But three of them especially (ΝϩΟΥΟ) will capture (ΑΜΑϩΤΕ) you – those who sit as toll collectors. Not only do they demand toll, but they steal souls (too).

"Then when you fall into their hands, one of them who is a guard will say to you, 'Who or where are you from?'

"You're to say to him, 'I'm a son, and I'm from the Father.'

"He'll say to you, 'What son? And what kind of Father do you belong to?'

"You're to say to him, 'I'm from the Father Who [Exists] from the Beginning, but a Son who is in the One Who Exists from the Beginning.'

"[He'll say] to you, 'And [where have you come from]?'

"You're to [say to him, 'I came] from the One Who [Exists] from the Beginning]."

But Jesus said to him, "Look, now I'll reveal your liberation to you. When they'll arrest (ΑΜΑϩΤΕ) you, you'll face these things. Many will oppose you because of 20 the word of your arrest (ΠΩΑΧΕ ΜΠΕΚΑΜΑϩΤΕ). But among them, there are three who sit there by themselves as toll collectors. Not only do they receive toll for sins, but they demand and take souls (too).

"[When] you fall by the hands of many (of them), one of them – because he's [a guard] – will ask you, 'Who or where are you from?'

"You'll say to him, 'I'm the Son, and I'm from the Father.'

"And he'll [say] to you, 'What Son? Or what Father?'

"You'll say to [him], 'The Father who exists from the [beginning], but the Son who is in the One Who Exists from the Beginning.'

"And he'll say to you, 'Where have you come from?'

"You'll say to him, 'From the One Who Exists from the Beginning.'

"And he'll ask <you>, 'Why have you come?'

NHC V, 3, 31 // CT 2, 18: ... it was inflicted on an image / the image (ΟΥΤΥΠΟϢ / ΠΤΥΠΟϢ) of the rulers. The essential person of Jesus did not suffer and die; rather his physical body, created in the image of the lower spiritual rulers, suffered and died.

NHC V, 3, 33 // CT 2, 20: ... arrest ... three ... toll collectors. The thin line between "earthly rulers" and "spiritual rulers" is most apparent here. What begins as an arrest by earthly authorities (cf. CT 2, 29, 30) blends seamlessly into an encounter with three spiritual beings who are, as it were, hostile "gatekeepers" to be overcome in a heavenly ascent.

“[...] he'll say to you, 'Why 34 [...] these strangers?'

“You're to say to him, 'They're not all strangers, [but] some are from Achamoth, who's the female (creator). And she created them when she brought down the generation existing from the beginning. So then, they're not strangers, but they're ours. On the one hand, they're ours, since she who lords over them is from the One Who Exists from the Beginning. On the other hand, they're strangers, since the One Who Exists from the Beginning didn't unite with her when she created them.’

“He'll also say to you, 'Where will you go?'

“You're to say to him, 'I'll return to the place from which I've come.’

“If you say these things, you'll escape their attacks.

“But when you fall into the hands of [these] three who capture (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) (and) steal souls in that place [...] these you [...] a vessel [that's] more [precious] than [the female (creator) who's Achamoth ...] 35 [...] is your Mother. Because <if> your Mother is [ignorant] about her root, you won't [ever] become sober [either]. But I'll call [upon] the imperishable knowledge, who's Sophia, who's in the Father (and) who's the Mother of Achamoth. Achamoth has no father, nor (any) male [partner], but she's [a female] from a female. She created you without a male, since she was by herself. She's ignorant of who [lives through] her Mother, because she thought that she existed by herself. But [I] will cry out to her Mother.’

“And then they'll be troubled, blaming their root and the generation [of] their Mother. [But] you'll go up to [what] is yours [...] cast off their fetters ...]

“You'll say, 'I've come (both) to all those who are mine and to those who aren't mine.’

“He'll say, 'Then what have you come 21 after? Those who aren't yours?'

“And you'll say, 'They're not all strangers to me, but (to) Achamoth, that is, the female (creator), and she's created these for herself. But she brought down the generation that exists from the beginning. So then, they're [not] strangers to [me, but] they're mine. [On the one hand], they're mine, since [she who] lords over them is from the One Who Exists from the Beginning. On the other hand, they've become [strangers], since the One Who Exists from the Beginning didn't unite with her when she created them.’

“And he'll say, 'Now where will you go?'

“You'll say, 'I'll go up to those who are mine, to the place from which I've come.’

“If you say these things, you'll escape from all of them.

“But when you come to the three who take the soul, there's a great struggle in that place if you say to them, 'I'm a vessel more precious than Achamoth, the female (creator). She created you, 22 and if your Mother is ignorant of her own root, then when will you become sober? But I've called (upon) the undefiled Sophia, who's in the [Father], the Mother of Achamoth. But her (Achamoth's) partner [wasn't] upright [with the] female (creator). Without a male (partner), [she] created you by herself. [She] became ignorant of her mother {it is she, by herself, who's ignorant of her mother}. And she thought that she was by herself. But I've called her Mother.’

“And then they'll all be troubled, and they'll blame their own root and the generation of their Mother. But you'll go up to your roots <...>, the chains that are their chains.

The Transmission of Jesus' Revelation to James

36 “[...] One Who [Exists] from the Beginning, [and the] (proto)types of the twelve disciples, and the [seventy]-two companions, [and the female] (creator) Achamoth, which translates as ‘Sophia,’ and who I am, and the imperishable Sophia, through whom you'll be liberated with all the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of the One Who Exists – these things they've known and have hidden [within] themselves. You're to hide <these things> within you, but keep quiet. But you're to reveal them to Addai when you [will leave], “Look, James, I've revealed to you who I am, and the One Who Exists from the Beginning, and the 23 (proto)types of the twelve disciples, [and] the 72 companions, and Achamoth [the female] (creator), which translates as ‘Sophia,’ and who you are, and who the undefiled Sophia is, through whom you'll be liberated, [and] all the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ) of the One Who Exists – they've known themselves [and] are hidden within themselves. [You must keep] these things I've said [hidden], and they'll be within you, and you'll keep quiet about them. But you'll reveal them to Addai when you leave the flesh, and immediately this very land will struggle (ΜΙΓΕ).

NHC V, 3, 36 // CT 2, 23: ... Achamoth, which translates as ‘Sophia.’ “Achamoth” is Hokhma, the Hebrew word for “wisdom,” whereas Sophia is the Greek word for “wisdom.” Though these two words mean the same thing, in this text Sophia designates the “higher wisdom,” i.e., the Mother of Achamoth (NHC V, 3, 35 // CT 2, 22), who in turn is the “lower wisdom.” Cf. Jas. 3:14-17 for the two wisdoms.

NHC V, 3, 36: ... when you [will leave] ... // CT 2, 23: ... when you leave the flesh ... According to Josephus, James was executed shortly after the death of Porcius Festus around 62 CE (Jewish Antiquities, 20.9.1). Here the text introduces a narrative of an alternative apostolic succession; not through the twelve disciples, but rather through James and Addai, legendary apostle to the East. ... immediately they'll [make] war with this land / ... immediately this very land will struggle. The Jewish-Roman war of 66-73 CE.

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

and immediately they'll [make] war ([P]P[O]ΛΕΜΙ) with this land. [...], then, for the one who dwells in Jerusalem. But let Addai take these things to heart. In the tenth year, Addai is to sit down and write them out. And [when] he's written them out [...] and they'll be given [to Manael]. He has [this name ...]

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

And she'll drink her cup, because she angered the God who dwells in Jerusalem. But let Addai keep these words in his heart for ten years, and then he'll dare to sit down and write them out. And then, when he's written them out, they'll be taken from him and given to Manael. This is a holy name, but it means the same thing as 24 Masphel. Let this person keep this very book as an inheritance for the children (ΝΩΗΡΕ).

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

37 "[... when he ... his] little [son] (ΩΗΡΕ), his [name] will be called 'Levi.' Then he's to bring out words [...] from [...] said earlier. [...] a woman [...] Jerusalem from her [generation, and] he'll have [two] sons with her (ΕΦΧΠΟ ΝΩΗ[ΡΕ] CNA)Υ ΕΒΟΛ ΝΖΗΤC). [They are] to inherit these things, [and] the understanding of the one who [...] exalts. And they are to receive [these] through him from his mind. But the younger is the greater of them. And let these things be (given) to him and hidden within him until [he] reaches the age of seventeen years. [...]

38 "[...] be delivered ([N]ΟΥΖΗ) through [him]. He'll be severely (ΕΜΑΤΕ) persecuted at the hands of his companions [...] he'll be proclaimed [through them]. And as for this word,

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

"But a holy offspring (ΟΥCΠΕΡΜΑ ΕΦΟΥΕΕΒ) will come out from him, and he's worthy to inherit these [things] I've said.

"But when his little son (ΩΗΡΕ) grows [up ...], he'll be given the name Levi. Then the land will make war again (ΟΝ CNAΡΠΟΛΕΜΙ). But Levi will hide there as a little child (ΩΗΡΕ), and not a word that I've said will come from his lips. But he'll marry a woman from Jerusalem from his generation, and he'll have two sons with her (ΝΦΧΠΟ ΕΒΟΛ ΝΖΗΤC ΝΩΗΡΕ CNAΥ), and the <second> will inherit these things. The heart of the older one will be closed, and they'll be taken from his heart, but the younger one will grow up with them and will keep them hidden until he reaches his seventeenth year. 25 And then the land will go to war (ΠΟΛΕΜΕΙ), but since he's not there, he'll be guarded according to providence (ΠΡΟΝΟΙΑ).

"And he'll [grow] up and conquer (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) many provinces. Many will be delivered (ΟΥΧΑΙ) through him, and he'll make this word become a rule (ΔΟΓΜΑ) for many provinces. But he'll be severely (ΡΙΠΩ[Α]) persecuted by his [companions ...]. And he'll be attacked by them, and they'll

P.Oxy. LXXXVI 5533

"[...] because a holy spirit from him, and he'll be deemed worthy to inherit these things said before.

"When his [younger son] ([υ(ιό)]ς) inherits [...] Levi, then the land itself will be at war (πολεμηθήσεται). [But] Levi will hide them wisely [...]

[...] his [mind], but the younger will grow in them and keep [them] hidden [...] 17 years old. And [then] the [land itself] will be at war (while) he's not really (there), but [according to providence (πρόνοιαν)] he'll be guarded [...]

CT 2, 23: ... the God who dwells in Jerusalem, i.e., Addonaios / Addon ("Adonai"); cf. NHC V, 3, 39 // CT 2, 26.

NHC V, 3, 37 // CT 2, 24: ... Levi. Though Levi the disciple is featured in texts like the The Gospel of Mary (BG 8502, 1, 18) and The Gospel of Peter (P.Cair. 10759), this Levi, son of Manael / Masphel, is probably not inspired by Levi son of Alphaeus (Mark 2:14,15; Luke 3:24; 5:27-29) but rather Levi the patriarch. The trope of the younger of two sons is inspired by the book of Genesis.

NHC V, 3, 37 // CT 2, 24 // P.Oxy. LXXXVI 5533: ... the younger. Unlike the other figures in this apostolic succession (James > Addai > Manael / Masphael > Levi), Levi's younger son isn't named, perhaps because he's a contemporary, or a near-contemporary, of the second-century author.

CT 2, 24: Then the land will make war again. Most likely the Kitos War of 115 to 117 CE.

CT 2, 25: And then the land will go to war. Most likely the Bar Kokhba revolt of 132 – 135 CE, seventeen years after the beginning of the Kitos War.

[they'll proclaim] it. [Then it'll become] an offspring (ἄλλος) of [...]" attack this very word, but these things will happen to overcome (ἀμαρτε) the rulers."

[...] and [this word will be scorned by them ...]"

The Seven Women Disciples

James said, "[I'm] content [...] and they are [...] my soul. Yet I ask of you [another thing]: Who are the [seven] women who've [become] your disciples? And look, all women bless you. I'm also amazed at how some [powerless] vessels have become strong through a perception that's in them.

[The] Lord [said], "It's well that you're [amazed ... concerning ...]"

"Rabbi, I've come to believe all of these things, and all is well in my soul. Yet I'll ask you this: Who are the seven women who've become your disciples and whom all the generations bless? And I'm amazed that they're in weak vessels, and (yet) they've found powers and perceptions."

"James, it's well that you're amazed, but the Son of Humanity (πωρε μπρωμε) has come and revealed 26 the secrets concerning the children (νωρε) of light, so that they may have the secrets when they're revealed. The seven women are seven spirits who are included in the Scripture:

"Rabbi [...] and [...]"

"[...] of the light [so that they may be in the] manifest [even if they] have these things [hidden. The 7] women [are] the 7 spirits [...]"

Nag Hammadi Codex (NHC) V, 3

39 "[...] A spirit [of wisdom (σοφία)], a spirit of thought (μεγ[ε]), a spirit of counsel (σοφ[η]) and [power (δωμ)], a spirit [of understanding (νοϋς)], a spirit of knowledge (γνω[σις]), a spirit of their fear (φο[βη]).

"[Then] when we passed through [the region] of the [great] ruler whose [name] is Addonaios, [I went in] by him. And [he] was ignorant. [And] when I left him, [he] thought I was [a] son of his. He was as gracious [to me] at that time as (to) a son of his. And then, before I appeared in this place, (the spirits) were cast out among [these] people ([πει]λαος). But from [this place] of heaven, the prophets [...]" 40 [... Then James said], "Rabbi, [you've persuaded] me [about] these things. Among the seven who have been

Codex Tchacos (CT), 2

"A spirit of wisdom (σοφία) and of thought (καθε), a spirit of counsel (σοφ[η]) [and power (δωμ)], [a spirit of] understanding (νοϋς) and knowledge (κο[οϋνη]), a spirit of fear (φο[βη]).

"When <I> passed through the land of the great ruler who's called Addon, I went in by him. And he was ignorant. But when I left him, he thought [I] was his son. And he was as gracious to me as to his own son. And before I appeared in these places, these (spirits already) were there among this very people (πιλαος ετε παι πτε), where no prophets spoke without the seven spirits. And these are the seven spirits who preached concerning me through the mouths of people (μπρωμε) 27 as they were able to speak out, because I hadn't yet spoken with all power. But I came and brought it to completion, and I'm not yet [completed]."

"You've also persuaded me about all of these things. So, Rabbi, because it (i.e., the people) has received the seven and left them together, do you have some who are NHC V, 3, 38 // CT 2, 25: ... the seven women who've become your disciples. On seven women disciples, cf. the opening line of The Sophia of Jesus Christ: "After he rose from the dead, his twelve disciples and seven women continued to be his followers." Marvin Meyer, ed., The Nag Hammadi Scriptures (HarperOne), 2007, 287.

NHC V, 3, 39 // CT 2, 26: A spirit of wisdom ... A modified version of Isaiah 11:2.

CT 2, 27: ... it (the people). Funk translates q as "he," writing that this passage "is slightly obfuscated by the unwarranted introduction of a third person singular" (Wolf-Peter Funk, "The Significance of the Tchacos Codex for Understanding the First Apocalypse of James," 513. Nagel translates q as "es" and regards "das Volk" as the antecedent (Peter Nagel, Codex apocryphus gnosticus Novi Testamenti [Mohr Siebeck], [presented] as a group, who is more [honored than the others]?”

The Lord said, “[James], I praise you [...] about details [...] words [...] Truly, you’re worthy [...] because cast out from [yourself the] cup, which is bitterness (CΙΩ[Ε]). None of [the rulers will be able] to stand against you, because [you’ve begun] to recognize [those who] are [yours], from the beginning to the end. Cast out from yourself all lawlessness, and watch out (ΜΑΤΖΗΚ) lest they be jealous of you. When you [speak] these words of this [perception], persuade this [...], Salome, Mary [...], and] Arsinoe [...]

41 “[...] Since the priest [...] receives [...] he [assigns] these burnt offerings and offerings (Ν[Ι]ΖΕΝΘΑΙΑ ΜΝ[Ι]ΖΕΝΠΡΟΦ[Ο]ΡΑ). But I [...] not in this way, but [I receive the] firstfruits of those [impure that I send them] up, so that the [true] power may be revealed ([ΟΥ]ΩΝΖ ΕΒΟΛ). The perishable has gone [up] to the imperishable, and the work of the feminine has reached the work of this masculine.

James said, “Rabbi, into these three, then, has their [...] been cast, because they’ve been despised and persecuted by [...]”

42 “[...] “[...] and Joanna [...] Look [...] everything [...] from anyone [...], because you’ve received the [beginning] of knowledge [...] that what is the [...] walk (ΜΟΩ[Ε]) [...] you will [...]. But I’ll go [...] and I’ll appear (ΟΥΩ[ΝΖ]) [...] because they trust you [...] be] content with their [blessing] and deliverance (ΟΥΧΑΙ), and this revelation (ΠΕΙΟΥΩΝΖ ΕΒΟΛ) will come to pass (ΩΩΠΕ).”

more honored than others?”

“I praise you (even) more, O James, because you ask about details, and you won’t say a single idle word. Truly, [you’re] worthy of your own root, and you’ve cast out from yourself the cup of drunkenness (Τ[Ζ]Ε). Not a single ruler can stand against you, because you’ve begun to recognize those who are yours. Cast far from yourself all ignorance, and watch out (ΝΑΥ) lest they become jealous of you because you’ve received these words, that is, the knowledge that exalts. Also, be persuaded by this other (example), which is that of Salome, Mary, and Arsinoe, whom I’ll 28 introduce to you, because they’re worthy of the One Who Exists, and because they’ve become sober and have been healed from the blindness in their hearts, and they’ve recognized who I am.

“This (is) according to the providence of the Father, because he’s sent me as a priest, and in every place imaginable (CΕΗΠ) gives to me the firstfruits and the firstborn. [The priest of] this [world] receives the firstfruits and assigns sacrifices and offerings (ΝΘΥCΙΑ ΖΗΠΡΟCΦΟΡ[Α]). But I’m not like this. Rather, I receive the firstfruits of those who are defiled, that I may send them up [un]defiled, so that the true power will be revealed (ΟΥΩΝΖ ΕΒΟΛ); because the defiled has separated from what’s undefiled, and the work of the <female> has reached the (work of the) male.

“Rabbi, the three, then, have been destroyed and haven’t suffered, when they were worthy and (yet) persecuted by [others] and things were said that aren’t (true).”

“James, it’s completely unnecessary for anyone 29 to be destroyed. These very three are beyond a place of faith [because they’ve received ([ΑΥΧΙ Γ]ΑΡ) the] hidden knowledge. These are the names [of] the three: Sapphira and Susanna and Joanna. Look, I’ve revealed everything to you, and you’re not a stranger to these very words, because you’ve received the beginning of knowledge [...] from those who are mine. Now walk around (ΜΟΩ[Ε]), and you [will find] the rest of them. [But] I [will] go to these and [appear] (ΟΥΩΝΖ) to them, because they [...]”

2023, 111). ... by this other (example). Cf. Mikael C. Haxby, The First Apocalypse of James: Martyrdom and Sexual Difference, Doctoral dissertation (Harvard University), 2013, 128.

NHC V, 3, 41 // CT 2, 28: ... firstfruits ... The aforementioned women disciples / prophetesses.

CT 2, 28, 29: ... the three, then, have been destroyed and haven’t suffered ... it’s completely unnecessary for anyone to be destroyed. At the top of page 29, these three women disciples / prophetesses are identified as Sapphira, Susanna, and Joanna. Like Jesus, they did not suffer and die, but rather their physical bodies suffered and died. Cf. the note on NHC V, 3, 31 // CT 2, 18, above.

CT 2, 29: ... beyond a place of faith. Literally, “separated (ΠΟΡ[Χ Ε]ΒΟΛ) from a place of faith.” Cf. page 16: “[But many] will turn to faith and grow in it, until they come to knowledge.” This point is made by Antti Marjanen, “The Seven Women Disciples in the Two Versions of the First Apocalypse of James” in April DeConick, ed., The Codex Judas papers: proceedings of the International Congress on the Tchacos Codex held at Rice University, Houston, Texas, March 13-16, 2008 (Brill), 2009, 543: “...becoming separated from a ΜΑ of faith’ and ‘having received the hidden knowledge’ describe the two phases of a progression of growth one is supposed to go through.” ... [because they’ve received ([ΑΥΧΙ Γ]ΑΡ) ... Cf. Marjanen, ibid., 542, citing Johanna Brankaer and Hans-G. Bethge, Codex Tchacos. Texte und Analysen. Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristliche Literatur 161 (Walter de Gruyter), 2007, 124.

James Reproves the Twelve

And he went at that time [immediately] and reproved the twelve, and he cast assumptions (ΝΟΥΤΩΤ ΝΖΗΤ) [out] of them [concerning] the way of knowledge.

[... the] twelve [... un]belief [...] he said to them [...] and a knowledge [...] he persuaded them [...] from them [...] the rest they [...].

Conclusion: The Arrest and Martyrdom of James

43 [...] but most of [the judges], when they saw [that] nothing could be taken up [against him, left] him alone. [But the rest] and the people (ΠΑΛ[Ο]C), they [...], “Let us [take] this (one) from this earth, because [he’s] not [worthy] to live.” These (judges) were afraid. They arose and said, “We have no part in this blood, because a just man will be destroyed through injustice.”

James left so that [...]

44 [...] My] Father, [who’s in the heavens, forgive] them, because [they know] not [...].”

It happened after [...] they arrested (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) James in the place of another man 30 against whom they had made accusations, because he had fled from [...] but [...] prison, rather it was another one named James who came out of the prison. They arrested (ΑΜΑΖΤΕ) this (one) [instead] of him. They brought him before the judges. But most of the judges saw that he was without sin. They [left him] alone. And the others and [the people] (ΠΑΛ[Ο]C) all stood there and [said], “Take him from the earth. He’s not [worthy to live]. But these (judges) were afraid. [They arose] and said, “We’re not [...].”

[...] he remembered [...] he became [...] for the people (ΝΡΩΜΕ) [...] him, but the [...].

[But] when they were stoning [him], he said, “My Father, [who’s in the] heavens, forgive them, because [they know] <not> what they’re doing.”

The Apocalypse of James

James

Select Bibliography

- Brankaer, Johanna and Hans-G. Bethge, Codex Tchacos. Texte und Analysen. Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristliche Literatur 161 (Walter de Gruyter), 2007
- Edwards, Robert Michael, The Three Lives of James: From Jewish-Christian Traditions to a Valentinian Revelation, Preserved in Two Late Antique Attestations, Postdoctoral dissertation (University of Ottawa), 2015
- Funk, Wolf-Peter, “B. VI.7. Die erste Apokalypse des Jakobus (NHC V, 3 / CT 2),” Antike christliche Apokryphen in deutscher Übersetzung (Mohr Siebeck), 2012
- Funk, Wolf-Peter, “The First Revelation of James,” in Marvin Meyer, ed., The Nag Hammadi Scriptures (HarperOne), 2007, 321-330
- Funk, Wolf-Peter, “The First Apocalypse of James,” in Wilhelm Schneemelcher, ed., and McL. Wilson, R. (trans.), New Testament Apocrypha. Vol. 1: Gospels and Related Writings (Westminster John Knox Press), 1991, 313-326
- Funk, Wolf-Peter, “The Significance of the Tchacos Codex for Understanding the First Apocalypse of James” in April DeConick, ed., The Codex Judas papers: proceedings of the International Congress on the Tchacos Codex held at Rice University, Houston, Texas, March 13-16, 2008 (Brill), 2009
- Haxby, Mikael C., The First Apocalypse of James: Martyrdom and Sexual Difference (Mohr Siebeck), 2023
- Jenott, Lance, “Reading Variants in James and the Apocalypse of James: A Perspective from New Philology,” in Liv Ingeborg Lied and Hugo Lundhaug, eds., Snapshots of Evolving Traditions (De Gruyter), 2017
- Kasser, Rodolphe, and Wurst, Gregor, The Gospel of Judas, Critical Edition: Together with the Letter of Peter to Philip, James, and a Book of Allogenes from Codex Tchacos (National Geographic), 2007
- Landau, B.C., G.S. Smith, and W.B. Henry, “First Apocalypse of James,” in The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, Vol. LXXXVI, 2021, 3-13
- Marjanen, Antti, “The Seven Women Disciples in the Two Versions of the First Apocalypse of James” in April DeConick, ed., The Codex Judas papers: proceedings of the International Congress on the Tchacos Codex held at Rice University, Houston, Texas, March 13-16, 2008 (Brill), 2009
- Nagel, Peter, Codex apocryphus gnosticus Novi Testamenti (Mohr Siebeck), 2023
- Robinson, James M., ed., The Coptic Gnostic Library: A Complete Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices, Volume 3 (Brill), 2000
- Schoedel, William R., “The First Apocalypse of James (V, 3),” in James M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library in English, 4th rev. ed. (Brill), 1996

The First Apocalypse of James

NHC V, 3 // CT 2 // P. Oxy. 5533

The following translation has been committed to the public domain and may be freely copied and used, changed or unchanged, for any purpose. It is based on the Coptic text of Nag Hammadi Codex V, 3, Codex Tchacos 2, and Papyrus Oxyrhynchus 5533, hereafter abbreviated NHC, CT, and P. Oxy. 5533, respectively. The Nag Hammadi texts were written in the fourth century, subsequently buried, and then rediscovered in 1945. The Codex Tchacos was discovered in the 1970s in Egypt, and was first published in 2006 by National Geographic. Papyrus Oxyrhynchus 5533 was identified as a fragmentary Greek version in 2021.

The text narrates revelations passed along from Jesus to James and a series of subsequent successors through the early second century. This translation from the Coptic and Greek is by Samuel Zinner and was edited by Mark M. Mattison with the generous support of Other Gospels. Zinner's translation is based on the Coptic and Greek texts in:

The Nag Hammadi Library and Codex Tchacos:

Johanna Brankaer and Hans-Gebhard Bethge. Codex Tchacos: Texte und Analysen. Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der althristlichen Literatur 161; Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 2007, 81–254.

Peter Nagel. Codex apocryphus gnosticus Novi Testamenti Band 2: Briefe und Apokalypsen aus den Schriften von Nag Hammadi und dem Codex Tchacos mit einer Neuausgabe der "Epistula Apostolorum." Koptisch und Deutsch. Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament 503; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2023, 67–124.

P. Oxy. 5533:

David W. Kim. "The First Apocalypse of James in a Socio-Linguistic Perspective: Three Greek and Coptic Versions from Ancient Monastic Egypt." Religions 15–8 (2024), 881; <https://doi.org/10.3390/rel15080881>.

B. C. Landau, Geoffrey S. Smith, W. B. Henry. "5533. First Apocalypse of James." In A. Benaissa, M. Zellmann-Rohrer. Editors. The Oxyrhynchus Papyri Volume LXXXVI. Graeco-Roman Memoirs, No. 107; London: The Egypt Exploration Society, with the British Academy, 2021, 3–13.

Images available at: https://portal.sds.ox.ac.uk/articles/online_resource/P_Oxy_LXXXVI_5533_First_Apocalypse_of_James/21186583

Symbols

- [] Gap in the text (known as a "lacuna")
- () Editorial insertion to clarify the text
- < > Editorial correction of a scribal error
- { } Text erroneously added by the scribe
- [24] Page number of the Coptic codex

Introduction: Jesus and James

[24] The Lord, however,¹ has spoken with me: “Behold now the fulfillment of my redemption. I have granted you a sign concerning these matters, James, my brother, because not in vain have I called you my brother, even though you are not my materialistic² brother, and I am not ignorant regarding you, in order that <you>, when I grant you a sign: know and hear!

[10] “Because I see (the completion) of my redemption, I will instruct you concerning these matters, James, my brother, because not in vain are you called ‘brother,’ though my materialistic brother [you are] not, but you lack recognition concerning yourself, so that [I] will instruct you concerning who I am.³

The Existent One

Nothing existed except the Existent One.⁴ I myself, I cannot be named, being from the Existent One, so that I [have been given a] number of names, twofold⁵ from the Existent One. I, however, I existed before you did.

Hear! Nothing existed except the Existent One.⁶ He [cannot be named, and] he is [inexpressible among those who] exist or who will come into [existence]. I, however, am from the Existent One, and I cannot be named, although [I] have been named with [a number of] names, [because] they do not belong to me; they are [alien] to me. However, the [first] I am not, because second am I, from the Existent One.⁷

¹ The use of “however” in the first sentence indicates the original opening has been lost.

² “Materialistic,” Nagel, “nach irdischer Art,” i.e., according to the earthly kind. The Coptic ḥulē, from Greek hulē, “matter,” does not imply that James and Jesus are not physical brothers. As Nagel, 75 explains, here Jesus “refers instead to the different spheres from which the revealer and the recipient of revelation originate.” (My translation from the German, here and below). Additionally, Jesus could be asserting that he is not a “hylic,” that is, one of those ruled by material impulses, but that he is a pneumatic, that is, one of those ruled by the divine Spirit. As part of its “gnostic” trajectory, I Apoc. Jas. transmits several “Jewish-Christian” traditions, and is therefore unlikely to reflect any denial of Jesus’ and James’ relation as full siblings.

³ The spiritual identity of James is bound together with that of Jesus, which in turn is bound together with God.

⁴ An echo of the divine name that plays off the Tetragrammaton in LXX (and Coptic) Exod 3:14.

⁵ “Twofold”; cf. CT: “However, the [first] I am not, because second am I, from the Existent One.”

⁶ An echo of the divine name that plays off the Tetragrammaton in LXX (and Coptic) Exod 3:14, but preceded by the introductory “Hear!” of Deut 6:4, which is directed to “Israel,” the second name of the patriarch Jacob, i.e., the Greek and Hebrew form behind “James.”

⁷ This may hint at the two Tetragrammatons of Deut 6:4, the first thought of as referring to the Father, the second to the Son.

Achamoth (the “Lower Wisdom”) Creates Powers and Divinities

Because you have asked concerning femaleness:⁸ Femaleness existed, but femaleness did not exist [at the beginning], and she prepared for herself powers and divinities, but [she] did not exist [when] I came forth, [25] given that I am an image of the Existent One, but I have brought the image of [him], so that the children of the [Existent One] could know who belong to them and who the aliens are.

Behold! I will reveal to you everything of this mystery, because I will be apprehended the day after tomorrow, but my redemption will be near.”

James said: “Rabbi, you said, ‘I will be apprehended,’ but I, what will I be able to do (for you)?”

He said to me: “Do not be afraid, James. They will apprehend you as well, but turn yourself away from Jerusalem,⁹ because this is she who always gives the cup of bitterness to the Sons of

Because you [have] asked concerning femaleness, hear! The female existed, but she did not exist from the beginning. She made (for) herself [powers] and divinities. While the Existent One exists from the beginning, the female also exists, but not from the beginning. [11] I, however, am come from the image of the Existent One, in order to instruct you concerning the Existent One, and also [to instruct] you concerning the image of the powers, so that the children of the Existent One will know those who belong to them, and those who do not belong to them.

Behold! I have revealed to you the mystery. [After] three [days I] will be [apprehended. Then they will abuse] me, [the multitude] of [priests] and the elders, and they will revile me, [and they will curse me], but my [redemption will be] near.”

The Twelve Archons

[James, however], answered, he said: “Rabbi, what are you saying? If they apprehend you, then what am I to do (for you)?”

He answered him, saying: “When they apprehend you, and stone you, you will be redeemed, but do not return on the way to Jerusalem, because she is the one who always gives the cup of bitterness [12]

⁸ “Femaleness,” i.e., Achamoth-Sophia.

⁹ A hint at the “flight to Pella” tradition relating to the First Jewish War that broke out in 66 CE.

Light.¹⁰ She is a dwelling-place of a number of archons, but you will preserve your redemption in their presence, so that you can recognize who they are [and] of what kind they are.

You will [convince yourself], and hear. They are not [existent ones],¹¹ but [archons are they, like] the twelve [powers that possess plenary authority] (here) below. [Behold! This is the way it is with all] archons, [and each] one [of them is seated] [26] over his own hebdomad.”

James said: “So Rabbi, are there twelve hebdomads instead of the seven in the scriptures?”

The Lord said: “James, he who has spoken about this Scripture has understood (it) only up to this point. I, however, will reveal to you what has come forth from what cannot be numbered. I shall grant (you) a sign concerning their number. Regarding what has come forth from the Immeasurable One, I shall grant (you) a sign concerning their measure.”

to the Sons of Light, as a dwelling-place of many archons. Now your redemption [is] that you save yourself from them, and your knowledge consists (in) recognizing of what kind they are and how many they [are]. Not all of these are archons, but [. . .] dominion.

Hear me! These, whom I have brought with me to [this place, they are placed onto these twelve archons, each one of them] for himself [stands on] his [hebdomad].”¹²

James answered, he said: “[Rabbi], are there now therefore [twelve] hebdomads, [and] are there not seven, [as] we have it in the Scripture?”

Jesus said: “The one who has spoken about this Scripture, he announced (only) as far as he could understand. I, however, will reveal to you what has come from the Countless One. He has announced his number. That which has come from the Immeasurable One has announced their measure.”

¹⁰ The use of “the Sons of Light” together with a hint at the First Jewish War brings to mind, mutatis mutandis, the Qumran War Scroll.

¹¹ “They are not [existent ones].” This may allude to the notion of evil as a privation of the good. That is, the evil archons have no real positive existence, but only a shadowy negative ontic state.

¹² “Hebdomad,” i.e., a sevenfold period or group.

The Seventy-Two Pairs

James said: “Now what, Rabbi? Behold! I have discovered their number. There are seventy-two pairs.”¹³

The Lord said: “These are the seventy-two heavens, which are the small ones beneath them. These are the powers¹⁵ of the might of all of them, and by them were they established, and these are the ones who were apportioned in every place, which are under the [authority] of the twelve archons. The diminutive power dwelling among them [has] brought [forth] angels for itself, and countless hosts. However, the Existent One was [. . .] given [. . .]. On account of [. . .] Existent One [...]; countless are they.

[27] If you want to count them now, you cannot before you throw off blind thought from yourself, this fetter of flesh surrounding you, and then will you attain to the Existent One, and you will no longer be James. You will instead be what exists, and all of the [13] “If now, Rabbi, I revise¹⁴ the number of the archons, who then are the seventy-two pairs?”

He said, “<These> are the seventy-two small heavens beneath them. [However], those that are larger than they, those are the powers in the height, on which rests the entire (heavenly) axis, and [. . .] on account of [. . .] inside you.

They cannot be coun[t]ed by] you,¹⁶ but if you want to count them, you cannot count them now without throwing off the blindness that dwells inside your mind¹⁷ and the fetter that dwells inside the flesh. Then you will attain to the Existent One, and you will no longer be James,¹⁸ [14] but one who in ¹³ On the translation “pairs,” see Nagel, 81, footnote 7.

¹⁴ “Revise,” or “change.” This seems to be the sense of the literal reading, “move away from.”

¹⁵ On the trope of seventy-two powers in Nag Hammadi and Jewish kabbalistic texts, see Moshe Idel, Kabbalah: New Perspectives (New Haven/London: Yale University Press, 1988), 122–125. Idel, 124,335 refers to Moshe de Leon’s (?) Sefer Gan Eden’s description of Sefer ha-Bahir’s world tree as having seventy-two “roots.” Idel fails to point out the prominence of “root” in the Nag Hammadi corpus, including 1 Apoc. Jas. For a more profound treatment of Sefer ha-Bahir’s world tree, see Elliot R. Wolfson, “The Tree That Is All: Jewish-Christian Roots of a Kabbalistic Symbol in Sefer ha-Bahir,” The Journal of Jewish Thought and Philosophy 3–1 (1994): 31–76.

¹⁶ “By you,” literally, “before you.”

¹⁷ “Mind,” or “heart.” The passage echoes Gos. Thom. 28.

¹⁸ “You will no longer be James.” This seems to be inspired by Jacob’s change of name to “Israel” in Genesis 32 and 35. Both NH and CT versions stop short of divinizing James, in contrast to, e.g., the explicit promise of divinization in the Dead Sea Scrolls text 4Q Visions of Amram (4Q543) Frag. 3: “[. . .] you will be God (’Ēl), countless ones will all have been named.”

every way is inside the Existent One. Those who cannot be counted will be [counted] by you,¹⁹ and everything that cannot be measured by you,²⁰ [will be] measured.”

The Opposition of the Powers

<James, however, said: “Now what>, Rabbi, how will I attain to the Existent One, given that all of these powers and these hosts stand armed against me?”

He said to me: “These powers are not armed against you alone, but against others as well. These powers are armed against me, and also with other [powers].

Instead, they are armed against me [with] a court of law. Then to them it was given [. . .] against me [. . .] by means of them [. . .] in this place [. . .] sufferings, [28] and I will not curse them, but inside me will be a silence and a concealed mystery,²¹ yet I am fearful in the presence of their fury.”

James said: “Rabbi, if they arm themselves against you, there will nevertheless be no (valid) accusation against you. You have come with knowledge, so that you could

He answered, saying:

“Rabbi, how will I be able to attain to the Existent One, when such a number of [the] powers fight [against me]?”

[. . .], rather against me²² by means of them [. . .] curse, but there is in me [... a concealed] silence, [but] I am afraid in the presence of [their fury].”

“If they fight against you in this manner, how much more against me, Rabbi? Because you have come [in] knowledge in order to reprove their ignorance, and you have come and you will be cal[led] ‘Angel of God.’” NH’s “You will instead be what exists,” alla ntok pe pē etšoop, stops short of saying “You will instead be the Existent One.” However, CT’s version does refer to the Existent One: “one who in every way is inside the Existent One.” A comparison between the two versions suggests that the two Greek Vorlagen indeed read “you will be the Existent One,” and that both scribes independently weakened in various ways the bold identification between James and the Existent One. Because the passage echoes Gos. Thom. 28, it may also hint at Gos. Thom. 30’s theme of divinization.

¹⁹ “By you,” literally, “before you.”

²⁰ “By you,” literally, “for you.”

²¹ Cf. 1QH XIII,25–26, “the mystery you have concealed inside me . . . you have concealed the source of knowledge.”

²² “Against me,” reading uncertain.

reprove their forgetfulness. You have come with remembrance, so that you might reprove their ignorance, but I am not concerned on your account, because you descended into a thick ignorance, but nothing of it has polluted you, because you descended into a thick oblivion, and your remembrance remained with you. You wandered around in mud, and your garments remained unsoiled, and you were not buried in their filth, and they never touched you. And I was not of their kind, though I clothed myself with everything that belonged to them. Oblivion dwells inside me, yet I [remember] things that do not belong to them, and I dwell in their [ignorance]. I have found a knowledge, [and] I [was] not concerned about their sufferings [which are exterior], but I was afraid [in] their [presence], when they apprehend.

in memory in order to reprove their oblivion, [15] but I am not worried over you, because you have entered into ignorance, and you were not at all soiled by it. You have come to oblivion, and memory dwells inside you. You wandered around in the mud, and you were not soiled. They did not awake your vengeance.

I am not of this kind, but all oblivion [from]²³ you, that is what I have put on [me, and] I do not remember (it anymore). Those who belong to me are ignorant, [and] I am [not] completed [in] knowledge,²⁴ and I am not worried [over] the agonies in this place, [but] on account of their apprehending.

James' Redemption

What [29] will they do? What will I be able to say, or what kind of message will I be able to speak in order that I can escape from them?"

The Lord said: "James, I praise your insight and your fear. If you continue to be lovingly disposed towards suffering, then do not be concerned with anything else than your redemption, for "What [will you do? What] will you say, [and] by what kind of message [will you] be saved?"

"James, I praise your understanding, and fear makes you lovingly disposed towards suffering. Let nothing trouble you except your redemption. Behold! I will go and prepare this destiny on the earth as it

²³ "From," literally, "through."

²⁴ Reading uncertain.

behold, I will fulfil this destiny on the earth, as I have spoken in heaven, and I will reveal to you your redemption.”²⁵ has been prepared already in heaven, [16] and after this I will reveal to you your redemption.”

Overcoming the Archons

James said: “Rabbi, how will you hereafter appear²⁶ to us again, after you have been taken into custody, and you have fulfilled the destiny, and you have ascended to the Existent One?

The Lord said: “James, after these things I will reveal everything to you, not only for your sake, but on account of the unfaithfulness of humans, so that [faithfulness] may exist among them, because a multitude will [come to] faithfulness, [and] they will increase [in it] until [they come to knowledge], [30] and after this I will appear to reprove the archons. I will reveal to them that he cannot be apprehended. If he is apprehended, then will he apprehend them all.

“Now, however, I will go. Think on what I have said,²⁷ and let it enter inside of you.”²⁸

James said: “Lord, I will hurry, as you have spoken.”

“Rabbi, how will you hereafter appear to me, after you have been judged, and your destiny is prepared, and you have attained to Existent One?”

“James, hereafter I will appear to you in this place, not only <on your account>, [but] on account of the [unfaithfulness] of humans, that is, how [faithfulness] can arise among them. [Many, however], will turn to faithfulness and grow in it, [so that] they will come to knowledge, and for this reason I will [display] the humiliation of the archons, [and I will] reveal to them [that] he cannot be apprehended. When they apprehend him, then he has apprehended (them).

“Now, however, I will go. Think on what I have said, and let it grow inside you.”

“I will hurry, Rabbi, to do as you have spoken.”

[Leaf A] “[...] to knowledge. For this reason, I will appear in order to reprove the archons, in order to reveal to them this, namely, the one who cannot be apprehended. When he has been apprehended, then will he apprehend all.

“I am now going. Remember what has been said, and let [it] grow inside you.”

“I will hurry²⁹ [. . .].”

²⁵ “Reveal . . . redemption” would involve word punning in Syriac. This does not necessarily mean the text was composed in Syriac, but that it may have incorporated some Syriac traditions.

²⁶ “Appear,” or “reveal.”

²⁷ This is a standard sapiential exhortation; see, e.g., Prov 4:4–5.

²⁸ Cf. Prov 4:20–21.

²⁹ “Hurry,” or “endeavor.”

Jesus Departs and Returns to James

The Lord departed from him, and fulfilled what was necessary. When James had heard of his sufferings, he was very sorrowful. <He> was on the lookout for the appearance³⁰ of his coming, but he came after some days, and James was walking about on the mountain called

And Jesus went and prepared what was appropriate for him, but James heard of his sufferings, and [17] was very sorrowful, and expected his coming, and he had only this to comfort him, namely, the expectation of his coming, and it was two days, and behold! James conducted the service on

James, [however], heard of his [sufferings], and was [sorrowful],³¹ and he awaited his coming, [but] he was next to him after [two] days, [and behold! James] came to the mountain called “Golgoul”³² with [his ³⁰ “Appearance,” Coptic typos.

³¹ “Sorrowful,” or “troubled.”

³² NHC Gaugēlan, CT Galgē[la]m, P.Oxy 5533 Golgoul. With regard to NHC Gaugēlan, see Nagel, 91: “The N(ag)H(ammadi) version in the form Gaugēlan has retained the accusative (ending) of the Greek textual Vorlage: ho onomazousi Gaugēlan.” Despite the fact that P.Oxy 5533 reads to legomeno[n] golgoul, Nagel’s explanation remains convincing. This indicates either a variant reading or two different Greek recensions, neither of which is at all implausible. Another secondary feature of NHC Gaugēlan is the dropping out of the first lambda, whose presence is attested by both CT’s Galgē[la]m and P.Oxy. 5533’s Golgoul.

The CT version’s Galgēlam can be explained as a mistaken reading that has accidentally incorporated the letter mu from the immediately following word meta (to legomeno[n] golgoul meta).

To explain P.Oxy 5533’s Golgoul first requires a discussion of the identification of the mountain in question. Nagel refers the reader to Brankaer/Bethge, 205–206, which presents strong reasons for identifying the mountain as Gilgal in Joshua 4–5 (Hebrew Gilgāl; Greek Galgala; Syriac Galgālā). Although Gilgal was not a mountain, it is famous for its Hill of the Foreskins, whose story is narrated in Joshua 5, immediately after passing over the Jordan:

2 At that time the LORD said to Joshua, “Make flint knives and circumcise the people of Israel again the second time.”

3 So Joshua made flint knives, and circumcised the people of Israel at Gibeath-haaraloth [Hill of the Foreskins]. (RSV)

The immediate objection is that Gilgāl is not a mountain name. However, as Ed Noort explains: “Between [Josh] 5.3 Bounos tōn akrobustiōn, ‘the Hill of the Foreskins’, and 5.8f. [see Josh 5:9, ‘And so the name of that place is called Gilgal to this day’] there is no change of location, so, in the eyes of the LXX translator, Gilgal and the Hill of the Foreskins must be the same place.” See Ed Noort, “The Disgrace of Egypt: Joshua 5.9A and its Context,” in Anthony Hilhorst and George H. van Kooten, eds., The Wisdom of Egypt: Jewish, Early Christian, and Gnostic Essays in Honour of Gerard P. Luttikhuisen (Ancient Judaism and Early Christianity 59; Leiden / Boston: Brill, 2005), 1–19; here, 6.

Further, as Brankaer/Bethge, 205 points out: “One can assume that the name of the place [Gilgal/Galgala] has been transferred to that of the hill. That this hill is bound to the history of Israel and the Law can be of relevance for the interpretation of this passage in 1 Apoc. Jas.” (My translation from the German, here and below).

Based on Brankaer/Bethge, 205–206 we can exclude any connection between Gaugēlan / Galgē[la]m / Golgoul and Golgotha. Therefore, instead of detecting a hint at Golgotha in Golgoul, it is much more likely that in Gol- of Golgoul we have a partial assimilation to the following -goul.

Regarding “Hill of the Foreskins” in Josh 5:3, the Syriac version uses Rāmt^hā, which (as is the case in Common Aramaic) means both “hill” and “mountain.” Targum-Jonathan at Josh 5:3 uses G^hib^h t^hā, which like the Hebrew Gib^ha t^h, means only “hill,” not “mountain.” This would explain why 1 Apoc. Jas. calls Galgala a mountain rather than a hill, understanding the Hill (of Foreskins) in Joshua 5 and Galgala as identical, in common with the Septuagint/OG translator. This data would seem to hint at either a Syrian provenance, or at least the incorporation of Syriac traditions in 1 Apoc. Jas.

“Gaugela{n},” together with his disciples, who listened to him longingly, and <they> had him as a comforter, [and] said: “This is the Second [Teacher].”³³

[Then] the crowd dispersed itself, but James remained [behind alone at] prayer [by praying], in the way [31] he was accustomed, and the Lord appeared to him and he ceased praying, fell on his neck, and kissed him.

He said: “Rabbi, I have found you. I had heard of the sufferings you endured, and I was very sorrowful, because my compassion you know. I wanted, for this reason, on reflection, that I would not be able to look on this people. They must be judged for the things they have done, because what they have done trespasses everything that is appropriate.”

the [mountain] called “Galge[la]{m},” [the place] where [he stayed at another time] with his disciples, [who] eagerly listened to him, and they had him as comfort, and they said: “This is the Second Teacher.”

And behold! They dispersed themselves, and James remained behind alone and he prayed fervently, according to his custom, but during it Jesus appeared to him, and he desisted from his prayer, and began to embrace him, and said to him: “Rabbi, I had distanced myself from you. I had heard what you took onto yourself, and I was very sorrowful. You know my sympathy. For this reason I did not want to remain with you: [18] That I would not have to look on this people. They will be judged, because what they have done, it was wretched to see.”

own] disciples,³⁴ who gladly listened to him, [and] they had him for comfort. They said, “[This] is the Second Teacher.”

And behold! The people were scattered, [and James] was left [alone to] pray [. . .] to him, the Lord.³⁵ [Desisting from] the prayer, he began to embrace him.

He said: [“Rabbi], I have you! I heard what you [suffered, and] I was sorrowful [. . .].”

Jesus Encourages James

The Lord said: “James, do not worry about me, nor about this people. I am he who existed inside himself. I have never suffered in any way, nor “James, do not worry about the [people], nor about me, because from the beginning I am the Existent One inside of me alone, [because] I have not

In the forms Gaugēlan and Galgē[la]m, the phonetic element /ē/ may echo the /i/ of Hebrew Gilgāl, while the /o/ and/or /ou/ of Greek Golgoul may distantly approximate the /ə/ of Syriac Galgālā. However, /o/ and/or /ou/ could bring to mind the Hebrew cognate gilgūl, “a rolling.” Cf. also the cognate name Galgūla, known from the Bar Kokhba letters.

Brankaer/Bethge in 2007 suspected that behind the Coptic mooše was the Greek verb peripatein, “wander.” P. Oxy. 5533 uses pare[genet]o, “came to,” “came up,” “arrived at.” We can see in James’ arrival at the Hill/Mountain of Foreskins=Galgala an echo of the Israelites’ arrival led by Joshua (“Jesus” in Greek) at the Jordan and Galgala’s Hill of the Foreskins.

³³ Here James is a Paraclete-like figure who replaces Jesus as teacher. Cf. John 14:26, although it is very doubtful I Apoc. Jas. here echoes this John passage.

³⁴ James has succeeded to Jesus’ position, so that Jesus’ former disciples are now James’ disciples.

³⁵ “The Lord,” i.e., the God of Israel, not Jesus.

have I been tortured, and this people has done me no harm, but an appearance of the archons was imposed on them, and it was worth it that it [was fulfilled] through them, [but each of] the archons [. . .] who [. . .]. [He is] furious over [you, the] ‘Just [God,’ because you used to be] [32] subservient to him, wherefore you bear this name: ‘James the Just.’ You will see how you become sober, because you have seen me. You desisted from this prayer, because you are ‘a Just One of God,’ and now you have fallen on my neck, and you have kissed me.

“Truly I say to you: You have stirred up great fury and wrath against yourself, but for this cause, that something else would come to pass.”

James, however, was fainthearted as he wept, and he was very sorrowful, and both of them seated themselves on a boulder.³⁸

The Lord said to him: “James, this is why you will receive these sufferings, yet do not feel sorry for yourself, because the flesh is weak.³⁹ It will receive what is destined for it, but regarding yourself, be not be weak, nor be afraid.”

suffered [from anything], nor did I die, and this people have done nothing harmful. Instead, this was imposed on the appearance³⁶ of the archons (corrupted text), in order to prepare (corrupted text). It was then fulfilled. Be on your guard, though, because the ‘Just God’ has fallen into fury, because you were subservient to him, and for this reason you have you obtained the name ‘James the Just.’ Behold! You have already been set free. You will recognize me, and you will recognize yourself, and you yourself have desisted from the prayer that the ‘Just God’ requested.”

[19] And he embraced me, and kissed me. Amen.³⁷

“I tell you: He has stirred up his anger against you, and his fury, but this, too, must come to pass.”

James, however, was fainthearted, wept, and sorrowed much, and they both sat down on the boulder.

Jesus said to James: “James, it is appropriate for you to experience all this, but do not be sorrowful. The flesh, which is weak,⁴⁰ will receive what is inflicted on it, but you, be not fainthearted, and fear nothing.”

³⁶ “Appearance,” Coptic tupos, which can mean “type” or “appearance.”

³⁷ As Nagel points out, the CT version considers the word “amen” to be the affirming conclusion to the scene which concludes with James embracing and kissing Jesus. By contrast, the NH version, which interprets “amen” as “truly,” considers the same word as an introductory assertion to Jesus’ next saying to James.

³⁸ “Boulder,” or “crag.” Cf. the seated position during circumcision at the Hill of the Foreskins in Joshua 5:8.

³⁹ Unlike Mark 14:38 (cf. Rom 7:14–23), here “the flesh” is not contrasted with “the spirit.” Cf. the flesh-spirit contrast in Rom 8:2–7.

⁴⁰ Cf. the expressions concerning weak, sinful flesh throughout the Qumran Thanksgiving Scroll.

The Lord [fell silent, and] when James had heard this, he wiped away [his] tears which were in [his eyes], and [the grief] which was [in his heart] became much lighter.

The Lord [said] to [him: “James, behold, I will [33] reveal to you your redemption.

When James heard this, he wiped away his tears, and the sorrow in his heart became much lighter, but Jesus said to him: “Behold! Now I will reveal to you your redemption.

The Toll Collectors

When they apprehend [you], and you accept this suffering, a crowd will arm itself against you, so that <they> can apprehend you, but three of them in particular will apprehend you, those who are seated as toll collectors. They demand not only toll, but they take away souls violently as well.

When you fall into their hands, one of them who is a Watcher among them will say to you: ‘Who are you, and where are you from?’⁴¹

You will say to him: ‘I am a Son, and I am from the Father.’

He will say to you: ‘What kind of a son are you, and to which father do you belong?’

You will say to him: ‘I am from the Father who [existed] first, and a Son who [is] inside the First-Existent One.’

He [will say] to you: ‘And [from where did you come]?’

You will [say to him: ‘From what existed at first], because I [. . .].

When they apprehend you, you will find yourself (confronted) by these things. Many will stand against you on account of [20] the warrant for your arrest, but among them are three seated there in a single place; they are toll collectors. Not only do they [collect] toll for sins, but they (also) demand souls.

When you find yourself among many, then one among them, because he is [a Watcher], will ask you: ‘Of what kind are you, and where are you from?’

You will say to him: ‘I am the Son, and I am from the Father.’

And he will say to you: ‘What kind of a son, and what kind of a father?’

“You will say to [him]: ‘The Father who from [the beginning] exists, but the Son who from the beginning exists inside the Existent One.’

And he will say to you: ‘From where have you come?’

You will say to him: ‘From the Existent One who is from the beginning.’

⁴¹ With this passage, compare Gos. Thom. 50.

[34] '[...] the aliens?'

You will say to him: 'They are not completely alien, but they are from Achamoth, that is, from the female, and she made these when she brought down the race from what existed at first. They are, therefore, not aliens, but they belong to us. On the one hand, they belong to us because she who is their Lady is from what existed at first. On the other hand, they are aliens in that the First-Existent One did not unite himself with her at the time when she thought of making them.'

Again he will say to you: 'Where are you going?'

You will say to him: 'To the place from which I have come, there will I return,' but when you say this, you will be away from their activities.

When you, however, come into the hands [of the] three minions [who] apprehend [the] souls violently in that place, [...]. You will [say] to them: 'I am a vessel⁴² [more valuable] than [Achamoth, who made you.]' [35] [...] your [...], that is, [...] over her root, will you not sober up [yourself]?

And he will say: 'Why have you come?'

And you will say: 'I am come to all those who belong to me, also to those who are not.'

He will say: 'Why have you come? [21] [To] those who do not belong to you?'

Then you will say: 'They are not completely alien to me, rather they are offspring of Achamoth, who is the female, and she herself has made these. She has brought down the race that exists from the beginning. Therefore, they are [not] alien to [me]. Rather, they [belong to me]. They [belong to me] insofar [that she] was the Lady over them. They belong to the Existent One who is from the beginning. However, they have become alien, because the Existent One who is from the beginning did not unite himself with her when she had created them.'

And he will say: 'Where will you go?'

You will say: 'I go to those who belong to me, to the place from which I have come.' If [you] say that, you will be saved from all of these.

When, however, you come among the three who collect the soul, then there will be a great tumult in that place when you say to them: 'I am a vessel more valuable than Achamoth, the female who created you, [22] and when your mother is ignorant concerning her own root, then at what time will you become sober?'

⁴² "Vessel." This anticipates 1 Apoc. Jas.' seven women who are "vessels," and the name Mānāēl, "vessel/mind of God."

‘I, however, will invoke the indestructible knowledge, [which] is Sophia, who dwells inside the Father, who is the mother of Achamoth. No father was apportioned for Achamoth, also [no] male [companion]. She is instead [a female] from a female. She made you without [a male], when she dwelt alone, because she was ignorant concerning those who [. . .] her mother, because she thought that she was the only one who existed. I, however, will shout up to her mother, and they will then fall into confusion. They will accuse their root and the race of their mother. You, however, will ascend to [those] who are yours [. . .].

‘I, however, have invoked the immaculate Sophia, who exists inside the [Father], the mother of Achamoth, but her⁴³ companion [was not] in agreement [with the] female. Without a male [she has] created you by herself.

She grew ignorant of her mother,⁴⁴ and she thought that she was alone, but I have invoked her mother, and then all of them will be troubled, and they will accuse their own root, and the race of their mother. You, however, will go to your roots, the fetters that are their fetters as well.

The Transmission of the Revelation

[36] [. . .] to the [First-Existent One and the] appearance of the twelve disciples and of [the seventy]-two pairs [and (?) the] female Achamoth, which is translated ‘Sophia,’ but (I have revealed)⁴⁵ who I am, and the indestructible Sophia through whom you will be saved⁴⁶ together with all the children of the Existent One, which they themselves have recognized, and have concealed [inside] themselves.

“Behold! James, I have revealed to you what I am, and the Existent One who is from the beginning, and the [23] appearance⁴⁷ of the twelve disciples, and the seventy-two pairs, and the female Achamoth, which is translated ‘Sophia,’ and what you are, and the immaculate Sophia,⁴⁸ through whom you will be saved, and all the children of the Existent One, who have recognized themselves, and (what is) concealed inside

⁴³ “Her,” i.e., Achamoth’s.

⁴⁴ I have deleted the mistaken scribal repetition, “it is she, who is alone, who is ignorant of her mother.”

⁴⁵ Accepting Nagel’s gloss.

⁴⁶ An echo of Wis 9:18.

⁴⁷ “Appearance,” or “type.”

⁴⁸ “Immaculate Sophia.” Cf. Wis 7:24–26.

You will conceal her [inside] of you, and you will be silent, but you will reveal it to Addaios when you depart (from the body),⁵⁰ and immediately [war will be waged] against this land.⁵¹ [Weep], therefore, for him who remains in Jerusalem.

Let Addeos,⁵³ however, bear these things in his mind.⁵⁴ In the tenth year⁵⁵ Addeos will sit down, and write them down, and [when] he has written them down [. . .], and they will be given [to Manaël, because he] possesses this [holy name . . .].

them. [You will keep secret] these things I have spoken, and they will be inside you,⁴⁹ and you will remain silent about them, but when you depart (from the body), you will disclose them to Addaios, and immediately this land will wage war, and she will once again drink her cup, because she has incensed the God who dwells in Jerusalem.

Addaios,⁵² however, will bring forth these words in his mind⁵⁶ for ten years, and then he will gather the courage to sit down and write them down, and then, when he has written them down, they will be taken from him and handed over to Manaël.⁵⁷

⁴⁹ Cf. 1 QH XIII,11–12: “Because you, O my God, hid me from the sons of man, concealing your Law inside me, until the time for revealing your salvation through me.”

⁵⁰ Accepting Nagel’s gloss.

⁵¹ An allusion to the outbreak of the Jewish War in 66 CE.

⁵² A variant of “Addaios.”

⁵³ A variant of “Addaios.”

⁵⁴ As Nagel, 105 remarks, ḥi nhētf, “bear in his mind,” is more or less semantically equivalent to the NH version’s unusual idiom čpo nef. . . nhētf, which essentially means “to memorize.” The use of hēt, “mind,” is an anticipatory play off the name Mānāēl, which is based on Syriac/Armaic mānā, whose primary meanings include “vessel,” “garment,” “mind.”

⁵⁵ “The tenth year,” i.e., ten years after either the beginning (66 CE) or after the end of the First Jewish War. The author may have identified 70 CE (the year of the Temple’s destruction) or 73/74 CE as the end of the war. The “tenth year” could therefore refer to ca. 76 CE or 80–83/84 CE. About three decades would pass until the Kitos War would begin in 116 CE.

⁵⁶ As Nagel, 105 remarks, “the unusual Coptic expression čpo nef. . . nhētf” essentially means “to memorize.”

⁵⁷ The name Manaël (i.e., Mānāēl) is unattested, and is therefore most likely an ad construction. It could mean “vessel of God” (so Nagel, 105), which would anticipate the later description of the seven women as weak vessels. However, Mānāēl could alternatively mean in Syriac “garment of God,” “mind of God,” “measure of God,” any of which could relate to the themes of I Apoc. Jas. See the entry “mʾn, mʾnʾ (mān, mānā) n.m. vessel; garment” at <https://cal.huc.edu>. Mān/mānā can also mean a vessel of war, i.e., “weapon,” “armor,” which would also be congruent with the context in which the name appears in I Apoc. Jas. If “Masphēl” means “watchtower of God,” as I argue in the next footnote, then the meaning “weapon of God” would be fitting, at least in part, for the name Mānāēl. However, both Mānāēl and Masphēl could refer to states of awareness when we understand mānā as “mind” and Masphēl as “watchtower,” the latter implying active awareness, watching. I thank Martin Schwartz for this suggestion, who also refers to Proverbs 15:3’s šōpʰōl, “ṣ-p-y, šāphā(h), with regard to God’s ‘looking out,’ ‘scoping,’ ‘being aware,’ ‘scrutinizing.’”

The first part of the name Mānāēl would be cognate with the name Mānī, i.e., mānā + ḥayyē, at least as understood by Kurt Rudolph: “Greek Manichaïos, Aramaic mani haija, ‘vessel/spirit of life.’” Kurt Rudolph, “Mani, Manichaeans,” in Hubert Canik, Helmuth Schneider; Christine F. Salazar, eds., Brill’s New Pauly: Encyclopaedia of the Ancient World. Antiquity Volume 8 LYD–MINE (Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2006), 233–236;

This is a holy name, equivalent [24] to Masphe⁵⁸ This one here 234. Similarly, Hans Heinrich Schaeder, Urform und Fortbildungen des manichäischen Systems (Leipzig: B. G. Teubner, 1927), 88 interprets Mānī's full name as "Mani the Living." For a fuller discussion of the etymology of Mānī's name, see Werner Sundermann, "MANI," Encyclopædia Iranica, online edition, 2009, available at <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/mani-founder-manicheism> (accessed on 18 May 2025). I thank Martin Schwartz (University of California-Berkeley) for pointing out the relevance of the name Mānī for this discussion. (Private communication, 18 May 2025).

As Sundermann writes, hesitation is in order regarding Schraeder's (and Rudolph's) proposed etymology for Mānī's full name. Martin Schwartz points out in his private communication, "the heθ as in hayya, 'life,' was rendered by zero in the LXX," and cites the Mandaic proper name Baraiēs, "Son of Life." As Schwartz remarks: "Sundermann, who refers to the data of the Septuagint, ignores the fact that still at that time, Hebrew, like Arabic, had, as it were, xeθ and heθ, gayin and ayin." Schwartz also notes that both h* and x* merge as x in Neo-Aramaic, and adds: "Maybe already at the time of the Greek form Μανιχαῖος there were already two dialectal(?) pronunciations of heθ, as seems to be the case in early Ashkenaz." Cf. Alexander Beider, "Bne Hes and Bne Kes," in Geoffrey Khan, ed., Encyclopedia of Hebrew Language and Linguistics (Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2013), 373–375. The crucial issue is, as Beider, 374 interjects: "They could either have been inherited from a common ancestor for the Hebrew of these two Jewish groups, or result from similar innovations."

Rudolph's "spirit" reflects the German Geist, which means both "mind" and "spirit," and he is referring to mānā as "mind." OG Isa 40:13 renders Hebrew rūah, "spirit," with nous, "mind," in the phrase "mind of the LORD." Mānāēl could then possibly mean "the Spirit of God." (Cf. Isa 11:2's phrase "the Spirit of the LORD," which in the Greek and Syriac versions reads as "the Spirit of God," pneuma tou theou; rūhā dī- 'ālāhā). The reworking of Isa 40:13 in Wis 9:13–17 retains "spirit" in the form to hagian sou pneuma apo hupsistōn, "your holy Spirit from on high." (Targum Jonathan similarly expands Isa 40:13's "spirit" to "holy Spirit." "Holy Spirit" is also used in the reworking of Isa 11:2 in Psalms of Solomon 17, Greek vv. 37–40, Syriac vv. 42–44). Cf. the reworking of Isa 40:13 in Syriac 4 Ezra 4:11: "how can your mind (m'nk) grasp the way of the Most High?"

The polyvalence of Aramaic/Syriac mānā ranging from "vessel," "weapon," and "mind-spirit," links together the 1 Apoc. Jas. Mānāēl passage and the immediately following section on the seven women disciples as "vessels" who are identified as Isaiah 11's seven "spirits." This is evidence for the incorporation of Syriac traditions in 1 Apoc. Jas.

In conclusion, it is intriguing that Mānāēl is linked to the trope of receiving a secret book around the time of the Kitos War, 116–118 CE. This is approximately the time Elchasai appeared with his famous book. On Elchasai, see J. P. Asmussen, "ALCHASAI," Encyclopædia Iranica, I/8, 824–825; <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/alchasai-a-sectarian-in-the-early-christian-church-1st-2nd-centuries-a>; accessed on 25 May 2025. See further Gerard P. Luttikhuisen, The Revelation of Elchasai: Investigations into the Evidence for a Mesopotamian Jewish Apocalypse of the Second Century and Its Reception by Judaeo-Christian Propagandists (Texts and Studies in Ancient Judaism 8; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr [Paul Siebeck], 1985); idem, "The Book of Elchasai: a Jewish Apocalypse," Aula Orientalis 5 (1987): 101–106; idem, "Elchasaites and their Book," in Antti Marjanen & Petri Luomanen, eds., A Companion to Second-Century Christian "Heretics" (Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2005), 335–364. For a fundamentally different (and less plausible, in my opinion) understanding of the Book of Elchasai than that of Luttikhuisen, see F. Stanley Jones, "The Book of Elchasai in Its Relevance for Manichaean Institutions with a Supplement: The Book of Elchasai Reconstructed and Translated," ARAM 16 (2004): 179–215.

⁵⁸ The name Masphe^l is unattested, and is therefore most likely an ad hoc construction. I seriously doubt there is any relevance in the claim by Nagel, 105: "The name could be derived from the Aramaic passive participle מִשְׁפִּיל mašpīl, 'lowered,' 'humble.'" A straightforward origin would instead be the Biblical Hebrew Mispeh (Syriac/Aramaic Misp^hyā), "watchtower"; OG Esdras B 13:19 (=Nehemiah 3:7) masphe, more commonly massēpha, as in Judges 11:11, etc. Masphe^l therefore would mean "the watchtower of God," which could fit both a military and a cognitive context. The idea of joining mispeh with God could derive partly from Gen 31:48–49: "Therefore was the name of it called Galeed; and Mizpah, for he said: 'The LORD watch (yišep^h) between me and you.'" The LXX here reads ho theos rather than ho kyrios, the latter of which would correspond to "the LORD," while theos would render Hebrew 'ēl. Thus, concealed behind the -ēl of Mānāēl and Masphe^l would be the true holy name, the Tetragrammaton, YHWH, the LORD.

[37] [. . .] his name will be called ‘Levi.’

Then he will [not] bring forth a [single] word of [what I] had said previously.

[He will take] a woman,⁶³ one from Jerusalem, of <his>⁶⁴ [tribe, and] together with her will beget [two] sons. They will inherit these things, [and] the understanding⁶⁵ of the [older one] will become arrogant,⁶⁶ and [these] will be will preserve this book for an inheritance to his children.⁵⁹

From him, however, will come a holy offspring,⁶⁰ which is worthy to inherit these (things) I have spoken, but when his little son will become [big, and] he [recognizes] the Living One,⁶¹ he will [receive] a name, ‘Levi.’

Then the land will wage war once again,⁶² but Levi himself will be hidden as a little child, and no word that I have spoken will pass over his lips, but he will take a woman, one from Jerusalem, of his tribe, and he will produce two sons with her, and the pair of brothers will inherit all of this. The mind⁶⁷ of the older one will close itself, and they will be taken from his mind.⁶⁸

[Leaf G] [. . .] because a holy spirit [will come] from him, and he will be judged worthy to inherit these previously mentioned things.

When his younger son inherits them [. . .] Levi, war will then be waged against this land, [but] Levi will hide them discreetly [. . .].

⁵⁹ Cf. 1 En 92:1.

⁶⁰ Cf. Jub 25:3; 1 En 39:1.

⁶¹ “The Living One,” p.et onh, is a divine title synonymous with p.et šoop, “the Existent One,” “He Who Is,” derived from Coptic Exodus 3:14, de anok pe p.et šoop, “I, however, am (the) being/existent one” (see https://data.copticscriptorium.org/texts/old-testament/02_exodus_3/analytic). The title “the Living One” is intriguing in light of the previously discussed etymology of Mānī’s full name, the form of which could mean “the living vessel,” “vessel of life,” or perhaps “vessel of the Living One,” although this etymology is uncertain. The chronology of the war narrative in 1 Apoc. Jas. excludes an allusion to the third-century Mānī. We may, however, have here traditions from a community that belonged to the background or trajectory of Mānī’s “Jewish-Christian” ancestors, namely, the Elchasaites. For the theory that close similarities shared between Mandaean and Manichaean sources might be explained by an earlier common source, namely, the Elchasaites, see Kevin T. van Bladel, From Sasanian Mandeans to Sābians of the Marshes (Leiden Studies in Islam and Society 6; Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2017), 86–88. If Mānī’s full name indeed derives from mānā + hayyē, then the Mandaean divine title mānā + hiia may be of Elchasaite origin, and Mānī’s full name could then reflect a divine name used in common by the Elchasaites and Mandaeans.

⁶² An allusion to the Kitos War, 116–118 CE.

⁶³ “He will take a woman,” i.e., as a wife.

⁶⁴ “<His>,” corrected from the codex reading “her.”

⁶⁵ “Understanding,” dianoia. This is soon followed by a mention of nous. This seems to hint at two of the seven spirits later mentioned in the text, i.e., the spirit of dianoia and the spirit of nous.

⁶⁶ Although “arrogant” agrees with the traditional Rabbinic portrayal of Bar Kokhba (e.g., Jerusalem Talmud Ta’anit 4.5.24b), it would appear instead that Levi’s younger son resembles Bar Kokhba, given that this younger son “will increase and occupy several provinces,” like Bar Kokhba. Because this figure in 1 Apoc. Jas. is associated with the name Levi does not necessarily imply he was of the tribe of Levi. In any case, one must bear in mind that we are dealing with a secondary literary adaptation of an earlier source.

⁶⁷ “Mind,” p^hēt. This links the text back to the earlier mention of Mānāēl, whose element mānā- is Syriac/Aramaic for “mind.”

⁶⁸ “Mind,” hēt. This links the text back to the earlier mention of Mānāēl, whose element mānā- is Syriac/Aramaic for “mind.”

taken from him, from out of his mind.⁶⁹

However, the younger will grow in them, and this will be apportioned to him, concealed inside him until [he] comes to the age of seven[teen] years, [and the land will wage] war [. . .].

[38] [. . . a] large number [of provinces . . . while a number] will be saved through [him]. His companions will eagerly emulate⁷² him [. . .], he⁷³ will be proclaimed [by] them, and [they will proclaim] this message. [Then] will it become a seed⁷⁴ of [salvation].”⁷⁵

The younger one, however, will increase in them, and will keep them concealed until in the course of life he reaches seventeen years,⁷⁰ [25] and then the land will wage war.⁷¹

However, because he will not be there, he will be guarded in agreement with Providence, and he will increase and occupy several provinces.⁷⁶ Many will be saved through him, and he will make this message become a teaching from⁷⁷ many provinces. He will be severely persecuted by the [people themselves], and he will be scorned by them, and they will scorn this message, but this will come to pass by the archons apprehending.”⁷⁸

[. . .] his mind.

The younger one, however, will increase in them, and keep them concealed [until he attains to (?)] seventeen years of age, and then war will then be waged against this land while he is not (present?), but [by Providence] he will be protected [. . .],” [Leaf H] and [this message will be] scorned [b]y the dece[it of the archon[s]].”⁷⁹

⁶⁹ “Mind,” nous. This links the text back to the earlier mention of Mānāēl, whose element mānā- is Syriac/Aramaic for “mind.”

⁷⁰ “Seventeen years,” i.e., from the outbreak of the Kitos War in 116 CE until the beginning of the Bar Kokhba Revolt in 132 CE.

⁷¹ An allusion to the Bar Kokhba Revolt, 132–136 CE.

⁷² The NH version understands the verb pōt positively as “follow,” “emulate,” which is clear from the subsequent verb “proclaim,” while the CT version understands pōt negatively as “persecute,” which is clear from the subsequent verb “scorn.”

⁷³ “He,” or “it.”

⁷⁴ “Seed of salvation.” Cf. Isa 45:8, where salvation is brought forth like a plant by the earth.

⁷⁵ The terms “salvation” and “redemption” could have political overtones, as on the Bar Kokhba coinage. The NH version of I Apoc. Jas. seems to preserve an earlier form of the allusion to the Bar Kokhba Revolt, before Bar Kokhba fell in battle and became scorned, as in later Rabbinic tradition.

⁷⁶ As surprising as it may seem, the text appears to hint that Bar Kokhba was the younger of the two sons of Levi. The text may therefore serve as evidence for “Jewish-Christian” approval of Bar Kokhba and his revolt. On such a possibility, see Dennis D. Buchholz, Your Eyes Will Be Opened: A Study of the Greek (Ethiopic) Apocalypse of Peter (Dissertation Series 97; Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1988), 408–412.

⁷⁷ “From,” or “for.”

⁷⁸ This would seem to hint at Bar Kokhba’s defeat. The Coptic could be understood either as the archons apprehending or being apprehended, but the Greek text makes the latter interpretation unlikely.

⁷⁹ The Greek reads [kat]a henedr[an tōn archont]ō[n]; see Landau, Smith, Henry, 12. We could harmonize the Coptic and Greek by saying that the archons apprehend/seize by means of deceit or deception.

The Seven Women Disciples

James said: “[I] am pleased [with all of these things], and they are [well with what is inside] my soul.⁸⁰ Yet these [other things] will I ask of you: Who are the [seven] women who [have become] your disciples?⁸¹ And behold! All women praise you. I myself marvel at how [power]less vessels have become strong by means of a [perception] dwelling inside them.”⁸²

The Lord [said]: “You do well [to marvel . . .]. [. . .].

“Rabbi, I am convinced of all of these (things), and they are well with what is inside my soul. Additionally, I wanted ask you: Who are the seven women who have become your disciples, and whom all the generations bless?⁸³ I myself marvel that they dwell inside fragile vessels, and they have found powers and perceptions.”

“James, you do well to marvel, but the Son of Man⁸⁴ has come and has revealed [26] what is concealed on account of the Sons of Light,⁸⁵ so that they might dwell in what is revealed while they possess what is concealed.”⁸⁶

“Rabbi, [. . .] and [. . .].”

“[. . . the Sons] of Light, [so that they can dwell in what is] manifest, [even should they] possess these matters [(that are) concealed].⁸⁷

⁸⁰ Not that they are pleasant or pleasing topics, but that James understands the statements.

⁸¹ Brankaer/Bethge, 239 suggests that the seven women-spirits are to be coordinated with the previously mentioned Sophia.

⁸² This is a reworking of Gos. Thom. 29.

⁸³ Cf. Luke 1:48: “For behold, henceforth all generations will call me blessed.” CT seems to preserve more of the original text, while NH’s “All women praise you” seems secondary. However, NH’s introductory “And behold!” may be an original element, although it might have been added secondarily from Luke 1:48.

⁸⁴ “The Son of Man.” This is the sole occurrence of this title in 1 Apoc. Jas. Here we detect an echo of the Son of Man who throughout the Parables of Enoch reveals hidden secrets and concealed knowledge.

⁸⁵ “The Sons of Light.” This phrase occurs earlier in the NH version on page 25, and in the CT version on page 12. The usage of this phrase in 1 Apoc. Jas. does not resemble its use in Luke 16:8 and John 12:36 (see also 1 Thes 5:5 and Eph 5:8) as much as it does in the Qumran literature, where it appears in the context of the apocalyptic war against Rome. I refer to the War Scroll, its full title being War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness. The War Scroll Col. 1 identifies the Sons of Light first with “the sons of Levi.” In 1QS, The Rule of the Community, Col. 3,25 “the Sons of Light” are mentioned together with “the spirits of light.” Cf. 1 QS Col. I,8 –9, “all revealed things . . . the Sons of Light.” Compare also the proximity of “Sons of Light” and “spirits” here in 1 Apoc. Jas. Further, 1QS Col. III,13, “the Sons of Light . . . the sons of man.” Despite these observations, there is no direct relation between the Dead Sea Scrolls and 1 Apoc. Jas.

⁸⁶ The Sons of Light possess by revelation the divine mysteries, which calls to mind, mutatis mutandis, a common Dead Sea Scrolls trope in both the War Scroll and in 1QS. Here in 1 Apoc. Jas., the concealed-revealed mysteries appear to refer to the teaching concerning the seven women-spirits.

⁸⁷ Revelation does not cancel or end the concealed nature of what has been revealed. Concealment and revelation are two manifestations of a single entity.

	The seven women are seven spirits ⁸⁸ which were established in the Scripture:	[The seven] women [are] the seven spirits
[39] [. . .] a spirit of [wisdom, a spirit] of reflection, ⁸⁹	A spirit of wisdom and of intelligence, ⁹⁰	[. . .] a spirit [. . .] of thought ⁹¹
[a spirit] of counsel ⁹²	a spirit of counsel ⁹⁴
and of [power],	[and] of power,
a spirit [of mind], ⁹³	a spirit [of] mind
a spirit of knowledge, ⁹⁵	and [knowledge], ⁹⁷
[a spirit] of fear. ⁹⁶	a spirit of fear.	[. . .] spirit of fear.”
[At that time], when we had passed over [the region of this] archon, who [is named] Adonaios, [I went in] towards him, and [he was] ignorant, [because when] I departed from him, [when he] thought that I am [a] son of his, he was gracious [to me], as though I were his son, and then, before <I> appeared in this place,	When <I> wandered through the land of the great archon who is named Addon, I entered into his presence, and he was ignorant, and when I departed from him, he thought of [me] as his son, and he showed me favor as his own son, and before I came to appear in these places, these ⁹⁸ were there among this people, the place

⁸⁸ In ancient Semitic languages, words for “spirit” are in general grammatically feminine. This facilitates linking women with the term “spirit.”

⁸⁹ “Reflection,” eumeue. The terms for the second spirit in all three versions more closely approximate the Syriac version’s sukkālā, “intelligence,” “reasoning,” than they do the Hebrew (b^hīnāh), Greek (sunesis), or Coptic (mntmrhēt) terms, all of which mean “understanding.” However, cf. Jerome’s translation of b^hīnāh in Isa 11:2 as intellectus.

⁹⁰ “Intelligence,” mnt.sabe. I would prefer to render mnt.sabe as “wisdom,” but “the spirit of wisdom and of wisdom” would be odd in English.

⁹¹ “Thought,” [dī]anoias. OG Isa 11:2 has in this position of the list of spirits sunesis, “understanding,” “intelligence.” The Vorlage of P. Oxy. 5533 does not seem to be necessarily dependent on OG Isa 11:2. In the position of P. Oxy. 5533’s dianoias, NH has eumeue, “reflection,” and CT has mnt.sabe, “wisdom / intelligence.”

⁹² “Counsel,” šočne.

⁹³ “Thought,” or “mind,” nous, which has no parallel in Isa 11:2, at least not in this position. The NH and CT versions both add nous in the sixth position. This is in order to have a total of seven spirits, in contrast to a total of six spirits in Isa 11:2, which has seven spirits only if one counts “the Spirit of the LORD” as the first spirit. Although nous has no parallel in the Hebrew text or Greek and Coptic versions of Isa 11:2, it is paralleled in the Syriac version of Isa 11:2, but in the third position, namely, tar īta, “thought,” “plan,” “mind,” which overlaps semantically with both Greek boulē (the third spirit in OG), “counsel,” and nous, “mind.” However, most importantly, Greek nous would reflect Syriac mānā, “mind,” which ties the text back to the passage on the name Mānāēl, “Mind of God.”

⁹⁴ “Counsel,” šočne.

⁹⁵ “Knowledge,” gnōsis.

⁹⁶ All three versions of I Apoc. Jas. have hote, “fear,” as the seventh spirit. This does not agree with OG Isa 11:2’s eusebeia, “piety” (which is the meaning of the reading in Coptic Isa 11:2 as well, mntmrnnoute), but with the Hebrew text and the Syriac version (and Targum Jonathan), but also with the reworking of Isa 11:2 in the Greek Psalms of Solomon 17:40 (Syriac v. 44).

⁹⁷ “Knowledge,” sooune.

⁹⁸ “These,” i.e., the seven spirits.

they were brought among⁹⁹
[this] people, because in [this place] there were no prophets
[. . .].”

[40] [. . .] will fulfil.

James [said]: “Rabbi, [you] have [convinced] my heart [of] this. The [seven who were appointed] together, which ones among them are [more honored than the others]?”

The Lord said: “[James], I praise you [on account of your discernment . . .], word [. . .], because [you have] thrown away from [yourself the] cup, that is, the bitterness,¹⁰¹

[because] none of the [archons] will array themselves against you, [because you] have [begun] to recognize [those who are yours]. From the beginning to the end throw away from yourself all lawlessness,¹⁰⁴ and where no prophet¹⁰⁰ has spoken without the seven spirits, and these are the seven spirits who have announced me through the mouths of humans, [27] as they were able to speak, because I (myself) have not spoken with complete power, but then I came [myself] and have fulfilled (it), although

I have not yet fulfilled it (completely).”

“You have again convinced me of all of this. Now, Rabbi, because they have received the seven, and left them together, are there with you some who are more honored than others?”

“I praise you even more, O
James, because you ask astutely, and you will not utter a single idle word.¹⁰² [You] are truthfully worthy of your own root, and you have thrown away from yourself the cup of drunkenness.¹⁰³

No archon will be able to rise up against you, because you have begun to recognize those who belong to you. Throw far away from yourself all ignorance, until the end, and watch that they do not become envious of you, because you

⁹⁹ “Among,” or “into,” “within,” given that the spirit of prophecy is traditionally said to dwell upon or within a prophet.

¹⁰⁰ “No prophet.” This likely in part echoes Gos. Thom. 31, given that 1 Apoc. Jas. knows Gos. Thom. 28, 29, and 30.

¹⁰¹ The phrase “the cup of bitterness” occurs earlier in the NH version on page 25, and in CT on page 11. Regarding NH page 40’s cup of bitterness, the CT 27 parallel reads “cup of drunkenness.” The latter reading seems to have been inspired by the link between bitterness and drunkenness in Lam 3:15, which reads in the Syriac version as, “He has filled me with bitterness (mrārā); and he has made me drunk (wərawwāyny) with wormwood.”

¹⁰² Cf. Matt 12:36.

¹⁰³ An allusion to Gos. Thom. 28; 1 Apoc. Jas. also reworks Gos. Thom. 29 and 30.

¹⁰⁴ “Lawlessness.” CT reads “ignorance.” Both are to be correlated with the previously mentioned cup of bitterness-drunkenness. NH correlates bitterness with lawlessness, while CT correlates drunkenness with ignorance. At an earlier stage of transmission, avoiding “lawlessness” would have referred to keeping the Torah. In its current form, “lawlessness” is likely meant as the opposite of justice, as in the Gospel of Truth 33,23-31; see Brankaer/Bethge, 241.

take care, so that they do not become envious of you when you speak these [lofty] words. Be in agreement¹⁰⁶ with this [other matter]: Salome,¹⁰⁷ and Mariam,¹⁰⁸ [and Ars]inoe¹⁰⁹ [. . .].¹¹⁰

[41] [. . . offerings of first-fruits . . ., because] the priest [of the Exalted One] accepts [first-fruits,¹¹³ and] these he have accepted these words, the lofty-minded knowledge.¹⁰⁵

Be convinced as well of this other matter, that is, Salome, and Marihamme, and Arsinoe,¹¹¹ whom I will [28] bring together with you, because they are worthy of the Existent One, because they have grown sober and have been freed from the blindness in their hearts,¹¹² and have recognized what I am.

This (came to pass) according to the Providence of the Father, because he has sent me as a priest, and in every place they will be counted among these: the offering of the first-fruits and the firstborn.¹¹⁴ He receives the offering of the first-fruits and dismembers the sacrifices and ¹⁰⁵ “Lofty-minded knowledge,” p.sooune et.čise n.hēt, is clearly a play off the subsequent name Arsinoe, from Greek arsis + noos, “raising,” “lifting,” + “mind,” that is, in effect, Lofty-Mind.

¹⁰⁶ “Be in agreement.” A semantic play off the subsequent name Salome, from Hebrew for “peace.” In Syriac the verb šlm can mean “to make/be at peace” as well as “to agree.”

¹⁰⁷ The name Salome is cognate with Syriac pl. šlamyn, “offering,” which is in fact the next topic in I Apoc. Jas.

¹⁰⁸ Mariam, from Hebrew for “bitter,” playing off the earlier-mentioned “bitterness.”

¹⁰⁹ Although caution is in order because of the respective lacunae, it appears that in both the NH and CT versions the names Salome and Mariam/Marihamme are intentionally set off on a line of their own, while the next line has an intentional long blank space between the conjunction “and” and the name “Arsinoe.” Since this oddity appears to be present in both codices, there is likely an intentional motivation behind it, probably of a numerical nature. This may have something to do with the wording of Gos. Thom. 30, Coptic “Where there are three . . . Where there is two or one,” Greek “Where there are three . . . Where there is one alone.” See April D. DeConick, The Original Gospel of Thomas in Translation: With a Commentary and New English Translation of the Complete Gospel (Early Christianity in Context 287; London/New York: T & T Clark, 2006), 135–136. Similarly, on NH page 42 and CT page 29 the names Sapphira and Susanna have their own line, with Johanna alone on the next line (NH page 42 mn Iōanna; CT page 29 Iōanna with preceding mn at the end of the line above). One must be cautious again, though, given that the limitations of the available physical space of each line must be taken into account.

¹¹⁰ On the different opinions about whether or not a fourth name could have been lost here in the NH lacuna, see Brankaer/Bethge, 243–244. Against a fourth name is not only the parallel passage in CT, but the deciding factor is that both versions have James later in the same passage refer to “these three” (NH page 41; CT page 28).

¹¹¹ The name Arsinoe is attested in Manichaean literature (see Brankaer/Bethge, 244). This, however, does not require that I Apoc. Jas. learned this name from Manichaean sources. A more likely scenario is that both the Manichaean sources and I Apoc. Jas. learned this name from an older common source.

¹¹² An echo of Gos. Thom. 28.

¹¹³ The first-fruits were offered during the Feast of Shavuot.

¹¹⁴ “Firstborn,” or “first-fruits.”

brings [as] burnt offerings and [sacrificial offerings]. I, however, am not of this kind,¹¹⁵ but offerings of first-fruits from the [Indestructible One I] bear up¹¹⁶ to Heaven¹¹⁷ [and outspread] them, so that the power of [the truth] can appear, because what is destructible¹¹⁹ has ascended¹²⁰ to what is indestructible, and [the] activity of the female has attained to the activity of the male.”¹²¹

James said: “Rabbi, now these three,¹²² were they thrown into their [destruction], because they have been abused, and [they have] also [been] persecuted [. . .].

sacrificial offerings, but I am not of this kind. Instead, I receive the offerings of the first-fruits on the part of those who are defiled,¹¹⁸ and I dispatch them, so that the true power will be revealed, because what is defiled has been separated from what is undefiled, and the activity of the <female> has attained to the male.

“Rabbi, have <not> these three now perished? Have they not suffered? If they truly had been worthy, and had been persecuted by [. . .], even¹²³ they had been taught (things) that do not exist.”

“James, it is not at all necessary that someone [29] should perish.¹²⁴ These three¹²⁵ have been set apart into¹²⁶ a

¹¹⁵ This seems to be an Ebionite-like polemic against sacrifices. Exactly what kind of symbolic sacrifice Jesus alludes to here becomes clear from NH page 42’s “the first-fruits of knowledge.”

¹¹⁶ “Bear up,” or “lift/raise up,” congruent with Greek arsis, “raising,” the first element of the name Arsinoe.

¹¹⁷ Reading uncertain.

¹¹⁸ “Defiled,” or “stained.”

¹¹⁹ “What is destructible,” i.e., physical sacrifices.

¹²⁰ The noun “ascend” belongs to the biblical vocabulary of sacrificial offerings.

¹²¹ “The female has attained to . . . the male,” i.e., weakness has attained to strength. This passage hints, on one level at least, at the trope of the attainment of spiritual androgyny, as in Gos. Thom. 22, 114, and the Gospel of Mary’s concluding scene.

¹²² “These three,” grammatically feminine.

¹²³ “Even,” literally, “and.”

¹²⁴ Cf. Matt 18:14.

¹²⁵ “These three . . . a place.” An echo of Gos. Thom. 30’s “place” where “three gods” dwell. This echo is clear, given the reworking of Gos. Thom. 29 on NH page 38 and on CT page 25.

¹²⁶ “Into,” or “to.” See Nagel, 115, who renders eu.ma as “zu einem Ort,” i.e., “to a place.” To be rejected is the interpretation “These three women have left the state of faith, for they have received the hidden knowledge,” pace Antti Marjanen, “The Seven Women Disciples in the Two Versions of the First Apocalypse of James,” in April DeConick, ed., The Codex Judas papers: proceedings of the International Congress on the Tchacos Codex held at Rice University, Houston, Texas, March 13–16, 2008 (Nag Hammadi and Manichaean Studies 71; Leiden/Boston: Brill, 2009), 535–546; here 543. Marjanen in this case misunderstands the noun pistis as “faith,” in the sense of an intellectual ascent to the religious dogmas of the mainstream churches in contrast to the “gnostic” community of I Apoc. Jas. The fact is that here pistis derives from Isa 11:5 (from the same Isaiah 11 passage on the seven spirits), which the Syriac and Targum render with haymānūtā, whose primary meaning is “faithfulness,” “reliability,” as is the case with the Hebrew Vorlage’s ʾēmūnāh, which RSV correctly renders as place¹²⁷ of faithfulness, because [they have obtained] the concealed knowledge.¹²⁸

These [are] the names [of] the three: Sapphira,¹³¹ and Susanna,¹³² and Joanna.¹³³

[42] [. . . Sappira¹²⁹ and Susa]nna [and Johanna].¹³⁰

“faithfulness.” 1 Apoc. Jas. evidently relies on a Semitic text of Isa 11:5, given that OG renders ’ēmūnāh with alētheia, “truth.”

¹²⁷ “Place” and “dwelling-place” are key terms in the Parables of Enoch. Cf. especially 1 En 39:6: “And in that place my eyes saw the Elect One of righteousness and of faithfulness.” (R. H. Charles translation modified). “That place” refers to 1 En 39:4’s “the dwelling-places of the holy, and the resting-places of the righteous.” The “place of faithfulness” that the three martyrs Sapphira, Susanna, and Joanna have received is their post-mortem dwelling-place where divine secrets and wisdom are revealed to them, as described throughout the Parables of Enoch (see especially 1 En 46:3; 48:1). See also the eschatological promise to the persecuted dead, “the good who belong to the generation of light,” in 1 Enoch 108:14, “for to the faithful He will give faithfulness in the habitation of upright paths.”

¹²⁸ This reverses the sequence of the stages of acquisition of faithfulness and knowledge in NHC 29, “because a multitude will [come to] faithfulness, [and] they will increase [in it] until [they come to knowledge],” and in CT 16, “[Many, however], will turn to faithfulness and grow in it, [so that] they will come to knowledge.”

¹²⁹ Sapphira, etymologically means “sapphire,” i.e., lapis lazuli. Given that the text immediately continues with an echo of the beginning of the Parables of Enoch (1 Enoch 37, which develops 1 Enoch 1’s opening verses), it is worth pointing out that the conclusion to the Enochic Parables, 1 Enoch 71, a vision of God’s throne room, mentions the “hyacinth,” Ethiopic yākent, which is used to render “sapphire” (i.e., lapis lazuli) in Ezek 28:13 (Hebrew sappir; Greek sapphiron). See George W. E. Nickelsburg and James C. VanderKam, A Commentary on the Book of Enoch Chapters 37–82 (Hermeneia; Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2012), 324. The sapphire/lapis lazuli is a traditional element of the vision of God’s throne beginning with Ezek 1:26 and 10:1 (cf. Exod 24:10, where Targums Pseudo-Jonathan and Onqelos explicitly mention the divine throne). See also 1 En 18:8, which likens the throne of God to sapphire (i.e., lapis lazuli).

¹³⁰ Given 1 Apoc. Jas.’ interest in name etymologies, here the significance of “Johanna” likely goes beyond the basic fact that a “Johanna” was a known disciple of Jesus in tradition (Luke 8:1–3 and 24:10). One must ask why 1 Apoc. Jas. mentions this particular name rather than another one known from the gospels, e.g., Martha. It is well known that early Christian tradition viewed Hannah (cognate to “Johanna”) as a prototype of Jesus’ mother, Mary. Already Luke’s Magnificat, sung by Mary (Luke 1:46–55) reworks the Song of Hannah (1 Sam 2:1–10), which celebrates the birth of Samuel. 1 Apoc. Jas. NH page 38/CT page 25 applies an echo of Luke 1:48, a verse from the Magnificat, to the seven women disciples of Jesus. Samuel is prominently linked not only to the Ark of the Covenant, but also to both place names Gilgal and Mizpah (1 Sam 7:16, and throughout 1 Samuel), which are relevant for 1 Apoc. Jas.’ place name Gaugēlan (Galgē[la]m/Golgoul) and proper name Masphēl. The Targum Jonathan at 1 Sam 2:1 depicts Hannah as possessing a prophetic spirit or spirit of prophecy.

¹³¹ The name Sapphira means “sapphire,” i.e., lapis lazuli. Cf. Acts 5:1–10, the story of Ananias and Sapphira. Incidentally, the name Ananias is cognate with the name Joanna, the latter meaning “Yah is gracious.”

¹³² “Susanna,” from Hebrew for “lily,” “rose.” Biblical lilies were red or pink. As sapphires are a feature of the divine throne, so depictions of lilies accompanied the figures of cherubim in the temple of Solomon (1 King 6:32,35), and lilies ornamented the Holy of Holies which contained the Ark of the Covenant (1 King 6:18–19). Cherubim were placed atop the Ark of the Covenant, representing the divine throne; see also Ezekiel 10’s cherubim linked to the divine chariot-throne. Lily figures also adorned the temple menorah consisting of seven lamps. Perhaps 1 Apoc. Jas. implicitly links Isaiah 11:2’s seven spirits with the seven lamps of the menorah.

¹³³ 1 Apoc. Jas. refers to seven women-spirits, but mentions only six names, i.e., Salome, Mariam, Arsinoe, Sapphira, Susanna, and Johanna. This is probably an intentional hint at the fact that Isa 11:2 actually names only six spirits, if one does not count “the Spirit of the LORD.” Psalms of Solomon 17:37–40 (Syriac 42–44) in its reworking of Isa 11:2 omits the spirit of knowledge, substituting it with “righteousness,” derived from Isa 11:5. Psalms of Solomon 18:7 shortens the spirits to four, in the sequence fear (of God), wisdom, righteousness, strength. The correlation between knowledge and righteousness may be explained as follows. After Isaiah 11:2’s “the Spirit of the LORD,” this phrase occurs next in Isaiah 40:13. The next verse uses justice/righteousness in poetic parallelism with “knowledge.” Cf. Isa 53:11, “by his knowledge shall the righteous one. . . .” (Isa 33:6’s “wisdom and knowledge; the fear of the LORD” also echoes Isa 11:2). 1Q28 (Rule of the Blessings) Col. V,25 shortens the list of Isa 11:2’s spirits to four, namely, counsel, fortitude, knowledge, fear of God.

Behold! [I] have [revealed] every matter [to you, and I have] in no respect [omitted (anything) . . .],¹³⁴ because you have obtained [the first-fruits¹³⁷ offering] of knowledge, and now [you know] which [place]¹³⁸ it is [to which you will] go. [. . . , and] you will [also find rest].¹³⁹

I, however, will depart, and I will appear [to them], because they have been faithful to you, so that [they] will be in agreement¹⁴⁰ for their [blessing] and salvation,¹⁴¹ and so that this

Behold! I have revealed to you all things, and you are not alien to these words, because you have obtained the summit¹³⁵ of knowledge¹³⁶ [concerning your root] from those that belong to you. Furthermore, go, and you [will] also [find] rest.

I, [however, I will] go to these and appear to them, because [. . .].”

¹³⁴ This is an echo of 1 En 37:3: “Hear, you men of old time, and see (wārā’ayū), you that come after, the words of the Holy One which I will speak before the Lord of Spirits. It were better to declare (them only) to the men of old time, but even from those that come after we will not withhold the beginning of wisdom.” (R. H. Charles translation modified).

¹³⁵ Here archē bears the meaning “sum,” which can be extended to “summit,” especially in view of the biblical Semitic terms behind the biblical LXX (OG) archē. Syriac rēšā, like its Hebrew cognate rē’šit^h, literally means “head,” “chief.” See the discussion on the term in 1 En 37:3 in George W. E. Nickelsburg and James C. VanderKam, A Commentary on the Book of Enoch Chapters 37–82, 88.

¹³⁶ Literally, “the beginning of knowledge,” archē mpsoune (CT gnōsis), an echo of Prov 1:7 (cf. also Sir 1:12), which is synonymous with the phrase “the beginning of wisdom” in Prov 4:7 (lacking in the Greek and Coptic versions). However, 1 Apoc. Jas. here does not depend on OG Prov 1:7, which instead reads archē sophias, “beginning of wisdom” (the same reading occurs in the Coptic version), in agreement with 9:10, nor does it depend on the Syriac of Prov 1:7, rēš hek^hmāt^hā, “beginning/summit of wisdom.” In this case, the reliance would be on either the Hebrew text or on an Aramaic Targum.

1 Apoc. Jas.’ reference to the beginning of “knowledge” is prompted by the earlier mention of Isa 11:2’s spirit of knowledge. 1 Apoc. Jas.’ “the beginning of knowledge” also may be inspired partly by the phrase “the beginning of wisdom” in 1 Enoch 37. This is because this 1 Apoc. Jas. passage’s tropes of words (especially 1 En 37:2, “this is the beginning of the words of wisdom”), plenary revelation, place, persecution, martyrdom, concealed knowledge, faithfulness (based on Isa 11:5), blessing, salvation, departure, and rest/repose are all prominent themes in the Parables of Enoch.

The Enoch text, incidentally, reworks Isaiah 11’s list of seven spirits in 1 En 49:3 and 61:11, the latter beginning with “the spirit of faithfulness and the spirit of wisdom.” The reworking of the seven spirits of Isaiah 11 in 1 Enoch 49 concludes with “and the spirit of those who have fallen asleep [i.e., died] in righteousness.” Contextually, it is very likely that this includes the martyrs. This Enochic background finally explains the unusual identification of the seven spirits of Isaiah 11 with seven women disciples in 1 Apoc. Jas., of whom at least three are martyrs.

¹³⁷ The first-fruits are the best fruits. Consequently, the “first-fruits of knowledge” in NHC overlaps semantically with the “beginning/summit of knowledge” in CT. In Hebrew, the first word in the phrase first-fruits is rē’šit^h.

¹³⁸ The eschatological place of rest, like the post-mortem “place of faithfulness” obtained by the three martyrs Sapphira, Susanna, and Joanna.

¹³⁹ For the lexical links of finding + rest, see 1 En 63:6. “Rest” and “resting-places” are key tropes throughout the Parables of Enoch.

¹⁴⁰ “In agreement” anticipates the subsequent “among them a unity.”

¹⁴¹ The constellation of faithfulness, unity, blessing, salvation, and revelation indicates we have here an echo of 1 En 61:9–12, where all spirits, including the spirit of faithfulness, unite as one in agreement to bless the Lord of spirits in what is a reworking of the Jewish liturgy’s Qedushah, based on Isa 6:3. Revelation is mentioned in 1 revelation may be realized.”

And at that time he went away.

James Convinces the Twelve

He immediately upbraided the twelve, and bestowed [among them] a unity [and an efflu]ence of knowledge¹⁴² [. .
].

[. . . the] twelve [on account of their un]faithfulness [. . .], he spoke to them [. . .] and knowledge [. . .] he convinced them [. . .] from them [. . .] also the remainder [. . .].

Conclusion: The Martyrdom of James

After [some time] it came to pass that they apprehended
James in place of another man, [30] after making accusation against him, because he had fled [from them], but [they had thrown him into] prison for ten [days], and it was someone else with the name who came out of the dungeon.

[43] [. . .]. Instead of [. . .].

They took this this one into custody instead of him, and brought him before the judges.

However, the majority of the [judges], when they recognized [that] there was no
(legal) cause against him,
[they released] him.

Most of the judges saw that there was nothing for which to fault him, and they [let him] go free.

The [others and] the people [apprehended him], saying to those who had risen up: “[Let us] take [this one] from this earth, because he is not [worthy] of life.”¹⁴³

The others, however, and the whole people lined themselves up, and said: “Take him away from the earth. He is not [worthy of life].”

These now grew afraid.

These, however, grew afraid,
[lifted themselves up], and

En 61:5,13. 1 En 61:4 mentions “faithfulness” and “righteousness,” echoing Isa 11:5. The nearby 1 En 62:13 refers to salvation. Similarly, the other Enochic passage that reworks the seven spirits of Isaiah 11’s, 1 En 49:3, is preceded in 48:7–8 by mentions of salvation.

¹⁴² “Effluence of knowledge.” Cf. 1 En 49:1, “For wisdom is poured out like water,” 51:3, “And his mouth shall pour forth all the secrets of wisdom and counsel.” Cf. also 1 En 48:1, “fountains of wisdom.”

¹⁴³ Cf. OG Isa 3:10; Wis 2:19–20.

Nag Hammadi Codex V, 3

They rose up, saying: “We have no part in this blood, because a just man will perish by injustice.”

James went, so that [. . .].
[44] [. . .].

“[My] Father [in heaven, forgive] them, because [they know] not what [they do].”¹⁴⁴

The Apocalypse of James

Codex Tchacos 2

said, “We have no [part] in [the blood of this man . . .].”

He thought [. . .] he became [. . .] because the men [. . .] him, however [. . ., and] as they were stoning [him], he said:

“My Father, [who is in] heaven, forgive them, because they [know] <not> what they do.”

James

P.Oxy. 5533

¹⁴⁴ Cf. Luke 23:34, combined with the opening of the Pater Noster.

"An absolute gold mine of the literature of Gnosticism."
—Los Angeles Times

THE NAG HAMMADI LIBRARY

THE DEFINITIVE TRANSLATION OF THE GNOSTIC SCRIPTURES
COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME

JAMES M. ROBINSON
GENERAL EDITOR

THE NAG HAMMADI LIBRARY
IN ENGLISH

THE NAG HAMMADI LIBRARY IN ENGLISH

TRANSLATED AND INTRODUCED BY

MEMBERS OF THE COPTIC Gnostic LIBRARY PROJECT OF THE INSTITUTE FOR ANTIQUITY AND CHRISTIANITY,
CLAREMONT, CALIFORNIA

James M. Robinson, General Editor

THIRD, COMPLETELY REVISED EDITION

WITH AN AFTERWORD BY

Richard Smith, Managing Editor

HarperSanFrancisco
A Division of HarperCollinsPublishers

CONTRIBUTORS

Harold W. Attridge	Karen L. King	James M. Robinson
Hans-Gebhard Bethge	Helmut Koester	William C. Robinson, Jr.
Alexander Böhlig	Thomas O. Lambdin	William R. Schoedel
James Brashler	Bentley Layton	Maddalena Scopello
Roger A. Bullard	George W. MacRae †	John H. Sieber
Peter A. Dirkse	Marvin W. Meyer	John D. Turner
Stephen Emmel	Dieter Mueller †	Francis E. Williams
Joseph A. Gibbons	William R. Murdock	R. McL. Wilson
Søren Giversen	Elaine H. Pagels	Orval S. Wintermute
James E. Goehring	Douglas M. Parrott	Antoinette Clark Wire
Charles W. Hedrick	Birger A. Pearson	Frederik Wisse
Wesley W. Isenberg	Malcolm L. Peel	Jan Zandee
Howard M. Jackson	Michel Roberg

Richard Smith, Managing Editor

THE NAG HAMMADI LIBRARY IN ENGLISH. Revised edition. Copyright © 1978, 1988 by E. J. Brill, Leiden, The Netherlands. All rights reserved. Printed in the United States of America. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any manner whatsoever without written permission except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews. For information address HarperCollins Publishers, 10 East 53rd Street, New York, NY 10022.

FIRST HARPERCOLLINS PAPERBACK EDITION PUBLISHED IN 1990

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

The Nag Hammadi library in English.

1. Gnosticism. 2. Gnostic literature. I. Coptic Gnostic Library Project. II. Nag Hammadi codices.

BT1391.A3 1988b 299'.932 88-45154

ISBN 0-06-066934-9

ISBN 0-06-066935-7 (pbk.)

04 05 RRD-H 30

Composition by E. J. Brill, The Netherlands

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	IX
RICHARD SMITH
Table of Tractates in the Coptic Gnostic Library	XIII
Textual Signs	XV
Introduction	1
JAMES M. ROBINSON
The Prayer of The Apostle Paul (I,1)	27
DIETER MUELLER
The Apocryphon of James (I,2)	29
FRANCIS E. WILLIAMS
The Gospel of Truth (I,3 and XII,2)	38
HAROLD W. ATTRIDGE and GEORGE W. MACRAE
The Treatise on the Resurrection (I,4)	52
MALCOLM L. PEEL
The Tripartite Tractate (I,5)	58
HAROLD W. ATTRIDGE, ELAINE H. PAGELS, and DIETER MUELLER
The Apocryphon of John (II,1, III,1, IV,1, and BG 8502,2) ..	104
FREDERIK WISSE
The Gospel of Thomas (II,2)	124
HELMUT KOESTER and THOMAS O. LAMBDIN
The Gospel of Philip (II,3)	139
WESLEY W. ISENBERG
The Hypostasis of the Archons (II,4)	161
ROGER A. BULLARD and BENTLEY LAYTON
On the Origin of the World (II,5 and XIII,2)	170
HANS-GEGBHARD BETHGE, BENTLEY LAYTON, SOCIETAS COPTICA HIEROSOLYMITANA
The Exegesis on the Soul (II,6)	190
WILLIAM C. ROBINSON, JR. and MADDALENA SCOPELLO

The Book of Thomas the Contender (II,7)	199
JOHN D. TURNER
The Gospel of the Egyptians (III,2 and IV,2)	208
ALEXANDER BÖHLIG and FREDERIK WISSE
Eugnostos the Blessed (III,3 and V,1) and The Sophia of Jesus Christ (III,4 and BG 8502,3)	220
DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Dialogue of the Savior (III,5)	244
STEPHEN EMMEL, HELMUT KOESTER, and ELAINE H. PAGELS
The Apocalypse of Paul (V,2)	256
GEORGE W. MACRAE, WILLIAM R. MURDOCK, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The (First) Apocalypse of James (V,3)	260
WILLIAM R. SCHOEDEL and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The (Second) Apocalypse of James (V,4)	269
CHARLES W. HEDRICK and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Apocalypse of Adam (V,5)	277
GEORGE W. MACRAE and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles (VI,1)	287
DOUGLAS M. PARROTT and R. McL. WILSON
The Thunder, Perfect Mind (VI,2)	295
GEORGE W. MACRAE and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
Authoritative Teaching (VI,3)	304
GEORGE W. MACRAE and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Concept of Our Great Power (VI,4)	311
FRANCIS E. WILLIAMS, FREDERIK WISSE, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
Plato, Republic 588A-589B (VI,5)	318
JAMES BRASHLER, HOWARD M. JACKSON, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth (VI,6)	321
JAMES BRASHLER, PETER A. DIRKSE, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT

The Prayer of Thanksgiving (VI,7) and Scribal Note (VI,7a) . . .	328
JAMES BRASHLER, PETER A. DIRKSE, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
Asclepius 21-29 (VI,8)	330
JAMES BRASHLER, PETER A. DIRKSE, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Paraphrase of Shem (VII,1)	339
MICHEL ROBERGE and FREDERIK WISSE
The Second Treatise of the Great Seth (VII,2)	362
JOSEPH A. GIBBONS and ROGER A. BULLARD
Apocalypse of Peter (VII,3)	372
JAMES BRASHLER and ROGER A. BULLARD
The Teachings of Silvanus (VII,4)	379
MALCOLM L. PEEL and JAN ZANDEE
The Three Steles of Seth (VII,5)	396
JAMES E. GOEHRING and JAMES M. ROBINSON
Zostrianos (VIII,1)	402
JOHN H. SIEBER
The Letter of Peter to Philip (VIII,2)	431
MARVIN W. MEYER and FREDERIK WISSE
Melchizedek (IX,1)	438
BIRGER A. PEARSON and SØREN GIVERSEN
The Thought of Norea (IX,2)	445
BIRGER A. PEARSON and SØREN GIVERSEN
The Testimony of Truth (IX,3)	448
BIRGER A. PEARSON and SØREN GIVERSEN
Marsanes (X,1)	460
BIRGER A. PEARSON
The Interpretation of Knowledge (XI,1)	472
ELAINE H. PAGELS and JOHN D. TURNER
A Valentinian Exposition (XI,2), with On the Anointing, On Baptism A and B, and On the Eucharist A and B	481
ELAINE H. PAGELS and JOHN D. TURNER

Allogenes (XI,3)	490
ANTOINETTE CLARK WIRE, JOHN D. TURNER, and ORVAL S. WINTERMUTE
Hypsiphronne (XI,4)	501
JOHN D. TURNER
The Sentences of Sextus (XII,1)	503
FREDERIK WISSE
Fragments (XII,3)	509
FREDERIK WISSE
Trimorphic Protennoia (XIII,1)	511
JOHN D. TURNER
The Gospel of Mary (BG 8502,1)	523
KAREN L. KING, GEORGE W. MACRAE, R. McL. WILSON, and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
The Act of Peter (BG 8502,4)	528
JAMES BRASHLER and DOUGLAS M. PARROTT
Afterword: The Modern Relevance of Gnosticism	532
RICHARD SMITH

PREFACE

This volume is a thorough revision of The Nag Hammadi Library in English. The first edition, published in 1977, marked the end of one stage of Nag Hammadi scholarship and the beginning of another. The first stage was concerned with making this library of texts available; the second stage has been characterized by the discussion and interpretation of the texts.

The library of fourth-century papyrus manuscripts consists of twelve codices plus eight leaves from a thirteenth and contains fifty-two separate tractates. Due to duplications there are forty-five separate titles. Because the majority of the library's tractates derive from the Hellenistic sects now called gnostic, and survive in Coptic translations, it is characterized as the Coptic Gnostic Library. Scholarly rivalries and the situation in Egypt in the years following the library's discovery in 1945 hindered work on the manuscripts. Twenty years after the discovery only a small percentage of the texts had been edited and translated, mostly by European scholars, and less than ten percent had become available in English translations. In 1966 the team responsible for the present volume began to come together into "The Coptic Gnostic Library Project" under the auspices of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity, Claremont, California.

The editing and translating of the library could only proceed as the manuscripts became accessible. In 1970 the Ministry of Culture of the Arab Republic of Egypt, together with UNESCO, named an International Committee for the Nag Hammadi Codices. The representative of the United States, James M. Robinson, was elected secretary. The primary task of the committee was to oversee the publication of photographic facsimiles. Between 1972 and 1977 the entire library was thus published by E.J. Brill of Leiden as The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices. These were followed in 1979 with the publication of the Cartonnage volume and in 1984 with an Introduction volume, completing the twelve-volume Facsimile Edition. That edition was facilitated by members of The Coptic Gnostic Library Project working in the Coptic Museum in Old Cairo between 1971 and 1977 to reconstruct and conserve the manuscripts.

In 1977, coinciding with the availability of the library's complete contents in facsimile form, E.J. Brill and Harper & Row published the first edition of The Nag Hammadi Library in English. The one-volume English translation was brought out as the project was beginning to publish its major scholarly work, a complete critical edition, The Coptic Gnostic Library. This series of volumes contains the edited Coptic text with English translations, introductions, notes, and indices. It includes the entire Nag Hammadi library plus three similar manuscripts housed in Berlin, London, and Oxford. The volumes and the editors of The Coptic Gnostic Library, published by E.J. Brill, are as follows: Nag Hammadi Codex I (The Jung Codex), Volume 1: Introduction, Texts and Translation; Volume 2: Notes, volume editor Harold W. Attridge, 1985; Nag Hammadi Codices II,1 and IV,1: The Apocryphon of John, Long Recension, edited by Frederik Wisse, forthcoming; Nag Hammadi Codex II,2-7, together with XIII,2, Brit. Lib. Or. 4926 (I) and P. Oxy. 1,654,655*, Volume 1: Gospel of Thomas, Gospel of Philip, Hypostasis of the Archons, Indexes; Volume 2: On the Origin of the World, Exegesis on the Soul, Book of Thomas, Indexes, edited by Bentley Layton, in the press; Nag Hammadi Codex III,1 and Papyrus Berolinensis 8502,2: The Apocryphon of John, Short Recension, edited by Peter Nagel, volume editor Frederik Wisse, forthcoming; Nag Hammadi Codices III,2 and IV,2: The Gospel of the Egyptians (The Holy Book of the Great Invisible Spirit), edited by Alexander Böhlig and Frederik Wisse in cooperation with Pahor Labib, 1975; Nag Hammadi Codices III,3-4 and V,1 with Papyrus Berolinensis 8502,3 and Oxyrhynchus Papyrus 1081: Eugnostos and The Sophia of Jesus Christ, edited and translated by Douglas M. Parrott, in the press; Nag Hammadi Codex III,5: The Dialogue of the Savior, volume editor Stephen Emmel, 1984; Nag Hammadi Codices V,2-5 and VI with Papyrus Berolinensis 8502,1 and 4, volume editor Douglas M. Parrott, 1979; Nag Hammadi Codex VII, volume editor Frederik Wisse, forthcoming; Nag Hammadi Codex VIII, volume editor John Sieber, forthcoming; Nag Hammadi Codices IX and X, volume editor Birger A. Pearson, 1981; Nag Hammadi Codices XI, XII and XIII, volume editor Charles W. Hedrick, in the press; Nag Hammadi Codices: Greek and Coptic Papyri from the Cartonnage of the Covers, edited by J.W.B. Barns †, G.M. Browne, and J.C. Shelton, 1981; Pistis Sophia, text edited by Carl Schmidt, translation and notes by Violet MacDermot, volume editor R. McL. Wilson, 1978; The Books of Jeu and the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex, text edited by Carl Schmidt, translation and notes by Violet MacDermot, volume editor R. McL. Wilson, 1978.

In 1981 and 1984 respectively, Harper & Row and E.J. Brill published paperback editions of The Nag Hammadi Library in English. These included an addition to the translation of The Dialogue of the Savior based on fragments (144,15-146,24) discovered by Stephen Emmel in the Beinecke Library at Yale University.

At the time of the publication of The Nag Hammadi Library in English more than a decade ago, only one title in the Coptic Gnostic Library series had appeared in print. Now, with that series nearing completion, the present book has been extensively revised to bring the translations into conformity with the critical edition's final translations. In the case of the earlier volumes to appear, an occasional improvement on the critical edition has been made. Research in the field of Gnosticism, greatly stimulated by the work of The Coptic Gnostic Library Project, has also developed during the past ten years. New tractate introductions have been written to acknowledge the ongoing discussion. Since several titles appear in the library in more than one version, it has been possible to combine fragmentary versions of some texts to produce more complete translations. Two titles from the closely related Berlin Gnostic Papyrus are also included.

Since the original manuscripts of the library are fragmentary in many places, ellipsis dots (. . .) are included to indicate the place, but not the extent, of all lacunae. The page and line numbers of the papyrus codex, given in the translations, should indicate the extent of the damage. A complete portrayal of the physical condition of the manuscripts is given in The Facsimile Edition and in the critical edition, The Coptic Gnostic Library. The textual signs that appear in The Nag Hammadi Library in English are those found in the critical edition; the reader is referred to those volumes for more scholarly matters. An ongoing bibliography in the field of gnostic studies is provided by David M. Scholer, Nag Hammadi Bibliography 1948-1969, volume one of the series Nag Hammadi Studies, published by E.J. Brill in 1971, with annual updates in the journal Novum Testamentum. All these supplements are soon to be merged with each other and published in Nag Hammadi Studies in a volume entitled Nag Hammadi Bibliography 1970-1985. Two books recently published by Harper & Row present discussions of ancient Gnosticism and its modern scholarship: Gnosis: The Nature and History of Gnosticism, 1983, by Kurt Rudolph; and The Jesus of Heresy and History: The Discovery and Meaning of the Nag Hammadi Gnostic Library, 1988, by John Dart.

The Coptic Gnostic Library Project has been generously supported over the years by many organizations which we would like to thank: The Egyptian Antiquities Organization, UNESCO, the American Research Center in Egypt, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation, the American Philosophical Society, the Smithsonian Institution, and The Claremont Graduate School. In final appreciation, it should be said that the preparation of this thoroughly revised new edition was rendered considerably easier by the work done in the preparation of the first edition by its Managing Editor, Marvin W. Meyer.

Richard Smith
Managing Editor

TABLE OF TRACTATES IN THE COPTIC GNOSTIC LIBRARY

The following table lists, for the thirteen Nag Hammadi Codices and Papyrus Berolinensis 8502, the codex and tractate numbers, the tractate titles as used in this edition (the titles found in the tractates themselves, sometimes simplified and standardized, or, when the tractate bears no surviving title, one supplied by the editors), and the abbreviations of these titles.

I,1	The Prayer of the Apostle Paul	Pr. Paul
I,2	The Apocryphon of James	Ap. Jas.
I,3	The Gospel of Truth	Gos. Truth
I,4	The Treatise on the Resurrection	Treat. Res.
I,5	The Tripartite Tractate	Tri. Trac.
II,1	The Apocryphon of John	Ap. John
II,2	The Gospel of Thomas	Gos. Thom.
II,3	The Gospel of Philip	Gos. Phil.
II,4	The Hypostasis of the Archons	Hyp. Arch.
II,5	On the Origin of the World	Orig. World
II,6	The Exegesis on the Soul	Exeg. Soul
II,7	The Book of Thomas the Contender	Thom. Cont.
III,1	The Apocryphon of John	Ap. John
III,2	The Gospel of the Egyptians	Gos. Eg.
III,3	Eugnostos the Blessed	Eugnostos
III,4	The Sophia of Jesus Christ	Soph. Jes. Chr.
III,5	The Dialogue of the Savior	Dial. Sav.
IV,1	The Apocryphon of John	Ap. John
IV,2	The Gospel of the Egyptians	Gos. Eg.
V,1	Eugnostos the Blessed	Eugnostos
V,2	The Apocalypse of Paul	Apoc. Paul
V,3	The (First) Apocalypse of James	1 Apoc. Jas.
V,4	The (Second) Apocalypse of James	2 Apoc. Jas.
V,5	The Apocalypse of Adam	Apoc. Adam
VI,1	The Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles	Acts Pet. 12 Apost.
VI,2	The Thunder: Perfect Mind	Thund.
VI,3	Authoritative Teaching	Auth. Teach.

VI,4	The Concept of Our Great Power	Great Pow.
VI,5	Plato, Republic 588a-589b	Plato Rep.
VI,6	The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth	Disc. 8-9
VI,7	The Prayer of Thanksgiving	Pr. Thanks.
VI,7a	Scribal Note	Scribal Note
VI,8	Asclepius 21-29	Asclepius
VII,1	The Paraphrase of Shem	Paraph. Shem
VII,2	The Second Treatise of the Great Seth	Treat. Seth
VII,3	Apocalypse of Peter	Apoc. Peter
VII,4	The Teachings of Silvanus	Teach. Silv.
VII,5	The Three Steles of Seth	Steles Seth
VIII,1	Zostrianos	Zost.
VIII,2	The Letter of Peter to Philip	Ep. Pet. Phil.
IX,1	Melchizedek	Melch.
IX,2	The Thought of Norea	Norea
IX,3	The Testimony of Truth	Testim. Truth
X	Marsanes	Marsanes
XI,1	The Interpretation of Knowledge	Interp. Know.
XI,2	A Valentinian Exposition	Val. Exp.
XI,2a	On the Anointing	On Anoint.
XI,2b	On Baptism A	On Bap. A
XI,2c	On Baptism B	On Bap. B
XI,2d	On the Eucharist A	On Euch. A
XI,2e	On the Eucharist B	On Euch. B
XI,3	Allogenes	Allogenes
XI,4	Hypsiphron	Hypsiph.
XII,1	The Sentences of Sextus	Sent. Sextus
XII,2	The Gospel of Truth	Gos. Truth
XII,3	Fragments	Frm.
XIII,1	Trimorphic Protennoia	Trim. Prot.
XIII,2	On the Origin of the World	Orig. World
BG,1	The Gospel of Mary	Gos. Mary
BG,2	The Apocryphon of John	Ap. John
BG,3	The Sophia of Jesus Christ	Soph. Jes. Chr.
BG,4	The Act of Peter	Act Pet.

References to the Nag Hammadi tractates, and to the texts in Berlin Gnostic Papyrus, are to page and line number, except for references to The Gospel of Thomas, which are to saying number.

TEXTUAL SIGNS

Small strokes above the line indicate line divisions. Every fifth line a small number is inserted in place of a stroke; the frequency of these numbers, however, may vary in tractates which are quite fragmentary. A new page is indicated with a number in bold type. When the beginning of a new line or page coincides with the opening of a paragraph, the line divider or number is placed at the end of the previous paragraph.

- [] Square brackets indicate a lacuna in the manuscript. When the text cannot be reconstructed, three dots are placed within the brackets, regardless of the size of the lacuna; a fourth dot, if appropriate, may function as a period. An exception to this rule is the occasional use of a different number of dots to estimate the extent of the missing portion of a proper noun. In a few instances the dots are used without brackets to indicate a series of Coptic letters which do not constitute a translatable sense unit. A bracket is not allowed to divide a word, except for a hyphenated word or a proper noun. Other words are placed entirely inside or outside the brackets, depending on the certainty of the Coptic word and the number of Coptic letters visible.
- < > Pointed brackets indicate a correction of a scribal omission or error. The translator has either inserted letters unintentionally omitted by the scribe, or replaced letters erroneously inserted with what the scribe presumably intended to write.
- { } Braces indicate superfluous letters or words added by the scribe.
- () Parentheses indicate material supplied by the editor or translator. Although this material may not directly reflect the text being translated, it provides useful information for the reader.

INTRODUCTION

by

JAMES M. ROBINSON

1. The Stance of the Texts

The Nag Hammadi library is a collection of religious texts that vary widely from each other as to when, where, and by whom they were written. Even the points of view diverge to such an extent that the texts are not to be thought of as coming from one group or movement. Yet these diversified materials must have had something in common that caused them to be chosen by those who collected them. The collectors no doubt contributed to this unity by finding in the texts hidden meanings not fully intended by the original authors. After all, one of them, The Gospel of Thomas, begins with a word to the wise: "Whoever finds the interpretation of these sayings will not experience death." Thus the texts can be read at two levels: what the original author may have intended to communicate and what the texts may subsequently have been taken to communicate.

The focus that brought the collection together is an estrangement from the mass of humanity, an affinity to an ideal order that completely transcends life as we know it, and a life-style radically other than common practice. This life-style involved giving up all the goods that people usually desire and longing for an ultimate liberation. It is not an aggressive revolution that is intended, but rather a withdrawal from involvement in the contamination that destroys clarity of vision.

As such, the focus of this library has much in common with primitive Christianity, with eastern religion, and with "holy men" (and women) of all times, as well as with the more secular equivalents of today, such as the counter-culture movements coming from the 1960s. Disinterest in the goods of a consumer society, withdrawal into communes of the like-minded away from the bustle and clutter of big-city distraction, non-involvement in the compromises of political process, sharing an in-group's knowledge both of the disaster-course of the culture and of an ideal, radical alternative not commonly known — all this in modern garb is the real challenge rooted in such materials as the Nag Hammadi library.

To be sure, these roots, fascinating and provocative as they are, can also be confusing and even frustrating, not only for the person scarcely open to what they have to say, but also to the more attentive who seek to follow the light glimmering through the flow of language. For the point of the Nag Hammadi library has been battered and fragmented by the historical process through which it has finally come to light. A salvage operation is needed at many levels if that point is to be grasped clearly today. The ancient world's religious and philosophical traditions and mythology were all that was available to express what was in fact a quite untraditional stance. Indeed the stance was too radical to establish itself within the organized religions or philosophical schools of the day, and hence was hardly able to take advantage of the culture's educational institutions to develop and clarify its implications. Gnostic schools began to emerge within Christianity and Neoplatonism, until both agreed in excluding them as the "heresy" of Gnosticism. Thus meaningful and eloquent myths and philosophic formulations of that radical stance became in their turn garbled traditions, re-used by later and lesser authors whose watered-down, not to say muddled, version may be most of what has survived . . . though there are several "classics" in the Nag Hammadi library.

The texts were translated one by one from Greek into Coptic, and not always by translators capable of grasping the profundity or sublimity of what they sought to translate. The translator of a brief section of Plato's Republic clearly did not understand the text, though it obviously seemed edifying and worth translating. Fortunately, most texts are better translated, but when there are duplications one can sense what a difference the better translation makes in comparison to the poor translation – which leads one to wonder about the bulk of the texts that exist only in a single version.

There is the same kind of hazard in the transmission of the texts by a series of scribes who copied them, generation after generation, from increasingly corrupt copies, first in Greek and then in Coptic. The number of unintentional errors is hard to estimate, since such a thing as a clean control copy does not exist; nor does one have, as in the case of the Bible, a quantity of manuscripts of the same text that tend to correct each other when compared. Only when the error can be detected as such in the sole copy we have can it be corrected. In addition there is the physical deterioration of the books themselves, which began no doubt before they were buried around 400 C.E., advanced steadily while they remained buried, and unfortunately was not completely halted in the period between their discovery in 1945 and their final conservation some thirty years later. When only a few letters are missing, they can often be filled in adequately, but larger holes must simply remain a blank.

The reader should not be misled by such impediments to understanding into thinking that the stance inherent in these essays is unworthy of serious consideration. Rather, we have to do here with an understanding of existence, an answer to the human dilemma, an attitude toward society, that is worthy of being taken quite seriously by anyone able and willing to grapple with such ultimate issues. This basic stance has until now been known almost exclusively through the myopic view of heresy-hunters, who often quote only to refute or ridicule. Thus the coming to light of the Nag Hammadi library gives unexpected access to the gnostic stance as Gnostics themselves presented it. It may provide new roots for the uprooted.

Those who collected this library were Christians, and many of the essays were originally composed by Christian authors. In a sense this should not be surprising, since primitive Christianity was itself a radical movement. Jesus called for a full reversal of values, advocating the end of the world as we have known it and its replacement by a quite new, utopian kind of life in which the ideal would be real. He took a stand quite independent of the authorities of his day . . . and did not last very long before they eliminated him. Yet his followers reaffirmed his stand – for them he came to personify the ultimate goal. Yet some of his circle, being a bit more practical, followed a more conventional way of life. The circle gradually became an established organization with a quite natural concern to maintain order, continuity, lines of authority, and stability. But this concern could encourage a commitment to the status quo, rivaling, and at times outweighing, the commitment to the ultimate goal far beyond any and every achievement. Those who cherished the radical dream, the ultimate hope, would tend to throw it up as an invidious comparison to what was achieved, and thus seem to be disloyal, and to pose a serious threat to the organization.

As the cultural situation changed with the passage of time and the shift of environments, the language for expressing such radical transcendence itself underwent change. The world of thought from which Jesus and his first followers had come was the popular piety of the Jewish synagogue, focused in terms of John the Baptist's rite of transition from the old regime to the new ideal world whose dramatic arrival was forthcoming. In this way of thinking, the evil system that prevails is not the way things inherently are. In principle, though not in practice, the world is good.

The evil that pervades history is a blight, ultimately alien to the world as such. But for some, the outlook on life increasingly darkened; the very origin of the world was attributed to a terrible fault, and evil was given status as the ultimate ruler of the world, not just a usurpation of authority. Hence the only hope seemed to reside in escape. Because humans, or at least some humans, are at heart not the product of such an absurd system, but by their very nature belong to the ultimate. Their plight is that they have been duped and lured into the trap of trying to be content in the impossible world, alienated from their true home. And for some, concentrated inwardness undistracted by external factors came to be the only way to attain the repose, the overview, the merger into the All which is the destiny of one's spark of the divine.

Christian Gnosticism thus emerged as a reaffirmation, though in somewhat different terms, of the original stance of transcendence central to the very beginnings of Christianity. Such Gnostic Christians surely considered themselves the faithful continuation, under changing circumstances, of that original stance which made Christians Christians. But the "somewhat different terms" "under changing circumstances" also involved real divergences, and other Christians clearly considered Gnosticism a betrayal of the original Christian position. This was the conviction of not just those who had accommodated themselves to the status quo, but no doubt also of some who retained the full force of the original protest and ultimate hope. The departure from the original language could be exploited to unite opposition across the breadth of the church. Thus Gnostics came to be excluded from the church as heretics.

In the New Testament two such Gnostic Christians are repudiated at the beginning of the second century (2 Timothy 2:16-18):

Avoid empty and worldly chatter; those who indulge in it will stray further and further into godless courses, and the infection of their teaching will spread like a gangrene. Such are Hymenaeus and Philetus; they have shot wide of the truth in saying that our resurrection has already taken place, and are upsetting people's faith.

This view, that the Christian's resurrection has already taken place as a spiritual reality, is advocated in The Treatise on the Resurrection, The Exegesis on the Soul, and The Gospel of Philip in the Nag Hammadi library!

But the Nag Hammadi library also documents the fact that the rejection was mutual, in that Christians described there as "heretical" seem to be more like what is usually thought of as "orthodox." The

Apocalypse of Peter has Jesus criticize mainstream Christianity as follows:

They will cleave to the name of a dead man, thinking that they will become pure. But they will become greatly defiled and they will fall into the name of error and into the hand of an evil, cunning man and a manifold dogma, and they will be ruled heretically. For some of them will blaspheme the truth and proclaim evil teaching. And they will say evil things against each other . . . But many others, who oppose the truth and are the messengers of error, will set up their error and their law against these pure thoughts of mine, as looking out from one (perspective), thinking that good and evil are from one (source). They do business in my word . . . And there shall be others of those who are outside our number who name themselves bishop and also deacons, as if they have received their authority from God. They bend themselves under the judgement of the leaders. These people are dry canals.

With the conversion of the Roman Empire to Christianity of the more conventional kind, the survival chances of Gnostic Christianity, such as that reflected in the Nag Hammadi library, were sharply reduced. The Bishop of Cyprus, Epiphanius, whose main work was a “medicine chest” against all heresies, describes his encounter with Gnosticism in Egypt about the same time the Nag Hammadi library was being collected:

For I happened on this sect myself, beloved, and was actually taught these things in person, out of the mouths of practising Gnostics. Not only did women under this delusion offer me this line of talk, and divulge this sort of things to me. With impudent boldness moreover, they tried to seduce me themselves . . . But the merciful God rescued me from their wickedness, and thus – after reading them and their books, understanding their true intent and not being carried away with them, and after escaping without taking the bait – I lost no time reporting them to the bishops there, and finding out which ones were hidden in the church. Thus they were expelled from the city, about eighty persons, and the city was cleared of their tarelike, thorny growth.

Gnosticism was ultimately eradicated from Christendom, except for occasional underground movements, some affinities in medieval mysticism, and an occasional tamed echo that stays just within the limits of propriety, for example within English romanticism:

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
 The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
 Hath had elsewhere its setting
 And Cometh from afar.
 . . .
 The world is too much with us; late and soon,
 Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers.

Gnosticism of sorts was also able to continue beyond the frontiers of the Roman-Empire-become-Christendom. It is still extant in the war-torn area of Iraq and Iran in the form of a small sect called Mandeans, which is their word for “knowers,” that is to say, “Gnostics.”

This same withdrawal to inwardness or despair of the world from which the Gnostic stance emerged, swept not only through early Christianity to produce Christian Gnosticism, but also through late antiquity in general, thus producing forms of Gnosticism outside of Christianity. There is a long-standing debate among historians of religion as to whether Gnosticism is to be understood as only an inner-Christian development or as a movement broader than, and hence independent of, and perhaps even prior to Christianity. This debate seems to be resolving itself, on the basis of the Nag Hammadi library, in favor of understanding Gnosticism as a much broader phenomenon than the Christian Gnosticism documented by the heresiologists.

There is, to begin with, the question of Jewish Gnosticism. It would seem that there is considerable historical truth to the view of the heresiologists, to the effect that some Christian heresies go back to Jewish sects. After all, Christianity itself grew up within Judaism, and it would be surprising if it did not reflect various strands of the Judaism of the day. Primitive Christianity was itself not a unified movement. The Jewish Christianity of the first generation in Galilee that developed the collection of sayings imbedded in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke may well have been considered heretical even by Paul and the Hellenists, and the feeling may have been mutual. Paul clearly rejected as heretical the Christian “Judaizers.” Then later in the first century all the various strands of Jewish Christianity were excluded from Judaism, as “normative” Judaism emerged in response to the threat to Jewish identity posed by the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 C.E.

Some of the gnostic essays in the Nag Hammadi library do not seem to reflect Christian tradition, but do build upon the Old Testament, which was of course also the Jewish Bible. But the very idea of Jewish Gnosticism is at times rejected as a contradiction in terms. How could Jews designate their God as the malevolent force whose misguided blunder produced the world, a God who was ignorant of the hidden good God beyond? Since Christians worship the same God as do Jews, this argument could also be made against the very idea of Christian Gnosticism. But since the early Christian heresy-hunters clearly identified Gnostics as Christians, though of course heretical Christians, the concept of Christian Gnosticism is firmly established. To use another analogy, Simon Magus, one of the earliest known Gnostics, was from Samaria, although the Samaritans worshipped in their own way the same God as did the Jews and Christians. Hence the concept of Jewish Gnostics is intelligible, even if, from a given normative point of view, the validity of using the word Jewish, Christian, or Samaritan for such a person or text may be contested. Of course we do not actually know the Gnostics who built upon Jewish or Old Testament traditions, other than through the texts containing such traditions, so that all one really has in view in speaking of Jewish Gnosticism is just Jewish cultural traditions lacking visible Christian overlay, without necessarily any further identification of the bearers of these traditions.

The discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls has already drawn attention to the fact that first-century Judaism was quite pluralistic in its theological positions, and contained a number of divergent groups or sects. The Essenes, prior to the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, were in a situation much like the Gnostics prior to the discovery of the Nag Hammadi library: they too were a movement about which too little was known to be treated with the seriousness it deserved. Now we know that the Essenes were a Jewish sect that had broken with the official Judaism of the Jerusalem temple and had withdrawn to the desert at the Wadi Qumran. They understood their situation in terms of the antithesis of light and darkness, truth and lie, a dualism that ultimately went back to Persian dualism — and then moved forward toward Gnosticism. The history of Gnosticism, as documented in the Nag Hammadi library, takes up about where the history of the Essenes, as documented by the Dead Sea Scrolls, breaks off. Later Jewish mystical traditions, traced especially by Gershom Scholem, have shown that, inconsistent though it seems, gnostic trends have continued to carry on a clandestine existence within the context of normative Judaism.

Some traits previously thought to be characteristic of Christian Gnosticism have been shown by the Nag Hammadi library to be originally non-Christian, though a Jewish ingredient is unmistakable. Irenaeus presents Barbelo as the leading mythological figure of a Christian Gnostic group designated “Barbelo-Gnostics.” But The Three Steles of Seth is a Gnostic text without Christian ingredients that nonetheless gives Barbelo a prominent position. Hippolytus cites a “Paraphrase of Seth” as a Christian Gnostic text. But a very similar Nag Hammadi text, The Paraphrase of Shem, lacks a Christian ingredient. It is understandable that Christian heresiologists were primarily concerned to refute the Christian form of gnostic texts and movements. But this should not be taken to indicate that the Christian form is the original form, especially when the Nag Hammadi discovery gives documentation of a non-Christian form.

Another instance, though in this case not necessarily gnostic, is the mythological birth narrative in Revelation 12, which commentators have had the greatest difficulty in deriving from any version of the birth stories about Jesus. But The Apocalypse of Adam has a series of non-Christian narrations of the coming of the savior that have much the same outline, and thus show a shared mythological background that is not Christian.

It is especially the Sethian texts in the Nag Hammadi library that as a group attest a non-Christian Gnosticism that had not been previously documented so clearly. The Sethian corpus spans the transition from non-Christian to Christianized Gnosticism, as has been summarized by the leading expert on Sethianism as follows: "Most writings of our text group contain no Christian elements at all (The Three Steles of Seth, Allogenes, Marsanes, The Thought of Norea); others contain barely Christian motifs (Zostrianus, The Apocalypse of Adam) or display only here and there a Christian veneer (Trimorphic Protennoia, The Gospel of the Egyptians); while only a few (The Hypostasis of the Archons, Melchizedek, The Apocryphon of John) come near to being what is called Christian Gnosis."

In none of these Sethian instances can one derive the texts or their mythology primarily from Christian tradition. For the Christian ingredient seems so external to the main thrust of the text that one is inclined to think it was added by a Christian editor, translator, or scribe to what had been originally composed as a non-Christian text, even though the purely non-Christian form is no longer extant. For example, the Trimorphic Protennoia, where a secondary Christianizing has taken place, has nonetheless its roots in the same Jewish wisdom speculation as does the Prologue of the Gospel of John. It is also part of this Christianizing trend when "the Holy Book of the Great Invisible Spirit" is given by some scribe the secondary title "The Gospel of the Egyptians." Thus one concludes that though the Sethian corpus was obviously usable by Christians (as were other non-Christian texts such as the Old Testament), it derives from non-Christian "Jewish" Gnosticism.

The Nag Hammadi library even presents one instance of the Christianizing process taking place almost before one's eyes. The non-Christian philosophic treatise Eugnostos the Blessed is cut up somewhat arbitrarily into separate speeches, which are then put on Jesus' tongue, in answer to questions (which sometimes do not quite fit the answers) that the disciples address to him during a resurrection appearance. The result is a separate tractate entitled The Sophia of Jesus Christ. Both forms of the text occur side by side in Codex III.

Some of the Nag Hammadi texts, and again often the Sethian traditions, seem to have appropriated a philosophic and Neoplatonic orientation. Plotinus, the leading Neoplatonist of the third century C.E., does in fact refer to Gnostics within his school: "We feel a certain regard for some of our friends who happened upon this way of thinking before they became our friends, and, though I do not know how they manage it, continue in it." But the school turned against Gnosticism, as Plotinus' polemics indicate. His pupil Porphyry reports in his Life of Plotinus:

There were in his time many Christians and others, and sectarians who had abandoned the old philosophy, men . . . who . . . produced revelations by Zoroaster and Zostrianos and Nicotheus and Allogenes and Messos and other people of the kind, themselves deceived and deceiving many, alleging that Plato had not penetrated to the depths of intelligible reality. Plotinus hence often attacked their position in his lectures, and wrote the treatise to which we had given the title "Against the Gnostics"; he left it to us to assess what he passed over. Amelius went to forty volumes in writing against the book of Zostrianos.

The Nag Hammadi library contains treatises with two such titles, Zostrianos and Allogenes, which hence may well be those refuted by Amelius and other Neoplatonists. And such Nag Hammadi texts as the Trimorphic Protennoia and Marsanes are quite similar in philosophic orientation. Plotinus' own attack on gnostic "magic chants" addressed to the "higher powers" may have in view hymnic texts like The Three Steles of Seth. Thus the Nag Hammadi library makes an important contribution not only to the history of religion, but also to the history of philosophy.

The Nag Hammadi library also includes material drawing upon other religious traditions than the Judeo-Christian heritage. There are, for example, Hermetic texts that build on Egyptian lore. Typically they present dialogues of initiation between the deities Hermes Trismegistus and his son Tat. The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth in the Nag Hammadi library is such a previously unknown Hermetic text. And, whereas one could debate whether a good number of texts in the library are actually gnostic or not, depending on how one defines Gnosticism and interprets texts, a few, such as The Sentences of Sextus, clearly are not gnostic. But, just as a gnostic interpretation of the Bible became possible, one may assume that these moralistic maxims could also be fitted into a gnostic orientation.

Since the Nag Hammadi library seems to have been collected in terms of Christian Gnosticism, it is sometimes difficult to conceive of some of the texts, such as the Hermetic ones, being used by persons who thought of themselves as Christian. One text even claims a Zoroastrian heritage, in that it is ascribed to his grandfather (or, possibly, uncle) Zostrianos and in a cryptogram even mentions Zoroaster. Yet Gnostics were more ecumenical and syncretic with regard to religious traditions than were orthodox Christians, so long as they found in them a stance congenial to their own. If they could identify Seth with Jesus, they probably could produce Christianizing interpretations of Hermes and Zoroaster as well.

Thus Gnosticism seems not to have been in its essence just an alternate form of Christianity. Rather it was a radical trend of release from the dominion of evil or of inner transcendence that swept through late antiquity and emerged within Christianity, Judaism, Neoplatonism, Hermetism, and the like. As a new religion it was syncretistic, drawing upon various religious heritages. But it was held together by a very decided stance, which is where the unity amid the wide diversity is to be sought.

2. The Manuscripts

The Nag Hammadi library is important for the content of the many lost Greek works it has preserved in Coptic translation. It also sheds significant light upon the production of the Coptic books themselves, and hence upon those who copied, read, and buried them.

The Nag Hammadi library consists of twelve books, plus eight leaves removed from a thirteenth book in late antiquity and tucked inside the front cover of the sixth. These eight leaves comprise a complete text, an independent treatise taken out of a book of collected essays. In fact, each of the books, except the tenth, consists of a collection of relatively brief works. Thus there is a total of fifty-two tractates. Since a single book usually contains several tractates, one may suspect that, like the books of the Bible, the texts were composed with a small format in mind, but that a larger format had come into use by the time these extant copies were made. This can be explained in terms of the history of the manufacture of books.

The roll was the usual form of a book up until the first centuries C.E., when it began to be replaced by a more economical format that permitted writing on both sides, namely the modern book with individual leaves. Technically speaking, a book in the form of a roll is a "scroll" or "volume" (from the Latin verb meaning "to roll"). But a book in the form of a modern book is a "codex" (plural: "codices"), the Latin word for a set of wooden waxed tablets tied together as a scratch pad, which was the ancestor of the book with papyrus, parchment, or paper leaves. Whereas literary works continued to be written in the more prestigious form of the scroll, Christians (but not Jews) soon came to prefer the more economical codex. The codex was also more practical than the scroll, as anyone who has worked with microfilm knows. The inconvenience and wear-and-tear of unrolling and then rerolling the scroll every time one wanted to resume reading or look up a reference led to the replacement of the scroll with the codex, just as today there is a trend away from rolls of microfilm and toward microfiche.

In Egypt the most common writing material was papyrus. The triangular stalk of the papyrus plant is filled with fibrous pith that can be cut or peeled off in long thin strips. These strips are laid side by side and then a second layer is placed at right angles on top. When this is pressed, dried, and polished it becomes a flexible, smooth, and durable writing surface. Whereas these papyrus sheets were usually only about twenty centimeters long, those used in the Nag Hammadi library were often over a meter in length. Since this was a technological feat for that time, it indicated the importance of the books for those who made them.

A series of such papyrus writing surfaces was placed side by side so as to overlap a couple of centimeters where they were pasted together. The result was a papyrus roll, often about three meters long. Sheets ranging in breadth from twenty to forty centimeters would be cut from such rolls, from the right end of the roll to the left. Enough rolls would be thus cut up to produce a stack of from twenty to forty sheets, which, when folded down the middle, formed the quire of a codex. The fact that from two to six rolls were used to manufacture a single codex helps to explain the fact that a codex could contain more than one text, if each text had originally been composed with the size of the roll in view.

Since each strip of papyrus has a fiber pattern as distinctive as a fingerprint, the more fragmentary books in the Nag Hammadi library were re-assembled by locating the position of the fibers of a fragment or a leaf on the original papyrus sheet that had been made from the papyrus strips. Then its position within the roll and ultimately within the codex could be calculated.

The Coptic Museum in Cairo, where the Nag Hammadi library is kept, has assigned a number to each book. At the time this was done, the numeration was thought to be the order in which they would be published, which in turn reflected a value judgment in terms of their importance and state of preservation. Only the very fragmentary fourth book is an exception to this tendency – it was given its relatively high position because the two tractates it contains are duplicates of tractates in the third book. For convenience of reference the tractates are numbered consecutively in each book. Although the numeration systems used for the books, tractates, and even pages have varied widely over the past generation, the numeration used here is that of the Coptic Museum and of The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices and hence should supersede older numerations.

Of the fifty-two tractates, six that are duplicates (III,1; IV,1 and 2; V,1; XII,2; and XIII,2) are not included in the present work since there is a better copy that is included. Six more were already extant when the Nag Hammadi library was discovered, either in the original Greek (VI,5 and 7, and XII,1), or in translation, in Latin (VI,8) or Coptic (II,1 and III,4). The two in Coptic are from a papyrus codex, now in Berlin, called BG 8502, which to this extent is a codex similar to the Nag Hammadi library. For this reason the other two tractates it contains are included at the end of the present work. To get an impression of the amount of literature that has survived only in the Nag Hammadi library, one may subtract the total of twelve duplications inside or outside the Nag Hammadi library and thus reach the figure of forty newly recovered texts. To be sure, a few fragments existed of three of these, one in Greek (II,2) and two in Coptic (II,5 and VII,4), but they had not been identified as such until the complete text became available in the Nag Hammadi library. Now that the whole library is accessible, fragments of still others may be identified. But such vestiges of a tractate are more tantalizing than useful. Hence a more serious limitation on the figure of forty new texts is the fact that some of these are themselves quite fragmentary (VIII,1; IX,1, 2, and 3; XI,1, 2, 3, and 4; and XII,3). It would be safe to think of the Nag Hammadi library as adding to the amount of literature that has survived from antiquity thirty fairly complete texts, and ten that are more fragmentary.

Although the Nag Hammadi library is in Coptic, the texts were originally composed in Greek. Hence the fact that they were discovered in Upper Egypt may be misleading. Some of course have been composed in Egypt, for several contain specific allusions to Egypt: Asclepius calls Egypt the “image of heaven”; On the Origin of the World appeals to “the water hydri in Egypt” and “the two bulls in Egypt” as witnesses; and The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth instructs the son to “write this book for the temple at Diospolis (Magna near Luxor or Parva near Nag Hammadi) in hieroglyphic characters.” Yet the Greek-writing authors may have been located anywhere in the ancient world where Greek was used, such as Greece itself (VI,5), or Syria (II,2), or Jordan (V,5). Much the same is the case with the Bible and other ancient texts written in various parts of the ancient world and preserved in the “dry sands of Egypt.” Thus the Nag Hammadi library involves the collecting of what was originally a Greek literary productivity by largely unrelated and anonymous authors spread through the eastern half of the ancient world and covering a period of almost half a millennium (or more, if one takes into consideration a brief section of Plato’s Republic, VI,5).

Almost nothing is known about the different persons who translated the tractates into Coptic, or those who copied, used, and buried them, other than what may be inferred from the books themselves. The Egyptian reading public in this period was largely familiar with Greek, and hence Greek literature was imported and copied extensively. A Roman garrison town, Diospolis Parva, with Greek-speaking Galatian troops from Asia Minor, was just across the Nile from the site where the Nag Hammadi library was buried. A Greek inscription reading “In behalf of the [good] fortune of Emperor [Caesar] Trajan Hadrian [Augustus]” has been found at Chenoboskia, on the right bank of the Nile in sight of the place of the burial. Greek prayers to Zeus Sarapis mentioning Antioch are found in two caves in the cliff near where the books were buried. But, more and more, Greek texts such as the Bible and the Nag Hammadi library were translated into the native Egyptian language. This can be illustrated for the region in which the library was produced, read, and buried, and for approximately the same period of time, from The Life of St. Pachomius. This text, which itself exists in both Greek and Coptic, tells that a Greek-speaking monk from Alexandria came to Pachomius, who “made him live in the same dwelling with an old brother who knew the Greek language,” while he learned the native tongue. Meanwhile Pachomius “made every effort to learn Greek by the grace of God in order to discover the way of offering him solace frequently. Then Pachomius appointed him house manager of the Alexandrian and other foreign brothers who came after him.”

When the Egyptian language is written with the Greek alphabet (plus a few letters for sounds Greeks did not make), it is called Coptic. The Nag Hammadi library is written in two Coptic dialects. Even among the texts translated into the same dialect, minor divergences point to a plurality of translators, who do not correspond to the plurality of scribes responsible for surviving copies. In the case of duplicates, different translators were involved, working from divergent Greek texts. The translation process may have been spread over a wide area of Egypt, and more than a single century.

Each codex was bound in leather. The outline of the desired book size was often scored onto the leather, whereupon the flesh side of the outlined area was lined with used papyrus pasted into thick cardboards called cartonnage, producing a hardback effect. This used papyrus consisted of Greek and Coptic letters and business documents, and has produced names of persons and places as well as dates that help to determine the time and place of the manufacture of the covers. After a cover was thus lined with cartonnage, a strip of the cover was turned in at the head and foot of the front and back cover and at the fore edge of the back cover. Since the line of the animal's spine usually ran horizontally across the cover, the narrowing of the skin leading to the animal's tail could be retained to form a flap extending from the fore edge of the front cover. To this was added a thong to encircle horizontally the closed book. This may have been a practice taken over from the manufacture of a papyrus scroll, where a parchment wrapper and thong were traditionally used to protect it and hold it closed. A thong was also needed to hold a codex closed. Each of the Nag Hammadi books has a single quire, that is to say, a single stack of sheets folded down the center to produce the writing surfaces (although in Codex I the main quire is supplemented with two smaller quires). Such large quires would tend to gape at the fore edge unless securely tied. Shorter thongs extending from the head and foot of the front and back covers were tied together to aid in holding the codex closed.

Two of the covers (IV and VIII) lack a flap on the fore edge of the front cover, though they do have the usual thong. A third cover of a similar construction (V) has such a flap added to the fore edge of the front cover. These three books thus seem to have been made from smaller skins, and the poor quality of the papyrus used for their quires confirms the impression of economy. Other covers include a leather reinforcement (called by bookbinders a "mull") that lines the spine and protects the cover and the quire from the pressure of the binding thongs that run through the fold at the center of the quire, as well as two horizontal supportive thongs lying between the cover and the mull. Three covers have such a construction (VI, IX, and X). They form a second group among the covers, together with another similarly constructed cover (II), which however is now lacking whatever lining it may have had. This group is characterized both by such advances in technique as have just been mentioned and by a higher aesthetic quality. Indeed, the cover of Codex II has rather beautiful tinted tooling. The four other covers (I, III, VII, XI) do not share distinctive traits, except for a certain primitiveness, which would make it possible to assign them to a group.

The scribes involved in producing the thirteen codices can be distinguished by their handwriting. There seem to be few clear instances of a single scribe working on more than one codex: One scribe copied most of Codex I, but a second scribe copied tractate 4 of Codex I; this second scribe also copied tractates 1 and 2 of Codex XI. A third scribe copied in a different dialect tractates 3 and 4 of Codex XI and also Codex VII. Thus three of the four books that seem unrelated to each other in terms of the way the covers were made do seem interrelated in terms of the scribes who wrote them. Conversely it was earlier thought that one scribe copied Codices IV, V, VI, VIII and IX, which would mean that the two groups distinguished in terms of leather covers must have been related by scribal hand. But more recent study of the hands has indicated that one has to do with different, even if similar, hands, that diverge most clearly just where the bookbinding divergences take place, thereby belatedly confirming, rather than relativizing, the distinction into groups based initially only on the leather covers.

The two groups of covers plus four miscellaneous covers, and the one group of scribal hands plus miscellaneous scribes, may indicate that the Nag Hammadi library is a secondary merging of what was originally a series of smaller libraries or isolated books. This would seem to be confirmed by the distribution of the duplicates. No one codex contains two copies of the same work, nor is there a duplicate tractate among the books of one group of covers. Nor did the same scribe, with but one exception, copy the same text twice. The one exception would seem to be II,4 and XIII,2, which are the same text in the same scribal hand and with almost identical wording. Yet the second copy was discarded, when Codex XIII was torn apart and only one tractate (XIII,1) preserved inside the front cover of Codex VI — together with a few opening lines of XIII,2 on the back of the last leaf, which could not be discarded without mutilating the text one was seeking to preserve (XIII,1). The fact that this scribal duplication was nullified by separating off XIII,2 (except for the unavoidable opening lines) may attest to what seems to have been an awareness of the unnecessariness of such duplication. A scribal note in Codex VI expresses concern not to displease whoever commissioned the work by duplicating something already owned. Hence when duplication does turn up in terms of the whole library, one is inclined to think the books with the duplication were not produced with the whole library of thirteen books in view. Both the tractates in Codex IV are also in Codex III, so that Codex IV is wholly superfluous in the present library. And there is a total of three copies of the Apocryphon of John (II,1; III,1; and IV,1), one from each of the three classifications of covers. Thus one may conjecture that the present library derives from at least three smaller collections.

The dating of Coptic literary hands, such as those attested in the texts before us, is much less certain than is the dating of Greek literary hands, or the dating of the cursive business hands of the day. A thorough study of the hands of the Nag Hammadi library has not yet been made, although dates ranging at least from early to late fourth century C.E. have been proposed. The texts themselves do not normally contain dates or datable historical references. But The Concept of Our Great Power may provide one reference that can serve as a point of departure for dating Codex VI: "Cease from the evil lusts and desires and (the teachings of) the Anomoeans, evil heresies that have no basis!" While the Archbishop of Alexandria, Athanasius, was in hiding in the Pachomian monasteries in the late 350s C.E., "Anomoean" heretics were flourishing for a brief period in Alexandria. Probably this text received its final form no earlier than at this time.

The papyrus used for letters and business documents and reused to thicken the leather covers may be located in time and space with more ease than can the leaves that comprise the quires bound with the help of these covers. Dates found in such "cartonnage" of Codex VII are 341, 346, and 348 C.E. This indicates that the cover of Codex VII was manufactured no earlier than the latest date, but perhaps as much as a generation after these dates. A document found in the cartonnage of Codex I mentions "Diospol[is] near Chenobos[kia]." Other locations in the same general region also occur in the cartonnage of the other covers. Some of the cartonnage in the cover of Codex VII seems to have belonged to a monk named Sansnos who was in charge of the cattle of a monastery, which would no doubt account for his close relationship to the manufacture of the leather covers. The headquarters of the monastery of the Pachomian order at Pabau, where the Basilica of Saint Pachomius was located, as well as the third Pachomian monastery at Chenoboskia, where Pachomius himself began his Christian life as a hermit, are only 8.7 and 5.3 kilometers (5.4 and 3.3 miles) respectively from the place where the library was buried. Thus the provenience of the Nag Hammadi codices has often been identified with the Pachomian Monastic Order, which among other things involved a large-scale literary program at the appropriate time and place of the production of the Nag Hammadi codices. But the publication of this cartonnage in 1981 involved a critical sifting of the evidence, which proved to be less conclusive than had been previously maintained. The relation of the Nag Hammadi codices to the Pachomian movement remains a tantalizing possibility, more concrete than any other that has been suggested, and yet far from assured.

In view of the orthodoxy of the Pachomian monasteries reflected in The Life of St. Pachomius and other monastic legends, some have hesitated to associate the Nag Hammadi library with these monasteries, unless it be that such texts were copied for ready reference in refuting heresy. But a defender of Christian orthodoxy would hardly bother to collect the non-Christian texts that are in the Nag Hammadi library. And some of the Christian texts are not explicitly "heretical" and hence would hardly have been included in such a blacklist. The very fact that the library seems to have been made up by combining several smaller collections tends to point toward individual Christian Gnostics or monasteries producing individual books or small collections for their own spiritual enlightenment, rather than to a heresy-hunting scribal campaign. Since the familiar heresy-hunting literature is in Greek, one should hesitate to postulate such a widespread heresy-hunting activity in Coptic. And the Pachomian literature transmitted through monastic channels is much more pedestrian.

Of course it is conceivable that book manufacture could have been one of the handicrafts common in monasteries to produce commodities to trade or sell for the necessities of life. Hence one could conjecture that uninscribed books were produced in the monastery and sold to Gnostics (or anyone else) to inscribe as they saw fit. But there is some evidence from that period that books were first inscribed and then bound, as when a line of writing passes through the fold at the spine. And in the Nag Hammadi library blotting is usually present on the first and last pages but not elsewhere, which may perhaps be explained as due to the dampness of the paste in the cartonnage at the time of the binding, in which case the quire would have had to have been inscribed before being bound.

The care and religious devotion reflected in the manufacture of the Nag Hammadi library hardly suggest that the books were produced out of antagonism or even disinterest in their contents, but rather reflect the veneration accorded to holy texts. The leather covers are not very ornate, compared, for example, with reports that Manichaean books were studded with jewels (though the very plain extant wooden covers of the Mani-chaeon codices of Medinet Madi are even simpler than the Nag Hammadi covers). Yet simplicity would be appropriate to the Pachomian monasteries. The Life of St. Pachomius reports: "He also taught the brothers to pay no attention to the loveliness and beauty of this world, whether it be beautiful food or clothing, or a cell, or an outwardly seductive book." The simple tooling of some of the leather covers does include crosses (II, IV, VIII). The ankh hieroglyph of life that became the Christian cross ansata is on the beautifully tooled cover of Codex II and at the end of The Prayer of the Apostle Paul. The acrostic "fish" symbol standing for the creed "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior" occurs in two scribal notes (in codices III and VII). In the first case the name of the scribe is preserved in the comment "in the flesh my name is Gongessos," which is probably the Latin name Concessus. He also had a spiritual name or title of Eugnostos. Thus he had some spiritual status, and referred to his "fellow lights in incorruptibility." Within this spiritual circle he described the text as "God-written." Even if such a scribal note was not composed by the scribe who copied the codex that has survived, but rather came from an earlier scribe who wrote an ancestor of the copy that survived, nevertheless the scribe of Codex III did not feel called upon to eliminate it, much less to replace it with a warning against heresy in the text. Some scribal notes, however, since they were written at the end of an extant codex, may be assumed to have been composed by the scribe of that particular codex. They reflect the godliness the scribe found in what he or she was copying. Codex II concludes with this note: "Remember me also, my brethren, [in] your prayers: Peace to the saints and those who are spiritual." Codex VII ends on a similar note: "The book belongs to the fatherhood. It is the son who wrote it. Bless me, O father. I bless you, O father, in peace. Amen." These scribal notes, together with the scribe's care to correct errors, tend to indicate that the scribes were of a religious persuasion congenial to the contents they were copying.

Perhaps the common presentation of the monastic movement of the fourth century C.E. as solidly orthodox is an anachronism, and more nearly reflects the situation of the later monasticism that recorded the legends about the earlier period. When a hermit withdrew from civilization into the desert, he also tended to be out of contact with the Church, for example with its fellowship, sacraments, and authority. Early in the fourth century there was a monk in the delta named Hierakas, a scribe by trade and a learned interpreter of the Bible, who was so ascetic in his views as to argue that marriage was limited to the old covenant, for no married person "can inherit the kingdom of heaven." Although this led to him being classified as a heretic, it did not prevent him from having a following. The Testimony of Truth in the Nag Hammadi library represents a similar view:

For no one who is under the law will be able to look up to the truth, for they will not be able to serve two masters. For the defilement of the Law is manifest; but undefilement belongs to the light. The Law commands (one) to take a husband (or) to take a wife, and to beget, and to multiply like the sand of the sea. But passion which is a delight to them constrains the souls of those who are begotten in this place, those who defile and those who are defiled, in order that the Law might be fulfilled through them. And they show that they are assisting the world; and they [turn] away from the light, who are unable [to pass by] the archon of [darkness] until they pay the last [penny].

The Life of St. Pachomius narrates that a “philosopher” from Panoopolis (Akhmim), where Pachomius built a monastery just 108 kilometers (67 miles) downstream from where the Nag Hammadi library was buried, came to test the monk’s “understanding of the scriptures.” Pachomius sent his assistant Theodore to meet him:

The philosopher queried him on something for which the answer was not difficult to find, “Who was not born but died? Who was born but did not die? And who died without giving off the stench of decomposition?” Theodore replied that Adam was not born but died, Enoch was born but did not die, and Lot’s wife died but, having become a pillar of salt, did not give off the stench of decomposition. The philosopher accepted these answers and departed.

This may well be a faint echo of Pachomian debates with Christian Gnostics before the middle of the fourth century C.E. Epiphanius’ efforts to run Christian Gnostics out of town took place in Egypt about the same time.

In 367 C.E. Archbishop Athanasius wrote an Easter letter that condemns heretics and their “apocryphal books to which they attribute antiquity and give the name of saints.” Theodore, by then head of the Pachomian monasteries, had the letter translated into Coptic, and “deposited it in the monastery to serve them as a rule.” There must still have been heretics or heretical books influencing the Pachomian monastic movement which made this act necessary. Of course many of the Nag Hammadi texts are indeed pseudonymous, that is to say, ascribed in their titles to some “saint” of the past. In another of the Pachomian legends one of “these books that the heretics write” but “give out under the name of saints” is quoted: “After Eve was deceived and had eaten the fruit of the tree, it is of the devil that she bore Cain.” The Hypostasis of the Archons in the Nag Hammadi library has a narrative that points in this direction:

Then the authorities came to their Adam. And when they saw his female counterpart speaking with him, they became agitated with great agitation; and they became enamored of her. They said to one another, “Come let us sow our seed in her,” and they pursued her. And she laughed at them for their witlessness and their blindness; and in their clutches, she became a tree, and left them her shadowy reflection resembling herself; and they defiled [it] foully. — And they defiled the stamp of her voice, so that by the form they had modelled, together with [their] (own) image, they made themselves liable to condemnation.

Early in the fifth century C.E. Shenoute, Abbot of the White Monastery at the same Panopolis where Pachomius had founded monasteries and from which the “philosopher” had come, attacked a group at the nearby temple of Pnueit that called itself “kingless,” worshipped the “demiurge,” and would not accept Cyril, Archbishop of Alexandria, as their “illuminator.” These terms, which Shenoute seems to borrow from the group, are so well-known in the Nag Hammadi library that it may have been a Christian Gnostic, perhaps a Sethian group, even though in his polemic Shenoute calls them pagan heretics. He seized their “books full of abomination” and “of every kind of magic.” Indeed, series of vowels and unintelligible magic words (Plotinus called it “hissing”) occur in the Nag Hammadi library itself. Actually Pachomius himself wrote to the heads of his monasteries using a code that even his successors could not decipher! Hence the Nag Hammadi library and Pachomius’ “books of spiritual letters” may not have been entirely different in appearance from what Shenoute would call a book of magic. Shenoute threatened the heretics: “I shall make you acknowledge . . . the Archbishop Cyril, or else the sword will wipe out most of you, and moreover those of you who are spared will go into exile.” Just as the Dead Sea Scrolls were put in jars for safekeeping and hidden at the time of the approach of the Roman Tenth Legion, the burial of the Nag Hammadi library in a jar may also have been precipitated by the approach of Roman authorities, who by then had become Christian.

The fact that the Nag Hammadi library was hidden in a jar suggests the intention not to eliminate but to preserve the books. For not only were the Dead Sea Scrolls put in such jars for safekeeping, but biblical manuscripts have been found similarly preserved up and down the Nile, in some cases dating from the same period and buried in the Nag Hammadi region.

In fact, a second discovery, made in 1952, of manuscripts buried in a jar a couple of centuries later than the Nag Hammadi codices, is much more certainly the remains of a library of the Pachomian monastic order than is the Nag Hammadi discovery. For this discovery included archival copies of formal letters of abbots of the Pachomian Order. And the rest of the holdings are also what one would expect of a Pachomian library: biblical, apocryphal, martyriological, and other edifying material. To be sure, there are also some Greek (and Latin) classical texts, whose presence may be explained by the assumption that persons who joined the Pachomian movement gave their worldly possessions to the Order, which would thus have acquired non-Christian texts. Later they would have been taken to be venerable texts like the others in the archives, fragile and fragmentary relics to be preserved and no longer texts to be read.

This second discovery is known locally as the Dishnā Papers, since Dishnā near the river and railroad is the large town through which the texts were marketed. But the site of the discovery was at the foot of the Jabal Abū Manā', 5.5 km (3.4 miles) northwest of Dishna, and, more significant, 5 km (3.1 miles) northeast of the headquarters of the Pachomian Order and 12 km (7.5 miles) east of the site of the discovery of the Nag Hammadi codices. This manuscript discovery has been known for the past generation in scholarly circles as the Bodmer Papyri, since the largest part of it was acquired by the Bibliothèque Bodmer near Geneva. But it is only recently, in the process of tracking down the provenience of the Nag Hammadi codices, that the provenience of the Bodmer Papyri has been identified beyond the reports of the antiquities dealers and made public to the scholarly world.

The Bible refers to burial in a jar as a way to preserve a book and to burning as the way to eliminate one (Jer 32:14-15; 36:23). The Life of St. Pachomius reports that he got rid of a book by Origen, whom he considered a heretic, by throwing it in the water, with the comment that if the Lord's name had not been in it he would have burned it. The burning of the greatest library in antiquity at Alexandria by Christians late in the fourth century C.E. suggests that such a ready solution would hardly have been overlooked if the intent had been to get rid of the Nag Hammadi library. If the codices had been part of a Pachomian library, they must have been removed not by heresy-hunters, but by devotees who cherished them enough to bury them in a jar for safekeeping, perhaps for posterity.

Two of the texts in the Nag Hammadi library refer to their being stored for safekeeping in a mountain until the end of time. The Gospel of the Egyptians concludes:

The Great Seth wrote this book with letters in one hundred and thirty years. He placed it in the mountain that is called Charaxio, in order that, at the end of the times and the eras, . . . it may come forth and reveal this incorruptible, holy race of the great savior, and those who dwell with them in love, and the great, invisible, eternal Spirit, and his only begotten Son . . .

Near the end of Allogenes a similar idea occurs:

Write down [the things that I] shall [tell] you and of which I shall remind you for the sake of those who will be worthy after you. And you will leave this book upon a mountain and you will adjure the guardian, "Come Dreadful One."

On each side of the Nile Valley cliffs rise abruptly to the desert above. The section of the cliff on the right bank marking the limit of the Nile Valley and the arable land between Chenoboskia and Pabau is called the Jabal al-Tārif. A protruding boulder shaped somewhat like a stalagmite had broken off in prehistoric times from the face of the cliff and fallen down onto the talus (the inclined plane of fallen rock that over the ages naturally collects like a buttress at the foot of a cliff). Under the northern flank of one of the huge barrel-shaped pieces of this shattered boulder the jar containing the Nag Hammadi library was secreted.

In the face of the cliff, just at the top of the talus, which can be climbed without difficulty, sixth-dynasty tombs from the reigns of Pepi I and II (2350-2200 B.C.E.) had in antiquity long since been robbed. Thus they had become cool solitary caves where a monk might well hold his spiritual retreats, as is reported of Pachomius himself, or where a hermit might have his cell. Greek prayers to Zeus Sarapis, opening lines of biblical Psalms in Coptic, and Christian crosses, all painted in red onto the walls of the caves, show that they were indeed so used. Perhaps those who cherished the Nag Hammadi library made such use of the caves, which would account for the choice of this site to bury them. The jar rested there a millennium and a half . . .

3. The Discovery

In the month of December peasants of the Naj' Ḥammādī region of Upper Egypt fertilize their crops by carrying nitrates from the talus of the Jabal al-Tārif to their fields, using the saddlebags of their camels. Two brothers, Muḥammad and Khalifah 'Alī of the al-Sammān clan, hobbled their camels on the south side of the fallen boulder and came upon the jar as they were digging around its base. Muḥammad 'Alī reports that at first he was afraid to break the jar, whose lid may have been sealed on with bitumen, for fear that a jinn might be closed up inside it; but, on reflecting that the jar might contain gold, he recovered his courage and smashed it with his mattock. Out swirled golden-like particles that disappeared into the sky – neither jinns nor gold but perhaps papyrus fragments! He wrapped the books in his tunic, slung it over his shoulder, unhobbled his camel, and carried the books home, a hovel in the hamlet of al-Qaṣr, which was the ancient site of Chenoboskia where Pachomius had begun his life as a Christian.

Half a year earlier, during the night of 7 May 1945, the father of the two brothers, whose name was 'Alī, while on his job as night watchman guarding irrigation equipment in the fields, had killed a marauder. By mid-morning he had in turn been murdered in blood vengeance. About a month after the discovery of the books, a peasant named Aḥmad fell asleep sitting in the heat of the day on the side of the dirt road near Muḥammad 'Alī's house, a jar of sugar-cane molasses for sale beside him. A neighbor pointed him out to Muḥammad 'Alī as the murderer of his father. He ran home and alerted his brothers and widowed mother, who had told her seven sons to keep their mattocks sharp. The family fell upon their victim, hacked off his limbs bit by bit, ripped out his heart, and devoured it among them, as the ultimate act of blood revenge.

Aḥmad was the son of the sheriff, Īsmā'īl Husayn, a strong man imposed on al-Qaṣr from outside, indeed, a member of the Hawāra tribe, who is so alienated from society that it considers itself non-Arabic though directly descended from the Prophet. The village of the Hawāra, Ḥamrah Dūm, is just at the foot of the Jabal al-Ṭārīf, for which reason Muḥammad 'Alī has been afraid to return to the site of the discovery lest his vengeance be in turn avenged. In fact Aḥmad's brother did avenge the death at the time by killing two members of the al-Sammān clan. Even a decade later, Aḥmad's young son, who by then was a teenager, heard that at dusk there was to be in al-Qaṣr a funeral procession of the family of Muḥammad 'Alī. He proved his manhood by sneaking into town and shooting up the procession, with a score killed and wounded. Muḥammad 'Alī proudly shows a wound just above his heart, to prove that they tried but failed in vengeance. But he stoutly refused to return to the cliff to identify the site of the discovery until a camouflage costume, a governmental escort, and of course a financial consideration combined to persuade him to change his mind.

The village of al-Qaṣr was so glad to be rid of the sheriff's son that no eye witnesses could be found to testify at the hearing. But during this peried the police tended to search Muḥammad 'Alī's home every evening for weapons. Having been told that the books were Christian, no doubt simply on the basis of the Coptic script, Muḥammad 'Alī asked the Coptic priest of Al-Qaṣr, Bāsīlīyūs 'Abd al-Masīḥ, if he could deposit the books in his house. A priest's home would hardly be searched. Coptic priests marry, and this priest's wife had a brother, Rāghib Andrawus, who went from village to village in a circuit teaching English and history in the parochial schools of the Coptic Church. Once a week when he taught in al-Qaṣr he stayed in his sister's home. On seeing one of the books (Codex III), he recognized its potential value and persuaded the priest to give it to him. He took it to Cairo and showed it to a Coptic physician interested in the Coptic language, George Sobhi, who called in the authorities from the Department of Antiquities. They took control of the book, agreeing to pay Rāghib £300. After what seemed endless delays, Rāghib finally received £250 upon agreeing to make a gift of the balance of £50 to the Coptic Museum, where the book was deposited. The Register of the Museum records the date as 4 October 1946.

Thinking the books were worthless, perhaps even a source of bad luck, the widow of 'Alī had burned part of them in the oven (probably Codex XII, of which only a few fragmentary leaves remain). Illiterate Muslim neighbors bartered or purchased the remainder for next to nothing. Nāshid Bisādah had one, and entrusted it to a gold merchant of Nag Hammadi to sell in Cairo, whereupon they divided the profit. A grain merchant is reported to have acquired another and sold it in Cairo at such a high price that he was able to set up his shop there. The villagers of al-Qaṣr identify him as Fikrī Jabrā'il, today the proprietor of the "Nag Hammadi Store" in Cairo; however, he stoutly denies any involvement, though familiar with this story. Bahīj 'Alī, a one-eyed outlaw of al-Qaṣr, got most of the books. Escorted by a well-known antiquities dealer of the region, Dhakī Baṣṭa, he went to Cairo. They first offered the books to Mansoor's shop at Shepherds Hotel, and then to the shop of Phokion J. Tano, who bought their whole stock and then went to Nag Hammadi to get whatever was left.

Most of Codex I was exported from Egypt by a Belgian antiquities dealer in Cairo, Albert Eid. It was offered for sale unsuccessfully in New York and Ann Arbor in 1949, and then on 10 May 1952 was acquired in Belgium from Eid's widow Simone by the Jung Institute of Zürich and named the "Jung Codex." It was returned to Cairo bit by bit after publication, where it is conserved in the Coptic Museum. Meanwhile Tano's collection was taken into custody by the Egyptian Department of Antiquities to prevent it from leaving the country. After Nasser came to power it was nationalized, with a token compensation of £4,000. Today the Nag Hammadi library is back together again, conserved in the Coptic Museum.

The Director of the Coptic Museum at the time of the discovery, Togo Mina, had studied in Paris under the Abbot Étienne Drioton, who had subsequently become Director of the Department of Antiquities of Egypt. Togo Mina had been a classmate of the wife of Jean Doresse, a young French scholar who came to Egypt to study Coptic monasteries. Togo Mina was glad to give him access to Codex III and to make plans with him for a predominantly French edition of the library, plans cut short by Mina's death in 1949. In 1956 a meeting of some members of an international committee in Cairo led to the publication of The Gospel of Thomas in 1959. And the Jung Codex was gradually published in six volumes from 1956 through 1975. Meanwhile the new Director of the Coptic Museum, Pahor Labib, made plans to publish the better part of the library with the German scholars Alexander Böhlig and Martin Krause.

The General Director of UNESCO, René Maheu of France, worked out an agreement in the early 1960s with the Minister of Culture and National Guidance of the United Arab Republic, Saroite Okacha, to publish a complete edition through an international committee jointly chosen by Egypt and UNESCO. But when it was discovered that many of the choicest texts had already been assigned for publication, the UNESCO plan was limited to a facsimile edition. The project was rather dormant until the International Committee for the Nag Hammadi Codices was appointed at the end of 1970. The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices was published by E.J. Brill in twelve volumes from 1972 through 1984. A number of the earlier assignments have by now been published, and complete editions in English, German and French are currently being prepared. The present volume makes use of the translations from the seventeen-volume English edition, entitled The Coptic Gnostic Library (see p. x).

With the publication of The Nag Hammadi Library in English the work has only just begun, for it marks a new beginning in the study of Gnosticism. Over a century ago students began to study Gnosticism in order to know what the heresy-hunting Church fathers were talking about. Around the turn of this century the History of Religions School broadened this issue by seeking the origins of Gnosticism throughout the ancient Near East. Between the two world wars, Hans Jonas produced a philosophical interpretation of Gnosticism that for the first time made sense of it as a possible way to understand existence. Rudolf Bultmann then reinterpreted the New Testament in terms of an interaction with Gnosticism involving appropriation as well as confrontation. Yet the results of this century of research into the origin, nature, and influence of Gnosticism stand in a certain ambivalence, as if hanging in suspense. One cannot fail to be impressed by the clairvoyance, the constructive power, the learned intuitions of scholars who, from limited and secondary sources, were able to produce working hypotheses that in fact worked so well. Yet the discovery of the Nag Hammadi library has drawn attention to how meager those sources were. For even though the discovery of the Nag Hammadi library was quite accidental and its contents somewhat arbitrary, the flood of new source material it contains cannot fail to outweigh the constructions and conjectures of previous scholarship. But, for the first generation after the discovery, the new source material was at best a trickle, and the suspense produced stagnation, as the scholarly community waited and waited. Now the time has come for a concentrated effort, with the whole Nag Hammadi library accessible, to rewrite the history of Gnosticism, to understand what it was really all about, and of course to pose new questions. Rarely has a generation of students had such an opportunity! May the readers of The Nag Hammadi Library in English share this exhilaration, and this responsibility, with those who produced it.

THE PRAYER OF THE APOSTLE PAUL (I,1)

Introduced and translated by

DIETER MUELLER

The Prayer of the Apostle Paul occupies the front flyleaf of Codex I, also known as the Jung Codex. The scribe apparently added this prayer to the collection of tractates in the codex after he had finished copying The Tripartite Tractate (I,5). The title, followed by a brief colophon, is placed at the end of the prayer. The Greek language retained in that title was no doubt the original language of the prayer as a whole. The short text is of unknown provenance. Its general gnostic affinities are clear. Details such as the reference to the "psychic God" (A,31) may indicate Valentinian connections. That association in turn suggests a date of origin between the second half of the second century and the end of the third century.

In form and content The Prayer of the Apostle Paul echoes various other compositions. It displays a striking resemblance not only to prayers in the Corpus Hermeticum (1.31-32; 5.10-11; 13.16-20) but also to invocations found in magical texts. Furthermore, its beginning is rather similar to that of the hymn of the First Stele of The Three Steles of Seth (VII,5). Both documents may use a common tradition. There are also similarities within The Gospel of Philip (II,3). In general, The Prayer of the Apostle Paul is heavily indebted to the Psalms and the Pauline letters. The most striking echo of the apostle, and at the same time a clear index of gnostic orientation, is the request to be granted "what no angel-eye has seen and no archon-ear has heard and what has not entered into the human heart" (cf. 1 Co 2:9).

THE PRAYER OF THE APOSTLE PAUL

I A, 1-B, 10

^{A.1} (Approximately two lines are missing.) ¹ [your] light, give me your [mercy! My] ¹ Redeemer, redeem me, for ⁵ [I am] yours; the one who has come ¹ forth from you. You are [my] mind; bring me forth! ¹ You are my treasure house; open for me! You ¹ [are] my fullness; take me to you! ¹ You are (my) repose; give me ¹⁰ [the] perfect thing that cannot be grasped! ¹

I invoke you, the one who is ¹ and who pre-existed in the name ¹ [which is] exalted above every name, through Jesus Christ, ¹ [the Lord] of Lords, the King of the ages; ¹⁵ give me your gifts, of which you do not repent, ¹ through the Son of Man, ¹ the Spirit, the Paraclete of ¹ [truth]. Give me authority ¹ [when I] ask you; give ²⁰ healing for my body when I ask ¹ you through the Evangelist, ¹ [and] redeem my eternal light soul ¹ and my spirit. And the First-born of the Pleroma of grace — ²⁵ reveal him to my mind!

Grant ¹ what no angel eye has ¹ [seen] and no archon ear ¹ (has) heard and what ¹ has not entered into the human heart ³⁰ which came to be angelic and (modelled) ¹ after the image of the psychic God ¹ when it was formed ¹ in the beginning, since I have ¹ faith and hope.³⁵ And place upon me your ¹ beloved, elect, ¹ and blessed greatness, the ¹ First-born, the First-begotten, ^{B.1} and the [wonderful] mystery ¹ of your house; [for] ¹ yours is the power [and] ¹ the glory and the praise ⁵ and the greatness ¹ for ever and ever. [Amen.] ¹

Prayer of Paul ¹ (the) Apostle. ¹

In Peace.

¹⁰ Christ is holy.

THE APOCRYPHON OF JAMES (I,2)

Introduced and translated by

FRANCIS E. WILLIAMS

The Apocryphon of James is a pseudonymous work translated from Greek to Coptic, which professes to be a letter written by James, the Lord's brother; the alleged recipient's name is illegible but might have been that of the early Christian heterodox teacher, Cerinthus. The letter in turn introduces a secret writing, or "apocryphon" – hence our title for the entire tractate. This apocryphon is meant for an elect few – even among the disciples, for James and Peter only – but salvation is promised to those who receive its message.

"James'" letter states that the apocryphon is written in the Hebrew alphabet, and mentions another even more secret apocryphon, which James has already sent. These details are presumably inserted for the sake of atmosphere.

The apocryphon, which comprises the bulk of our tractate, makes Jesus appear to the disciples 550 days after the resurrection, take Peter and James aside to "fill" them, and give them, in a series of speeches, his final and definitive teaching, heretofore delivered only "in parables." He then ascends to the Father's right hand, with James and Peter unsuccessfully attempting to follow. This closes the apocryphon; the letter now resumes, and states that the revelation just given was meant, not for the disciples of Jesus, but for the "children" who would be "born" later. While the disciples believed the revelation, they were angry over these later children, and James therefore dispatched them to other places. This, presumably, is meant to explain why our tractate formed no part of the apostolic preaching (or the canonical scripture?).

Jesus' speeches in the apocryphon are partly the author's composition, but incorporate older material, which seems to be the product of complex oral and perhaps written transmission; some of it can be compared with the material underlying the canonical gospels. The speeches show Jesus announcing that he has descended to save God's "beloved" sons, and inviting them to follow him back to the place from which he (and they?) came. He assures them of salvation in the strongest terms, while at the same time urging them to earnestness and zeal, and warning them that they can be lost. The first and longest of the speeches, however, is a two-page exhortation to martyrdom. Its distinctive style, manner, and subject matter suggest that it may be a later interpolation.

It is clear that the persons for whom this tractate was written made a distinction between themselves and the larger Christian church. Probably they rejected the doctrine of the atonement; they certainly ignored the second coming of Christ and the general resurrection, and hoped to ascend, in soul or spirit, to the kingdom of heaven, which they meanwhile felt to be within themselves. This outlook, together with the large amount of typically gnostic terminology in the tractate, has led most investigators to conclude that the work is Christian Gnostic, even though it lacks the Valentinian, and other well-known gnostic theologies. The reporting of a special postresurrection appearance of Jesus, and the appeal to James as a source of secret and superior tradition, are means Gnostics often used to legitimate their message.

The exhortation to martyrdom, James' letter, and the description of Jesus' appearance to the disciples, may be secondary; these and other questions relating to the document's literary history have been investigated and deserve further investigation. It has been urged that the tractate must have been written before 150 C.E., while it was still possible to speak of "remembering" orally delivered sayings of Jesus and writing them down; this language, it is argued, would not have been used after the fixing of the Gospel canon. The apocryphon's many resemblances to the Fourth Gospel's "farewell discourses" might also help to establish its date. To use these as a criterion, however, one must decide whether they are allusions to the actual text of the Fourth Gospel, or independent discussions of the same questions. In any case the tractate cannot be later than 314 C.E., when the persecution of the church, and with it the risk of martyrdom, came to an end.

THE APOCRYPHON OF JAMES

I 1, 1-16, 30

[James] writes to ¹ [...]thos: Peace ¹ [be with you from] Peace, ¹ [love from] Love, ⁵ [grace from] Grace, ¹ [faith] from Faith, ¹ life from Holy Life! ¹

Since you asked ¹ that I send ¹⁰ you a secret book ¹ which was revealed to me ¹ and Peter by the Lord, ¹ I could not turn you away ¹ or gainsay (?) you; ¹⁵ but [I have written] it in ¹ the Hebrew alphabet and ¹ sent it to you, and you ¹ alone. But since you are ¹ a minister of the salvation ²⁰ of the saints, endeavor earnestly ¹ and take care not to rehearse ¹ this text to many – this ¹ that the Savior did not wish ¹ to tell to all of us, his ²⁵ twelve disciples. ¹ But blessed will they be ¹ who will be saved through ¹ the faith of this discourse.

I ¹ also sent you, ³⁰ ten months ago, another secret ¹ book which the Savior ¹ had revealed to me. Under the circumstances, however, ¹ regard that one ¹ as revealed ³⁵ to me, James; but this one ² [untranslatable fragments] ¹ the twelve disciples ¹ [were] all sitting together ¹⁰ and recalling ¹ what the Savior had said ¹ to each one of them, whether ¹ in secret or openly, ¹ and [putting it] ¹⁵ in books – [But I] ¹ was writing that which was in [my book] – ¹ lo, the Savior appeared, [after] ¹ departing from [us while we] gazed ¹ after him. And five hundred ²⁰ and fifty days since he had risen ¹ from the dead, we said ¹ to him, "Have you departed and removed yourself from us?" ¹

But Jesus said, "No, but ¹ I shall go to the place from whence I came.²⁵ If you wish to come ¹ with me, come!"

They all answered ¹ and said, "If you bid ¹ us, we come."

He said, ¹ "Verily I say unto you,³⁰ no one will ever enter ¹ the kingdom of heaven at my ¹ bidding, but (only) because ¹ you yourselves are full. Leave ¹ James and Peter to me ³⁵ that I may fill them." And ¹ having called these two, ¹ he drew them aside and bade ¹ the rest occupy themselves ¹ with that which they were about.⁴⁰

The Savior said, "You have received mercy ³ ⁷ [untranslatable fragments] ¹ Do you not, then, desire to be filled? ¹ And your heart is drunken; ¹⁰ do you not, then, desire to be sober? ¹ Therefore, be ashamed! Henceforth, waking ¹ or sleeping, remember ¹ that you have seen ¹ the Son of Man, and ¹⁵ spoken with him in person, ¹ and listened to him in person. ¹ Woe to those who have seen the ¹ Son [of] Man; ¹ blessed will they be who ²⁰ have not seen the man, and they ¹ who have not consorted with him, and ¹ they who have not spoken with him, ¹ and they who have not listened to ¹ anything from him; yours is ²⁵ life! Know, then, that he healed ¹ you when you were ill ¹ that you might reign. Woe ¹ to those who have found relief from ¹ their illness, for they will ³⁰ relapse into illness. Blessed are ¹ they who have not been ill, and ¹ have known relief before ¹ falling ill; yours is the ¹ kingdom of God. Therefore, I ³⁵ say to you, 'Become ¹ full and leave no space within ¹ you empty, for he who is coming ¹ can mock you.'"

Then ¹ Peter replied, "Lo, ⁴⁰ three times you have told us, ⁴ 'Become [full]; but] ¹ we are full.'"

The [Savior answered] ¹ and said, ["For this cause I have said] ¹ to you, ['Become full,'] that ⁵ [you] may not [be in want. They who are in want], ¹ however, will not [be saved]. For it is good to be full, ¹ and bad to be in want. Hence, just as ¹ it is good that you (sg.) be in want and, ¹ conversely, bad that you be full, so ¹⁰ he who is full is in want, ¹ and he who is in want does not become full as ¹ he who is in want becomes full, and ¹ he who has been filled, in turn, attains ¹ due perfection. Therefore, you must be in want ¹⁵ while it is possible to fill you (pl.), and ¹ be full while it is possible for you to be in want, ¹ so that you may be able [to fill] ¹ yourselves the more. Hence become ¹ full of the Spirit, ²⁰ but be in want of ¹ reason, for reason <belongs to> the soul; ¹ in turn it is (of the nature of) soul." ¹

But I answered and said to him, "Lord, ¹ we can obey you ²⁵ if you wish, for we have forsaken ¹ our fathers ¹ and our mothers and our villages ¹ and followed you. Grant us, therefore, ¹ not to be tempted ³⁰ by the devil, the evil one." ¹

The Lord answered ¹ and said, "What is your (pl.) merit ¹ if you do the will of the Father ¹ and it is not given to you from him ³⁵ as a gift while ¹ you are tempted by ¹ Satan? But if ¹ you (pl.) are oppressed by ¹ Satan and ⁴⁰ persecuted and you do his (i.e. the Father's) ⁵ will, I [say] that he will ¹ love you, and make you equal ¹ with me, and reckon ¹ [you] to have become ⁵ beloved through his providence ¹ by your own choice. So ¹ will you not cease ¹ loving the flesh and being ¹ afraid of sufferings? Or do ¹⁰ you not know that you have yet ¹ to be abused and to be ¹ accused unjustly; ¹ and have yet to be shut ¹ up in prison, and ¹⁵ condemned ¹ unlawfully, and ¹ crucified <without> ¹ reason, and buried ¹ <shamefully>, as (was) I myself, ²⁰ by the evil one? ¹ Do you dare to spare the flesh, ¹ you for whom the Spirit is an ¹ encircling wall? If you consider ¹ how long the world existed ²⁵ <before> you, and how long ¹ it will exist after you, you will find ¹ that your life is one single day ¹ and your sufferings one ¹ single hour. For the good ³⁰ will not enter into the world. ¹ Scorn death, therefore, ¹ and take thought for life! ¹ Remember my cross ¹ and my death, and you will ³⁵ live!"

But I answered and ¹ said to him, "Lord, ¹ do not mention to us the cross ¹ and death, for they are far ⁶ from you."

The Lord answered ¹ and said, "Verily I say ¹ unto you, none will be saved ¹ unless they believe in my cross. ⁵ But those who have believed in my ¹ cross, theirs is the kingdom of ¹ God. Therefore, become seekers ¹ for death, like the dead ¹ who seek for life; ¹⁰ for that which they seek is revealed to them. ¹ And what is there ¹ to trouble them? As for you, when you examine ¹ death, it will ¹ teach you election. Verily ¹⁵ I say unto you, none ¹ of those who fear death will be saved; ¹ for the kingdom <of God> ¹ belongs to those who put themselves to death. ¹ Become better than I; make ²⁰ yourselves like the son of the Holy Spirit!" ¹

Then I asked him, ¹ "Lord, how shall we be able ¹ to prophesy to those who request ¹ us to prophesy ²⁵ to them? For there are many who ¹ ask us, and look ¹ to us to hear an oracle ¹ from us."

The Lord ¹ answered and said, "Do you not ³⁰ know that the head of ¹ prophecy was cut off with John?" ¹

But I said, "Lord, ¹ can it be possible to remove ¹ the head of prophecy?"

The Lord ³⁵ said to me, "When you (pl.) ¹ come to know what 'head' means, and ¹ that prophecy issues from the ¹ head, (then) understand the meaning of 'Its head was ⁷ removed.' At first I spoke ¹ to you (pl.) in parables ¹ and you did not understand; ¹ now I speak to ⁵ you openly, and ¹ you (still) do not perceive. Yet ¹ it was you who served me ¹ as a parable in ¹ parables, and as that which is open ¹⁰ in the (words) that are open.

“Hasten ¹ to be saved without being urged! ¹ Instead, be ¹ eager of your own accord and, ¹ if possible, arrive even before me; ¹⁵ for thus ¹ the Father will love you. ¹ “Come to hate ¹ hypocrisy and the evil ¹ thought; for it is the thought ²⁰ that gives birth to hypocrisy; ¹ but hypocrisy is far from ¹ truth.

“Do not allow ¹ the kingdom of heaven to wither; ¹ for it is like a palm shoot ²⁵ whose fruit has dropped down ¹ around it. They (i.e., the fallen fruit) put forth ¹ leaves, and after they had sprouted, ¹ they caused their womb to dry up. ¹ So it is also with the fruit which ³⁰ had grown from this single root; ¹ when it had been picked (?), ¹ fruit was borne by many (?). ¹ It (the root) was certainly good, (and) if ¹ it were possible for you to produce the ³⁵ new plants now, (you) (sg.) would find it.

“Since ¹ I have already been glorified in this fashion, ¹ why do you (pl.) hold me back ¹ in my eagerness to go? 8 For after the [labor], you have ¹ compelled me to stay with ¹ you another eighteen days for ¹ the sake of the parables. It was enough ⁵ for some (to listen) to the ¹ teaching and understand ‘The Shepherds’ and ¹ ‘The Seed’ and ‘The Building’ and ‘The Lamps of ¹ the Virgins’ and ‘The Wage of the ¹ Workmen’ and ‘The Didrachmae’ and ‘The ¹⁰ Woman.’

“Become earnest about ¹ the word! For as to the word, ¹ its first part is faith; ¹ the second, love; the ¹ third, works; ¹⁵ for from these comes life. ¹ For the word is like a ¹ grain of wheat; when someone ¹ had sown it, he had faith in it; and ¹ when it had sprouted, he loved it because he had seen ²⁰ many grains in place of one. And ¹ when he had worked, he was saved because he had ¹ prepared it for food, (and) again he ¹ left (some) to sow. So also ¹ can you yourselves receive ²⁵ the kingdom of heaven; ¹ unless you receive this through knowledge, ¹ you will not be able to find it.

“Therefore, ¹ I say to you, ¹ be sober; do not be deceived! ³⁰ And many times have I said to you all together, ¹ and also to you alone, ¹ James, have I said, ¹ ‘Be saved!’ And I have commanded ¹ you (sg.) to follow me, ³⁵ and I have taught you ¹ what to say before the archons. ¹ Observe that I have descended ¹ and have spoken and undergone tribulation ¹ and carried off my crown 9 after saving you (pl.). For ¹ I came down to dwell with ¹ you (pl.) so that you (pl.) in turn ¹ might dwell with me. And, ⁵ finding your houses ¹ unceiled, I have made my abode ¹ in the houses that could receive me ¹ at the time of my descent. ¹

“Therefore, trust ¹⁰ in me, my brethren; understand ¹ what the great light is. The Father ¹ has no need of me, ¹ – for a father does not need a son, ¹ but it is the son who needs ¹⁵ the father – though I go to him. ¹ For the Father ¹ of the Son has no need of you. ¹

“Hearken to the word; ¹ understand knowledge; love ²⁰ life, and no one will persecute ¹ you, nor will anyone ¹ oppress you, other ¹ than you yourselves. ¹

“O you wretches; O ²⁵ you unfortunates; O ¹ you pretenders to the truth; ¹ O you falsifiers of knowledge; ¹ O you sinners against the Spirit: ¹ can you still bear to ³⁰ listen, when it behooved you ¹ to speak from the first? ¹ Can you still bear to ¹ sleep, when it behooved you to be awake ¹ from the first, so that ³⁵ the kingdom of heaven might receive you? 10 Verily I say unto you, ¹ it is easier for a pure one ¹ to fall into defilement, and for ¹ a man of light to fall ⁵ into darkness, than for you to reign ¹ or not reign.

“I have remembered ¹ your tears and your mourning ¹ and your anguish, (while you say) ‘They are far ¹ behind us.’ But now, you who are ¹⁰ outside of the Father’s inheritance, ¹ weep where it is necessary ¹ and mourn and ¹ preach what is good, ¹ as the Son is ascending as he should. ¹⁵ Verily I say ¹ unto you, had I been sent ¹ to those who listen to me, and ¹ had I spoken with them, ¹ I would never have come ²⁰ down to earth. So, ¹ then, be ashamed for these things. ¹

“Behold, I shall depart from you ¹ and go away, and do not wish ¹ to remain with you any longer, just as ²⁵ you yourselves have not wished it. ¹ Now, therefore, follow ¹ me quickly. This is why ¹ I say unto you, ‘for your sakes ¹ I came down.’ You are ³⁰ the beloved; you are they ¹ who will be the cause of life ¹ in many. Invoke the Father, ¹ implore God often, ¹ and he will give to you. Blessed ³⁵ is he who has seen you with Him ¹ when He was proclaimed among the ¹ angels, and glorified among ¹ the saints; yours (pl.) is life. ¹ Rejoice and be glad as 11 sons of God. Keep his will ¹ that you may be saved; ¹ accept reproof from me and ¹ save yourselves. I intercede ⁵ on your behalf with the Father, and he will ¹ forgive you much.”

And when we ¹ had heard these words, we became glad, ¹ for we had been grieved ¹ at the words we have mentioned ¹⁰ before. But when he saw us ¹ rejoicing, he said, “Woe to you (pl.) ¹ who lack an advocate! ¹ Woe to you, who stand in need ¹ of grace! Blessed will they be ¹⁵ who have ¹ spoken out and obtained ¹ grace for themselves. Liken ¹ yourselves to foreigners; ¹ of what sort are they in the eyes of your ²⁰ city? Why are you disturbed ¹ when you cast yourselves away ¹ of your own accord and ¹ separate yourselves from your city? Why ¹ do you abandon your dwelling place ²⁵ of your own accord, ¹ making it ready for those who want ¹ to dwell in it? O you ¹ outcasts and fugitives, woe ¹ to you, for you will be caught! Or ³⁰ do you perhaps think that the Father ¹ is a lover of mankind, or that he is ¹ won over without prayers, or that he ¹ grants remission to one on another's behalf, or ¹ that he bears with one who asks? — ³⁵ For he knows the desire and ¹ also what it is that the flesh needs! — ¹ (Or do you think) that it is not this (flesh) that desires ¹ the soul? For without the soul ¹ the body does not sin, just as 12 the soul is not saved without ¹ [the] spirit. But if the soul ¹ is saved (when it is) without evil, and ¹ the spirit is also saved, then the body ⁵ becomes free from sin. For it is the spirit ¹ that raises the soul, but the body that ¹ kills it; ¹ that is, it is it (the soul) which kills ¹ itself. Verily I say unto you, ¹⁰ he will not forgive the soul the sin ¹ by any means, nor the flesh ¹ the guilt; for none of those who have ¹ worn the flesh will be saved. ¹ For do you think that many have ¹⁵ found the kingdom of heaven? ¹ Blessed is he who has seen himself as ¹ a fourth one in heaven!" ¹

When we heard these words, we were distressed. ¹ But when he saw that we were distressed, ²⁰ he said, "For this cause I tell ¹ you this, that you may ¹ know yourselves. For the kingdom ¹ of heaven is like an ear of grain after it ¹ had sprouted in a field. And ²⁵ when it had ripened, it scattered its ¹ fruit and again filled the field ¹ with ears for another year. You ¹ also, hasten to reap ¹ an ear of life for yourselves that ³⁰ you may be filled with the kingdom! ¹

"And as long as I am ¹ with you, give heed to me ¹ and obey me; but ¹ when I depart from you, ³⁵ remember me. And remember me ¹ because when I was with you, ¹ you did not know me. ¹ Blessed will they be who have ¹ known me; woe to those who have ⁴⁰ heard and have not believed! ¹ Blessed will they be who 13 have not seen, [yet have believed]! ¹

"And once more I [prevail upon] you, ¹ for I am revealed to you (pl.) ¹ building a house which is of great value to ⁵ you when you find shelter ¹ beneath it, just as it will be able ¹ to stand by your neighbors' house ¹ when it threatens to fall. Verily ¹ I say unto you, woe ¹⁰ to those for whose sakes I was sent ¹ down to this place; blessed ¹ will they be who ascend ¹ to the Father! Once more I ¹ reprove you, you who are; ¹⁵ become like those who are not, ¹ that you may be with those who ¹ are not.

"Do not make ¹ the kingdom of heaven a desert ¹ within you. Do not be proud ²⁰ because of the light that illumines, but ¹ be to yourselves ¹ as I myself am ¹ to you. For your sakes I have ¹ placed myself under the curse, that you ²⁵ may be saved.” ¹

But Peter replied ¹ to these words and said, ¹ “Sometimes you urge ¹ us on to the kingdom of ³⁰ heaven, and then again you turn ¹ us back, Lord; sometimes ¹ you persuade and draw ¹ us to faith and promise ¹ us life, and then again you cast ³⁵ us forth from the kingdom ¹ of heaven.”

But the Lord answered ¹ and said to us, “I have given you (pl.) ¹ faith many times; moreover, ¹ I have revealed myself to you (sg.), 14 James, and you (pl.) have not ¹ known me. Now again I ¹ see you (pl.) rejoicing many times; ¹ and when you are elated ⁵ at the promise of life, ¹ are you yet sad, and do you ¹ grieve, when you are instructed ¹ in the kingdom? But you, through ¹ faith [and] knowledge, have received ¹⁰ life. Therefore, disdain ¹ the rejection when you ¹ hear it, but when you hear ¹ the promise, rejoice the more. ¹ Verily I say unto you, ¹⁵ he who will receive life and ¹ believe in the kingdom will ¹ never leave it, not even if ¹ the Father wishes ¹ to banish him.

“These are the things that I shall tell ²⁰ you so far; now, however, I shall ¹ ascend to the place from whence I came. ¹ But you, when I was eager ¹ to go, have cast me out, and ¹ instead of accompanying me, ²⁵ you have pursued me. ¹ But pay heed to the glory that awaits ¹ me, and, having opened ¹ your heart, listen to the hymns ¹ that await me up in the heavens; ³⁰ for today I must ¹ take (my place at) the right hand of the Father. ¹ But I have said (my) last word to ¹ you, and I shall depart from you, ¹ for a chariot of spirit has borne me aloft, ³⁵ and from this moment on I shall strip myself ¹ that I may clothe myself. ¹ But give heed; blessed ¹ are they who have proclaimed ¹ the Son before his descent ⁴⁰ that, when I have come, I might ascend (again). ¹ Thrice blessed 15 are they who [were] ¹ proclaimed by the Son ¹ before they came to be, that ¹ you might have a portion ⁵ among them.”

Having said these words, ¹ he departed. But we bent (our) knee(s), ¹ I and Peter, and gave thanks ¹ and sent our heart(s) upwards ¹ to heaven. We heard with ¹⁰ our ears, and saw with ¹ our eyes, the noise of wars ¹ and a trumpet blare ¹ and a great turmoil.

And ¹ when we had passed beyond ¹⁵ that place, we sent our ¹ mind(s) farther upwards and ¹ saw with our eyes and heard ¹ with our ears hymns ¹ and angelic benedictions and ²⁰ angelic rejoicing. And ¹ heavenly majesties were ¹ singing praise, and we too ¹ rejoiced.

After this ¹ again, we wished to send our ²⁵ spirit upward to the ¹ Majesty, and after ascending we ¹ were not permitted to see or hear ¹ anything, for the other ¹ disciples called us and ³⁰ asked us, “What did you (pl.) ¹ hear from the ¹ Master? And what has ¹ he said to you? And where ¹ did he go?"

But we answered ³⁵ them, "He has ascended and ¹ has given us a pledge and ¹ promised life to us all and ¹ revealed to us children (?) ¹ who are to come after us, after bidding 16 [us] love them, as we would be ¹ [saved] for their sakes."

And ¹ when they heard (this), they indeed believed ¹ the revelation, but were displeased ⁵ about those to be born. And so, not wishing ¹ to give them offense, ¹ I sent each one to another ¹ place. But I myself went ¹ up to Jerusalem, praying that I ¹⁰ might obtain a portion among the beloved, ¹ who will be made manifest. ¹

And I pray that ¹ the beginning may come from you, ¹ for thus I shall be capable of ¹⁵ salvation, since they will be ¹ enlightened through me, by my faith — ¹ and through another (faith) that is ¹ better than mine, for I would that ¹ mine be the lesser. ²⁰ Endeavor earnestly, then, to make ¹ yourself like them and ¹ pray that you may obtain a portion ¹ with them. For because of what ¹ I have said, the Savior did ²⁵ not make the revelation to us ¹ for their sakes. We do, indeed, proclaim ¹ a portion with those ¹ for whom the proclamation was made, ¹ those whom the Lord has made his ³⁰ sons.

THE GOSPEL OF TRUTH (I,3 AND XII,2)

Introduced and translated by

HAROLD W. ATTRIDGE and GEORGE W. MACRAE

The Gospel of Truth is a Christian Gnostic text with clear affinities to the Valentinian school, offering a subtle yet moving reflection on the person and work of Jesus. The tractate has no explicit title in the manuscript and is known by its incipit. Many other works in antiquity, such as the “gospel” of Mark and the “revelation” of John, were similarly identified by their opening words. A Valentinian work entitled the “Gospel of Truth” is attested in the Adversus Haereses (3.11.9) of Irenaeus. Unfortunately the heresiologist reveals little about the content of the work, except that it differed significantly from the canonical gospels. Given the general Valentinian affinities of the text of Codex I, it is quite possible that it is identical with the work known to Irenaeus. If so, a date of composition in the middle of the second century (between 140 and 180 C.E.) would be established. On the basis of literary and conceptual affinities between this text and the exiguous fragments of Valentinus, some scholars have suggested that the Gnostic teacher himself was the author. That remains a distinct possibility, although it cannot be definitively established. Whatever its precise date and authorship, the work was certainly composed in Greek in an elaborate rhetorical style, by a consummate literary artist.

Despite its title, this work is not a gospel of the sort found in the New Testament, since it does not offer a continuous narration of the deeds, teachings, passion, and resurrection of Jesus. The term “gospel” in the incipit preserves its early sense of “good news.” It defines the text’s subject, not its genre, which is best understood as a homily. Like other early Christian homilies, such as the Epistle to the Hebrews, The Gospel of Truth alternates doctrinal exposition with parænesis (e.g., 32,31-33,32) and, like that canonical work, it reflects on the significance of the salvific work of Jesus from a special theological perspective.

Identification of the work as a homily says little about its literary or theological dynamics. Analysis of both surface structure and underlying conceptual scheme is made difficult by the elusive character of the discourse, which combines allusions to familiar elements of early Christian tradition, sometimes in unusual associations, with references to less familiar notions. Similarly elusive is the frame of reference of the text, which seems to slip quite easily from cosmic to historical, then to personal or psychological perspectives. These qualities of the work may indicate something of its intended function. Traditions familiar from the New Testament are given a new meaning by being set in a conceptual environment, the structure of which remains artfully obscured. Nonetheless, certain key themes and perspectives characteristic of Valentinian theology, such as the principle that knowledge of the Father destroys ignorance (18,10-11; 24,30-32), are emphasized. The work was thus probably designed to introduce Valentinian soteriological insights to members of the great church.

The work is divided into three large blocks of exposition separated by two formally distinct units, a festive "Litany on the Word" (23,18-24,9) and a par-aenetic appeal (32,31-33,32). Each of the three blocks of exposition also contains three thematically distinct sections. After an introduction (16,31-17,4), the first block begins with a description of the generation of Error (17,4-18,11), which comes forth from the Father, but for which the Father is not responsible, and by which he is not diminished. A mythological account, like that of the fall of Sophia, found in many gnostic texts (c.f., e.g., The Hypostasis of the Archons or On the Origin of the World), no doubt underlies this description of Error. The text then (18,11-19,27) turns to Jesus and his work as revealer and teacher. To illustrate the last notion, the text appeals to traditions like that of Jesus in the temple in Luke 2, although the allusion may be to noncanonical accounts of the youth of Jesus. The final segment of the first block (19,27-24,9) mentions, without any docetic qualifications, the death of Jesus (20,25), then interprets that event, with images drawn from Colossians and the Apocalypse, as an act of revelation. That act reveals the essence of the Father and the origin and destiny of the human self in Him. Through that insight the powers of Error are overcome.

The second major block of exposition (24,9-33,32) describes the effects of the revelation of the "gospel of truth." It produces unity with the Father (24,9-27,7). It makes possible authentic human existence, imaged in traditional gnostic terms as a state of wakefulness (27,7-30,16), a condition of joy and delight graphically contrasted with the nightmarish existence of those in ignorance. Finally the revelation opens the way to ultimate return to the Father (30,16-32,30).

The final block of exposition focuses on the process of reintegration to the primordial source. The return begins (33,33-36,39) as gentle attraction, imaged as an alluring perfume. That attractive fragrance is in fact the spirit of incorruptibility which produces forgiveness. The agent of the return (36,39-40,23) is the Son, who is the name of the Father. The identification of Son and Name involves the most subtle of the reflections of the text (38,6-40,23), combining ancient Jewish-Christian exaltation patterns with philosophical semantics. The final portion of the text (40,23-41,14) describes in festive terms the ultimate goal of the process of return, rest in the Father. Those who recognize that their destiny is in the source from which they have come are the children whom the Father loves.

The Gospel of Truth's combination of literary and conceptual sophistication with genuine religious feeling suggests much better than the rather dry accounts of gnostic systems in the heresiologists why the teaching of Valentinus and his school had such an appeal for many Christians of the second century.

The following translation is based on the text of Codex I; the text of Codex XII is very fragmentary.

THE GOSPEL OF TRUTH

I 16, 31-43, 24

The gospel of truth is joy ¹ for those who have received from ¹ the Father of truth the grace of knowing him, ¹ through the power of the Word that came forth from ³⁵ the pleroma, the one who is in the thought ¹ and the mind of the Father, that is, ¹ the one who is addressed as ¹ the Savior, (that) being the name of the work he is ¹ to perform for the redemption of those who were 17 ignorant of the Father, while in the name [of] ¹ the gospel is the proclamation ¹ of hope, being discovery ¹ for those who search for him.

When ⁵ the totality went about searching for the one ¹ from whom they had come forth — and the totality was ¹ inside of him, the ¹ incomprehensible, inconceivable one ¹ who is superior to every thought — ¹⁰ ignorance of the Father brought about anguish ¹ and terror; and the anguish ¹ grew solid like a fog, ¹ so that no one was able to see. ¹ For this reason error ¹⁵ became powerful; it worked on its own matter ¹ foolishly, ¹ not having known the truth. It set about with a creation, ¹ preparing with power and ²⁰ beauty the substitute for the truth. ¹

This was not, then, a humiliation for him, ¹ the incomprehensible, inconceivable one, ¹ for they were nothing, the anguish and the oblivion and the creature ²⁵ of deceit, while the established ¹ truth is immutable, ¹ imperturbable, perfect in beauty. ¹ For this reason, despise ¹ error.

Thus ³⁰ it had no root; it fell into ¹ a fog regarding the Father, while it was involved in ¹ preparing works and ¹ oblivions and terrors, in order that ¹ by means of these it might entice those ³⁵ of the middle and capture ¹ them.

The oblivion of error was ¹ not revealed. It is not a 18 [...] from the Father. Oblivion ¹ did not come into existence from the Father, ¹ although it did indeed come into existence because of him. ¹ But what comes into existence in him is knowledge, ⁵ which appeared in ¹ order that oblivion might vanish ¹ and the Father might be known. Since ¹ oblivion came into existence because ¹ the Father was not known, then if ¹⁰ the Father comes to be known, oblivion ¹ will not exist from that moment on.

Through this, ¹ the gospel of the one who is searched ¹ for, which <was> revealed to those who ¹ are perfect through the mercies ¹⁵ of the Father, the hidden mystery, ¹ Jesus, the Christ, ¹ enlightened those who were in darkness ¹ through oblivion. ¹ He enlightened ¹ them; he showed (them) a way; ²⁰ and the way is the truth ¹ which he taught them.

For this reason ¹ error grew angry at him, ¹ persecuted him, was distressed at him ¹ (and) was brought to naught. He was nailed to a tree (and) he ²⁵ became a fruit of the knowledge of ¹ the Father. It did not, however, cause destruction because ¹ it was eaten, but to those who ate it ¹ it gave (cause) to become glad ¹ in the discovery, and he ³⁰ discovered them in himself, ¹ and they discovered him in themselves.

As for the ¹ incomprehensible, inconceivable one, the ¹ Father, the perfect one, the one who ¹ made the totality, within him is ³⁵ the totality and of him the totality has need. ¹ Although he retained their perfection ¹ within himself which he did not give ¹ to the totality, the Father was not jealous. ¹ What jealousy indeed (could there be) ⁴⁰ between himself and his members? 19 For, if this aeon had thus [received] ¹ their [perfection], they could not have come [...] ¹ the Father. He retains within himself their perfection, ⁵ granting it to them as a return to him ¹ and a perfectly unitary ¹ knowledge. It is he who fashioned ¹ the totality, and within him is the totality ¹ and the totality was in need ¹⁰ of him.

As in the case of ¹ a person of whom some ¹ are ignorant, he ¹ wishes to have them know him and ¹ love him, so — ¹⁵ for what did the totality have need of ¹ if not knowledge regarding ¹ the Father? — he became a guide, ¹ restful and leisurely. ¹ In schools he appeared (and) he spoke ²⁰ the word as a teacher. ¹ There came the men wise ¹ in their own estimation, ¹ putting him to the test. ¹ But he confounded them because they ²⁵ were foolish. They hated ¹ him because they were not really ¹ wise.

After all these, ¹ there came the little ¹ children also, those to whom ³⁰ the knowledge of the Father belongs. Having been strengthened, ¹ they learned about the impressions ¹ of the Father. They knew, ¹ they were known; they were glorified, they ¹ glorified. There was manifested in their ³⁵ heart the living book ¹ of the living — the one written ¹ in the thought and the mind 20 [of the] Father, which from before the ¹ foundation of the totality was within ¹ his incomprehensibility — that (book) ¹ which no one was able to take, ⁵ since it remains for the one who will take it ¹ to be slain. No one could have become manifest ¹ from among those who have believed ¹ in salvation unless ¹ that book had appeared. ¹⁰ For this reason the merciful one, the faithful one, ¹ Jesus, was patient in accepting sufferings ¹ until he took that book, ¹ since he knows that his death ¹ is life for many. ¹⁵

Just as there lies hidden in a will, before ¹ it is opened, the fortune ¹ of the deceased master of the house, ¹ so (it is) with the totality, which ¹ lay hidden while the Father of the totality was ²⁰ invisible, being something which is ¹ from him, from whom ¹ every space comes forth. ¹ For this reason Jesus appeared; ¹ he put on that book; ²⁵ he was nailed to a tree; ¹ he published the edict ¹ of the Father on the cross. O ¹ such great teaching! He draws ¹ himself down to death though life ³⁰ eternal clothes him. Having stripped ¹ himself of the perishable rags, ¹ he put on imperishability, ¹ which no one ¹ can possibly take away from him. Having entered ³⁵ the empty spaces of ¹ terrors, he passed through ¹ those who were stripped naked by ¹ oblivion, being knowledge ¹ and perfection, proclaiming the things that are in the heart, 21 [. . .] ¹ teach those who will receive teaching. ¹

But those who are to receive teaching [are] ¹ the living who are inscribed in the book ⁵ of the living. It is about themselves that they receive instruction, ¹ receiving it ¹ from the Father, turning ¹ again to him. Since the ¹ perfection of the totality is in the Father, ¹⁰ it is necessary for the totality to ¹ ascend to him. Then, if ¹ one has knowledge, he receives what are ¹ his own and draws ¹ them to himself. For he who is ¹⁵ ignorant is in need, and ¹ what he lacks is great, ¹ since he lacks that which will ¹ make him perfect. Since the perfection of ¹ the totality is in the Father ²⁰ and it is necessary for the totality to ¹ ascend to him and for each ¹ one to receive what are his own, ¹ he enrolled them in advance, having ¹ prepared them to give to those ²⁵ who came forth from him.

Those ¹ whose name he knew in advance ¹ were called at the end, ¹ so that one who has knowledge is ¹ the one whose name the Father ³⁰ has uttered. For he whose name ¹ has not been spoken is ignorant. ¹ Indeed, how is one ¹ to hear if his name has not ¹ been called? For he who is ³⁵ ignorant until the end is a creature ¹ of oblivion, and he will ¹ vanish along with it. If not, ¹ how is it that these miserable ones have 22 no name, (how is it that) they do not have ¹ the call? Therefore, ¹ if one has knowledge, he is ¹ from above. If he is called, ⁵ he hears, he answers, ¹ and he turns to him who is calling ¹ him, and ascends to him. And ¹ he knows in what manner he ¹ is called. Having knowledge, he does ¹⁰ the will of the one who called ¹ him, he wishes to be pleasing to him, he ¹ receives rest. Each one's name ¹ comes to him. He who is to have knowledge ¹ in this manner knows where he comes ¹⁵ from and where he is going. ¹ He knows as one ¹ who having become drunk has turned away from ¹ his drunkenness, (and) having returned to himself, ¹ has set right what ²⁰ are his own.

He has brought many ¹ back from error. He has gone ¹ before them to their places, ¹ from which they had moved away, ¹ since it was on account ²⁵ of the depth that they received error, the depth of the one who encircles ¹ all spaces while there is none ¹ that encircles him. It was a great ¹ wonder that they were in the Father, ¹ not knowing him, and (that) they were ³⁰ able to come forth by themselves, ¹ since they were unable to ¹ comprehend or to know the one ¹ in whom they were. For if ¹ his will had not thus emerged from him — ³⁵ for he revealed it ¹ in view of a knowledge in which ¹ all its emanations concur. ¹

This is the knowledge of ¹ the living book which he revealed to the 23 aeons, at the end, as [his letters], ¹ revealing how ¹ they are not vowels ¹ nor are they ⁵ consonants, ¹ so that one might read them and ¹ think of something foolish, ¹ but they are letters of the ¹ truth which they alone speak ¹⁰ who know them. ¹ Each letter is a complete <thought> ¹ like a complete ¹ book, since they are ¹ letters written by ¹⁵ the Unity, the Father having ¹ written them for the aeons in order that by ¹ means of his letters ¹ they should know the Father.

While his wisdom ¹ contemplates ²⁰ the Word, and his teaching ¹ utters it, his knowledge ¹ has revealed <it>. ¹ While forbearance is ¹ a crown upon it, ²⁵ and his gladness is in harmony ¹ with it, his glory ¹ has exalted it, his image ¹ has revealed it, ¹ his repose has ³⁰ received it into itself, his love ¹ has made a body over it, ¹ his fidelity has embraced ¹ it. In this way the Word ¹ of the Father goes ³⁵ forth in the totality, as the fruit 24 [of] his heart and ¹ an impression of his will. ¹ But it supports the totality; it ¹ chooses them and also receives ⁵ the impression of the totality, ¹ purifying them, bringing them back ¹ into the Father, into the Mother, ¹ Jesus of the infinite ¹ sweetness.

The Father reveals ¹⁰ his bosom. — Now his bosom ¹ is the Holy Spirit. — He ¹ reveals what is hidden of him — ¹ what is hidden of him is ¹ his Son — so that through ¹⁵ the mercies of the Father ¹ the aeons may know him ¹ and cease laboring in search of ¹ the Father, resting there ¹ in him, knowing ²⁰ that this is the rest. Having ¹ filled the deficiency, he abolished ¹ the form — the form of ¹ it is the world, that ¹ in which he served. — ²⁵ For the place where there is envy ¹ and strife is deficient, ¹ but the place where (there is) Unity ¹ is perfect. Since the deficiency ¹ came into being because the ³⁰ Father was not known, therefore, when ¹ the Father is known, ¹ from that moment on the deficiency will no longer exist. As ¹ in the case of the ignorance ¹ of a person, when he comes ³⁵ to have knowledge, his ignorance ¹ vanishes of itself, ¹ as the darkness vanishes ¹ when light appears, 25 so also ¹ the deficiency vanishes ¹ in the perfection. So ¹ from that moment on the form is not apparent, ⁵ but it will vanish ¹ in the fusion of Unity, ¹ for now their works lie scattered. In time Unity will perfect¹⁰ the spaces. It is within Unity that each one will attain himself; within knowledge he will purify himself from multiplicity into¹⁵ Unity, consuming matter within himself like fire, and darkness by light, death by life.

If indeed these things have happened²⁰ to each one of us, then we must see to it above all that the house will be holy and silent for the Unity.²⁵ (It is) as in the case of some people who moved out of dwellings having jars that in spots were not good.³⁰ They would break them, and the master of the house would not suffer loss. Rather <he> is glad because in place of the bad jars (there are) full ones which are made³⁵ perfect. For such is the judgment which has come from 26 above. It has passed judgment on everyone; it is a drawn sword, with two edges, cutting on either side. When the⁵ Word appeared, the one that is within the heart of those who utter it — it is not a sound alone but it became a body — a great disturbance took place among¹⁰ the jars because some had been emptied, others filled; that is, some had been supplied, others poured out, some had been purified, still¹⁵ others broken up. All the spaces were shaken and disturbed because they had no order nor stability. Error was upset, not knowing²⁰ what to do; it was grieved, in mourning, afflicting itself because it knew nothing. When knowledge drew near it — this²⁵ is the downfall of (error) and all its emanations — error is empty, having nothing inside.

Truth appeared; all its emanations knew it.³⁰ They greeted the Father in truth with a perfect power that joins them with the Father. For, as for everyone who loves the truth — because the truth is the mouth³⁵ of the Father; his tongue is the Holy Spirit — he who is joined 27 to the truth is joined to the Father's mouth by his tongue, whenever he is to receive the Holy Spirit,⁵ since this is the manifestation of the Father and his revelation to his aeons.

He manifested what was hidden of him; he explained it. For who contains,¹⁰ if not the Father alone? All the spaces are his emanations. They have known that they came forth from him like children who are from a grown¹⁵ man. They knew that they had not yet received form nor yet received a name, each one of which the Father begets.²⁰ Then, when they receive form by his knowledge, though truly within him, they do not know him. But the Father is perfect, knowing²⁵ every space within him. If he wishes, he manifests whomever he wishes by giving him form and giving him a name, and he gives a name³⁰ to him and brings it about that those come into existence who, before they come into existence, are ignorant of him who fashioned them.

I do not say, then, that ³⁵ they are nothing (at all) who have not yet come into existence, but they are 28 in him who will wish that they come into existence when he wishes, like the time that is to come. ⁵ Before all things appear, he knows what he will produce. But the fruit which is not yet manifest does not know anything, nor ¹⁰ does it do anything. Thus, also, every space which is itself in the Father is from the one who exists, who established it ¹⁵ from what does not exist. For he who has no root has no fruit either, but though he thinks to himself, ²⁰ "I have come into being," yet he will perish by himself. For this reason, he who did not exist at all will never come into existence. What, then, did he ²⁵ wish him to think of himself? This: "I have come into being like the shadows and phantoms of the night." When the light shines on the terror ³⁰ which that person had experienced, he knows that it is nothing.

Thus they were ignorant of the Father, he being the one 29 whom they did not see. Since it was terror and disturbance and instability and doubt and ⁵ division, there were many illusions at work by means of these, and (there were) empty fictions, as if they were sunk in sleep ¹⁰ and found themselves in disturbing dreams. Either (there is) a place to which they are fleeing, or without strength they come (from) having chased after others, or they are involved in ¹⁵ striking blows, or they are receiving blows themselves, or they have fallen from high places, or they take off into the air though they do not even have wings. ²⁰ Again, sometimes (it is as) if people were murdering them, though there is no one even pursuing them, or they themselves are killing their neighbors, for they have been stained with ²⁵ their blood. When those who are going through all these things wake up, they see nothing, they who were in the midst ³⁰ of all these disturbances, for they are nothing. Such is the way of those who have cast ignorance aside ³⁵ from them like sleep, not esteeming it as anything, nor do they esteem its 30 works as solid things either, but they leave them behind like a dream in the night. The ⁵ knowledge of the Father they value as the dawn. This is the way each one has acted, as though asleep at the time when he was ignorant. ¹⁰ And this is the way he has <come to knowledge>, as if he had awakened. {and} Good for the man who will return and awaken. And ¹⁵ blessed is he who has opened the eyes of the blind.

And the Spirit ran after him, hastening from waking him up.

Having extended his hand ²⁰ to him who lay upon the ¹ ground, he set him up ¹ on his feet, for ¹ he had not yet risen. ¹ He gave them the means of knowing ²⁵ the knowledge of the Father and the ¹ revelation of his Son. ¹ For, when they had seen him and had ¹ heard him, he granted them to ¹ taste him and ³⁰ to smell him and ¹ to touch the ¹ beloved Son.

When he had appeared ¹ instructing them about the Father, ¹ the incomprehensible one, when he had breathed into them ³⁵ what is in the thought, doing ¹ his will, when many had ¹ received the light, they turned 31 to him. For the material ones were strangers ¹ and did not see his likeness ¹ and had not known ¹ him. For he came ⁵ by means of fleshly ¹ form, while nothing blocked ¹ his course because ¹ incorruptibility is irresistible, ¹ since he, again, spoke ¹⁰ new things, still speaking about ¹ what is in the heart of the Father, having ¹ brought forth the flawless word. ¹

When light had spoken ¹ through his mouth, ¹⁵ as well as his voice ¹ which gave birth to life, he ¹ gave them thought and understanding ¹ and mercy and salvation and the powerful spirit ¹ from the infiniteness ²⁰ and the sweetness of the Father. ¹ Having made punishments ¹ and tortures cease — for it was they which ¹ were leading astray from his face some ¹ who were in need of mercy, in ²⁵ error and in bonds — ¹ he both destroyed them with power ¹ and confounded them with knowledge. ¹ He became a ¹ way for those who were gone astray ³⁰ and knowledge for those who were ¹ ignorant, a discovery for those ¹ who were searching, and a support ¹ for those who were wavering, ¹ immaculateness for those who ³⁵ were defiled.

He is the shepherd ¹ who left behind the ninety- 32 nine sheep which were not lost. ¹ He went searching for the one which ¹ had gone astray. He rejoiced when he ¹ found it, for ninety-nine ⁵ is a number that is in the left hand ¹ which holds it. But ¹ when the one is found, ¹ the entire number ¹ passes to the right (hand). As ¹⁰ that which lacks the one — that is, ¹ the entire right (hand) — ¹ draws what was deficient and ¹ takes it from the ¹ left-hand side and brings (it) to the ¹⁵ right, so too the number ¹ becomes one hundred. It is the sign of the one who is in ¹ their sound; it is the Father. ¹ Even on the Sabbath, he labored for the sheep ¹ which he found fallen into the ²⁰ pit. He gave life to ¹ the sheep, having brought it up ¹ from the pit in order that you ¹ might know interiorly — ³⁸ you, the sons of interior ³⁹ knowledge — ¹ what is the Sabbath, on which it is not fitting ²⁵ for salvation to be idle, ¹ in order that you may speak ¹ from the day from above, ¹ which has no night, ¹ and from the light ³⁰ which does not sink because it is perfect. ¹

Say, then, from the heart that ¹ you are the perfect day ¹ and in you dwells ¹ the light that does not fail. ³⁵ Speak of the truth with those who ¹ search for it and (of) knowledge to those ¹ who have committed sin in their error. 33 Make firm the foot of those ¹ who have stumbled and stretch out ¹ your hands to those who are ill. Feed ¹ those who are hungry and ⁵ give repose to those who are weary, and ¹ raise up those who wish to ¹ rise, and awaken those who ¹ sleep. For you are the ¹ understanding that is drawn forth. If ¹⁰ strength acts thus, it becomes ¹ even stronger. Be concerned with yourselves; ¹ do not be concerned with ¹ other things which you have ¹ rejected from yourselves. ¹⁵ Do not return to what you have vomited ¹ to eat it. Do not be moths. ¹ Do not be worms, for you have already ¹ cast it off. Do not become a ²⁰ (dwelling) place for the devil, for ¹ you have already destroyed him. ¹ Do not strengthen (those who are) obstacles to you ¹ who are collapsing, as though (you were) a support (for them). ¹ For the lawless one is someone to treat ²⁵ ill rather than the just one. ¹ For the former ¹ does his work as a ¹ lawless person; the latter as ¹ a righteous person does his ³⁰ work among others. So ¹ you, do the will of the Father, ¹ for you are from him. ¹

For the Father is sweet and in ¹ his will is what is good. ³⁵ He has taken cognizance of ¹ the things that are yours that you might find rest ¹ in them. For by the ¹ fruits does one take cognizance of ¹ the things that are yours because the children of the Father 34 are his fragrance, for ¹ they are from the grace of his ¹ countenance. For this reason the Father loves ¹ his fragrance and manifests it ⁵ in every place, and if it mixes ¹ with matter he gives his fragrance ¹ to the light and in his repose ¹ he causes it to surpass every form ¹ (and) every sound. For it is not the ears that ¹⁰ smell the fragrance, but ¹ (it is) the breath that has ¹ the sense of smell and attracts the fragrance ¹ to itself and is submerged ¹ in the fragrance of the Father, so that he ¹⁵ thus shelters it and takes it to the place ¹ where it came from, ¹ from the first fragrance which ¹ is grown cold. It is something in a ¹ psychic form, being ²⁰ like cold water ¹ which has frozen (?), which is on earth ¹ that is not solid, of which those ¹ who see it think it ¹ is earth; afterwards it dissolves ²⁵ again. If a breath ¹ draws it, it gets hot. The fragrances, ¹ therefore, that are cold are from the division. ¹ For this reason faith came; ¹ it dissolved the division, ³⁰ and it brought the warm pleroma ¹ of love in order that ¹ the cold should not come again ¹ but there should be the unity of ¹ perfect thought. ³⁵

This <is> the word of the gospel ¹ of the discovery of the pleroma, for ¹ those who await 35 the salvation which is coming ¹ from on high.

While their ¹ hope, for which they ¹ are waiting, is in waiting — they whose image ⁵ is light with no shadow ¹ in it — then, at that time, ¹ the pleroma ¹ is proceeding to come. The <deficiency> ¹ of matter came to be not through ¹⁰ the limitlessness of ¹ the Father, who is coming to give time for ¹ the deficiency, although no one ¹ could say that the incorruptable one would ¹ come in this way. But ¹⁵ the depth of the Father was multiplied ¹ and the thought of ¹ error did not exist ¹ with him. It is a thing that falls, ¹ it is a thing that easily stands upright (again) ²⁰ in the discovery of him ¹ who has come to him whom he shall bring back. ¹ For the bringing back ¹ is called repentance. ¹

For this reason incorruptibility ²⁵ breathed forth; it pursued the one ¹ who had sinned in order that he might ¹ rest. For forgiveness is ¹ what remains for the light in the deficiency, ¹ the word of the pleroma. ³⁰ For the physician runs to the place ¹ where sickness is, because ¹ that is the will that is ¹ in him. He who has a deficiency, then, does not ¹ hide it, because one has what ³⁵ the other lacks. So the pleroma, ¹ which has no deficiency, ¹ but fills up the deficiency, is what he ³⁶ provided from himself for filling up ¹ what he lacks, in order that ¹ therefore he might receive the grace. For when ¹ he was deficient, he did not have ⁵ the grace. That is why ¹ there was diminution existing in ¹ the place where there is no grace. ¹ When that which was diminished ¹ was received, he revealed what he ¹⁰ lacked, being (now) a pleroma; ¹ that is the discovery of the light ¹ of truth which rose upon him because ¹ it is immutable.

That is why ¹ Christ was spoken of in their ¹⁵ midst, so that those who were disturbed ¹ might receive a bringing back, and he ¹ might anoint them with the ointment. The ointment is ¹ the mercy of the Father who will have mercy ¹ on them. But those whom he has anointed ²⁰ are the ones who have become perfect. ¹ For full jars are the ¹ ones that are usually anointed. But when ¹ the anointing of one (jar) is dissolved, ¹ it is emptied, and the ²⁵ reason for there being a deficiency is the thing ¹ by which its ointment goes. ¹ For at that time ¹ a breath draws it, a thing ¹ in the power of that which is with it. ³⁰ But from him who ¹ has no deficiency, no seal is removed ¹ nor is anything emptied, ¹ but what he lacks ¹ the perfect Father fills again. ³⁵ He is good. He knows ¹ his plantings, because it is he ¹ who planted them in his paradise. ¹ Now his paradise ¹ is his place of rest.

This ³⁷ is the perfection in the thought ¹ of the Father, and these are ¹ the words of his meditation. ¹ Each one of his words ⁵ is the work of his ¹ one will in the revelation ¹ of his Word. While they were still ¹ depths of his thought, the Word ¹ which was first to come forth revealed ¹⁰ them along with a mind that ¹ speaks, the one Word in ¹ silent grace. He was called ¹ thought, since they ¹ were in it before being revealed. ¹⁵ It came about then, that he ¹ was first to come forth at the time when the will of him ¹ who willed desired it. ¹ And the will is what the Father ²⁰ rests in and ¹ is pleased with. Nothing ¹ happens without him nor does anything ¹ happen without the will of ¹ the Father, but his will ²⁵ is unsearchable. His trace ¹ is the will and no one ¹ will know him nor is it possible ¹ for one to scrutinize him in order to ¹ grasp him. But ³⁰ when he wills, ¹ what he wills is this — even if ¹ the sight does not please them ¹ in any way before God — ¹ desiring the Father. For he knows the ³⁵ beginning of all of them and their end. ¹ For at their end he will question them ¹ directly. Now, the end is receiving knowledge ¹ about the one who is hidden, and this is the Father, 38 from whom the beginning came ¹ forth, to whom all will ¹ return who have ¹ come forth from him. ⁵ And they have appeared for the glory and the ¹ joy of his name. ¹

Now the name of the Father is the Son. It is he ¹ who first gave a name to the one ¹ who came forth from him, who was himself, ¹⁰ and he begot him as a son. ¹ He gave him his name which ¹ belonged to him; he is the one to whom ¹ belongs all that exists around ¹ him, the Father. His is the name; ¹⁵ his is the Son. It is possible ¹ for him to be seen. The name, however, ¹ is invisible because ¹ it alone is the ¹ mystery of the invisible ²⁰ which comes to ears that are completely filled ¹ with it by him. For indeed, ¹ the Father's name is not spoken, ¹ but it is apparent through a ¹ Son.

In this way, then, the name is a great thing. ²⁵ Who, therefore, will be able to utter a name for him, ¹ the great name, except him ¹ alone to whom ¹ the name belongs and the sons of the name ¹ in whom rested ³⁰ the name of the Father, ¹ (who) in turn themselves rested ¹ in his name? Since the ¹ Father is unengendered, he alone is the one ¹ who begot him for him(self) as a name, ³⁵ before he brought forth the ¹ aeons, in order that the name ¹ of the Father should be over their head as ¹ lord, that is the 39 name in truth, which is firm in his ¹ command through perfect power. ¹ For the name is not from ¹ (mere) words, nor ⁵ does his name consist of appellations, ¹ but it is invisible. ¹ He gave a name to him alone, ¹ since he alone sees him, he ¹ alone having ¹⁰ the power to give him a name. ¹ For he who does not exist ¹ has no name. ¹ For what name is given to him ¹ who does not exist? ¹⁵ But the one who exists ¹ exists also with his name, and ¹ he alone knows it, ¹ and alone (knows how) to give him a name. ¹ It is the Father. The Son ²⁰ is his name. He did ¹ not, therefore, hide it in the thing, ¹ but it ¹ existed; as for the Son, he alone gave a name. ¹ The name, therefore, is that of the Father, ²⁵ as the name of ¹ the Father is the Son. Where ¹ indeed would compassion find a name ¹ except with the Father?

But ¹ no doubt one will say ³⁰ to his neighbor: "Who is it ¹ who will give a name to him who ¹ existed before himself, ¹ as if offspring did not receive a name 40 from those ¹ who begot <them>?" First, ¹ then, it is fitting for us ¹ to reflect on this matter: What ⁵ is the name? It is the name ¹ in truth; it is not therefore ¹ the name from the Father, for ¹ it is the one which is the proper ¹ name. Therefore, he did not receive the name ¹ on loan as (do) ¹ others, according to the form ¹ in which each one ¹ is to be produced. ¹ But this is the proper name. ¹⁵ There is no one else who gave it to him. ¹ But he <is> unnamable, ¹ indescribable, ¹ until the time when he ¹ who is perfect spoke of him alone. ²⁰ And it is he who ¹ has the power to speak ¹ his name and to see ¹ it.

When, therefore, it pleased ¹ him that his name ²⁵ which is loved should be his Son, and ¹ he gave the name to him, that is, him ¹ who came forth from the depth, he ¹ spoke about his secret things, knowing ¹ that the Father is a being without evil. ³⁰ For that very reason he brought him ¹ forth in order to speak ¹ about the place and his ¹ resting-place from which he had come forth, 41 and to glorify the pleroma, ¹ the greatness of his name and ¹ the sweetness of the Father. About ¹ the place each one came from ⁵ he will speak, and to the ¹ region where he received his establishment ¹ he will hasten to return ¹ again and to take from ¹ that place — the place where he ¹⁰ stood — receiving a taste ¹ from that place and ¹ receiving nourishment, receiving growth. And ¹ his own resting-place ¹ is his pleroma.

Therefore, ¹⁵ all the emanations of the Father ¹ are pleromas, and ¹ the root of all his emanations is in ¹ the one who made them all ¹ grow up in himself. He assigned them ²⁰ their destinies. Each one then ¹ is manifest, ¹ in order that through their ¹ own thought <...>. ¹ For the place to which they send ²⁵ their thought, that place, ¹ their root, is what takes them ¹ up in all the heights ¹ to the Father. They possess his ¹ head, which is rest for them, ³⁰ and they are supported, ¹ approaching him, ¹ as though to say that ¹ they have participated in his face ¹ by means of kisses. ³⁵ But they do not become manifest 42 in this way, ¹ for they were not themselves exalted; ¹ (yet) neither did they lack the glory ¹ of the Father nor did they think of him as ⁵ small nor that he is harsh ¹ nor that he is wrathful, but ¹ (that) he is a being without evil, imperturbable, ¹ sweet, knowing ¹ all spaces before they have come into existence, and ¹⁰ he had no need to be instructed. ¹

This is the manner of ¹ those who possess (something) ¹ from above of the ¹ immensurable greatness, as they ¹⁵ wait for the one alone ¹ and the perfect one, the one who is ¹ there for them. And they do not go down ¹ to Hades nor have they ¹ envy nor ²⁰ groaning nor death ¹ within them, but they ¹ rest in him who is at rest, ¹ not striving nor ¹ being twisted around ²⁵ the truth. But they ¹ themselves are the truth; and ¹ the Father is within them and ¹ they are in the Father, being perfect, ¹ being undivided in ³⁰ the truly good one, being ¹ in no way deficient in anything, but ¹ they are set at rest, refreshed in the ¹ Spirit. And they will heed their ¹ root. They will be concerned with those (things) ³⁵ in which he will find his root ¹ and not suffer loss to his ¹ soul. This is the place of the ¹ blessed; this is their place. ¹

For the rest, then, may they ⁴⁰ know, in their places, that ¹ it is not fitting for me, 43 having come to be in the resting-place, ¹ to speak of anything else. But ¹ it is in it that I shall come to be, and (it is fitting) to ¹ be concerned at all times with the Father of ⁵ the all and the true brothers, ¹ those upon whom the love of ¹ the Father is poured out and ¹ in whose midst there is no lack of him. ¹ They are the ones who appear ¹⁰ in truth, since they exist in ¹ true and eternal life and ¹ speak of the light which ¹ is perfect and filled with ¹ the seed of the Father, and ¹⁵ which is in his heart and in the ¹ pleroma, while his ¹ Spirit rejoices in it and glorifies ¹ the one in whom it existed ¹ because he is good. And ²⁰ his children are perfect and ¹ worthy of his name, ¹ for he is the Father: it is children ¹ of this kind that he ¹ loves.

THE TREATISE ON THE RESURRECTION (I,4)

Introduced and translated by

MALCOLM L. PEEL

The importance of this short, eight-page, didactic letter lies in its witness to a distinctively unorthodox interpretation of Christian teaching about survival after death. By the late second century, the probable time of its composition, Christians – whether Gnostic or orthodox – were struggling with certain challenges and questions. Was such survival philosophically demonstrable (as Socrates had argued in the Phaedo)? What form might it take? (Immortality of the soul? Resurrection of the body? Reincarnation?) When would such survival be experienced? (At death? At Christ's final return? Perhaps even before death?) The New Testament teaching was somewhat ambiguous on several of these points, though within the great church there seemed general agreement on at least two matters: the prototype and basis of hope for such survival was the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the resurrection of individuals would entail their retention of personal identity.

The anonymous author of The Treatise on the Resurrection, however, claimed a Christ-given knowledge (49,41-50,2) that enabled him to offer direct and unambiguous answers to such questions, questions which in this case had been put to him by his pupil, Rheginos (43,25). First, the resurrection is a matter of faith in the reality of Jesus Christ's resurrection and his destruction of death (46,14-19). Such cannot be the result of philosophical "persuasion," and most philosophers of the world are in fact sceptics.

Second, the form of survival will be the "resurrection," which is not understood as the re-creation of a spiritual body at Christ's Parousia (cf. 1 Co 15 passim). Rather, at the point of biological death, the "elect" believer experiences the separation of the inward, "living members," whose intellectual nature is clarified by reference to the "mind" and its "thought," from the external "body" of "perishable," "visible," outward "members" (47,38-48,2; 45,39-46,2; 45,19-21). Even so, this "resurrection body," covered with a new "flesh" (47,4-8) or "garment of light" ("rays" in 45,30-31), retains personally identifiable features, as the appearance of Elijah and Moses at Christ's transfiguration (Mk 9:2-8) makes clear. Such is the "spiritual resurrection" which "swallows up" (i.e., renders nonsensical or destroys) the "resurrection" of either the naked "soul" or of the crudely literal "flesh" (45,39-46,2). Implied is a dualistic doctrine of outer/inner that goes beyond Pauline anthropology.

Third, unlike the early church, which in its resurrection hope held to an "eschatological reservation" (i.e., the notion that the full benefit of individual Christians' participation in the resurrection would wait the final return of Christ), the author of The Treatise on the Resurrection held that for the elect believer who had proleptically participated in Christ's suffering (death), resurrection, and ascension (45,24-28), the new reality should be clear: one already has the resurrection in the present. In sum, our author, like the Hymenaeus and Philletus condemned in 2 Timothy 2:18, teaches that the resurrection has already occurred! He reinforces it by means of a kind of existential proof: the believer who knows of death's inevitability should consider himself as dead already and thus as already participating in the resurrected state (49,16-30). Thus, the believer is to have "faith" in the reality of Christ's victory over death and its guarantee (45,14-46, 4,14-17; 46,8-13), to avoid all "doubt" (47,36-48,3), to "know" the "Son of Man" and the truth proclaimed about his resurrection (46,13-17, 30-32), to "practise" one's release from the inimical power of this cosmos (49,30-33) through correct thought, and to realize the mystical unity between the experience of the Savior and that of the believer (45,15-46,2).

Major studies of the text have clarified that the author is a Christian Gnostic teacher who is clearly influenced by Valentinian Gnosticism. The evidence for this is found in the close parallels between the treatise's teaching that the spiritual resurrection has already occurred and the reports of Valentinian "realized eschatology" in Tertullian (De praes. haer. 33.7; De res. mort. 19,2-7) and Irenaeus (Haer. 2.31.2). Also, certain conceptual complexes unique to Valentinianism appear in Treat. Res., such as the idea of a primordial pleroma which suffered a devolution and resulting "deficiency" (46,35-47,1; 49,4-5) which the Savior must "restore" (44,30-33).

Only to be expected, then, is the presence of Middle Platonic ideas which, as prior scholarship has shown, influenced Valentinianism. Such ideas include a distinction between a world of being (including the Good itself) and the sphere of becoming and corruption (48,20-27), as well as between an "intelligible world" and a "sensible" world (46,35-47,1). Also Platonic are notions of the pre-existence of souls (46,38-47,1; cf. 47,4-6; 49,30-36) and of "practising" for dying (49,28-33).

Rather un-Platonic, however, is the absence of any mention of an ultimate quest for ecstatic vision/union with the ultimate One, as well as our treatise's stress on retention of identifiable personal characteristics in the post mortem resurrected state.

Because of the centrality of Jesus Christ in the text, however, and because the author appeals to the New Testament as highest authority for his proofs (cf. 43,34; 45,4, 24-28; 48,6-11), we conclude that the author is a Christian Gnostic whose thought displays the influence of Middle Platonism as filtered through a late and somewhat vaguely articulated Valentinian Gnosticism.

Critical opinion now generally holds that Treat. Res. is not written by Valentinus himself. Studies of the stage of the New Testament canon of which the anonymous author seems aware, of the place of Treat. Res. teaching in the context of debates over the resurrection in the early church, and of the type of Middle Platonic ideas found in it all converge in pointing toward the late second century as the probable time of composition. As to its provenance, neither internal nor external evidence provides any clues.

Debate continues over whether the writing is a genuine didactic letter lacking a praescriptio naming its author (such as are the Epistula Apostolorum or the Letter of Ptolemy to Flora) and incorporating elements of the diatribe style, or whether it is principally a philosophical discourse decisively shaped by the Cynic-Stoic diatribe. As yet, the last named is lacking a convincing demonstration.

Most scholars do seem to reject the suggestions, however, that the text is the result of combining two originally separate letters or that it is the result of a gnostic redaction of an originally Christian text.

THE TREATISE ON THE RESURRECTION

I 43, 25-50, 18

Some there are, my son Rheginos, ¹ who want to learn many things. ¹ They have this goal ¹ when they are occupied with questions ¹ whose answer is lacking. ³⁰ If they succeed with these, they usually ¹ think very highly of ¹ themselves. But I do not think ¹ that they have stood within ¹ the Word of Truth. They seek ³⁵ rather their own rest, which ¹ we have received through our ¹ Savior, our Lord Christ. 44 We received it (i.e., Rest) when we came to know ¹ the truth and rested ¹ ourselves upon it. But ¹ since you ask us ⁵ pleasantly what is proper ¹ concerning the resurrection, I am writing ¹ you (to say) that it is necessary. ¹ To be sure, many are ¹ lacking faith in it, but there are a few ¹⁰ who find it. ¹ So then, let us discuss ¹ the matter. ¹

How did the Lord proclaim ¹ things while he existed ¹⁵ in flesh and after ¹ he had revealed himself as Son ¹ of God? He lived ¹ in this place where you ¹ remain, speaking ²⁰ about the Law of Nature – but I call ¹ it “Death!” Now the Son ¹ of God, Rheginos, ¹ was Son of Man. ¹ He embraced them ²⁵ both, possessing the ¹ humanity and the divinity, ¹ so that on the one hand he might vanquish ¹ death through his ¹ being Son of God, ³⁰ and that on the other through the Son of ¹ Man the restoration ¹ to the Pleroma ¹ might occur; because ¹ he was originally from above, ³⁵ a seed of the Truth, before ¹ this structure (of the cosmos) had come into being. ¹ In this (structure) many dominions and ¹ divinities came into existence. ¹

I know that I am presenting 45 the solution in difficult terms, ¹ but there is nothing ¹ difficult in the Word ¹ of Truth. But since ⁵ the Solution appeared ¹ so as not to leave anything hidden, ¹ but to reveal all ¹ things openly concerning ¹ existence – the destruction ¹⁰ of evil on the one hand, the revelation ¹ of the elect on the other. This (Solution) is ¹ the emanation of Truth and ¹ Spirit, Grace is of the Truth. ¹

The Savior swallowed up ¹⁵ death – (of this) you are not reckoned as being ignorant – ¹ for he put aside the world ¹ which is perishing. He transformed [himself] ¹ into an imperishable Aeon ¹ and raised himself up, having ²⁰ swallowed the visible ¹ by the invisible, ¹ and he gave us ¹ the way of our immortality. Then, ¹ indeed, as the Apostle ²⁵ said, "We suffered ¹ with him, and we arose ¹ with him, and we went to heaven ¹ with him." Now if we are ¹ manifest in ³⁰ this world wearing ¹ him, we are that one's beams, ¹ and we are ¹ embraced by ¹ him until our setting, that is ³⁵ to say, our death in this life. ¹ We are drawn to heaven ¹ by him, like beams ¹ by the sun, not being restrained ¹ by anything. This is ⁴⁰ the spiritual resurrection ¹ 46 which swallows up the psychic ¹ in the same way as the fleshly. ¹

But if there is one who ¹ does not believe, he does not have ⁵ the (capacity to be) persuaded. For it is the domain of faith, ¹ my son, and not that which belongs ¹ to persuasion: the dead shall ¹ arise! There is one who believes ¹ among the philosophers who are in this world. ¹⁰ At least he will arise. And let not the philosopher ¹ who is in this world have cause to ¹ believe that he is one who returns himself ¹ by himself — and (that) because of our faith! ¹ For we have known the Son of ¹⁵ Man, and we have believed ¹ that he rose from among the ¹ dead. This is he of whom we say, ¹ "He became the destruction ¹ of death, as he is a great one ²⁰ in whom they believe." ¹ <Great>are those who believe. ¹

The thought of those ¹ who are saved shall not perish. ¹ The mind of those who have known him shall not perish. ²⁵ Therefore, we are elected to ¹ salvation and redemption since ¹ we are predestined from the beginning ¹ not to fall into the ¹ foolishness of those who are without knowledge, ³⁰ but we shall enter into the ¹ wisdom of those who have known the ¹ Truth. Indeed, the Truth which is kept ¹ cannot be abandoned, ¹ nor has it been. ³⁵ "Strong is the system of the ¹ Pleroma; small is that which ¹ broke loose (and) became ¹ (the) world. But the All is ¹ what is encompassed. It has not 47 come into being; it was existing." So, ¹ never doubt concerning ¹ the resurrection, my son Reginos! ¹ For if you were not existing ⁵ in flesh, you received flesh when you ¹ entered this world. Why ¹ will you not receive flesh when you ¹ ascend into the Aeon? ¹ That which is better than the flesh is that which is ¹⁰ for it (the) cause of life. ¹ That which came into being on your account, is it not ¹ yours? Does not that which is yours ¹ exist with you? ¹ Yet, while you are in this world, what is it that you ¹⁵ lack? This is what ¹ you have been making every effort to learn. ¹

The afterbirth of the body is ¹ old age, and you ¹ exist in corruption. You have ²⁰ absence as a gain. ¹ For you will not give up what ¹ is better if you depart. That which is worse ¹ has diminution, ¹ but there is grace for it.

Nothing, ²⁵ then, redeems us from ¹ this world. But the All which ¹ we are, we are saved. We have received ¹ salvation from end ¹ to end. Let us think in this way! ³⁰ Let us comprehend in this way!

But ¹ there are some (who) wish to understand, ¹ in the enquiry about ¹ those things they are looking into, whether ¹ he who is saved, if he leaves ³⁵ his body behind, will ¹ be saved immediately. Let ¹ no one doubt concerning this. ¹ . . . indeed, the visible members ¹ which are dead 48 shall not be saved, for (only) the living [members] ¹ which exist within ¹ them would arise.

What, ¹ then, is the resurrection? ⁵ It is always the disclosure of ¹ those who have risen. For if you ¹ remember reading in the Gospel ¹ that Elijah appeared ¹ and Moses ¹⁰ with him, do not think the resurrection ¹ is an illusion. ¹ It is no illusion, but ¹ it is truth! Indeed, it is more ¹ fitting to say that ¹⁵ the world is an illusion, ¹ rather than the resurrection which ¹ has come into being through ¹ our Lord the Savior, ¹ Jesus Christ. ²⁰

But what am I telling ¹ you now? Those who are living ¹ shall die. How ¹ do they live in an illusion? ¹ The rich have become poor, ²⁵ and the kings have been overthrown. ¹ Everything is prone ¹ to change. The world ¹ is an illusion! — lest, ¹ indeed, I rail at ³⁰ things to excess!

But ¹ the resurrection does not have ¹ this aforesaid character, for ¹ it is the truth which stands firm. ¹ It is the revelation of ³⁵ what is, and the transformation ¹ of things, and a ¹ transition into ¹ newness. For imperishability 49 [descends] upon ¹ the perishable; the light flows ¹ down upon the darkness, ¹ swallowing it up; and the Pleroma ⁵ fills up the deficiency. ¹ These are the symbols and ¹ the images of the resurrection. ¹ He (Christ) it is who makes the ¹ good.

Therefore, do not ¹⁰ think in part, O Rheginos, ¹ nor live ¹ in conformity with this flesh for the sake of ¹ unanimity, but flee ¹ from the divisions and the ¹⁵ fetters, and already you have ¹ the resurrection. For if ¹ he who will die knows ¹ about himself that he ¹ will die — even if he spends many ²⁰ years in this life, he is ¹ brought to this — ¹ why not consider yourself ¹ as risen and (already) ¹ brought to this? ²⁵ If you have ¹ the resurrection but continue as if ¹ you are to die — and yet that one knows ¹ that he has died — why, then, ¹ do I ignore your ³⁰ lack of exercise? It is fitting for each ¹ one to practice ¹ in a number of ways, and ¹ he shall be released from this Element ¹ that he may not fall into error but shall himself ³⁵ receive again ¹ what at first was. ¹

These things I have received from ¹ the generosity of my 50 Lord, Jesus Christ. [I have] taught ¹ you and your [brethren], my sons, concerning them, ¹ while I have not omitted any of ¹ the things suitable for strengthening you (pl.). ⁵ But if there is one thing written ¹ which is obscure in my exposition of ¹ the Word, I shall interpret it for you (pl.) ¹ when you (pl.) ask. But now, ¹ do not be jealous of anyone who is in your number ¹⁰ when he is able to help. ¹

Many are looking into ¹ this which I have written ¹ to you. To these I say: ¹ peace (be) among them and grace. ¹⁵ I greet you and those who love ¹ you (pl.) in brotherly love. ¹

The Treatise on the ¹ Resurrection

THE TRIPARTITE TRACTATE (I,5)

Introduced by

HAROLD W. ATTRIDGE and ELAINE H. PAGELS

Translated by

HAROLD W. ATTRIDGE and DIETER MUELLER

The final tractate of Codex I is an elaborate, but untitled, Valentinian theological treatise which gives an account of the whole process of devolution from and reintegration into the primordial godhead. The text is divided by scribal decoration into three segments which contain the major acts of the cosmic drama; hence its modern title.

The date of composition can only be determined within broad limits. Since the doctrine of the text represents a revised form of Valentinian theology which may be a response to the criticism of orthodox theologians such as Irenaeus or Hippolytus, the work was probably written in the early to mid third century. The text displays some affinities with Origen's doctrines, although these may be due to common theological and philosophical sources.

The tractate offers no information about the identity of its author. Some scholars have speculated that the Valentinian teacher Heracleon could have written the work. While there are affinities with Heracleon and the Western or Italian school of Valentinianism, the work departs from classical Valentinian doctrine more radically than any known representative of the tradition.

Like the other tractates of Codex I and most of the works in the Nag Hammadi collection, The Tripartite Tractate was originally composed in Greek. The Coptic translation presents numerous difficulties and obscurities, many of which probably reflect the style of the original.

The theological purview of the tractate is comprehensive. The first part (51,1-104,3) describes the emanation of all supernatural entities from their primal source. It begins with the Father (51,1-57,8), described primarily through a via negativa as an utterly transcendent entity. What can be affirmed is that he is unique and monadic. The insistence on the unitary character of the Father distinguishes the text from most other Valentinians who posit a primal masculine-feminine dyad, although some members of the school, such as those mentioned by Hippolytus (Ref. 6.29.2-8), also hold to a monadic first principle.

Emanating from the Father are two other entities, the Son and the Church (57,8-59,38). At this point the tractate again differs from other Valentinian sources, which regularly posit a more complex godhead. The pleroma or "fullness of deity" usually consists of an ogdoad, a set eight syzygies, or pairs of divine entities, a similarly composed decad, and duodecad. Instead, The Tripartite Tractate posits an initial trinity.

Some elements of the complex traditional Valentinian picture are retained in the description of the components or "aeons" of the third element of the trinity, the Church (50,1-74,18). The dependence on, as well as revision of, Valentinian sources is clear in the stage of the text which describes the problems created by one of the aeons (74,18-80,11). In other Valentinian accounts, which are based on earlier, non-Christian speculation, the problem in the godhead arises because of a female aeon, Sophia (Wisdom), who attempts to do the impossible. According to different versions of the story, she either tries to produce offspring without her consort or tries to know the unknowable primal source. In either case, she falls outside the divine pleroma and produces the world of psychic and material forces. In The Tripartite Tractate the agent of the rupture in the pleroma is a masculine aeon, the Logos (Word). His fall, which includes elements of both traditional explanations of Sophia's catastrophe, is presented in remarkably positive terms, as a result of his own "abundant love" (76,19-20). It is also, remarkably enough, in accordance with the Father's will (76,24-77,1). Most importantly, it proceeds from the Logos' free choice (75,35-76,1), a quality which all entities dependent on him share.

The fall of the Logos produces two orders of beings which are outside the pleroma (80,11-85,15). From his confused and defective procreative activity emerge hylic forces. When the Logos, on his own initiative, repents, he produces psychic forces. These supernatural forces will play a role in creation of the first human and in cosmic governance.

The most important result of the conversion of the Logos is the generation of the Savior (85,15-90,13). This transpires when the Logos splits in two. His better, masculine self returns to the pleroma to intercede for his defective, feminine self. That better self, along with the aeons who have never left the pleroma, produce the Savior. That being is also called, by analogy with the highest level of reality, the Son, because as the Son reveals the Father to the aeons of the pleroma, the Savior will provide revelatory insight to those outside the pleroma.

The brief second part of the tractate (104,4-108,12) offers an interpretation of Genesis 1-3. The first human being is produced on the one hand by the Demiurge and on the other hand by the Logos. The former provides Adam's psychic and material components and the latter his spiritual component. The three potencies of the first human being will later be actualized in three classes of human beings at the coming of the Savior.

The third part of the tractate (108,13-138,27) focuses on soteriological issues. The Savior's appearance divides humankind into three classes (118,14-122,12). The pneumatic or spiritual recognize the Savior immediately and respond to him, while the hylic or material reject him utterly. Between these two extremes the psychic or soulful types hesitate, and only gradually come to join the Savior. As is usual in Valentinian texts, the three types have clear social referents. The pneumatics are the Valentinians themselves, the hylics are non-Christians and the psychics are ordinary Christians. The attention lavished on the detailed description of the psychics is indicative of the apologetic and irenic tendencies of the work.

In its final section (129,34-138,27) the text returns to the issue of the psychic and the process of their salvation. It then proceeds to sketch an eschatological tableau, the last portions of which are quite fragmentary. It concludes with a hymn to "the Savior, the Redeemer of all those who belong to the one filled with love, through his Holy Spirit, from now on through all generations forever" (138,20-25).

The Tripartite Tractate has revised traditional Valentinianism on several key points: in its insistence on the unity of the first principle; in the substitution of a trinity for a more complex godhead; in its portrait of the Logos as the element of the godhead responsible for the rupture in the divine; in its moderate assessment of the psychic demiurge; in its detailed analysis of the tripartition of humanity as a result of the freely chosen response of each individual to the appearance of the Savior; and in the hope of final redemption held out to ordinary Christians. This bold revision of Valentinian speculation serves as the basis for a comprehensive theological statement designed to appeal not simply to an isolated sect, but to the church as a whole.

THE TRIPARTITE TRACTATE

I 51, 1-138, 27

Part I

1. Introduction

As for what we can say about the things which are exalted, ¹ what is fitting is that we ¹ begin with the Father, who is the root of ¹ the Totality, the one from whom we have received ⁵ grace to ¹ speak about him.

2. The Father

He existed ¹ before anything other than himself ¹ came into being. The Father is a ¹ single one, like a ¹⁰ number, for he is the first one and the one who ¹ is only himself. Yet he is ¹ not like a solitary individual. ¹ Otherwise, how could he be a father? ¹ For whenever there is a "father," ¹⁵ the name "son" follows. But the single ¹ one, who alone is ¹ the Father, is like a root ¹ with tree, branches ¹ and fruit. It is said ²⁰ of him that he is ¹ a father in the proper sense, since he is ¹ inimitable ¹ and immutable. Because of ¹ this he is single in the proper sense ²⁵ and is a god, because no ¹ one is a god for him nor ¹ is anyone a father to him. ¹ For he is unbegotten and there is no other ¹ who begot him, nor ³⁰ another who created him. ¹ For whoever is someone's father ¹ or his creator, ¹ he, too, has a father and ¹ creator. It is certainly possible ³⁵ for him to be father and creator ¹ of the one who came into being ¹ from him and the one whom he created, ¹ for he is not a father in the proper sense, nor ⁴⁰ a god, because he has 52 someone who begot [him and] who ¹ created him. It is, then, ¹ only the Father and God in the proper sense

¹ that no one else begot. As for [the] Totalities, ⁵ he is the one who begot them and ¹ created them. He is without beginning ¹ and without end.

Not only ¹ is he without end — He is immortal for this reason, ¹ that he is unbegotten — ¹⁰ but he is also invariable in ¹ his eternal existence, ¹ in his identity, in that ¹ by which he is established and in that ¹ by which he is great. Neither ¹⁵ will he remove himself from that by which he ¹ is, nor will anyone else ¹ force him to produce ¹ an end which he has not ever desired. ¹ He has not had ²⁰ anyone who initiated his own existence. ¹ Thus, he is himself unchanged ¹ and no one else ¹ can remove him from his ¹ existence and ²⁵ his identity, that in which he is, ¹ and his greatness, so that ¹ he cannot be grasped; nor is it possible ¹ for anyone else to change him into a different ¹ form or to reduce him, or alter him ³⁰ or diminish him, — since this is so ¹ in the fullest sense of the truth — ¹ who is the unalterable, immutable one, ¹ with immutability clothing him. ¹

Not only is he the one ³⁵ called ¹ “without a beginning” and “without an end,” ¹ because he is unbegotten ¹ and immortal; ¹ but just as he has ⁴⁰ no beginning and no ¹ end as he is, he is ¹ unattainable 53 in his greatness, inscrutable ¹ in his wisdom, incomprehensible ¹ in his power, ¹ and unfathomable in his ⁵ sweetness.

In the proper sense ¹ he alone, the good, ¹ the unbegotten Father and the ¹ complete perfect one, is the one filled ¹ with all his offspring ¹⁰ and with every virtue and with ¹ everything of value. And he has ¹ more, that is, lack of any ¹ malice, in order that it may be discovered ¹ that whoever has [anything] is indebted to him, ¹⁵ because he gives it, being ¹ himself unreachable and unwearied ¹ by that which he gives, since he is wealthy ¹ in the gifts which he bestows ¹ and at rest ²⁰ in the favors which he grants. ¹

He is of such a kind and ¹ form and great magnitude ¹ that no one else has been with ¹ him from the beginning; nor is there a place ²⁵ in which he is, or from which he has come forth, ¹ or into which he will go; ¹ nor is there a primordial form, ¹ which he uses as a model ¹ as he works; nor is there any difficulty ³⁰ which accompanies him in what ¹ he does; nor is there any material which ¹ is at his disposal, from which <he> creates ¹ what he creates; ¹ nor any substance within him from ³⁵ which he begets what he begets; ¹ nor a co-worker ¹ with him, working with him on the things at which he works. ¹ To say anything of this sort ¹ is ignorant. Rather, (one should speak of him) as ⁴⁰ good, faultless, perfect, 54 complete, being himself the Totality. ¹

Not one of ¹ the names which are conceived, ¹ or spoken, seen or ⁵ grasped, ¹ not one of them applies to him, ¹ even though they are exceedingly glorious, magnifying ¹ and honored. However, ¹ it is possible to utter these names for his glory ¹⁰ and honor, in accordance with the capacity ¹ of each of those who give him glory. ¹ Yet as for him, in his own ¹ existence, being ¹ and form, ¹⁵ it is impossible for mind to conceive ¹ him, nor can any speech ¹ convey him, nor can any eye ¹ see him, nor can any body ¹ grasp him, because of ²⁰ his inscrutable greatness ¹ and his incomprehensible depth, ¹ and his immeasurable height, ¹ and his illimitable will. ¹ This is the nature of the ²⁵ unbegotten one, which does not touch ¹ anything else; nor is it joined (to anything) ¹ in the manner of something which is limited. ¹ Rather, he possesses this constitution, ¹ without having a ³⁰ face or a form, things which ¹ are understood through ¹ perception, whence also comes (the epithet) "the incomprehensible." ¹ If he is incomprehensible, ¹ then it follows that ³⁵ he is unknowable, that he is the one who is inconceivable ¹ by any thought, ¹ invisible by any thing, ¹ ineffable by any word, ¹ untouchable by any hand. ⁴⁰ He alone ¹ is the one who knows himself as he 55 is, along with his form ¹ and his greatness and his magnitude, ¹ and since he has the ability to ¹ conceive of himself, to see himself, to name ⁵ himself, to comprehend himself, he ¹ alone is the one who is his own mind, ¹ his own eye, ¹ his own mouth, his own ¹ form, and he is what he thinks, ¹⁰ what he sees, ¹ what he speaks, ¹ what he grasps, himself, ¹ the one who is inconceivable, ¹ ineffable, incomprehensible, immutable, ¹⁵ while sustaining, joyous, ¹ true, delightful, ¹ and restful is that which he conceives, ¹ that which he sees, that about which he speaks, ¹ that which he has as thought. ²⁰ He transcends ¹ all wisdom, and is ¹ above all intellect, and is ¹ above all glory, and is ¹ above all beauty, and ²⁵ all sweetness, and all greatness, ¹ and any depth and any height. ¹

If this one, who is ¹ unknowable in his ¹ nature, to whom pertain all the greatnesses which ³⁰ I already mentioned, ¹ if out of the abundance of his sweetness he wishes to grant knowledge ¹ so that he might be known, ¹ he has the ability to do so. ¹ He has his power, ³⁵ which is his will. Now, however, ¹ in silence he himself holds back, ¹ he who is ¹ the great one, who is the cause ¹ of bringing the Totalities into their ⁴⁰ eternal being. 56

It is in ¹ the proper sense that he begets ¹ himself as ineffable, ¹ since he alone is self-begotten, ⁵ since he conceives of himself, and since he ¹ knows himself as he is. ¹ What is worthy of ¹ his admiration and glory and honor ¹ and praise, he produces ¹⁰ because of the boundlessness ¹ of his greatness, and the ¹ unsearchability of his ¹ wisdom, and the immeasurability ¹ of his power and his ¹⁵ untasteable sweetness. ¹ He is the one who projects himself ¹ thus, as generation, having ¹ glory and honor ¹ marvelous and lovely; the one who ²⁰ glorifies himself, ¹ who marvels, <who> ¹ honors, who also loves; ¹ the one who has ¹ a Son, who subsists ²⁵ in him, who is silent concerning him, who is ¹ the ineffable one ¹ in the ineffable one, the ¹ invisible one, the incomprehensible one, ¹ the inconceivable one in ³⁰ the inconceivable one. Thus, ¹ he exists in him forever. ¹ The Father, in the way we mentioned earlier, ¹ in an unbegotten way, is the one in whom ¹ he knows himself, ³⁵ who begot him having ¹ a thought, ¹ which is the thought ¹ of him, that is, the 57 perception of him, which is the [...] ¹ of his constitution ¹ forever. That is, ¹ however, in the proper sense, ⁵ [the] silence and the wisdom ¹ and the grace, if it is designated ¹ properly ¹ in this way.

3. The Son and the Church

Just as [the] ¹ Father exists in the proper sense, ¹⁰ the one before whom [there was no one] ¹ else and [the one] ¹ apart from [whom] there is no other unbegotten one, so ¹ too the [Son] ¹ exists in the proper sense, ¹⁵ the one before whom there was no other, ¹ and after whom ¹ no other son exists. ¹ Therefore, he is a firstborn ¹ and an only Son, ²⁰ “firstborn” because no one ¹ exists before him and “only Son” ¹ because no one is after ¹ him. Furthermore, he has ¹ his fruit, ²⁵ that which is unknowable because ¹ of its surpassing greatness. Yet ¹ he wanted it to be known, ¹ because of the riches of his ¹ sweetness. ³⁰ And he revealed the unexplainable power and ¹ he combined with it ¹ the great abundance of his generosity. ¹

Not only did the Son exist ¹ from the beginning, but the Church, ³⁵ too, existed from the beginning. ¹ Now, he who thinks that the discovery ¹ that the Son is an only son ¹ opposes the statement (about the Church) – ¹ because of the mysterious quality of the matter ⁴⁰ it is not so. For just as 58 the Father is a unity ¹ and has revealed himself ¹ as Father for him ¹ alone, so too ⁵ the Son was found ¹ to be a brother to himself alone, ¹ in virtue of the fact that he is unbegotten ¹ and without beginning. He ¹ wonders at himself ¹⁰ [along with the] Father, and he gives ¹ [him(self)] glory and honor and ¹ [love.] Furthermore, he too ¹ is the one whom he conceives of ¹ as Son, in accordance with the ¹⁵ dispositions: “without ¹ beginning” and “without end.” ¹ Thus is the matter ¹ something which is fixed. ¹ Being innumerable and ²⁰ illimitable, his offspring ¹ are indivisible. Those ¹ which exist have come ¹ forth from the Son and the Father ¹ like kisses, because of the multitude ²⁵ of some who kiss one ¹ another with a ¹ good, insatiable thought, ¹ the kiss being a unity, although it involves ¹ many kisses. This is to say, it is the ³⁰ Church consisting of many men that ¹ existed before the aeons, ¹ which is called, in the proper ¹ sense, "the aeons of the aeons." ¹ This is the nature of the ³⁵ holy imperishable spirits, ¹ upon which the Son rests, ¹ since it is his essence, just as ¹ the Father rests 59 upon the Son.

4. Aenoic Emanations

[...] ¹ the Church exists in the ¹ dispositions and properties ¹ in which the Father and the Son exist, ⁵ as I have said from the start. ¹ Therefore, it subsists ¹ in the procreations of innumerable aeons. ¹ Also in an uncountable way [they] ¹ too beget, by [the] properties [and] ¹⁰ the dispositions in which it (the Church) [exists.] ¹ [For] these [comprise its] ¹ association which [they form] ¹ toward one another and [toward those] ¹ who have come forth from [them] ¹⁵ toward the Son, for whose glory they exist. ¹ Therefore, ¹ it is not possible for mind to conceive of ¹ him — He was the perfection of that place — ¹ nor can speech ²⁰ express them, for they are ineffable ¹ and unnameable ¹ and inconceivable. They ¹ alone have the ability ¹ to name themselves and to conceive ²⁵ of themselves. For they have not been rooted ¹ in these places.

Those of that place ¹ are ineffable, ¹ (and) innumerable in ¹ the system which is ³⁰ both the manner and the ¹ size, the joy, the gladness ¹ of the unbegotten, ¹ nameless, unnameable, ¹ inconceivable, invisible, ³⁵ incomprehensible one. ¹ It is the fullness of paternity, ¹ so that his abundance ¹ is a begetting 60 [...] of the aeons.

They ¹ were forever in ¹ thought, for the Father ¹ was like a thought ⁵ and a place for them. When their ¹ generations had been established, the one who is completely in control ¹ wished to lay hold of and to bring forth that which was deficient in the ¹⁰ [... , and he brought] forth those ¹ [...] him. But since he is ¹ [as] he is, ¹ [he is] a spring, which is not ¹ diminished by the water which ¹⁵ abundantly flows from it. ¹ While they were ¹ in the Father's thought, that ¹ is, in the hidden depth, ¹ the depth knew them, ²⁰ but they ¹ were unable to know ¹ the depth in which they were; ¹ nor was it ¹ possible for them to know ²⁵ themselves, nor ¹ for them to know anything else. That ¹ is, they were ¹ with the Father; they did not exist for ¹ themselves. Rather, ³⁰ they only had ¹ existence in the manner ¹ of a seed, so that it has been discovered ¹ that they existed like a ¹ fetus. Like the word ³⁵ he begot them, subsisting ¹ spermatically, and ¹ the ones whom he was to beget had not yet come into being ⁶¹ from him. The one who ¹ first thought of them, the Father, ¹ — not only so that they might exist for him, ¹ but also that they might exist for themselves as well, ⁵ that they might then exist in [his] thought ¹ as mental substance ¹ and that they might exist for themselves too, — ¹ sowed a thought like a [spermatic] seed. ¹ Now, in order that [they] ¹⁰ might know [what exists] ¹ for them, he graciously [granted the] ¹ initial form, while in order that they might [recognize] ¹ who is the Father who exists [for them]. ¹ he gave them the name “Father” ¹⁵ by means of a voice proclaiming to them ¹ that what exists exists through ¹ that name, which they have ¹ by virtue of the fact that they came into being, because the exaltation, ¹ which has escaped their notice, is in the name. ²⁰

The infant, while in the ¹ form of a fetus ¹ has enough for itself, ¹ before ever seeing the one who ¹ sowed it. Therefore, they had ²⁵ the sole task ¹ of searching for him, realizing ¹ that he exists, ever wishing to find out ¹ what exists. Since, however, ¹ the perfect Father is good, ³⁰ just as he did not hear ¹ them at all so that they would exist (only) ¹ in his thought, but rather granted that ¹ they, too, might come into being, so ¹ also will he give them grace ³⁵ to know what exists, ¹ that is, the one who knows ¹ himself eternally, ⁶² [...] ¹ form to [know] what ¹ exists, just as people are begotten in this ¹ place: when they are born, they are in ⁵ the light, so that they see those who have begotten them. ¹

The Father brought forth everything, ¹ like a little child, ¹ like a drop from a ¹ spring, like a blossom ¹⁰ from a [vine], like a ¹ [flower], like a <planting> ¹ [...] in need of gaining ¹ [nourishment] and growth and ¹ faultlessness. He withheld it ¹⁵ for a time. He who had thought ¹ of it from the very beginning, ¹ possessed it from the very beginning, ¹ and saw it, but he closed it off ¹ to those who first came from ²⁰ him. (He did this,) not out of envy, but ¹ in order that the aeons might not receive their faultlessness ¹ from the very beginning ¹ and might not exalt themselves to the ¹ glory, to the Father, and might think ²⁵ that from themselves alone ¹ they have this. But ¹ just as he wished ¹ to grant that they might come into being, so ¹ too, in order that they might come into being as ³⁰ faultless ones, when he wished, he gave them ¹ the perfect idea of ¹ beneficence ¹ toward them.

The one whom he raised up ¹ as a light for those who came ³⁵ from himself, the one ¹ from whom they take their name, ¹ he is the Son, who is full, complete ¹ and faultless. He brought him forth ¹ mingled with what came forth from 63 him [...] ¹ partaking of the [...] ¹ the Totality, in accordance with [...] by which each ¹ one can receive [him] for himself, ⁵ though such was not his greatness ¹ before he was received by it. Rather, ¹ he exists by himself. As ¹ for the parts in which he exists in his own manner and ¹ form and greatness, ¹⁰ it is possible for <them> to see him ¹ and speak about that which they know ¹ of him, since they wear ¹ him while he wears them, [because] ¹ it is possible for them to comprehend him. ¹⁵ He, however, is as he is, ¹ incomparable. ¹ In order that the Father might receive ¹ honor from each one ¹ and reveal himself, ²⁰ even in his ineffability, ¹ hidden, and invisible, ¹ they marvel at him mentally. ¹ Therefore, the ¹ greatness of his loftiness consists in the fact that they ²⁵ speak about him and see him. ¹ He becomes manifest, ¹ so that he may be hymned because of the abundance ¹ of his sweetness, with the grace ¹ of <...>. And just as ³⁰ the admirations ¹ of the silences ¹ are eternal generations ¹ and they are mental offspring, ¹ so too the dispositions ³⁵ of the word are spiritual ¹ emanations. Both of them [admirations and dispositions], ¹ since they belong to a word, 64 are [seeds] and ¹ thoughts [of] his offspring, ¹ and roots which live ¹ forever, appearing ⁵ to be offspring which have come forth from ¹ themselves, being minds and ¹ spiritual offspring to ¹ the glory of the Father.

There is no need ¹ for voice and spirit, mind and ¹⁰ word, because there is no need to ¹ [work at] that which they desire ¹ [to do], but on the pattern ¹ by which [he was] existing, so ¹ are those who have come forth from him, ¹⁵ begetting everything which they desire. And ¹ the one whom they conceive of, and ¹ whom they speak about, and the one ¹ toward whom they move, and ¹ the one in whom they are, and ²⁰ the one whom they hymn, thereby glorifying him, ¹ he has ¹ sons. For this is their procreative ¹ power, like ¹ those from whom they have come, ²⁵ according to their mutual assistance, ¹ since they assist one another ¹ like the unbegotten ones. ¹

The Father, in accordance with his ¹ exalted position over the Totalities, being ³⁰ an unknown and incomprehensible one, ¹ has such greatness ¹ and magnitude, that, ¹ if he had revealed himself ¹ suddenly, quickly, ³⁵ to all the exalted ones among the aeons ¹ who had come forth from him, they ¹ would have perished. Therefore, he ¹ withheld his power and his inexhaustibility ¹ within that in which he 65 is. [He is] ¹ ineffable [and] unnameable ¹ and exalted above every mind ¹ and every word. This one, however, stretched ⁵ himself out ¹ and it was that which he stretched out ¹ which gave a foundation and ¹ a space and a dwelling place for ¹ the universe, a name of his being “the ¹⁰ one through whom,” since he is ¹ Father of the All, out of his ¹ laboring for those who exist, ¹ having sown into their thought that [they] ¹ might seek after him. The abundance of their [. . .] ¹⁵ consists in the fact that they understand that he ¹ exists and in the fact that they ask what it is ¹ [that] was existing. This one was ¹ given to them for enjoyment and ¹ nourishment and joy and an abundance ²⁰ of illumination, which ¹ consists in his fellow laboring, ¹ his knowledge and his mingling ¹ with them, that is, the one ¹ who is called and is, in fact, ²⁵ the Son, since he is the Totalities ¹ and the one of whom they know both who he is ¹ and that it is he who clothes. ¹ This is the one who is called ¹ “Son” and the one of whom they understand ³⁰ that he exists and they were seeking ¹ after him. This is the one who exists ¹ as Father and (as) the one about whom they cannot speak, ¹ and the one of whom they do not conceive. ¹ This is the one who first came into being. ³⁵

It is impossible for anyone to conceive ¹ of him or think of him. Or can anyone ¹ approach there, toward the exalted one, ¹ toward the pre-existent in the proper ¹ sense? But all the names conceived 66 or spoken ¹ about him are presented ¹ in honor, as a trace ¹ of him, according to the ability of each ⁵ one of those who glorify him. Now he ¹ who arose from him when he stretched ¹ himself out for begetting and ¹ for knowledge on the part of the Totalities, he ¹ [. . .] all of the names, without falsification, ¹⁰ and he is, ¹ in the proper sense, the sole first one, ¹ [the] man of the Father, that is, the one whom I ¹ call the form of the formless, ¹ the body of the bodiless, the face ¹⁵ of the invisible,

 the word of [the] ¹ unutterable, the mind of the inconceivable, ¹
 the fountain which flowed from ¹ him, the root of those who are planted, ¹ and the god of those who exist, the light ²⁰ of those whom he illumines, the love of those ¹ whom he loved,
 the providence of those for whom he ¹ providentially cares, the wisdom ¹ of those whom he made wise,
 the power ¹ of those to whom he gives power,
 the assembly ²⁵ [of] those whom he assembles to him, the revelation ¹ of the things which are sought after,
 the eye ¹ of those who see, the breadth of those who breathe, ¹

 the life of those who live, the unity ¹ of those who are mixed with the Totalities. ³⁰

All of them exist in the single one, ¹ as he clothes himself completely ¹ and by his single name ¹ he is never called. ¹ And in ³⁵ this unique way they are equally ¹ the single one and the Totalities. ¹ He is neither divided as a body, ¹ nor is he separated into the names ¹ which he has [received], ⁴⁰ (so that) he is one thing in this way and another ⁶⁷ in [another way.] Also, neither ¹ does he change in [...], nor ¹ does he turn into [the names] which he ¹ [thinks of,] and become now this, now ⁵ something else, this thing now being one thing ¹ and, at another time, something else, ¹ but rather he is wholly himself to the uttermost. [He] ¹ is each and every one of the Totalities ¹ forever at the same time. He is what ¹⁰ all of them are. He brought ¹ the Father to the Totalities. He also is the Totalities, ¹ for he is the one who is knowledge ¹ for himself and he is ¹ each one of the properties. He ¹⁵ has the powers and [he is] beyond ¹ all that which he knows, ¹ while seeing himself in himself ¹ completely and having a ¹ Son and form. Therefore, ²⁰ his powers and properties are innumerable ¹ and inaudible, ¹ because of the begetting [by] which he ¹ begets them. Innumerable ¹ and indivisible are ²⁵ the begettings of his words, and ¹ his commands and his Totalities. ¹ He knows them, which things he himself is, ¹ since they are in ¹ the single name, and ³⁰ are all speaking in it. And ¹ he brings (them) forth, in order that ¹ it might be discovered that they ¹ exist according to their individual properties in a unified way. ¹ And he did not reveal the multitude ³⁵ to the Totalities at once ¹ nor did he reveal his equality ¹ to those who had come forth from him. ¹

5. Aeonic Life

All those who came forth from him, ¹ <who> are the aeons of the aeons, ⁶⁸ being emanations and offspring of ¹ <his> procreative nature, ¹ they too, in their procreative ¹ nature, have <given> glory to ⁵ the Father, as he was ¹ the cause of their establishment. This is what ¹ we said previously, namely that he creates ¹ the aeons as roots and ¹⁰ springs and fathers, and that he ¹ is the one to whom they give glory. They have begotten, for ¹ he has knowledge ¹ and wisdom ¹ and the Totalities knew ¹⁵ that it is from knowledge ¹ and wisdom that they have come forth. ¹ They would have brought forth ¹ a seeming honor: "The Father is the one ¹ who is the Totalities," ²⁰ if the aeons had risen up to give ¹ honor individually. ¹ Therefore, in the ¹ song of glorification and ¹ in the power of the unity ²⁵ of him from ¹ whom they have come, they were drawn into a mingling ¹ and a combination and a unity ¹ with one another. ¹ They offered glory worthy of ³⁰ the Father from the pleromatic ¹ congregation, which is a ¹ single representation although many, ¹ because it was brought forth as a glory ¹ for the single one and because ³⁵ they came forth toward the one who ¹ is himself the Totalities. Now, this 69 was a praise [...] ¹ the one who brought forth the Totalities, ¹ being a first-fruit of the immortals ¹ and an eternal one, because, ⁵ having come forth from the living aeons, being ¹ perfect and full because of the one who is perfect ¹ and full, it left full ¹ and perfect those who have given glory in ¹ a perfect way because of the ¹⁰ fellowship. For, like the faultless Father, ¹ when he is glorified he ¹ also hears the glory which glorifies him, ¹ so as to make them manifest as that which ¹ he is.

The cause of the second ¹⁵ honor which accrued to them ¹ is that which was returned ¹ to them from the Father when they had known ¹ the grace by which they bore fruit with one another ¹ because of the Father. ²⁰ As a result, just as they ¹ <were> brought forth in glory for the Father, ¹ so too in order to appear ¹ perfect, they appeared ¹ acting by giving glory.

They ²⁵ were fathers of the third glory ¹ according to the independence and ¹ the power which was begotten with them, ¹ since each one of them individually does not ¹ exist so as to give glory ³⁰ in a unitary way to him whom he loves. ¹

They are the first and the ¹ second and thus both of them are perfect and ¹ full, for they are manifestations ¹ of the Father who is perfect ³⁵ and full, as well as of those who came forth, ¹ who are perfect by the fact that they glorify ¹ the perfect one. The fruit of the third, however, ¹ consists of honors of ¹ the will of each one of the aeons ⁴⁰ and each one of the properties. — ¹ The Father has power. — It exists 70 fully, ¹ perfect in [the thought] which is a product of ¹ agreement, since it is a product ¹ of the individuality ⁵ of the aeons. It is this which he loves ¹ and over which he has power, ¹ as it gives glory to the Father by means of it. ¹

For this reason, they are minds of ¹ minds, which are found to be ¹⁰ words of words, ¹ elders of ¹ elders, degrees ¹ of degrees, which are exalted above ¹ one another. Each one ¹⁵ of those who give glory has ¹ his place and his ¹ exaltation and his dwelling and his ¹ rest, which consists of the glory ¹ which he brings forth. ²⁰

All those who glorify the Father ¹ have their begetting ¹ eternally, — they beget in ¹ the act of assisting one another — ¹ since the emanations are limitless and ²⁵ immeasurable and since there is ¹ no envy on the part ¹ of the Father toward those who came forth from ¹ him in regard to their begetting something ¹ equal or similar to him, since he is the one who ³⁰ exists in the Totalities, begetting ¹ and revealing himself. ¹ Whomever he wishes, he makes into a father, ¹ of whom he in fact is Father, ¹ and a god, of whom he in fact ³⁵ is God, and he makes them ¹ the Totalities, whose ¹ entirety he is. In the proper sense all the names which 71 are great are kept there, ¹ these (names) which ¹ the angels share, ¹ who have come into being in ⁵ the cosmos along with the archons, although [they] do not have ¹ any resemblance ¹ to the eternal beings.

The entire system ¹ of the aeons has ¹ a love and a longing ¹⁰ for the perfect, complete discovery ¹ of the Father and this is their unimpeded agreement. ¹ Though the Father reveals ¹ himself eternally, ¹ he did not wish ¹⁵ that they should know him, since he grants that he be ¹ conceived of in such a way as to be sought for, while ¹ keeping to himself his unsearchable ¹ primordial being.

It is he, ¹ [the] Father, who gave root impulses ²⁰ to the aeons, since they are places ¹ on the path which leads toward him, ¹ as toward a school of ¹ behavior. He has extended to them ¹ faith in and prayer to him whom ²⁵ they do not see; and a firm hope ¹ in him of whom they do not conceive; ¹ and a fruitful love, ¹ which looks toward that which it does not ¹ see; and an acceptable understanding ³⁰ of the eternal mind; ¹ and a blessing, ¹ which is riches and freedom; ¹ and a wisdom of the one ¹ who desires the glory of the Father ³⁵ for <his> thought.

It is by virtue of his will that the Father, ¹ the one who is exalted, is known, 72 that is, ¹ (by virtue of) the spirit which breathes in the Totalities ¹ and it gives them an ¹ idea of seeking after the ⁵ unknown one, just as one is drawn ¹ by a pleasant ¹ aroma to search for the thing ¹ from which the aroma arises, ¹ since the aroma ¹⁰ of the Father surpasses these ordinary ones. ¹ For his sweetness ¹ leaves the aeons in ¹ ineffable pleasure ¹ and it gives them their idea ¹⁵ of mingling with him who ¹ wants them to know him in ¹ a united way and to assist ¹ one another in the spirit which ¹ is sown within them. Though existing ²⁰ under a great weight, ¹ they are renewed in an inexpressable way, ¹ since it is impossible ¹ for them to be separated from that ¹ in which they are set in an uncomprehending way, ²⁵ because they will not speak, ¹ being silent about the Father's glory, ¹ about the one who has power ¹ to speak, and yet they will take form from ¹ him. He revealed [himself, though] ³⁰ it is impossible to speak of him. ¹ They have him, hidden in ¹ a thought, since from ¹ this one [. . .]. They are silent about ¹ the way the Father is ³⁵ in his form and his nature ¹ and his greatness, ⁷³ while the aeons have become worthy of knowing ¹ through his spirit ¹ that he is unnameable and ¹ incomprehensible. It is through ⁵ his spirit, which is the trace ¹ of the search for him, that he provides ¹ them the ability to conceive of him and ¹ to speak about him.

Each one ¹ of the aeons is a name, <that is>, each of ¹⁰ the properties and powers of ¹ the Father, since he exists in many names, which are ¹ intermingled and harmonious with one another. ¹ It is possible to speak of him because ¹ of the wealth of speech, just as the Father ¹⁵ is a single name, because ¹ he is a unity, yet is innumerable ¹ in his properties and ¹ names.

The emanation of ¹ the Totalities, which exist from the one ²⁰ who exists, did not occur according ¹ to a separation from one another, ¹ as something cast off from the one who begets ¹ them. Rather, their begetting is like ¹ a process of extension, ²⁵ as the Father extends himself ¹ to those whom he loves, so that ¹ those who have come forth from him might ¹ become him as well.

Just as ¹ the present aeon, though a ³⁰ unity, is divided by units of time ¹ and units of time are divided into ¹ years and years are divided into ¹ seasons and seasons into months, ¹ and months into days, and days ³⁵ into hours, and hours ¹ into moments, so ⁷⁴ too the aeon of the Truth, ¹ since it is a unity ¹ and multiplicity, receives honor in the small ¹ and the great names according to the ⁵ power of each to grasp it – by way ¹ of analogy – like a spring ¹ which is what it is, ¹ yet flows into streams ¹ and lakes and canals ¹⁰ and branches, or like a ¹ root spread out beneath ¹ trees and branches with ¹ its fruit, or like a ¹ human body, which is partitioned ¹⁵ in an indivisible way into members ¹ of members, primary members ¹ and secondary, great [and] ¹ small.

6. The Imperfect Begetting by the Logos

The aeons have brought [themselves] forth ¹ in accord with the third ²⁰ fruit by the ¹ freedom of the will ¹ and by the wisdom ¹ with which he favored them for their thought. ¹ They do not wish to give honor ²⁵ [with] that which is from an agreement, [though] ¹ it was produced for words of [praise] ¹ for each of the Pleromas. ¹ Nor do they wish ¹ to give honor with the Totality. Nor do ³⁰ they wish (to do so) with anyone else who was originally above the depth of that one, or (above) his place, except, however, for the one who exists in an exalted name and ³⁵ in the exalted place, and only if he receives from the one who wished (to give honor), 75 and takes it to him(self) for the one above him, and (only if) he begets him(self), so to speak, himself, and, through that one, begets him(self) ⁵ along with that which he is, and himself becomes renewed along with the one who came upon him, by his brother, and sees him and entreats him about the matter, namely, he who wished to ascend to him. ¹⁰

So that it might be in this way, the one who wished to give honor does not say anything to him about this, except only that there is a limit to speech set in the Pleroma, so ¹⁵ that they are silent about the incomprehensibility of the Father, but they speak about the one who wishes to comprehend him. It came to one of the aeons that he should attempt to grasp the incomprehensibility ²⁰ and give glory to it and especially to the ineffability of the Father. [Since] he is a Logos of the unity, he is one, though he is not from the agreement of the Totalities, nor ²⁵ from him who brought them forth, namely, the one who brought forth the Totality, the Father.

This aeon was among those to whom was given wisdom, so that he could become pre-existent in each one's ³⁰ thought. By that which he wills will they be produced. Therefore, he received a wise nature in order to examine the hidden basis, since he is a wise fruit; ³⁵ for, the free will which was begotten with the Totalities was a cause for this one, such as to make him do 76 what he desired, with no one to restrain him.

The intent, then, of the Logos, who is this one, was good. ⁵ When he had come forth, he gave glory to the Father, even if it led to something beyond possibility, since he had wanted to bring forth one who is perfect, from an ¹⁰ agreement in which he had not been, and without having the command.

This aeon was last to have been brought forth by ¹⁵ mutual assistance, and he was small in magnitude. And before he begot anything else for the glory of the will and in agreement with the Totalities, he acted, magnanimously, ²⁰ from an abundant love, and set out toward that which surrounds the perfect glory, for it was not without the will of the Father ²⁵ that the Logos was produced, which is to say, not without it will he go forth. But he, the Father, had brought him forth for those about whom he knew that it was ³⁰ fitting that they should come into being.

The Father ¹ and the Totalities drew away from him, ¹ so that the limit ¹ which the Father had set ¹ might be established — for ³⁵ it is not from grasping the incomprehensibility ¹ but by the will 77 of the Father, — and furthermore, (they withdrew) so that ¹ the things which have come to be might become ¹ an organization which would come into being. ¹ If it were to come, it would not come into being ⁵ by the manifestation of the Pleroma. ¹ Therefore, it is not fitting to ¹ criticize the movement which is the Logos, ¹ but it is fitting that we should say about ¹ the movement of the Logos that it is a cause ¹⁰ of an organization which has been destined to ¹ come about.

The Logos himself caused it to happen, ¹ being complete and unitary, ¹ for the glory of the Father, whom ¹ he desired, and (he did so) being content with it, ¹⁵ but those whom he wished to take hold of ¹ firmly he begot in shadows ¹ [and] copies and likenesses. ¹ For, he was not able to bear the sight ¹ of the light, but he looked into ²⁰ the depth and he doubted. ¹ Out of this there was a division — he became ¹ deeply troubled — and a turning away because of his ¹ self-doubt and division, forgetfulness ¹ and ignorance of himself and ²⁵ <of that> which is.

His self-exaltation and ¹ his expectation of comprehending ¹ the incomprehensible became firm for him ¹ and was in him. But the sicknesses ¹ followed him ³⁰ when he went beyond ¹ himself, having come into being ¹ from self-doubt, namely from the fact ¹ that he did not <reach the attainment of> ¹ the glories of the Father, the one whose exalted status ³⁵ is among things unlimited. This one ¹ did not attain him, for he did not receive him. ¹

The one whom he himself brought forth 78 as a unitary aeon ¹ rushed up to ¹ that which is his and this kin of his ¹ in the Pleroma abandoned ⁵ him who came to be in the defect along with ¹ those who had come forth from him in ¹ an imaginary way, since they are not his. ¹

When he who produced ¹ himself as perfect actually did bring ¹⁰ himself forth, ¹ he became weak like a female nature ¹ which has abandoned its ¹ virile counterpart.

From that ¹ which was deficient in itself there ¹⁵ came those things which came into being ¹ from his thought and [his] ¹ arrogance, but from that ¹ which is perfect in him he left it and raised [himself] ¹ up to those who are his. He was ²⁰ in the Pleroma as ¹ a remembrance for him so that he [would be] ¹ saved from his arrogance. ¹

The one who ran on high and ¹ the one who drew him to himself were not ²⁵ barren, but in bringing ¹ forth a fruit in the Pleroma, ¹ they upset those who ¹ were in the defect. ¹

Like the Pleromas are the things which came into being from the ³⁰ arrogant thought, ¹ which are their (the Pleromas') ¹ likenesses, ¹ copies, shadows, ¹ and phantasms, lacking ³⁵ reason and the light, these ¹ which belong to the vain thought, ¹ since they are not products of anything. Therefore, 79 their end will be like ¹ their beginning: from that which did ¹ not exist (they are) to return once again to ¹ that which will not be. It is they, however, ⁵ by themselves ¹ who are greater, more powerful, ¹ and more honored than the names ¹ which are given to them, which are [their] shadows. ¹ In the manner of a reflection are they beautiful. ¹⁰ For the [face] of the copy normally takes its beauty ¹ from that of which it is a copy. ¹

They thought of themselves ¹ that they are beings existing by themselves ¹ and are without a source, ¹⁵ since they do not see anything else ¹ existing before them. Therefore, they ¹ [lived] in disobedience ¹ [and] acts of rebellion, without ¹ having humbled themselves before the one because of whom they came into being. ²⁰

They wanted to command ¹ one another, overcoming one another ¹ [in] their vain ambition, ¹ while the glory which they possess ¹ contains a cause ²⁵ [of] the system which was to be. ¹

They are likenesses of the things which are exalted. ¹ They were brought to a lust for power ¹ in each one of them, ¹ according to the greatness of the name ³⁰ of which each is a shadow, ¹ each one imagining that it is superior ¹ to his fellows.

The thought of these ¹ others was not barren, ¹ but just like <those> ³⁵ of which they are shadows, all that ¹ they thought about they have as ¹ potential sons; 80 those of whom they thought ¹ they had ¹ as offspring. Therefore, ¹ it happened that many offspring came forth from them, ⁵ as fighters ¹ as warriors, as ¹ troublemakers, as apostates. ¹ They are disobedient beings, ¹ lovers of power. ¹⁰ All [the] other beings of this sort were [brought] ¹ forth from these.

7. The Conversion of the Logos

The Logos was ¹ a cause of those [who] ¹ came into being and he continued all the more ¹ to be at a loss and he was astonished. ¹⁵ Instead of perfection, he saw a defect; ¹ instead of unification, he saw division; ¹ instead of stability, he [saw] disturbances; instead of [rests,] ¹ tumults. Neither was it [possible] ²⁰ for him to make them cease from [loving] ¹ disturbance, nor was it possible for him ¹ to destroy it. He was completely powerless, ¹ once his totality and his exaltation ¹ abandoned him.

Those who had come into being ²⁵ not knowing themselves ¹ both did not know ¹ the Pleromas from which they came forth ¹ and did not know ¹ the one who was the cause of ³⁰ their existence.

The Logos, ¹ being in ¹ such unstable conditions, ¹ did not continue to bring ¹ forth anything like emanations, ³⁵ the things which are in the Pleroma, ¹ the glories which exist for the honor ¹ of the Father. Rather, he brought 81 forth little weaklings, ¹ [hindered] by the illnesses ¹ by which he too was hindered. ¹ It was the likeness of the disposition which was ⁵ a unity, that which ¹ was the cause of the things ¹ which do not themselves exist from the first. ¹

Until the one who brought ¹ forth into the defect these things which were thus ¹⁰ in need, until he ¹ judged those who came into being because ¹ of him contrary to reason — which is the judgment ¹ which became a condemnation — ¹ he struggled against them unto destruction, ¹⁵ that is, the ones who struggled against the condemnation ¹ and whom the wrath pursues, while ¹ it (the wrath) accepts and ¹ redeems (them) from their (false) opinion and ¹ apostasy, since from it ²⁰ [is] the conversion which is ¹ also called “metanoia.” ¹ The Logos turned to [another] opinion ¹ and another thought. ¹ Having turned away from evil, ²⁵ he turned toward the good things. ¹ Following the conversion came ¹ the thought of the things which exist ¹ and the prayer for the one who converted ¹ himself to the good. ³⁰

The one who is in the Pleroma ¹ was what he first prayed to and ¹ remembered; then (he remembered) his brothers ¹ individually and (yet) always ¹ with one another; then all of them together; ³⁵ but before all of them, the Father. 82 The prayer of the agreement ¹ was a help for him ¹ in his own return ¹ and (in that of) the Totality, for a cause ⁵ of his remembering ¹ those who have existed from the first was ¹ his being remembered. This ¹ is the thought which calls out ¹ from afar, bringing him back. ¹⁰

All his prayer and ¹ remembering were ¹ numerous powers according to that limit. ¹ For there is nothing ¹ barren in his thought. ¹⁵

The powers were good ¹ and were greater than those of the ¹ likeness. For those belonging to the ¹ likeness also belong to a nature of [falsehood]. ¹ From an illusion ²⁰ of similarity and a thought ¹ of arrogance has [come about] ¹ that which they became. And they ¹ originate from the thought ¹ which first knew [them.] ²⁵

To what do the former beings pertain? ¹ They are like forgetfulness ¹ and heavy sleep; being ¹ like those who dream ¹ troubled dreams, to whom ³⁰ sleep comes while they — ¹ those who dream — are oppressed.

¹ The others are ¹ like some creatures of light ¹ for him, looking for ³⁵ the rising of the sun, since it happened that ¹ they saw in him dreams ¹ which are truly sweet. 83 It immediately put a stop ¹ [to] the emanations of the thought. ¹ They [did] not any longer have ¹ their substance and also they did ⁵ not have honor any longer. ¹

Though he is not equal to those who ¹ pre-existed, if they were superior to ¹ the likenesses, it was he alone ¹ through whom they were more exalted than those, ¹⁰ for they are not from a good intent. ¹

It was not ¹ from the sickness which came into being that they were produced, ¹ from which is the good intent, ¹ but (from) the one who ¹⁵ sought after the pre-existent. ¹ Once he had prayed, he both raised ¹ himself to the good ¹ and sowed in them ¹ a pre-disposition to seek ²⁰ and pray to the ¹ glorious pre-existent one, ¹ and he sowed in them a thought ¹ about him and an idea, so that they should ¹ think that something greater than themselves ²⁵ exists prior to them, although they did not understand ¹ what it was. Begetting ¹ harmony and mutual love ¹ through that thought, ¹ they acted in ³⁰ unity and unanimity, ¹ since from ¹ unity and from unanimity ¹ they have received their very being. ¹

They were stronger than them ³⁵ in the lust for power, ¹ for they were more honored 84 than the first ones, who had been raised ¹ above them. Those had not ¹ humbled themselves. They thought about themselves ¹ that they were beings originating from themselves ⁵ alone and were ¹ without a source. As they brought [forth] ¹ at first according to their own birth, ¹ the two orders assaulted one another, ¹ fighting for ¹⁰ command because of their manner of ¹ being. As a result, they were submerged in ¹ forces and natures ¹ in accord with the condition of mutual assault, ¹ having ¹⁵ lust for power ¹ and all other things ¹ of this sort. It is from these that the ¹ vain love of glory draws ¹ all of them to ²⁰ the desire of the lust ¹ for power, while none ¹ of them has the exalted ¹ thought nor acknowledges ¹ it.

The powers ²⁵ of this thought are prepared ¹ in the works of the pre-existent ¹ <ones>, those of which they are ¹ the representations. For the order ¹ of those of this sort ³⁰ had mutual ¹ harmony, but it ¹ fought against the order ¹ of those of the likeness, while the order ¹ of those of the likeness wages war ³⁵ against the representations and acts ¹ against it alone, because of its ¹ wrath. 85 From this it [...] ¹ them [...] ¹ one another, many [...] ¹ necessity appointed them [...] ⁵ and might prevail [...] ¹ was not a multitude, [...] ¹ and their envy and their [...] ¹ and their wrath and violence and ¹ desire and prevailing ignorance ¹⁰ produce empty matters and ¹ powers of various sorts, mixed in ¹ great number with one another; while the mind of the Logos, who was ¹ a cause of their begetting, was open ¹ to a revelation of the hope ¹⁵ which would come to him from above.

8. The Emanation of the Savior

The Logos ¹ which moved had ¹ the hope and the expectation of him ¹ who is exalted. As for those of the shadow, he separated ¹ himself from them in every way, ²⁰ since they fight against him and are not at all humble ¹ before him. He was content ¹ with the beings of the thought. And as for the one who is set up ¹ in this way and who is within the ¹ exalted boundary, remembering ²⁵ the one who is defective, the Logos brought him forth ¹ in an invisible way, ¹ among those who came into being according to the thought, according ¹ to the one who was with them, ¹ until the light shone upon him from ³⁰ above as a lifegiver, the one who was begotten ¹ by the thought of brotherly love ¹ of the pre-existent Pleromas. ¹

The stumbling, which happened to the aeons ¹ of the Father of the Totalities who did ³⁵ not suffer, was brought to them, as if it were their own, ¹ in a careful and non-malicious ¹ and immensely sweet way. 86 [It was brought to the] Totalities so that they might be instructed about the ¹ [defect] by the single one, ¹ from whom [alone] they all [received strength] ¹ to eliminate the defects.

The order ⁵ [which] was his came into being from ¹ him who ran [on] high and that which brought itself forth ¹ from him and from the entire perfection. ¹ The one who ran on high became ¹ for the one who was defective an intercessor with the ¹⁰ emanation of the aeons which had come into being in accord with ¹ the things which exist. When he prayed ¹ to them, they consented joyously and ¹ willingly, since they were in agreement, and with harmonious ¹ consent, to aid the ¹⁵ defective one. They gathered together, ¹ asking the Father with beneficent intent ¹ that there be aid from ¹ above, from the Father, for his glory, ¹ since the defective one could not become perfect in any other way, ²⁰ unless it was the will of ¹ the Pleroma of the Father, which he had drawn to himself, ¹ revealed, and given to the defective ¹ one. Then from the harmony, in a ¹ joyous willingness which had come into being, they ²⁵ brought forth the fruit, which was a begetting ¹ from the harmony, a ¹ unity, a possession of the Totalities, ¹ revealing the countenance of ¹ the Father, of whom the aeons thought ³⁰ as they gave glory and prayed for help for their ¹ brother with a wish in which the Father counted himself ¹ with them. Thus, it was willingly and ¹ gladly that they bring forth ¹ the fruit. And he made manifest the agreement of the ³⁵ revelation of his union ¹ with them — which is his beloved ¹ Son. 87 But the Son in whom the Totalities are pleased ¹ put himself on them as a garment, ¹ through which ¹ he gave perfection to the defective one, ⁵ and gave confirmation to those who are perfect, ¹ the one who is properly called ¹ “Savior” and “the Redeemer” ¹ and “the Well-Pleasing one” and “the Beloved,” ¹ “the one to whom prayers have been offered” and “the Christ” and ¹⁰ “the Light of those appointed,” in accordance with the ones from whom ¹ he was brought forth, since he has become ¹ the names of the positions [which] were given ¹ to him. Yet, what other name may be applied ¹ to him except “the Son,” as we previously ¹⁵ said, since he is the knowledge ¹ of the Father, whom he wanted them ¹ to know?

Not only did the aeons ¹ generate the countenance of the Father to whom ¹ they gave praise, which was written previously, but also ²⁰ they generated their own; for the aeons ¹ who give glory generated their countenance ¹ and their face. They were produced as an army ¹ for him, as for a king, ¹ since the beings of the thought have a ²⁵ powerful fellowship and an intermingled ¹ harmony. They came forth ¹ in a multifaceted form, in ¹ order that the one to whom help was to be given might ¹ see those to whom he had prayed ³⁰ for help. He also sees the one who gave ¹ it to him.

The fruit ¹ of the agreement with him, of which we previously spoke, ¹ is subject to the power of the Totalities. ¹ For the Father has set the Totalities within him, ³⁵ both the ones which pre-exist ¹ and the ones which are, and the ones which will be. 88 He was capable (of doing it). He revealed ¹ those which he had placed within him. ¹ He did not give them, when he entrusted (them) to him. ¹ He directed the organization of the universe ⁵ according to the authority which was given him ¹ from the first and (according to) the power of the task. ¹ Thus, he began and effected ¹ his revelation.

The one ¹ in whom the Father is and the one ¹⁰ in whom the Totalities are <was> created ¹ before the one who lacked ¹ sight. He instructed him about those who searched ¹ for their sight, by ¹ means of the shining of that perfect light. ¹⁵ He first perfected him ¹ in ineffable joy. He ¹ perfected him for himself as a perfect one ¹ and he also gave him what is appropriate to each ¹ individual. For this is the determination of ²⁰ the first joy. And <he> sowed ¹ in him in an invisible way ¹ a word which is destined to be ¹ knowledge. And he gave him power ¹ to separate and cast out from himself ²⁵ those who are disobedient to him.

Thus, he made himself manifest to him. But to those who came into being because of him he revealed a form surpassing³⁰ them. They acted in a hostile way toward one another. Suddenly he revealed himself to them, approaching them in the form of lightning. And in putting an end to the entanglement which they have with³⁵ one another he stopped it⁸⁹ by the sudden revelation, which they were not informed about, did not expect, and did not know of. Because of this, they⁵ were afraid and fell down, since they were not able to bear the appearance of the light which struck them. The one who appeared was an assault for the two orders. Just as the beings of thought had been given the name¹⁰ "little one," so they have a faint notion that they have the exalted one, — he exists before them, — and they have sown within them an attitude of amazement at the exalted one who¹⁵ will become manifest. Therefore, they welcomed his revelation and they worshipped him. They became convinced witnesses to (him). They acknowledged the light which had come into being as²⁰ one stronger than those who fought against them. The beings of the likeness, however, were exceedingly afraid, since they were not able to hear about him in the beginning, that there is a vision of this sort. Therefore they fell down²⁵ to the pit of ignorance which is called "the Outer Darkness," and "Chaos" and "Hades" and "the Abyss." He set up what was beneath the order of the beings³⁰ of thought, as it was stronger than they. They were worthy of ruling over the unspeakable darkness, since it is theirs and is the lot which was assigned to them. He³⁵ granted them that they, too, should be of use for the organization which was to come, ⁹⁰ to which he had [assigned] them.

There is a great difference between the revelation of the one who came into being to the one who was defective and to those things which are to come into being because of him. For he revealed himself to him within⁵ him, since he is with him, is a fellow sufferer with him, gives him rest little by little, makes him grow, lifts him up, gives himself to him completely for enjoyment from¹⁰ a vision. But to those who fall outside, he revealed himself quickly and in a striking way and he withdrew to himself suddenly without having let them see him.

9. The Pleroma of the Logos

When the Logos which was defective was illumined,¹⁵ his Pleroma began. He escaped those who had disturbed him at first. He became unmixed with them. He stripped off that arrogant thought.²⁰ He received mingling with the Rest, ¹ when those who had been disobedient to him at first ¹ bent down and humbled themselves before him. ¹ And [he] rejoiced ¹ over the visitation of his brothers ²⁵ who had visited him. He gave ¹ glory and praise to those who had become manifest ¹ as a help to him, while he gave thanks, ¹ because he had escaped those who revolted against him, ¹ and admired and honored the greatness ³⁰ and those who had appeared to him in a ¹ determined way. He generated manifest images ¹ of the living visages, pleasing ¹ among [things] which are good, existing ¹ among the things which exist, resembling ³⁵ them in beauty, but unequal to them ¹ in truth, since they [are] not from ¹ an agreement with him, between the one who brought them 91 forth and the one who revealed himself to him. But ¹ in wisdom and knowledge ¹ he acts, mingling the Logos with ¹ him(self) entirely. Therefore, those which came ⁵ forth from him are great, just as ¹ that which is truly great. ¹

After he was amazed at the beauty ¹ of the ones who had appeared to him, ¹ he professed gratitude for this ¹⁰ visitation. The Logos performed this activity, ¹ through those from whom he had received ¹ aid, for the stability ¹ of those who had come into being because of him and ¹ so that they might receive something good, ¹⁵ since he thought to pray for the organization ¹ of all those who came forth from him, ¹ which is stabilized, so that it might make them established. ¹ Therefore, those whom he intentionally produced ¹ are in chariots, ²⁰ just as those who came into being, those who ¹ have appeared, so that they might pass through ¹ every place of things which are below, ¹ so that each one might be given the place ¹ which is constituted as he ²⁵ is. This is destruction ¹ for the beings of the likeness, yet is an act of beneficence ¹ for the beings of the thought, a revelation ¹ [Dittography] ¹ of those who are from ³⁰ the ordinance, which was a unity ¹ while suffering, while they are seeds, ¹ which have not come to be by themselves. ¹

The one who appeared was a countenance ¹ of the Father and of the harmony. He was ³⁵ a garment (composed) of every grace, and food ¹ which is for those whom the Logos ¹ brought forth while praying and [giving] glory and ¹ honor. 92 This is the one whom he glorified and honored ¹ while looking to those to whom he prayed, ¹ so that he might perfect them through the ¹ images which he had brought forth.

The Logos added ⁵ even more to ¹ their mutual assistance and ¹ to the hope of the promise, since ¹ they have joy and abundant rest ¹ and undefiled pleasures. ¹⁰ He generated those whom he ¹ remembered at first, when they ¹ were not with him, (he generated them) having the perfection. ¹ [Dittography] ¹ Now, while he who belongs to the vision is with him, ¹⁵ he exists in hope and ¹ faith in the perfect Father, as much as the Totalities. ¹ He appears to him before he ¹ mingles with him in order that the things which have ¹ come into being might not perish by looking ²⁰ upon the light, for they can ¹ not accept the great, exalted stature. ¹

The thought of the Logos, ¹ who had returned to his stability ¹ and ruled over those who had ²⁵ come into being because of him, was called ¹ "Aeon" and "Place" of ¹ all those whom he had brought forth ¹ in accord with the ordinance, and it is also called ¹ "Synagogue of ³⁰ Salvation," because he healed him(self) from ¹ the dispersal, which is the multifarious thought ¹ and returned to ¹ the single thought. Similarly, ¹ it is called "Storehouse," ³⁵ because of the rest which he ¹ obtained, giving (it) to himself alone. 93 And it is also called "Bride," ¹ because of the joy of the one ¹ who gave himself to him in the hope of fruit ¹ from the union, and who appeared to him. ⁵ It is also called "Kingdom," ¹ because of the stability which he received, while he ¹ rejoices at the domination over those who fought him. ¹ And it is called "the Joy ¹ of the Lord," because of the gladness in [which he] ¹⁰ clothed himself. With him is the light, ¹ giving him recompense for the ¹ good things which are in him ¹ and (with him is) the thought of freedom. ¹

The aeon, of whom we previously spoke, ¹⁵ is above the two orders ¹ of those who fight against one another. ¹ It is not a companion of those who hold dominion and ¹ is not implicated in the illnesses and weaknesses, ¹ things belonging to the thought and to the likeness. ²⁰

That in which the Logos set ¹ himself, perfect in joy, ¹ was an aeon, having ¹ the form of matter, but also having ¹ the constitution of the cause, which ²⁵ is the one who revealed himself. (The aeon was) an image ¹ of those things which are in the Pleroma, ¹ those things which came into being from the abundance ¹ of the enjoyment of the one who exists ¹ joyously. It, moreover, the ³⁰ countenance of the one who revealed himself, was ¹ in the sincerity and the attentiveness ¹ and the promise concerning ¹ the things for which he asked. It had ¹ the designation of the Son ³⁵ and his essence and his power and his ¹ form, who is the one whom he loved ¹ and in whom he was pleased, 94 who was entreated in a loving way. ¹ It was light and was a desire ¹ to be established and an openness ¹ for instruction and an eye for vision, ⁵ qualities which it had ¹ from the exalted ones. It was also wisdom ¹ for his thinking in opposition to the things beneath the ¹ organization. It was also a word for ¹ speaking and the perfection of the things ¹⁰ of this sort. And it is these who ¹ took form with him, but according to the image ¹ of the Pleroma, having ¹ their fathers who are the ones who gave them life, ¹ each one being a copy ¹⁵ of each one of the faces, ¹ which are forms of maleness, ¹ since they are not from the illness which ¹ is femaleness, but are from ¹ this one who already has left behind ²⁰ the sickness. It has the name ¹ "the Church," for in harmony ¹ they resemble the harmony in the assembly ¹ of those who have revealed themselves.

That ¹ which came into being in the image of the ²⁵ light, it too is perfect, ¹ inasmuch as it is an image of the ¹ one existing light, which is the ¹ Totalities. Even if it was inferior to the one of whom ¹ it is an image, nevertheless it has ³⁰ its indivisibility, because ¹ it is a countenance of the ¹ indivisible light. Those, however, ¹ who came into being in the image ¹ of each one of the aeons, ³⁵ they in essence are in the one whom we ¹ previously mentioned, but in power they are not equal, ¹ because it (the power) is in each ¹ of them. In ¹ this mingling with one another ⁴⁰ they have equality, ⁹⁵ but each one has not cast off what is peculiar to itself. ¹ Therefore, they are passions, ¹ for passion is sickness, since ¹ they are productions not of the agreement ⁵ of the Pleroma, but of this one, ¹ prematurely, before he received the Father. Hence, ¹ the agreement with his Totality and will ¹ was something beneficial for the organization ¹ which was to come. It was granted them ¹⁰ to pass through the places which are below, ¹ since the places are unable ¹ to accommodate their ¹ sudden, hasty coming, unless (they come) individually, ¹ one by one. ¹⁵ Their coming is necessary, since ¹ by them will everything be perfected. ¹

In short, the Logos received the vision of all things, ¹ those which pre-exist and those which are now ¹ and those which will be, ²⁰ since he has been entrusted ¹ with the organization of all that which ¹ exists. Some things are already ¹ in things which are fit for ¹ coming into being, but the seeds which are to ²⁵ be he has within himself, ¹ because of the promise which belonged to that ¹ which he conceived, as something belonging ¹ to seeds which are to be. And ¹ he produced his offspring, that ³⁰ is, the revelation of that which ¹ he conceived. For a while, however, the seed of ¹ promise is guarded, ¹ so that those who have been appointed for a ¹ mission might be appointed ³⁵ by the coming of the Savior and of those who ¹ are with him, the ones who are first ¹ in knowledge and glory of ¹ the Father.

10. The Organization

It is fitting, from 96 the prayer which he made and the ¹ conversion which occurred because of it, ¹ that some should perish ¹ while others benefit ⁵ and still others be ¹ set apart. He first prepared ¹ the punishment of those who are ¹ disobedient, making use of a power ¹ of the one who appeared, the one from whom he received ¹⁰ authority over all things, ¹ so as to be separate from him. He is ¹ the one who is below and he also keeps himself ¹ apart from that which is exalted, until he ¹ prepares the organization of all those things ¹⁵ which are external, and gives to each the place ¹ which is assigned to it. ¹

The Logos established him(self) at ¹ first, when he beautified the Totalities, as ¹ a basic principle and cause ²⁰ and ruler of the things which ¹ came to be, like the Father, the one who ¹ was the cause of the establishment, ¹ which was the first to exist after him. ¹ He created the pre-existent images, ²⁵ which he brought forth ¹ in thanks and glorification. Then ¹ he beautified the place of those whom he had ¹ brought forth in glory, which is called ¹ "Paradise" and ³⁰ "the Enjoyment" and "the Joy full ¹ of sustenance" and "the Joy," which ¹ pre-exist. And of ¹ every goodness which exists in ¹ the Pleroma, it preserves the image. ³⁵ Then he beautified the kingdom, ¹ like a city ¹ filled with everything pleasing, ¹ which is brotherly love and ¹ the great generosity, which is filled 97 with the holy spirits and [the] ¹ mighty powers which govern ¹ them, which the Logos ¹ produced and established ⁵ in power. Then (he beautified) the place of ¹ the Church which assembles in this place, ¹ having the form of the ¹ Church which exists in the aeons, which glorifies ¹ the Father. After these (he beautified) the place ¹⁰ of the faith and obedience (which arises) from ¹ hope, which things the Logos received ¹ when the light appeared; ¹ then (he beautified the place of) the disposition, which is prayer [and] ¹ supplication, which were followed by forgiveness ¹⁵ and the word concerning ¹ the one who would appear.

All the spiritual places ¹ are in spiritual power. ¹ They are separate from the beings ¹ of the thought, since the power is established in ²⁰ an image, which is that which separates ¹ the Pleroma from the Logos, while the power ¹ which is active in prophesying about ¹ the things which will be, directs the beings of the thought ¹ which have come into being toward that which is pre-existent, ²⁵ and it does not permit them to mix with the things which ¹ have come into being through a vision of the things which are ¹ with him.

The beings of the thought which ¹ is outside are humble; they ¹ preserve the representation of the pleromatic, ³⁰ especially because of the sharing ¹ in the names by which they are beautiful. ¹

The conversion is ¹ humble toward the beings of the thought, and the law, ¹ too, is humble toward them, ³⁵ (the law) of the judgment, which is the condemnation and ¹ the wrath. Also humble toward them ¹ is the power which separates those who ¹ fall below them, sends them ¹ far off and does not allow them 98 [to] spread out over the beings of the thought and ¹ the conversion, which (power) consists in fear and ¹ perplexity and forgetfulness and astonishment and ¹ ignorance and the things which have come into being ⁵ in the manner of a likeness, through phantasy. ¹ And these things, too, which were in fact lowly, ¹ are given the exalted names. ¹ There is no knowledge for those who have come ¹ forth from them with arrogance ¹⁰ and lust for power ¹ and disobedience and falsehood. ¹

To each one he gave ¹ a name, since the two orders are ¹ in a name. Those belonging to the thought and those of the representation ¹⁵ are called ¹ "the Right Ones" and "Psychic" and ¹ "the Fiery Ones" and "the Middle Ones." ¹ Those who belong to the arrogant thought and those of the likeness ¹ are called "the Left," ²⁰ "Hylic," "the Dark Ones," and "the Last." ¹

After the Logos established ¹ each one in his order, ¹ both the images and the representations and the likenesses, ¹ he kept the aeon of the images ²⁵ pure from all those who ¹ fight against it, since it is a place of joy. ¹ However, to those of the thought he revealed ¹ the thought which he had stripped ¹ from himself, desiring to draw them ³⁰ into a material union, for the sake ¹ of their system and dwelling place ¹ and in order that they might also bring forth ¹ an impulse for diminution from ¹ their attraction to evil, so that they might not any more ³⁵ rejoice in the glory ¹ of their environment and be dissolved, ¹ but might rather see ¹ their sickness in which they suffer, 99 so that they might beget love ¹ and continuous searching after ¹ the one who is able to heal them ¹ of the inferiority. Also over those ⁵ who belong to the likeness, he set ¹ the word of beauty, so that he might ¹ bring them into a form. He also set ¹ over them the law of judgment. ¹ Again, he set over them [the] ¹⁰ powers which the roots had produced ¹ [in] their lust for power. He [appointed] ¹ them as rulers over them, so that ¹ either by the support of the word which is beautiful ¹ or by the threat of the [law] ¹⁵ or by the power of lust for ¹ power the order might be preserved ¹ from those who have reduced it to evil, ¹ while the Logos is pleased with them, ¹ since they are useful for the organization.

The Logos knows the agreement ²⁰ in the lust for power of the ¹ two orders. ¹ To these and to all the others, he ¹ graciously granted their desire. He gave ¹ to each one the appropriate rank, ²⁵ and it was ordered ¹ that each one ¹ be a ruler over a ¹ place and an activity. He yields to the place ¹ of the one more exalted than himself, in order to command ³⁰ the other places in an activity ¹ which is in the allotted activity ¹ which falls to him to have control over ¹ because of his mode of being. ¹ As a result, there are commanders and ³⁵ subordinates in positions of domination ¹ and subjection among the angels 100 and archangels, while the activities ¹ are of various types and are different. ¹ Each one of the archons with his ¹ race and his perquisites to which his lot ⁵ has claim, just as they ¹ appeared, each was on guard, since they have been entrusted ¹ with the organization and none ¹ lacks a command and ¹ none is without kingship from ¹⁰ the end of the heavens to the end of the ¹ [earth], even to the foundations of the [earth] ¹ and to the places beneath the earth. There are ¹ kings, there are lords and those who give ¹ commands, some ¹⁵ for administering punishment, others ¹ for administering justice, still others for ¹ giving rest and healing, others ¹ for teaching, others for guarding. ¹

Over all the archons he appointed an Archon ²⁰ with no one commanding ¹ him. He is the lord of all of them, ¹ that is, the countenance which the Logos ¹ brought forth in his thought ¹ as a representation of the Father of the Totalities. Therefore, ²⁵ he is adorned with every <name> ¹ which <is> a representation of him, since he is characterized by every property ¹ and glorious quality. For he too is called ¹ "father" and "god" and "демиург" and ¹ "king" and "judge" and "place" ³⁰ and "dwelling" and "law." ¹

The Logos uses him ¹ as a hand, to beautify and ¹ work on the things below and he ¹ uses him as a mouth, ³⁵ to say the things which will be prophesied. ¹

The things which he has spoken he does. ¹ When he saw that they were great and ¹ good and wonderful, he was ¹ pleased and rejoiced, as 101 if he himself in his own thought ¹ had been the one to say them and do ¹ them, not knowing that the movement ¹ within him is from the spirit who moves ⁵ him in a determined way toward those things which he wants. ¹

In regard to the things which came into being from him, he spoke of them ¹ and they came into being as a representation of the spiritual ¹ places which we mentioned previously ¹ in the discussion about the images.

Not only ¹⁰ <did> he work, but also, as ¹ the one who is appointed as father of [his] organization, ¹ he engendered by himself and by the seeds, yet also [by ¹ the spirit] which is elect and which will descend ¹ through him to the places which are below. ¹⁵ Not only does he speak spiritual words ¹ of his own, <but> in ¹ an invisible way, ¹ (he speaks) through the spirit which calls out ¹ and begets things greater than his own essence. ²⁰

Since in his ¹ essence he is a "god" ¹ and "father" [and] all the rest of ¹ the honorific titles, he was ¹ thinking that they were elements ²⁵ of his own essence. He established ¹ a rest for those who obey ¹ him, but for those who ¹ disobey him, he also established punishments. ¹ With him, too, ³⁰ there is a paradise and a ¹ kingdom and everything else ¹ which exists in the aeon ¹ which exists before him. They are more valuable ¹ than the imprints, because of the thought which ³⁵ is connected with them, which is like 102 a shadow and a garment, so to ¹ speak, because he does not see ¹ in what way the things which exist actually do exist.

He established ¹ workers and ⁵ servants, assisting in ¹ what he will do and what he will say, ¹ for in every place where he worked ¹ he left his countenance ¹ in his beautiful name, ¹⁰ effecting and speaking of ¹ the things which he thinks about.

He ¹ established in his place ¹ images of the light ¹ which appeared and of [those things which are] ¹⁵ spiritual, though they were of ¹ his own essence. For, thus they were ¹ honored in every place by him, ¹ being pure, from the countenance ¹ of the one who appointed them, and they were ²⁰ established: paradises ¹ and kingdoms and rests ¹ and promises and multitudes ¹ of servants of his will, ¹ and though they are lords of dominions, ²⁵ they are set beneath the one who is ¹ lord, the one who appointed them. ¹

After he listened to him ¹ in this way, properly, about the lights, ¹ which are the source ³⁰ and the system, he set them over ¹ the beauty of the things below. ¹ The invisible spirit moved him in this way, ¹ so that he would 103 wish to administer through ¹ his own servant, ¹ whom he too used, ¹ as a hand and ⁵ as a mouth and as if ¹ he were his face, (and his servant is) the things which he brings, ¹ order and threat and ¹ fear, in order that those [with] whom he has done ¹ what is ignorant ¹⁰ might despise the order which [was given for them to] ¹ keep, since they are fettered in the [bonds of ¹ the] archons which are on them [securely]. ¹

The whole establishment of matter ¹ [is divided] into three. The [strong] powers ¹⁵ which the spiritual Logos ¹ brought forth from phantasy¹ and arrogance, he established¹ in the first spiritual rank.¹ Then those (powers) which these produced by²⁰ their lust for power, he set¹ in the middle area, since they are powers¹ of ambition, so that they¹ might exercise dominion and give commands with compulsion and force¹ to the establishment which is beneath them.²⁵ Those¹ which came into being through envy¹ and jealousy and all the other offspring¹ from dispositions of this sort, he set¹ in a servile order³⁰ controlling the extremities, commanding¹ all those which exist and all (the realm of) generation,¹ from whom come¹ rapidly destroying illnesses,¹ who eagerly desire begetting, who are something³⁵ in the place where they are from¹ and to which they will return.¹ And therefore, he appointed over¹ them authoritative powers,¹ acting [continuously] on matter, in order that 104 the offspring of those which exist might also exist¹ continuously. For this is their¹ glory.¹

Part II

11. The Creation of Material Humanity

The matter which flows through its form⁵ (is) a cause by which the¹ invisibility which exists through the powers¹ [...] for them all, for¹ [...], as they beget before them and¹ [destroy.]

The thought which is set¹⁰ between those of the right [and]¹ those of the left is a power of [begetting].¹ All those which the [first ones]¹ will wish to make, so to¹ speak, a projection of theirs,¹⁵ like a shadow cast from¹ and following a body, those things which¹ [are] the roots of the visible creations,¹ namely, the entire preparation of the¹ adornment of the images and representations²⁰ and likenesses, have come¹ into being because of those who need¹ education and teaching and formation,¹ so that the smallness¹ might grow, little²⁵ by little, as through a mirror image.¹ For it was for this reason that he created¹ mankind at the end, having first¹ prepared and¹ provided for him the things which he had created³⁰ for his sake.¹

Like that of all else is the creation of mankind as well.¹ The spiritual Logos¹ moved him¹ invisibly, as he perfected³⁵ him through the 105 Demiurge and his angelic servants,¹ who shared in the act of fashioning in [multitudes, when he]¹ took counsel with his archons.¹ Like a shadow is earthly man,⁵ so that he might be like [those]¹ who are cut off from the Totalities. Also¹ he is something prepared by all of them, those of the right ¹ and those of the left, since each one in [the] ¹ orders gives a form to the [...], ¹⁰ in which it exists.

The [...] which ¹ the Logos [who was] ¹ defective brought forth, who [was] ¹ in the sickness, did not resemble him ¹ because he brought it forth [forgetfully,] ¹⁵ ignorantly, and [defectively,] ¹ and in all the other weak ways, ¹ although the Logos gave the first form ¹ through the Demiurge ¹ out of ignorance, so that he ²⁰ would learn that the exalted one exists ¹ and would know that he needs [him]. ¹ This is what the prophet called ¹ "Living Spirit" and "Breath ¹ of the exalted aeons" and "[the] ²⁵ Invisible" and this is the living soul ¹ which has given life to the power ¹ which was dead at first. For that which ¹ is dead is ignorance. ¹

It is fitting that we explain ³⁰ about the soul of the first human being, ¹ that it is from the spiritual Logos, ¹ while the creator thinks ¹ that it is his, since it is from ¹ him, as from a mouth through which ³⁵ one breathes. The creator also sent ¹ down souls ¹ from his substance, since he, ¹ too, has a power of procreation, 106 because he is something which has come into being from the representation ¹ of the Father. Also those of the left brought forth, ¹ as it were, men ¹ of their own, since they have ⁵ the likeness of <being>. ¹

The spiritual substance is a ¹ [single thing] and a single representation, ¹ [and] its weakness is the determination ¹ [in many] forms. As for the substance ¹⁰ of the psychics, its determination ¹ is double, since it has the knowledge ¹ and the confession of the exalted one, ¹ and it is not inclined to evil, because of ¹ the inclination of the thought. As for the material substance ¹⁵ its way is different ¹ and in many forms, and it was a weakness ¹ which existed in many types ¹ of inclination.

The first human being is a ¹ mixed formation, and a ²⁰ mixed creation, and a deposit ¹ of those of the left and those of the right, ¹ and a spiritual word ¹ whose attention is divided between each of the two ¹ substances from which he takes ²⁵ his being. Therefore, ¹ it is said that ¹ a paradise was planted for him, so that he might ¹ eat of the food of three ¹ kinds of tree, since it is a garden of the ³⁰ threefold order, ¹ and since it is that which gives enjoyment.

The ¹ noble elect substance ¹ which is in him was more exalted. ¹ It created and it did not wound ³⁵ them. Therefore they issued ¹ a command, making a threat ¹ and bringing upon him a great 107 danger, which is death. Only the ¹ enjoyment of the things which are evil ¹ did he allow him to taste, ¹ and from the other tree with ⁵ the double (fruit) he did not allow him ¹ to eat, much ¹ less from the tree of life, so that [they would not] ¹ acquire honor [...] ¹ them and so that [they would not be ...] ¹⁰ by the evil power [which] ¹ is called "the serpent." And he is more cunning ¹ than all the evil powers. ¹ He led man astray [through] ¹ the determination of those things which belong to the thought ¹⁵ and the desires. <He> made him transgress ¹ the command, so that he would die. ¹ And he was expelled from ¹ every enjoyment of that place. ¹

This is the expulsion which was made ²⁰ for him, when he was expelled from the enjoyments ¹ of the things which belong to the likeness and those of the representation. ¹ It was a work of providence, so that ¹ it might be found that it is a short time ¹ until man will receive the enjoyment ²⁵ of the things which are eternally good, ¹ in which is the place of rest. ¹ This the spirit ordained when ¹ he first planned ¹ that man should experience the ³⁰ great evil, which is death, ¹ that is complete ignorance of the Totality, ¹ and that he should experience ¹ all the evils which ¹ come from this and, ³⁵ after the deprivations and cares which are in these, ¹ that he should receive of the greatest 108 good, which is ¹ life eternal, that is, ¹ firm knowledge of the Totalities ¹ and the reception of all good things. ⁵ Because of the transgression of the first man ¹ death ruled. It was accustomed ¹ to slay every man ¹ in the manifestation of its ¹ [domination] which had been given it ¹⁰ [as] a kingdom, because of the organization ¹ of the Father's will, ¹ of which we spoke previously. ¹

Part III

12. The Variety of Theologies

If both the orders, ¹ those on the right and those on the left, ¹⁵ are brought together with one another by ¹ the thought which is set between them, ¹ which gives them their organization ¹ with each other, it happens ¹ that they both act with the same ²⁰ emulation of their deeds, with ¹ those of the right resembling those of the left ¹ and those of the left resembling ¹ those of the right. And if at times the evil order ¹ begins to do ²⁵ evil in a ¹ foolish way, ¹ the <wise> order emulates, ¹ in the form of a man of violence, ¹ also doing what is evil, ³⁰ as if it were a power of a man ¹ of violence. At other times ¹ the foolish order ¹ attempts to do good, ¹ making itself like it, since the hidden order, ³⁵ too, is zealous to do it. ¹ Just as it is in ¹ the things which are established, [so] (it is) in the 109 things which have come to be. Since they bring ¹ things unlike one another, ¹ those who were not instructed were ¹ unable to know the cause of the things which exist. ⁵ Therefore, ¹ they have introduced other types (of explanation), ¹ some saying that ¹ it is according to providence that the things which exist have their being. ¹ These are the people who observe ¹⁰ the stability and the conformity of the movement of creation. ¹ Others say ¹ that it is something alien. ¹ These are people who observe the ¹ diversity and the lawlessness and the evil of the powers. ¹⁵ Others say ¹ that the things which exist are what ¹ is destined to happen. These are the people who were ¹ occupied with this matter. Others say ¹ that it is something in accordance with nature. ²⁰ Others say that ¹ it is a self-existent. The majority, however, ¹ all who have reached as far as the visible elements, ¹ do not know anything more ¹ than them.

Those who were wise ²⁵ among the Greeks and the barbarians ¹ have advanced to the powers which have ¹ come into being by way of imagination and ¹ vain thought. Those who have ¹ come from these, in accord with the mutual conflict ³⁰ and rebellious manner ¹ active in them, ¹ also spoke in a likely, ¹ arrogant and ¹ imaginary way concerning the things ³⁵ which they thought of as wisdom, ¹ although the likeness deceived them, ¹ since they thought that they had attained the truth, 110 when they had (only) attained error. ¹ (They did so) not simply in minor appellations, but ¹ the powers themselves seem to hinder them, ¹ as if they were the Totality. ⁵ Therefore, the ¹ order was caught up in fighting ¹ itself alone, because of the ¹ arrogant hostility of ¹ one [of the offspring] of the archon who is ¹⁰ superior, who exists before him. ¹ Therefore, nothing ¹ was in agreement with its fellows, ¹ nothing, neither ¹ philosophy nor types of medicine ¹⁵ nor types of rhetoric nor types ¹ of music nor types of ¹ logic, but they are opinions and ¹ theories. ¹ Ineffability held sway ²⁰ in confusion, because of the indescribable quality ¹ of those who hold sway, who give them ¹ thoughts.

Now, as for the things which came ¹ forth from the <race> of the ¹ Hebrews, things which are written by ²⁵ the hylics who speak in the fashion of the Greeks, ¹ the powers of those who think about all ¹ of them, so to speak, the "right ones," the powers ¹ which move them all to think of ¹ words and a representation, they <brought> them, and ³⁰ they grasped so as to attain ¹ the truth and used the confused powers ¹ which act in them. ¹ Afterwards they attained to the order ¹ of the unmixed ones, the one which is established, the ³⁵ unity which exists as a ¹ representation of the representation of the Father. It is not invisible 111 in its nature, but ¹ a wisdom envelops it, so that ¹ it might preserve the form of the ¹ truly invisible one. Therefore, ⁵ many angels have not been able to see it. ¹ Also, other men of ¹ the Hebrew race, of whom we ¹ already spoke, namely the righteous ones ¹ and the prophets, did not think of anything ¹⁰ and did not say anything ¹ from imagination or through a ¹ likeness or from esoteric thinking, ¹ but each one ¹ by the power which was at work in him, ¹⁵ and while listening to the things which he saw ¹ and heard, spoke of them in [...]. ¹ They have a unified harmony ¹ with one another after the manner ¹ of those who worked in them, ²⁰ since they preserve the connection and the ¹ mutual harmony primarily ¹ by the confession of the one more exalted ¹ than they. And there is one who is greater than they, ¹ who was appointed since they have need ²⁵ of him, and whom the spiritual Logos ¹ begot along with them as one who needs ¹ the exalted one, in hope and ¹ expectation in accord with the thought which ¹ is the seed of salvation. ³⁰ And he is an illuminating word, which ¹ consists of the thought and his offspring and ¹ his emanations. Since the righteous ones and ¹ the prophets, whom we have previously mentioned, ¹ preserve the confession and the ³⁵ testimony concerning ¹ the one who is great, made by their fathers who were 112 looking for the hope and ¹ the hearing, in them is sown ¹ the seed of prayer and the searching, ¹ which is sown in many ⁵ who have searched for strengthening. ¹ It appears and draws them to ¹ love the exalted one, to proclaim ¹ these things as pertaining to a unity. ¹ And it was a unity which ¹⁰ worked in them when they spoke. ¹ Their vision and their words do not differ ¹ because of the multitude ¹ of those who have given them the vision and ¹ the word. Therefore, those who have ¹⁵ listened to what they have said ¹ concerning this do not reject any ¹ of it, but have accepted the scriptures ¹ in an altered way. By interpreting ¹ them they established ²⁰ many heresies which ¹ exist to the present among the ¹ Jews. Some ¹ say that God is one, ¹ who made a proclamation ²⁵ in the ancient scriptures. Others ¹ say that he is many. ¹ Some say ¹ that God is simple ¹ and was a single mind ³⁰ in nature. Others say ¹ that his activity is linked with ¹ the establishment of good ¹ and evil. Still others ¹ say that he is the ³⁵ creator of that which has come into being. Still others ¹ say that 113 it was by the angels that he created. ¹

The multitude of ideas of ¹ this sort is the multitude of forms and the abundance ¹ of types of scripture, that which produced ⁵ their teachers of the Law. The ¹ prophets, however, did not say anything of ¹ their own accord, ¹ but each one of them ¹ (spoke) of the things which he had seen and ¹⁰ heard through the proclamation of ¹ the Savior. This is what he proclaimed, ¹ with the main subject of their ¹ proclamation being that which each said concerning ¹ the coming of the Savior, which is this coming.¹⁵ Sometimes the prophets speak about it¹ as if it will be.¹ Sometimes (it is) as if the Savior speaks¹ from their mouths, saying that the Savior will come¹ and show favor to those who have not²⁰ known him. They have not all joined¹ with one another in confessing anything,¹ but each one, on the basis of the¹ thing from which he received power¹ to speak about him²⁵ and on the basis of the place which he saw,¹ thinks that it is from it¹ that he will be begotten and that he will¹ come from that place. Not¹ one of them knew³⁰ whence he would come nor by whom he¹ would be begotten, but he alone¹ is the one of whom it is worthy to speak, the one who¹ will be begotten and¹ will suffer. Concerning³⁵ that which he previously was¹ and that which he is eternally,¹ an unbegotten, impassible one from¹ the Logos, who came into being in flesh, 114 he did not come into their thought. And this¹ is the account which they received an impulse¹ to give concerning his flesh¹ which was to appear. They say that⁵ it is a production from all of them,¹ but that before all things it is from¹ the spiritual Logos¹ who is the cause of the things which¹ have come into being, from whom the Savior received¹⁰ his flesh. He had¹ conceived <it> at the revelation¹ of the light, according to the¹ word of the promise, at his revelation¹ from the seminal state.¹⁵ For the one who exists is not a seed of the things which exist,¹ since he was begotten at the end. But to the one¹ by whom the Father ordained the manifestation¹ of salvation, who is¹ the fulfillment of the promise,²⁰ to him belonged all these instruments for¹ entry into life, through which he¹ descended. His Father is one¹ and alone is¹ truly a father to him, the²⁵ invisible, unknowable,¹ the incomprehensible in his nature, who¹ alone is God in his will¹ and his form, who¹ has granted that he might be seen,³⁰ known and comprehended.¹

13. The Incarnate Savior and his Companions

He it is who was our Savior¹ in willing compassion,¹ who is that which¹ they were. For it was for their sake that he became³⁵ manifest in an involuntary suffering.¹ They became flesh and soul, –¹ that is, eternally – which (things) hold¹ them and with corruptible things¹ they die. And as for those who [came into being] 115 [the] invisible one¹ taught them invisibly about himself.¹

Not¹ only did he take upon <himself> the death of⁵ those whom he thought¹ to save, but he also accepted their smallness¹ to which they had descended when they were <born>¹ in body and soul.¹ (He did so), because he had let himself be conceived ¹⁰ and born as an infant, in ¹ body and soul.

Among all the others ¹ who shared in them ¹ and those who fell and received the light, ¹ he came being exalted, because ¹⁵ he had let himself be conceived without sin, ¹ stain and ¹ defilement. ¹ He was begotten in life, being in life ¹ because the former and the latter are in ²⁰ passion and changing opinion ¹ from the Logos who moved, ¹ who established them to be body ¹ and soul. He it is <who> has taken ¹ to himself the one who came from those whom we previously ²⁵ mentioned.

He came into being from the ¹ glorious vision and the unchanging thought ¹ of the Logos who ¹ returned to himself, after his movement, ¹ from the organization, just as ³⁰ those who came with him took body and soul ¹ and a confirmation ¹ and stability and judgment of ¹ things. They too intended ¹ to come.

When they thought of ³⁵ the Savior they came, and [they came] when he knew; ¹ they also came more exalted in the ¹ emanation according to the flesh than those ¹ who had been brought forth from a defect, because 116 in this way ¹ they, too, received their bodily emanation along with ¹ the body of the Savior, through ¹ the revelation and ⁵ the mingling with him. These ¹ others were those of one substance ¹ and it indeed is the spiritual (substance). ¹ The organization ¹ is different. This is one thing, ¹⁰ that is another. Some ¹ come forth from passion ¹ and division, needing ¹ healing. Others are from ¹ prayer, so that they heal ¹⁵ the sick, when they have been appointed ¹ to treat those who have fallen. These ¹ are the apostles and the evangelists. ¹ They are the disciples ¹ of the Savior, and teachers ²⁰ who need instruction. Why, then, ¹ did they, too, share in the passions ¹ in which ¹ those who have been brought forth ¹ from passion share, if indeed they are bodily productions ²⁵ in accordance with the organization and ¹ <the> Savior, who did not ¹ share in the passions? ¹

The Savior was an image ¹ of the unitary one, he who ³⁰ is the Totality in bodily form. ¹ Therefore, he preserved the form of ¹ indivisibility, from which ¹ comes impassibility. ¹ They, however, are images ³⁵ of each thing which ¹ became manifest. Therefore, they ¹ assume division from ¹ the pattern, having taken form for the planting which ¹ exists beneath [the heaven.] This also 117 is what shares in the evil which exists ¹ in the places which they have reached. ¹ For the will ¹ held the Totality under sin, so that ⁵ by that will he might have mercy ¹ on the Totality and they might be saved, while a single one ¹ alone is appointed to give life and all the rest ¹ need salvation. Therefore, ¹ it was from (reasons) of this sort that ¹⁰ it began to receive grace to give the ¹ honors which were proclaimed ¹ by Jesus, which were suitable for ¹ him to proclaim to the rest, ¹ since a seed of the ¹⁵ promise of Jesus Christ was set up, whom we have ¹ served in (his) revelation and union. ¹ Now the promise possessed ¹ the instruction and the return ¹ to what they are from ²⁰ the first, from which they possess ¹ the drop, so as to return ¹ to him, which is that which is called ¹ "the redemption." And it is the release ¹ from the captivity and the acceptance ²⁵ of freedom. In its places the captivity of ¹ those who were slaves of ignorance ¹ holds sway. ¹ The freedom is the knowledge of ¹ the truth which existed before ³⁰ the ignorance was ruling, ¹ forever without beginning and ¹ without end, being something good ¹ and a salvation of things ¹ and a release from ³⁵ the servile nature ¹ in which they have suffered.

Those ¹ who have been brought forth in a lowly thought ¹ of vanity, ¹ that is, (a thought) which goes to things which are evil 118 through the thought which [draws] them ¹ down to the lust for power, these have ¹ received the possession which is freedom, ¹ from the abundance of the grace which looked ⁵ upon the children. It was, however, a disturbance of the ¹ passion and a destruction of ¹ those things which he cast off from ¹ himself at first, when the Logos separated them ¹ from himself, (the Logos) who ¹⁰ was the cause of their being destined for ¹ destruction, though he kept <them> at <the> end of the organization ¹ and allowed them to exist ¹ because even they were useful for the things which were ¹ ordained.

14. The Tripartition of Mankind

Mankind came ¹⁵ to be in three essential types, ¹ the spiritual, the psychic ¹ and the material, conforming ¹ to the triple disposition ¹ of the Logos, from which ²⁰ were brought forth the material ones and the ¹ psychic ones and the spiritual ones. Each ¹ of the three essential types ¹ is known by its fruit. ¹ And they were not known at first ²⁵ but only at the coming of the Savior, ¹ who shone upon the saints ¹ and revealed what each ¹ was.

The ¹ spiritual race, being ³⁰ like light from ¹ light and like spirit from ¹ spirit, when its head ¹ appeared, it ran toward him ¹ immediately. It immediately became a body ³⁵ of its head. It suddenly received knowledge ¹ in the revelation. ¹ The psychic race is like light ¹ from a fire, since it hesitated to accept knowledge 119 of him who appeared to it. (It hesitated) even ¹ more to run toward him in faith. ¹ Rather, through a voice it was instructed ¹ and this was sufficient, since it is not far ⁵ from the hope according to the promise, ¹ since it received, so to speak as a ¹ pledge, the assurance of the things ¹ which were to be. The material ¹ race, however, is alien in ¹⁰ every way; since it is dark, it ¹ shuns the shining of the light ¹ because its appearance destroys ¹ it. And since it has not received its unity, ¹ it is something excessive and ¹⁵ hateful toward the Lord at his ¹ revelation.

The spiritual race ¹ will receive complete salvation in ¹ every way. The material will receive ¹ destruction in every way, just as ²⁰ one who resists him. The psychic ¹ race, since it is in the middle ¹ when it is brought forth and also when it is created, ¹ is double according to its determination ¹ for both good and evil. It takes its ²⁵ appointed departure ¹ suddenly and its complete escape ¹ to those who are good. ¹ Those whom the Logos brought forth ¹ in accordance with the first element of his ³⁰ thought, when he remembered the ¹ exalted one and prayed for salvation, ¹ have salvation [suddenly.] ¹ They will be saved completely [because of] ¹ the salvific thought. As he ³⁵ was brought forth, so, [too], ¹ were these brought forth from ¹ him, 120 whether angels or men. ¹ In accordance with the confession that there is ¹ one who is more exalted than themselves, ¹ and in accordance with the prayer and the search for ⁵ him, they also will attain the ¹ salvation of those who have been brought forth, since ¹ they are from the disposition ¹ which is good. They were appointed for ¹ service in proclaiming the coming ¹⁰ of the Savior who was to be and ¹ his revelation which had come. ¹ Whether angels or men, when ¹ he was sent as a service to them, they received, ¹ in fact, the essence of their being. ¹⁵ Those, however, who are from ¹ the thought of lust for ¹ power, who have come into being from ¹ the blow of those who fight ¹ against him, those whom the thought ²⁰ brought forth, from these, ¹ since they are mixed, they will receive their end ¹ suddenly. Those who will be brought forth ¹ from the lust for ¹ power which is given to them for a ²⁵ time and for certain periods, and who will give glory to ¹ the Lord of glory, and who will relinquish ¹ their wrath, they will receive the reward for ¹ their humility, which is to remain ¹ forever. Those, however, who ³⁰ are proud because of the desire ¹ of ambition, and who love temporary ¹ glory and who forget that ¹ it was only for certain periods and times which they have ¹ that they were entrusted with power, ³⁵ and for this reason ¹ did not acknowledge that the Son of God 121 is the Lord of all and ¹ Savior, and were not brought ¹ out of wrath and the ¹ resemblance to the evil ones, they ⁵ will receive judgment for their ignorance ¹ and their senselessness, ¹ which is suffering, along with those ¹ who went astray, anyone ¹ of them who turned away; and ¹⁰ even more (for) wickedness in ¹ doing to the Lord things ¹ which were not fitting, ¹ which the powers of the left did to him, ¹ even including his death. They persevered ¹⁵ saying, "We shall become rulers ¹ of the universe, if ¹ the one who has been proclaimed king of the universe ¹ is slain," (they said this) when they labored to do ¹ this, namely the men and angels ²⁰ who are not from the good disposition ¹ of the right ones but ¹ from the mixture. And ¹ they first chose for themselves ¹ honor, though it was only a temporary wish ²⁵ and desire, while the ¹ path to eternal rest is by way ¹ of humility for salvation of ¹ those who will be saved, those of ¹ the right ones. After they confess ³⁰ the Lord and the thought of that which ¹ is pleasing to the church and the song of ¹ those who are humble along with her to the full extent ¹ possible, in that which is pleasing to do ¹ for her, in sharing in her sufferings ³⁵ and her pains in the manner of ¹ those who understand what is good ¹ for the church, they will have a share ¹ in [her] hope. This is to be said 122 on the subject of how men and angels ¹ who are from the ¹ order of the left ¹ have a path to error: ⁵ not only did they deny the Lord ¹ and plot evil against him, ¹ but also toward the Church did they direct ¹ their hatred ¹ and envy and jealousy; ¹⁰ and this is the reason for the condemnation ¹ of those who have moved and have aroused themselves ¹ for the trials of the Church.

15. The Process of Restoration

The election ¹ shares body ¹ and essence with ¹⁵ the Savior, since it is like a bridal ¹ chamber because of its unity ¹ and its agreement with him. For, before ¹ every place, the Christ came for her sake. ¹ The calling, ²⁰ however, has the place ¹ of those who rejoice at the bridal chamber ¹ and who are glad and happy ¹ at the union of the bridegroom ¹ and the bride. ²⁵ The place which the calling will have is the aeon ¹ of the images, where ¹ the Logos has not yet joined with the Pleroma. And ¹ since the man of the Church was happy and ¹ glad at this, as he was hoping for ³⁰ it, ¹ he separated spirit, soul, and body in ¹ the organization of the one who thinks that ¹ he is a unity, though within him ¹ is the man who is ³⁵ the Totality — and he is all of them. ¹ And, though he has ¹ the escape from the [. . .] which 123 the places will receive, he also has ¹ the members about which we spoke ¹ earlier. When the redemption was proclaimed, ¹ the perfect man received knowledge ⁵ immediately, ¹ so as to return in haste to his ¹ unitary state, to the place from ¹ which he came, to return ¹ there joyfully, to the place ¹⁰ from which he came, to the place from which ¹ he flowed forth. His ¹ members, however, needed a place of instruction, ¹ which is in the places which ¹ are adorned, so that [they] might receive from them resemblance ¹⁵ to the images and archetypes, ¹ like a mirror, until ¹ all the members of the body of ¹ the Church are in a single place ¹ and receive the restoration at one ²⁰ time, when they have been manifested as the ¹ whole body, — namely the restoration ¹ into the Pleroma. — ¹ It has a preliminary concord ¹ with a mutual agreement, ²⁵ which is the concord which belongs to the Father, ¹ until the Totalities receive a countenance ¹ in accordance with him. The restoration is ¹ at the end, after the Totality ¹ reveals what it is, the Son, ³⁰ who is the redemption, that ¹ is, the path toward the ¹ incomprehensible Father, that is, the return to ¹ the pre-existent, and (after) ¹ the Totalities reveal themselves ³⁵ in that one, in the proper way, who ¹ is the inconceivable one and the ¹ ineffable one, 124 and the invisible one and the ¹ incomprehensible one, so that it ¹ receives redemption. It was not only release ¹ from the domination of the ⁵ left ones, nor was it only [escape] ¹ from the power ¹ of those of the right, to each of which ¹ we thought ¹ that were slaves and ¹⁰ sons, from whom none ¹ escapes without quickly ¹ becoming theirs again, but ¹ the redemption also is an ascent ¹ [to] the degrees which are in the ¹⁵ Pleroma and [to] those who have named ¹ themselves and who conceive of themselves ¹ according to the power of each of ¹ the aeons, and (it is) an entrance ¹ into what is silent, where there is no ²⁰ need for voice nor for ¹ knowing nor for forming a concept ¹ nor for illumination, ¹ but (where) all things are ¹ light, while they do not need to be ²⁵ illumined.

Not only ¹ do humans need ¹ redemption, but also the angels, ¹ too, need redemption along with ¹ the image and the rest of the Pleromas of ³⁰ the aeons and the wondrous powers of ¹ illumination. So that we might not be in doubt in regard to ¹ the others, even the Son ¹ himself, who has the position of ¹ redeemer of the Totality, [needed] redemption 125 as well, — he who had become ¹ man, — since he gave ¹ himself for each thing which we need, ¹ we in the flesh, who are ⁵ his Church. Now, when he ¹ first received redemption from ¹ the word which had descended upon him, ¹ all the rest received redemption from ¹ him, namely those who had taken him to themselves. ¹⁰ For those who received the one who had received (redemption) ¹ also received what was in him.

Among ¹ the men who are in the flesh redemption ¹ began to be given, his first-born, ¹ and his love, the ¹⁵ Son who was incarnate, while the ¹ angels who are in heaven ¹ asked to associate, so that they might form an association ¹ with him upon the earth. Therefore, ¹ he is called "the Redemption ²⁰ of the angels of the Father," he who ¹ comforted those who were laboring ¹ under the Totality for his knowledge, ¹ because he was given the grace ¹ before anyone else.

The Father had foreknowledge ²⁵ of him, since he was ¹ in his thought before ¹ anything came into being and since he had ¹ those to whom he has revealed him. ¹ He set the deficiency on the one who ³⁰ remains for certain periods and times, ¹ as a glory for his Pleroma, since ¹ the fact that he is unknown ¹ is a cause ¹ of his production from his ³⁵ agreement [. . .] 126 of him. Just as reception of ¹ knowledge of him is a manifestation of his lack ¹ of envy and the revelation ¹ of the abundance of his sweetness, ⁵ which is the second glory, ¹ so, too, he has been found ¹ to be a cause ¹ of ignorance, although he is also ¹ a begetter of knowledge.

In a ¹⁰ hidden and incomprehensible wisdom ¹ he kept the knowledge to the end, ¹ until the Totalities became weary while searching for ¹ God the Father, whom no one ¹ found through his own wisdom ¹⁵ or power. ¹ He gives himself, so that they might receive knowledge of the abundant thought about ¹ his great glory, which ¹ he has given, and (about) the cause, which he has ¹ given, which is his unceasing thanksgiving, ²⁰ he who, from ¹ the immobility of his counsel, ¹ reveals himself eternally ¹ to those who have been worthy of the Father ¹ who is unknown in his nature, so that they ²⁵ might receive knowledge of him, through his desire ¹ that they should come to experience the ¹ ignorance and its pains. ¹

Those of whom he first thought ¹ that they should attain knowledge and ³⁰ the good things which are in it, ¹ they were planning — which is the wisdom ¹ of the Father, — that they might experience ¹ the evil things and might ¹ train themselves in them, ³⁵ as a [. . .] for a time, ¹ [so that they might] receive the enjoyment ¹ [of good things] for ¹ eternity. 127 They hold change and ¹ persistent renunciation and the ¹ cause of those who fight against them as an adornment ¹ and marvelous quality of those who ⁵ are exalted, so that it is manifest ¹ that the ignorance of ¹ those who will be ignorant of the Father was ¹ something of their own. He who gave them ¹ knowledge of him was one of his powers ¹⁰ for enabling them to grasp that ¹ knowledge in the fullest sense is ¹ called "the knowledge of ¹ all that which is thought of" and "the ¹ treasure" and "the addition for the ¹⁵ increase of knowledge," "the revelation ¹ of those things which were known at first," ¹ and "the path toward harmony ¹ and toward the ¹ pre-existent one," which is the ²⁰ increase of those who have ¹ abandoned the greatness which was theirs ¹ in the organization of ¹ the will, so that the end ¹ might be like the beginning. ²⁵

As for the baptism which exists ¹ in the fullest sense, into ¹ which the Totalities will descend ¹ and in which they will be, there is no other ¹ baptism apart from this one alone, ³⁰ which is the redemption into ¹ God, Father, Son and ¹ Holy Spirit, when ¹ confession is made through ¹ faith in those names, ³⁵ which are a single name of ¹ the gospel, 128 when they have come to believe what has been said to them, ¹ namely that they exist. From ¹ this they have their ¹ salvation, those who have ⁵ believed that they exist. This ¹ is attaining in an invisible way ¹ to the Father, Son, ¹ and Holy Spirit in an ¹ undoubting faith. And when they ¹⁰ have borne witness to them, it is also with a ¹ firm hope that they ¹ attained them, so that the return to them might ¹ become the perfection of those who have believed ¹ in them and (so that) ¹⁵ the Father might be one with them, the Father, ¹ the God, whom they have confessed ¹ in faith and who ¹ gave (them) their union with him in ¹ knowledge.

The baptism which we ²⁰ previously mentioned is called ¹ "garment of those who do not ¹ strip themselves of it," for those who ¹ will put it on and those who have ¹ received redemption wear it. It is also ²⁵ called "the confirmation of the ¹ truth which has no fall." ¹ In an unwavering and ¹ immovable way it grasps those ¹ who have received the [restoration] ³⁰ while they grasp it. (Baptism) is ¹ called "silence" because of ¹ the quiet and the tranquility. ¹ It is also called "bridal chamber" ¹ because of the agreement and the ³⁵ indivisible state of those who know ¹ they have known him. It is also called 129 "the light which does not set ¹ and is without flame," since it does not give light, ¹ but those who have worn it ¹ are made into light. They ⁵ are the ones whom he wore. ¹ (Baptism) is also called, "the ¹ eternal life," which is ¹ immortality; and it is called ¹ "that which is, entirely, simply, ¹⁰ in the proper sense, what is pleasing, ¹ inseparably and irremovably ¹ and faultlessly and ¹ imperturbably, for the one who exists ¹ for those who have received a beginning." For, what else is there ¹⁵ to name it ¹ apart from "God," since it is the Totalities, ¹ that is, even if it is given ¹ numberless names, ¹ they are spoken simply as a reference to it. ²⁰ Just as he transcends every word ¹ and he transcends every voice ¹ and he transcends every mind ¹ and he transcends everything ¹ and he transcends every silence, ²⁵ so it is ¹ [Dittography] ¹ with those who are that ¹ which he is. This is that which they find ¹ it to be, ³⁰ ineffably and ¹ inconceivably in (its) visage, for the coming into being in those who ¹ know, through him whom they have comprehended, ¹ who is the one to whom ¹ they gave glory.

16. Redemption of the Calling

Even if on the matter of the election 130 there are many more things for ¹ us to say, as it is fitting to ¹ say, nonetheless, on the ¹ matter of those of the calling — for ⁵ those of the right are so named ¹ — it is necessary ¹ for us to return once again to them ¹ and it is not profitable ¹ for us to forget them. We have spoken ¹⁰ about them, — If there is enough in ¹ what preceded at some length, how have we ¹ spoken? In a partial way, — ¹ since I said about all those who came ¹ forth from the Logos, ¹⁵ either from the judgment of ¹ the evil ones or from ¹ the wrath which fights against them and the ¹ turning away from them, which ¹ is the return to ²⁰ the exalted ones, or from the prayer and ¹ the remembrance of those who pre-existed ¹ or from hope and ¹ faith that [they] would receive their salvation ¹ from good work ²⁵ since they have been deemed worthy because ¹ they are beings from the good ¹ dispositions, (that) they have ¹ cause of their begetting ¹ which is an opinion from the one who ³⁰ exists. Still further (I said) that before the ¹ Logos concerned himself with ¹ them in an invisible way, ¹ willingly, the exalted one added ¹ to this thought, because ³⁵ they were [in need] of him, 131 who was the cause of ¹ their being. They did not exalt themselves, ¹ when they were saved, as if there were nothing ¹ existing before them, but they ⁵ confess that they have a beginning ¹ to their existence and they ¹ desire this: to know him ¹ who exists before them. ¹ Most of all (I said) that they worshipped ¹⁰ the revelation of the light ¹ in the form of lightning and ¹ they bore witness that it appeared ¹ as <their> salvation. ¹

Not only those who have come forth ¹⁵ from the Logos, about whom ¹ alone we said that ¹ they would accomplish the good work, ¹ but also those whom these brought forth ¹ according to the good dispositions ²⁰ will share ¹ in the repose according to the abundance ¹ of the grace. Also those who have been ¹ brought forth from the desire ¹ of lust for ²⁵ power, having the ¹ seed in them which is the ¹ lust for power, will receive ¹ the reward for (their) good deeds, ¹ namely those who acted and those ³⁰ who have the predisposition ¹ toward the good, if they ¹ intentionally desire and wish ¹ to abandon the ¹ vain, temporal ambition ³⁵ and [they] keep the commandment of the Lord 132 of glory, instead of the momentary ¹ honor, and inherit ¹ the eternal kingdom.

Now, ¹ it is necessary that we unite ⁵ the causes and the effects on them ¹ of the grace and the impulses, ¹ since it is fitting that we say what ¹ we mentioned previously about the salvation ¹ of all those of the right, ¹⁰ of all those unmixed and those mixed, ¹ to join them ¹ [with] one another. And as for the repose, [which] ¹ is the revelation of [the] form <in> which they believed, ¹⁵ (it is necessary) that we should treat it with a ¹ suitable discussion. For when we ¹ confessed the kingdom ¹ which is in Christ, <we> escaped from ¹ the whole multiplicity of forms and from ²⁰ inequality and change. For the end ¹ will receive a unitary existence ¹ just as the beginning is unitary, ¹ where there is no ¹ male nor female, nor slave ²⁵ and free, nor circumcision ¹ and uncircumcision, neither angel ¹ nor man, but ¹ Christ is all in all. What is the form ¹ of the one who did not exist at first? ³⁰ It will be found that he will exist. And ¹ what is the nature of the one who was a slave? ¹ He will take a place with a 133 free man. For, they will receive the vision ¹ more and more by nature ¹ and not only by a little word, ¹ so as to believe, only through ⁵ a voice, that this is the way ¹ it is, that ¹ the restoration to that which used to be is a unity. ¹ Even if some are ¹ exalted because of the organization, since they have been appointed ¹⁰ as causes of the things which have come into being, ¹ since they are more active as natural forces ¹ and since they are desired because of these things, ¹ angels and men will receive the kingdom and the confirmation ¹ [and] the salvation. ¹⁵ These, then, are the causes. ¹

About the <one> who appeared in flesh they believed ¹ without any doubt ¹ that he is the Son of the unknown ¹ God, who ²⁰ was not previously spoken of ¹ and who could not be seen. ¹ They abandoned their gods ¹ whom they had previously worshipped ¹ and the lords who are ²⁵ in heaven and on ¹ earth. Before ¹ he had taken them up, and while he was still ¹ a child, they testified that he had already ¹ begun to preach, ³⁰ and when he was in the tomb ¹ as a dead man the ¹ [angels] thought that he was alive, ¹ [receiving] life 134 from the one who had died. ¹ They first desired their numerous services ¹ and wonders, ¹ which were in the temple on their behalf, ⁵ to be performed continuously <as> the confession. ¹ That is, it can ¹ be done on their behalf through ¹ their approach to him. ¹

That preparation which they did not accept ¹⁰ they rejected ¹ because of the one who had not been sent ¹ from that place, but [they granted to] ¹ Christ, of whom they thought ¹ that he exists in [that] place ¹⁵ from which they had come ¹ along with him, a place of gods ¹ and lords whom they served, ¹ worshipped ¹ and ministered to ²⁰ in the names which they had received on loan. ¹ — They were given to the one who is designated ¹ by them properly. — ¹ However, after his ¹ assumption, they had the experience ²⁵ to know that he is their Lord, ¹ over whom no one else is lord. ¹ They gave him their kingdoms; ¹ they rose from their thrones; ¹ they were kept from their ³⁰ crowns. He, however, revealed himself to them, ¹ for the reasons which we have already spoken of, ¹ their salvation and the [return to a] ¹ good thought until [...] 135 [...] companion and the angels ¹ [...] and the abundance of good ¹ [which they did] with it. Thus, ¹ they were entrusted with the services, ⁵ which benefit the elect, ¹ bringing their iniquity ¹ up to heaven. They tested them eternally ¹ for the lack of humility from the inerrancy ¹ of the creation, continuing on their ¹⁰ behalf until all come to life and ¹ leave life, while their ¹ bodies [remain] on earth, serving ¹ all their [...], sharing ¹ [with them] in their sufferings ¹⁵ [and] persecutions and ¹ tribulations, which were brought ¹ upon the saints in [every] place. ¹

As for the servants of the ¹ evil (one), though ²⁰ evil is worthy of destruction, they are in ¹ [...]. But because of the ¹ [...] which is above ¹ all the worlds, which is ¹ their good thought ²⁵ and the fellowship, ¹ the Church will remember them ¹ as good friends ¹ and faithful servants, once she has received ¹ redemption [from the one who gives] requital. ³⁰ Then the [grace] which is in ¹ the bridal [chamber] and [...] in her house [...] in this thought ¹ of the giving and the one who [...] 136 Christ is the one with her [and the] ¹ expectation of the Father [of] ¹ the Totality, since she will produce for them ¹ angels as guides and ⁵ servants.

They will ¹ think pleasant thoughts. ¹ They are services for her. She will ¹ give them their requital for all that which ¹ the aeons will think about. ¹⁰ He is an emanation from them, so that, ¹ just as Christ [did] his ¹ will which he brought [forth and] ¹ exalted the greatnesses of the Church [and] ¹ gave them to her, so ¹⁵ will she be a thought for ¹ [these.] And to men he gives [their] ¹ eternal dwelling places, in ¹ which they will dwell, [leaving] ¹ behind the attraction toward ²⁰ the defect, while ¹ the power of the Pleroma pulls them up ¹ in the greatness of the ¹ generosity and [the] sweetness of ¹ the aeon which pre-exists. This ²⁵ is the nature of the entire begetting of those ¹ whom he had when he shone ¹ on them [in] a [light] which he ¹ revealed [...]. ¹ Just as his [...] ³⁰ which will be [...] ¹ so too his [lord] ¹ [while] the change alone is ¹ in those who have changed. 137 which [...] by ¹ him [...] ¹ [...] said, ¹ while the hylics will remain until ¹⁰ the end for destruction, since they will not give ¹ forth for their [names], if ¹ [they would] return once again to that which ¹ [will not be]. As they were ¹ [...] they were not ¹⁵ [...] but they were of use ¹ [in the] time that they were ¹ [in it] among them, although they were not ¹ [...] at first. If ¹ [...] to do something else concerning ²⁰ the control which ¹ they have of the preparation, ¹ [...] before them. ¹ —

For though I continually use ¹ these words, I have not understood ²⁵ his meaning. — Some ¹ [elders . . .] him ¹ [greatness.] 138 all [. . .] angels ¹ [. . .] word ¹ and [the sound of] a trumpet ¹ he will proclaim the great ¹⁰ complete amnesty ¹ from the beauteous east, in the ¹ bridal chamber which is the love ¹ of God the Father [. . .] ¹ according to the power which [. . .] ¹⁵ of the greatness [. . .] ¹ the sweetness of [. . .] ¹ of him, since he reveals ¹ himself to the greatnesses [. . .] ¹ his goodness [. . .] ²⁰ the praise, the dominion, [and] the [glory] ¹ through [. . .] the Lord the ¹ Savior, the Redeemer of all those belonging to the one filled ¹ with Love, ¹ through his Holy Spirit ²⁵ from now through all ¹ generations forever ¹ and ever. Amen.

THE APOCRYPHON OF JOHN (II,1, III,1, IV,1, AND BG 8502,2)

Introduced and translated by

FREDERIK WISSE

The Apocryphon of John is an important work of mythological Gnosticism. Using the framework of a revelation delivered by the resurrected Christ to John the son of Zebedee, this tractate offers a remarkably clear description of the creation, fall, and salvation of humanity; the mythological description is developed largely in terms of the early chapters of Genesis. Reports of the church fathers indicate that some of them were familiar with the contents of The Apocryphon of John: the teachings of certain Gnostics described by Irenaeus are very similar to the cosmological teachings of the present tractate. Though Irenaeus apparently did not know The Apocryphon of John in its present form, it is certain that the main teachings of the tractate existed before 185 C.E., the date of Irenaeus' work Against Heresies. The Apocryphon of John was still used in the eighth century by the Audians of Mesopotamia.

The Apocryphon of John supplies answers to two basic questions: What is the origin of evil? How can we escape from this evil world to our heavenly home? The cosmogeny, in spite of its exotic details, also seeks to answer these questions. The highest deity is defined in terms of an abstract Greek concept of perfection, a perfection which excludes all anthropomorphism and all involvement in the world. From this supreme deity emanates a series of light-beings, including Christ and Sophia.

According to The Apocryphon of John, the fall occurs when Sophia desires to bring forth a being without the approval of the great Spirit or her consort. Consequently, she produces the monstrous creator-god Yaldabaoth, who still possesses some of the light-power of his mother. Yaldabaoth creates angels to rule over the world and aid in the creation of man; man himself is fashioned after the perfect Father's image, which was mirrored on the water. Man comes to life when Yaldabaoth is tricked into breathing light-power into him. Thus begins a continuous struggle between the powers of light and the powers of darkness for the possession of the divine particles in man. The evil powers put man in a material body to keep him imprisoned, and also create woman and sexual desire to spread the particles of light and make escape more difficult. Finally Christ is sent down to save humanity by reminding people of their heavenly origin. Only those who possess this knowledge and have lived ascetic lives can return to the realm of light; the others are reincarnated until they also come to saving knowledge.

Three versions of The Apocryphon of John are known. III,1 and BG,2 represent independent translations into Coptic of a short Greek recension of the work. II,1 and IV,1 are copies of the same Coptic translation of a long Greek recension. The English translation presented here is of the long recension. Page and line numbers are given for II, I, except where IV, I preserved text which was omitted in II, I through scribal error.

THE APOCRYPHON OF JOHN

II 1, 1-32, 9 = IV 1, 1-49, 28

The teaching [of the savior], and [the revelation] ¹ of the mysteries, [and the] things hidden in ¹ silence, [even these things which] he taught ¹ John, [his] disciple. ⁵

[And] it happened one [day], when ¹ John, [the brother] of James ¹ — who are the sons of Zebedee — had come up to ¹ the temple, that a Pharisee ¹ named Arimanius approached him and said ¹⁰ to him, “Where is your master [whom] ¹ you followed?” And he [said] to him, ¹ “He has gone to the [place] from which he came.” The Pharisee ¹ [said to him, “With deception ¹ did this Nazarene] deceive you (pl.), ¹⁵ and he filled [your ears with lies], ¹ and closed [your hearts (and) turned you] ¹ from the traditions [of your fathers.”]

[When] ¹ I, [John], heard these things [I turned] ¹ away from the temple [to a desert place]. ²⁰ And I grieved [greatly in my heart saying], ¹ “How [then was] the savior [appointed], ¹ and why was he sent [in to the world] ¹ by [his Father, and who is his] ¹ Father who [sent him, and of what sort] ²⁵ is [that] aeon [to which we shall go?] ¹ For what did he [mean when he said to us], ¹ ‘This aeon to [which you will go is of the] type ¹ of the [imperishable] aeon,’ [but he did not teach] ¹ us concerning [the latter of what sort it is.”] ³⁰

Straightway, [while I was contemplating these things,] ¹ behold, the [heavens opened and] the whole creation [which is] below heaven shone, ¹ and [the world] was shaken. 2 [I was afraid, and behold I] saw in ¹ the light [a youth who stood] by me. ¹ While I looked [at him he became] like an ¹ old man. And he [changed his] likeness (again) becoming ⁵ like a servant. There was [not a plurality] before me, ¹ but there was a [likeness] with multiple forms ¹ in the light, and the [likenesses] appeared ¹ through each other, [and] the [likeness] had three ¹ forms.

He said to me, “John, John, ¹⁰ why do you doubt, or why [are you] ¹ afraid? You are not unfamiliar with this image, are you? ¹ — that is, do not [be] timid! — I am the one who ¹ is [with you (pl.)] always. I ¹ [am the Father], I am the Mother, I am the Son. ¹⁵ I am the undefiled and incorruptible one. ¹ Now [I have come to teach you] what is ¹ [and what was] and what will come to ¹ [pass], that [you may know the] things which are not revealed ¹ [and those which are revealed, and to teach you] concerning the ²⁰ [unwavering race of] the perfect [Man]. Now, ¹ [therefore, lift up] your [face, that] you may ¹ [receive] the things that I [shall teach you] today, [and] ¹ may [tell them to your] fellow spirits who [are ¹ from] the [unwavering] race of the perfect ²⁵ Man.”

[And I asked] to ¹ [know it, and he said] to me, “The Monad ¹ [is a] monarchy with nothing above it. ¹ [It is he who exists] as [God] and Father of ¹ everything, [the invisible] One who is above ³⁰ [everything, who exists as] incorruption, which is ¹ [in the] pure light into which no ¹ [eye] can look. ¹

He [is the] invisible [Spirit] of whom it is not right ¹ [to think] of him as a god, or something ³⁵ similar. For he is more than a god, ¹ since there is nothing above him, for no one ³ lords it over him. [For he does] not [exist] in something ¹ inferior [to him, since everything] exists in him. ¹ (IV 4, 9-10: [For it is he who establishes]) himself. [He is eternal] since ¹ he does [not] need [anything]. For [he] is total ⁵ perfection. [He] did not [lack anything] that he might ¹ be completed by [it; rather] he is always completely perfect ¹ in [light]. He is [illimitable] since ¹ there is no one [prior to him] to set limits to him. ¹ He is unsearchable [since there] exists no one ¹⁰ prior to him to [examine him. He is] immeasurable ¹ since there [was] no one [prior to him to measure] ¹ him. [He is invisible since no] ¹ one saw [him. He is eternal] since he [exists] ¹ eternally. He is [ineffable since] ¹⁵ no one was able to comprehend him to speak [about him]. ¹ He is unnameable since [there is no one prior to him] ¹ to give [him] a name.

He is [immeasurable light] ¹ which is pure, holy [(and) immaculate]. ¹ He is ineffable [being perfect in] incorruptibility. ²⁰ (He is) [not] in perfection, nor in ¹ blessedness, nor in ¹ divinity, but he is far superior. ¹ He is not corporeal [nor] is he incorporeal. ¹ He is neither large [nor] is he small. [There is no] ²⁵ way to say, ‘What is his quantity?’ or, ‘What [is his quality?],’ ¹ for no one can [know him]. ¹ He is not someone among (other) [beings, rather he is] ¹ far superior. [Not] that [he is (simply) superior], but his ¹ essence does not [partake] in the aeons nor ³⁰ in time. For he who partakes in [an aeon] ¹ was prepared beforehand. Time [was not] ¹ apportioned to him, [since] he does not ¹ receive anything from another, [for it would be received] ¹ on loan. For he who precedes someone does not [lack] ³⁵ that he may receive from [him]. ¹ For [rather] it is the latter that looks expectantly at him in ⁴ his light.

For the [perfection] is majestic. ¹ He is pure, immeasurable [mind]. ¹

He is an aeon-giving aeon. ¹ He is [life]- ¹ giving life. He is a blessedness-giving ⁵ blessed one. He is knowledge-giving ¹ knowledge. [He is] goodness-giving ¹ goodness. [He is] mercy and redemption-[giving mercy]. ¹ He is grace-giving grace, [not] because ¹ he possesses it, but because he gives [the] immeasurable, ¹⁰ incomprehensible [light].

[How am I to speak] with you about him? His ¹ [aeon] is indestructible, at rest and ¹ existing in [silence, reposing] (and) being ¹ prior [to everything. For he] is the head of [all] the aeons, ¹ [and] it is he who gives them strength in ¹⁵ his goodness. For [we know] not ¹ [the ineffable things, and we] do not understand what ¹ [is immeasurable], except for him who came forth ¹ [from] him, namely (from) [the] Father. For it is he ¹ who [told] it to us [alone]. For it is he who looks ²⁰ at him[self] in his light which surrounds ¹ [him], namely the spring [of the] water of life. And ¹ it is he who gives to [all] the [aeons] and in every way, (and) who ¹ [gazes upon] his image which he sees ¹ in the spring of the [Spirit]. It is he who puts his desire in his ²⁵ [water]-light [which is in the] spring of the ¹ [pure light]-water [which] surrounds him.

And ¹ [his thought performed] a deed and she came forth, ¹ [namely] she who had [appeared] before him ¹ in [the shine of] his light. This is ³⁰ the first [power which was] before all of them ¹ (and) [which came] forth from his mind, She ¹ [is the forethought of the All] – her light ¹ [shines like his] light – the [perfect] ¹ power which is [the] image of the invisible, ³⁵ virginal Spirit who is perfect. ¹ [The first power], the glory of Barbelo, the perfect ⁵ glory in the aeons, the glory of the ¹ revelation, she glorified the virginal ¹ Spirit and it was she who praised him, because thanks to him ¹ she had come forth. This is the first thought, ⁵ his image; she became the womb of everything ¹ for it is she who is prior to them all, the ¹ Mother-Father, the first man, the holy Spirit, ¹ the thrice-male, the thrice-powerful, ¹ the thrice-named androgynous one, and the ¹⁰ eternal aeon among the invisible ones, and ¹ the first to come forth.

“<She> requested from ¹ the invisible, virginal Spirit – ¹ that is Barbelo – to give her foreknowledge. ¹ And the Spirit consented. And when he had [consented], ¹⁵ the foreknowledge came forth, and ¹ it stood by the forethought; it originates from ¹ the thought of the invisible, ¹ virginal Spirit. It glorified him [and] ¹ his perfect power, Barbelo, for ²⁰ it was for her sake that it had come into being.

“And she requested again ¹ to grant her [indestructibility], and he consented. ¹ When he had [consented], indestructibility ¹ [came] forth, and it stood by ¹ the thought and the foreknowledge. It glorified ²⁵ the invisible One and Barbelo, ¹ the one for whose sake they had come into being.

“And Barbelo requested ¹ to grant her eternal life. And ¹ the invisible Spirit consented. And ¹ when he had consented, eternal life ³⁰ came forth, and [they attended] and glorified ¹ the invisible [Spirit] and Barbelo, ¹ the one for whose sake they had come into being.

“And she requested again ¹ to grant her truth. And the invisible Spirit ¹ consented. (IV 8, 24f.: And [when he had] consented) truth came forth, ³⁵ and they attended and glorified the invisible, ⁶ excellent Spirit and his Barbelo, ¹ the one for whose sake they had come into being.

“This is the pentad of the aeons ¹ of the Father, which is the first ¹ man, the image of the invisible Spirit; ⁵ it is the forethought, which is Barbelo, ¹ and the thought, and the foreknowledge, and ¹ the indestructibility, and the eternal life, and ¹ the truth. This is the androgynous pentad of the aeons, ¹ which is the decad of the aeons, which is ¹⁰ the Father.

“And he looked at Barbelo ¹ with the pure light which surrounds the invisible ¹ Spirit and (with) his spark, and she conceived ¹ from him. He begot a spark of light with a light ¹ resembling blessedness. But it does not equal ¹⁵ his greatness. This was an only-begotten child ¹ of the Mother-Father which had come forth; ¹ it is the only offspring, the only-begotten one of ¹ the Father, the pure Light.

“And ¹ the invisible, virginal Spirit rejoiced ²⁰ over the light which came forth, that which ¹ was brought forth first by the first power ¹ of his forethought which is Barbelo. ¹ And he anointed it with his goodness ¹ until it became perfect, not lacking ²⁵ in any goodness, because he had anointed it ¹ with the goodness of the invisible Spirit. And ¹ it attended him as he poured upon ¹ it. And immediately when it had received from ¹ the Spirit, it glorified the holy Spirit ³⁰ and the perfect forethought ³² for whose sake it had ¹ come forth.

“And it requested to give it a fellow worker, ¹ which is the mind, and he consented (IV 10, 14: [gladly]). ³⁵ And when the invisible Spirit had consented, ⁷ the mind came forth, and it attended ¹ Christ glorifying him and ¹ Barbelo. And all these came into being ¹ in silence.

“And the mind wanted ⁵ to perform a deed through the word ¹ of the invisible Spirit. And his will became ¹ a deed and it appeared with ¹ the mind; and the light glorified it. ¹ And the word followed the will. ¹⁰ For because of the word, Christ ¹ the divine Autogenes created everything. And the ¹ eternal life <and> his will and the mind ¹ and the foreknowledge attended and glorified ¹ the invisible Spirit and Barbelo, ¹⁵ for whose sake they had come into being.

“And the holy ¹ Spirit completed the divine Autogenes, ¹ his son, together with Barbelo, ¹ that he may attend the mighty and invisible, ¹ virginal Spirit as the divine ²⁰ Autogenes, the Christ whom he had ¹ honored with a mighty voice. He came forth ¹ through the forethought. And the invisible, ¹ virginal Spirit placed the ¹ divine Autogenes of truth over everything. ²⁵ And he subjected to him every authority, ¹ and the truth which is in him, ¹ that he may know the All which ¹ had been called with a name exalted above ¹ every name. For that name will be mentioned ³⁰ to those who are worthy of it.

“For from the light, ¹ which is the Christ, and the indestructibility, ¹ through the gift of the Spirit the four ¹ lights (appeared) from the divine Autogenes. ¹ He expected that they might attend ⁸ him. And the three (are) will, ¹ thought, and life. And the four ¹ powers (are) understanding, grace, perception, ¹ and prudence. And grace belongs to ⁵ the light-aeon Armozal, which ¹ is the first angel. And there are ¹ three other aeons with this aeon: grace, ¹ truth, and form. And the second ¹ light (is) Oriel, who has been placed ¹⁰ over the second aeon. And there are ¹ three other aeons with him: conception, perception, ¹ and memory. And the third light ¹ is Daveithai, who has been placed ¹ over the third aeon. And there are ¹⁵ three other aeons with him: understanding, ¹ love, and idea. And the fourth ¹ aeon was placed over the fourth ¹ light Eleleth. And there are ¹ three other aeons with him: perfection, ²⁰ peace, and wisdom. These are the four lights ¹ which attend the divine Autogenes, ¹ (and) these are the twelve aeons which attend ¹ the son of the mighty one, the Autogenes, the Christ, ¹ through the will and the gift of the invisible ²⁵ Spirit. And the twelve aeons belong to ¹ the son of the Autogenes. And all things were ¹ established by the will of the holy Spirit ¹ through the Autogenes.

“And from ¹ the foreknowledge of the perfect mind, ³⁰ through the revelation of the will of the invisible ¹ Spirit and the will of the Autogenes, ¹ <the> perfect Man (appeared), the first revelation, ¹ and the truth. It is he whom ¹ the virginal Spirit called Pigeras- ³⁵ Adamas, and he placed him over ⁹ the first aeon with the mighty one, the Autogenes, ¹ the Christ, by the first light Armozal; ¹ and with him are his powers. ¹ And the invisible one gave him a spiritual, ⁵ invincible power. And he spoke ¹ and glorified and praised the invisible ¹ Spirit, saying, ‘It is for thy sake that everything ¹ has come into being and everything will return to thee. ¹ I shall praise and glorify thee and ¹⁰ the Autogenes and the aeons, the three: the Father, ¹ the Mother, and the Son, the perfect power.’

“And he ¹ placed his son Seth over the second ¹ aeon in the presence of the second light ¹ Oriel. And in the third aeon ¹⁵ the seed of Seth was placed ¹ over the third light Daveithai. ¹ And the souls of the saints were placed (there). ¹ And in the fourth aeon ¹ the souls were placed of those who do not know the ²⁰ Pleroma and who did not repent at once, ¹ but who persisted for a while and repented ¹ afterwards; they are by the fourth ¹ light Eleleth. These are ¹ creatures which glorify the invisible Spirit. ²⁵

“And the Sophia of the Epinoia, being an aeon, ¹ conceived a thought from herself and ¹ the conception of the invisible Spirit and ¹ foreknowledge. She wanted to bring forth ¹ a likeness out of herself without the consent of the Spirit, ³⁰ — he had not approved — and without her consort, ¹ and without his consideration. And though the person of her ¹ maleness had not approved, ¹ and she had not found her agreement, ¹ and she had thought without the consent of the Spirit ³⁵ and the knowledge of her agreement, (yet) she brought forth. 10 And because of the invincible power which is in her, ¹ her thought did not remain idle and ¹ something came out of her ¹ which was imperfect and different from her appearance, ⁵ because she had created it without her consort. ¹ And it was dissimilar to the likeness of its mother ¹ for it has another form.

“And when she saw (the consequences of) her ¹ desire, it changed into a form ¹ of a lion-faced serpent. And its eyes ¹⁰ were like lightning fires which ¹ flash. She cast it away from her, outside ¹ that place, that no one ¹ of the immortal ones might see it, for she had created it ¹ in ignorance. And she surrounded it with ¹⁵ a luminous cloud, and she placed a throne ¹ in the middle of the cloud that no ¹ one might see it except the holy Spirit ¹ who is called the mother of the living. ¹ And she called his name Yaltabaoth.

“This ²⁰ is the first archon who took a great ¹ power from his mother. And he ¹ removed himself from her and moved ¹ away from the places in which he was born. He ¹ became strong and created for himself other aeons with ²⁵ a flame of luminous fire which (still) exists ¹ now. And he joined with his arrogance ¹ which is in him and begot ¹ authorities for himself. The name of the first one ¹ is Athoth, whom the generations call ³⁰ [the reaper]. The second one is Harmas, ¹ who [is the eye] of envy. The third one ¹ is Kalila-Oumbri. The fourth one is Yabel. ¹ The fifth one is Adonaïou, who is called ¹ Sabaoth. The sixth one is Cain, ³⁵ whom the generations of men call ¹ the sun. The seventh is Abel. The ¹ eighth is Abrisene. The ninth is Yobel. 11 The tenth is Armoupieel. The eleventh ¹ is Melceir-Adonein. The twelfth ¹ is Belias, it is he who is over the depth ¹ of Hades. And he placed seven kings ⁵ — each corresponding to the firmaments of heaven — over the ¹ seven heavens, and five over the depth of the abyss, ¹ that they may reign. And he shared his fire ¹ with them, but he did not send forth from ¹ the power of the light which he had taken from his mother, ¹⁰ for he is ignorant darkness.

“And ¹ when the light had mixed with the darkness, it caused the ¹ darkness to shine. And when the darkness had mixed with ¹ the light, it darkened the light and it became ¹ neither light nor dark, but it became ¹⁵ dim.

“Now the archon who is weak has ¹ three names. The first name is Yaltabaoth, ¹ the second is Saklas, and the third is ¹ Samael. And he is impious in his arrogance ¹ which is in him. For he said, ²⁰ ‘I am God and there is no other God ¹ beside me,’ for he is ignorant of his strength, ¹ the place from which he had come.

“And the archons ¹ created seven powers for themselves, and ¹ the powers created for themselves six angels for ²⁵ each one until they became 365 angels. ¹ And these are the bodies belonging with the names: the first is Athoth, ¹ he has a sheep’s face; the second is Eloaiou, ¹ he has a donkey’s face; the third ¹ is Astaphaios, he has a [hyena’s] face; the ³⁰ fourth is Yao, he has a [serpent’s] face with ¹ seven heads; the fifth is Sabaoth, ¹ he has a dragon’s face; the sixth is Adonin, ¹ he had a monkey’s face; the seventh is Sabbede, ¹ he has a shining fire-face. This is the ³⁵ sevenness of the week.

“But Yaltabaoth ¹ had a multitude 12 of faces more than all of them ¹ so that he could put a face before ¹ all of them, according to his desire, when he is in ¹ the midst of seraphs. He shared ⁵ his fire with them; ¹ therefore he became lord over them. Because of the power of ¹ the glory he possessed of his mother’s ¹ light, he called ¹ himself God. And he did not ¹⁰ obey the place from which he came. And ¹ he united ¹ the seven powers in his thought with the authorities which were with him. ¹ And when he spoke it happened. And ¹ he named each power beginning ¹⁵ with the highest: the first is ¹ goodness with the first (authority), Athoth; ¹ the second is foreknowledge with ¹ the second one, Eloaiou; and the third ¹ is Astraphaio (II has been corrected by a later hand to read: and the third is divinity with the third one, Astraphaio); the fourth is ²⁰ lordship with the fourth one, Yao; ¹ the fifth is kingdom with the fifth one, ¹ Sabaoth; the sixth is envy with ¹ the sixth one, Adonein; the seventh ¹ is understanding with the seventh one, ²⁵ Sabbateon. And these have ¹ a firmament corresponding to each aeon-heaven. They were ¹ given names according to the glory which belongs to heaven ¹ for the [destruction of the] powers. And in the names which were ¹ given to [them by] their Originator ³⁰ there was power. But the names which were given ¹ them according to the glory which belongs to heaven mean ¹ for them destruction and powerlessness. ¹ Thus they have two names. ¹

“And (IV 20, 11: having created [] everything he organized according to the model of the first ³⁵ aeons which had come into being, so that he might 13 create them like the indestructible ones. Not because ¹ he had seen the indestructible ones, but the power ¹ in him, which he had taken from ¹ his mother, produced in him the likeness of ⁵ the cosmos. And when he saw the creation which surrounds ¹ him and the multitude of the angels around ¹ him which had come forth from him, ¹ he said to them, ‘I am a jealous God ¹ and there is no other God beside me.’ But by ¹⁰ announcing this he indicated to the angels ¹ who attended him that there exists another God. ¹ For if there were no other one, of whom ¹ would he be jealous?

Then the mother began ¹ to move to and fro. She became aware of the deficiency when ¹⁵ the brightness of her light diminished. And she ¹ became dark because her consort ¹ had not agreed with her.”

And I ¹ said, “Lord, what does it mean that she moved to and fro?” But he ¹ smiled and said, “Do not think it is, as ²⁰ Moses said, ‘above ¹ the waters.’ No, but when she had seen ¹ the wickedness which had happened, and the theft which ¹ her son had committed, she repented. ¹ And she was overcome by forgetfulness in the darkness of ²⁵ ignorance and she began to be ashamed. (IV 21, 13-15: And she did not dare ¹ to return, but she was moving) ¹ about. And the moving is the going to and fro.

“And the ¹ arrogant one took a power from ¹ his mother. For he was ignorant, ¹ thinking that there existed no other except ³⁰ his mother alone. And when he saw the multitude ¹ of the angels which he had created, then he exalted ¹ himself above them.

“And when ¹ the mother recognized that the garment of darkness ¹ was imperfect, then she knew ³⁵ that her consort had not agreed ¹ with her. She repented 14 with much weeping. And the whole ¹ pleroma heard the prayer of her repentance ¹ and they praised on her behalf ¹ the invisible, virginal ⁵ Spirit. (IV 22, 5-7: And ¹ he consented; and when the invisible Spirit ¹ had consented), the holy Spirit poured ¹ over her from their whole pleroma. ¹ For it was not her consort who came to her, ¹ but he came to her through the pleroma ¹ in order that he might correct her deficiency. And she was taken ¹⁰ up not to her own aeon ¹ but above her son, that she might be ¹ in the ninth until she has corrected her ¹ deficiency.

“And a voice came forth from the exalted ¹ aeon-heaven: ‘The Man exists and ¹⁵ the son of Man.’ And the chief archon, Yaltabaoth, ¹ heard (it) and thought that the ¹ voice had come from his mother. ¹ And he did not know from where it came. And ¹ he taught them, the holy and perfect Mother-Father, ²⁰ the complete foreknowledge, ¹ the image of the invisible one who is the Father ¹ of the all (and) through whom everything came into being, ¹ the first Man. For he revealed his likeness ¹ in a human form.

“And the ²⁵ whole aeon of the chief archon trembled, ¹ and the foundations of the abyss shook. And ¹ of the waters which are above ¹ matter, the underside was illuminated by ¹ the appearance of his image which ³⁰ had been revealed. And when all the authorities ¹ and the chief archon looked, they ¹ saw the whole region of the underside which was ¹ illuminated. And through the light they saw ¹ the form of the image in the water. 15

“And he said to the authorities which attend him, ¹ ‘Come, let us create a man according to ¹ the image of God and according to our likeness, that ¹ his image may become a light for us.’ ⁵ And they created by means of their respective powers ¹ in correspondence with the characteristics which were given. And ¹ each authority supplied a characteristic ¹ in the form of the image which he had seen ¹ in its natural (form). He created a being ¹⁰ according to the likeness of the first, perfect Man. ¹ And they said, ‘Let us call him ¹ Adam, that his name may become ¹ a power of light for us.’

“And the powers ¹ began: the first one, goodness, created ¹⁵ a bone-soul; and the second, foreknowledge, ¹ created a sinew-soul; the third, ¹ divinity, created a flesh-soul; ¹ and the fourth, the lordship, created ¹ a marrow-soul; the fifth, kingdom ²⁰ created a blood-soul; the sixth, ¹ envy, created a skin-soul; ¹ the seventh, understanding, created ¹ a hair-soul. And the multitude ¹ of the angels attended him and they received ²⁵ from the powers the seven substances ¹ of the natural (form) in order to create ¹ the proportions of the limbs and the proportion of the rump ¹ and the proper working together of each ¹ of the parts.

“The first one began to create ³⁰ the head. Eteraphaope-Abron created ¹ his head; Meniggesstroeth created ¹ the brain; Asterechme (created) the right eye; ¹ Thaspomocha (created) the left eye; ¹ Yeronumos (created) the right ear; Bissoum (created) ³⁵ the left ear; Akioreim (created) the nose; 16 Banen-Ephroum (created) the lips; Amen (created) ¹ the teeth; Ibikan (created) the molars; Basiliademe (created) ¹ the tonsils; Achcha (created) the uvula; Adaban (created) ¹ the neck; Chaaman (created) the vertebrae; ⁵ Dearchō (created) the throat; Tebar (created) the (IV 25, 4-5: right shoulder; ¹ [...] (created) the) left ¹ shoulder; Mniarcon (created) the (IV 25, 6-7: right ¹ elbow; [...] (created) the) left elbow; ¹ Abitriōn (created) the right underarm; ¹ Evanthen (created) the left underarm; Krys (created) the right hand; ¹ Beluai (created) the left hand; Treneu ¹⁰ (created) the fingers of the right hand; Balbel ¹ (created) the fingers of the left hand; Kriman (created) the nails ¹ of the hands; Astrops (created) the right breast; ¹ Barroph (created) the left breast; Baoum (created) the right ¹ shoulder joint; Ararim (created) the left shoulder joint; Areche (created) ¹⁵ the belly; Phthave (created) the navel; Senaphim (created) ¹ the abdomen; Arachethopi (created) the right ¹ ribs; Zabedo (created) the left ribs; ¹ Barias (created) the (IV 25, 19-20: right ¹ hip; Phnouth the) left hip; Abenlenarchei (created) ¹ the marrow; Chnoumeninorin (created) the bones; ²⁰ Gesole (created) the stomach; Agromauna (created) ¹ the heart; Bano (created) the lungs; Sostrapal (created) ¹ the liver; Anesimalar (created) the spleen; Thopithro ¹ (created) the intestines; Biblo (created) the kidneys; ¹ Roeror (created) the sinews; Taphreo (created) the spine ²⁵ of the body; Ipouspoboba (created) the veins; ¹ Bineborin (created) the arteries; Atoimenpsephei, ¹ theirs are the breaths which are in all the limbs; ¹ Entholleia (created) all the flesh; Bedouk (created) ¹ the right buttock (?); Arabeei (created) the left penis; ³⁰ Eilo (created) the testicles; Sorma (created) the genitals; Gorma-Kaiochlabar ¹ (created) the right thigh; Nebrith (created) ¹ the left thigh; Pserem (created) the kidneys of ¹ the right leg; Asaklas (created) the left ¹ kidney; Ormaoth (created) the right leg; ³⁵ Emenun (created) the left leg; Knyx (created) the 17 right shin-bone; Tupelon (created) the left shin-bone; ¹ Achiel (created) the right knee; Phnene (created) the ¹ left knee; Phiouthrom (created) the right foot; ¹ Boabel (created) its toes; Trachoun (created) ⁵ the left foot; Phikna (created) its toes; ¹ Miamai (created) the nails of the feet; Labernioum - . ¹

“And those who were appointed over all of these ¹ are: Zathoth, Armas, Kalila, Jabel, (IV 26, 19-20: Sabaoth, Cain, ¹ Abel). And ¹ those who are particularly active in the limbs ¹⁰ (are) the head Diolimodraza, the neck Yammeax, ¹ the right shoulder Yakouib, the ¹ left shoulder Verton, the right hand ¹ Ouididi, the left one Arbao, the fingers of the right hand ¹ Lampno, the fingers of the left hand ¹⁵ Leekaphar, the right breast Barbar, the ¹ left breast Imae, the chest Pisandriaptes, ¹ the right shoulder joint Koade, the left shoulder joint ¹ Odeor, the right ribs Asphixix, the left ¹ ribs Synogchouta, the belly Arouph ²⁰ the womb Sabalo, the right thigh ¹ Charcharb, the left thigh Chthaon, ¹ all the genitals Bathinoth, the right ¹ leg Choux, the left leg Charcha, ¹ the right shin-bone Aroer, the left shin-bone ²⁵ Toechtha, the right knee Aol, the left ¹ knee Charaner, the right foot ¹ Bastan, its toes Archentechtha, the ¹ left foot Marephnouth, its toes ¹ Abrana.

“Seven have power over ³⁰ all of these: Michael, Ouriel, ¹ Asmeneddas, Saphasatoel, Aarmouriam, ¹ Richram, Amiorps. And the ones who are in charge over the senses ¹ (are) Archendekta; and he who is in charge over the receptions ¹ (is) Deitharbathas; and he who is in charge over the imagination ³⁵ (is) Oummaa; and he who is over the composition 18 Aachiam, and he who is over the whole impulse ¹ Riaramnacho.

“And the origin of the demons ¹ which are in the whole body is determined to be four: ¹ heat, cold, wetness, ⁵ and dryness. And the mother of all of them is matter. ¹ And he who reigns over the heat (is) Phloxopha; ¹ and he who reigns over the cold ¹ is Oroorrothos; and he who reigns over ¹ what is dry (is) Erimacho; and he who reigns ¹⁰ over the wetness (is) Athuro. And the mother of all of these, ¹ Onorthochrasaei, stands in their midst ¹ since she is illimitable, and she mixes ¹ with all of them. And she is truly matter, ¹ for they are nourished by her.

“The four ¹⁵ chief demons are: Ephememphi who ¹ belongs to pleasure, Yoko who belongs to desire, ¹ Nenentophni who belongs to grief, Blaomen ¹ who belongs to fear. And the mother of them all is ¹ Aesthesia-Ouch-Epi-Ptoe. And from the four ²⁰ demons passions came forth. ¹ And from grief (came) envy, jealousy, ¹ distress, trouble, pain, ¹ callousness, anxiety, mourning, ¹ etc. And from pleasure ²⁵ much wickedness arises, and empty ¹ pride, and similar things. ¹ And from desire (comes) anger, wrath, ¹ and bitterness, and bitter passion, ¹ and unsatedness, and similar things. ³⁰ And from fear (comes) dread, ¹ fawning, agony, and shame. All of these ¹ are like useful things as well as evil things. ¹ But the insight into their true (character) is Anaro, ¹ who is the head of the material soul, 19 for it belongs with the seven senses, Ouch-Epi-Ptoe. ¹

“This is the number of the angels: ¹ together they are 365. They ¹ all worked on it until, ⁵ limb for limb, the natural and ¹ the material body was completed by them. Now there are ¹ other ones in charge over the remaining passions ¹ whom I did not mention to you. But if you ¹ wish to know them, it is written in ¹⁰ the book of Zoroaster. And ¹ all the angels and demons worked ¹ until they had constructed the natural body.

¹ And their product was completely ¹ inactive and motionless for a long time. ¹⁵

“And when the mother wanted to retrieve ¹ the power which she had given to the chief archon, ¹ she petitioned the Mother-Father ¹ of the All who is most merciful. He sent, ¹ by means of the holy decree, the five lights ²⁰ down upon the place of the angels of ¹ the chief archon. They advised him that they should ¹ bring forth the power of the mother. And they said ¹ to Yaltabaoth, ‘Blow into his face ¹ something of your spirit and ²⁵ his body will arise.’ And he blew ¹ into his face the spirit which is the power ¹ of his mother; he did not know (this), for he exists ¹ in ignorance. And the power ¹ of the mother went out of ³⁰ Yaltabaoth into the natural body ¹ which they had fashioned after the image of the one who ¹ exists from the beginning. The body moved and gained strength, ¹ and it was luminous. ¹

“And in that moment the rest of the powers 20 became jealous, because he had come into being ¹ through all of them and they had given their ¹ power to the man, and his intelligence was greater ¹ than that of those who had made him, and ⁵ greater than that of the chief archon. And when they recognized ¹ that he was luminous, and that he could think better ¹ than they, and that he was free from wickedness, they took ¹ him and threw him into the lowest region ¹ of all matter.

“But the blessed One, the Mother-Father, ¹⁰ the beneficent and merciful One, ¹ had mercy on the power of the mother ¹ which had been brought forth out of the chief archon, ¹ for they (the archons) might gain power over the ¹ natural and perceptible body. And he ¹⁵ sent, through his beneficent ¹ Spirit and his great mercy, a helper ¹ to Adam, luminous Epinoia ¹ which comes out of him, who is called ¹ Life. And she assists the whole creature, ²⁰ by toiling with him and by restoring ¹ him to his fullness and by ¹ teaching him about the descent of his ¹ seed (and) by teaching him about the way of ascent, ¹ (which is) the way he came down. ²⁵ And the luminous Epinoia was hidden in Adam, ¹ in order that the archons might not know her, ¹ but that the Epinoia might be a correction ¹ of the deficiency of the mother.

“And the man came forth ¹ because of the shadow of the light ³⁰ which is in him. And his thinking ¹ was superior to all those who had made him. ¹ When they looked up they saw ¹ that his thinking was superior. And they took ¹ counsel with the whole array of archons ³⁵ and angels. They took fire and earth 21 and water and mixed them together ¹ with the four fiery winds. And they wrought them ¹ together and caused a great ¹ disturbance. And they brought him (Adam) into the shadow ⁵ of death in order that they might form (him) again ¹ from earth and water and fire ¹ and the spirit which originates in matter, which is ¹ the ignorance of darkness and desire, ¹ and their counterfeit spirit. This ¹⁰ is the tomb of the newly-formed body ¹ with which the robbers had clothed the man, ¹ the bond of forgetfulness; and he became a ¹ mortal man. This is the first one who came down ¹ and the first separation. But the ¹⁵ Epinoia of the light which was in him, ¹ she is the one who was to awaken his thinking.

“And ¹ the archons took him and placed ¹ him in paradise. And they said to him, ¹ ‘Eat, that is at leisure,’ for ²⁰ their luxury is bitter and their beauty is depraved. ¹ And their luxury is deception and ¹ their trees are godlessness and their fruit ¹ is deadly poison and their ¹ promise is death. And the tree of their ²⁵ life they had placed in the midst of paradise. ¹

“And I shall teach you (pl.) ¹ what is the mystery of their life, ¹ which is the plan which they made together, ¹ which is the likeness of their spirit. ³⁰ The root of this (tree) is bitter and its branches ¹ are death, its shadow is hate ¹ and deception is in its leaves, ¹ and its blossom is the ointment of evil, ¹ and its fruit is death and ³⁵ desire is its seed, and ¹ it sprouts in darkness. The ²² dwelling place of those who taste from it is ¹ Hades and the darkness is their place of rest. ¹

“But what they call ¹ the tree of knowledge of good and ⁵ evil, which is the Epinoia of the light, ¹ they stayed in front of it in order that he (Adam) might not ¹ look up to his fullness and ¹ recognize the nakedness of his shamefulness. ¹ But it was I who brought about that they ate.”

And ¹⁰ I said to the savior, “Lord, was it not the serpent ¹ that taught Adam to eat?” ¹ The savior smiled and said, “The serpent taught them ¹ to eat from wickedness of begetting, ¹ lust, (and) destruction, that he (Adam) might ¹⁵ be useful to him. And he (Adam) knew that he was ¹ disobedient to him (the chief archon) due to light of the Epinoia ¹ which is in him, which made him more correct in his ¹ thinking than the chief archon. And (the latter) ¹ wanted to bring about the power which he himself had given ²⁰ him. And he brought a forgetfulness ¹ over Adam.

And I said to the savior, “What is ¹ the forgetfulness?” And he said, “It is not the way Moses ¹ wrote (and) you heard. For he said in ¹ his first book, ‘He put him to sleep’ (Gn 2: 21), but ²⁵ (it was) in his perception. For also he said through the ¹ prophet, ‘I will make their ¹ hearts heavy that they may not pay attention and may not ¹ see’ (Is 6: 10).

“Then the Epinoia of the light ¹ hid herself in him (Adam). And the chief archon wanted ³⁰ to bring her out of his rib. ¹ But the Epinoia of the light cannot be grasped. ¹ Although darkness pursued her, it did not catch her. And ¹ he brought a part of his power ¹ out of him. And he made another creature ³⁵ in the form of a woman according to the likeness of the Epinoia ¹ which had appeared to him. And he brought 23 the part which he had taken from the power ¹ of the man into the female creature, ¹ and not as Moses said, ¹ 'his rib-bone.'

"And he (Adam) saw the woman beside ⁵ him. And in that moment ¹ the luminous Epinoia appeared, and she lifted ¹ the veil which lay over his mind. ¹ And he became sober from the drunkenness of darkness. ¹ And he recognized his counter-image, and he said, ¹⁰ 'This is indeed bone of my bones ¹ and flesh of my flesh.' Therefore ¹ the man will leave his father and his ¹ mother and he will cleave to his wife and they will ¹ both be one flesh. For they ¹⁵ will send him his consort, ¹ and he will leave his father and his mother. { . . . } ²⁰

"And our sister ¹ Sophia (is) she who came down in innocence ¹ in order to rectify her deficiency. ¹ Therefore she was called Life, which is ¹ the mother of the living, by the foreknowledge ²⁵ of the sovereignty of heaven (IV 36, 18-20: and [] to him [].) And through her ¹ they have tasted the perfect Knowledge. I appeared ¹ in the form of an eagle on ¹ the tree of knowledge, which is the Epinoia ¹ from the foreknowledge of the pure light, ³⁰ that I might teach them and awaken ¹ them out of the depth of sleep. For they ¹ were both in a fallen state and they ¹ recognized their nakedness. The Epinoia ¹ appeared to them as a light (and) she awakened ³⁵ their thinking.

"And when Yaldabaoth ¹ noticed that they withdrew from him, ¹ he cursed his earth. He found the woman as she was 24 preparing herself for her husband. He was lord ¹ over her though he did not know the mystery ¹ which had come to pass through the holy decree. ¹ And they were afraid to blame him. And ⁵ he showed his angels his ¹ ignorance which is in him. And ¹ he cast them out of paradise and ¹ he clothed them in gloomy darkness. And the ¹ chief archon saw the virgin who stood ¹⁰ by Adam, and that the luminous ¹ Epinoia of life had appeared in her. ¹ And Yaldabaoth was full of ignorance. ¹ And when the foreknowledge of the All ¹ noticed (it), she sent some and they snatched ¹⁵ life out of Eve.

"And the chief archon ¹ seduced her and he begot in her ¹ two sons; the first and the second ¹ (are) Eloim and Yave. Eloim has a bear-face ¹ and Yave has a cat-face. The one ²⁰ is righteous but the other is unrighteous. (IV 38, 4-6: Yave ¹ is righteous but Eloim is ¹ unrighteous.) ¹

Yave he set ¹ over the fire and the wind, and Eloim he set ¹ over the water and ¹ the earth. And these he called with the names ²⁵ Cain and Abel with a view to deceive. ¹

“Now up to the present day ¹ sexual intercourse continued due to the chief archon. ¹ And he planted sexual desire ¹ in her who belongs to Adam. And he produced through ³⁰ intercourse the copies of the bodies, ¹ and he inspired them with his counterfeit spirit. ¹

“And the two archons he set ¹ over principalities so that ¹ they might rule over the tomb. ³⁵ And when Adam recognized the likeness of his own ¹ foreknowledge, he begot the likeness ²⁵ of the son of man. He called him Seth ¹ according to the way of the race in the aeons. Likewise ¹ the mother also sent down her spirit ¹ which is in her likeness and a ⁵ copy of those who are in the pleroma, for she will ¹ prepare a dwelling place for the aeons which will come ¹ down. And he made them drink water of forgetfulness, ¹ from the chief archon, in order that they might not ¹ know from where they came. Thus ¹⁰ the seed remained for ¹ a while assisting (him) in order that, when ¹ the Spirit comes forth from ¹ the holy aeons, he may raise up and ¹ heal him from the deficiency, that the ¹⁵ whole pleroma may (again) become holy and ¹ faultless.”

And I said to the savior, ¹ “Lord, will all the souls then be brought safely ¹ into the pure light?” He answered ¹ and said to me, “Great things ²⁰ have arisen in your mind, for it is ¹ difficult to explain them to others ¹ except to those who are from ¹ the immovable race. Those on whom the Spirit of life ¹ will descend and (with whom) he will be with the power, ²⁵ they will be saved and become perfect ¹ and be worthy of the greatness and ¹ be purified in that place from ¹ all wickedness and the involvements in evil. ¹ Then they have no other care than ³⁰ the incorruption alone, to which they direct their attention ¹ from here on, without anger or envy or jealousy ¹ or desire and greed of ¹ anything. They are not affected by ¹ anything except the state of being in ³⁵ the flesh alone, which they bear while looking expectantly ¹ for the time when they will be met ²⁶ by the receivers (of the body). Such ¹ then are worthy of the imperishable, ¹ eternal life and the calling. For they endure ¹ everything and bear up under ⁵ everything, that they may finish ¹ the good fight and inherit ¹ eternal life.”

I said to him, “Lord, ¹ the souls of those who did not do these works, ¹ (but) on whom the power and Spirit ¹⁰ descended, (IV 40, 24-25: will they be rejected?” He ¹ answered and said to me, “If) the ¹ Spirit (IV 40, 24-25: descended upon them), they will in any case be saved ¹ and they will change (for the better). For the ¹ power will descend on every man, ¹ for without it no one can stand. ¹⁵ And after they are born, then, ¹ when the Spirit of life increases and ¹ the power comes and strengthens that soul, ¹ no one can lead it astray ¹ with works of evil. ²⁰ But those on whom the counterfeit spirit ¹ descends are drawn by ¹ him and they go astray.”

And I ¹ said, “Lord, where will the souls of these go ¹ when they have come out of their ²⁵ flesh?” And he smiled ¹ and said to me, ¹ “The soul, in which the power ¹ will become stronger than the counterfeit spirit, ¹ is strong and it flees from ¹ evil and, through ³⁰ the intervention of the incorruptible one, it is saved ¹ and it is taken up to the rest ¹ of the aeons.”

And I said, “Lord, ¹ those, however, who have not known ¹ to whom they belong, where will their souls ³⁵ be?” And he said to me, ¹ “In those the despicable spirit has 27 gained strength when they went astray. And he ¹ burdens the soul and draws it ¹ to the works of evil, and he casts ¹ it down into forgetfulness. And after it ⁵ comes out of (the body), it is handed over to the authorities, ¹ who came into being through the archon, and ¹ they bind it with chains and cast ¹ it into prison and consort with it ¹ until it is liberated from the forgetfulness and ¹⁰ acquires knowledge. And if thus it ¹ becomes perfect, it is saved.”

And I ¹ said, “Lord, how can the soul become smaller ¹ and return into the nature ¹ of its mother or into man?” Then ¹⁵ he rejoiced when I asked him this, and ¹ he said to me, “Truly, you are blessed, ¹ for you have understood! That soul ¹ is made to follow another one (fem.), since the Spirit of ¹ life is in it. It is saved through ²⁰ him. It is not again cast ¹ into another flesh.”

And I said, ¹ “Lord, these also who did not know but ¹ have turned away, where will their ¹ souls go?” Then he said to me, “To that place ²⁵ where the angels of poverty go ¹ they will be taken, the place ¹ where there is no repentance. And ¹ they will be kept for the day on which ¹ those who have blasphemed the spirit will be tortured, ³⁰ and they will be punished with eternal punishment.” ¹

And I said, “Lord, ¹ from where did the counterfeit spirit come?” ¹ Then he said to me, “The Mother-Father ¹ who is rich in mercy, the holy Spirit ³⁵ in every way, the One who is merciful and 28 who sympathizes with you (pl.), i.e. the ¹ Epinoia of the foreknowledge of light, ¹ he raised up the offspring of the perfect ¹ race and its thinking and the eternal ⁵ light of man. When ¹ the chief archon realized that they were exalted ¹ above him in the height — and they surpass ¹ him in thinking – then he wanted to seize their ¹ thought, not knowing that they surpassed ¹⁰ him in thinking and that he will not be able ¹ to seize them.

“He made a plan ¹ with his authorities, which are his powers, and ¹ they committed together adultery with Sophia, and ¹ bitter fate was begotten through them, ¹⁵ which is the last of the changeable bonds. ¹ And it is of a sort that ¹ is interchangeable. And it is harder and ¹ stronger than she with whom ¹ the gods united and the angels and the demons ²⁰ and all the generations until this day. ¹ For from that fate ¹ came forth every sin and ¹ injustice and blasphemy and the chain ¹ of forgetfulness and ignorance and every ²⁵ severe command and serious sins ¹ and great fears. And thus ¹ the whole creation was made blind, ¹ in order that they may not know God who is ¹ above all of them. And because of the chain of forgetfulness ³⁰ their sins were hidden. For they are bound with ¹ measures and times and moments, ¹ since it (fate) is lord over everything.

“And he (the chief archon) ¹ repented for everything which had come into being ¹ through him. This time he planned ³⁵ to bring a flood 29 upon the work of man. But the greatness ¹ of the light of the foreknowledge informed ¹ Noah, and he proclaimed (it) to all the offspring ¹ which are the sons of men. But ⁵ those who were strangers to him did not listen to him. ¹ It is not as Moses said, ¹ ‘They hid themselves in an ark’ (Gn 7: 7), but ¹ they hid themselves in a place, not ¹ only Noah but also many other people ¹⁰ from the immovable race. They went ¹ into a place and hid themselves in a ¹ luminous cloud. And he (Noah) recognized his authority, ¹ and she who belongs to the light was with him, ¹ having shone on them because ¹⁵ he (the chief archon) had brought darkness upon the whole earth. ¹

“And he made a plan with his powers. ¹ He sent his angels to the daughters ¹ of men, that they might take some of them for themselves ¹ and raise offspring ²⁰ for their enjoyment. And at first they did not succeed. ¹ When they had no success, they gathered ¹ together again and they made ¹ a plan together. They created ¹ a counterfeit spirit, who resembles the Spirit who had descended, ²⁵ so as to pollute the souls through it. ¹ And the angels changed themselves in their ¹ likeness into the likeness of their (the daughters of men) mates, ¹ filling them with the spirit of darkness, ¹ which they had mixed for them, and with evil. ³⁰ They brought gold and silver ¹ and a gift and copper and iron ¹ and metal and all kinds ¹ of things. And they steered the people ¹ who had followed them 30 into great troubles, by leading them astray ¹ with many deceptions. They (the people) became old without having enjoyment. ¹ They died, not having found truth and ¹ without knowing the God of truth. And ⁵ thus the whole creation became enslaved forever, ¹ from the foundation of the world ¹ until now. And they took women ¹ and begot children out of the darkness according to ¹ the likeness of their spirit. And they closed their hearts, ¹⁰ and they hardened themselves through the hardness ¹ of the counterfeit spirit until now.

“I, ¹ therefore, the perfect Pronoia of the all, ¹ changed myself into my seed, for I existed ¹ first, going on every road. ¹⁵ For I am the richness of the light; ¹ I am the remembrance of the pleroma.

“And I ¹ went into the realm of darkness and ¹ I endured till I entered the middle ¹ of the prison. And the foundations of chaos ²⁰ shook. And I hid myself from them because of ¹ their wickedness, and they did not recognize me.

“Again ¹ I returned for the second time ¹ and I went about. I came forth from those who belong to the light, ¹ which is I the remembrance of the Pronoia. ²⁵ I entered into the midst of darkness and ¹ the inside of Hades, since I was seeking (to accomplish) ¹ my task. And the foundations of chaos ¹ shook, that they might fall down upon those who ¹ are in chaos and might destroy them. ³⁰ And again I ran up to my root of light ¹ lest they be destroyed before ¹ the time.

“Still for a third time ¹ I went — I am the light ¹ which exists in the light, I am ³⁵ the remembrance of the Pronoia — that I might ¹ enter into the midst of darkness and the inside ³¹ of Hades. And I filled my face with ¹ the light of the completion of their aeon. ¹ And I entered into the midst of their prison ¹ which is the prison of the body. And ⁵ I said, ‘He who hears, let him get up from the deep ¹ sleep.’ And he wept and shed tears. ¹ Bitter tears he wiped from ¹ himself and he said, ‘Who is it that calls my ¹ name, and from where has this hope come to me, ¹⁰ while I am in the chains of the prison?’ And ¹ I said, ‘I am the Pronoia of the pure light; ¹ I am the thinking of the virginal ¹ Spirit, who raised you up to the honored ¹ place. Arise and remember ¹⁵ that it is you who hearkened, and follow ¹ your root, which is I, the merciful one, and ¹ guard yourself against ¹ the angels of poverty and the demons ¹ of chaos and all those who ensnare you, ²⁰ and beware of the ¹ deep sleep and the enclosure of the inside ¹ of Hades.’

“And I raised him up ¹ and sealed him in the light ¹ of the water with five seals, in order that ²⁵ death might not have power over him from this time on.

“And ¹ behold, now I shall go up to the perfect ¹ aeon. I have completed everything for you ¹ in your hearing. And I ¹ have said everything to you that you might write ³⁰ them down and give them secretly to your fellow spirits, ¹ for this is the mystery of the immovable race.” ¹

And the savior presented these things to him that ¹ he might write them down and keep them ¹ secure. And he said to him, “Cursed be ³⁵ everyone who will exchange these things for a gift ¹ or for food or for ¹ drink or for clothing or for any other such thing.” ³² And these things were presented to him ¹ in a mystery, and immediately ¹ he disappeared from him. ¹ And he went to his fellow disciples and related ⁵ to them what the savior had told him. ¹

Jesus Christ, Amen. ¹

The ¹ Apocryphon ¹ According to John

THE GOSPEL OF THOMAS (II,2)

Introduced by

HELMUT KOESTER

Translated by

THOMAS O. LAMBDIN

The Gospel of Thomas is a collection of traditional sayings of Jesus. These sayings, or small groups of sayings (the numeration of the 114 sayings is not found in the manuscript, but is followed by most scholars today) are introduced in most instances by "Jesus said (to them)," sometimes by a question or a statement of the disciples. Only in one instance (13) is a saying expanded into a longer discourse between Jesus and the disciples. The sayings preserved in The Gospel of Thomas are of several types: wisdom sayings (proverbs), parables, eschatological sayings (prophecies), and rules for the community. They appear in this document in arrangement that does not reveal any overall plan of composition. On occasion, small groups of sayings are kept together by similarity in form or by catchword association.

The Coptic Gospel of Thomas was translated from the Greek. Fragments of this gospel in the original Greek version are extant in the Oxyrhynchus Papyri 1, 654 and 655, which had been discovered and published at the beginning of this century, but were identified as parts of The Gospel of Thomas only after the discovery of the Coptic Nag Hammadi library. The first of these Greek papyri contains sayings 26-30, 77, 31-33 (in this order!), the other two the sayings 1-7 and 36-40, respectively. At least one of these Greek fragments comes from a manuscript that was written before 200 C.E.; thus the Greek version of this gospel was used in Egypt as early as the second century.

The authorship of this gospel is attributed to Didymos Judas Thomas, that is, Judas "the twin" (both the Aramaic thomas and the Greek didymos mean "twin"). In the Syrian church, (Judas) Thomas was known as the brother of Jesus who founded the churches of the East, particularly of Edessa (in a somewhat later tradition, he even travels to India). Other Christian writings of the eastern churches have been attributed to the same apostle; to these belong the Acts of Thomas and most likely also The Book of Thomas, which was discovered as part of the Nag Hammadi library (II,7). The latter writing, as well as The Gospel of Thomas, were most likely written in Syria. It is doubtful, however, whether it was originally composed in Aramaic and then translated into Greek, although many of the sayings, like the oldest sayings of the canonical gospels, were certainly first circulated in Aramaic, the language of Jesus.

A large number of the sayings of The Gospel of Thomas have parallels in the gospels of the New Testament, in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, and Luke), as well as the Gospel of John (parallels with the latter are especially striking; cf., e.g., sayings 13, 19, 24, 38, 49, 92). Some of the sayings are known to occur also in noncanonical gospels, especially in the Gospel According to the Hebrews (cf. saying 2) and the Gospel of the Egyptians (cf. saying 22), which are both attested for the second century by Clement of Alexandria (floruit 180-200). However, a direct dependence of The Gospel of Thomas upon another non-canonical gospel is very unlikely. More problematic is the relationship of The Gospel of Thomas to the canonical gospels. Whereas the latter all contain large segments of narrative materials, no traces of such materials are found in the former. Already this makes it unlikely that our document can be considered as an eclectic excerpt from the gospels of the New Testament. If one considers the form and wording of the individual sayings in comparison with the form in which they are preserved in the New Testament, The Gospel of Thomas almost always appears to have preserved a more original form of the traditional saying (in a few instances, where this is not the case, the Coptic translation seems to have been influenced by the translator's knowledge of the New Testament gospels), or presents versions which are independently based on more original forms. More original and shorter forms are especially evident in the parables of Thomas (cf. sayings 8, 9, 57, 63, 64, 65, 96, cf. 109).

In its literary genre, The Gospel of Thomas is more akin to one of the sources of the canonical gospels, namely the so-called Synoptic Sayings Source (often called "Q" from the German word Quelle, "source"), which was used by both Matthew and Luke. Indeed, many of the sayings found in our document were also parts of this source of the gospels of the New Testament. On the other hand, The Gospel of Thomas also contains quite different older sayings, paralleled in the Gospel of John, in Mark 4:21-25, and even in 1 Corinthians (cf. saying 17 with 1 Co 2:9). Moreover, the sayings about the future coming of the Son of Man, so characteristic for "Q" (cf. Lk 12:8, 10; 17:22, 24, 26), are completely missing. The Gospel of Thomas is, therefore, a closely related but independent collection of sayings. In its most original form, it may well date from the first century (the middle of the first century is usually considered the best date for the composition of "Q").

Neither the Coptic translation nor the Greek fragments seem to have preserved this gospel in its oldest form. Even the comparison of the extant Coptic and Greek texts demonstrates that the text was subject to change in the process of transmission. The oldest form most likely contained wisdom sayings and eschatological sayings of Jesus, including a number of parables. The sayings of this type, even those which have no parallels in the gospels of the New Testament (especially the parables 97 and 98), may belong to the oldest strata of the tradition. Whereas "Q" emphasized the eschatological expectation of the future coming of the "Kingdom of God," The Gospel of Thomas in its oldest form, stressed the finding of wisdom, or of the "Kingdom of the Father," in the knowledge (gnosis) of oneself (cf. saying 3), guided by the sayings of Jesus. This understanding of salvation is similar to that expressed in many passages of the Gospel of John in which the finding of truth and life is bound to the words of Jesus (Jn 6:63; 8:51). The first saying of The Gospel of Thomas states this programmatically: the interpretation of the sayings is identical with the finding of eternal life.

In the further history and growth of The Gospel of Thomas, this wisdom interpretation of the sayings of Jesus is more clearly developed under the influence of gnostic theology, though it is not possible to ascribe the work to any particular gnostic school or sect. The theme of recognizing oneself is further elaborated in sayings (cf. 50, 51) which speak of the knowledge of one's divine origin which even Adam did not share, although "he came into being from a great power" (saying 85). Salvation is obtained in stripping off everything that is of this world (cf. sayings 21a, 37, 56). The disciples must "pass by" the present corruptible existence (saying 42). The existence of the ideal gnostic disciple is characterized by the term "solitary one," which describes the one who has left behind everything that binds human beings to the world (cf. sayings 16, 23, 30, and 76). Even women can obtain this goal, if they achieve the "maleness" of the solitary existence (saying 114).

THE GOSPEL OF THOMAS

II 32, 10-51, 28

These are the secret sayings which the living Jesus ¹ spoke and which Didymos Judas Thomas wrote down. ¹

(1) And he said, ¹ "Whoever finds the interpretation of these sayings will ¹ not experience death."

(2) Jesus said, ¹⁵ "Let him who seeks continue seeking until he ¹ finds. When he finds, he will ¹ become troubled. When he becomes troubled, he will ¹ be astonished, and he will ¹ rule over the all."

(3) Jesus said, "If ²⁰ those who lead you say to you, ¹ 'See, the kingdom is in the sky,' ¹ then the birds of the sky will precede you. ¹ If they say to you, 'It is in the sea,' ¹ then the fish will precede you. ²⁵ Rather, the kingdom is inside of you, and ¹ it is outside of you. When you come to ¹ know yourselves, then you will become known, 33 and you will realize that it is you who are ¹ the sons of the living father. But if ¹ you will not know yourselves, you ¹ dwell in poverty and it is you ⁵ who are that poverty."

(4) Jesus said, "The man old in days will not ¹ hesitate to ask ¹ a small child seven ¹ days old about the place of life, and ¹ he will live. For many who are first will become last, ¹⁰ and they will become one and the same."

(5) Jesus said, ¹ "Recognize what is in your (sg.) sight, ¹ and that which is hidden from you (sg.) will become plain ¹ to you (sg.). For there is nothing hidden which will ¹ not become manifest."

(6) His disciples questioned him ¹⁵ and said to him, "Do you want us to fast? ¹ How shall we pray? Shall we give alms? ¹ What diet shall we observe?"

Jesus said, "Do not tell lies,"¹ and do not do what you hate, for²⁰ all things are plain in the sight¹ of heaven. For nothing hidden will not¹ become manifest, and nothing covered¹ will remain without being uncovered."

(7) Jesus said,¹ "Blessed is the lion which²⁵ becomes man when consumed by¹ man; and cursed is the man¹ whom the lion consumes, and¹ the lion becomes man."

(8) And he said,¹ "The man is like a wise fisherman³⁰ who cast his net¹ into the sea and drew it up¹ from the sea full of small fish.¹ Among them the wise fisherman found a fine large fish.¹ He threw³⁵ all the small fish³⁴ back into the sea and chose the large¹ fish without difficulty. Whoever has ears¹ to hear, let him hear."

(9) Jesus said, "Now¹ the sower went out, took a handful (of seeds),⁵ and scattered them. Some fell on the road;¹ the birds came and gathered them up. Others¹ fell on rock, did not take root¹ in the soil, and did not produce ears.¹ And others fell on thorns;¹⁰ they choked the seed(s) and worms ate them.¹ And others fell on the good soil¹ and it produced good fruit:¹ it bore sixty per measure and a hundred and twenty per measure."

(10) Jesus said, "I have cast fire upon¹⁵ the world, and see, I am guarding it¹ until it blazes."

(11) Jesus said, "This heaven will¹ pass away, and the one above it will pass away.¹ The dead are not alive, and the living¹ will not die. In the days when you consumed²⁰ what is dead, you made it what is alive.¹ When you come to dwell in the light,¹ what will you do? On the day when you¹ were one you became two. But when¹ you become two, what²⁵ will you do?"

(12) The disciples said to Jesus,¹ "We know that you will depart from us. Who is¹ to be our leader?"

Jesus said to them,¹ "Wherever you are, you are to¹ go to James the righteous,³⁰ for whose sake heaven and earth came into being."

(13) Jesus said¹ to his disciples, "Compare me to someone and¹ tell me whom I am like."

Simon Peter¹ said to him, "You are like a¹ righteous angel."

Matthew said to him, 35 "You are like a wise philosopher."

Thomas said to him,¹ "Master, my mouth is wholly incapable¹ of saying whom you are like."

Jesus said,⁵ "I am not your (sg.) master. Because you (sg.) have drunk, you (sg.) have become intoxicated¹ from the bubbling spring which I¹ have measured out."

And he took him and withdrew ¹ and told him three things. ¹ When Thomas returned to his companions, they asked him, ¹⁰ "What did Jesus say to you?"

Thomas said to them, ¹ "If I tell you one of the things ¹ which he told me, you will pick up stones and ¹ throw them at me; a fire will come out of ¹ the stones and burn you up." ¹⁵

(14) Jesus said to them, "If you fast, you will ¹ give rise to sin for yourselves; and if you ¹ pray, you will be condemned; and ¹ if you give alms, you will do ¹ harm to your spirits. When you ²⁰ go into any land and ¹ walk about in the districts, if they receive ¹ you, eat what they will set before you, ¹ and heal the sick among them. ¹ For what goes into your mouth ²⁵ will not defile you, but that which ¹ issues from your mouth — it is that which ¹ will defile you."

(15) Jesus said, "When ¹ you see one who was not born ¹ of woman, prostrate yourselves on ³⁰ your faces and worship him. That one ¹ is your father."

(16) Jesus said, ¹ "Men think, perhaps, that it is peace which I have come to cast ¹ upon the world. ¹ They do not know that it is dissension which I have come to cast ³⁵ upon the earth: fire, sword, ¹ and war. For there will be five ³⁶ in a house: three will be against ¹ two, and two against three, the father ¹ against the son, and the son against the father. ¹ And they will stand solitary." ⁵

(17) Jesus said, "I shall give you what ¹ no eye has seen and what no ¹ ear has heard and what no hand has touched ¹ and what has never occurred to the human ¹ mind."

(18) The disciples said to Jesus, "Tell ¹⁰ us how our end will be." ¹

Jesus said, "Have you discovered, then, ¹ the beginning, that you look for ¹ the end? For where the beginning is, ¹ there will the end be. Blessed is ¹⁵ he who will take his place in the beginning; ¹ he will know the end and will not experience ¹ death."

(19) Jesus said, "Blessed is ¹ he who came into being before he came into being. ¹ If you become my disciples ²⁰ and listen to my words, these stones ¹ will minister to you. ¹ For there are five trees for you in Paradise ¹ which remain undisturbed summer and winter ¹ and whose leaves do not fall. ²⁵ Whoever becomes acquainted with them will not experience death." ¹

(20) The disciples said to Jesus, "Tell ¹ us what the kingdom of heaven is ¹ like."

He said to them, "It is like ¹ a mustard seed. It is the smallest of ³⁰ all seeds. But when it ¹ falls on tilled soil, it ¹ produces a great plant and becomes ¹ a shelter for birds of the sky."

(21) Mary said to Jesus, "Whom are your disciples ³⁵ like?"

He said, "They are like 37 children who have settled in a field ¹ which is not theirs. When the owners of the field come, ¹ they will say, 'Let us have back our field.' ¹ They (will) undress in their presence ⁵ in order to let them have back their field and to give ¹ it back to them. Therefore I say, ¹ if the owner of a house knows that the thief is coming, ¹ he will begin his vigil before he comes and will not ¹ let him dig through into his house of his ¹⁰ domain to carry away his goods. You (pl.), ¹ then, be on your guard against the world. Arm ¹ yourselves with great strength ¹ lest the robbers find a way to come ¹ to you, for the difficulty which you expect ¹⁵ will (surely) materialize. Let there be ¹ among you a man of understanding. ¹ When the grain ripened, he came quickly ¹ with his sickle in his hand and reaped it. ¹ Whoever has ears to hear, let him hear." ²⁰

(22) Jesus saw infants being suckled. He said to ¹ his disciples, "These infants being suckled ¹ are like those who enter the ¹ kingdom."

They said to him, "Shall we then, as children, ¹ enter the kingdom?"

Jesus said to them, ²⁵ "When you make the two one, and ¹ when you make the inside like the outside ¹ and the outside like the inside, and the above ¹ like the below, and when ¹ you make the male and the female one and the same, ³⁰ so that the male not be male nor ¹ the female female; and when you fashion ¹ eyes in place of an eye, and a hand ¹ in place of a hand, and a foot in place ¹ of a foot, and a likeness in place of a likeness; ³⁵ then will you enter [the kingdom]." ³⁸

(23) Jesus said, "I shall choose you, one out ¹ of a thousand, and two out of ten thousand, and ¹ they shall stand as a single one." ¹

(24) His disciples said to him, "Show us the place ⁵ where you are, since it is necessary for us ¹ to seek it."

He said to them, "Whoever has ¹ ears, let him hear. There is light ¹ within a man of light, ¹ and he lights up the whole world. If he ¹⁰ does not shine, he is darkness."

(25) Jesus said, "Love ¹ your (sg.) brother like your soul, guard him ¹ like the pupil of your eye."

(26) Jesus said, "You (sg.) see the mote ¹ in your brother's eye, ¹ but you do not see the beam in your own eye. When ¹⁵ you cast the beam out of your own ¹ eye, then you will see clearly to cast the mote ¹ from your brother's eye."

(27) <Jesus said,> "If you do not fast ¹ as regards the world, you will not find the kingdom. ¹ If you do not observe the Sabbath as a Sabbath, ²⁰ you will not see the father." ¹

(28) Jesus said, "I took my place in the midst of the world, ¹ and I appeared to them in flesh. ¹ I found all of them intoxicated; I found none ¹ of them thirsty. And my soul became afflicted ²⁵ for the sons of men, because they are blind ¹ in their hearts and do not have sight; ¹ for empty they came into the world, ¹ and empty too they seek to leave the world. ¹ But for the moment they are intoxicated. ³⁰ When they shake off their wine, then they will ¹ repent."

(29) Jesus said, "If the flesh ¹ came into being because of spirit, it is a wonder. ¹ But if spirit came into being because of the body, ¹ it is a wonder of wonders. Indeed, I am amazed 39 at how this great wealth ¹ has made its home in this poverty."

(30) Jesus said, ¹ "Where there are three gods, ¹ they are gods. Where there are two or one, I ⁵ am with him."

(31) Jesus said, "No prophet ¹ is accepted in his own village; no physician heals ¹ those who know him."

(32) Jesus said, ¹ "A city being built on a high mountain ¹ and fortified cannot fall, ¹⁰ nor can it be hidden."

(33) Jesus said, "Preach from your (pl.) housetops ¹ that which you (sg.) will ¹ hear in your (sg.) ear. ¹ For no one lights a lamp and ¹ puts it under a bushel, nor does he put it in a ¹⁵ hidden place, but rather he sets it on a lampstand ¹ so that everyone who enters ¹ and leaves will see its ¹ light."

(34) Jesus said, "If a blind man leads ¹ a blind man, they will both fall ²⁰ into a pit."

(35) Jesus said, "It is not possible ¹ for anyone to enter the house of a strong man ¹ and take it by force unless he binds ¹ his hands; then he will (be able to) ransack ¹ his house."

(36) Jesus said, "Do not be concerned from ²⁵ morning until evening and from evening ¹ until morning about what you will wear." ¹

(37) His disciples said, "When ¹ will you become revealed to us and when ¹ shall we see you?"

Jesus said, "When ³⁰ you disrobe without being ¹ ashamed and take up your garments ¹ and place them under your feet ¹ like little children and ¹ tread on them, then [will you see] 40 the son of the living one, and you will not be ¹ afraid."

(38) Jesus said, "Many times have you ¹ desired to hear these words ¹ which I am saying to you, and you have ⁵ no one else to hear them from. There will be days ¹ when you will look for me and ¹ will not find me."

(39) Jesus said, "The pharisees ¹ and the scribes have taken the keys

¹ of knowledge (gnosis) and hidden them. They themselves have not entered, ¹⁰ nor have they allowed to enter those who wish to. ¹ You, however, be as wise ¹ as serpents and as innocent as ¹ doves."

(40) Jesus said, "A grapevine has been ¹ planted outside of the father, but being ¹⁵ unsound, it will be pulled up by its roots and ¹ destroyed."

(41) Jesus said, "Whoever has something in his ¹ hand will receive more, and whoever has nothing ¹ will be deprived of even the little he has." ¹

(42) Jesus said, "Become passers-by." ²⁰

(43) His disciples said to him, ¹ "Who are you, that you should say these things to us?"

⟨Jesus said to them,⟩ "You do not realize who I am ¹ from what I say to you, ¹ but you have become like ¹ the Jews, for they (either) love the tree and hate ²⁵ its fruit (or) love the fruit ¹ and hate the tree."

(44) Jesus said, "Whoever ¹ blasphemes against the father will be forgiven, and ¹ whoever blasphemes against the son will be forgiven, ¹ but whoever blasphemes against the holy spirit ³⁰ will not be forgiven either on earth ¹ or in heaven."

(45) Jesus said, "Grapes are not harvested ¹ from thorns, nor are figs gathered ¹ from thistles, for they do not produce fruit. ¹ A good man brings forth 41 good from his storehouse; an evil ¹ man brings forth evil things from ¹ his evil storehouse, which is in his heart, and ¹ says evil things. For out of ⁵ the abundance of the heart he brings forth evil ¹ things."

(46) Jesus said, "Among those born of women, ¹ from Adam until John ¹ the Baptist, there is no one so superior to John the Baptist ¹ that his eyes should not be lowered (before him). ¹⁰ Yet I have said, whichever one of you ¹ comes to be a child will be acquainted with the kingdom ¹ and will become superior to John."

(47) Jesus said, ¹ "It is impossible for a man to mount two horses ¹ or to stretch two bows. And it is impossible ¹⁵ for a servant to serve two masters; ¹ otherwise, he will honor the one ¹ and treat the other contemptuously. No man drinks old wine ¹ and immediately desires to drink new wine. ¹ And new wine is not put into old wineskins, ²⁰ lest they burst; nor ¹ is old wine put into a new wineskin, lest ¹ it spoil it. An old patch is not sewn into a new garment, ¹ because a tear would result." ¹

(48) Jesus said, "If two make peace with ²⁵ each other in this one house, they will say ¹ to the mountain, 'Move away,' and it will move ¹ away."

(49) Jesus said, "Blessed are the ¹ solitary and elect, for you will ¹ find the kingdom. For you are from it, ³⁰ and to it you will return." ¹

(50) Jesus said, "If they say to you, ¹ 'Where did you come from?', say to them, ¹ 'We came from the light, the place ¹ where the light came into being on ³⁵ its own accord and established [itself] ⁴² and became manifest through their image.' ¹ If they say to you, 'Is it you?', say, ¹ 'We are its children, and we are the elect ¹ of the living father.' If they ask you, ⁵ 'What is the sign of your father in ¹ you?', say to them, 'It is movement and ¹ repose.' "

(51) His disciples said to him, ¹ "When will the repose of ¹ the dead come about, and when ¹⁰ will the new world come?"

He said to them, ¹ "What you look forward to has already come, but ¹ you do not recognize it." ¹

(52) His disciples said to him, "Twenty-four ¹ prophets spoke in Israel, ¹⁵ and all of them spoke in you." ¹

He said to them, "You have omitted the one living in ¹ your presence and have spoken (only) of the ¹ dead."

(53) His disciples said to him, ¹ "Is circumcision beneficial or not?"

He said ²⁰ to them, "If it were beneficial, their father ¹ would beget them already circumcised from their mother. ¹ Rather, the true circumcision in spirit has ¹ become completely profitable."

(54) Jesus said, "Blessed are the poor, ¹ for yours is the kingdom of heaven." ²⁵

(55) Jesus said, "Whoever does not hate his father ¹ and his mother cannot become a disciple to me. ¹ And whoever does not hate his brothers and ¹ sisters and take up his cross in my way ¹ will not be worthy of me." ³⁰

(56) Jesus said, "Whoever has come to understand the world has found (only) ¹ a corpse, and whoever has found a corpse ¹ is superior to the world." ¹

(57) Jesus said, "The kingdom of the father is like ¹ a man who had [good] seed. ³⁵ His enemy came by night ⁴³ and sowed weeds among the good seed. ¹ The man did not allow them to pull up ¹ the weeds; he said to them, 'I am afraid that ¹ you will go intending to pull up the weeds ⁵ and pull up the wheat along with them.' ¹ For on the day of the harvest the weeds will be plainly visible, ¹ and they will be pulled up and burned."

(58) Jesus said, ¹ "Blessed is the man who has suffered ¹ and found life."

(59) Jesus said, "Take heed of the ¹⁰ living one while you are alive, lest you die ¹ and seek to see him and be unable ¹ to do so."

(60) <They saw> a Samaritan carrying ¹ a lamb on his way to Judea.
¹ He said to his disciples, "That man is round about the ¹⁵ lamb."

They said to him, "So that he may ¹ kill it and eat it."

He said to them, "While ¹ it is alive, he will not eat it, but only when he has ¹ killed it and it has become a corpse."

They said to him, ¹ "He cannot do so otherwise."

He said to them, ²⁰ "You too, look for a ¹ place for yourselves within repose, ¹ lest you become a corpse and be ¹ eaten."

(61) Jesus said, "Two will rest ¹ on a bed: the one will die, and the other ²⁵ will live."

Salome said, "Who are you, ¹ man, that you . . . have come up on ¹ my couch and eaten from my ¹ table?"

Jesus said to her, "I am he ¹ who exists from the undivided. ³⁰ I was given some of the things of my father."

< . . . > "I ¹ am your disciple."

< . . . > "Therefore I say, ¹ if he is destroyed he will be filled ¹ with light, but if he is ¹ divided, he will be filled with darkness."

(62) Jesus said, "It ³⁵ is to those [who are worthy of 44 my] mysteries that I tell my mysteries. Do not let your (sg.) left hand know ¹ what your (sg.) right hand is doing."

(63) Jesus said, ¹ There was a rich man who had ¹ much money. He said, 'I shall put ⁵ my money to use so that I may sow, reap, ¹ plant, and fill my storehouse with produce, ¹ with the result that I shall lack nothing.' Such were ¹ his intentions, but ¹ that same night he died. Let him who has ears ¹⁰ hear."

(64) Jesus said, "A man ¹ had received visitors. And when he had prepared ¹ the dinner, he sent his servant to ¹ invite the guests. He went to ¹ the first one and said to him, 'My master invites ¹⁵ you.' He said, 'I have claims ¹ against some merchants. They are coming to me this evening. ¹ I must go and give them my orders. I ask to be excused ¹ from the dinner.' He went to another ¹ and said to him, 'My master has invited you.' ²⁰ He said to him, 'I have just bought a house and ¹ am required for the day. I shall not have any spare time.' ¹ He went to another and said to him, 'My master ¹ invites you.' He said to him, 'My friend ¹ is going to get married, and I am to prepare the banquet. ²⁵ I shall not be able to come. I ask to be excused from the dinner.' ¹ He went to another and said to him, 'My master ¹ invites you.' He said to him, 'I have just bought ¹ a farm, and I am on my way to collect the rent. I shall not be able to come. ¹ I ask to be excused.' The servant returned and said ³⁰ to his master, 'Those whom you invited to ¹ the dinner have asked to be excused.' The master said to ¹ his servant, 'Go outside to the streets ¹ and bring back those whom you happen to meet, so that ¹ they may dine.' Businessmen and merchants ³⁵ [will] not enter the places of my father." 45

(65) He said, "There was a good man who owned ¹ a vineyard. He leased it to tenant farmers ¹ so that they might work it and he might collect the produce ¹ from them. He sent his servant so that ⁵ the tenants might give him the produce of ¹ the vineyard. They seized his servant ¹ and beat him, all but killing him. ¹ The servant went back and told his master. ¹ The master said, 'Perhaps he did not recognize them.' ¹⁰ He sent another servant. The tenants beat ¹ this one as well. Then the owner sent ¹ his son and said, 'Perhaps they will show respect ¹ to my son.' Because the tenants ¹ knew that it was he who was the heir ¹⁵ to the vineyard, they seized him and killed him. ¹ Let him who has ears hear." ¹

(66) Jesus said, "Show me the stone which ¹ the builders have rejected. That one is the ¹ cornerstone."

(67) Jesus said, "If one who knows the all ²⁰ still feels a personal deficiency, he is completely deficient." ¹

(68) Jesus said, "Blessed are you when ¹ you are hated and persecuted. ¹ Wherever you have been persecuted ¹ they will find no place." ²⁵

(69) Jesus said, "Blessed are they who have been persecuted ¹ within themselves. It is they ¹ who have truly come to know the father. ¹ Blessed are the hungry, for ¹ the belly of him who desires will be filled."

(70) Jesus said, ³⁰ "That which you have will save you ¹ if you bring it forth from yourselves. ¹ That which you do not have within you [will] kill you ¹ if you do not have it within you." ¹

(71) Jesus said, "I shall [destroy this] house, ³⁵ and no one will be able to build it [...]" 46

(72) [A man said] to him, "Tell my brothers ¹ to divide my father's possessions ¹ with me."

He said to him, "O man, who ¹ has made me a divider?"

He turned to ⁵ his disciples and said to them, "I am not a divider, ¹ am I?"

(73) Jesus said, "The harvest ¹ is great but the laborers are few. ¹ Be-seech the lord, therefore, to send out laborers ¹ to the harvest."

(74) He said, "O lord, there are ¹⁰ many around the drinking trough, but there is nothing in ¹ the cistern."

(75) Jesus said, "Many are standing ¹ at the door, but it is the solitary who will enter ¹ the bridal chamber."

(76) Jesus said, "The kingdom of the father is like a ¹⁵ merchant who had a consignment of merchandise ¹ and who discovered a pearl. That merchant ¹ was shrewd. He sold the merchandise ¹ and bought the pearl alone for himself. ¹ You too, seek ²⁰ his unfailing and enduring treasure ¹ where no moth comes near ¹ to devour and no worm destroys." ¹

(77) Jesus said, "It is I who am the light which is above ¹ them all. It is I who am the all. ²⁵ From me did the all come forth, and unto me did the all ¹ extend. Split a piece of wood, and I ¹ am there. Lift up the stone, and you will ¹ find me there."

(78) Jesus said, "Why ¹ have you come out into the desert? To see a reed ³⁰ shaken by the wind? And to see ¹ a man clothed in fine garments ¹ [like your] kings and your great 47 men? Upon them are the fine garments, ¹ and they are unable to discern ¹ the truth."

(79) A woman from the crowd said to him, ¹ "Blessed are the womb which ⁵ bore you and the breasts which ¹ nourished you."

He said to [her], ¹ "Blessed are those who have heard ¹ the word of the father and have truly kept it. ¹ For there will be days ¹⁰ when you (pl.) will say, 'Blessed are the womb ¹ which has not conceived and the breasts which have not ¹ given milk.' "

(80) Jesus said, "He who has recognized ¹ the world has found the body, but he who has found ¹ the body is superior to the world." ¹⁵

(81) Jesus said, "Let him who has grown rich ¹ be king, and let him who possesses power ¹ renounce it."

(82) Jesus said, "He who is near ¹ me is near the fire, and he who is far ¹ from me is far from the kingdom."

(83) Jesus said, ²⁰ "The images are manifest to man, ¹ but the light in them remains concealed ¹ in the image of the light of the father. He will ¹ become manifest, but his image will remain concealed ¹ by his light."

(84) Jesus said, ²⁵ "When you see your likeness, you ¹ rejoice. But when you see ¹ your images which came into being before you, ¹ and which neither die nor become manifest, ¹ how much you will have to bear!"

(85) Jesus said, ³⁰ "Adam came into being from a great ¹ power and a great wealth, ¹ but he did not become worthy of you. ¹ For had he been worthy, [he would] not [have experienced] ¹ death."

(86) Jesus said, "[The foxes 48 have their holes] and the birds have ¹ their nests, but the son of man ¹ has no place to lay his head and ¹ rest."

(87) Jesus said, "Wretched ⁵ is the body that is dependent upon a body, ¹ and wretched is the soul that is dependent ¹ on these two."

(88) Jesus said, "The angels ¹ and the prophets will come to you and ¹ give to you those things you (already) have. And ¹⁰ you too, give them those things which you have, ¹ and say to yourselves, 'When ¹ will they come and take what is theirs?' " ¹

(89) Jesus said, "Why do you wash the outside ¹ of the cup? Do you not realize that ¹⁵ he who made the inside is the same one ¹ who made the outside?"

(90) Jesus said, ¹ "Come unto me, for my yoke is easy ¹ and my lordship is mild, ¹ and you will find repose for ²⁰ yourselves."

(91) They said to him, "Tell us ¹ who you are so that we may believe in you." ¹

He said to them, "You read the face of the sky ¹ and of the earth, but you have not recognized ¹ the one who is before you, and ²⁵ you do not know how to read this moment." ¹

(92) Jesus said, "Seek and you will find. Yet, what ¹ you asked me about in former times and which I did not ¹ tell you then, now ¹ I do desire to tell, but you do not inquire after ³⁰ it."

(93) <Jesus said,> "Do not give what is holy to dogs, lest ¹ they throw them on the dung heap. Do not throw the ¹ pearls [to] swine, lest they ... it ¹ [...]."

(94) Jesus [said], "He who seeks will find, ¹ and [he who knocks] will be let in." ³⁵

(95) [Jesus said], "If you have money, 49 do not lend it at interest, but give [it] to one ¹ from whom you will not get it back."

(96) Jesus said, ¹ "The kingdom of the father is like [a certain] woman. She ¹ took a little leaven, [concealed] it in ⁵ some dough, and made it into large loaves. ¹ Let him who has ears hear." ¹

(97) Jesus said, "The kingdom of the [father] is like ¹ a certain woman who was carrying a [jar] full of meal. While she was walking [on the] road, ¹⁰ still some distance from home, the handle of the jar broke ¹ and the meal emptied out behind her [on] the road. ¹ She did not realize it; she had noticed no ¹ accident. When she reached her house, ¹ she set the jar down and found it ¹⁵ empty."

(98) Jesus said, "The kingdom of the father ¹ is like a certain man who wanted to kill ¹ a powerful man. In his own house he drew ¹ his sword and stuck it into the wall ¹ in order to find out whether his hand could carry through. ²⁰ Then he slew the powerful man." ¹

(99) The disciples said to him, "Your brothers ¹ and your mother are standing outside." ¹

He said to them, "Those here ¹ who do the will of my father are ²⁵ my brothers and my mother. It is they who will ¹ enter the kingdom of my father.” ¹

(100) They showed Jesus a gold coin and said to him, ¹ “Caesar’s men demand taxes from us.” ¹

He said to them, “Give Caesar what belongs ³⁰ to Caesar, give God what belongs to God, ¹ and give me what is mine.” ¹

(101) <Jesus said,> “Whoever does not hate his [father] and his ¹ mother as I do cannot become a [disciple] to me. ¹ And whoever does [not] love his [father and] his ³⁵ mother as I do cannot become a [disciple to] ¹ me. For my mother [...], 50 but [my] true [mother] gave me life.” ¹

(102) Jesus said, “Woe to the pharisees, for ¹ they are like a dog sleeping in the ¹ manger of oxen, for neither does he eat ⁵ nor does he [let] the oxen eat.”

(103) Jesus said, ¹ “Fortunate is the man who knows ¹ where the brigands will enter, ¹ so that [he] may get up, muster his ¹ domain, and arm himself ¹⁰ before they invade.” ¹

(104) They said to Jesus, “Come, let us pray today ¹ and let us fast.”

Jesus said, “What ¹ is the sin that I have committed, or wherein have I been defeated? ¹ But when the bridegroom leaves ¹⁵ the bridal chamber, then let them ¹ fast and pray.”

(105) Jesus said, ¹ “He who knows the father and the mother will be called ¹ the son of a harlot.”

(106) Jesus said, ¹ “When you make the two one, you will become ²⁰ the sons of man, and when you ¹ say, ‘Mountain, move away,’ it will ¹ move away.”

(107) Jesus said, “The kingdom is like ¹ a shepherd who had a hundred ¹ sheep. One of them, the largest, went astray. ²⁵ He left the ninety-nine and looked for that one ¹ until he found it. When he had gone to such trouble, he said ¹ to the sheep, ‘I care for you more than the ninety-nine.’ ” ¹

(108) Jesus said, “He who will drink from my mouth ¹ will become like me. I myself shall become ³⁰ he, and the things that are hidden will be revealed to him.” ¹

(109) Jesus said, “The kingdom is like a man ¹ who had a ¹ [hidden] treasure in his field without knowing it. ¹ And [after] he died, he left it to his ³⁵ [son]. The son [did] not know (about the treasure). He inherited 51 the field and sold [it]. And the one who bought it ¹ went plowing and [found] the treasure. ¹ He began to lend money at interest to whomever he wished.” ¹

(110) Jesus said, "Whoever finds the world ⁵ and becomes rich, let him renounce the world." ¹

(111) Jesus said, "The heavens and the earth will be rolled up ¹ in your presence. And the one who lives from ¹ the living one will not see death." Does not Jesus ¹ say, "Whoever finds himself ¹⁰ is superior to the world"?

(112) Jesus said, "Woe ¹ to the flesh that depends on the soul; woe ¹ to the soul that depends on the flesh." ¹

(113) His disciples said to him, ¹ "When will the kingdom come?"

⟨Jesus said,⟩ "It will not come by ¹⁵ waiting for it. It will not be a matter of saying 'here ¹ it is' or 'there it is'. Rather, the kingdom ¹ of the father is spread out upon the earth, and ¹ men do not see it."

(114) Simon Peter said ¹ to them, "Let Mary leave us, ²⁰ for women are not worthy of life."

Jesus said, ¹ "I myself shall lead her ¹ in order to make her male, so that ¹ she too may become a living spirit resembling ¹ you males. For every woman who will make herself ²⁵ male will enter the kingdom ¹ of heaven." ¹

The Gospel ¹
According to Thomas

THE GOSPEL OF PHILIP (II,3)

Introduced and translated by

WESLEY W. ISENBERG

The Gospel of Philip is a compilation of statements pertaining primarily to the meaning and value of sacraments within the context of a Valentinian conception of the human predicament and life after death.

Like the gospels of the New Testament canon these statements employ a variety of literary types: aphorism, analogy, parable, paraenesis, polemic, narrative dialogue, dominical sayings, biblical exegesis, and dogmatic propositions. However, The Gospel of Philip is not a gospel like one of the New Testament gospels. To be sure, it does provide the occasional word or deed of Jesus. It contains seventeen sayings of Jesus, nine of which are citations and interpretations of Jesus' words already found in the canonical gospels (55,33-34; 57,3-5; 68,8-12; 68,26-27; 72,33-73,1; 77,18; 83,11-13; 84,7-9; 85,29-31). The new sayings (55,37-56,3; 58,10-14; 59,25-27; 63,29-30; 64,2-9; 64,10-12; 67,30-35; and 74,25-27), identified by the formula introducing them ("he said," "the Lord said," or "the Savior said") are brief and enigmatic and are best interpreted from a gnostic perspective. There are also a few stories about Jesus; they are similar to those in the early Christian apocryphal gospels. During a revelation on a mountain he appeared larger than life to his disciples (57,28-58,10). His three female companions were each named Mary (59,6-11), though he had an apparent preference for Mary Magdalene (63,32-36). After he had put seventy-two colors into a single vat in the dye-works of Levi, they coalesced into white (63,25-30). Philip the apostle is said to be the source of the story that Joseph the carpenter made the cross on which his offspring later hung (73,8-15).

These few sayings and stories about Jesus, however, are not set in any kind of narrative framework like one of the New Testament gospels. In fact, The Gospel of Philip is not organized in a way that can be conveniently outlined. Although some continuity is achieved through an association of ideas (cf. 51,29-52,35), a series of contrasts) or by catchwords (cf. 77,15-78,24, the word love), the line of thought is rambling and disjointed. Complete changes of subject are common.

The text gives the impression of logical coherence because of the recurrence of certain themes (e.g., the meaning of the names of Jesus, 56,3-15; 62,7-17; 63,21-24; the need to experience resurrection before one dies, 56,15-20; 56,26-57,22; 66,16-23; 73,1-8; putting on light to escape the hostile powers, 70,5-9; 76,22-77-1; 86,4-10), but this coherence is probably more coincidental than planned.

It is possible that the compiler of this collection purposely disjoined what were once whole paragraphs of thought and distributed the pieces in various places in this work. A clear thought results if one joins 70,5-9 with 76,22-77,1 and 66,7-29, in that order. Indefinite pronouns gain proper antecedents in the process. Similarly 75,13-14 seems to provide the theme amplified by 61,36-62,5. In 63,5-11 one has the analogy prefacing the point made in 70,22-29.

Since The Gospel of Philip is eccentrically arranged, its contents can best be considered by reference to summarizing statements. The statement at 69,1-4 reflects a dominant concern, the mysteries of the bridal chamber, and distinguishes those who may participate – the free men and virgins – from those who may not – the animals, slaves, and defiled women.

Those excluded from the bridal chamber are described entirely in negative terms. We learn, inter alia, that animals and men must remain separate (78,25-28; 75,25-26). But “there are many animals in the world which are in human form” (81,7-8). If one is an “animal” he belongs “outside or below” rather than “above” or “within” (79,5-11). “Slaves” are to be contrasted with “sons” (52,2-6), with “children” (81,12-14) and with the “free” (79,13-18). A “slave” is one who commits sin (77,18), who is ignorant of the inner wickedness which enslaves him (83,18-29; 85,24). “Defiled women” are all women who participate in sexual intercourse, i.e., in “the marriage of defilement,” which is fleshly and lustful (81,34-82,10). Unclean spirits seek to defile men and woman sexually (65,1-23).

“Free men and virgins” are the opposite of “animals, slaves, and defiled women.” A virgin has never been defiled by sexual intercourse (55,27-28; cf. 81,34-82,8). The “free man” does not sin (77,15-18). He neither fears the flesh nor loves it (66,4-6). He is endangered by the deceptions of the archons who seek to enslave him (54,16-31). “Free men and virgins” are those called “Christians” (74,13-16), who possess “the resurrection, the light, the cross, the holy spirit” (74,18-21).

According to this gospel the existential malady of humanity results from the differentiation of the sexes. When Eve was separated from Adam, the original androgynous unity was broken (68,22-26). The purpose of Christ’s coming is to reunite Adam and Eve (70,12-17). Just as a husband and wife unite in the bridal chamber, so also the reunion effected by Christ takes place in a bridal chamber, the sacramental one (70,17-22), where a person receives a foretaste and assurance of ultimate union with an angelic, heavenly counterpart (cf. 58,10-14).

This leads us to another summarizing statement (67,27-30), “The lord did everything in a mystery, a baptism and a chrism and a eucharist and a redemption and a bridal chamber.” The sentence probably describes five stages of a complete initiation, rather than five separate, unrelated sacraments. It is possible that “bridal chamber” is a covering term for the whole initiation, since a particular benefit of one stage of the initiation (e.g., “light,” associated usually with chrism, 67,5-6; 69,12-14; 57,27-28) is also connected with bridal chamber (86,4-11; cf. 70,5-9). In 74,12-24 the person anointed in chrism is said to possess everything – resurrection, light, the cross, the holy spirit – but then the author adds, “the father gave him this in the bridal chamber.” Conversely, what one expects to be connected with bridal chamber appears in reference to eucharist (58,10-14) or baptism and chrism (69,4-14).

The Gospel of Philip does not describe, step by step, the ritual of all or any of the five stages of initiation. It does explain, however, that in baptism one “goes down into the water and comes up” with the gift of the name “Christian,” so that one can say, “I am a Christian” (64,22-31; cf. 77,9-12). The analogy of God as a dyer suggests that baptism was by immersion (61,12-20). The initiate takes off his clothes before entering the water so that he may put on the perfect man as a new garment (75,21-25). That the chrism was a warm perfumed oil is apparent from references to the chrism as fire (67,5-9; 57,27-28) and to the oil as being fragrant (77,36-78,7; 82,15-23). Perhaps a trinitarian formula was used at the moment of anointing (67,19-24). The priest consecrates the bread and the cup for the eucharist (77,2-8). The consecrated cup contains wine mixed with water (75,14-21). The consecrated bread is "bread from heaven," food fit for the initiate (55,10-14). To partake of the bread and the cup is to receive "the flesh and the blood" of Jesus (56,26-57,22; cf. 63,21-24). A further ritual called ransom, or redemption, is mentioned, but no details are given. This stage of the initiation is compared to "the holy of the holy" in the Jerusalem temple and is said to take place in the bridal chamber (69,23-27).

Because of the contents, the eccentric arrangement, and the literary types exhibited, it is likely that The Gospel of Philip is a collection of excerpts mainly from a Christian Gnostic sacramental catechesis. It explains the significance of sacramental rites of initiation, the meaning of sacred names, especially names of Jesus, and provides paraenesis for the life of the initiated. It interprets Biblical passages, particularly from the book of Genesis, makes use of typology, both historical and sacramental, and, as catechists do, argues on the basis of analogy and parable. In these and other ways The Gospel of Philip resembles the orthodox catechisms from the second through fourth centuries.

The title of this text may be derived merely from the fact that Philip is the only apostle named in it (73,8), though Philip, along with Thomas and Matthew, had an eminence among Gnostics as a privileged recipient and custodian of dominical revelation. The Coptic text is undoubtedly a translation of a Greek text which was written perhaps as late as the second half of the third century C.E. Because of the interest in the meaning of certain Syriac words (63,21-23; 56,7-9), its affinities to Eastern sacramental practice and catecheses, and its ascetic ethics, an origin in Syria is probable.

THE GOSPEL OF PHILIP

II 51, 29-86, 19

A Hebrew makes another Hebrew, ³⁰ and such a person is called ¹ "proselyte." But a proselyte does not ¹ make another proselyte. [...] ¹ just as they [...] ¹ and make others like themselves, 52 while [others] simply exist. ¹

The slave seeks only to be ¹ free, but he does not hope to acquire the estate ¹ of his master. But the son is not only ⁵ a son but lays claim to the inheritance of the father. ¹ Those who are heirs ¹ to the dead are themselves dead, ¹ and they inherit the dead. Those ¹ who are heirs to what is living are alive, ¹⁰ and they are heirs to both what is living and the dead. ¹ The dead are heirs to ¹ nothing. For how can he who is dead inherit? ¹ If he who is dead inherits ¹ what is living he will not die, but he who is dead ¹⁵ will live even more.

A gentile ¹ does not die, for he has never lived in order that ¹ he may die. He who has believed in the truth ¹ has found life, and this one is in danger of dying, for he is alive. ¹ Since Christ came the world has been ²⁰ created, the cities adorned, ¹ the dead carried out. When we were ¹ Hebrews we were orphans and ¹ had only our mother, but when we became ¹ Christians we had both father and mother. ²⁵

Those who sow in winter reap in summer. ¹ The winter is the world, the summer the other eternal realm (aeon). ¹ Let us sow in the world that ¹ we may reap in the summer. Because of this it is fitting ¹ for us not to pray in the winter. Summer ³⁰ follows winter. But if any man reap ¹ in winter he will not actually reap but only ¹ pluck out, since it will not provide ¹ a harvest for such a person. It is not only [...] that it ¹ will [...] come forth, but also on the Sabbath ³⁵ [...] is barren.

Christ came 53 to ransom some, ¹ to save others, to ¹ redeem others. He ransomed those who were strangers and ¹ made them his own. And he set ⁵ his own apart, those whom he gave as a pledge ¹ according to his plan. It was not only when he ¹ appeared that he voluntarily laid down his life, ¹ but he voluntarily laid down his life ¹ from the very day the world came into being. ¹⁰ Then he came first in order to take it, since ¹ it had been given as a pledge. It fell into the hands of ¹ robbers and was taken captive, but he ¹ saved it. He redeemed the good people ¹ in the world as well as the evil.

Light and darkness, ¹⁵ life and death, right and left, ¹ are brothers of one another. They are inseparable. ¹ Because of this neither are the good ¹ good, nor the evil evil, ¹ nor is life life, nor death death. ²⁰ For this reason each one will dissolve ¹ into its earliest origin. But those who are exalted ¹ above the world are indissoluble, ¹ eternal.

Names given ¹ to the worldly are very deceptive, ²⁵ for they divert our thoughts ¹ from what is correct to what is incorrect. ¹ Thus one who hears the word "God" does not perceive ¹ what is correct, but perceives ¹ what is incorrect. So also with "the father" ³⁰ and "the son" and "the holy spirit" and ¹ "life" and "light" and "resurrection" ¹ and "the church" and all the rest — ¹ people do not perceive what is correct but they ¹ perceive what is incorrect, [unless] they ³⁵ have come to know what is correct. The [names which are heard] ¹ are in the world [...] 54 deceive. If they] were in the eternal realm (aeon), they would ¹ at no time be used as names in the world. ¹ Nor were they set among ¹ worldly things. They have an end in ⁵ the eternal realm.

One single name is not uttered ¹ in the world, the name which the father gave ¹ to the son; it is the name above all things: ¹ the name of the father. For the son ¹ would not become father unless he wore ¹⁰ the name of the father. ¹ Those who have this name know it, but they do ¹ not speak it. But those who do not have it ¹ do not know it.

But truth brought names into existence ¹ in the world for our sakes because it is not possible ¹⁵ to learn it without these names. Truth is one single thing; ¹ it is many things and for our sakes to ¹ teach about this one thing in love through ¹ many things. The rulers (archons) wanted to deceive ¹ man, since they saw that he had ²⁰ a kinship with those that are ¹ truly good. They took the name of those that are good ¹ and gave it to those that are not good, ¹ so that through the names they might deceive ¹ him and bind them to those that are ²⁵ not good. And afterward, what a ¹ favor they do for them! They make them be removed ¹ from those that are not good and place them ¹ among those that are good. These things they knew, ¹ for they wanted to ³⁰ take the free man and make him a ¹ slave to them forever.

There are powers ¹ which [...] man, not wishing ¹ him to be [saved], in order that they may ¹ [...]. For if man ³⁵ is [saved, there will not] be any sacrifices ¹ [...] and animals will not be offered 55 to the powers. Indeed the animals were ¹ the ones to whom they sacrificed. They were indeed offering ¹ them up alive, but when they ¹ offered them up they died. As for man, they offered ⁵ him up to God dead, and he lived. ¹

Before Christ came there was no bread ¹ in the world, just as Paradise, the place ¹ where Adam was, had many trees ¹ to nourish the animals but no wheat ¹⁰ to sustain man. Man used to feed ¹ like the animals, but when Christ ¹ came, the perfect man, he brought bread ¹ from heaven in order that man might be nourished ¹ with the food of man. The rulers ¹⁵ thought that it was by their own power and will ¹ that they were doing what they did, ¹ but the holy spirit in secret ¹ was accomplishing everything through them ¹ as it wished. Truth, ²⁰ which existed since the beginning, is sown everywhere. And ¹ many see it being sown, ¹ but few are they who see it being reaped. ¹

Some said, "Mary conceived by ¹ the holy spirit." They are in error. ²⁵ They do not know what they are saying. When ¹ did a woman ever conceive by a woman? ¹ Mary is the virgin whom no ¹ power defiled. She is a ¹ great anathema to the Hebrews, who ³⁰ are the apostles and [the] apostolic men. ¹ This virgin whom no power defiled [...] the powers ¹ defile themselves. And the lord [would] not have said ¹ "My [father who is in] heaven" (Mt 16:17) ³⁵ unless [he] had had another father, ¹ but he would have said simply "[My father]." ¹

The lord said to the disciples, "[...] 56 from every house. Bring into the house ¹ of the father. But do not take (anything) in the house ¹ of the father nor carry it off."

"Jesus" is a hidden name, ¹ "Christ" is a revealed name. ⁵ For this reason "Jesus" is not particular ¹ to any language; rather he is always called ¹ by the name "Jesus." While as for "Christ," in Syriac it is "Messiah," ¹ in Greek it is "Christ." Certainly ¹⁰ all the others have it ¹ according to their own language. ¹ "The Nazarene" is he who reveals ¹ what is hidden. Christ has everything ¹ in himself, whether man or angel ¹⁵ or mystery, and the father.

Those who say ¹ that the lord died first and (then) ¹ rose up are in error, for he rose up ¹ first and (then) died. If one does not first attain ¹ the resurrection he will not die. As God ²⁰ lives, he would . . .

No one ¹ will hide a large valuable object ¹ in something large, but many a time ¹ one has tossed countless thousands ¹ into a thing worth a penny. Compare ²⁵ the soul. It is a precious thing and it came to be ¹ in a contemptible body.

Some ¹ are afraid lest they rise naked. ¹ Because of this they wish to rise ¹ in the flesh, and [they] do not know that it is those who ³⁰ wear the [flesh] who are naked. ¹ [It is] those who [. . .] to unclothe ¹ themselves who are not naked. "Flesh ¹ [and blood shall] not inherit the kingdom ¹ [of God]" (1 Co 15:50). What is this which will ⁵⁷ not inherit? This which is on us. But what ¹ is this, too, which will inherit? It is that which belongs to Jesus ¹ and his blood. Because of this he said, ¹ "He who shall not eat my flesh and drink ⁵ my blood has not life in him" (Jn 6:53). What ¹ is it? His flesh is the word, and his blood ¹ is the holy spirit. He who has received these has ¹ food and he has drink and clothing. ¹ I find fault with the others who say ¹⁰ that it will not rise. Then both of them ¹ are at fault. You (sg.) say ¹ that the flesh will not rise. But tell me ¹ what will rise, that we may honor you (sg.). ¹ You (sg.) say the spirit in the flesh, ¹⁵ and it is also this light in the flesh. (But) this too is a matter ¹ which is in the flesh, for whatever you (sg.) shall, say, ¹ you (sg.) say nothing outside the flesh. ¹ It is necessary to rise in this flesh, since ¹ everything exists in it. In this world ²⁰ those who put on garments are better than the ¹ garments. In the kingdom of heaven the garments ¹ are better than those who have put them on.

It is through ¹ water and fire that the whole place is purified — ¹ the visible by visible, ²⁵ the hidden by the hidden. There are some things ¹ hidden through those visible. ¹ There is water in water, there is fire ¹ in chrisem.

Jesus took them all by stealth, ¹ for he did not appear as ³⁰ he was, but ¹ in the manner in which [they would] be able to see ¹ him. He appeared to [them all. ¹ He appeared] to the great ¹ as great. He [appeared] ³⁵ to the small as small. He [appeared 58 to the] angels as an angel, and ¹ to men as a man. Because of this his ¹ word hid itself from everyone. Some ¹ indeed saw him, thinking that they were seeing ⁵ themselves, but when he appeared ¹ to his disciples in glory ¹ on the mount he was not small. He ¹ became great, but he made the disciples ¹ great, that they might be able to see ¹⁰ him in his greatness.

He said on that day ¹ in the thanksgiving, "You who have joined ¹ the perfect light with the holy spirit, ¹ unite the angels with us also, ¹ as being the images." Do not despise the lamb, for without it ¹⁵ it is not possible to see the king. No one ¹ will be able to go in to the king if he is ¹ naked.

The heavenly man has many more sons ¹ than the earthly man. If the sons of Adam ¹ are many, although they die, ²⁰ how much more the sons of the perfect man, ¹ they who do not die but are ¹ always begotten. The father makes a son, ¹ and the son has not the power to make ¹ a son. For he who has been begotten has not the power ²⁵ to beget, but the son gets ¹ brothers for himself, not sons. All who ¹ are begotten in the world ¹ are begotten in a natural way, and ¹ the others [are nourished] from [the place] whence they have been born. ³⁰ It is from ¹ being promised to the heavenly place ¹ that man [receives] nourishment. ¹ [...] him from the mouth. ¹ [And had] the word gone out from that place 59 it would be nourished from the mouth and ¹ it would become perfect. For it is ¹ by a kiss that the perfect conceive and give birth. For this reason ¹ we also kiss one another. ⁵ We receive conception from the grace which is in ¹ one another.

There were three who always walked with ¹ the lord: Mary his mother ¹ and her sister and Magdalene, the one ¹ who was called his companion. ¹⁰ His sister and his mother ¹ and his companion were each a Mary.

"The father" and "the son" ¹ are single names, "the holy spirit" ¹ is a double name. For they are ¹ everywhere: they are above, they are below; ¹⁵ they are in the concealed, they are in the revealed. ¹ The holy spirit is in the revealed: ¹ it is below. It is in the concealed: ¹ it is above.

The saints are served ¹ by evil powers, ²⁰ for they are blinded by the holy spirit ¹ into thinking that they are serving ¹ an (ordinary) man whenever they do so for the saints. ¹ Because of this a disciple ¹ asked the lord one day for something ²⁵ of this world. He said to him, ¹ "Ask your mother, and she will give you ¹ of the things which are another's."

The apostles said ¹ to the disciples, "May our entire offering ¹ obtain salt.”³⁰ They called [Sophia] “salt.” Without it¹ no offering [is] acceptable. But Sophia¹ is barren, [without] child. For this reason¹ she is called “a trace of¹ salt.” Wherever they will [...] ³⁵ in their own way, the holy spirit [... , 60 and] her children are many.

What the father possesses¹ belongs to the son, and the son¹ himself, so long as he is small, is not¹ entrusted with what is his. But when⁵ he becomes a man his father gives him¹ all that he possesses.

Those who have gone astray, whom¹ the spirit (itself) begets, usually go astray also¹ because of the spirit. Thus, by one and the same breath,¹ the fire blazes and is put out.¹⁰

Echamoth is one thing and Echmoth another.¹ Echamoth is Wisdom simply,¹ but Echmoth is the Wisdom of death which is¹ the one which¹ knows death, which is called¹⁵ “the little Wisdom.”

There are¹ domestic animals, like the bull¹ and the ass and others of this kind.¹ Others are wild¹ and live apart in the deserts. Man ploughs²⁰ the field by means of the domestic animals,¹ and from this he is nourished (both) he and¹ the animals, whether tame or¹ wild. Compare the perfect¹ man. It is through powers which are submissive²⁵ that he ploughs, preparing for everything to come into being.¹ For it is because of this that the whole place stands,¹ whether the good or the evil,¹ the right and the left. The holy spirit¹ shepherds every one and rules³⁰ [all] the powers, the “tame” ones¹ and the “wild” ones, as well as those which are unique.¹ For indeed he [...] (and)] shuts them in,¹ in order that [if [...]]wish, they will not be able [to escape].

[He who] has been created is³⁵ [beautiful, but] you (sg.) would <not> find his sons 61 noble creations. If he were not¹ created but begotten, you (sg.) would find¹ that his seed was noble. But now¹ he was created, (and) he begot. What⁵ nobility is this? First adultery¹ came into being, afterward murder. And he¹ was begotten in adultery, for he was the child¹ of the serpent. So he became¹ a murderer, just like his father, and¹⁰ he killed his brother. Indeed every act of sexual intercourse¹ which has occurred between those unlike¹ one another is adultery.

God¹ is a dyer. As the good dyes,¹ which are called “true,” dissolve¹⁵ with the things dyed in them, so¹ it is with those whom God has dyed.¹ Since his dyes are immortal, they become immortal by means of his colors.¹ Now God dips what he dips²⁰ in water.

It is not possible¹ for anyone to see anything of the things that actually exist¹ unless he becomes like¹ them. This is not the way with man¹ in the world: he sees the sun without being a sun;²⁵ and he sees the heaven and the earth and¹ all other things, but he is not these things. ¹ This is quite in keeping with the truth. But you (sg.) saw ¹ something of that place, and you became ¹ those things. You saw the spirit, you ³⁰ became spirit. You saw Christ, you became ¹ Christ. You saw [the father, you] shall become father. ¹ So [in this place] you see ¹ everything and [do] not [see] yourself, ¹ but [in that place] you do see yourself — and what ³⁵ you see you shall [become]. ¹

Faith receives, love gives. [No one will be able 62 to receive] without faith. No one will be able to give without ¹ love. Because of this, in order that we may indeed receive, ¹ we believe, and in order that we may love, we give, since ¹ if one gives without love, he has no ⁵ profit from what he has given. He who ¹ has received something other than the lord is still a Hebrew. ¹

The apostles who were before us had these names for him: ¹ “Jesus, the Nazorean, Messiah,” that ¹ is, “Jesus, the Nazorean, the Christ.” The last ¹⁰ name is “Christ,” the first is “Jesus,” that in ¹ the middle is “the Nazarene.” “Messiah” ¹ has two meanings, both “the Christ” ¹ and “the measured.” “Jesus” in Hebrew is ¹ “the redemption.” “Nazara” is “the truth.” “The ¹⁵ Nazarene,” then, is “the truth.” “Christ” ¹ . . . been measured. It is “the Nazarene” and “Jesus” ¹ who have been measured.

When the pearl is cast ¹ down into the mud it becomes greatly despised, ²⁰ nor if it is anointed with balsam oil ¹ will it become more precious. But it always has ¹ value in the eyes of its owner. ¹ Compare the sons of ¹ God, wherever they may be. ²⁵ They still have value in the eyes of their ¹ father.

If you (sg.) say, “I am a Jew,” ¹ no one will be moved. If you say, “I am a ¹ Roman,” no one will be disturbed. If you say, “I am a Greek, a barbarian, ³⁰ a slave, [a] free man,” no one ¹ will be troubled. [If] you [say], “I am a ¹ Christian,” the [. . .] will tremble. Would ¹ that I might [. . .] like that — the person whose name ¹ [. . .] will not be able to endure ³⁵ [hearing].

God is a 63 man-eater. For this reason men are [sacrificed] ¹ to him. Before men were sacrificed ¹ animals were being sacrificed, since those ¹ to whom they were sacrificed were not gods. ⁵

Glass decanters and earthenware ¹ jugs are both made by means of fire. ¹ But if glass decanters break ¹ they are done over, for ¹ they came into being through a breath. If earthenware jugs ¹⁰ break, however, they are destroyed, ¹ for they came into being without breath.

An ass ¹ which turns a millstone did a hundred miles ¹ walking. When it was loosed ¹ it found that it was still at the same place. ¹⁵ There are men who make many journeys, ¹ but make no progress towards ¹ any destination. When evening came upon them, ¹ they saw neither city nor ¹ village, neither human artifact nor natural phenomenon, ²⁰ power nor angel. In vain have the wretches ¹ labored.

The eucharist is Jesus. For ¹ he is called in Syriac "Pharisatha," ¹ which is "the one who is spread out," ¹ for Jesus came to crucify the world. ²⁵

The lord went into the dye works ¹ of Levi. He took seventy-two different colors ¹ and threw them into the vat. He took them ¹ out all white. And he said, "Even so ¹ has the son ³⁰ of man come [as] a dyer."

As for the Wisdom ¹ who is called "the barren," she ¹ is the mother [of the] angels. And the ¹ companion of the [...] Mary Magdalene. ¹ [...] loved] her ³⁵ more than [all] the disciples [and used to] ¹ kiss her [often] on her [...]. ¹ The rest of [the disciples 64 ...]. They said to him, ¹ "Why do you love her more than all of us?" The ¹ savior answered and said to them, ¹ "Why do I not love you ⁵ like her? When a blind man and one who sees ¹ are both together in darkness, they are no different from ¹ one another. When the light comes, then ¹ he who sees will see the light, and ¹ he who is blind will remain in darkness." ¹⁰

The Lord said, "Blessed is he who ¹ is before he came into being. For he who ¹ is, has been and shall be."

The superiority ¹ of man is not obvious to the eye, but ¹ lies in what is hidden from view. Consequently he ¹⁵ has mastery over the animals which are stronger than he is and ¹ great in terms of the obvious and the hidden. ¹ This enables them to survive. But if ¹ man is separated from them, they slay ¹ one another and bite one another. ²⁰ They ate one another because they did not find ¹ any food. But now they have found food because ¹ man tilled the soil.

If one ¹ go down into the water and come up without ¹ having received anything and says, "I am a Christian," ²⁵ he has borrowed the name at interest. But if he ¹ receive the holy spirit, he has ¹ the name as a gift. He who has received a ¹ gift does not have to give it back, but of him who ¹ has borrowed it at interest, payment is demanded. This is the way ³⁰ [it happens to one] when he experiences ¹ a mystery.

Great is ¹ the mystery of marriage! For [without] it the world ¹ would [not exist]. Now the existence of ¹ [the world ...], and the existence ³⁵ [...] marriage]. Think of the [...] relationship], for it possesses ¹ [...] power. Its image 65 consists of a [defilement].

The forms of evil spirit ¹ include male ones and ¹ female ones. The males are they that ¹ unite with the souls which inhabit ⁵ a female form, but the females ¹ are they which are mingled with those in a ¹ male form, though one who was disobedient. And none ¹ shall be able to escape them, since they detain him ¹ if he does not receive a male power or a ¹⁰ female power, the bridegroom and ¹ the bride. — One receives them from the ¹ mirrored bridal chamber. — When the wanton women ¹ see a male sitting ¹ alone, they leap down on him and ¹⁵ play with him and defile him. So ¹ also the lecherous men, when they see a ¹ beautiful woman sitting alone, ¹ they persuade her and compel her, ¹ wishing to defile her. But if they see ²⁰ the man and his wife sitting ¹ beside one another, the female cannot come ¹ in to the man, nor can the male ¹ come in to the woman. So ¹ if the image and the angel are united ²⁵ with one another, neither can any venture ¹ to go in to the man or the woman. ¹

He who comes out of the world ¹ and so can no longer be detained on the grounds that he was in ¹ the world evidently is above ³⁰ the desire of the [...] and fear. ¹ He is master over [...]. He is superior to ¹ envy. If [...] comes, they seize ¹ him and throttle [him]. And how will [this one] be able to escape the [great ...] powers? ³⁵ How will he be able to [...] ¹ There are some [who say], ¹ “We are faithful,” in order that [...] 66 the unclean spirits] and the demons. ¹ For if they had the holy spirit, ¹ no unclean spirit would cleave ¹ to them. Fear not the flesh nor ⁵ love it. If you (sg.) fear it, it will gain mastery ¹ over you. If you love it, it will swallow and paralyze you. ¹

And so he dwells either in this world or in the ¹ resurrection or in the middle place. ¹ God forbid that I be found there! ¹⁰ In this world there is good ¹ and evil. Its good things ¹ are not good, and its evil things ¹ not evil. But there is evil after ¹ this world which is truly evil — ¹⁵ what is called “the middle.” It ¹ is death. While we are in this world ¹ it is fitting for us to acquire the resurrection, ¹ so that when we strip off the flesh ¹ we may be found in rest and not ²⁰ walk in the middle. For many go astray ¹ on the way. For it is good to come forth ¹ from the world before one ¹ has sinned.

There are some who neither will ¹ nor have the power to; and others who, ²⁵ if they will, do not profit: for ¹ they did not act since, (they believe,) [...] makes them ¹ sinners. And if they do not will, justice ¹ will elude them in both cases: ¹ and [it is] always a matter of the will, not the act.

An ³⁰ apostolic man in a vision saw some people ¹ shut up in a house of fire and ¹ bound with fiery [...], lying ¹ [...] flaming [...]. them in ¹ [...] faith [...]. And they said to them, ³⁵ “[...] able to be saved?” ¹ [...] “They did not desire it. They received ¹ [...] punishment, what is called 67 ‘the [...] darkness,’ because he [...]” ¹

It is from water and fire that the soul¹ and the spirit came into being. It is from water and¹ fire and light that the son of⁵ the bridal chamber (came into being). The fire is the chrism, the light¹ is the fire. I am not referring to that fire¹ which has no form, but to the other fire whose¹ form is white, which is bright and beautiful,¹ and which gives beauty.

Truth did not come¹⁰ into the world naked, but it came in¹ types and images. The world will not receive truth in¹ any other way. There is a rebirth and an¹ image of rebirth. It is certainly necessary¹ to be born again through the image. Which¹⁵ one? Resurrection. The image must¹ rise again through the image. The bridal chamber and¹ the image must enter through the image into¹ the truth: this is the restoration. Not only must those who produce the name of²⁰ the father and the son and the holy spirit do so,¹ but <those who> have produced them for you. If one does not acquire¹ them, the name ("Christian") will also be taken from him.¹ But one receives the unction of the [...] ¹ of the power of the cross. This power the apostles²⁵ called "the right and the left."¹ For this person is no longer a Christian but¹ a Christ.

The lord [did] everything in a¹ mystery, a baptism and a chrism¹ and a eucharist and a redemption³⁰ and a bridal chamber.

[...] he said,¹ "I came to make [the things below]¹ like the things [above, and the things]¹ outside like those [inside. I came to unite]¹ them in the place." [...] ³⁵ here through [types ...].¹ Those who say, "[There is a heavenly man and]¹ there is one above [him," are wrong.¹ — For it is the first of these two heavenly [men], the one who is revealed, 68 that they call¹ "the one who is below"; and he to whom the hidden belongs¹ is (supposed to be) that one who is above him.¹ For it would be better for them to say, "The inner⁵ and the outer, and what¹ is outside the outer." Because of this the¹ lord called destruction "the outer darkness":¹ there is not another outside of it. He said,¹ "My father who is in secret." He said,¹⁰ "Go into your (sg.) chamber and shut¹ the door behind you, and pray to your father¹ who is in secret" (Mt 6:6), the one who is¹ within them all. But that which is within¹ them all is the fullness.¹⁵ Beyond it there is nothing else within it.¹ This is that of which they say, "That which is¹ above them."

Before Christ some¹ came from a place they were no longer¹ able to enter, and they went where they were no longer²⁰ able to come out. Then Christ came.¹ Those who went in he brought out, and¹ those who went out he brought in.

When¹ Eve was still in Adam death did not exist.¹ When she was separated from him death came into being.²⁵ If he enters again and attains his former self,¹ death will be no more.

"My God, my God, ¹ why, O lord, have you forsaken me?" (Mk 15:34 and parallels). It was ¹ on the cross that he said these words, for he had departed from that place.

[...] who has been begotten through ³⁰ him who [...] from God. ¹

The [...] from the dead. ¹ [...] to be, but now ¹ [...] perfect. ¹ [...] flesh, but this ³⁵ [...] is true flesh. ¹ [...] is not true, but ¹ [...] only an image of the true. 69

A bridal chamber is not for the animals, ¹ nor is it for the slaves, nor for defiled ¹ women; but it is for free ¹ men and virgins.

Through ⁵ the holy spirit we are indeed begotten ¹ again, but we are begotten through ¹ Christ in the two. We are anointed through ¹ the spirit. When we were begotten we were united. None ¹ can see himself either in water or in ¹⁰ a mirror without light. Nor again can you (sg.) ¹ see in light without water or mirror. ¹ For this reason it is fitting to baptize in the two, ¹ in the light and the water. Now the light ¹ is the chrism.

There were three buildings specifically for ¹⁵ sacrifice in Jerusalem. The one ¹ facing west was called ¹ "the holy." Another facing ¹ south was called "the holy of ¹ the holy." The third facing ²⁰ east was called "the holy ¹ of the holies," the place where only the high priest ¹ enters. Baptism ¹ is "the holy" building. Redemption is "the holy ¹ of the holy." "The holy of the holies" ²⁵ is the bridal chamber. Baptism includes ¹ the resurrection [and the] redemption; the redemption ¹ (takes place) in the bridal chamber. But the bridal chamber ¹ is in that which is superior to [...] ¹ you (sg.) will not find [...] ³⁰ are those who pray [...] ¹ Jerusalem. [...] ¹ Jerusalem who [...] ¹ Jerusalem, [...] ¹ those called "the holy ³⁵ of the holies" [...] the ¹ veil was rent [...] ¹ bridal chamber except the image [...] 70 above. Because of this its ¹ veil was rent from top to bottom. For it was fitting for some ¹ from below to go upward. ⁵

The powers do not see ¹ those who are clothed in the perfect light, ¹ and consequently are not able to detain them. ¹ One will clothe himself in this light ¹ sacramentally in the union.

If the ¹⁰ woman had not separated from the man, she should not die ¹ with the man. His separation became ¹ the beginning of death. Because of this ¹ Christ came to repair ¹ the separation which was from the beginning ¹⁵ and again unite the two, and to give life to those ¹ who died as a result of the separation ¹ and unite them. But the woman is united ¹ to her husband in the bridal chamber. ¹ Indeed those who have united in the bridal chamber will ²⁰ no longer be separated. Thus Eve ¹ separated from Adam because it was not in the bridal chamber ¹ that she united with him.

The soul of Adam ¹ came into being by means of a breath. The ¹ partner of his soul is the spirit. His mother ²⁵ is the thing that was given to him. His soul was taken from him and ¹ replaced by a [spirit]. When ¹ he was united (to the spirit), [he spoke] words incomprehensible ¹ to the powers. They envied him ¹ [...] spiritual partner ³⁰ [...] hidden ¹ [...] opportunity ¹ [...] for themselves alone ¹ [...] bridal chamber so that ¹ [...]

Jesus appeared ³⁵ [...] Jordan – the ¹ [fullness of the kingdom] of heaven. He who ¹ [was begotten] before everything 71 was begotten anew. He [who was] once [anointed] ¹ was anointed anew. He who was redeemed ¹ in turn redeemed (others).

Indeed, one must utter a ¹ mystery. The father of everything united ⁵ with the virgin who came down, and ¹ a fire shone for him on that day. ¹ He appeared in the great bridal chamber. ¹ Therefore, his body came into being ¹ on that very day. It left the bridal chamber ¹⁰ as one who came into being ¹ from the bridegroom and the bride. So ¹ Jesus established everything ¹ in it through these. ¹ It is fitting for each of the disciples ¹⁵ to enter into his rest. ¹

Adam came into being from two virgins, ¹ from the spirit and from ¹ the virgin earth. Christ, therefore, ¹ was born from a virgin ²⁰ to rectify the fall which ¹ occurred in the beginning. ¹

There are two trees growing in Paradise. ¹ The one bears [animals], the other bears ¹ men. Adam [ate] from the tree ²⁵ which bore animals. [He] became an animal ¹ and he brought forth animals. For this reason ¹ the children of Adam worship [animals]. The tree [...] ¹ fruit is [...] ³⁰ increased. [...] ate the [...] ¹ fruit of the [...] ¹ bears men, [...] man. [...] ³⁵ God created man. [...] men] 72 create God. That is the way it is in the world – ¹ men make gods and worship their creation. It would be fitting for the gods ¹ to worship men!

Surely ⁵ what a man accomplishes ¹ depends on his abilities. ¹ For this reason we refer to one's accomplishments as ¹ "abilities." Among his accomplishments are his children. They ¹ originate in a moment of ease. ¹⁰ Thus his abilities determine ¹ what he may accomplish, but this ease ¹ is clearly evident in the children. ¹ You will find that this applies directly to the image. ¹ Here is the man made after the image ¹⁵ accomplishing things with his physical strength, ¹ but producing his children with ease. ¹ the free will ²⁰ minister to the slaves: the children of ¹ the bridal chamber will minister to the children ¹ of the marriage. The children of the bridal chamber ¹ have [just one] name: rest. ¹ [Altogether] they need take no (other) ²⁵ form [because they have] contemplation, ¹ [...]. They are numerous ¹ [...] in the things ¹ [...] the glories ¹ [...]

In this world the slaves ¹ serve the free. In the ¹ kingdom of heaven

Those ³⁰ [...] go] down into the water. ¹ [...] out (of the water), will consecrate it, ¹ [...] they who have ¹ [...] in his name. For he said, ¹ "[Thus] we should fulfill at 73 righteousness" (Mt 3:15).

Those who say they will ¹ die first and then rise ¹ are in error. If they do not first receive the ¹ resurrection while they live, when they die they will receive nothing. ⁵ So also when speaking about ¹ baptism they say, "Baptism ¹ is a great thing," because if people receive it they will ¹ live.

Philip the apostle ¹ said, "Joseph the carpenter planted ¹⁰ a garden because he needed wood ¹ for his trade. It was he who ¹ made the cross from the ¹ trees which he planted. His own offspring hung ¹ on that which he planted. His offspring was ¹⁵ Jesus and the planting was the cross." But the tree ¹ of life is in the middle of the garden. ¹ However, it is from the olive tree ¹ that we get the chrism, and from the chrism, ¹ the resurrection.

This world is a corpse-eater. ²⁰ All the things eaten ¹ in it themselves die also. Truth ¹ is a life-eater. Therefore no one ¹ nourished by [truth] will die. It was ¹ from that place that Jesus came and brought ²⁵ food. To those who ¹ so desired he gave [life, that] ¹ they might not die.

God [...] a garden. ¹ Man [...] garden. ¹ There are [...] ³⁰ and [...] ¹ of God. [...] ¹ The things which are in [...] ¹ I wish. This garden [is the place where] ¹ they will say to me, "... eat] ³⁵ this or do not eat [that, just as you (sg.)] 74 wish." In the place where I will eat all things ¹ is the tree of knowledge. ¹ That one killed Adam, ¹ but here the tree of knowledge made men alive. ⁵ The law was the tree. It has power ¹ to give the knowledge of good ¹ and evil. It neither removed him from ¹ evil, nor did it set him in the good, ¹ but it created death for those who ¹⁰ ate of it. For when he said, ¹ "Eat this, do not eat that," it became ¹ the beginning of death.

The chrism is superior ¹ to baptism, for it is from the word "chrism" ¹ that we have been called "Christians," certainly not because ¹⁵ of the word "baptism." And it is because of the chrism that "the ¹ Christ" has his name. For the father anointed ¹ the son, and the son anointed the apostles, ¹ and the apostles anointed us. He who ¹ has been anointed possesses everything. He possesses ²⁰ the resurrection, the light, the cross, ¹ the holy spirit. The father gave him this ¹ in the bridal chamber;

he merely accepted (the gift). The father was ¹ in the son and the son in the father. ¹ This is [the] kingdom of heaven. ²⁵

The lord said it well: "Some have entered the kingdom ¹ of heaven laughing, and they have come out ¹ [...] because [...] a Christian, ¹ [...] And as soon as ¹ [...] went down into] the water he came ³⁰ [...] everything (of this world), [...] because ¹ [...] a trifle, but ¹ [...] full of] contempt for this ¹ [...] the kingdom of ¹ [heaven ...]. If he despises ³⁵ [...] and scorns it as a trifle, ¹ [...] out laughing. So it is also 75 with the bread and the cup and the oil, ¹ even though there is another one superior to these.

The ¹ world came about through a mistake. ¹ For he who created it wanted to create ⁵ it imperishable and immortal. ¹ He fell short of attaining his desire. ¹ For the world never was imperishable, ¹ nor, for that matter, was ¹ he who made the world. ¹⁰ For things are not imperishable, ¹ but sons are. Nothing ¹ will be able to receive imperishability if it does not ¹ first become a son. But he who has not the ability ¹ to receive, how much more will he be unable to give?

The cup ¹⁵ of prayer contains wine and ¹ water, since it is appointed as the type of ¹ the blood for which thanks is given. And ¹ it is full of the holy spirit, and ¹ it belongs to the wholly perfect man. When ²⁰ we drink this, we shall receive for ourselves the perfect ¹ man. The living water is a body. ¹ It is necessary that we put on the living man. ¹ Therefore, when he is about to go down into the water, ¹ he unclothes himself, in order that he may put on the living man. ²⁵

A horse sires a horse, a ¹ man begets man, a god ¹ brings forth a god. Compare ¹ [the] bridegroom and the [bride]. They have come from the [...]. ³⁰ No Jew [...] ¹ [...] has existed. And ¹ [...] ¹ from the Jews. [...] ¹ Christians, [...] ³⁵ these [...] are referred to as ¹ "the chosen people of [...]" 76 and "the true man" and "the son of ¹ man" and "the seed of the son of man." ¹ This true race is renowned ¹ in the world. ... that ⁵ the sons of the bridal chamber dwell. ¹

Whereas in this world the union ¹ is one of husband with wife — a case of strength complemented by ¹ weakness (?) — in the eternal realm (aeon) the form of the union ¹ is different, although we refer to them by the same names. There are ¹⁰ other names, however; they are superior to every name ¹ that is named and are ¹ stronger than the strong. For where there is a show of strength, ¹ there those who excel in strength appear. ¹ These are not separate things, ¹⁵ but both of them are this one ¹ single thing. This is the one which will not be able to rise ¹ above the heart of flesh.

Is it not necessary for all those who possess ¹ everything to know themselves? ¹ Some indeed, if they do not know ²⁰ themselves, will not enjoy what they ¹ possess. But those who have come to know themselves will ¹ enjoy their possessions.

Not only ¹ will they be unable to detain the perfect man, ¹ but they will not be able to see him, for if they see him ²⁵ they will detain him. There is no other way ¹ for a person to acquire this quality except by putting on the perfect light ¹ [and] he too becoming perfect light. He who has [put it] on will enter ³⁰ [...]. This is the perfect ¹ [...] that we [...] become ¹ [...] before we leave ¹ [...]. Whoever receives everything ¹ [...] hither [...] be able ³⁵ [...] that place, but will ¹ [...] the middle] as imperfect. 77 Only Jesus knows the end of this person. ¹

The priest is completely holy, down ¹ to his very body. For if he has taken the bread, ¹ he will consecrate it. Or the cup ⁵ or anything else that he gets, ¹ he will consecrate. Then how will he not consecrate ¹ the body also?

By perfecting ¹ the water of baptism, Jesus ¹ emptied it of death. Thus we do go ¹⁰ down into the water, but we do not go ¹ down into death in order that we may not be poured ¹ out into the spirit of the world. When ¹ that spirit blows, it brings the winter. ¹ When the holy spirit breathes, ¹⁵ the summer comes.

He who has ¹ knowledge of the truth is a free man, ¹ but the free man does not sin, ¹ for "he who sins is the slave of sin" (Jn 8:34). ¹ Truth is the mother, knowledge ²⁰ the father. Those who think that sinning does not apply to them ¹ are called "free" by the world. ¹ "Knowledge" of the truth merely "makes ¹ such people arrogant," which ¹ is what the words "it makes them free" mean. ²⁵ It even gives them a sense of superiority over the whole world. But "love ¹ builds up" (1 Co 8:1). In fact, he who is really free through ¹ knowledge is a slave because of love ¹ for those who have not yet been able to attain to the ¹ freedom of knowledge. Knowledge ³⁰ makes them capable of becoming ¹ free. Love [never calls] ¹ something its own, [...] it [...] possess [...]. ¹ It never [says "This is yours"] ¹ or "This is mine," [but "All these] ³⁵ are yours." Spiritual love ¹ is wine and fragrance. 78 All those who anoint themselves with it take pleasure in it. ¹ While those who are anointed are present, ¹ those nearby also profit (from the fragrance). ¹ If those anointed with ointment withdraw from them ⁵ and leave, then those not anointed, ¹ who merely stand nearby, still ¹ remain in their bad odor. The Samaritan ¹ gave nothing but ¹ wine and oil to the wounded man. It is nothing other than ¹⁰ the ointment. It healed the wounds, ¹ for "love covers a multitude of sins" (1 P 4:8). ¹

The children a woman bears ¹ resemble the man who loves her. If her ¹ husband loves her, then they resemble her husband. If it is an adulterer, ¹⁵ then they resemble the adulterer. Frequently, ¹ if a woman sleeps with her ¹ husband out of necessity, while her heart is with the adulterer ¹ with whom she usually has intercourse, the child ¹ she will bear is born resembling ²⁰ the adulterer. Now you who live together with the son ¹ of God, love not the world, ¹ but love the lord, in order that those you will ¹ bring forth may not resemble the world, ¹ but may resemble the lord. ²⁵

The human being has intercourse with the human being. ¹ The horse has intercourse with the horse, the ass ¹ with the ass. Members of a race usually have associated ¹ [with] those of like race. So spirit ¹ mingles with spirit, and thought ³⁰ consorts with thought, ¹ and [light] shares ¹ [with light. If you (sg.) are born a human being, ¹ it is [the human being] who will love you. If you become ¹ [a spirit], it is the spirit which will be joined to you. If you become ³⁵ thought, it is thought which will mingle 79 with you. If you become light, ¹ it is the light which will share ¹ with you. If you become one of those who belong above, ¹ it is those who belong above who will rest ⁵ upon you. If you become horse ¹ or ass or bull or dog or sheep ¹ or another of the animals which are outside ¹ or below, then ¹ neither human being nor spirit ¹⁰ nor thought nor light will be able to love you. Neither ¹ those who belong above nor those who belong within ¹ will be able to rest in you, ¹ and you have no part in them.

He ¹ who is a slave against his will will be able to become free. ¹⁵ He who has become free by the favor ¹ of his master and has sold ¹ himself into slavery will no longer be able ¹ to be free.

Farming in the ¹ world requires the cooperation of four essential elements. A harvest is gathered ²⁰ into the barn only as a result of the natural action of water, ¹ earth, wind, and light. ¹ God's farming likewise ¹ has four elements — faith, ¹ hope, love, and ²⁵ knowledge. Faith is our earth, that in which we ¹ take root. [And] hope ¹ is the water through which we are ¹ nourished. Love is the wind through ¹ which we grow. Knowledge then is the light ³⁰ through which we [ripen]. ¹ Grace exists in [four ways: it is] ¹ earthborn; it is [heavenly; ...] ¹ the highest heaven; [...] in [...].

Blessed ¹ is the one who on no occasion caused a soul [...]. 80 That person is Jesus Christ. He came to ¹ the whole place and did not burden anyone. ¹ Therefore, blessed is the one who is like ¹ this, because he is a perfect man. For ⁵ the word tells us that this kind is difficult ¹ to define. How shall we be able to accomplish ¹ such a great thing? How will he give everyone comfort? ¹ Above all, it is not proper ¹ to cause anyone distress — whether the person is great or small, ¹⁰ unbeliever or believer — and then give comfort ¹ only to those who take satisfaction in good deeds. ¹ Some find it advantageous to give ¹ comfort to the one who has fared well. He who does ¹ good deeds cannot give comfort ¹⁵ to such people; for he does not seize whatever he likes. ¹ He is unable to cause distress, ¹ however, since he does not afflict them. To be sure, the one who ¹ fares well sometimes causes people distress — ¹ not that he intends to do so; rather it is their own wickedness ²⁰ which is responsible for their distress. He who possesses ¹ the qualities (of the perfect man) bestows joy upon the good. ¹ Some, however, are terribly distressed by all this. ¹

